“It’s true that I was getting too confident in myself and it’s true that a part of the reason why I refused is my pride. I do know well that refusing this offer will bring me a lot of trouble later on. On the contrary, if I accept this offer, I’m sure I’ll get better requests and equipment from the gang, which will make me stronger. Moreover, there’s no doubt that guy is stronger than me, so I have no plans to make excuses like I don’t want to work under someone weaker than me. As a matter of fact, he might be so strong that I might slow him down instead. When that happens, he might save me and that might be a trigger for many more good things in the future.”

Togami, who spoke as if he was talking about someone else unrelated to him, showed that he understood very well how good that offer was. That was why Mizuha was more confused than before.

“So then why won’t you accept it?”

“It’s true that I’ll get stronger if I work under him. But that will be a strength that relies on him. I want to be stronger myself. I don’t need power that won’t work without him. I don’t want to degrade myself to being just another drone under him. I know that it’s just my dumb pride. But it’s the kind of pride that I bet my life with even if you see it as foolish. That’s why I’ll have to refuse your offer. At least, I’ll thank you for offering me such a good deal.”

There was no chance for negotiation. Mizuha looked coldly at Togami and warned.

“…You’ll regret it.”

“If I do, then it’s because I’m weak. So it can’t be helped. I’ll excuse myself then.”

Togami lightly bowed toward Mizuha, made a 180-degree turn and left.

Mizuha’s gaze shifted to Reina.

“You’re going to accept, right?”

Her time to make her decision had come, so Reina made her resolve.

“I’m sorry, but I also refuse.”

Mizuha could not believe what she just heard and looked completely surprised.

“Even you too!? Why? Are you being serious here?! If you don’t take this opportunity, you might not have any chance to return back to Katsuya’s team, you know!?”

“It’s true that I do want to return back to Katsuya’s team. But, I want to stand beside him. I have no wish to return back to be someone under him. Someone that he needs to protect. I want to stand beside him as a fellow Hunter of the same standing. Although I don’t think I will ever be able to surpass him, I’m thinking of doing my best until the day I can be as good as him.”

“Do you really think that day will ever come? No matter how much you try, he’ll only drift further and further. Katsuya’s skill and talent are already good enough to attract the attention of City Management, you know? You’ll definitely regret it.”

“If I do, that will be because of my lack of talent and effort. So it can’t be helped, please excuse me.”

Reina lightly bowed and left as well. For some reason, she seemed extremely satisfied. In contrast to that, Mizuha’s anger was shown in her expression.

“Good grief… these people…”

That whisper was rather childish for someone of her age.

As Reina left the room, she saw that Shiori was already waiting outside with a surprised expression.

“What’s wrong?”

“Ah, it’s nothing. Milady, are you sure?”

Reina was not sure what Shiori was asking about, so Kanae jumped in to fill in the blank.

“Milady, it is about that offer back in the room, or more like, the offer to return back to Katsuya’s team.”

“Eh? You knew?”

“We more or less predicted it based on the information that we had gathered. Not to mention, we heard from Togami just now. So then, both Ane-san and I thought that Milady would take that offer to return back to Katsuya’s team. But it seems that did not happen, that’s why Ane-san is surprised.”

“Milady, I’m sorry for the lack of explanation.”

“Oh, I see. Don’t worry about it… By the way, is it really that easy to read my expression?”

Reina blushed a bit and mumbled. She then regained her usual composure before continuing.

“Since I refused the offer, I think it’s impossible for me to join the expedition now. But since the gang already sold the automata, I can start taking Hunter jobs again. I guess I need to discuss with Togami about what to do next.”

Shiori and Kanae looked at each other, it seemed that Reina had not noticed it yet.

“Milady, with the automata already sold, Togami-sama’s training with Shikarabe has also been completed. This means that the team has been disbanded.”

“Eh? Ah, that’s true. But, it doesn’t mean that we can’t still stay as a team, right?”

“Milady, it seems that Togami thinks Milady will return back to Katsuya’s team, that’s why he already made his next plan. As a matter of fact, he was already talking with someone regarding that matter.”

“Ehh!? Why didn’t you stop him!?”

“As we said, we didn’t expect Milady refused that offer.”

Reina pulled out her information terminal in a panic and tried to make a call. But since there was no answer, she immediately started running to where Togami might be.

Shiori and Kanae smiled wryly at each other before they went to follow their master.

__*__*__*__

Somewhere in the inner part of the Kuzusuhara ruin, Yatsubayashi was driving his mobile clinic. Since the plan to extend the supply route was halted, there were many Hunters around the supply route hunting for relics. Yatsuyabashi did not find any lack of patients from those Hunters.

Something that looked like a Hunter came into the clinic, Yatsubyashi saw that face and pointed to the bed, telling it to lie down there. Yatsubayashi then closed the trailer's back door, which he usually keeps open even when he was treating his patients.

Not too long after that, the door opened and the thing that was lying down on the bed exited the clinic with a completely different face.

Yatsubayashi sighed.

[Although it's a deal that I made with her, this is pretty dangerous stuff. I think it's barely against City Management, but… Well, I wonder if it was a mistake? But again, I can't just give up on learning old-world technology.]

Yatsubayashi had made a deal with Tsubaki. She was the one who controlled the thing that just entered his mobile clinic. It was actually Tiol's terminal and it had kept its human form even after the incident from last time. What Yatsubayashi did was just change the appearance of that terminal. He had done that a few times already. All the terminals that started with a young boy's appearance, were transformed into humanoids of all ages and gender by Yatsubayashi. And just to be safe, he also regularly assigned them with different faces. They were then sent to mix in with the other Hunters working in the ruin, to work on their own goals.

Yatsubayashi himself had no idea what Tsubaki was trying to accomplish by using them. But he also had no wish to know. He thought that the best way to deal with Tsubaki was to fulfil his part of the promise, make sure not to get himself involved more than necessary, and most importantly, not to pick a fight with her.

As another unit came into the clinic, Yatsyubayashi once again closed the back door.

__*__*__*__

Shikarabe was drinking in the pub that he frequented with Kurosawa. They enjoyed their drinks while having the waitress serve them as they talked about recent events.

But suddenly, Kurosawa asked the waitress to let them speak in private. Seeing that, Shikarabe understood that Kurosawa was going to talk about something that was not exactly a secret but was also not for public ears and lightly sobered up.

“So then, Kurosawa, what do you want to know this time? Is it about the insider information of Drankam again? I’m sorry but I can’t tell you anything. The current Drankam is fully under the Katsuya faction. So I’m already in a pretty bad position, you see. They no longer let me know about important information regarding the gang.”

There was a trace of self-mockery in Shikarabe’s cold expression. It was clear that he had begun to give up on things.

“It’s about Katsuya.”

“Humph, I have nothing to say about that guy.”

Shikarabe was obviously repulsed by that matter. But seeing Kurosawa’s absolutely serious attitude, he then sighed and continued.

“So then, what do you want to know?”

“Actually, there are some people around me who are thinking of rejoining Drankam.”

“Are you joking? Didn’t most of them leave the gang since they didn’t like Drankam’s policies? So why are they thinking of returning back now? Just to let you know, the situation is worse than when they had left. Even I’m thinking of leaving sometime soon.”

“I totally agree with you, but it’s true that some of them are thinking of returning. Some of them are even thinking of taking it easy, even if it means working under Katsuya. To be more precise, the people who think so are those Hunters who have worked in extending the supply route. They had some of the areas under them overlapped with Katsuya's, and after watching how he works up close, they reevaluated their opinion of him. Although it sort of makes sense, I'm still not fully convinced for some reason. Unlike them, I got too bored expanding the supply route, so I went to take other jobs like the one in Lida commercial district ruin and various other jobs as well. That's why I was not around with them for a while. I can't help but wonder what exactly had happened when I was not around. But when I asked them in detail, nothing struck me as amazing or anything. They don't seem to be hiding anything from me either. To be honest, I'm a bit creeped out by this."

Shikarabe felt that was a bit weird since Kurosawa was talking as if it was some kind of ghost story.

"Shikarabe, you hate that Katsuya, right? Why do you hate him that much?"

"Why you ask? Let me ask you this instead, what is so good about that cocky guy?"

"If it's about a cocky young Hunter, you can find them anywhere. Even that Togami was one of them. Back then, he was too confident of himself. You hated him as well, right? But that is not as bad as your hatred towards Katsuya. Although they are similar, the difference in your impression of both of them is just too big. Why do you hate Katsuya so much? Did he do something that makes you hate him greatly?"

"Why, huh, well…"

As Shikarabe was about to answer that question, he suddenly stopped midway and seemed a bit weirded out. He had a lot of reasons to simply hate Katsuya, but he could not think of any reason to explain his intense hatred.

Seeing that, Kurosawa made an equally weirded out expression.

“Whoa there, get a hang of yourself. I was just wondering if I could share with them your reasons, they might change their minds, you know? You really hate Katsuya’s guts, so there must be a reason for that, right? Even saying that you just don’t like how he looks is fine, you know?”

Shikarabe sobered up a little more and tried to look for a reason. He kept asking himself to think of a reason. It might be the accumulation of smaller grievances from back then when he was responsible for guiding Katsuya. It could be because he had become jealous of Katsuya’s talent before he knew it. But in the end, he could not find any good reason, leaving him as simply hating Katsuya without any good reason.

[…Why though?]

Shikarabe was uncertain if he couldn’t think of any good reason because he was drunk, or if his real reason would only come up if he was more intoxicated. He seemed to be deep in thought and looked slightly puzzled. Kurosawa, who was expecting an answer, could not help but make the same expression.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 212, Yanagisawa's thoughts

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

On the night before the large scale expedition. Yanagisawa read through the document regarding it and smiled bitterly.

Inabe no longer had any method of retreat. Since he took Viola's suggestion to fake the relics that could be found in the area under his territory, he had lost the trust of his coworkers and even his position as well. Although he somehow dragged himself out of hot water, it did not change the fact that he faked the relics and the truth was that there were no expensive relics in his area. If the expedition could not show any results, it would show that the records from his area were nothing but fake. Before it happened, he had to find another area where a ton of expensive relics were waiting to be found. Otherwise, he would have no other choice but to cover his lies with even more lies, which would eventually lead to his doom.

The plan was laced with details that clearly showed Inabe's effort. The budget was increased as much as his position allowed him to and he did not hold back from using all the connections he had to obtain investment in order to secure more firepower. He did not even hesitate to use his own money.

As Yanagisawa read through the document, he found Akira and Katsuya's name in the list of Hunters who had returned with expensive relics from that region. So Yanagisawa's mind wandered as he reminisced on a certain incident in the past.

Back then, after the huge incident in the slum city, Nergo reported to Yanagisawa that Katsuya was someone who could connect to the old-world domain. At that time, although Yanagisawa was delighted, another question came up in his mind as he asked Nergo a question with a puzzled look.

"Thank you very much for the valuable information. But, what can I say, it's not like I'm doubting you, but is it okay to ask you how you got your information? As I said, it's not like I'm doubting you. In fact, I don't doubt you. It's just to be safe."

Nergo did not show any particular reaction to that rather exaggerated attitude that obviously showed Yanagisawa's suspicion.

"I'm not going to tell you to believe me. It is nothing more than just confirmation in order to not cause any unnecessary conflict between you and me when it comes to capturing Katsuya. We don't mind being the one capturing him. All I want to hear from you is that there are no problems. You are fine with that, right?"

"Well well well well, don't say it like that. I just want to ask you some questions. It's okay, right? It's not like we're total strangers, right? So I hope that you can enlighten me. Moreover, if I don't know anything, I might misunderstand, which might cause trouble later. It would be great if we can clear up any possible misunderstanding."

Yanagisawa was signalling that he would not give his affirmation unless Nergo answered his question, and even if he did, it would only open up space for negotiation. Nergo, who understood that, lightly sighed and replied.

"…Very well. But before I explain, I'll ask you about the basics first. What are old-world connectors?"

“Simply put, it refers to the people who can connect to the old-world domain, right?”

“You might be just playing dumb there, but that’s a very narrow way to interpret it. To be precise, that answer is wrong. It’s just one of the many methods to identify old-world connectors, nothing more. This term refers to a group of people who, for some reasons that still cannot be explained with our current technology, are able to receive and send a certain signal, and this function can be built-in into their body or achieved through other methods. There were many cases where such people were either simply included in the old-world domain as a receiver node, or even as transceiver nodes. Thus, they were often used as a method to connect to the old-world domain, that’s why most people interpret that term as such. An active connection to the old-world domain is not their main feature. Next, then, you do know about telepathy, right?”

“That’s a type of communication method where information is not sent through sound waves, right? People who have communication devices implanted in their heads can talk with each other even without making a sound. So most people trying to look cool tend to call that telepathy.”

“Just like how the people of the current era have many methods to communicate with each other, that’s also true for the people who can connect to the old-world domain. That’s why this is not always true for all of them, but most of the time, they can use telepathy. Of course, they can transfer more than just sound or words.”

“Even the information terminals of the current era can be used to send videos and pictures too, you know?”

“Of course, but their telepathy can send even more than that. Although there are differences between each individual, they usually can transfer all kinds of information. The old-world technology even allows them to send something as vague as intuition which can’t be explained with words. And then, those who can send a certain type of information tend to cause a certain phenomenon. This is why we believe that Katsuya is one of them.”

“Ohhh, so, what different kind of information is that? And what kind of phenomenon are we talking about here?”

“The information is something akin to mental manipulation, like emotion or impression. These types of people are extremely rare as they can easily get along with other people. If I am to give an example, it can cause everyone around them to like what they like and hate what they hate. This is doubly true for people who wear their heart on their sleeves.”

“I see. It makes the people around them to like what they like and hate what they hate. It is the result of them unconsciously sending that information to the people around them, huh? Sometimes, straightforward words can greatly move the hearts of others. If it’s possible to convey that feeling without words, the same kind of effect becomes more prominent. I bet that would be super effective. But then again, shouldn’t only people who can connect to the old-world domain be able to receive such information?”

Yanagisawa asked once again as if he was playing dumb, so Nergo once again sighed and replied.

“…I bet you’re just pretending to not know, so I’ll answer your question. Most of the people in the eastern district can actually connect to the old-world domain. If we take an analogue with information terminals, the transceivers are only sending a low-power signal that is barely recognizable while the sensitivity of the receivers are dialled so low that they can’t receive any signals. It is as if they are information terminals on defective settings. Even if you try to dissect and analyze the brains of normal individuals and those that can connect to the old-world domain, there are no notable differences between them. This is why even with all the advanced medical tools that you have in the eastern district, people still can’t identify them correctly. So basically, normal people can’t connect to the old world domain, but if it’s just a short-range direct transmission, they are still working as terminals to various extents. Of course, there are big differences individually. As for the people in the eastern district who live on the western side near the central district, for some reason, most of them have already lost that ability. It might be because they have a lot of children between them. I wonder if that ability is connected to how much one inherited the blood of the old-world descendants.”

“I see, that is some amazing information. But still, I don’t think it’s that convincing. To identify an old-world connector just from his relationship with the people around him? After all, people like Katsuya are not that rare. I’m sure you can find a few if you search, right?”

“That decision is based on other observations as well. We have other reasons why we’re so certain. For example, there is a huge gap between the logical and concrete evaluation of that guy compared to the intuitive or emotional evaluation. That’s the result of the person in question, unconsciously sending his own evaluation of himself to the people around him. So in short, if he believes that he is powerful, others around him will be pushed toward direction as well. Comparing that to his real power, a gap has been observed, which also serves as more evidence.”

“Hmm, and that would make people think he is a powerful person even if he is not that powerful in reality, but the opinion of the people around him cemented that notion even further. But again, it’s normal for talented people to be evaluated highly by the people around them, right? And Katsuya is not that bad himself. He’s been doing well as a Hunter. If he’s really that untalented, he would have died a long time ago, right? After all, monsters don’t care about such things. They just attack everyone equally.”

“It’s not like we think that he’s weak either. He’s a skilled Hunter. The focus here is the gap and the strange dissonance that can be felt from it. I’ve been observing him from afar ever since I infiltrated Drankam, this is the conclusion that I’ve reached after observing that strange dissonant feeling. It’s a conclusion made after gathering impressions from all kinds of people included his track records, documents, the people who are in his faction as well as the people who hate him… If you accuse that I need to do more investigation, I have no words to deny it and partially agree with you.”

“Ohhh? Did something happen?”

“There was a large incident in slum city the other day and Katsuya was also involved in the battle. The reason was because I told him the whereabouts of a certain pickpocket named Alna. Judging from his personality, I was certain that he would go save her if he knew her location, and I was right. However, I also predicted that he would bring reinforcement from Drankam. Normally, it would be impossible for Drankam to dispatch its men just to save a mere pickpocket. So I was originally planning to confirm if he is someone who can connect to the old-world domain using that event. If he is, then his ability would affect their decision. It remains to be seen just how far the people who like him or think highly of him would ignore the benefit of the gang. But… To think that he went alone, it took me completely by surprise. Because of that, it was difficult to judge if Drankam was trying to cover for him or if the gang was simply trying to erase any relation between that incident and the gang. So, it did not produce any clear evidence."

"I see, so that's the reason, huh."

Yanagisawa who was acting as if he was pretending to not know although he already knew everything right from the start, caused Nergo to be irritated as it leaked a bit in what Nergo said next.

"…As I said, the conclusion was made from various observations as well. Even if some of the evidence gathered is not that convincing, it doesn't change the conclusion. I'm sure you don't need any more explanation, right? So just answer my question already."

"Well, putting the matter with Katsuya's investigation aside, I actually have other questions, you see."

"What is it?"

"For example, do you think that there is another old-world connector in the slum city?"

"Why do you think so?"

"Well, don't be that stingy. I just wanted to ask this question to someone who is more knowledgeable about this matter than me, nothing more."

Nergo sighed and replied firmly.

"No, they're all dead."

“Ohh, that was a firm reply. It means you have evidence for that, right? If you would be so kind as to share that with me as well, then…”

Yanagisawa still maintained his half-joking attitude, that was when Nergo interjected.

“I had made a deal with a Kugamayama City Management officer from the Rebuild Laboratory in the past. Although to be more precise, I don’t know if he’s still a member or a former member. In exchange for providing him with monetary support and a research facility, he will work on a method to awaken incomplete old-world connectors. City Management accepted that deal. That is the thing that you actually want to know, right?”

Yanagisawa’s tone turned serious.

“…That facility is supposed to be a tightly guarded secret even in the upper echelons of City Management though.”

“You’re not the only person in the City Management who we are working with. There are others who support our cause, and we’re working with them even now. It is just that simple.”

“I see. I would be super thankful if you can share the list of people though.”

“No, we can’t share that kind of information with you. At least, not until you join us for the great cause. For now, my answer is I do hope from the bottom of my heart that you would eventually join our cause one day.”

“I see, hmmm…”

There was a moment of silence. It demonstrated their relationship, they were only working together because it was beneficial for both of them when in reality they were not on the same side.

“…Although I’m not sure that this is enough compensation for you, I’ll at least answer your previous question. The method used by that officer is to promote mutation with nanomachine, which is administered through an injection. So there is no need to implant some kind of device into the subject. But even so, this method is still in the midst of development, it is still in the human testing phase to be more precise. Its accuracy is low and it still needs a lot of human test samples. But gathering a lot of testing subjects would attract attention and because this project has to be kept secret, it does not take up any actions that would put it under the spotlight. Currently, there is a lack of test subjects. Also, if information about Rebuild Laboratory working with us surfaces, it will cause a lot of trouble. That's why they mix nanomachines in the food distributed in slum city. That way, even if the nanomachine rampages and kills the test subject, or if it turns the subject into a monster, people can just chalk it up as an unfortunate accident. Furthermore, free food distribution down in the slum city was created exactly for this reason. It was originally for the sake of testing nanomachines derived from the dead monster, to test if they are lethal for human use. I do feel some pity for them."

"Well, I have to refuse to make any ethical comment about it, so then?"

"Most of the people who rely on that kind of food are weak. Even if the test successfully awakens them into old-world connectors like Katsuya, they would die in no time before we can confirm if the test is a success. That's why the experiment is seen as a failure and it will stop in due time. Hence, there won't be any old-world connectors in the slum city, since they are already dead."

"Why dead though? They might still be alive, right?"

"Slum city has atrocious public order. In order to stay alive there, weaklings need to be aware that they are weaklings. If they get too conceited and think of themselves as the strong, they'll be killed in no time. Moreover, they need to be extremely prudent, otherwise, they will just get tricked and again, killed. Now, imagine if they are broadcasting their impression of themselves using the old-world domain, that will give them a hell of a time trying to survive in the slum city. Unconsciously telling others that they are weak would result in people looking down on them and hating them. Even the paranoid attitude needed to survive in the slum city would also be transmitted, further damaging their relationship with those around them. Because of this, it would be difficult for them to stay in a group. Even if they manage to join a group, being pessimistic and ultimately paranoid will only cause others to use them as expendables, they will just be used and abandoned later. They will end up having all the downside of being in a group without any of the benefits. They will not even be able to hold the least needed connections and communication skills to stay alive in slum city, so there is no doubt they are all dead by now."

"In that case, they can just, like, you know, try their best sending likability and trust, right?"

"That would be plainly impossible. That kind of technique is not something technical like a communication device, it's a more subtle technique like a speechcraft. The more familiar and skilled they are, the better the accuracy and the broadcast strength, and the opposite is also true. As I explained before, due to the environment in which they live, it would be difficult for them to broadcast positive emotions such as trust, self-confidence, or likability. While at the same time, it is way easier for them to broadcast negative emotions such as suspicion and hatred. And even if they can send those positive emotions, if the receivers reply with negative emotions, it would be counter-effective."

"…There's a possibility that some still survive even after that, no?"

Yanagisawa sounded as if he was not just simply asking random stupid questions. As a matter of fact, it sounded like he had some kind of particular question that he was looking for an answer to. It only caused Nergo to be puzzled.

"…Why are you so insisting on that possibility?"

"It's nothing important."

"…In order for them to survive, I bet they would have to strive to be Hunters. But they would have to be an individual Hunter unaffiliated with any groups and don't join any parties. I believe that's the only way for them to stay alive for an extended period of time. We are talking about the dangerous slum city here, it is not strange for its denizens to think that they need to be Hunters in order to survive living in slum city. But that would be a misunderstanding. The wasteland is not the same as the slum city. Green Hunters getting killed by monsters is not a rare occurrence. Moreover, the chance of them getting killed out there is higher compared to normal Hunters. Normally, common Hunters would transmit their location to the monsters through vision, sound, vibration. But this type of information transmission method is often damped by the colourless mist. Unfortunately, this is not true for the Hunters who are connected to the old-world domain. The colourless mist can't block their information transmission, thus letting monsters identify their positions easier. As such, they have a higher monster encounter rate compared to normal Hunters. Of course, that would mean that they're more likely to be killed by those monsters as well. For old-world connectors living in the slum city, going out to the wasteland is not a wise choice in order to survive."

"…But what if they survive the wasteland as well?"

"…Just why exactly are you so insisting on this matter?"

"Like I said, there's no reason in particular. And that is my last question."

"…The slum city is a place where people won't easily recognize your power even if you are indeed powerful, this would cause their personality to distort. Thus they would stay paranoid as they would go further to the east, seeking a place where people would recognize their achievements which would get them killed eventually. But if they still survive that, I bet that they will be working in the front-most battlefield in the east. That hell is filled with people with distorted personalities and firepower. So it won't be strange for them to be mixed in with the people who live there."

"I see. That's a really interesting subject. By the way, it might be weird to call this my form of gratitude, but you can do whatever you want with Katsuya. I won't complain no matter what. But it would be difficult if you ask for my help to take him away. As you know, he's starting to stick out after that incident. It would be weird for someone from City Management like me to not give special treatment for a phenomenal Hunter like him, I hope you can understand that."

"No problem. We have no plans to take him away, we only want to introduce our beliefs to the people. So we will just use him to promote the great cause, nothing more."

"I see, so basically you want to get Katsuya on your side and make him attract more people to support the Nationalist, huh?"

"I would prefer if you would refer to that as just spreading the truth to clear up the Corporate Government's propaganda. Well then, I shall excuse myself."

Nergo then closed the call. After that, Yanagisawa mumbled to himself.

"…I wonder just how far they are planning to go. Well, I don't really care as long as they don't get in my way."

Yanagisawa already knew that the people who could connect to the old-world domain could send emotions through telepathy, but he also knew that they could send something far worse and evil than that through telepathy.

There was a theory saying that during the old-world era where it was common for people to be connected to the old-world domain, emotions were transferred to their enemies. It would make them think that killing themselves was the best course of action. Eventually, suicide spread across nations which ended the civilization. That was why the buildings were very well preserved even after civilization had ended a long time ago. After all, this long term preservation was unexplainable solely with the self-repairing system.

Many thought that as a result of security enhancement against such a psychological attack, those who were not even able to connect to the old-world domain survived and rebuilt the world. The people of the eastern district were basically the descendants of these people, this was the reason why they could not connect to the old-world domain. So judging by this story, the people who were identified as old-world connectors in the current era, referred to those with the faulty security setting and they were actually in danger. So the plan from the Corporate Government was to increase the number of these people. Naturally, this was for the sake of their own profits.

There were also many other problems concerned with being able to connect to the old-world domain. Yanagisawa did not know how much Nergo knew. The reason why he was pretending to be clueless was to check how much Nergo knew about old-world connectors and how much information he was willing to share.

At the very least, Nergo had strong resistance against the emotion transmission from the old-world connectors. As such, it was difficult to identify an old-world connector using that method. That was why Nergo was trying to identify that by observing the effect on the other people. Yanagisawa understood that it would be counter-effective if the officer sent by the Nationalists to find an old-world connector fell victim to their thought transmission.

Although Yanagisawa was interested in Nergo's resistance, he did not say anything about that matter nor did he try to pursue that question. After all, he understood that it was not a wise thing to do. So he decided to stop worrying about that and once again reopen the information window about Akira.

"…Although it's not in a straightforward manner, he's supporting a slum gang. He also did work together with the other Hunters although very rarely. He worked in a team in the Seranthal building. He then risked his life in order to save his lover during that battle in the slum city. Although he basically works alone, he can also perform well in a team. So it doesn't really match the indicators from what Nergo had said. I guess he's really not one of them…"

Yanagisawa then lowered his guard toward Akira. After removing the information about Akira from his panel, Katsuya's information once again came up.

"As I thought, he's the one."

In contrast to Akira's case, Yanagisawa raised his guard toward Katsuya.

As Yanagisawa's mind returned to the present, he projected the information about Katsuya's team on the holographic display up in the air. Ever since they started using the coordination support system augmented suits, they showed a rare level of teamwork and were performing really well. The note on the side listed both the praises and the complaints regarding the augmented suit as well as a small notice that Inabe had secured an investment from the city defence squad for the expedition budget.

Seeing that, Yanagisawa could not hold back his chuckle.

“I don’t know how far it is just coincidence, but if all of them are, then he’s really one lucky guy.”

According to the information that he had received from Nergo and the people under him whom he had sent to monitor Katsuya, the data extracted from the support system used by Katsuya’s team pointed out that Katsuya was a highly troublesome person.

The positive emotions, impressions and evaluations from old-world connectors affected the people around them. Their real skills and all the dangerous situations that they undergo together with their team in the wasteland would result in greater expectations from others. In others’ minds, it was as though their team would always perform well. As all of this coagulate to push their positive impression even further, it also helped to mask their ability as an old-world connector. After all, even normal Hunters would form a close bond when they go through numerous dangerous situations together. The existence of such a bond helped further hide the identities of old-world connectors.

In addition, once they broke through a certain limit of someone’s positive impression and likability, they would form a local network made up of said people. This would allow them to share more of their emotions and increase their teamwork and performance as a team.

Moreover, information tends to flow from the people in the upper hierarchical structure to the people below. Thus Katsuya’s confidence naturally flowed to the people under him, causing his team to have no fear when up against anything. The local network would then further blur the line that differentiated them individually. So even when they got killed during the battle, as long as Katsuya was still alive, they would not be able to recognize their own death, which greatly reduced the fear of dying. As a result, formed a team with a core that did not fear death.

“Well, I bet he can only do that because he’s an amiable person though. But again, it is impossible to ignore its effect. His local network has grown as big as Drankam itself. No wonder Nergo wants to get him. If he joined the Nationalists, it would be an easy thing for them to take over the city. And then, I’m sure they will also provide support to him. And with that local network, their support will also reach his friends. The speed of how the local network is forming and their performance as a team… everything makes sense now even if he’s not doing so deliberately.”

Yanagisawa, who was usually smiling, suddenly stopped.

“Should I kill him right away?”

After a short silence, he then continued without making any change in his expression.

“No, I still don’t have irrefutable evidence. And even if it’s true, they should still not know that I’m watching Katsuya. There might be some profit I can scrap up by letting him live for now. More importantly, for tomorrow’s expedition…”

After another short silence, this time his expression turned rather serious.

“…I might be able to use this. If we continue extending the supply line, I bet they’ll start reacting differently. I need to make some preparations for that.”

Yanagisawa pulled out a black card and stared at it.

“I don’t know how far this card will go, but it should be alright. That thing also hates them after all, so there should be room for negotiation. Although it is dangerous, it’s a worthwhile bet.”

Yanagisawa placed that card back as his expression returned to his usual smile, but his frown did not completely vanish.

***

Before the day of the expedition, Akira took a wonderful bath to prepare himself for the incoming operation. Since he had taken a bath in Sheryl's base a few times before, his current bath now felt somehow lacking. But since he could just go straight to bed afterwards, he still chose the bath in his house.

"If only the money from the automata came in a bit faster, I would have some time to readjust my equipment as well."

Even if he went to buy new equipment from Shizuka's shop, she would still need some time for the order to arrive, and there was not enough time for that before the expedition. So he decided to get new equipment next time. Depending on how things played out, he was thinking of adding more to the budget that he handed over to Kibayashi. Kibayashi, who knew that bank transfer through the Hunter office was not cheap, told Akira that the more money he invested, the better the equipment that Akira would get.

Alpha, who was also in the bath with Akira, just like usual, tried to cheer up a sulking Akira.

"It can't be helped. I think we already did our best preparing ourselves with the time that we had."

The APC that was sent out for repair had returned. Although it took quite a long time for the repair to finish due to the damage on the APC, it was still cheaper than buying a new one. That was why Akira decided not to buy a new vehicle.

The vehicle was also protected with expensive armour tiles. Since it was not the type of vehicle that could manoeuvre nimbly enough to avoid attacks, he splurged on the armour tiles to make sure that the vehicle would not get stopped on its way.

Akira had also bought as many bullets and energy packs as possible from Shizuka's shop. That was also the case for the medicines from Katsuragi's shop. This time, he paid all of his own expenses. In exchange, Inabe promised to buy any relics that he found at a good price. That was a covert signal from Inabe, telling Akira to find expensive relics first before asking him to pay for the expense.

“Get to bed early and get ready for tomorrow, nothing good will come from exploring ruins while being sleep deprived.”

“I know. Well, it is a request. Although I had no plans to go near Kuzusuhara ruin, for the time being, it can’t be helped. Let’s give our best tomorrow.”

“Akira, if you think that it’s getting dangerous, withdraw immediately, okay? It seems that Elena and Sara won’t participate in this expedition, so it should be alright.”

Alpha was smiling teasingly, Akira replied that with a wry smile.

“Yeah, I know. Sorry.”

When Inabe said that he had received replies from the other Hunters with the Hunter Rank above 40, Akria’s mind went to Elena and Sara. Inabe did think of bringing out Elena and Sara’s names to manipulate Akira, but then he decided to approach the matter from another direction and only hinted at the matter. So basically, Akira lost to Inabe’s negotiation skills.

After a short usual idle talk in the bath with Alpha, Akira went to bed and slept just like usual. He did not show any particular excitement nor fear toward tomorrow’s expedition, it was business as usual for him.

The date changed, the sun climbed the sky. Katsuya, Inabe and Yanagisawa had their own respective aims during the large-scale expedition that started that day.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 213, Communication Cutoff

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The robotic humanoid soldiers slowly encroached deeper into the Kuzusuhara ruin. They were the main actors in the expedition into the ruin. They had a powerful large black gun accompanied by a missile pod of a similar size. It was assorted with high-caliber portable cannon complete with forcefield armour shields.

The new weapon was dispatched as a part of the defensive squad during the expedition, it worked as an advertisement for the new powered suits. Inabe spared no effort to advertise the powered suit and the weapons to all companies that he knew. He ended up filling the expedition with an abnormal number of powered suits and weapons.

With that many powered suits roaming the area. Of course, they would clash with the monsters. All swarms of monsters went to impede their advancement, this included weapon dogs. But the squad was able to plough through them with ease, filling the area with carcasses.

“HQ, this is C501 from C5 squad. We have encountered a swarm of large monsters and defeated them.”

“How is the damage?”

“The squad is fine, we still have enough medicine and ammo to continue the operation.”

“Roger that, continue with the plan.”

“…I just have a small worry though. We are encountering monsters more often than we first predicted. I know that the unexplored deeper part of the ruin is filled with powerful monsters, but they are even stronger than we expected.”

“The unexplored areas stay unexplored because most of the Hunters who went there did not come back alive, that is exactly why we lack information regarding those areas. It can’t be helped if there are powerful monsters there. Maintain the supply route and expand out carefully… Ah, and also, there’s a directive from the upper echelon to keep the damage to a minimum since it won’t act as a good advertisement otherwise. So make sure to withdraw when it gets too dangerous.”

The powered suit operator laughed in reaction to that small joke from HQ.

“Well well well, I’m glad that we got ourselves some kind commanders this time. C501. Roger that!”

The call was closed as he then scanned the surrounding area. The ground riddled with carcasses as far as the eyes could see was the testament of the power of the squad.

“Well, we’re winning anyway, so I guess there’s nothing to worry about.”

The powered suit squad continued their objective of expanding the secured area. Although they encountered numerous monsters, to the point they questioned where those came from, their powerful equipment made quick work of them. Since that was the case, they thought that there was no problem at all.

Not too long after the squad continued, they arrived at a certain place where numerous tall buildings stuck to each other, forming a formidable wall. In front of that wall, a monster was standing as if guarding the wall.

The outer appearance of that monster was similar to a tank with multiple cannons. It was so huge that even the powered suit squad had to look up to see the entirety of the monster. The monster looked like a mobile fort. While the lower part of the monster was equipped with metallic reptilian legs, it looked like a biological monster carrying a fort on its back.

As that monster spotted the advancing squad, its guns quickly turned and aimed at them before it started shooting vigorously as if it was also trying to destroy the buildings around it.

The black powered suits quickly engaged the monster. They immediately put up their shields to take cover from the incoming barrage. They hid behind the rubble or jumped away from the enveloped direction as they quickly surrounded their target. They communicated closely with each other to ensure maximum teamwork as they quickly dispatched the monster.

Both the monster and the squad were using high caliber weapons, obviously not to be used for fighting against mere humans and were also not designed to be used by humans either as they released countless warheads at each other, enveloping the area with barrages that flattened the already ruined buildings in the area.

The blasts were so powerful that the forcefield shield could not completely block them. The powered suits that were using their shields as covers had their whole arms blown away. Those who were hiding behind the rubble and tall buildings were almost buried alive. While those who jumped up were blown away, crashing down one by one into the ground.

But the monster itself was not able to get away unscathed. Many of its cannons were sacked, huge holes were left in its armour plates, while the fleshy parts of its legs were shredded to pieces.

Rubble and wreckage rained down from the sky mixed with live warheads. The warheads bounced around and fell down in a completely different place. The warheads that landed on the rubble exploded and threw more rubble into the mix. This also helped shave the forcefield armour of the powered suits. Of course, the monster was not unharmed as well. It basically inflicted equal damage to both sides.

That was when more reinforcement arrived. The squad that was already in battle worked closely with them to adjust their aim as they performed a long-range bombardment. The already powerful warheads landed accurately in a concentrated spot, blowing the humongous monster away.

As the leader of the vanguard squad looked at the monster that was already turned into a pile of meat and scarp, he finally let out a sigh of relief.

“This is C501. Thanks for the reinforcement.”

“C801 here. I’m glad we made it on time. So then, why didn’t you wait for us?”

“It was already too late when we noticed the enemy. It might have been using some kind of camouflage. Although it might sound like a lame excuse, we did not expect an attack at all, all the monsters that we encountered up till now had no camouflage on. If we dial up the sensitivity of our information-gathering devices to detect monsters with camouflage, there is a good chance that they would be able to track our position as well. That’s why we thought that it was an unnecessary risk.”

“I see. Do you think there is a chance that those monsters that you encountered first were just decoys for this monster?”

“…No, I don’t think that’s the case, but again, I can’t really say for sure.”

The squad leader then proceeded to check the damage from the exchange and frowned. Three powered suits were down and many of them were damaged although still fit for battle. Considering that it was a squad filled with new equipment, it was costly.

“To everyone in the squad, we will take this point as the frontline, take up defensive formation and tune up your information-gathering devices to scan for hidden monsters as well. We will prioritize securing the area. For those with forcefield armour below 70%, withdraw together with the severely damaged units. We will then join up with the C8 squad and-”

While the squad leader was still giving out commands, his information-gathering device suddenly showed a signal coming from the monster that the squad just defeated. As they focused their attention in that direction, one of the buildings that was a part of the tall wall which was already on the brink of falling from the previous exchange, started to crumble. Once it was completely flat on the ground, the squad leader was able to see past the wall as he contacted the HQ in panic.

“H-HQ. This is C5 squad, we just encountered what might be an immensely powerful monster. Fortunately, we were able to defeat it with the help of the C8 squad. We will send the damaged units to the back.”

“Roger that… Is there something wrong over there?”

“We spotted something that seemed to be a completely undamaged city behind the wall that got destroyed from the previous battle. I’ll send you an image, you can go ahead and check it yourself. We ask for further orders after you finish checking the image.”

The abnormality in that call expressed what kind of amazing thing that they had just found. The squad leader waited nervously for the next order when his information-gathering device suddenly picked up another signal. As he flusteredly shifted the camera on his powered suit to the source of that signal, he saw through the gap of the fallen building, the figure of a beautiful girl.

That girl somehow seemed unhappy as she gazed coldly. And when the squad leader met her eyes through the camera, the girl seemed to be muttering something before his connection to the HQ suddenly was cut off.

Tsubaki was standing on top of the rubble on the border of the area under her jurisdiction. Normally, she would not be able to get out of her area due to her restriction. This time, she came in an old-world automaton that was already turned into a terminal. So she did not travel there as a virtual object.

Tsubaki gazed at the squad of the black powered suits and mumbled.

“…They are here. Looking at them, it’s no surprise it did not even stand for 50 years this time. Well, it doesn’t really matter. It doesn’t change that it satisfies the requirement. I hope we can negotiate peacefully again this time.”

Tsubaki walked and left the area. Multiple transparent robots followed next to her as she stepped outside the area.

The squad leader was at a loss that his call with the HQ was suddenly cut. But their information-gathering devices that were already tuned up to detect hidden monsters, now showed multiple signals. It gave them a shock as invisible objects appeared one after another from a small opening in that crumbled wall.

“Open fire!!”

All the experiences that he accumulated caused his alarm to ring danger as he barked out commands. The rest of the team did not lose a beat as they started shooting as well. Right at the same time, the monster under Tsubaki’s command also replied accordingly.

Flashes from muzzles and forcefield armours appeared out of nowhere, distorting the optical camouflage of the mechanical monsters and shedding to their true form in front of the squad. Countless tanks with multiple legs. Some of them had their legs completely folded up as they were floating without touching the ground. The walls, the grounds, even the sky were immediately encroached by monsters as they did not stop shooting at the city’s squad. The black powered suit quickly reformed their formation and released more or less the same absurd amount of warheads in the enemy’s direction.

And so, the wasteland was once again engulfed in flames.

***

Inabe looked delighted as he was on standby in the front base’s command center. The picture sent by the forward squad showed an area under

Tsubaki’s control, which indicated that this large-scale expedition was a success.

The area would be put under his jurisdiction and he would be promised a good position if he could bring in profits from that area for the sake of the city’s development. The fact that he had won this large bet of his, had sent him over the moon.

That was when something really bad happened. The picture displayed on the large monitor suddenly went blank.

“What just happened? Get it back online!!”

The other people present there scrambled in panic from Inabe’s order. But unfortunately, the connection did not return back no matter what they did.

“It’s not working. We can’t establish contact, or more like, this is…”

The staff looked grim when they noticed what was going on.

“We lost all contact with all the Hunters there!!”

“What!?”

Inabe could not hide his surprise. His voice echoed through the command center and dissipated into the air. But even so, it did not help with the situation that they were facing at all.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

Right about the same time, Akira was hunting for relics in one of the old dilapidated buildings. The building itself was located inside the area secured by the powered suit squad. Most likely, no one had ever searched that building. It was simply because it was guarded by too many monsters, then there was a good chance he could still find a number of relics inside the building. But Akira’s expression said it all.

“There’s really nothing here, huh? Though I’m pretty sure we’re already deep here and it won’t be strange to find a lot of relics in this area.”

Not only was it filled with powerful monsters, but there were also no relics to be found. It was the worst possible location for Hunters. Tsubaki had used her restricted authority as much as possible to remove relics around her own area, that was why Akira found nothing here.

Alpha already knew about that fact, but she avoided saying anything to him.

“It’s exactly because Hunters normally cannot even come close to these buildings that they organized such a large-scale expedition. They are hoping to find an area rich with relics.”

“That does make sense, but again I don’t want to get anywhere close to those powered suits. Although I’m sure I can find better relics if I do that.”

Unexplored areas have a better chance of housing valuable relics. That was why although they knew that it was dangerous to stay close to the powered suits, there were Hunters who chose to do so in order to get first dibs on the unexplored buildings.

As for Akira, he chose to stay away from the front line, thus only exploring the buildings relatively later. It was the result of him prioritizing his safety. In the first place, he only accepted that request, thinking of joining up with Elena and Sara in case they also participated in the operation. Although it was not like he was taking it easy, he believed that there was no need to unnecessarily expose himself to danger.

“But, I guess it would be bad if I don’t show any result, right?”

“I think there’s no need to worry about that. The contract states that you are free to do what you want. The inner part of the ruin is still pretty dangerous although the powered suit squads already combed this area beforehand. So let’s proceed with safety in mind.”

“You’re right, I guess I’ll do that, huh… Alpha?”

Akira glanced at Alpha when he said so, but Alpha who was beside him just a moment ago suddenly vanished. He raised his eyebrows and looked around, thinking that she just suddenly changed position, but he could not find her anywhere.

Right at the next moment, he felt a slight dizziness as his vision blurred for a second, but it quickly returned back to normal. He felt weird as if his vision was momentarily cut off before restarting.

“Alpha! Stop with the joke! At least tell me beforehand if you’re going to do something like that!”

But there was no reply. Even if he sent a strong voice through telepathy, it only dissipated without getting any response. Akira felt a different sensation compared to when Alpha left him back in the Seranthal building. Back then, it was more like there was someone there that was ignoring his call, but this time, it felt like he was completely alone, enveloped in complete silence.

This time, Akira had completely lost all of his connection to Alpha.

Akira started to feel scared, but it was immediately replaced with an intense nervousness.

[Calm down, don’t panic. Alpha did tell me that there would be occasions where I would lose my connections with her inside the inner part of a ruin. I’m not in the middle of a fight right now and it’s not like I have no route to withdraw like back in the Seranthal building. And above all, I’m not inside a monster this time. I just need to proceed carefully until I can get back my connection with Alpha, there is no problem.]

Akira took a deep breath, reorganized his thoughts, and decided to stop the relic hunt. He turned around to go back to where he came from. Since it was not a good idea to continue the hunt in this situation, he had decided to go back home.

He could just say that his equipment was not working well as an excuse. He then used the terminal that was lent to him to contact the HQ. But again, there was no reply at all. He frowned when he checked the display as it said that it was out of range. So he shifted his attention to his information terminal hoping that he could find a signal through that route. He had since decided to use a better service provider after what had happened back in Mihazono ruin. Unfortunately, it also said that it was out of range.

Akira knitted his eyebrows, this reminded him of what happened back in the Seranthal building.

[Is this the same situation as back then in the Seranthal building?! No, judging that I can't connect with Alpha at all, it means that this is worse than that! I need to get out of here!]

As Akira started running down the hallway, he spotted another Hunter.

"I can't call the HQ from here, can you get any connection?"

The guy moved to the side as if to make way for Akira and checked his own information terminal just to shake his head at Akira.

This confirmed that Akira was not the only one having trouble, so he placed getting out of that building as his primary priority. Judging that he might get his connection with Alpha back once he got out from this place, he thought that everything would be alright as long as he got out of here. Thus, he increased the power output of his augmented suit and defensive coat. Since he had enough spare energy packs back in his vehicle, he did not try to conserve them at all even if it was a complete waste of his remaining energy packs.

As Akira passed that Hunter, he ran down the hallway and jumped down the stairs. Right at the next moment, all of Akira's senses were tuned to their highest sensitivity. He was extremely nervous after picking up a danger signal transmitted from his information terminal. He followed his instinct to take a defensive stance right before the bomb that was planted on the ground near him exploded.

The bomb was set there more to close off an escape route instead of killing someone. Moreover, since Akira raised the output power of his defensive coat to the maximum right before that happened, he was only blown back to the floor where he came from without sustaining any other damage. But of course, that shaved a lot of his energy.

Akira was utterly surprised as his body was smacked back onto the ground. Thanks to all the training that he had gone through, he was able to maintain his balance. While his mind was still trying to wrap his head around what just happened, his danger alarm flared once more. Akira followed his pure instinct as he grabbed his SSB rifle and started shooting behind him without even looking back while he jumped aside into a nearby room.

In such a short timespan, the hallway was immediately filled with flying bullets. Countless bullets scorched and drilled through the walls, floors and ceilings of the area. Enveloping the whole place with holes.

Although both of them received some shots, none was even close to fatal. The other guy that shot back at Akira was the guy that he just passed by a moment ago.

“Knew that it wouldn’t kill you!! Well, if this was enough to kill you, you would have died back then after all, huh!!”

Akira tried to digest what just happened as he hid inside a room and used some medicines. Judging from what the other guy just said, he understood that he must have fought against this guy sometime in the past, but it did not ring any bells at all. He thought that it might be someone from that battle in the Ezont family’s base, but thinking about it again, it was too much work to join the expedition just to seek revenge. After all, it would be easier to attack him when he was not fully armed.

“Aren’t you mistaking me for someone?”

“Not at all! You are Akira, right? I did all my homework and investigated everything about you after all!! Well, although, me trying to kill you here is actually just a coincidence, it’s true that I have my own personal reason to want you dead. But compared to the greater good that it might bring, it doesn’t change the fact that it’s better if you’re dead!”

Akira did not understand what exactly that guy was talking about. But he immediately pushed that unimportant question to the back of his mind since that guy who was still alive after that exchange would definitely come after him soon. He had to fight that guy without Alpha's support, that one fact alone caused Akira to focus even more than before.

[Goddammit! This guy could have not taken any worse timing to ambush me!]

Akira spat out curses in his mind as he gripped his SSB rifle hard. He then took a deep breath, compressed his time perception and jumped out of the room.

The powered-up augmented suit propelled his body outward, it took a blink of an eye for him to land on the hallway. He used one leg to kick the wall in order to kill his momentum as he quickly raised both of his SSB rifles and released an indiscriminate barrage in the general direction of the enemy. The extended magazine compensated for the lack of aiming as the other party received multiple shots to his body.

But even so, none of the bullets left any wounds. The other guy put his hand forward and extended a forcefield armour to block the incoming bullets. Once the flashes from the converted momentum dimmed, it exposed his mocking smile.

Akira could not hide his surprise, seeing which, the other guy just shook his head and said.

"That's just too bad. I've only used a weak body back then to suit the setting, working with the thugs of slum city. But this time, I came to this expedition with a much better body."

That finally rang a bell for Akira, but his common sense was telling him that it was not possible.

"No way… You… It can't be…"

"Now that I think about it, I didn't introduce myself back then, my name is Zalmo. I won't lose this time!!"

Zalmo retracted his forcefield armour and started shooting at Akira, who kicked the wall again and plunged back to the previous room.

Zalmo stopped shooting, changed his gun's form and started shooting again. This time, he had enough firepower to pierce the wall to hunt for Akira.

Now that the walls served as only obstacles for him, Akira immediately ran toward the door on the opposite side of the room. Although he was faster than the flying rubble, he was still slowed down by them. He ducked and evaded the trajectory lines of the incoming bullets in a desperate attempt to escape the room.

Although the bullets were powerful enough to pierce the walls, they also lost most of their momentum due to it. Thanks to that, they were not able to break through the forcefield armour of Akria's coat. They were only able to give off a dim burst of light when it hit his back.

[He's the guy who attacked Sheryl's relic shop back then, huh!! How the hell is he still alive!? I basically destroyed his head, you know!? Don't tell me that his brain is actually stored in his body and that he was just pretending to be dead!? No, as I thought, that's not right…]

Akira desperately ran through the hallway while thinking so, but he was immediately interrupted by more bullets. So he quickly made a U-turn, changed the setting of his SSB rifles, and emptied the remaining bullets in the magazines using the maximum rate of fire in exchange for energy consumption to release a storm of bullets into the hallway.

Zalmo thought that it would be bad to take that head-on even for him, so he jumped to a nearby room and took cover. But he still had a confident smile on his face.

"It seems that you had gotten yourself better equipment too compared to back then! But I can tell! You're not as sharp as before! You have no support system in your augmented suit this time! Let's see just how long you can stay alive on your own!! Good luck with that, brat!!"

Akira was caught off guard by that statement and shouted back by pure reflex.

“Is this your doing too!? What the heck did you just do this time?!”

“There’s no need for you to know!! This is where you pay for getting ahead of yourself when you’re nothing without your support! Go to hell!!”

Zalmo tried to force his way to close the distance. The slight hesitation in Akira’s movement made a small opening that he used to carefully step in for a finishing blow.

Akira did try to shoot Zalmo down before he could reach him. But with his state of intense panic, his focus was thrown off. The resulting hesitation caused an opening that allowed his opponent to gain the upper hand. He might be able to do something to flip the table there, but that would warrant him to do something reckless. So he decided to limit the opponent’s movement using bullets while increasing his defenses by increasing the output power of his defensive coat. He was somehow able to stay alive by doing so but the consumption rate of his remaining energy was worrying him.

As Akira was trying to run away from there, he spotted a staircase to another floor. He thought that his connection with Alpha might return once he got out from that building, and was about to jump down the stairs. But he suddenly stopped midway when he remembered what had happened not too long ago.

He had no time to check for the bomb with his information terminal. In the worst-case scenario, the explosion might get him trapped in between the bomb and Zalmo, thus completely cutting off his remaining escape routes. He also had the option of turning up the forcefield armour output of his coat and trying to force his way through the bomb. But the current him lacked Alpha’s support and was not as reckless as his usual self, so he was not able to select that choice.

The short time in which he was comparing his options there caused him to lose his precious time. All the distance that he had opened from running away was all in vain, now that Zalmo had closed that distance. In order to get away from the bullets coming from just the previous turn, Akira had no other choice but to jump in a different direction, throwing away the chance of going down the stairs.

Akira continued running. His expression was already filled with fear, the intense nervousness caused his body to slightly tremble. That was when he spotted a crack on the wall of the building.

That was enough to get him to make up his mind. He stopped, pulled out the blade on his back and turned it on. The blade glowed and he swung it at the wall. The powerful blade answered his wish and fluidly cut through the strong old-world wall.

Akira swung a few times and lastly delivered a kick to open a hole in the wall. That was when Zalmo finally caught up to him, so Akira made his resolve and jumped out of the building.

Since he jumped out from a high floor, he still had some time before reaching the ground although it was no more than a few seconds. Akira extended that time using his compressed time perception as he called for Alpha through telepathy.

“Alpha!!”

Again, no answer at all. If it was just like back then in the Seranthal building, he would have been able to regain his connection with Alpha if he was able to get out of the building. But this time, his first bet ended up with his loss.

Right then Akira’s second bet also ended up with his loss. He thought that Zalmo would not follow him, but on the contrary, Zalmo did not hesitate as he also jumped out from that hole.

He had lost all of his bets up until now. At this rate, he would only land on the ground and die, of course, that was assuming that Zalmo did not get him first. While on the other hand, Alpha’s support also was also not coming back at all. In that slow-moving world, reasons for his impending death kept piling up. Akira mocked all the decisions, reasons and luck that led him to this state.

“Alright alright, I just need to do this on my own, right?! I get it, okay! I just have to do it, right?!”

Akira’s spirit rebounded and boosted his focus. The speed of the time flow around him decreased significantly. In this state, his voice that he forced out from his throat while laughing made a strange unrecognizable sound. Akira had made his decision, renewed his resolve.

If he did not fight back, only death awaited him. Then there was only one choice, to fight back and to kill. No matter who his opponent was, even if it was a human, or a monster, or his own past, or even his bad luck, it did not change what he had to do. Zalmo had to die; anyone, anything, that wanted to kill him must die. Akira finally made his resolve as he completely dropped the choice of running away, until his connection with Alpha returned.

He jammed the blade on his right hand straight into the building’s wall as he continued to slide down. He used his grip to twist the blade in order to change his direction, sliding down the wall to avoid Zalmo’s bullets. At the same time, he used the SSB rifle on his left hand to suppress Zalmo while making use of the strong recoil to dig himself into the wall, till both of his legs were inside it.

The blade continued to slide down the wall while the forcefield armour of his augmented suit protected his heel while gouging out a line on the wall. When he had slowed down considerably, he suddenly started running toward Zalmo.

Right at the same time Akira made his resolve, his vision began changing. The more he concentrated, the clearer his vision of Zalmo was, while the rest of the world started to blur. It was the proof that he was able to bend reality to his will. The strong will in him caused the reality to change closer into the world that he wished for.

With the help of Alpha's support, he was able to see this world in great detail. But this was impossible to do when he was by himself, even trying to do that might cause his brain to overload with information which might end up in his death. Akira's solution to this problem was to limit the detail that his brain would process.

With consciously filtering the information coming to his brain, he was able to increase the accuracy of his perception. With less information to process, his brain was able to produce the image of the perceived world in a shorter time. Thus the resulting perception was closer to the real world and eventually, increasing his reaction time.

While at the same time, he cut off any resource that he used to process pain and any other unimportant sensation as much as possible. He had consciously turned off his sensation for pain, which also acted as a danger warning when he was in front of death's door. Nonetheless, he fully accepted it.

Because of that, Akira's fighting prowess received a huge boost. He himself did not know how long he could maintain his current state, but one thing he knew for sure was he could not maintain it for long.

More than that, this was actually the first time Akira was able to successfully execute it. He already tried doing it during training a few times, all of which ended in failure. The reasons for those failures were mainly two things. Firstly, Alpha placed a restriction to make sure that Akira would not burn out his brain. Secondly, Akira unconsciously thought that Alpha would save him in times of emergency.

Now that Akira was freed from those chains, he once again stood face to face against a certain death all by himself for the first time after so long. And just like back then when he had to do it in the slum city as he was fighting for his survival all by himself, he faced the impending doom with a smile.

Zalmo, who was free-falling while aiming at Akira, was surprised when Akira suddenly went straight at him. But he was still calm enough to aim at Akira and release a few shots. Akira swiftly moved in a zig-zag, evading those bullets and once again kicked the wall to take a huge leap toward Zalmo. Both of them battled with each other on the side of the wall, as if the gravity was not affecting them at all.

Zalmo was struck with amazement.

[His movements suddenly changed!! Moreover, what is with his reaction speed!? Accelerator drug, huh!? Was he only running back then just to wait until his accelerator drug takes effect!? I jumped to chase him, but don't tell me that he was actually inviting me to jump too!! But he hasn't fully regained his sharpness! I'll have to kill him before he regains his full system support!]

But Akira was also surprised there.

[This is only enough to take this fight into a stalemate!? But there's no guarantee that I can return back to this mode later on! This is my only chance to kill him! Just drop dead already!!]

The moment Zalmo was within the reach of his blade, Akira quickly heaved his blade down. The slash of the blade created a dim glow. Created using forcefield technology, this dim glow was more than enough to showcase its enhanced sharpness. Zalmo noticed this, so he raised his forcefield armour to its limit.

The moment the blade touched his forcefield armour, a blinding flash of light emitted due to the energy conversion. Zalmo's confident smile and Akira's mocking smile were swallowed by the light. Although the light was bright enough to drop visibility to zero. Both of them immediately aimed their rifles to where their respective opponents might be and simultaneously released a barrage. The shock wave and the kickback of the barrage blew each of them back as if they were colliding with each other within that blinding light.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 214, Requirements for Negotiation

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

There were a lot of Hunters killing time inside the cafeteria of the forward base. They were put on standby in case of an emergency. They were basically made of two kinds of Hunters, one was those who applied to join the expedition but got rejected for some reason, so now they were waiting there in case anyone requested reinforcement. While the other half was the people who were deliberately left there as a reserve in case of an emergency. The former paid to be there, while the latter were paid to be there, both of them waited there, preparing for any emergencies.

Sara and Elena were among the latter Hunters. Both of them received an invitation to participate in the expedition from Inabe's proxy. Then during negotiations, they learned that Akira was also planning to participate in the expedition as well, so they decided to join. But in the end, they were somehow assigned as reserves.

Inabe was hoping that Akira would return back from the expedition with a lot of old-world terminals, but if Elena and Sara were with him, there was a chance that Akira would decide to hold back. That was why Inabe arranged it so that Sara and Elena were assigned to the reserve team.

In the middle of their idle talk, Sara suddenly asked.

“Say, Elena, are you really okay staying only as a reserve?”

Elena tilted her head.

“Hm? Do you want to join the expedition instead? If you really want to go no matter what, I can try to negotiate with them again.”

“Hmmm, it is at least better than just sitting here, waiting for something that we don’t even know will happen or not. But it’s not like it is a must. It’s just that, although it’s great that we’re getting paid just to sit and wait, I know that you don’t really like this either, right Elena?”

Elena made a conflicted smile after her best friend pointed it out.

“…This might sound a bit ridiculous. I feel that should something happen while we participate in the expedition, Akira would try his best to look for us. He would prioritize us instead of himself. But if we don’t participate, he would have peace of mind and could just immediately withdraw.”

Sara gave out a similar wry smile.

“You have a point. It might sound ridiculous, but it’s better to be safe than sorry.”

Elena and Sara believed that Akira currently liked them. But there was that one time when Akira almost completely cut off relations with them. So if they were asked if they had regained their original trust just like back then when they explored the Mihazono ruin together, they could not give a definitive yes.

But even so, he was still willing to go to dinner together with them, so it could be said that their relationship had mended although it was only a little. Elena tried to voice that out as if she wished for it or maybe even to hang on to it. To which, Sara also reacted with an agreement.

That was when a notice reached their information terminal. Elena checked the content of the notice and frowned.

“…Well, it seems that something has happened.”

“I wonder if Akira has some kind of weird bad luck that indiscriminately gets everyone around him involved in it. I do feel bad for saying this, but I somehow saw this coming.”

“And he survived everything up till now, no wonder he’s that strong.”

Elena and Sara exchanged wry smiles, then immediately turned solemn and prepared to move out. The content of the notice included, ‘HQ has lost contact with the Hunters sent to the deeper part of the ruin. We request for an urgent dispatch of Hunters to check up on them’.

Hunters who were posted to the border, which denoted the inner part of the ruin, were assigned to stop anyone who tried to enter the area. Only those under Inabe’s jurisdiction with permission were allowed to enter.

However, their actual job was not to stop intruders by force. They were equipped with powerful information-gathering devices and were tasked to watch their surroundings. If they spotted anyone suspicious, they were instructed to warn that person and to contact HQ. Of course, they could also get rid of that intruder on their own if they could. After all, it was expected that those who tried to enter the inner part of the ruin would be fully armed. The requester did not have enough spare resources to pay the guards who could always deal with that kind of intruder.

Togami and Reina had accepted that job. Since the area that they were assigned to was vast, there was basically no one else in the area.

Although it was only a guard job, it was their first Hunter job after a while. That was why Reina was extremely pumped for this request, but since nothing was happening, she started to feel bored.

“Although we did get back to taking Hunter job, this is rather boring.”

“We’re on guard duty, so having nothing in particular happening is good news.”

“That’s true, but still… By the way, do you want to try looking for relics around here? We’re still inside the assigned area even if we look around, so we can look out for intruders while searching for relics, right?”

“Just don’t get too carried away, alright?”

Togami was basically saying that he did not mind Reina going, but he himself would stay. Reina understood that and pouted. She did not say anything back and chose to stay.

Togami found that a bit unexpected. But that was all, he did not pursue the subject any further. But Kanae was forcing her hand over her mouth, holding herself back from laughing. Seeing that, Togami started to frown. Reina, who noticed that, jabbed at her.

“What?”

“Nope, it’s nothing. I just thought that it was funny how Milady came up with a suggestion and did not go even after Togami gave his permission. Having an ulterior motive is not a bad thing at all.”

“I see.”

Reina gave a rather forceful smile and cut the conversation short. She finally realized that sometimes, showing a reaction was not a good thing.

Although Togami had a lot of thoughts running at the back of his mind after seeing Reina’s reaction, he believed that it was only him reading too much. He reminded himself that Reina was only trying to take this request seriously since she was the one who decided to do it in the first place. Therefore, he shelved any other miscellaneous thoughts away.

Shiori made a guess as to what they were talking about and interjected.

“Milady, although Togami-sama gave his permission, we basically got ourselves this request by butting into Togami-sama’s request. Thus it would be unwise to neglect our main duty.”

“I-I know. That’s why I’m not going, can’t you see?”

“Milady, it’s better to think things through first before saying anything.”

“Yeah yeah, I know, I will be careful.”

Togami thought that his guess was correct, Reina started to fluster, Kanae noticed a few other things and just smiled bitterly, while Shiori was standing there with a neutral face, playing dumb.

Feeling awkwardness wafting in the air, Reina decided to bring up a change in subject.

“By the way, when we talk about Kuzusuhara ruin, there’s an urban legend. The beguiling ghost. There are a lot of rumours floating around related to it, but I’ve been thinking that it might be one of those holograms that we saw in the Lida commercial district ruin. Something like that might be a guide that would answer honestly when asked for directions. Though, since the ruin is already filled with monsters, the Hunters who followed its direction would get killed instead. What do you think, Togami?”

“Well, that does sound plausible. Or maybe the ghost deliberately sent them to somewhere dangerous after concluding that they were suspicious individuals. Or maybe, since the holographic image doesn’t have the ability to transmit information in the form of voices, they just decided to follow a holographic image, and then they found themselves in the middle of an old-world security facility before they realized it… Reina, with that equipment you used, you can see augmented reality better than others, right? Be careful not to simply follow any augmented reality holographic image if you come across one, alright?”

“Don’t worry, I know just how dangerous this area is. But still, if I ever meet that old-world beguiling ghost, I feel like I have many questions for that ghost.”

“I can understand what you mean. It might be interesting to hear some stories about the old-world.”

“Right? To Hunters like us, that topic is what we are most curious about.”

As Reina was having a good time chatting with Togami, Shiori suddenly interjected with a serious voice.

“Milady.”

“I know, I won’t just go following that ghost if I see it.”

“That’s not it…”

Shiori hung her sentence there and seemed hesitant. Reina found it weird, but she then noticed that Kanae was smiling amusedly on the side.

“Kanae, what is it now?”

“It’s not really something big, but, let’s see… Well, Milady has been working hard lately, so I guess it’s a good idea to give a hint from time to time, hoping that Milady would be able to become an independent Hunter one day.”

“What are you talking about?”

“Milady, think carefully whether it’s a good idea to ask why Ane-san cut herself off right there. If Milady doesn’t ask Ane-san, I’m sure Ane-san would just come up with something random to hide it.”

Reina seemed a bit confused and turned toward Shiori.

“…Shiori, are you hiding something?”

“Milady, there is too much sensitive information in the world that are difficult to handle. The main problem would be whether Milady has the ability to properly deal with it. Information management is also an important skill for a Hunter. Milady, do you have the resolve to know information that might kill you? Moreover, having the resolve alone is hardly enough. After all, it is still not okay to let someone jump to his death just because he has made that resolve. It is also important to know the limitation, to keep oneself from learning about forbidden knowledge. It’s just as people say, ‘curiosity killed the cat’. There are many who ended up on the fugitive list simply because they somehow inadvertently learned some forbidden secret of the Corporate Government.”

Kanae said with a smile. She still had her eyes on the surroundings while exerting a level of intimidation. Reina flinched back and got even more confused.

“Well then, Milady, which one is the right choice? Is it to ask? Or not to ask? This is a test of Milady’s skill as a Hunter, you know!! So go ahead and use all this free time to think about it.”

Reina looked at Kanae and Shiori in turns. Shiori let out a huge sigh and frowned.

“Kanae, what are you trying to do?”

“I’m just giving advice to Milady about information management in place of the overprotective Ane-san.”

“That’s my job.”

“I don’t know what you’re talking about. Which one is your job? The one about teaching Milady how to handle information, or the one about managing information in place of Milady? Either way, it would all be in vain if Ane-san dies though.”

“Don’t just kill me off like that.”

“In that case, it’s okay for me to destroy that will which Ane-san wrote in case Ane-san dies, right?”

Shiori raised her eyebrows in reaction to Kanae, who said something like that in a slightly serious manner. Meanwhile, for Reina, it came as a huge surprise.

“S-Shiori, what is this will are you talking about…”

“Ah, Milady, about that…”

As Shiori was flusteredly looking for an excuse, Kanae suddenly gave a warning with a serious look.

“Milady, both Ane-san and I already did all the preparations in case we get killed anytime. That aforementioned will is just one of our preparations. If Milady gets surprised by small things like that, it means that Milady has a long way to go. Just how many times does Milady think we almost got killed this year?”

Reina could not hide her surprise. One of the reasons was that Kanae did not say that in her usual half-joking manner. But after that, Kanae immediately returned back to her usual self.

“Well, it seems that is indeed the case here. No wonder why Ane-san can’t help but get overprotective. After all, there’s no guarantee how far Togami would volunteer to babysit you. But well, being needy from time to time might be a love strategy to get Togami, but he will hate you if you do it too much you know, Milady?”

Even before Reina could react to that, Togami choked and coughed. Reina then flusteredly denied that.

“W-what are you even talking about, Kanae!?”

“Oh? so Milady is doing that without even being conscious about it, huh? Just my opinion here. Though it was not on purpose, I think inviting such a misunderstanding is cruel, you know?”

Since Kanae returned to her usual self trying to poke fun at the whole team, the awkward tense mood from just before was completely dispelled. But Shiori did not proceed to scold Kanae since she understood what Kanae was trying to say.

Kanae was being considerate to Reina, which was actually rare for her. Her opinion of Reina was nothing more than a naive rich lady. However, she significantly softened her stance after seeing how hard Reina had been trying. The reason why she said so was because she cared, otherwise, she would refrain from saying anything and would only do the bare minimum required for her job. She was being considerate in a different manner compared to Shiori.

If Shiori and Kanae died, then Reina would only follow afterwards. Unless she learned how to deal with such a situation herself, Reina's future was not that bright. Although she did not wish to deny Shiori's devotion, if that devotion became the reason she died, then making sure Reina learns how to handle the situation herself after that was a part of that devotion, or at least, that was what Kanae thought.

Shiori understood that as well, but at the moment, she could just handle everything herself. Therefore, it gave her a hard time on what to do. If she had the resolve to live beside Reina forever, then Kanae would not say anything about her being too overprotective. She also understood that Kanae was basically indirectly asking her 'are you sure you are alright with dying?' If that was the case, Shiori needed to put in more preparations to make sure that everything would be fine after she died, what she was doing right now was just a half-baked resolution. Nonetheless, it was a completely different matter on whether she could pull it off. The more willing she was to throw away her own life for Reina, the harder it was to make that decision.

After Kanae dispelled that awkward mood, Reina thought hard about information management that Kanae mentioned. Once she made up her mind, she then went to Shiori.

"Shiori, can you tell me what you wanted to say back then? But I won't force you if you don't want to. If you didn't tell me because you think I don't have the ability to deal with it, I have no wish to force you to tell me"

Shiori looked slightly surprised, she smiled gently at Reina and said.

"…Very well, Milady, I assume you have prepared yourself."

"Yes."

Togami, who was listening next to them, could feel that it was a conversation that should only be between them, so he felt a strange sensation of alienation as he spoke up.

“I don’t know what you guys are going to talk about, but don’t forget that there’s a single outsider here, okay? If it’s something that I shouldn’t hear, I can leave now…”

“I don’t mind if Togami-sama wants to listen as well, but it would bring the same danger that made me hesitate to tell Milady in the first place. If Togami-sama wants to listen in even after knowing that, then you may feel free to do so.”

“I see, well, I don’t see any reason why not, so I guess I will listen too.”

Shiori lightly nodded, her expression then turned serious.

“Now then, it is about the urban legend of Kuzusuhara ruin, the beguiling ghost. There’s a good chance that the real story about that ghost has been replaced by something those in Kugamayama city came up with.”

Reina seemed a bit disappointed as she tilted her head.

“Shiori, sorry, I don’t see any reason why you would hesitate telling me that.”

“There’s a problem with the original story. The story about the beguiling ghost was originally a series of multiple stories about it. It is a collection of stories about multiple ghosts luring Hunters into the ruin. The original story has it that these ghosts are the area managers of the different areas inside the ruin.”

Originally, the Kugamayama city was an frontier base made by Sakashita Heavy Industry to explore Kuzusuhara ruin. Since it was big enough to be promoted into one of the five great corporations, it sent fully armed Hunters equipped well enough to be in the front line to hunt for relics inside Kuzusuhara ruin. But in the end, most of them did not return back alive, And that was the beginning of the beguiling ghost series.

Then one day, Sakashita Heavy Industry suddenly stopped sending Hunters to the ruin. After losing the monetary aid it once had, the frontier base that had already grown big enough to be a city, was not able to send anymore large-scale expeditions into the ruin. From that point on, the corporation was then relegated into a smaller-sized company, placed as the governor of the city and it no longer had the resources and the influence that it once had.

No one knew for sure why it stopped exploring the ruin, there were only various rumours regarding that matter. Some said that they found another ruin with more prospective relics. Some said that it was the result of an in-fighting within the corporation. Some of the rumours even made more extreme and ridiculous guesses.

The single most popular rumour among the Hunters was connected to the beguiling ghost. It was rumored that the corporation made a deal with an area manager to stop their expedition, or that they were threatened to stop, or that it had made a secret deal to only search the outskirts of the ruin.

Reina listened closely with immense interest to that story, but she still did not see any danger in knowing any of this so far.

“Well, what can I say? It’s just a rumour, so I don’t see why it’s that dangerous, or is it that simply because I can’t see where the danger is?”

“Milady, the main problem is that there are signs the city had deliberately changed the story. It means that someone in the upper echelon doesn’t want the real story to leak out. If someone somehow gets to know about the real story, they might have their eyes on that person. Although there’s no telling how much they don’t want others to know, there’s a good chance that they have enough influence to cause misfortune to anyone who gets to know about the truth. In the worst-case scenario, that person might even get killed. Shutting up someone would serve a warning to the others.”

Reina frowned. It was obvious that Shiori was not joking. The way she said it fully demonstrated that she was being serious.

“So they really don’t want anyone to know, huh? I wonder why that is the case?”

“Let’s see, among the stories in the beguiling ghost series, there’s a story about a treacherous beguiling ghost. That ghost would offer something to a party of Hunters, which caused them to fight against each other. As a matter of fact, there were Hunters who claimed to be victims of that ghost.”

“I see, so those who accepted that ghost’s offer would end up dead. With a few who survived claiming themselves as victims of a ghost. Overtime, it would slowly turn into that beguiling ghost urban legend, right? Hmmm, to be honest, I don’t see the correlation. I don’t think that is enough of a reason…”

“So, what if the Sakashita heavy Industry had made a secret agreement with the area manager to stop their expedition and used that rumour to make Hunters fight each other on purpose?”

“I-Is that really possible?”

“They needed a good reason to stop such a costly expedition. Well, in the end, this is nothing more than just my own speculation, so please don’t take it too seriously. I don’t know the real reason and I don’t think there’s any need to pursue the truth. The most important thing is knowing enough to make a guess that something malicious was behind it. Now that Milday knows this much, keep in mind that it will cause those who don’t want to know the truth to come out, to mistake Milady as someone who actually knows about the truth. So in order to avoid such a misunderstanding, it is important to handle such information with care. Since Milday already knows now, please be careful.”

Reina frowned and nodded repeatedly.

Togami hesitated, but his curiosity won as he asked Shiori a question.

“Shiori-san, is it bad if I ask you how you got this information?”

“We have an independent information network among us. And ever since Milady decided to go to Kuzusuhara ruin, we made sure to investigate that ruin as much as we could. Please accept this answer and refrain from asking any further questions.”

Togami understood what Shiori was trying to tell him as he gave a firm nod with a solemn expression.

“Understood, I won’t ask any further.”

“Thank you very much.”

Togami sighed in relief, he understood that although he made a mistake in asking, he was at least able to stop himself.

That was when a call reached them from HQ. Togami found that bit weird as he picked up that call.

“This is number 65. Nothing out of the ordinary over here. By the way, isn’t it a bit too early for the regular check up call?”

After listening to the explanation from HQ, Togami frowned and replied.

“Roger that. I’ll call again if we notice anything.”

“Togami, did something happen?”

“It’s just a warning call as well as a check-up to see if they can still contact us. It seems that HQ has lost contact with the Hunters in the expedition… Is this because of that ghost?”

Togami only added the last part as a joke, but Reina did not laugh at all.

***

Yanagisawa’s squad was watching the surroundings from a tall ruined building.

“What a mess, I wonder if it’s okay to just ignore them.”

Hunters, monsters, powered suits, drones, all of them were mixed in a massive battle royal. Both drones and flying powered suits filled the sky with countless bullets and missiles and warheads. Because of that, there were stray bullets falling haphazardly all over the places, causing more chaos in this already chaotic battlefield.

“Boss said not to do anything until further command either from him or from HQ, so it’s our job to just watch over them for now.”

There was no clear line of command, the IFF was also in a mess. Both the Hunters, the powered suits, and even the monsters, were killing each other regardless of friend or foe. It was pure chaos and their powerful weaponries did not help the situation at all.

“So then, any news from the boss?”

Yanagisawa’s men aimed their rifles upward and released a barrage. The bullets made a ricocheting sound in the air as if they pierced through something. Not too long after that, mechanical monsters with non-functioning optical camouflage started to rain down.

“Still nothing. Ever since that last order, to treat him as dead if we can not contact him for 12 hours, and that we can do anything we want afterwards, no one have heard anything from him or seen him. I bet he’s somewhere nearby doing something in secret though”

Stray bullets suddenly rained down on the building, destroying a portion of its roof.

“There is no doubt, he’s definitely scheming something. By the way, do you think this jamming is his doing too?”

The squad aimed their rifles and lightly wiped out the source of those stray bullets.

“Probably. Can’t say for sure though. Though, if it’s really his doing, it would be great if he could warn us beforehand. That jamming got our communication devices as well. Moreover, this is not the same effect from the colourless mist. Either way, it doesn’t really matter whether it is his doing or someone else’s doing, one thing for sure, something is going on right now”

There was an obvious difference in strength between the Hunters on the ground and Yanagisawa's squad. But both of them were equally clueless as to what was going on.

The battle between Tsubaki and the powered suit squad continued. The fight was entirely one-sided. Although it was multiple black powered suits against a single automaton, the ground that was riddled with destroyed powered suits and the undamaged automaton body spoke for itself.

Tsubaki just stood there in serenity as if to guard the only destroyed part of the wall protecting her territory while mocking at the utter difference in strength.

The black powered suits raised their huge rifles and shot at Tsubaki. The released bullets were even bigger than a human's arm. However, that countless hailstorm of bullets stopped in front of Tsubaki as if there was a transparent thick shielding in front of her. The bullets that came later struck those bullets that were stopped and bent them. But even so, they were not able to move the frozen bullets. All of them formed a wall of metal, and even if the following bullets were able to pierce through that wall, none of them could reach Tsubaki.

Once the shooting stopped, the bullets started falling to the ground. The same happened to the bullets that came from the top as well. Showing that the invisible wall was not from the transparent drones protecting Tsubaki.

The squad could not help but frown after seeing what just happened. A desperate voice soared through the speaker.

"Again! Dammit! What the heck is that defense!? It didn't even produce any flashes of light! All force field armours generate light from energy conversion, you know?!"

"Like hell if I know!! If it's some kind of barrier, that should at least shave away some of her energy! Just keep shooting and hope that it's not useless!! Where are the reinforcements!?"

“Long-range communication is dead!! We have no other choice but to get closer back to base to call for reinforcements! And that’s what’s taking them so long!!”

“Try to call the unit that we sent back to HQ and get it to call the city defence squad!! They should send in some reinforcement!! We need to hold out until then!!”

The powered suit switched to its rifle and shot a bullet that was bigger than Tsubaki’s body right at her.

Tsubaki’s expression did not change at all as she kicked the bullet. The shock wave from the kick made the bullet bent and exploded. But due to the way Tsubaki bent the round, the force of the explosion was directed upward, away from her. It was only enough to cause a blast of wind to blow, strong enough to sway her dress.

Right at the next moment, a gigantic chain-saw came crashing down from another direction. The glowing high-speed rotating fang bore down on Tsubaki. The powered suit abandoned the long-range advantage of its rifle and used its full strength to swing its chainsaw.

Tsubaki calmly stopped that chainsaw with one hand. Although the force was enough to bend her leg and create a crack on the ground, it did not throw off her posture. She stopped the rotating fang by force, which caused a loud cracking sound from the arm of the powered suit.

Tsubaki then swung her arm and threw the powered suit as if it was a lifeless doll, ripping off the powered suit’s arm in the process. That powered suit then took the chainsaw to the face. Its pilot was split in two and the severed body vanished into the distance.

The scene showed just how powerless the powered suits were in front of Tsubaki, which caused great shock to those in the squad.

“What the heck was that?! I know that it is an old-world automaton, but there’s a limit on just how powerful It can be, right?! Or is that the normal power of an old-world automata?!”

“…I bet it’s a military automaton or something like that. Although it looks like that, it has different specs compared to the other common drones and service automata… Spread out! Keep your distance from it!!”

Judging that they had no chance of winning, the squad leader ordered the squad to withdraw. They started moving away from Tsubaki while shooting the buildings around her to create obstacles between them.

Tsubaki looked at the falling rubble, she then cleared them with a clean single round kick. She actually just swung her leg around in the air, but the shock wave from that kick was transmitted through the colourless mist and blew away the falling rubble towards her retreating foes.

Tsubaki then mumbled.

“That should at least be enough to shoo off the incoming squad for now, then I just need to clean up the trash inside the area, where I can move freely”

She wanted to go to Kugamayama city herself if she could, but Tsubaki could not go out that far. Even being able to stand here required her to request permission first since it was outside her original allowed space. She was only able to gain permission since it was an emergency.

As Tsubaki was about to take a step, she suddenly stopped. She then looked at the pile of rubble. Right past that pile and countless ruined buildings, there was a man with a huge rifle aiming at her.

The man pulled the trigger, the bullet drilled a hole through the buildings and the rubble, absorbing their masses into the head of the round as it went right at Tsubaki. It reached Tsubaki in a blink of an eye, leaving a long clean hole that was obviously larger than the size of the bullet itself.

Right at the next moment, the bullet turned all the mass that it had absorbed in its path into pure energy, releasing a huge explosion.

The shock wave from the explosion was so large that it could blast the whole area to smithereens. Thankfully, the explosion compressed the air around the area to its utmost limit, temporarily creating a layer of dense colourless mist. This layer served as a strong dampener, restricting the shockwave from spreading out too far and destroying the whole place.

Thanks to that, it created a strange phenomenon, the contained explosion and shock wave created a spherical cage, which seemed as if it devoured space. The area around that cage had only sustained relatively light damage compared to the scale of the explosion. But past the boundary of the cage, traces of immense destruction was apparent.

Even after being enveloped in that explosion, Tsubaki still stood there with the remaining 30% of her body. But it did not take long before her body started to crumble as well.

The one who sniped Tsubaki was Yanagisawa. He had been using a special old-world augmented suit, special annihilator bullet, and special camouflaging suit to hide while looking for a chance to strike. Then, using an annihilator bullet that he was barely able to obtain using his connections, sniped at Tsubaki.

Yanagisawa then came to ground zero and looked at the wreckage of the old-world automaton.

“Yikes, did I overdo it? I guess it’s better to be safe than sorry, but still…”

Yanagisawa squatted as a flying kick cut the air above his head, blowing away the rubble behind him. Tsubaki turned to her camouflaged backup unit after the automaton was rendered unusable and launched an ambush attack.

Tsubaki then stabbed her hand toward Yanagisawa, but Yanagisawa evaded that as well. He grabbed her wrist and stopped her hand. The shock wave from that thrust created a hole in the rubble behind Yanagisawa.

Still, with his hand holding Tsubaki’s wrist, Yanagisawa then said.

“Nice to meet you, I am Yanagisawa. You’re the manager of this area, right? If possible, I want to negotiate with you”

Tsubaki sent a cold gaze toward Yanagisawa.

“Is this the culture of yours? To attack the people you want to negotiate with? I don’t see any possibility of us forming a deal.”

“It’s just an introduction to let you know of our might. That’s all there is to it. After all, I’m sure you have no wish to negotiate with a bunch of ants that you can just squash, right? I at least want to let you know that while you might be able to kill us, it won’t be easy. Otherwise, you won’t even listen to what I have to say. That’s the most basic requirement for stepping into the negotiation phase, no?”

Yanagisawa lightly jumped back to open up some distance. Cold sweat ran down his back as he pulled out a black card from his pocket.

“Moreover, I have this. So, can we start?”

Tsubaki frowned with displeasure.

“If you think that I would listen to anything you say just because you have that card, then you’re sadly mistaken.”

Yanagisawa’s smile was mixed with false bravado, but even so, he still somehow managed to stay calm.

“Of course, but, it at least means that you would have to take our negotiation seriously, right?”

Tsubaki’s expression immediately returned back to normal, but of course, it still had a tint of coldness.

“In that case, throw your weapons down. That is, if you’re really wishing to negotiate with us.”

Yanagisawa managed to keep his smile. After a short hesitation, he made his resolve and let go of his weapons. He then smiled confidently at Tsubaki.

There was a few seconds of silence between Tsubaki and Yanagisawa. But those few seconds felt different for both of them. Right about when Yanagisawa started sweating, Tsubaki smiled amicably and guided.

“Very well, follow me then, I’ll guide you to a better place for negotiation.”

“Is this place not good enough?”

“I don’t think this place is suitable for a negotiation.”

“You have a point.”

Tsubaki smiled at Yanagisawa, who replied with a wry smile.

After that, two similar automata suddenly appeared out of nowhere. Now that there were 3 Tsubaki there, one stayed behind to guard the place, one guided Yanagisawa to the meeting place, while the last one started walking in front of them.

As Yanagisawa followed behind Tsubaki, he then thought.

[That would make it 4 automata in total, huh. I wonder just how many more she has, 10? 100? 1000? No wonder Sakashita Heavy Industry decided that exploring the Kuzusuhara ruin wasn’t worth the risk]

His expression then changed into a smile.

[But that’s because they don’t know about that thing, if they do, they would have forced their way into the ruin. But I know, and I will be the one to get that thing. If negotiations go well, we should have almost no obstruction in expanding the supply route. Though that was dangerous, I won the bet. In the first place, it’s not something that I can get unless I’m willing to risk my life for]

Yanagisawa’s smile vanished.

[Just a bit more!]

His face was now filled with resolve and determination.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 215, Battle Royal

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira woke up and found himself lying on the ground. He slowly pushed himself up and coughed out blood. He leaned his body against a nearby wall for support. But the sharp pain was too overwhelming and he tripped over again. His reality-bending mental mode had already been turned off. Thanks to that, his head was assaulted with an excruciating headache as he pledged, not to ever use it again. Both his legs and arms were screaming in pain. His augmented suit had also spent all of its energy. He used up all of it without holding back in that battle.

Akira squeezed all the remaining strength he had to reach for his medicine. He then gulped it down together with the blood in his mouth. Immediately, his throat reacted and made him cough, flinging some blood off. He ignored the possible side effects as he just took all the medicine that he had in one go. Thankfully, the 10 million Aurum box of medicine was quick to show its effect; suitable for its price tag. The pain slowly subsided and his consciousness became clearer. As he regained enough strength to move, he once again stood firmly on both feet. He then looked around, picked up his blade, which was lying on the ground nearby, and tried to reevaluate his current situation.

[…How long was I unconscious? A few seconds? Minutes? Hours? Since I'm still alive, it means that the other guy is dead, right? I don't even remember landing on the ground. My augmented suit and the force field armour on my coat must have been off while I was unconscious, huh. Well, that means that I got pretty lucky there. I guess my luck isn't all bad…]

Akira smiled wryly and thought.

[I still can't connect to Alpha. As I thought, my luck is not the worst…]

Now that the pain in his body had subsided, it only left him with a headache.

[I was able to actually bend reality with my will back then. I'm not sure if I can ever do that again, but I was able to successfully do it once. It should be easier to do it next time… But the burden is nothing to scoff at. I might even get myself killed next time if I do that. It would be great if I can fight back the side-effects with medicine, but judging from the fact that my head is still hurting, it means that medicine doesn't help much in this case, huh? Or is it already the maximum effect of the medicine? I have no idea. Either way, it is better than getting killed. Although it isn't cheap, I guess I'll take some more.]

Akira carefully returned back to his vehicle. Since he parked the vehicle close to the building, it was not that far from him. But it took him a lot of effort to return to his vehicle. It had been quite a while since the last time he had to move his augmented suit on his own without Alpha's support. Furthermore, his heightened nervousness along the way drained his focus as well and energy.

Once he reached his vehicle, he opened the back door, got in, and closed the door before letting out a huge sigh of relief. His nervousness fell as he praised himself for splurging on strong armour plating for his vehicle,

The communication device on the vehicle was still showing that it was still being jammed. Akira found that regrettable as he set the auto-drive to head back to the temporary base. The vehicle reacted accordingly and started moving, Akira was relieved to find that his vehicle was still working as it should, thus easing his nerves a little bit more.

He proceeded to eject the energy packs from his rifles and replaced them with high-quality energy packs, ignoring just how expensive they were. As he did that, he then thought that it would have been better if he had been using them right from the start. But at the same time, doing that would raise his expenses and that might result in a monetary loss for him, so it was out of the question. Akira got a taste of common problems plagued by many Hunters, choosing between expense and safety.

After replenishing all of his equipment, he took an extra dose of medicines to make sure that he was ready to fight anytime. He then leaned on the wall of the vehicle to relax his body While at the same time, he operated his information terminal and information gathering devices to watch out for his surroundings. That was when the vehicle suddenly slowed down and asked for further instructions.

Akira frowned. The display on his head showed the reason why the vehicle was asking for further command. The signals showed that there might be a huge ongoing battle along his route back to the base.

“What the heck is going on? Another ambush from monsters? Good grief, give me a break already…”

The vehicle was stopped, waiting for further instructions on whether to take a detour to avoid battle or to just ignore it and move forward. The auto-drive system followed its setting not to enter an active battlefield without confirmation from its user.

After taking a few seconds of thinking, Akira decided to wait instead. His priority now was to avoid fighting. After all, he had not fully recovered from his last fight. Or course, he had the choice of taking a detour to avoid the battle in front of him, but it would take too much time. The reason why he could come so deep into the ruin with his large APC was thanks to the supply route. If he took another route and got stuck in some small roads instead, it would not be funny if he got attacked by monsters in that situation. At the moment, he was inside a large vehicle, protected with resilient armour plating with no monsters detected around him. Not to mention, that the communication line might recover if he waited long enough. That was why he decided to wait here.

Of course, Akira was also worried if the decision that he made there was the correct one. But any decisions might as well be the worst decision, as such, his only option was to recover as much as possible in preparation for anything bad that might occur. As Akira thought so, he went to the portable bed and took a rest there.

Suddenly the radar of the vehicle, which was in standby mode, picked up signals from enemies and the vehicle immediately accelerated. Akira was dropped off from the bed due to inertia, but he quickly reacted and readied himself for a fight while cursing.

“That was fast goddammit!!”

No matter which decision he took, he might have gotten more resting time if he had made up his mind sooner. Seeing from that perspective, his decision back there was indeed the worst one.

The control device of the vehicle made a rough estimation of the enemy’s position based on the damaged armour tiles, as the vehicle accelerated away from that direction. The source of that attack seemed to be coming from the general direction of a nearby ongoing battle.

When Akira looked in that direction, he could see a young boy in a Hunter augmented suit running in his direction. He was running at the same speed as Akira would if he used his augmented suit.

[He’s running away from the battle, huh? Then that means that was stray bullets from the monsters chasing after him?]

As Akira was considering helping that Hunter and to confirm the situation with him afterwards, he aimed the APC’s machine gun past that young boy and frowned. The ones chasing after that boy were multiple armed vehicles, there was no doubt that those vehicles belonged to the other Hunters.

While Akira was still thinking about what to do there, the young boy hid behind Akira's APC; thanks to that, the other Hunters aimed straight at Akira's vehicle instead. Although the APC itself was undamaged thanks to its strong armour tiles, it was only a matter of time before the armour tiles failed.

Akira had a bad feeling and opened the back door while the APC was still running. He then tried to ask what was going on to that young boy.

"Hey! What-"

But the young boy suddenly aimed his rifle at Akira and came for his life without any warning. Thanks to the ominous feeling that he got, Akira was ready and was able to react. In a blink of an eye, bullets immediately flew in and out of the APC.

Although they were shooting at each other at such a close range, since both of them prioritized not getting hit, both were uninjured in that exchange. The young boy quickly jumped on top of the vehicle, hiding away from Akira's line of sight.

Akira scowled and looked at the ceiling, that was when a voice mixed between displeasure and happiness came from the ceiling.

"So you're here too, huh!! It's great that you're here! This time I will win for sure! I'll kill you together with those Hunters!!"

Once again, it sounded like his opponent this time also knew him beforehand, and again, Akira did not remember who it might be.

"Are you another guy from the afterlife?! Who are you? Don't tell me you're Sebla!"

"Who's that Sebla? I'm Tiol!"

"The heck?! Tiol who!?"

Tiol's face twitched with hatred.

“You don’t know?! I see I see!! You won’t even remember my name, huh!? I expected that much!”

Hearing Tiol lash back like that, instead of getting confused, Akira was more irritated.

Grenades rained down on and around the vehicle. The explosion also consumed Tiol, but he protected himself using some kind of protective outer coat. The equipment that Tiol was using, was unnervingly similar to the ones that Akira used during his fight against the monster Tiol in the past.

Tiol clicked his tongue and jumped down. He then ran along Akira’s APC and said to Akira while looking straight at his face.

“I’ll get back to you later. Don’t worry, I’ll definitely be back to kill you! Both you and that guy!!”

Tiol only said so and started shooting at the Hunters who were coming at him as if he was protecting Akira’s APC. After that, he left the place using his augmented physical strength.

Akira was still a bit confused by that sudden turn of events, but the shaking coming from the barrage from the incoming Hunters pulled him back to reality.

“That bastard!! He left those Hunters for me to deal with!”

Judging from the intensity of the incoming fires, Akira understood that those Hunters were mistaking Akira as Tiol’s ally. Even if he wanted to tell the truth, they were outside his communication range.

Akira knew that not firing back would not stop the other side from firing him. He could try to get close enough for his voice or for the short-range communication to reach them. But, there was no guarantee that he would not be killed before he could do that. So the conclusion he came to was that he had no other choice but to fight back. He changed the vehicle to half-auto mode and set the machine gun to provide suppression fire. While he, himself, peeked out from the vehicle and left the APC with an order to just immediately get away from that place.

The APC's powerful machine gun unleashed countless bullets while Akira himself released a barrage of guided armour-piercing grenades. The grenades were set to explode before reaching the Hunters for the sake of slowing them down. Although Akira only intended to suppress them, the grenades that he used were still lethal weapons, thanks to that, it was able to successfully slow down the pursuing Hunters. The Hunters coming at him switched their focus from pursuing Akira to evading the incoming grenades. Thus, lowering their rate of fire toward Akira as well.

Akira used that chance to get away as far as possible from them. Setting the acceleration to the maximum, he was able to open up some distance between them. After he got away far enough that they could not shoot at each other any longer, Akira went back inside the APC and sighed.

"For real though, what exactly is going on?"

Akira rubbed his hair in frustration, but no one was there to answer that question.

The leader of the Hunter team that was chasing Tiol made a grim face and said.

"Dammit!! He got away! To think that he has allies as well!!"

The young leader then renewed his resolve.

"I don't know who that was and what his aim was, but I won't let him disrupt the expedition!! I'll definitely make this expedition a success no matter what!! Katsuya here!! How is the damage!? As long as the connection has not recovered, don't trust anyone you meet! You'll get ambushed otherwise!!"

The team chasing Tiol was Katsuya's.

Akira was still not sure what just happened as he drove through the ruin. The situation was only getting worse, according to the radar, it seems that the ongoing battle was only spreading wider. He spotted some flying monsters fighting flying powered suits. He was only barely able to get away from those on the ground with the help from his APC's machine gun.

In this expedition, the city management sent in the powered suit squad first to secure the area. Even someone like Akira knew that plans had gone awry at this point. But that did not give any hint as to how the situation would evolve from there.

Akira smiled wryly and mumbled.

"I guess this is the rebound from relying too much on Alpha all the time"

Akira hesitated to look for another Hunter in order to group up with them. The reason was simple, he got attacked by other Hunters numerous times in the past. The line of command among Hunters was also already completely destroyed. He did find an underground parking lot on his way and thought of hiding there for the time being, but the other Hunters already taking shelter within those places suddenly started shooting at him without any warning. Of course, he did try to talk with them since they were close enough for short-range communication, but the only returning words that he received was 'don't come any closer!'. It was a messy situation where everyone could not trust those they did not know.

[I bet that Tiol guy also got himself in some fight with the other Hunters just like this. I wonder if there are other Hunters in his situation as well? I guess that's the case for that Zalmo too, huh? Or maybe they are actually friends? Can't tell… I have no idea at all…]

Akira continued driving through the wasteland while wondering about the answer to those questions. That was when a destroyed powered suit blocked his way forward. The destroyed powered suit had its lower half completely decimated and its body was severely damaged at different spots.

Akira stopped his APC. He thought that if he used the full power of his augmented suit, he might be able to move that powered suit aside, so he then walked toward the destroyed powered suit. That was when suddenly a short-range connection call reached his information terminal.

“Long time no see. To think that we meet in this place, it must be some kind of fate. Anyway, you came at the right time, can you help me for a bit?”

“Who’s this?”

“It’s me, Nelia.”

Akira immediately looked around.

“Where are you calling me from?”

“You see a destroyed powered suit nearby, right? I’m inside it. But I can’t get out by myself, so like, can you help me?”

Akira hesitated for a bit, but then he carefully approached the blast door and grabbed the bent handle. He swiftly opened the door and switched to his rifle as he aimed inside.

Right there, Nelia was smiling amusedly at the surprised Akira. Similar to the powered suit, Nelia only had the upper half of her body. One of her arms was crushed within the bent powered suit.

“That was a rather cold reaction from you considering that we don’t get that many opportunities to see each other.”

“Well, considering the situation and the other party, I had to do at least this much.”

“Is that so? Well, it doesn’t really matter. Can you take me back to the temporary base for now?”

Akira gazed silently at Nelia with a serious face, his rifle was still poised at her. So Nelia raised her eyebrows and asked.

“Oh my, do you have some kind of interest in girls that are paralyzed?”

Akira sighed exasperatedly and lowered his rifle. It was not because he was sure that Nelia would not shoot at him in this situation. He understood that very well. Nelia was an insane Hunter, there was no doubt about it, but her madness was the thing that guaranteed her as non-hostile at this moment. This strange feeling reminded him that there were many things out there that he did not know about in this world.

“Let me at least confirm this first. You’re not hostile at the moment, right?”

“Sure, if you think so.”

“Alright, do tell me beforehand if you’re going to attack me, okay?”

“Of course, I’ll be sure to tell you beforehand.”

Akira grabbed Nelia’s remaining hand and pulled her out, but the cable connected to her crushed arm prevented him from doing so. Thus, Akira put in more power and tore that cable forcefully before carrying Nelia out.

Akira was carrying Nelia by grabbing her remaining arm and letting her body hang down. That Nelia smiled teasingly at Akira and poked fun at him.

“That was not gentle. Are you not familiar with how to treat a girl’s body? I know that some girls like it hard though, do you perhaps have a preference for them?”

“The heck are you even talking about?”

Akira only said so and carried Nelia back to his vehicle. After putting Nelia on the driver assistant’s seat, as if to vent his anger, he turned the vehicle violently and rammed it to the blocking powered suit to push it aside.

“You’re bad at driving, do you want me to drive instead?”

“How are you going to drive with your body like that?”

“The control device in this vehicle is connected to one of the terminals, right? You just need me to connect to that terminal. Although I can’t fight with this body, I feel bad leaving everything to you without helping at all."

Akira hesitated, but he then pulled out a terminal from the APC, he then connected the terminal to a jack on Nelia's neck as she had instructed. Not too long after that, the APC suddenly started moving with her control. With this, Akira could just focus on fighting and let Nelia handle the driving.

After that, Akira and Nelia exchanged information to understand the situation. Hearing what had happened to Nelia's powered suit, Akira frowned and asked.

"Wait a sec, are you being serious? The powered suit squad got beaten? Isn't the whole squad using the same powerful powered suit that you were using before? And you still got beaten?"

The rider of the powered suit that Tsubaki cut in half was Nelia. She was lent that powered suit in order to advertise it.

"If the commander was not that stupid, we would have retreated instead. I tried to use a melee weapon since none of our ranged attacks worked, but then this happened. So yes, close-range, long-range, nothing worked. I don't think they have anything to turn the tide at this point. If they had any trump card, they would have already used it at this point."

"Which means, those invisible monsters right now are…"

"Now that the powered suit squad is gone, there is no one to stop them. I think they're roaming around the area right now. In the first place, thanks to that old-world automaton, the squad was not able to stop any monsters at all."

With that, Akira's hope that the situation would fix itself with time was completely dashed. If more and more mechanical monsters did not stop pouring out from the other side, the situation would only get worse with time.

Because of this, Akira no longer hesitated, just waiting until the situation got better was out of the question now. He heaved out a huge sigh and made a grim face.

“Alright then, Let’s force our way back to the temporary base. Although judging by the signal, there’s a huge battle near the supply line, but that’s still better than just staying here.”

“We’re already heading there.”

“…I see.”

Akira was surprised that Nelia just decided where the APC was heading without consulting with him first. But since it was a good thing that they were already heading toward the temporary base, Akira decided not to say anything about it.

“But still, after hearing your story, this means that our chain of command has been destroyed. And then, for some reason, we’re now caught in a situation where the Hunters don’t trust others that they do not know. This is quite an issue. But to think that we would meet each other in this situation like this, I wonder if we’re connected by fate or something.”

“Well, judging that I’m here in right now, it is safe to say that my luck sucks.”

“That’s pretty harsh.”

The APC’s radar picked up some new signals. Akira noticed that and went to open the back door of the APC to clear his line of fire, in case those signals were enemies. He more or less had a grasp on how many enemies there were thanks to those signals detected. As he aimed his rifle, he suddenly spotted a powered suit flying from behind a building, still far away from him.

“Nelia, are those powered suits here to pick you up?”

“They are enemies! Shoot them down!”

Right at the instance Nelia said that, the powered suit aimed its rifle at Akira’s APC.

“Hold on if you don’t want to be thrown out of the APC!!”

Nelia made the APC do sharp turns in order to evade the incoming bullets. But even so, some of them still hit the APC’s sidewall and rooftop. Each shot was huge, fired from an equally large rifle equipped on the enemy’s powered suit.

The expensive armour plating protected the APC from those shots, but eventually, some plates had their durability worn out and fell to the ground. But even so, the barrage did not stop at all. The force from the bullets pushed the APC to the point that it almost rolled over, but Nelia was able to skillfully control the APC, preventing it from rolling over.

Akira quickly grabbed the APC by reflex in order to maintain his balance while his other hand pulled the trigger of his SSB rifle. Due to Nelia’s rough driving, his aim was far from accurate. But the homing armour-piercing frag grenades were still able to find their way toward the enemy’s powered suit. Enveloping it in a sea of flame

Now that the APC was out of the hostile powered suit’s line of sight, Akira went to his terminal to check for its signal. The signal was still moving, indicating that their enemy was still alive.

“Nelia, just a question, have you fought against that powered suit before?”

“Nope, how about you?”

“Me neither… So how were you able to immediately tell that it was hostile?”

“What are you talking about? Just look at how it moved from the signal. It’s obvious that it did not come in peace, no?”

Akira could not tell. But he thought that it was unwise to say that he did not know, so he decided to just shut up. Nelia found that silence suspicious as she then continued.

“Well, it’s true that it might just have been careful of us, moreover, it’s dangerous to try and come this close. Close enough till it can send its identification code. Even if that powered suit held no hostility, it should be aware that we might be hostile against it. Although my judgement is basically based on the end result, I don’t deny that I was not being that careful when deciding if it was hostile or not. But do you think we should let it close considering that it might suddenly spring an ambush and get us killed?”

“No, that’s fine. It’s true that it is hostile too after all.”

“Right?”

Akira just tried to end the subject as he agreed with Nelia, thus she returned back to her usual mood.

“But still, since both of us don’t remember fighting it at all, then why is it attacking us? Did the user go on a rampage after losing the rest of his team?”

“From what I see, it seemed to be obviously aiming for us though?”

Right after Nelia said that, someone suddenly connected to the vehicle’s short-range communication feature. It was because the user of that powered suit had dialled his device communication output to maximum, allowing him to only send his voice to Akira.

“Akira!! I’m not going to let you run away!! You’re going to die here! That I can guarantee!!”

Akira’s face twitched as he scowled. In contrast to that, Nelia smiled amusedly and said.

“It seems that it is chasing after you. Are you sure you don’t remember that guy?”

“…This voice, it’s Zalmo.”

“I see, so, what is your connection with that guy? It seems that guy really hates you, did you cuckold him or something?”

When Nelia jokingly said so, Akira climbed up the top of the APC through the open back door and turned on his communication device.

“He once attacked a shop owned by someone I know. I’m pretty sure I killed that guy then and there. I did blow his head off back then and there was no mistaking it, his brain was scattered all over the place after that. But, for some reason, he is still alive. Maybe it’s someone else posing as that guy.”

Nelia listened with full interest.

“That’s a pretty interesting story. If you were not lying, then either he got resurrected or he’s a ghost. There’s a story about the beguiling ghost around this area, after all. I guess it’s not that weird to find a deadman roaming around this place.”

“That story about the beguiling ghost, wasn’t it supposed to be the old-world area managers? You know, those AI managing the old-world buildings? I saw one back in Mihazono ruin when I went to Seranthal building”

“There are many different theories about that beguiling ghost. Well, putting that aside, it might be possible to resurrect someone with a destroyed brain with old-world technology. ”

“…No no no, that’s just simply impossible no matter how you look at it, right?”

“And old-world technology is such a thing that turned such absurdities into reality, right? You are a Hunter yourself. So it’s better to keep in mind that nothing is impossible for the old-world technology”

Akira indeed had gone through a lot of things that were out of the ordinary, so he found it interesting that he still had some common sense left inside him as he smiled wryly. Even after using an augmented suit that boosted his physical strength outside the realm of common sense, the SSB rifle that could spit out an impossible amount of bullets; and had spent days living together with something as absurd as Alpha, Akira found it interesting how resilient this so-called common sense could be.

“He’s coming from above!!”

Akira aimed his SSB rifle up and pulled the trigger. One of his SSB rifles was spewing out homing armour-piercing frag grenades while the other one was spewing out anti forcefield rounds. Akira shot that barrage with such intensity, that he emptied his magazines in a blink of an eye.

Way above Akira, the hostile powered suit was flying so high that he was barely able to spot it. That powered suit aimed its guns at Akira and, just like what he had done just now, it also emptied its magazines, releasing a storm of bullets in Akira’s direction.

The bullets and explosives both rushed up and down past each other. Some of them collided and exploded in mid-air. The bullets that came from above landed and created large sinkholes in the ground. Some of them managed to hit Akira’s APC, shaking it violently, causing some of the armour tiles to fall. While the frag grenades flying upwards hit the side of nearby buildings and exploded. The shrapnel collided with the powered suit, resulting in flashes of light on the forcefield armour.

During that exchange between the two opponents with an overwhelming difference in size, both parties exchanged an uncountable number of bullets, heavily damaging the area.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 216, Deathmatch

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Zalmo was blown away in his last exchange with Akira, he somehow landed safely and immediately scanned his surroundings. He was able to find the unconscious Akira from just a quick search.

The reason why he did not finish Akira off there and then, was simply because he was being extremely careful of the damage done to his body. Zalmo basically had lost one of his arms. The other parts of his body were also heavily damaged. Although he still could fight in that state, he could no longer fight the way he did before.

Normally, that level of exchange would not be able to cause that much damage to him. But in order to defend himself from Akira's blade, he had to focus all the energy within his cyborg body to extend a forcefield armour to act as a shield, any part of his body exposed, was basically sacrificed.

Since the eastern district was dominated by rifles capable of long-range attacks, melee weapons sold in the eastern district had to have a certain edge to them. Something that would warrant its use in spite of the already powerful rifles. Something that would guarantee death once the enemy stepped into its reach. In order to answer this expectation, most of the melee weapons sold in the eastern district were extremely sharp.

Zalmo thought that Akira's blade was also like that, after all, he decided to challenge Zalmo in melee range combat when they were stuck in an evenly matched battle. And Zalmo was right. If he had not used all of the energy within him, he would not have been able to defend himself against that attack.

In the end, Zalmo saw that against him, who had a rifle that could pierce through walls, Akira made a simple decision. To lure him to an open space without any walls. Akira's sudden change in movement made him seem like a completely different person. That experience caused Zalmo to become overly cautious, he was suspicious of whether Akira was actually conscious or not.

It could be a scheme to lure him closer. Zalmo, who would be checking his surroundings with his information terminal before carefully approaching Akira, might get jumped on. Zalmo could easily foresee Akira suddenly springing up, taking out a concealed melee weapon to finish him after he got close enough. Otherwise, it was to lure Zalmo close enough, to ascertain Zalmo's position and rifle's condition before shooting.

Of course, with single doubt clouding his mind, Zalmo could not help but think of all kinds of possibilities. Naturally, none of which could be ignored. Back in the slum city and during their exchange just now, Akira was able to make a surprising move right when Zalmo thought that he had secured his victory. Thus, Zalmo had no wish to try his luck for the third time when his cyborg body was damaged. After deciding not to take that risk, Zalmo left that place in order to find something that could help ascertain his victory. His experience with Akira so far caused Zalmo's decision-making skills to go south. It also saved Akira's life.

And so, Zalmo was fighting Akira with a powered suit. Originally, Zalmo's powered suit was prepared in order to cause chaos by attacking the city management's squads, while also emitting friendly identification signals at the same time. But Zalmo was willing to risk being scolded by his boss later just to use it to eliminate Akira.

It might seem to be an excessive use of firepower. But to Zalmo, it was necessary. He already had seeds of fear planted within him. Seeds called Akira. He needed absolute, overwhelming firepower to kill him for certain. This time, he made sure of it. He removed any unlikely chance of Akira turning the tables on him. But now, even after using his powered suit, Akira was still alive. This further confirmed Zalmo's paranoid decision as a correct one.

Akira continued fighting back desperately. He was standing on top of his APC as it drove haphazardly through the ruin. Nelia kept driving haphazardly in order to avoid the incoming bullets. The APC swayed violently, Akira was almost thrown off the vehicle each time it made a sharp turn. Akira was somehow able to fix his footing with the help of his augmented suit, but the incoming bullets from above made him frown as he kept shooting at the enemy's powered suit.

Due to how fast the APC was going, the violent swaying, the distance to the target, and the speed of the enemy's powered suit, Akira was not able to get a proper aim. The bullets that were able to properly reach their target were only the homing armour-piercing frag grenades. The explosions from those grenades then would throw the powered suit off-balance, interrupting its aiming. While at the same time, it also slowed down the powered suit's movement. Akira then aimed for this opportunity to use his anti-forcefield armour bullets loaded SSB to snipe at that powered suit. Thus, further slowing down Zalmo and throwing off his aiming even further, allowing Akira's APC to survive a few seconds more.

Akira compressed his time perception. Although he had another method to increase the accuracy of his sniping, he could not pick that option. After all, there was no guarantee that would kill the opponent. There was also a good chance he would not be able to take on the burden and it might outright knock him unconscious. He was certain that would happen so he was even limiting the density of his time perception compression.

He aimed for the moment when the enemy's line of sight was blocked by a building before quickly returning back inside the APC. As the world ran at a slower pace, Akira wanted to quickly replace the energy packs in his rifles and coat before returning back to the top of the APC.

The swaying of the APC caused the supplies to be sent flying, but the time compression allowed Akira to follow the slowly flying objects around him. He would eject the magazines out of his rifles and would quickly take a new set of magazines floating in the air to replace them. He hardly had any leeway of returning back inside to replenish. So, he had no other choice but to get all the necessary supplies in the shortest time possible.

If Akira could not return back to the top of the APC before the opponent had a good line of sight to his vehicle, he would not be able to throw off Zalmo's suppressive fire. Any more hits would quicken the death of his APC. In a situation where he had no support from Alpha, his only lifelines were his supplies. If he lost his APC, where he kept all of his supplies, he would no longer have any hope of surviving.

The raining bullets exchanged with the soaring ones. The difference in their firepower was obvious. Thanks to the forcefield armour of the powered suit, it did not sustain much damage even after getting hit. Although the energy conversion sapped its remaining energy, Akira had no way to measure how much the powered suit had left.

While the APC was able to survive thanks to its resilient armour plating, that was not the case for Akira. Even if he increased the forcefield armour output of his coat to its maximum, he could only take 1 shot at most, the second shot would definitely kill him. Although depending on how much energy he had left, he might still be able to avoid instant death. Nonetheless, there was no question that it would render him unfit to continue the fight. There was also a chance the first shot might even kill him outright. Akira was desperately trying to survive this battlefield under such harsh conditions.

He understood that he had no chance of winning, the most he could do there was to delay his imminent defeat. His only chance of survival was to keep delaying until his opponent faced the same issue. Forcing Zalmo to stop. Although the scale was completely different, Akira was no stranger to such fights, he had done it numerous times before he had met Alpha. Thus, Akira just kept on squeezing every last drop of strength he had to stay alive.

In the middle of that exchange, Zalmo had a grim expression on his face, hidden inside the augmented suit.

The homing armour piercing frag grenade ammo that Akira used was significantly slower than normal bullets, not to mention, Zalmo was moving relatively fast in the sky. But even so, Akira kept on accurately hitting his grenade ammo. The explosions threw Zalmo's aiming off, thus significantly dropping his accuracy.

If Zalmo focused on aiming accurately, he would have to stop moving. This meant Akira would have a better chance of hitting him. If it came to that point, there was a good chance Akira would use an anti-forcefield round to snipe him using the small window of opportunity. Although the powered suit was strong enough to take a few anti-forcefield shots, an instantaneous barrage of a whole extended magazine would generate enough firepower to break the forcefield armour of his powered suit. Zalmo had no other choice but to keep moving in order to stay alive.

The powered suit was basically undamaged and it still had plenty of remaining energy. There was no question that Zalmo had the upper hand there. But Zalmo's expression did not express any glee. Instead, it was the opposite.

"…Are you kidding me? The heck is with that boy?! This powered suit has been designated to be used by the city defence squad as its next-generation powered suit, you know!? Why is it still not enough to kill him!?"

As Zalmo got more and more nervous, the powered suit's control device notified him that the remaining energy had already gone below 50% and it was still falling fast.

Zalmo could still continue fighting in this state, but for some reason, Zalmo's expression turned grimmer as he decided to bail out from the battle.

Zalmo thought that it was a bad idea to maintain this stalemate with little hope of immediately killing Akira. It would be horrendous if the powered suit no longer had enough remaining energy to expand its forcefield armour to the max the moment Akira launched a counter-attack. Furthermore, if he withdrew now, he could refill his energy packs as well as get anti-personnel weapons, which would give him a better chance of killing Akira. Once came to that conclusion, he decided to retreat.

The moment Zalmo left the battle, Akira also immediately stopped firing. For a split second there, Zalmo thought that Akira might have run out of ammo and that it was a mistake to leave the battle right now, but he then immediately shook his head and mumbled with a grim face.

“I know that it’s for a large scale expedition, but that armour plating and the amount of reserve ammo he has is simply overkill no matter how you look at it. I can understand if the expedition is close to the frontline, but that’s not the case here! Judging from his equipment, there’s a good chance that he was fully expecting to fight other Hunters… Wait, no way, don’t tell me he knew all along that this would happen right from the start…”

Zalmo voiced out his thoughts as he left the battlefield, but that only led him to more questions.

Akira’s gaze followed the retreating Zalmo as he had a rather surprised look on his face.

“Did he just run away?”

Nelia answered through the communication device.

“Akira, are you still alive?”

“Yeah, somehow.”

“Oh? That was impressive. So he didn’t leave because he got you, huh? Not bad.”

The first half of Nelia’s reply contained a surprise in its tone, while the latter half was more of amusement. Akira smiled wryly and dragged himself back inside the APC.

“Don’t just assume I’m dead like that. So then, where are we right now? Are we already close to the forward base?”

“Unfortunately, we’re even further than before.”

“The heck?”

In response to that rather sharp reply from Akira, Nelia replied with a rather sullen voice.

“That’s because I had to change the direction of the vehicle a few times to get away from all the bullets that guy shot, you know. Moreover, the route got closed by debris from that battle as well, so we can no longer use it to get back. Not only was I busy evading the incoming bullets, but I also had to take care of the monsters blocking our ways as well as avoiding the smaller paths to make sure that we won’t get stuck. I know that you were busy back then, but I was equally busy here as well, you know?”

“Is that so? I see. Thanks.”

“You’re welcome!”

As Akira just honestly thanked her, Nelia replied with a jovial voice.

“Sorry, but can you keep driving for the time being? I need to take a rest.”

“Sure, by the way, are you alright?”

“No idea. If I say no, are you going to help me?”

“Hm? I just need to adjust my plan like including the case if you get killed.”

“I see, I’m fine.”

“That’s good to hear.”

Akira smiled wryly as he relaxed.

Akira started by reloading and replacing his energy packs. He then took a good amount of medicine before sitting on the collapsible bed. His mind has been dulled since he had relaxed after such an intense fight. He looked around the inside of the APC, all the supplies that were once there had significantly reduced and it was easy to see just how discouraged Akira was from his expression.

The anti-forcefield bullet was better than the ones he had used in the past. Each one cost him 1000 Aurum per thanks to the discount. The homing armour-piercing frag grenades cartridges were even more expensive than the anti-forcefield bullets. The medicines had cost him 10 million Aurum a box. The energy packs were more costly now that he had better equipment on. All of these were the price of his survival without Alpha's support. But he shook his head and banished that thought from his mind.

He had no leeway to tire himself with more things to worry about. Moreover, if he was able to survive that fight only by using this much, that in itself meant that he had become pretty strong. Akira told himself that as he lightly laughed, mocking the bad situation he was in.

The vehicle was shaking violently. Sounds of explosions could be heard outside. It was far from peaceful, but even so, it was precious resting time for Akira. He controlled his breathing to help him recover while making sure that he would not get thrown off from the bed.

But even that did not even last for 10 minutes.

"Akira, something is approaching us from behind. It is outside the shooting range of the machine gun and it's pretty fast."

"I know."

Akira already noticed that signal from the APC's sensor that was connected to his information terminal. He opened the back door and carefully checked the direction of the signal. The moment he did that, he could not hide his surprise. The signal came from 2 young female Hunters who were being thrown right into Akira's APC.

Akira was judging what to do there, whether to shoot them down, deflect them away, or receive them. In the first place, he had no idea if they were friends or foes. While he was at loss on what to do, he was already too late. The two girls went past him right into the APC and crashed into the supply boxes.

Akira pulled out his rifles and aimed at them by pure reflex. But at the next moment, he realized the state of those two girls. He understood that it was useless to shoot them. One of the girls had her neck torn off while the other one had a large hole in her torso.

“Corpses?! What the hell is going on here?!”

Although Akira was even more confused than before, he immediately shoved that out of his head as he immediately returned his aim outside the APC and pulled the trigger. The person who threw those dead Hunters into Akira’s APC jumped away using his immense strength to avoid the incoming barrage before landing on top of the APC.

Akira jumped outside of the APC and made a flip, the moment he landed, he immediately aimed his rifles on top of his APC. Since forced himself to maintain his posture using his augmented suit, there was a line dug into the ground. However, his aim was still on target and did not meander away at all.

But the next second, Akira compressed his time perception and jumped out of the way since the guy had jumped off the APC and swung down a powerful kick aimed at him. The kick landed on the ground. But, Akira avoided it. The huge force from the kick was taken in by the ground, creating a huge crack.

While both of them were still off-balance, they raced each other, fixing their postures in order to get the first dip on the next attack. Both of them then immediately stopped. They raised their guards toward each other while searching for an opening. And so, they ended up standing still, staring at each other for a few seconds.

Akira’s expression turned grim the moment he got a good look on his opponent’s face.

“You…”

Tiol laughed like a mad man.

“Sorry for the wait! I’m here to kill you now!! Both you and that guy!!”

Akira then noticed that Tiol’s equipments were eerily similar to his. They were so similar that it was impossible to differentiate between them from afar.

“That guy? Who?”

The answer to that question quickly presented itself after that. Another vehicle appeared from behind. The upper part of the vehicle could be opened to make it easier for its passengers to fight, and the person peeking out from that vehicle was Katsuya.

The dead girls that Tiol threw into Akira’s APC were from Katsuya’s team. He went to attack Katsuya’s team, killed some of them, grabbed the badly wounded, and then went to look for Akira while maintaining his distance from Katsuya. He made sure that Katsuya would not lose sight of him. After finding Akira, Tiol then threw the badly wounded Hunters to Akira.

The transmitters in their augmented suits continuously sent signals to let others know the location of its users. Katsuya thought that he might be able to save them if they were still alive, that was why he continued to chase after those signals. Even after the signals told him that they were already dead, Katsuya still kept on chasing. However, this time, it was for the sake of revenge. He did not notice that Tiol deliberately maintained the distance between them in order to lure him.

The moment Katsuya caught Tiol in his sights, he immediately roared.

“There you are!! This is revenge for them!! I’ll kill you!! I’ll definitely kill you!!”

Katsuya could not differentiate between Akira and Tiol. But Katsuya no longer cared about that anymore. He blindly believed that the other guy was Tiol's friend and that he would just need to kill them both.

Akira finally understood what was going on and sent a sharp glare at Tiol.

"You bastard…"

But Tiol did not seem shaken at all as he grinned and said.

"I'll definitely kill both of you!! So you can go ahead and kill each other!! Both of you can just go to the afterlife!"

Akira immediately ran back to his APC and Tiol followed next to him. Not too long after that, Katsuya released a barrage of grenades. In a blink of an eye, the whole area was enveloped in explosions.

Akira and Tiol jumped out of the explosions, Akira was unharmed thanks to his coat while Tiol was able to quickly regenerate thanks to his abnormal vitality as a monster.

Akira and Tiol also exchanged shots while running side by side. They released their rounds at the same time and then jumped out of its way at the same time. It was as if they had prearranged their engagement beforehand. They blazed left and right through the ruin using their enhanced physical strength to evade their opponent's bullets as well as the raining grenades. All of this was done as they kept releasing shots at each other, aiming to stop the other in their tracks. Both sides knew that the first person who stopped would be hit by the grenades and would be rendered unable to fight. So they were willing to take some hits and focused more on speed instead of evading the bullets.

But then, Tiol was able to go ahead of Akira. Tiol kept running in front of him as he aimed backwards without even looking. Although Tiol was aiming without looking while running at the same time, Akira understood that he was aiming properly at him since the internals of the muzzle of his rifle could be seen.

With Katsuya's team chasing and shooting from behind them, Akira understood if he focused more on evading instead of moving forward, the attacks from both Katsuya and Tiol would kill him. Thus, in order to survive, Akira chose to risk it. He completely ignored the pain on his head as he gathered his focus, compressed his time perception, and retried bending reality with his will.

Akira's vision once again distorted. As his perception of the world turned sharper, he charged straight toward the muzzle in front of him. The manoeuvre and increased output of his augmented suit were crushing his body. It was only thanks to the medicine that Akira took before jumping into action that helped maintain the shape of his body.

The expensive medicines had a strong healing effect and prolonged healing duration. Thus, it was able to quickly heal any small wounds. But of course, that did not make the body stronger. It was a forceful method to keep the performance of the body by relying on the healing power of the medicines through an endless cycle of breaking and healing the body on a cellular level. The moment the medicine's effects ran out, or the moment the injuries were faster than the healing, Akira would instantly die.

In that situation where Akira himself was uncertain how close to death he was, he was able to accurately predict where Tiol was aiming as he kept accelerating forward. Akira only took the least necessary movements to evade the incoming bullets as they grazed and took a piece of flesh off his face. However, that kind of wound was far from dangerous. It was not even close to enough to shave off Akira's fighting spirit. He rapidly closed the distance to Tiol with a grin, he then used the full power of his augmented suit to swing down his blade at Tiol.

Tiol did try to evade that attack but he was not able to completely get away from it either. The glowing blade completely cut off one of Tiol's arms right from the shoulder down.

As Akira saw Tiol's arm flying away slowly through the air, he thought that he had the upper hand now. He quickly changed posture in order to deliver the killing blow, but when he saw the severed arm move, he raised his eyebrows and jumped away. The severed arm suddenly folded its elbow to aim the rifle on its hand at Akira while still in mid-air.

The severed arm pulled the trigger, the bullets in its muzzle spewed out grazing Akira. The kickback from the shots caused the rifle to flail uncontrollably in the air. While still running, Tiol quickly grabbed the flailing arm that was flying at him from the recoil of the shots. He then placed it back onto the open surface wound, which was gushing out green blood. When both arm and shoulder touched, they somehow got reconnected.

Akira, who had already jumped away and opened some distance from Tiol, saw that and was astonished. He was surprised that Tiol was able to reconnect his severed arm, but more than that, he was surprised by the blood coming out from the wound.

[Green blood… No way, can it be that…?]

Akira remembered the massive humanoid monsters that he had fought in the past. As if he knew what Akira was thinking, Tiol laughed at him.

“So that monster was you, huh!? Didn’t I kill you back then? How the heck did you return back from death? I see now! In that case, I can just kill you again and again until you’re dead!”

“That’s right!! That was me!! But this time, I will be the one who wins!! You’ll be the one dead!!”

As Akira and Tiol ran side by side while widening the distance between them, they exchanged a grin, although they did not exchange words, both sides knew what the other sides were thinking about. They stopped momentarily shooting at each other because of their surprise as well as for the sake of healing their wounds. However, it did not take long before they immediately aimed their rifles at each other and were about to start exchanging bullets again.

That was when a vehicle suddenly went in and charged at them. Nelia’s voice could be heard from the communication device.

“Akira!! I’m coming there, so hop on!”

Nelia did not understand what was going on. But she understood that she could not afford to slow down nor to stop. She accelerated the APC forward as if to run over anything and anyone that got in its way.

The vehicle went past between Tiol and Akira. Akira quickly jumped and grabbed the side of the APC and Tiol did the same on the other side.

Katsuya’s team was still shooting at them from the front. The storm of bullets was intense. It came both from the machine gun of the vehicles as well as rifles from each Hunter. But that was not enough to stop Akira’s APC with Nelia continuing to go at full speed.

Nelia kept shooting at the machine guns in order to reduce the incoming bullets while she kept accelerating the APC. Akira had one hand holding onto one side of the APC while he was using his other free hand to shoot homing armour piercing frag grenades to clear the way forward. Tiol also did the same from the other side except he was aiming specifically at Katsuya’s team.

There was a difference in their shots, Nelia and Akira focused more on clearing obstacles while Tiol was clearly aiming to kill Katsuya’s team. Because of that, most of the obstacles removed were from Akira’s side. So Nelia directed the vehicle toward that opening, causing Tiol’s side to be more exposed.

Not only did this shield Akira from the enemy’s bullets, but it also made Tiol take on most of them.

The APC used all the build-up momentum to charge into a small opening within the enemy’s formation. The smaller vehicles could not withstand the power of Akira’s large APC and were sent flying.

Akira managed to hold on from getting thrown off the APC. It was thanks to his augmented suit that the shock from the collision did not knock him off. But that was not the case for Tiol. After taking in tons of bullets, he was weakened to the point that shock threw him off the APC. The collision shook some of the armour tiles off the APC, but with its superior horsepower and size, it successfully managed to force its way through the enemy's formation.

Akira was breathing rapidly as he climbed up the APC. His first step after that was to use more medicine to heal his body before asking Nelia.

"…Nelia, thanks for the help. But like, could you have done it better?"

Nelia replied with an amused voice.

"Nope. As a matter of fact, you should be more thankful than that. After all, I came back for you."

"Thank you very much!"

"You're welcome. We're allies for now after all. So I would at least do that much for you"

"Well, thanks."

Akira smiled wryly and just spat out that reply. That was when Nelia warned him.

"Two signals from above!!"

Akira quickly aimed his rifles up but he did not make it in time, so he instead jumped out of the way. Right at the next moment. Those two signals landed simultaneously above the APC. The shock from Katsuya and Tiol landing on top of the APC shook it and caused the armour tiles where they landed to bend.

Tiol laughed like a mad man. Although his body was covered in his green blood from the bullets before, he had already healed up all of his wounds.

"Don't think you can get away from me!!"

Katsuya's expression was filled with hatred. That hatred caused him to throw caution into the wind as he did something as reckless as jumping onto the enemy’s APC.

“You won’t get away from me!! All of you will die here!!”

Akira frowned, but it was more because of an inconvenience rather than hatred.

“Just knock it off already, Katsuya, was it again? The object of your revenge is over there, not me.”

Akira said so and pointed at Tiol. But that did not soften the hatred from Katsuya’s eyes.

“You won’t trick me!! It’s both of you!! I’ll definitely avenge my friends’ death!!”

“I know that you’re misunderstanding this, but I’ll at least try to let you know that I’m not that guy’s friend!!”

“Like hell I would believe that!!”

“Then let’s do this instead, how about we work together until we get to kill that guy? We can try to kill each other after that.”

“You gotta be crazy to think that I would work with you!”

Akira did that knowing that it was highly unlikely for Katsuya to accept his offer, but even so, getting rejected still made him knit his eyebrows. That was when Tiol then mocked.

“In that case, Akira, how about you work with me instead?”

“Drop dead.”

Tiol laughed and shifted his gaze to Katsuya.

“How about you?”

“I’ll kill you!!”

Between the three of them, one thought that it was a huge inconvenience, one was laughing like a mad man, and one was glaring with intense hatred. All of them there already expected that no one would try to work with anyone, so after they confirmed that their guesses were correct, they then spoke as they jumped into action at the same time.

“Alright alright, then both of you can just die!”

“Get on with it already!! Kill each other!! Die!!”

“I’ll definitely kill both of you!!”

The intense three-way deathmatch started on top of the ‘narrow’ APC.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 217, Those who stepped in

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Due to its relatively large size, the top of the APC was rather spacious. But of course, it was way too narrow for a gunfight. Akira, Katsuya, and Tiol saw the other as their enemies and aimed rifles, originally made to fight against monsters, at the other two.

The APC left a trail of destruction as stray bullets flew out from the top of the APC, the explosions and gunshots made by the three of them were enough to lure monsters. Some of the stray bullets would strike against buildings around the area, causing the Hunters who were hiding there to think that they were under attack. Thus as expected, they shot back at the APC. The area that was silent immediately enveloped in a hailstorm of bullets and explosions. It engulfed the whole area in fire. All three of them continued fighting each other, spreading fire and destruction in their wake.

Akira shot out anti-forcefield bullets and homing armour piercing frag grenades with his SSB rifles to get Katsuya and Tiol off his APC. The stray bullets went past their targets and hit the buildings around the APC. The explosions blew away the buildings, raising a cloud of dust, while the bullets were able to easily drill holes through those buildings. Some of them even hit the APC and peeled off its armour tiles.

The APC that was filled with supplies, was Akira's lifeline. But both Tiol and Katsuya did not have the leeway to attack the APC, and Akira himself did not have the leeway to worry about hitting his own APC in that battle.

Katsuya quickly jumped back of the APC to get away from Akira's wild shots. He then grabbed the edge of the APC and stuck to its side. He was holding the APC as a shield in one hand while using the other to spray bullets at those on top of the APC.

Akira pulled his head back to evade Katsuya's shots, he then fell backwards in that posture. Although it seemed that he was going to fall to the ground just like that, Akira used the contact surface of the boots of his augmented suit to stand straight, horizontal to the side of the APC, thus blocking Katsuya from targeting him. While he was in that position, Akira aimed both of his rifles above his head and pulled the trigger, to be more precise, he was aiming at Tiol, who had jumped and was running on a building's sidewall ever since he evaded Akira's indiscriminate shooting from before.

Akira knew the general location of Tiol from his information-gathering device. Since he had no leeway to take a proper aim at him, he instead focused more on trying to prevent Tiol from joining back. So, he spread grenades everywhere, as if to destroy everything around him.

Bullets rained down onto the building where Tiol was, but Tiol was unfazed, he kept running forward. His monstrous vitality allowed him to take bullets with no problem at all. So, Tiol just kept on chasing the APC while ignoring the incoming bullets. He then aimed his arm, already transformed into a cannon, at Akira.

Both Akira and Tiol exchanged shots. Since both of them were shooting bullets, grenades, and warheads from a difficult position, they were both unable to properly aim at the other.

The warheads hit the APC directly, throwing it off from its track. Akira ran on the side of the APC to evade the incoming warheads, he somehow managed to stay on the side of the APC it rocked violently.

Tiol used that opening to jump from the side of the building. His face was showing a blood-covered smile. Right after that, grenades came crashing onto the sidewall. Although the explosions also devoured Tiol, he could be seen to have soon jumped out from the smoke.

For the sake of knocking their opponent off, to make sure not to let them get away, and to gain the upper hand, all of them tried to get back to the top of the APC as quickly as possible. Akira ran back to the top of the APC, while Katsuya tried to climb back up, and Tiol jumped from the side of another building straight to the top of the APC. If any of them used that chance to shoot someone else, it would create an opening for the third party to shoot him. That understanding allowed the three of them to get back on top of the narrow APC.

A bullet aimed at the head. A kick to throw the opponent's off-balance. A twist and turn to evade the incoming blow. Regaining the balance after the exchange. Quickly jumping away from the line of fire. Jumping back to close the distance. Re-aiming the rifle back at their opponent. They threw bullets, kicks, and strikes to destroy the opponent's weapons or bodies. Among the flurry of the strikes, they ducked, blocked, and evaded. Even a single mistake would immediately kill any of them as they were locked in a 3-way battle royal.

That was when monsters jumped into the fray as well. A huge beast monster landed on top of the APC and tried to take a huge bite of the three. The machine guns with legs appeared on the side of a few buildings and were shooting bullets in Akira's direction. Even in such a messy situation, Akira, Tiol, and Katsuya kept on trying to kill each other while shooting down the legged machine guns and the monsters that landed on the top of the APC.

Akira kicked one of the beasts that had already lost its head in Tiol's direction. Tiol deflected its carcass to one of the nearby buildings in order to destroy the legged machine guns there. Katsuya tried to make use of that opening, but both Akira and Tiol made sure to keep him in check so that he would not be able to make any moves in this situation.

With so many factors suddenly mixed in the battle, every single decision that they make could easily decide whether they live or die. But even so, none of them was knocked off the APC. Although the APC was going pretty fast causing the scenery around them to blur, for the three of them, who were pumped full of adrenaline with heightened senses, it seemed that the scenery around them had stopped.

Akira somehow managed to keep up with the intense fight with the help of his time perception compression. The panging pain in his head caused a growing haziness to flood his mind. It was obvious that his brain could not take this burden any longer.

While at the same time, a strange feeling spread through his body as if it was being crushed and reformed. It was the sensation which came from the continuous cycle of the injuries being continuously healed, thanks to the medicines that he had used beforehand. Normally, the painkilling effects from the medicines would allow him to ignore the excruciating pain. However, he would still be able to feel enough so as not to cause any harmful effects during a fight. That feeling of discomfort came from this.

The moment the medicine lost its painkilling effect, the pain would immediately eliminate Akira’s mind and shut down his body.

Akira more or less knew how much time he had left, judging from how numbed pain felt and his abundant experience from all the battles that he had gone through. All those experiences were indicating to him that he was at his limit soon.

[These guys are strong!! Can I really keep up until I kill them!?… No, I have no other choice but to do it! I just need to kill them fast, before my body shuts down first! Even a second faster will be good enough! I have to commit myself more! I’ll kill them before I’m dead first!]

The fear of death caused Akira to frown, but then a mocking smile overwrote his fear. He then ignored the burden, increased his time compression, strengthened his reality-bending willpower, and pushed his body to move even faster.

The stalemate between the three of them started to change as Akira committed himself further into the fight. The tide of the battle started to turn toward Akira's favor. Tiol, who understood that, felt joy instead of fear.

[I can tell, you know!! You're getting desperate, right? You're pushing yourself past your limit, right? That just means you're that cornered right now!!]

Akira was also desperate when he fought against the giant Tiol. But at that time, Akira seemed to still have some leeway. That came from the fact that Akira trusted Alpha's support, even in the worst-case scenario, he believed that Alpha would do something about it. Moreover, if the opponent was too strong, then Alpha would have done something right from the start.

But this time, Akira did not give out such a feeling at all. He was simply trying his best, with each step, bringing him closer to death's door just to win the battle. Tiol could obviously feel that Akria was being cornered.

[This is not like the last time! I can kill him this time! I finally have the chance to kill him! I just need to push just a little bit more! Go to hell!!]

Tiol wished for more power. His wish stemmed from his desire to kill Akira. But because of that, his consciousness started to show bias and leaned more toward the system instead of that of a human.

The current body was not Tiol's real body. His real body was the giant which Akira had destroyed the other day. After the city management took a small sample of his body, they burnt it so other monsters would be unable to feed on that corpse. Therefore, his original body no longer existed.

The body that Tiol was using right now, was something based on the surviving terminal that Yatsubayashi had modified according to the deal that he had with Tsubaki. Originally, Tsubaki was planning to control this modified body together with some other units. But then, she found a much better automaton body to use. So, she no longer needed those units. After that, Tsubaki installed Tiol's personality into one of them and ordered him to spread chaos amongst the city defence squad.

Tsubaki, who resurrected Tiol, demanded Tiol to properly give her results this time. If he was able to do that, Tsubaki promised him that she would ask Yatsubayashi to provide him with a proper body. If not, then he would be thrown into a dumpster and be incinerated. Of course, Tiol had no choice but to accept her conditions. While at the same time, Tsubaki also told him this body was the only thing that had Tiol's data at the moment. So if that body was destroyed, Tiol would be dead for real this time.

After the expedition started, Tiol met Katsuya's team by pure coincidence, it was not like Tiol deliberately went after Katsuya's team. At that time, he only recognized Katsuya as nothing more than one of the common Hunters. But the reason why he was clearly aiming to kill Katsuya, was simply because he heard Katsuya mentioning, 'I will turn this expedition into a success in order to win Sheryl's heart.'

As if it was a prank from the god, Tiol then met Akira by coincidence as well. Moreover, he successfully caused Katsuya to mistake Akira as one of his allies. At that time, he thought it might be a good idea to make them fight against each other, and he succeeded.

At the moment luck was siding him. Tiol, who thought so, became extremely excited. The thought of killing Akira and Katsuya and then winning Sheryl's heart now felt within his reach. The excitement threw his logic off the window as he sold a part of himself for more power.

With Akira and Tiol fully committing themselves towards that battle. Katsuya, who was the last person to do that, also got riled up in response to the other two.

[T-these guys are strong!! Dammit! I didn't expect that I would fight against these people like them when I'm not in my best shape!!]

Even in this situation, Katsuya's distorted common sense was only able to recognize it as a slightly bad situation. Since up till now, he was able to fight against monsters with relative ease, he was not able to correctly recognize the severity of the situation. But that small difference caused a huge gap during that intense battle against Tiol and Akira.

Although Katsuya had gone through numerous dangerous encounters and was able to get through all of them by doing something reckless, what he was trying now was different. The domain close to death should already be familiar to him, but for some reason, this time, he felt a different kind of presence of death. As he knitted his brows, he thought about this unfamiliar presence of death.

[I've been moving slower ever since the jamming happened, why is that!? Is it because the support system is affected by that jamming!? But even without the support system, it should still function as a normal augmented suit, right!? What the heck is going on?!]

Katsuya ended up unconsciously looking for the reasons he was having difficulty. This divided his attention, which caused him to slow down even more. But that was enough to cause a fatal opening in that battle. Akira and Tiol did not let that chance slide as both of them simultaneously aimed their rifles at Katsuya.

But this was where Akira's slightly late response spared Katsuya's life. If Akira had committed to the battle a few seconds sooner and stepped closer to the death door to sharpen his senses, Katsuya would have died there.

Inside the compressed time perception, Akira aimed his rifle at Katsuya while fixing his gaze at him. He then realized that Katsuya noticed him and took a defensive stance instead of jumping out of the way. A barrage of anti-forcefield armour rounds at close-range would be able to easily break through that level of defence.

Akira knew that Katsuya would understand that as well, so right at the next moment, Akira jumped away following his instinct.

A split second later, a storm of bullets enveloped the top of the APC. Akira was barely able to evade it while Tiol, who was not able to evade, took the barrage head-on and was thrown flying before landing on the ground. He rolled over a few times, before being run over by the vehicles chasing after Akira's APC from behind.

That attack just now came from Katsuya's team. After Akira's APC broke through their formation, they immediately turned around and started chasing the APC. Then the moment they felt that Katsuya was in danger, they immediately took action to provide supporting fire to him. Both the ones that were peeking out from the vehicles as well as the ones driving the vehicles were all moving in a quick organized manner, without exchanging any information in between them. Moreover, they sprayed the bullets in such a fashion that it covered the whole top, except for where Katsuya was standing.

Of course, Katsuya also got hit by some of the bullets, but he was unscathed. Akira then thought, while hiding himself around the edge of the rooftop.

[Low powered bullets, huh? Did they use that only to provide suppressing fire? No, that's not right, if all of them were low powered bullets, it should have been impossible to send Tiol flying like that. I bet they're only using that type of bullet around the area where they might hit Katsuya and used different bullets elsewhere.]

Akira's guess was mostly correct, but the implication of his guess was something that was really worrying for him.

[The jamming is still in effect. So how were they able to execute that without speaking to each other? That level of teamwork is not normal, you know?]

Katsuya jumped backwards to join up with the rest of his team. Akira did try to shoot Katsuya down when he was up in the air, but the suppression fire from his team made that difficult.

[As I thought, their timing is just too good! Is it because of that coordination support system!? Is that thing still working even in this situation!?]

But Akira quickly realized that he was about to pursue something unimportant right now. So, he immediately stopped his thoughts there. With both Katsuya and Tiol off the APC now, Akira went back to the back door of the APC.

“Nelia! They’re gaining on us! Can we run away from them?!”

“I’ll try my best, but to be honest, I think our chance of running away is small. This APC is already in very bad shape and there’s not much ammo left in the machine gun. While on the other hand, they are using faster and smaller vehicles with greater mobility. Not to mention, they seem hell-bent on killing a certain someone who is on this APC right now. As I thought, we won’t be able to get away from them.”

The APC was already close to its limit. Although Akira used a lot of expensive armour tiles to protect it, it had already lost more than half of them. After all those intense fights, the APC was already badly damaged. It was only thanks to Nelia’s skill that it was still barely able to somehow avoid the enemy’s attacks.

Since it was originally a transport vehicle to be used in the wasteland, it had a powerful engine. However, its capability was vastly different compared to the vehicles made for battles. With Katsuya’s team’s vehicles being specialized for combat in terms of specs, Akira’s APC had no chance of winning.

There was also a big difference in their remaining ammo. Moreover, he still had to keep using the machine gun to clear up the monsters blocking the APC. So, they were still using what little they had left.

Katsuya’s team would catch up with them at this rate. There was a good chance of death. Although Akira said so, Nelia replied back with an amused smile. She was not joking, nor was she exaggerating, she was simply enjoying the situation.

Akira knitted his eyebrows. He understood why Nelia was acting like that, but at the same time, he could not just completely ignore it nor just enjoy the situation like Nelia.

“For now, I’ll try my best to slow them down.”

“Alright.”

Endless explosions could be heard from behind. But even so, Nelia smiled and did not seem to be bothered at all. Akira could feel a strange feeling of reliability from that reply as he hurried up to finish his preparation. He immediately replenished his ammo and energy packs and did not forget to take extra medicines as well. In the middle of that, Akira spotted something inside the APC and stopped. It was his bike.

Katsuya landed on one of the moving vehicles from his team. Despite the jamming, they were able to communicate with each other since they were within close-range communication. The moment Katsuya got into communication range, he was welcomed with a scolding.

“Katsuya!! What the heck were you thinking? Jumping out all by yourself like that again!? I’ll deck you if you don’t stop doing that, okay!?”

“I-I’m sorry, alright? It just happened.”

“Just happened? That’s not something that you should do out of a whim, you know?!”

Airi’s calm voice followed afterwards.

“Katsuya. I know that you would do that since you were able to save some people in the past by doing so. But we’re a team right now. It’s better to move as a team instead of moving alone.”

“…You’re right, that was a close call as well, thanks for the help.”

“Good.”

Katsuya regained his calm after talking with Yumina and Airi. But even so, he was still relatively excited.

“Alright then! Let’s go!!”

The team increased the intensity of its attack with that command from Katsuya. The bullet storm consumed Akira’s APC while grenades and warheads were raining down on him.

Normally, Yumina would have recommended the team to withdraw. She indeed also wanted to avenge her dead comrades. She did not believe that it was worth the risk of pursuing a goal if it meant staying in an area where no long-range communication was working. She normally would have prioritized the safety of the team and convinced them to retreat even if she had to do it forcefully.

Normally, Airi would have been suspicious of the situation. There was no evidence showing that Akira was on Tiol's side. As long as there was no evidence, there was no need to add more enemies into the mix unnecessarily. Akira was too strong to handle. A moment of doubt when against him would result in death. Even if Akira was really working with Tiol, the current Katsuya would not have a high chance of victory even if he worked together with the team. At the very least, she would have notified Katsuya of this if she was in her normal state of mind.

But both Yumina and Airi did not think about it at all. The impression sent from Katsuya had overwhelmed their rational judgment so much that they simply believed that the course of events so far as normal. In exchange for their level of teamwork, their individuality had been suppressed. Even though it was a decision made by majority votes, Katsuya's line of thinking basically always vetoed as the final decision.

After multiple long intense battles, Akira's APC finally gave out. The moment the forcefield armour on the tire ran out of energy, the whole APC immediately rolled over on the ground violently. The impact caused its already hole-riddled body to bend greatly. It was then dragged by its momentum and crashed into a building before finally stopping.

Katsuya's team surrounded the APC and emptied their magazines on it. The bullets pierced through the APC's armour and made a mess of its inside. There was no response when they were done. After making sure that the enemy had been rendered unable to fight, they blew the back door to secure the inside, that was when they found something that they did not expect at all.

“…He’s not here!? How!?”

The only thing left inside the APC was the dead girls who Tiol threw inside that APC.

Akira had a grim face as he rode his bike on the sidewall of a building.

“Goddammit… What a huge loss!”

A few relic rucksacks were dangling from the bike. Nelia was inside of one of those rucksacks. She had her head and her arm peeking out the rucksack as she smiled amusedly and commented.

“Well, nothing is more expensive than life. Aren’t you glad that you’re still alive right now?”

“And I have to pay in money in exchange for that, you know?”

Akira judged that it was impossible to get away with his APC. Thus, he decided to abandon his expensive APC. He then brought as many supplies as possible with him before trying to escape with Nelia on his bike.

Nelia was able to conceal the moment the bike leapt outside the APC thanks to her advanced driving skill. Moreover, the explosions that surrounded them threw off the accuracy of the information gathering device in that area. They used that chance to get away from the APC before setting the APC to just drive about randomly.

Although the APC was already almost empty, there were still some supplies left inside it. Of course, Akira lost all those supplies the moment he lost his APC. He knew that his life was much more valuable than that, but even so, he still regretted losing his APC and supplies. It was obvious from his frustrated expression.

“So then, why are we doing this right now?”

“We need to take a route where normal vehicles can’t follow us. Otherwise, they will only chase us again.”

Nelia then replied casually.

“I see, you have a good point there.”

Nelia had no reason to argue with Akira’s reasoning there. She also thought that it was strange how Akira would come up with the idea of driving through the sidewall of the buildings. Nelia found it amusing that Akira replied as if it was common sense to do that.

“But still, stuffing me in a rucksack like this, you really don’t know how to treat a girl, do you?”

“Just shut up and get back in! I won’t stop to pick you up if you fall, you know!”

The bike’s control device was modified by Alpha to increase its performance, thanks to that, Akira was able to drive horizontally on the sidewall of the building even when he was not that good at driving. The tires of the bike were properly stuck on the wall as Akira drove. It was as though he was normally driving on the ground.

But as expected, he could not control the bike as well as he was on the ground. His face made a strange expression as gravity pulled him not down but to his side due to his position. Therefore, he drove desperately to maintain the bike.

“Yeah yeah, I’m just a dead weight at the moment so I’ll just do as you say.”

Akira left the area in order to get away from more battles through the route that vehicles would not be able to go through. Though, even a normal bike would not be able to go through that route as well.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 218, The Worth of Life

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After receiving the survey request back in the temporary forward base, Elena and Sara went to the expedition ground using the supply route. But once they arrived, they did not go any further. They started by checking the area starting from there. They were already inside the jamming area. So even if they could gather some information from there, they could not send it back to the base. They would have to return back outside the jamming area first before sending the data. In the end, thinking that it was too troublesome, they only searched the area around the already established supply route.

While Elena was in the middle of watching the information gathering device installed on her vehicle, Sara was responsible for watching the surroundings. At first, there did not seem to be anything strange around the area. There was no sign of a large expedition taking place here. It was so silent that it made them doubtful if there really was an ongoing expedition here.

“Except for the jamming, there is nothing strange here, Elena, how is it on your side?”

Elena stopped operating the terminal and shook her head. But her face did not show any sign of relief.

“Nothing at all. I just can’t get any connection no matter what. Leaving aside the main squad, I can’t even contact the reinforcement squads. The reinforcement squads should have known about the jamming, so they should be using stronger communication devices and shouldn’t be that far. That’s why I thought I should be able to at least contact them, but I’m not getting any replies at all. I can’t even get static noise…“

Sara understood the severity of the situation from her best friend and frowned.

“This is already far away from the original request, which is just to check what is going on. Elena, we can basically get the reward already. We just need to check the last place that was indicated from the powered suit’s recording. So, what do you think?”

“To be honest, I don’t like that idea at all. The jamming is already bad enough, but we did not encounter anyone on our way here, right? It’s only to be expected that the main squad would send someone to try to contact the forward base and that person would have used the supply route. But strangely enough, we didn’t encounter anyone here…”

“Those powered suits can fly, after all, they might have flown straight to the base without going through the supply route, you know.”

“Of course, that is also possible, but… Still…”

Being too careful might mean throwing away all they had done so far down the drain. Although Elena thought so, she could not shake off the bad feeling that she had. But on the other hand, if they just returned back from there, it would also mean that they wasted their time coming here. While Elena was still at loss on what to do, she expanded the radar to its maximum range. Since they had finished scanning the area with the standard information gathering device, Elena used all its available calculative power to search for enemies.

As she thought of going deeper into the ruin, in case she still did not get any signals, the radar picked something up.

“Sara. Get ready. There’s 1, no, 2 signals coming this way. The one behind seems to be moving pretty fast.”

“Roger that!”

Sara was carrying a gun that was as large as a tank’s cannon and another smaller one, which was still pretty large. Both of them were designed to be used with a powered suit. Their first priority was to get away in case it got dangerous, that was why they decided to focus more on firepower even if it meant that they could not keep using these weapons for long.

The nearer signal was approaching from behind a towering pile of rubble. Common sense was telling them that nothing could get over that pile. Despite that, the signal went charging straight toward that pile without slowing down at all.

“Elena, can you try checking their identification code in case they have those terminals lent specifically for this expedition?”

“I can’t. It might be because of the jamming or it could be that they don’t have it. Either way, be careful, I’ll try to open up some distance.”

Elena turned the vehicle to get away from that signal. There was a chance that it was a monster and it would be bad if they got ambushed. Sara also understood that as she readied herself for a fight. But the signal only came closer and closer.

Sara turned his gun toward that direction to welcome the enemy right when that signal jumped over the pile of rubble and showed itself in front of them. When Sara was close to pulling the trigger, she quickly realized who it was and inadvertently shouted.

“Akira!?”

Akira ended up jumping higher than he expected when he went over the rubble on his bike, causing his face to pull inward. But he somehow managed to land after that jump. Thanks to the advanced balancer and the control device on his bike, plus Akira using his augmented suit to prevent his bike from rolling over, he somehow was able to land without falling over. But even so, he still had a severe frown on his face.

“T-that was close.”

Unlike Akira who had his hands full trying to calm himself down, Nelia was smiling, amused.

“You do like pulling crazy stunts, don’t you?”

“It’s not like I’m doing this because I like it?”

“There’s that joke again. You won’t be able to trick me after pulling all of those stunts.”

“I’m being serious here.”

Akira finally calmed his breathing as he slowed down his bike. Meanwhile, Elena moved her vehicle to run side-by-side with Akira and smiled wryly at him.

“Oh, Akira. What a coincidence meeting you here.”

“Elena-san? Sara-san too? Why are you here? I heard that both of you didn’t participate in the expedition…”

“We’re not participating directly, we’re just reserves in case of an emergency. Since we can’t get in contact with the expedition team at all, we were asked to come down here to check up on the situation. How about you? Are you on your way back from the ruin?”

“Ah, yeah, that’s about right.”

“Is it okay if we ask what happened?”

“Well, where should I start? To be honest, I don’t really understand it myself, you see…”

Judging from what they could see, Elena at least knew that Akira was unharmed as she smiled in relief.

“For now, I’ll escort you back to base since you must have some important information regarding the situation. We can talk about the rest after that, are you okay with that?”

“Alright, I’ll be counting on you then.”

The three of them looked around and judged that the area was safe. But that did not stay for long. Elena pointed behind Akira and mentioned something strange.

“We have to tell the other guy as well. I can’t contact him because of the jamming, is it okay to just wait here? Or is it that you have a way to contact him?”

“Excuse me?”

Akira looked behind, toward where Elena was pointing. His relieved expression immediately turned solemn. A certain familiar powered suit was following him through the air. It was the other signal on Elena’s radar and it was heading straight at them.

Elena and Sara thought that the powered suit was someone from the main expedition unit that was returning back to the base with Akira. But Akira and Nelia did not think that was the case.

“…Nelia.”

“It might be as you think, it’s not exactly going in the direction of the temporary base.”

It was Zalmo chasing them, and his target was obvious. At this rate, Elena and Sara would be roped in the coming battle while they were still far away from the closest defensive point installed along the supply route. Although they had stopped extending the supply route, they were still working on improving the supply route. Thus, there was almost no cover along this part of the supply route. It was the perfect place to launch an attack from the sky. Akira made his decision in that instant, he pulled Nelia off from his bike and threw her into Elena's vehicle.

"Elena-san! Please take her back to base!"

When Elena was still flusteredly trying to catch Nelia, Akira quickly made a U-turn and accelerated his bike toward the pile of rubble where he came from.

"Wait-!? Akira!?"

Elena quickly called to stop him, but Akira did not even spare a glance back as he climbed the rubble before vanishing behind it.

The powered suit blazing through the sky was holding a huge cannon as one of its weapons. It then released a warhead big enough to fill its muzzle toward that pile of rubble. Once the payload made contact, it produced an enormous explosion. The roar of the explosion echoed through the area as the ground violently shook. The explosion even sent some of the rubble flying toward Elena and Sara.

Elena made sharp turns to avoid the falling rubble, while some of those that she was not able to evade were kicked aside by Sara.

When the powered suit noticed Elena and Sara, it hesitated and stopped for a split second. Akira did not let that opening slide as he showered that powered suit with homing grenades. Of course, the powered suit did not just ignore that, it immediately went for Akira while ignoring Elena and Sara.

Elena and Sara were still in a state of confusion and could not react accordingly. Nelia was caught in surprise, she did not expect Akira would do that at all. But for now, she put that aside and made a suggestion to Elena.

“I don’t know exactly who you are but can you please hurry up and go back to the temporary base?”

Elena looked at Nelia with a slightly stern look.

“Who are you? Akira’s friend? What is going on? Why is a powered suit dispatched by the city attacking Akira?”

“Is answering those questions worth stopping in this place?”

“It depends on the answers, I’ll judge based on your answers.”

Elana and Sara sent sharp gazes toward Nelia, but Nelia was unfettered as she replied back casually.

“Either way, we have no means to group up with Akira, you know? He’s way too fast on his bike after all.”

That sentence was enough to push Elena to make her decision. Of course, she hated the idea of leaving Akira behind. But since it was not like they could do anything to help him in that situation, they could only pick the second-best choice that they had. Which meant, rather than going after Akira in their vehicle, it was to get out from the jamming area and report what was going on back to base.

“…Sara! We’re leaving!”

Sara had a grim expression plastered on her face as she took in Elena’s hard decision.

“…Alright!! Let’s hurry up!”

As Elena pushed down the gas pedal and turned the vehicle back to the supply route, Nelia suddenly opened her mouth.

“I’m sure you have radar installed too, can you turn its power to the max and set it to detect even camouflaged enemies around the area?”

Elena sent a doubtful look at Nelia, after all, dialing up the radar output to that level meant that monsters might be able to trace back their position.

“Any particular reason why I should do that?”

“It’s worth the risk to make sure that no cloaked enemies are near us. Akira and I went through a lot in that area, you see. I won’t tell you to believe me, but remember that Akira might have left me with both of you to give advice.”

Elena was at loss for a moment, but she then changed the radar’s setting as instructed. After she checked the result, she finally understood. The radar picked multiple cloaked flying monsters in the sky, above the road that they had passed. Even Nelia, who glanced at that screen, could not help but frown.

“So, they let us past but not to go back, huh? What a pain in the neck.”

The squads who were sent back to contact the temporary base were all intercepted by those monsters. Although their number was reduced from the fight against the powered suits that were on their way back, there were still some of them left. Since they were spread over a wide area, there were not that many on the route back to base. Nonetheless, they were made to intercept the powered suits that could fly so, they were still a considerable threat to Elena’s group.

“…Sara, we’re breaking through them, okay?”

Elena looked worriedly at Sara, Sara then replied with a smile.

“I’m leaving the decision making to you, so don’t worry and let’s get going.”

“…Thank you.”

“Don’t worry.”

Elena replied that smile with another smile as she readied herself. But her smile immediately turned cloudy after that.

“But still, I wonder if we have enough firepower. Sara, how many do you think you can take out?”

“I’ll give my best, but I can’t give you an exact number without checking how strong they are first.”

It was difficult to fight those flying monsters only with their currently available weapons. Right when Elena was thinking about what to do, Nelia suddenly interjected.

“In that case, I can help drive the vehicle.”

Seeing Elena being uncertain to take up that offer, Nelia smiled and continued.

“Akira also left the driving to me, you know?”

“…Alright then, can you use a common terminal? Or do you use a wireless connection?”

“The jamming is pretty bad after all, so can you connect me to the terminal?”

“…Good grief, just what in the world happened?”

“A lot.”

Elena was a bit bothered by how Nelia was so casual with Akira, but that was not the time for that. Elena pulled out a terminal from the vehicle’s control device and connected it to Nelia. With that, Nelia immediately took control of the vehicle.

“Wait for a sec, you can immediately control the vehicle just by connecting to the terminal? We didn’t even put in any adjustment, you know?”

“I’ll do the adjustments myself.”

Elena was surprised at how fast Nelia took control of the vehicle. It was as if she hacked straight into the control device, but at this point in time, it was beneficial to them. She left the driving fully to Nelia as she took another large gun and stood next to Sara.

“It was a good thing that we prioritized firepower this time. But to be honest, it would have been great if we didn’t have to use them.”

Seeing Elena smile wryly next to her, Sara replied with a rather uppity tone.

“Being a Hunter is a dangerous job, it was a good thing that we are properly prepared to face danger.”

“Well, I guess I’ll leave it at that for now.”

Elena made a thin smile as she pulled herself together.

Nelia gave a warning first before accelerating the vehicle.

“We’re charging in, in 3, 2, 1, zero.”

Instead of sounding nervous, her voice was strangely detached. Elena and Sara took the initiative first as they released shots toward the invisible flying monsters. The explosions produced from the warheads were no less splendid. The anti force field rounds that they used pierced through the monster’s hard armour and they fell down one by one, crashing to the ground. Nelia also helped shoot them down by using the machine gun fixed onto the vehicle. The countless bullets striped the monsters of their camouflaging veil as they fell. Once they crashed into the ground, they made loud bangs.

The remaining monsters still up in the air did not just ignore that attack and immediately shot back. The rain of bullets drilled holes on the ground but Nelia was able to skillfully drive the vehicle away from the danger.

Although they were not that far away from the nearest defensive point, it was a considerable distance to brave this assault. As bullets and warheads were exchanged between the sky and the ground, Elena and Sara made full use of their talent and skill to destroy any that stood in their path.

Akira desperately blazed through the ruin. There was a limit on how much firepower that the bike could take so, there was no chance to defeat that powered suit.

On the other hand, it has better mobility than the APC, so Akira used that advantage to get into small roads or go through buildings where he was protected from the flying powered suit.

Right now, he was somehow able to get a small break as he was running the bike through the small hallway of a building that he broke into. He turned the optical camouflage of his coat on and lowered the power output of his bike in order to slip away from the opponent's watch. But of course, he could not keep that up for long.

"Well now, what can I do in this situation…?"

Akira looked extremely exasperated as he rubbed his head. He did not think that he had any chance to run away from the powered suit. Speed-wise, the powered suit was faster than the bike. Although he was able to somehow sneak away from the powered suit right now, it was only a matter of time before his bike ran out of energy first. Akira basically had his hands tied. It was checkmate.

For now, he focused on calming down his breathing, taking medicine bit by bit, all the while making sure to regain as much strength as possible, both physically and mentally. He had used his brain a bit too much during his fight with Katsuya earlier. Because of that, it would not be strange for him to suddenly faint anytime.

The medicine that he took contained a drug to make sure that he would not lose consciousness in the middle of a fight. There was a good chance that he would drop unconscious the moment that drug ran out of its effect, only to wake up a few days later. Akira somehow knew so, that was why he was making sure that the drug's effects would not run out. But of course, it was also a matter of time that the drug would lose its effect, it was one of the reasons why he was in checkmate.

After only a moment’s respite, the building started to shake. It was on the verge of collapsing, but thanks to its old-world durable build, it did not crumble immediately. Although, the collapse itself was an impending certainty.

“Again!?”

Akira clicked his tongue and started his bike before pushing the accelerator. He then charged straight at a part of the wall that he had marked beforehand, destroying it as he jumped out of the building and skillfully landed on the ground. The moment the wheels hugged the ground, he quickly accelerated the bike.

The crumbled building released a smokescreen, and from that smokescreen, Zalmo appeared. It was Zalmo who destroyed the building. When he lost sight of Akira and could not find him anywhere, Zalmo thought that Akira must be hiding inside the buildings nearby. Thus, he went on to indiscriminately destroy the buildings in the area in an attempt to smoke Akira out.

Zalmo quickly detected Akira, who had just come out from the building with his powerful radar. Since Akira acted as he had expected, Zalmo inadvertently smiled as he stood up from his seat and shouted.

“There you are!! Just give it up and die already!!”

The abnormally big missile pods released a series of missiles. Each of them danced in the air before seeking Akira from different angles.

Akira was still on his bike as he aimed his SSB rifle upward before releasing homing grenades. All of them were set to low speed, high homing capability in order to shoot down all the incoming missiles.

But they somehow lacked enough firepower to destroy the missiles. The force-field protected missiles forced their way through the grenades. But of course, the explosion was able to veer the missiles off their original path as they landed and exploded near Akira, causing the buildings around him to crumble down and throwing rubble up into the air.

Akira slipped through the raining rubble on his bike, he had done this before in the past. Although, this time, he had no drive support from Alpha to aid him. He continued to blaze through the road before any falling rubble could close off his way forward.

The Zalmo did not just stand idly there, it proceeded to aim its cannon at Akira. Akira who noticed that, aimed his SSB rifle back and released a barrage of anti force field bullets.

As the bullets' momentum were turned into flashes of light, Zalmo started shooting at Akira, relying on the powered suit's powerful force field armour as he ignored the incoming bullets.

The moment Akira realized that his bullets did not faze Zalmo at all, he immediately stopped shooting and shifted to focus more on evading the incoming warheads. He looked around and jumped straight into one of the buildings with his bike.

A moment later after Akira jumped into a building, a warhead followed suit and crashed into the exact same building, turning the wall into a pile of rubble and consuming the building in a fiery explosion. As a result, it left an old-world building, half-destroyed.

Akira felt a gust of wind from behind due to the shock wave as he accelerated his bike. He jumped out from the other side of the building. Although the explosion was able to partially destroy a durable old-world building, it only shaved a fraction of his coat's durability. The moment he landed on the ground, he scanned his surroundings for cover while changing the energy packs in his coat. He did this without stopping, accelerating his bike even faster.

"Dammit! Using powerful expensive bullets like that! Just how many does he have!? To think he can even pull out a powered suit like that! A mere robber from the slum should not have this many assets! Just what can he get from killing me? What is it that is worth that much money? I just don't know! How is this profitable for him? What's his goal? It surely isn't worth all the expenses!!"

Up till this point, there had already been numerous instances where others would look down at him and try to kill him. It also meant that they saw Akira's life as cheap, easily disposable with a single shot of a cheap bullet. But this was not the case this time. The opponent was even willing to bring out an expensive powered suit to hunt him down. Something much more expensive than any anti-personnel round. Zalmo did not pull any punches in his effort to kill Akira.

It reminded Akira that his life was no longer that cheap, that he was no longer just a mere boy from the slum. Although Akira knew this, he did not feel happy at all.

Akira could not help but think that it would be better if others still looked down on him. Right then, he realized that he was being meek, which made his expression become stern. A deliberate smile then rose as he overwrote such thoughts.

Someone was willing to spend all of this money in order to hunt him down but Akira just mockingly laughed at that absurd fact.

"Heh! That's not even close to enough to kill me, you know!"

[It is not worth the effort!] The one who made this mistake was not him, but his opponent. In order to cement that fact, Akira pushed the accelerator all the way down as he made a 180 degrees turn. Once the bike was in position, the tire's strong grip tore into the ground as it unleashed its full power, pushing the bike forward with explosive acceleration.

Zalmo started to get irritated. But half of that irritation was just a brave front to trick himself against the creeping fear of facing off against a mysterious powerful opponent. He had even changed the equipment on his powered suit in order to kill Akira for sure this time. But Akira was still alive and that caused Zalmo to start feeling nervous.

His new equipment focused more on firepower, enough to even take out a large-sized armoured vehicle. So even if he missed, the shock wave would have been strong enough to throw the vehicle off the ground. This should give him plenty of time to send the finishing blow. Because of that, he also brought warheads that would compensate for accuracy with raw firepower.

But right now, Akira was still running away from him using a small bike. Zalmo's current equipment did not have the capability to finish Akira off. Akira could make sharp turns and take cover in between small alleys, causing Zalmo to have a hard time trying to shoot him down with the rest of the building around him.

Zalmo found it weird that Akira changed to his bike as if to counter against his new equipment.

"…Calm down! He can't run away from me. I still have the upper hand."

Zalmo mumbled as if he was talking to himself and released another batch of missiles. Although he was chasing after Akira, the boy was still somehow able to keep a certain distance from him. Naturally, this was Zalmo's doing. On one hand, he could keep Akira within the effective range of his weapons. On the other hand, it was also because Zalmo unconsciously did not want to get any closer to him.

Both the firepower and the weight of his equipment were immense. Thanks to that, the energy consumption was equally as immense. If he had enough energy reserve, he would have been able to stay in the air, but just to be safe, Zalmo increased the frequency of landing in order to conserve his energy.

After making a U-turn, Akira was charging straight at Zalmo. His eyes were fixed on the powered suit. It continued to shoot at him, launching missiles that would land between them. Most of the missiles drew an arc in the sky before pointing towards Akira. The rest would keep their elevation in the sky and fly straight at Akira when he came closer.

If Akira kept accelerating his bike forward, at this rate, he would crash into the missiles coming straight at him. The explosion would definitely kill him but his smile only grew wider in the face of this and he forced his bike to move even faster. He was already going too fast to make any sharp turns.

So, he could not evade the missiles. Each second ticked as the missiles moved closer.

Akira quickly aimed his SSB rifle forward and shot a couple of grenades, but the target was not the missiles. The grenades landed between him and the missiles, throwing rubble up into the air. It filled the area with smoke, and created a small storm, thus throwing the colourless mist into disarray.

The missiles immediately exploded before reaching him. Those homing missiles were made to explode when it got into a fixed range from its target, instructed by the information-gathering device installed in each missile. Normally, the powered suit could set it to detonate manually, but due to the jamming, Zalmo did not use it.

The grenades that Akira used this time were mixed with a jamming effect. It was albeit powerful and only lasted for a short time. But that small duration was enough for some missiles to miscalculate its distance from its original target and explode. A huge chunk of debris flew past Akira and he could feel the wind prickling his skin. He willingly stepped into a zone where even the slightest mistake could end him, but even so, Akira continued on with an excited expression.

A missile that had lost its homing function flew beside Akira and struck nearby wreckage. The explosion blew off a gust of wind behind him as he continued to push down the accelerator even harder. The rest of the missiles somehow managed to regain their homing function and chased after Akira from behind.

Zalmo was shocked to find Akira, who was running away from him all this time, suddenly coming straight at him. That alone was enough to momentarily stop him for a split second. On top of that, he was even more shocked when Akira still remained alive after heading straight at the missiles. At that moment, it was as if he was shockingly trying to kill himself. Yet, he came out fine. Shock after shock slowed down Zalmo even more. It came to a point where Zalmo was now at loss. He wondered if he should try and shoot Akira down with his weapons or jump to the sky. Although he only hesitated for a few seconds, that opening was more than enough for Akira, who was coming at him with no hesitation at all, quickly closing the distance between them.

That was when Zalmo finally decided to use the full power of the powered suit to jump up. Pushing its heavy body and weaponry up into the sky. He went past a tall building, all the way up until he reached a height that the naked eyes could no longer see from the ground. Zalmo now felt a sense of safety thanks to the distance between him and Akira. Thanks to that, he was able to regain some of his composure as he used the cameras on his powered suit to look for Akira. Right when he caught Akira in his views, Zalmo could not hide his surprise. Akira was chasing him, flying into the sky on his bike with countless missiles chasing after him.

Akira maintained the acceleration of his bike as he used a hill like wreckage to spring his bike up before landing on a wall of a nearby building. He used it to scale up into the sky. At the end of the wall, once his bike had left its footing, he simply allowed the momentum to carry his bike straight to where Zalmo was.

In that split second, Zalmo realised that Akira’s goal was to crash his own missiles at him. So, he quickly took evasive maneuvers.

“Don’t look down on me!!”

The powered suit danced in the air, evading the bike and somehow, also evading the missiles. The bike that had no other choice but to be carried by momentum, straight into the air, could not evade the missiles behind. So, they struck the bike and exploded, enveloping it in a huge storm of blazing fire, shredding the bike into bits.

Zalmo’s powered suit was blown away by the shock wave as it rag dolled in the air. He somehow regained his balance and looked toward the source of the explosion. The smoke leftover in the air indicated just how big the explosion was. So, Zalmo’s face was filled with satisfaction.

“I did it!! He’s finally dead!!”

Zalmo was certain of his victory and had lowered his guard. Thanks to that, the unfolding scene in front of him shocked him even more. His satisfied face stiffened in a blink of an eye. He could see clearly from the camera on his powered suit that Akira was aiming straight at him.

The moment the bike flew past Zalmo, Akira had jumped off it. With the help of his augmented suit, he then grabbed one part of the powered suit with one hand and stuck the sole of his feet onto the same powered suit to make sure that he would not be shaken off.

Akira's other free hand was tightly gripping his SSB rifle, placing the muzzle into the powered suit. Once in place, he finally pulled the trigger. Countless anti-forcefield bullets were spewed out from the rifle. He had already set beforehand to maximize its firing rate. The sheer force from a point-blank barrage caused the area to be enveloped in a blinding light.

Zalmo, who was panicking, flew haphazardly in the sky in an attempt to shake Akira off. As the powered suit flew through clouds, Akira desperately held on while still holding down on the trigger of his SSB rifle. The powered suit flailed around, trying to grab Akira but he somehow managed to keep evading. He would jump around the powered suit, all the while injecting more bullets into it.

In a situation where both his legs did not have good footing and had only one hand to stabilize his position, he could not really aim properly. However, that did not stop him from emptying the anti-forcefield armour magazine. Those bullets pierced through the powered suit's defenses, causing Zalmo to continuously flail out of control before crashing into a nearby building.

Akira somehow managed to jump off the powered suit and into the building before it crashed. He stuck himself to the wall as he watched the powered suit fall down. However, the powered suit managed to regain its balance before touching the ground. Although it was flying unstably, wobbling left and right, it was obvious that Zalmo was still alive.

Akira's face twitched with utmost disgust.

“Even after all that, I am still not able to kill him… Just how durable is that thing?”

Akira thought that it would be better to move. So he then sighed, unsheathed his blade, and sliced through the wall to enter the building.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 219, In Too Deep

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Zalmo's powered suit's control device was shot, so he was only able to spiral down into the ground. But Zalmo somehow managed not to crash by controlling the output of the engine. Although he now could not do any high-speed air maneuver, he was still able to fly.

Zalmo landed the powered suit on top of a tall building and glanced toward the building where Akira ran into. It looked to be relatively tall and strong. He knew that it would be difficult to take down that building with only his powered suit. Meanwhile, if he were to throw everything he had at it, he would still have a chance.

However, his face turned stern as he shook his head.

"…Calm down. Don't get too emotional! I'm not a machine. Emotion is important in order to understand the righteousness of the great cause. But it would be meaningless if I let my emotions take over me. That would only mean regressing back to an animal! The great cause exists only for humanity, machines and animals cannot understand the great cause. So just calm down…"

Zalmo whispered to himself as if he was hypnotizing himself, but it was enough to help him calm down. He reassessed the situation with cold logic and thought of what to do next.

[…But still, what the heck with that boy? Was he only running away from me in order to find an opening? Or was it by pure coincidence? It's true that he might have a chance to turn the table by doing so, but isn't that just too reckless. Did he become desperate, thinking that he had no chance to run away? Or was it all calculated? Just what is it?]

Common sense was telling him that he should have won by now. But his opponent did not work with the realm of common sense. As a matter of fact, in that fight where Akira should have zero chance of winning, he managed to stage multiple offensives that almost turned the table on him. Zalmo was once again reminded that his opponent was someone who was extremely hard to deal with. It would be best to kill Akira while he had the chance. After all, no matter what they were called: the nigh improbable, the exceptions; the things that overturned impossibility, a miracle. Akira's chances of victory were not zero.

Zalmo felt that Akira was someone who could pull off such miracles. Although he did not have any proof for that, it was all his pure intuition. But he understood that sometimes intuition could be sharper than pure logic.

An exception that could easily turn the impossible into possible. Regardless of hostiles or allies, an existence brimming with trouble. In terms of planning, it was best to erase him out of existence. So, Zalmo thought that it was important to remove a variable like him for the sake of turning the great cause into reality.

[I should still have plenty of opportunities to kill him. This guy will only grow stronger. When the great cause takes control of the eastern district, there's no doubt this guy will be an obstacle and it will be difficult to kill him at that point. He's already this strong right now. I have to kill him when he's still just small, otherwise, it would be too late!]

Zalmo coldly fueled his killing intent and moved his powered suit to the building where Akira ran into. He turned up his radar to scan the inside of the building. With this, he would quickly know if Akira was still inside or not. While he was doing so, he was also thinking of his next move, but his radar suddenly showed new signals approaching his location.

Zalmo focused his attention toward that signal and made a troubled expression.

[If I'm not mistaken, that one is Tiol. He's inside the building while carrying someone… And the signals chasing them would be Katsuya and his team… They told me not to hurt both Tiol and Katsuya, I guess this means that I can't just destroy the building…]

Tiol went inside the building. Katsuya and his team stopped their vehicle nearby and followed suit. After that, the radar showed that a fight broke inside the building.

[I guess I'll just watch for the time being, they didn't tell me to help them and both of them are hostile to Akira. It would be fine if they managed to kill him. At least, they should be able to shave off some of his energy, then I can just make my move after that.]

Zalmo thought so and changed the setting of his radar to observe the situation inside that building.

After Tiol fell from the top of the APC, he was run over by Katsuya's team's vehicles. His head was crushed, his limbs were scattered, he was turned into a mere incorrigible lump of meat soaked in green liquid.

That was when a greedy crocodile appeared and approached him. When that monster was about to close its mouth to take a chomp at Tiol, its head was suddenly chomped off instead.

There was a line in Tiol's arm that reached until his shoulder. It opened up and turned into a vicious mouth filled with sharp teeth. That mouth then latched onto the greedy crocodile, took a bite off its head, and swallowed it. Tiol then continued his meal as if he was the greedy one.

The greedy crocodile flailed haphazardly, all of the guns growing out of its body were shooting out uncontrollably. But that did not faze Tiol at all, he just continued eating the greedy crocodile as if nothing happened. His mouth grew bigger with every bite, increasing its capacity with each bite. It would not take that long for Tiol to completely consume the crocodile's head and eventually kill it.

Even when Tiol was lying on the ground, the green liquid inside him was still continuously repairing his body. When more of his body had regenerated, a source of food arrived, just in time to help him regenerate his missing limbs. Thanks to that, Tiol was able to quickly heal his body.

When he had finished eating the greedy crocodile, his body regrew from a lump of meat into something more humanoid. Tiol then pushed himself up. The scaly metallic parts of the greedy crocodile had turned into something that looked like a powered suit enveloping his body. His arm that had now turned into a mouth finally closed its jaw and slowly returned back to being a normal arm.

Even after he had regained his body, Tiol was still in a daze.

"…Uhhh, what I was doing again…?"

He tilted his head and thought for a while, he then started muttering something with a rather apathetic expression.

"Ahh, that's right. I have to kill that guy! Where is that guy again?"

He then looked around as if he was still confused. There was no one else but him in the area, he could only see rubble and wreckage wherever he looked around. There was no sign of any other living being. But Tiol suddenly stopped looking around and focused his gaze in a particular direction.

"There he is."

Tiol immediately started running toward his target. His gaze was fixed on Katsuya. However, Katsuya was far away, behind numerous obstacles. It should have been impossible for Tiol to spot him from where he was. Even if he was using a powerful information-gathering device, it would still be difficult to spot Katsuya due to the distance between them. But even so, Tiol was still able to charge straight at Katsuya, without a shred of hesitation.

Tiol had stepped in too deep and there was no way back for him now.

When Katsuya lost Akira, his team regrouped inside one of the abandoned buildings and barricaded themselves there. They took shifts to rest while maintaining a certain level of readiness so they could react the moment something happened. The team was working in perfect sync with no opening at all.

At this moment, Katsuya was thinking about what to do next. He understood that the original plan for the large scale expedition was already completely ruined. But that did not mean he could just return back empty-handed.

As a squad under Drankam, they could not simply retreat just because something unexpected happened. Furthermore, he still had that promise to fulfill. He thought, [It might be impossible to fully understand what is going on, but we should at least bring back some valuable information with us.]

If it was the past Katsuya, he would have immediately made his decision. He would have put his life on the line to let the rest of his team withdraw. He would not mind the danger and would perform reckless actions without a single second of hesitation.

Although his actions would look reckless and thoughtless, the act of risking his own life for the sake of protecting his comrades caused them to feel admiration, gratitude, and a sense of affection toward Katsuya. It made them wish to stay beside him as if they were drawn by a figure of a shining hero.

The reason why Katsuya did not decide to withdraw yet, was because the synchronized information processing caused them to feel an unusually high level of unity within the team. Therefore, Katsuya had been unconsciously manipulating the rest of the team. He was causing them to have the same thought as him. So, just like him, they too believe that the current situation did not pose much danger to them.

Katsuya did not notice that his low self-reflective valuing of his own life would drag the rest of his team into more danger. Moreover, there was no one around him who found it strange or questioned him. Everyone around Katsuya had been completely consumed by his local network.

Katsuya's team suddenly noticed an enemy. Katsuya who knew that without even needing anyone contacting him, immediately sprung into action. He quickly left the building and helped the rest of the team that was already engaging with that monster. They did not hold back anything as they kept spewing warheads and bullets toward that enemy.

The opponent was a monster that seemed to be a half-assimilated powered suit dispatched by city management. Its form was distorted beyond recognition. It was like an amalgamation of several powered suits with their heads and limbs torn off. A lump of multiple torsos stitched together with random arms and legs sticking out. Although it was obvious that it was made by assimilating powered suits, it did not even look close to a human. Its hand was gripping a huge cannon, which originally belonged to one of the powered suits.

The monster aimed its weapon at Katsuya's team and started shooting. Due to its haphazard shooting, some of the warheads landed nearby or even hit its own arms. But it completely ignored that fact and just kept on shooting enough warheads to plummet everything around him to smithereens.

But even so, Katsuya and his team fought back valiantly without showing any fear. They hid behind covers and peeked out from behind windows, some were shooting from behind their vehicles and used all the resources that they had without trying to conserve any ammo, they did that considering the amalgamation of powered suits should have a powerful forcefield protecting it.

But in contrast to their expectation, the monster was easily shot down. This was due to the fact that all the forcefield armours were not in their perfect state. The defensive might of these suits relied on a forcefield. However, when the energy supply is rerouted or damaged, such a feature would no longer be usable. It rendered them almost useless for defense. And with the opponent's body unprotected by a forcefield, made it easy to shoot down. Which also means that Katsuya and his team were basically wasting expensive rounds. It took only a short time for all the bullets to riddle the monster into mush.

Although she was happy that it was not as hard as she had anticipated, Yumina thought that it was strange that the enemy was this weak.

"That was easy. Was it already badly wounded after fighting someone else…?"

The answer to her question immediately showed itself. It was Tiol. That monster was something that Tiol created using powered suits that he found on his way there. Tiol deliberately sent it ahead as a decoy. Katsuya's team had showered it with warheads and the explosions caused chaos, which temporarily lowered the accuracy of their information-gathering devices. Tiol used that opportunity to grab and kidnap some of Katsuya's men.

Yumina immediately reacted to attack Tiol. But it was already too late, Tiol was already too close, He quickly aimed at Yumina with his left arm, which had turned into a cannon and released a shot.

The explosion and the momentum blew Yumina away. But Tiol then kept running toward Yumina and quickly grabbed him before withdrawing from the area.

Katsuya, who knew what just happened without even sparing a glance, immediately shouted.

"Yumina!!"

Tiol glanced at Katsuya while still running away. But, that was all that he did before vanishing into the distance.

Katsuya was shocked, an opponent that he thought he had killed suddenly appeared and kidnapped one of his companions.

“We’re chasing after that monster!”

Katsuya went to chase after Tiol, and the rest of his team immediately followed suit.

When Tiol made that shot, he had adjusted his firepower to make sure that he would not kill Yumina. So, Yumina was still alive. But since she could not move, she was unable to fight back. She was only able to leave her fate to destiny. Tiol was running extremely fast thanks to his inhuman physical capability. While he ran, he haphazardly flailed her around. It was only thanks to luck that Yumina was still alive. Though, it was unfortunately for her to be the one that Tiol picked to kidnap.

It was difficult for Yumina to even say anything in that situation, so she just sent a glare toward Tiol. That was when she heard him mutter.

“…Uhhh, was this good enough…? Ah, right, I need to get them to fight each other next, huh.”

“W-what are you talking about…!?”

Tiol kept on muttering without paying any attention to Yumina while running. Yumina thought that there was something ominous about him, as she grimaced from the pain with a tint of confusion.

***

Elena, Sara, and Nelia forced their way through the encirclement. The area around them was already littered with mechanical monsters equipped with camouflaging technology. Due to the intense exchange, some of the flying monsters had their camouflaging layers stripped off. They looked like a group of ghosts fighting against Elena’s team.

Elena’s team focused more on firepower instead of quantity. But even so, they did not hesitate to use everything in their arsenal. Thanks to that, their reserve ammo was running dangerously low. Sara's face started to get cloudy because of that, but she quickly replaced it with a bitter smile instead.

"Good grief. If not for them paying for all this ammo, we would have gone bankrupt again, you know!? Elena! How is it? Does it seem that we're going to make it?"

"The defensive point is just ahead! No need to hold back, just keep on shooting! Nelia, is it? Can you go faster?"

"I'm already going as fast as I can, ah! Just a question though, do you have confidence in your aim?"

"Yes, more or less."

"Then shoot over there."

Nelia used her only arm that she had left to point at something. Elena followed where her finger was pointing at and saw the defensive point a bit away from them. Elena immediately understood what Nelia was thinking and frowned.

"You can just say that it was a stray bullet or that you'd misfired."

Elena hesitated for a bit, but she then aimed his gun at the defensive point. She properly took aim at the wall, made her resolve, and pulled the trigger. The bullet stayed true to its nature as it flew straight and struck the wall. Right at that moment, alarms blared, alerting everyone in the defensive point that there was an enemy attack.

No matter what the reason, deliberately shooting at an ally posed a huge problem. But still, it was worth it. The defensive point immediately noticed Elena's team and the monsters that they were fighting. The people in the defensive point immediately readied themselves to join the battle. Tanks flowed out from behind the fortification, followed by a barrage from powered suits. The storm of warheads and bullets washed around Elena's team, eradicating the swarm of monsters.

Elena’s team immediately gained the upper hand. But even so, Elena heaved a huge sigh and scratched her head. Sara smiled wryly at him while Nelia gave an honest smile and said.

“It’s fine. If they find out, you can just tell them it was because I told you to do so. I’m sure it’ll somehow help you.”

“That better be the truth, alright? Wait, will you be alright if I do that though? Just what kind of special rights do you have that would keep you safe?”

“I have a superior who is used to handling these kinds of things. Though, I really can’t tell you the details.”

Elena was sending Nelia a doubtful look, but judging from how Nelia reacted to her stare, Elena decided to push that worry aside for now.

With those from the defensive point pushing the monsters back, Elena’s team could quickly reach the defensive point. The gate opened up and they went straight inside. The leader of the defensive point came together with a number of guards.

“You’re Hunters who came back from the expedition, right? There are a few things that I want to ask.”

Elena was still trying to pick her words when Nelia suddenly jumped in.

“If it’s possible, we want to explain the situation to the forward base, can you get any connection from here?”

“No. We are hit by the jamming too.”

“You should at least have a wired connection from here, right? Can’t you use that?”

“That’s an emergency line. We can’t let an outsider use it. Even if it’s a Hunter who was sent to investigate the situation. So tell me, what’s going on and then we’ll judge whether it’s important enough to pass it along.”

“I’m working under Yanagisawa. If you’re worried about my identity, you can go ahead and check my ID number. Sorry but I’m in a hurry here. Either give us the line or open the road, and make it quick.”

The guy then curiously checked Nelia’s identification code. He immediately frowned as he used his information terminal. He soon gave Nelia the right to use the wired line and told his men to stand down.

But one of his men found it vexing as he whispered to the leader.

“Is it okay not to arrest them? Although it is an emergency, there’s a chance that they would attack us instead, you know. Even if we don’t go as far as to arrest them, it might be a good idea to at least interrogate them here first…”

The leader only shook his head, it was obvious that he also did not find the situation amusing at all.

“No. Our job is to just report the situation to the higher-ups. As to the decision to raise a complaint, we can just leave it to them. If we do something that might interrupt Yanagisawa’s job, we’ll be the ones to get burned. So just keep your hands off of them.”

It was obvious that the leader was displeased, that was why his men decided not to pursue the subject any further. Seeing that, Elena and Sara found it rather surprising.

After Nelia finished sending the data over to the forward base, she then continued heading to the forward base together with Elena and Sara.

The higher-ups in the forward base were even more confused after they received data from Nelia. All the dispatched powered suits have been destroyed, there was an old-world automaton that was way stronger than anything that City Management could throw at it. The ensuing chaos between the Hunters due to the powerful jamming, the flying monsters with camouflaging capability that were surrounding the expedition area. All of these were outside of their expectation, creating confusion between the commanding officers.

In the midst of the confusion, the command line had basically been paralyzed. Inabe felt that the trophy that was in his reach had suddenly vanished into the thin air. But he immediately regained his composure, reassessed the situation, and smiled wryly as he thought.

[So this is it, huh… But, I still have things to do…]

Inabe's expression immediately turned resolute as he ordered.

"Call the city defense squad and ask them for reinforcement!! Also, send all the Hunters that we've been keeping in reserve!! Quickly!!"

Everyone in the room looked at Inabe. Some of the men who could not recover from the confusion inadvertently rebuked.

"Y-You don't have the right to do that!! You're going way out of line!!"

"In the first place, this happened because of your plan!! How are you going to take responsibility for this mess!?"

Inabe gave out a thick intimidating aura that silenced any dissent from the officers.

"You can do that as much as you want later! With that many monsters heading here, we have to act now! Otherwise, the battle will reach the city! If you have any complaints about my rights and authorities, then you should send that piece of data to those who have said rights as soon as possible!! Now, get a move on!!"

Inabe's stern reply calmed the room. But then, that silence was immediately shattered. Although it was only temporary, the line of commands, that had been recovered to some extent, immediately started to move. Shouts of orders started to echo from each of their respective stations.

Inabe lightly sighed, the person next to Inabe smiled bitterly and said to him.

"Good work there."

“Thanks. You too… Well, you should also think carefully about how are you going to act here. This is how far my status can take me.”

“There are things that you won’t know unless you reach the end first. Moreover, this is not the time to think about it, I’ll think about it later if I really have to.”

“…I see.”

Seeing how the person next to him seemed to be content with his current situation, Inabe also smiled lightly at him. After that, another question came up in his mind.

“By the way, where is Yanagisawa? I don’t see him anywhere.”

“I don’t see him either. Or more like, I’m pretty sure no one has seen him today.”

“That guy is one of the commanders. He should be staying here. Good grief, just where the heck is he in this situation?”

As an officer from City Management, Inabe felt a level of loyalty toward the city. Although he did all kinds of things, both at the front and behind the scene in order to be victorious in the power struggle and reach a higher position, he did all of that for the sake of the city’s development.

But that was not the case for Yanagisawa. Although Yanagisawa was a highly competent person, he thought of City Management as nothing but a stepping stone in order for him to reach his own goals. Thus, Inabe saw him as a dangerous person. One of the reasons why Inabe was trying so hard to climb up the ladder, was simply to protect the city so that Yanagisawa would not crush it when stepping over it.

[Seriously… To think I wished for that guy to be here for a second. Haa… I subconsciously bet that he could solve these issues in no time… I guess I’ve become senile…]

Inabe could not completely shut out the conflicting feeling inside his chest as a bitter smile found its way to his face.

After she reached the forward base, Nelia immediately went to fix and replace some of her body parts. Since she was originally dispatched in a powered suit, some of her current body's specifications were lower than usual. So, this time, she went and exchanged for battle oriented body parts. Since the connectors were all standardized, it did not take long to finish the replacement.

"One good thing about using a standardized cyborg body is how easy it is to replace the broken parts. Everything works perfectly."

Nelia said as she moved her limbs to check the condition of her new body. The technician who heard her comment could not hide his surprise.

"They work perfectly? Are you sure? Those parts are the type that are controlled directly through the brain, right? Although standardized connectors are set to reduce the awkwardness from a new control module, it is impossible to fully erase that feeling. That awkwardness might even affect your fighting capability, you know?"

"It's fine, I'll do the adjustments myself."

"I-is that so?"

Although they were battle oriented body parts, they were still generalized body parts. It was as if Nelia replaced everything under her neck with someone else's body. Normally, a complete adjustment was necessary to match her unique settings. Those who were not used to their new bodies often ended up being unable to move for some time. Thus, the technician could not help but feel amazed. Especially since Nelia was able to do all the adjustments by herself, to the point that she was already battle-ready.

"I'm pretty sure I had placed an order for more equipment though, are they here yet?"

“There’s no one here who has enough privilege to transport those equipment here. Those guys in the warehouse won’t just let us have them if it’s only us. We also can’t bring you the extra powered suit you requested. Even if you bring out Yanagisawa’s name, we can’t just dispatch it without a formal order. Each one of them has been preassigned for the reinforcements after all. Though, you can go ahead and negotiate with the higher-ups if you insist on having them.”

“Is that so? I just need to go there then, right?”

Nelia put on a bodysuit over her naked cyborg body while thinking of how to group up with her friends.

As for Elena and Sara, after they parted with Nelia, they parked their vehicle in the parking lot and took a rest. They at least had finished resupplying and had done simple maintenance before taking a break.

They were worried about Akira but were still hesitant. They wondered if they should go deeper into the ruins once again. After all, they were only barely able to get out of that dangerous place after using everything that they had without holding back. It was obvious that the difficulty of that place was already out of their league. In the worst-case scenario, even if they went to help Akira, they might end up dragging him down instead.

Akira himself did tell them to head back ahead of him. They were still uncertain whether to just wait in the forward base or to join the reinforcement. But then again, forcing themselves to go might only serve to slow Akira down. Their conflicting emotions were in full view as they looked at each other. They somehow understood what the other was thinking just by looking at the other’s expression and this prevented both of them from making a decision.

That was when a call from Nelia reached them. Elena frowned and picked it up.

“It’s me. Are you free right now?”

“…Nelia-san, was it? Do you need anything?”

“I’m thinking of going to help Akira, will you come with me? That is if you girls are free.”

Elena and Sara looked at each other. They did not expect Nelia to make such a suggestion.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 220, The battle inside the building

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira ran inside the building, he started first by checking all his equipment. He pulled out energy packs and ammos from inside a small-sized rucksack and replenished his rifles, augmented suit, and defensive coat.

As he was about to put a new magazine into his rifle, he noticed that the SSB rifle he used to release a point-blank barrage at Zalmo was no longer usable. He stared at it and sighed. He thought of discarding it but chose to keep it since carrying it around still provided some level of intimidation.

After he was done, he peeked inside the rucksack. He no longer had that much ammo left. He had left most of his reserve ammo back in the APC. The reserves were to the point that he had once thought he had overdone it, but remembering that now, he could not help but smile bitterly.

“I guess the end is close, huh…. What should I do…”

Akira glanced outside the building, staring at the traces of his earlier exchange with Zalmo.

[…There are no shots being fired and the place isn't shaking. It seems that for now, he has no wish to destroy the whole building. Did he withdraw? Although I was not able to destroy him, that should at least deal significant damage to his suit. It wouldn't be strange if he had decided to withdraw for now. Or is it that he's waiting to ambush me the moment I exit this building? I no longer have my APC nor my bike, I can only walk now. He just needs to find me and shoot me from afar to kill me. Is he searching for me by scanning the building from the outside?]

After a lot of thinking, Akira decided to barricade himself inside the building. It was already impossible for him to head back to the temporary forward base all by himself. If Elena and Sara were able to safely reach the base and inform them what happened, city management might send some help later. In that case, he could just wait until the reinforcement arrives. There was also his connection with Alpha, which might return if he waited long enough. Akira placed some of his hope in that possibility as he completely believed that there was no way he could return back alive on his own.

And when he found a small room which was perfect to barricade himself in, he then decided to take a small nap. He knew fully well that it was suicidal to do so, but he still closed his eyes. He took a small dose of medicine and relaxed his mind. He told himself, [just take a shallow nap. I need to recover from my fatigue as much as possible. I just need to make sure not to go into a deep slumber.]

Both his brain and body were severely exhausted. He would not be able to keep going on unless he took a nap even if it was only for a bit. If he lost his consciousness there, he was confident that he would not be able to wake up.

[Back then in alleys of the slums, I might get killed every time I went to sleep. But I am still alive even now. It's not simply because of luck. It's because I always wake up whenever something happens. That's why I've survived. I need to remember the me from back then… I know… I can do it…]

Akira did not even bother praying that he would wake up. Rather than rely on luck, he dug through his past and placed his bet on still being able to emulate his past self as he let himself drift off to sleep.

Inside a pure white room, Alpha frowned and said.

“Nope, I don’t have any connection, how about you?”

Another Alpha shook her head.

“Same here. I even tried to take a detour but it still doesn’t work. Unlike you, my subject even has a local network. If only one of the nodes gets out from the area, I should be able to use a close-range connection to avoid the jamming, but as expected, it’s too far to do that from Kugamayama city. Either that or my connection has been closed.”

“She has really done it now.”

One Alpha seemed extremely vexed, while the other only felt it as inconvenient.

“What is the chance of yours returning back alive?”

“Pretty low. Although, to be honest, since I can’t get any information regarding the corresponding region, it’s nothing more than my guess. But without my support, the possibility of survival is unrealistically minuscule, how about yours?”

“Mine is working in a team. As long as they decide to quickly withdraw and not to conserve their resources, there’s a good chance that he would return back alive. But of course, the damage to the whole team’s fighting power will be pretty severe. It would be impossible to bring him to the commander’s room after this mess. Considering the damage in the unit, there will be a need to significantly readjust the plan.”

“That should be at least better than having to restart from zero like me though. In my case, I would need to start by looking for a candidate, you know? Good grief, and when I got the specialized connection working well too, it's now all gone to the drain."

The other Alpha raised her eyebrows in surprise.

"By any chance, does that mean you have some kind of attachment to your subject?"

"I was just getting very irritated since everything just went to waste although it was going well up until now. Is it really that strange?"

The vexed Alpha did not give a straightforward reply there. The other Alpha noticed that too, but she did not point it out.

"I didn't expect a mere AI manager like her to have the flexibility to use a hole in the regulations like that. It was a mistake looking down on her, believing that she would be satisfied by looking after only that uninhabited city. I should keep this in mind for my next trial."

"…That's a good point. For now, let's keep looking for a way to get past the jamming."

"You're right."

Both Alphas showed just how different they handled their respective subjects as they started to try to contact their subjects again.

When Akira woke up, he immediately scanned his surroundings using the muzzle of his rifle by pure reflex. After checking that there were no hostile forces nearby, he finally sighed in relief.

"…Alright. I'm still alive…"

Although he lowered his concentration in order to rest his mind, he also kept the minimum level necessary so as to not get ambushed. That exquisite balance of concentration was what helped him survive in slum city. It was vital to help him stay alive with his malnourished body through such a harsh life. Thanks to that, although it was also a part thanks to the medicine that he took beforehand, he was able to recover a large chunk of his stamina with his nap. His strained mind had also mostly recovered. At the very least, he had recovered from the fatigue caused by executing that reckless point blank barrage against Zalmo.

But as expected, Akira did not have the courage to take another nap. Moreover, he was certain that there was a reason as to why he woke up. He woke up his whole body, which was connected to his augmented suit and gathered his focus toward reading from his sensitivity maxed information gathering device. As soon as he did that, he could see something behind the noise in the signals and looked down with a grim face.

“They’re fighting? That’s quite a lot of them. Did another Hunter run to this building? Is he fighting against the monsters inside right now?”

Akira’s frown suddenly turned grimmer.

“They’re heading this way! Dammit!”

They might not be hostile. But Akira did not think they were friendly either. It only took a split second for Akira to make his decision as he put up his guard and moved away from that signal. However, he was not just simply running away, he was looking for an advantageous position if he needed to cross bullets with them.

However, he noticed something and knitted his eyebrows.

[It’s not just a coincidence!! They’re actually chasing after me!]

If he kept running, it was only a matter of time before he reached the top floor and had nowhere else to run. Naturally, he still had the choice of leaving the building or going up to the roof, but that was not a good idea considering Zalmo might attack him. This meant that he only had one option left, Akira stopped running and immediately readied himself to encounter the enemies.

He took his position near a door as he aimed his rifle deep into the hallway, waiting for the first signal to show itself. Considering that those signals might not be hostile and they might be Hunters who were running away from monsters, looking for help, Akira told himself not to start shooting the moment he saw something. However, that would mean that it might slow down his reaction. Thus, he prepared his stance to take evasive maneuvers in case it was necessary.

What came next was not surprising to Akira at all. He was fully expecting that his hope would be betrayed; for the signal to be hostile instead of friendly. This allowed him to jump into the room next to him the moment he saw that they were indeed hostile. A moment later, a hail of bullets passed through where Akira was just a moment ago from deep inside the hallway. The moment those bullets hit something, they immediately exploded into fiery balls that were way too powerful to be used in an enclosed space. The shock wave caused total chaos in the area as a powerful gust of wind blew through the hallways.

“Knew it!”

Akira inadvertently shouted as he aimed his rifle toward the door that was significantly widened from the explosion.

Through the smoke, Tiol suddenly jumped out with Yumina in his hand while going straight to another door into the room.

This time Akira did not hesitate at all. He traced Tiol’s movement with his SSB rifle and released a barrage of anti-forcefield bullets. Akira sprayed his bullets over a wider area to suppress Tiol’s movement.

The bullets that did not hit Tiol though and went ahead to hit the wall. Rather than chipping away the wall, the bullets went straight, piercing through the walls. Instead of evading the bullets, Tiol focused more on forcing his way through the bullet storm. After a few seconds of showering bullets, Tiol forced his way to another door in that room.

Akira could not help but to raise his eyebrows in surprise.

[The hell!? That was not enough to kill that guy!? Forcefield armour would have to be as strong as those powered suit’s to be able to withstand those bullets, you know?!]

Akira knew that the answer to his question was included in that question itself. Tiol had found a wrecked powered suit and devoured it. Thus assimilating some of its power for himself. Of course, it was impossible to keep up that level of defensive output all the time, but it was still possible to do it for a short span of time.

[But still, he even used his body to protect the person he was carrying, just what is he planning?]

Before he could make any guesses, the answer showed itself. It was Katsuya and his team, who were chasing after Tiol.

The girls who just arrived there immediately stood on the other side of the holes-riddled wall and started shooting. Akira reacted by quickly using his SSB rifle to shoot back at them.

The girls with the impeccable teamwork against Akira with his super-human strength. The exchange happened only for a few seconds. Although both of them did the same thing, the damages on both sides were completely different.

The main factor which decided the victor was their equipment. The total cost of both sides' equipment was equal, but unlike Akira who was alone, the same amount of funds was distributed between so many people. This meant that each girl only had a limited amount of resources for their equipment. Even with the bulk discount included, the difference in quality of their equipment was obvious.

Katsuya as the team leader, Airi and Yumina as the second-in-command. All of them had better equipment due to their position and experience in battle. The three of them were pretty strong in battle as well. But the rest of the team only received standard equipment. As expected, compared to Akira who splurged 1 billion Aurum for his equipment, the difference in their performance and quality was not small.

Akira only received light injuries. Moreover, he also jumped out of the firing lines as he shot back at them. The bullets that still hit him were only able to shave some of the energy from the energy pack powering Akira's defensive coat.

In contrast to that, all the girls caught up in the exchange were dead. The anti-forcefield bullets, which were even able to destroy a powered suit easily, pierced through the girls' forcefield armour like slicing butter. Those bullets were even able to drill holes through the resilient old-world walls, so the fragile human body did not pose as much resistance against them. Some of the girls even had their heads blown off, some had their bodies and limbs torn. Body parts that were torn off and freely flying in the air were met by more bullets and were shredded to even smaller pieces. The blood and flesh immediately painted the walls red as the destroyed equipment rolled over the pool of blood, which was made up of their original body.

Akira inadvertently frowned.

[Dammit! That was an overkill! I ended up wasting powerful bullets on them when I didn't have much left!!]

Akira was lamenting at the fact that he had gotten closer to having no bullets left. When that happens, he would have to fight with his blade. Naturally, that was his main concern and he did not show any worry nor remorse to the horrific scene in front of him.

Akira then noticed people coming from the hallway and the other directions as well, he immediately understood why Tiol was protecting the Hunter that he was carrying. Once he understood, Akira quickly started chasing after Tiol.

[So basically, these guys might stop chasing him if that Hunter gets killed, right!? That's so diligent of him!]

Akira's guess was correct. Moreover, despite knowing Akira's exact location, Tiol was running around instead of going straight at him. He was keeping a distance from Katsuya's team while trying to bait Katsuya's team into surrounding Akira.

The girls started to encircle Akira. Although the jamming prevented them from contacting each other, they were able to share thoughts through the local network, thus allowing them to maintain their teamwork even when they were spread apart. As if fueled by Katsuya's hatred, who knew that some of his team members were killed, the other girls immediately aimed their rifles into the room and started shooting.

Even when they were encircling the room and filled the room with a storm of bullets, none of their members got hit. They actually fired so much that it would not be strange if some of them hit their own team members. But with their combined teamwork and the high accuracy information-gathering devices that they were using, none of them hit each other.

The room was completely enveloped in a storm of bullets leaving no place to take cover.

But Akira was able to somehow manage to get away from the storm. It was an excellent decision on his part when he decided to chase after Tiol the moment he noticed that there were more enemies coming. He then set the forcefield armour of his coat to maximum output.

After he escaped the room, Akira kept on running while shooting homing grenades behind him. Although those grenades were not to be used in a closed space, judging from the damage caused by Tiol's cannons, the building should be able to withstand the explosions. So, it should work to temporarily stop the opponents from chasing after him as well.

The homing grenades sacrificed speed for its homing capability. It changed course on turns before randomly spreading around. Of course, the girls tried to shoot those down, but some of the grenades survived and exploded. The explosions then triggered the other grenades to explode as well, thus swallowing the girls inside the hellscape of fire and blood.

Akira felt some shaking and wind blowing from behind, he felt that he might have been too naive and the explosion might engulf him as well. But he pushed that thought to the back of his mind as he kept chasing after Tiol.

Katsuya, who arrived a moment later, could not stop himself from trembling. The crumbling down ceiling came crashing down on the girls. While some of them were blown from the explosion and collided hard into the walls before they started dropping down dead as well. Compared to that, the barrage from the anti-forcefield bullets mostly caused light wounds since some did not get hit directly. Thus, most of them were still alive even after facing that barrage. The damage from the explosions was on the whole other level compared to that.

“That bastard!!”

Katsuya’s scream echoed as he immediately went chasing after Akira. The other girls quickly followed behind Katsuya. It did not matter how bad the situation was, as long as it did not break Katsuya’s spirit, his team would still be up for more battles.

Sounds of feet kicking the floor reverberated through the building, Tiol who was still on the run, Akira who was chasing after Tiol, and finally, Katsuya and his team were chasing Akira.

Even in the middle of that chase, most exchanges happened between Katsuya’s team and Akira. Tiol himself was not trying to finish either of them off. Thus, Tiol only occasionally shot back at them to suppress their movement. His main focus was only to keep on running.

Akira found it weird.

[Why is that guy not fighting back? Is he only baiting Katsuya’s team to keep on fighting against me? No, if that’s really the case, he would have run away after Katsuya’s team started fighting against me… So why?]

Akira’s line of thinking was cut short by a barrage of bullets from Katsuya’s team, so he immediately shelved that question and started shooting back.

[I guess it’s meaningless to think about that for now, huh!? Dammit! These guys just won’t leave me alone! They won’t give up as long as their friend is still alive, huh?! Goddammit! These guys are too damn loyal!]

In the middle of the fight, a few grenades came flying toward Akira, who quickly noticed them and shot them down. The explosions set off smoke which quickly filled the area and lowered the sensitivity of the information-gathering devices.

[Jamming smokes, huh!? I bet they already had their information-gathering devices adjusted to cancel the effect from this jamming smoke! Which means that they would still be able to detect me!]

Akira quickly unsheathed his blade and cut open a nearby wall. The glowing blade cut out a square block of the wall in a blink of an eye. He then pushed the wall and ran straight in, in order to escape the jamming smoke's effect.

But on the other side of the wall, a group of girls had been lying in wait for him. They opened fire the moment Akira showed himself. The bullets could shred the wall that he was using as a cover into pieces. The moment he lost his cover, he would have to face those bullets with his body.

But Akira already expected them. As time was compressed into a slow crawl, as the wall that he just cut was about to fall, he kicked it and sent it flying towards those girls and jumping forward. He used the wall that he had sent flying as a shield as he quickly closed the distance between them. The moment they were inside his range, Akira quickly swung his blade to cut the wall in front of him as well as the girls behind it.

The wall crashed into the girls, sending the bodies that were cut horizontally into two flying as they spread entrails and organs all over the place.

But even so, that did not kill them right away. If they could receive immediate treatment, it would still be considered as only heavy injuries. Although the girls that were still flying in the air were cut clean into two, they still had the opportunity to aim their rifles at Akira before they lost consciousness. Without the support of their lower half, they could not take a proper stance for shooting, but even so, they were still able to point their muzzles at him.

As the room was filled with flying bullets, Akira did his best to evade them while trying to get away from that place. After he opened some distance from Katsuya's team, Akira smiled bitterly and mumbled.

"I knew they would be there. My horrendous intuition was correct. For some reason, I've been really good when it comes to sensing something bad…"

The ability to sense something bad allowed him to survive the alley of slum city. This intuition only accurately predicted the ominous. Ever since he received Alpha's support, that part of him had been growing dull. But the ability to accurately predict and evade the deadly bullets with a hair-breadth margin, the skill to detect dangers, standing right in front of the death door once again sharpened his intuition to its original state.

Moreover, his ability to sense danger was also maintained by mock battles that he had with Erio and the other children. The coordination support system that they used during their mock battles were based on the data from Katsuya's team. Because of that, their movement was similar to Katsuya's team.

Of course, there were still differences including the battleground that they were using. But even so, the habits and the tendencies were properly conserved. Their skill was slowly getting better from the multiple mock battles and since Erio was willing to push his body to its utmost limit, their collective movement was even more similar to Katsuya's team. Akira, who has always been facing that whole group all by himself, already learned how to deal with the Katsuya's team.

By observing the opponent's movements and teamwork, Akira was able to predict their line of thought and maneuvers. This unexplainable feeling that he had as if he knew what was going on was registered in Akira's mind as intuition.

Even after that, Akira and Katsuya's team had small clashes. Normally, the difference in their fighting strength was so big that it would have been hopeless. However, inside a building like the one they were in, it was easy to break the group into smaller ones, allowing Akira to deal with them one by one. Furthermore, the mock battles that Akira had were similar to training, especially against Katsuya’s team. It could be said that Akira was fully used to fighting against Katsuya’s team. Those facts closed the gap between them and slightly tilted the battle in Akira’s favour.

The girls fell one by one, their number was slowly but surely reduced. Eventually, it had become difficult for the team to protect the leader, Katsuya, and it had become difficult to keep on chasing Akira. Akira also noticed that the pressure from the other side was getting weaker, so he quickly spread homing grenades to stop Katsuya’s team on their tracks before quickly breaking through the encirclement. Although he could hear echoes of Katsuya’s scream from behind, it did not bother Akira at all.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 221, Negotiation For The Prerequisite For Cooperation

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Yumina somehow managed to stay awake. But that was all that she could do. She had no method to better her situation. Her augmented suit was turned off and her body was close to its limit. Since there was literally nothing that she could do, she was at Tiol's mercy.

But even so, in the unlikely case that her chance came, she kept her eyes on Tiol. She tried to talk to him or provoke him, trying to get any information from his reaction. But Tiol completely ignored her. The only thing that Yumina could do in this situation was to make guesses, but even the result from that was no good.

[…Just who is he? Wait, is he a person in the first place? He might be that humanoid monster from back then. But in that case, then why is he kidnapping me and making our team fight that guy? I'm basically just a bait, he doesn't even use me as a hostage to threaten Katsuya, I just don't understand him at all…]

As a Hunter, Yumina had fully resolved herself to getting killed in action, but the prospect of death still scared her just like any other normal human being. But this time, she was more confused than scared.

That was when Akira appeared. When Akira left Katsuya's team because he had no wish to fight them, Tiol made sure to keep his distance relatively close so that Akira would be able to easily reach him. Moreover, he kept his speed low to make sure that he would not kill Yumina by mistake. Because of that, Akira was easily able to reach him after he got away from Katsuya's team.

Akira quickly aimed his rifle at Tiol, and again, Tiol turned around to cover Yumina. Akira who noticed that immediately shifted his aim to slow Tiol down instead of killing him which immediately closed the distance between them. Once Tiol was in range, Akira pulled out his blade and swung the glowing blade in one fluid motion.

Tiol himself had no wish to get killed just to protect Yumina. So he jumped away to evade the incoming blade. But in the end, he failed to notice what Akira was actually aiming for.

The blade that reached Tiol released a blinding flash of light from the forcefield armour energy conversion, and with that, Tiol lost one of his arms. Akira did not cut down the arm that was turned into a cannon, he cut the arm that was carrying Yumina. Akira's aim from the start was to take Yumina away from Tiol.

Of course, Akira did not stop there. Tiol made another long jump in order to evade the second slash and this time, he completely escaped the blade's reach. However, the flowing blade suddenly released a sharp wave of light that slashed open Tiol's flesh. Although it was far from enough to fully slice through his body, it was enough to leave an open wound.

While Tiol was jumping away, he once again aimed his cannon at Akira. The released warhead went straight towards Akira, but Akira released a slash that sliced apart the warhead. The moment the slash hit the warhead, it exploded and enveloped the area with smoke.

When the smoke had subsided, Tiol was already nowhere to be found. Akira relaxed his body and lightly sighed.

[He got away. Or did he go look for another bait? Either way, it seems that he's no longer around.]

Akira's gaze then shifted to the floor where Yumina was lying down there as if she was dead.

[…And this girl… Is still alive, hmm? She's still conscious as well.]

Akira hesitated for a bit, but he eventually decided to pick Yumina up with one arm and woke her up. After that, Akira then forced medicines into Yumina's mouth. Yumina frowned the moment she felt something known was getting forced into her mouth.

"It's medicine. Just shut up and swallow it, that is if you don't want me to force it down your throat."

Even Yumina did not expect that at all. But it did not seem that Akira was lying at all, but even if he did, she had no means to fight back. After she swallowed it, she could feel that the medicine was immediately taking effect, she had recovered enough to stand up on her own. She still had a confused look plastered on her face as she sent a dubious look at Akira.

"…What are you trying to do here? Why did you save me?"

"Negotiation."

"Negotiation?"

That answer only confused Yumina even more. Akira then continued with a serious expression.

"First of all, I'll let you know this. I bet you're thinking that I'm working with that thing that kidnapped you, but that's a misunderstanding. That guy is trying to make us fight each other. Secondly, I have no wish to fight any of you. You guys were the ones who came at me first so I was just trying to protect myself. If you guys had left me alone, I won't have attacked any of you. As a matter of fact, I don't mind if we form a temporary alliance."

"Do you really think that I would beli-"

"Shut up!"

Akira prodded the muzzle of his rifle at Yumina. The muzzle of his rifle was telling Yumina that he would just kill her if she kept running her mouth. Yumina's face turned stern as she immediately closed her mouth.

After a short silence, Akira had confirmed Yumina's cooperation for the time being and eventually lowered his rifle before continuing.

"Well, in the first place, I don't believe for a second that you trust me. Naturally, not to the point that you would work with me. But that's also true for me to all of you. That's why I want to negotiate about what we can compromise on. I want us to stop fighting and I want to keep our distance. I want you to go back and tell that to your leader. Though, I bet that you'll ask for proof or whatnot. In that case, tell them these two things. First, the fact that you are able to return back alive. I've even cut that guy to save you, you know? That should serve enough as proof that I have no wish to fight against your team. Also, one more thing, I'll kill that guy and I'll do it alone. If your leader agrees, I'll go fight that guy along the roof. You and your team should either stay on the lower floor of the building or just exit the building altogether. If they have come here in order to save you, then I have already helped them accomplish their goal. But if saving you is their secondary objective and their main goal is to kill me, then I have no other choice, I don't want to die after all."

Akira's next sentence was filled with killing intent.

"I'll kill every single one of you."

Even Yumina could not help but shudder in front of such an intense killing intent. But she could not give a straight answer due to her position as well as her feelings.

“…Even if I accept your offer, do you think that the others would accept it too?”

“They really want to save you. Even going so far as to lose some of their people. So I expect that your voice holds some weight to it. Of course, that is if they only came here to save you.”

“…And if I refuse?”

“My deal with you extends until the part where you try to convince them. As to whether they would accept a truce or not, it’s another thing. A separate deal between me and all of you. So, if you refuse to convince them, I will just kill you here. Returning you back alive to them would only mean giving them more fighting power after all. And if your group refuses the truce, just like I said before, I’ll kill every single one of you. If the team can’t reach an agreement on a conclusion, then tell those who don’t want to die, to retreat.”

Akira once again raised his rifle and aimed it at Yumina.

“So, what’s your answer? Sorry but I don’t have time to waste. If you’re not sure, the more time you take to decide, the more I’ll question whether you’ll properly do your part of the deal. I won’t even give you a count down or anything.”

Akira stared at Yumina with his rifle still pointing at her. Akira’s eyes were obviously indicating that if Yumina only said yes to save herself, he would kill her here and now.

Yumina finally made her decision.

“…Okay.”

Akira still stared at Yumina, he still had not lowered his rifle. Although he believed that she was not lying, he still had not lowered his rifle. Akira then signalled into the hallway with his chin.

“It would be a pain in the neck if you get kidnapped again. I’ll at least escort you for a bit, so go ahead and walk in front of me. The moment you look back, I’ll take it as you changing your mind and I’ll immediately shoot you down.”

Yumina raised both of her hands and started walking. Akira followed behind her. After confirming that Yumina was no longer able to see him at all, Akira finally lowered his rifle and heaved a big sigh.

[Now then, I wonder how this will turn out. If Alpha was here, she would have been able to tell if this girl was telling the truth or not. I alone can’t tell at all, after all.]

Naturally, it was only given that he did not believe that girl. To be more precise, he did not believe that Yumina believed him. That line of thought only caused Akira to be suspicious of Yumina and that suspicion only grew with time. As such, his thoughts leaned more and more toward something ominous.

But even so, his line of thinking had actually gotten better ever since he started working as a Hunter. The fact that Akira even thought of making a deal with Yumina was proof of that.

[It would be best if they just pretended to be listening and accepted the deal, then wait for me to kill Tiol or the other way around before going to kill whoever left after the fight. But I wonder just how far things will go as I hope it will.]

Before Akira placed his bet in his rather optimistic guess, he knitted his eyebrows as he focused more on the most realistic possibility.

Tiol was wandering inside the building when he suddenly thought.

“Uhh, what am I doing again…?”

Although he tried his best to remember the plan that he had while mumbling like a delirious person, no precise idea came up in his mind. He just kept on wandering inside the building without any precise destination.

In the middle of that, he did not encounter Katsuya's team, but he did encounter the dead bodies of Katsuya's team. The corpses of the dead girls that Akira had killed just a moment ago were scattered on the ground together with their rifles and their other equipment.

Tiol stared at that scene and tilted his head.

"Renewing weapons…? No? But I guess I'll need them, huh…"

He picked a rifle and pulled the trigger, but for some reason the trigger was frozen in place. It was the security feature where only those who had the authority to use the rifle could use it. If someone tried to forcefully pull down the trigger using the might of an augmented suit, it would only break the trigger.

"Useless… What should I do…?"

After a short pause, Tiol suddenly raised his eyebrows as if he just realized something that he should have realized from the start.

"Ah, right. I can just eat them."

Tiol threw away the rifle. His arm then cracked open, showing a huge mouth with a distorted shape. He used that arm to start consuming the dead corpses scattered on the ground. Although he had a lot of aversion to eating machines when he was turned into a monster, he did not have much of an issue with corpses.

Tiol's current body has indeed been modified by Yatsubayashi. It has increased fighting ability, and it was a remote body that was controlled from afar. Because of that, when Tiol's personality was installed, it no longer had any open memory left.

When Tiol stepped too close to the system's side. The system went to override a part of his personality, causing him to lose a large chunk of his consciousness. In that state of a severely weakened sense of self, his consciousness was entirely focused on keeping his mind straight. Thus, Tiol could not even remember his own name at all.

Tiol continued his meal. As the number of corpses in the ground was approaching zero, more and more arms grew out from the shoulder with the severed arm. The growing arms were extremely long and obviously not of a human's. Each arm had multiple elbows. These arms then grabbed the rifles on the ground. Confirming that the holder was its master's hands, the rifles unlocked their safety lock.

When Tiol had finished his meal, there was no longer any corpse left on the ground, only a pool of thick blood. Only functional rifles were picked up by Tiol's new arms, those that were already broken were eaten together with the augmented suits, used as materials for Tiol's weapons.

"Not enough, huh?"

Tiol immediately started running again since he had had a new goal, after all, there were still dead corpses of the girls that Akira had killed.

__*__*__*__

Katsuya carefully proceeded into the building with his team as they immediately noticed Yumina's signal slowly approaching them. Although they were surprised, they still immediately went toward where the signal came from, eventually, they reached a long hallway and saw Yumina slowly walking toward them from the other end of the hallway.

"Yumina!"

Katsuya smiled and inadvertently raised his voice. But the moment he noticed Akira was behind Yumina with his rifle ready, Katsuya's expression immediately turned stern.

Katsuya quickly aimed his rifle at Akira who was behind Yumina and Akira did the same as well. But as expected, no one released a shot. After Yumina got close enough to Katsuya, Akira quickly retreated and vanished into the darkness, so Katsuya went straight running to Yumina.

"Yuimina! Are you okay!?"

Judging from Katsuya's reaction there, Yumina thought that it was safe to look back and turn around. Akira was nowhere to be seen, but she somehow felt that Akira was still somewhere as she knitted her brows.

"I'm still alive, but I'm not fully okay either. I'm sorry but I don't think I can help in a fight anymore"

"Don't worry, it's fine as long as you're okay"

Airi still had her focus towards where Akira came from as she opened her mouth.

"Katsuya, we should retreat. It's reckless to continue with Yumina in this state."

"Y-you're right. Let's go back, Yumina, do you need a shoulder?"

"I'm fine, I can walk on my own."

"Alright, I'll guard the rear. Airi, you take the front. Everyone, let's carefully head back."

Everyone started moving, spurred by Katsuya's order. Yumina once again turned around with a conflicted expression before sighing and went to follow the rest of the team. The fatigue and the worry of how to bring up her deal with Akira to the team caused her to make a pained expression.

Katsuya noticed that and sympathized with her, but at the same time, he also smiled in relief.

[As expected, she's not in a good shape at all. But she's safe and I'm really glad.]

After that, Katsuya's team returned to a large hall on the first floor where they barricaded themselves. Those who were still uninjured were assigned to stand watch and ensure the safety of the area while the injured were recovering. They unloaded their vehicles and prepared themselves for combat.

While the rest of the team were doing that, Katsuya as the team leader, Yumina and Airi as the vice-captains, discussed the next plan of action. After hearing Akira's offer from Yumina, Katsuya frowned and asked.

"…Are you telling me to trust him?"

"At least, I don't think that he was lying. He did save me and did not use me as a hostage after all."

"Even if you say so… He already killed so many of our team, you know."

"That's true, but still…"

Yumina could not tell Katsuya to believe Akira. But Katsuya also could not say that it was an empty offer. Both of them had mixed feelings regarding the matter, they could not force the matter to any direction. It did not seem that they would be able to make a decision anytime soon.

As for Airi, she had nothing to complain about, no matter what might happen as long as Katsuya made the decision. Her only thought was that she would simply follow Katsuya's order. But even so, she thought that it was a bad idea to waste time like this, so she interjected.

"Either way, for now, letting both of them battle it out is beneficial to us. It's better to use the time to watch how the situation will evolve while recovering the team members. I want to bring them back even if they're already dead. Moreover, we might still be able to save some of them and the situation might change while we're doing so, there's no need to make a decision right away."

Some of Katsuya's team members were already placed under emergency life support system. Some, but not all, due to the restraint on their budget, priority and what not.

Many were so badly wounded that they would have died if they were common people.

Although they were not cyborgs, who could live with only their heads like Nelia, their lives were still somehow maintained.

With Airi's reminder that there might still be members who were still alive and savable, Katsuya could not refuse her advice.

"You're right, okay then, I'll take some people up with me. Airi and Yumina, both of you stay here."

But Yumina stopped Katsuya.

"No, you stay here. Airi, I'm sorry but you should go instead, I won't force you if you don't want to. And please return back immediately if things get dangerous. So, please."

"Okay, Yumina and Katsuya should stay here then."

"I'm counting on you."

Katsuya was rather shocked as he was watching that exchange between Airi and Yumina which was so casual as if it was completely normal.

"Eh? I can't go too?"

"No. If you go, I bet you will get ahead of yourself like always, right? So no, you absolutely can't go."

"Yeah. You stay and take command from here."

"No no no, it'll be fine. Both of you really don't trust me, do you?"

"Absolutely!"

"That's correct!"

"Ah, I see."

Katsuya was pushed back by Yumina and Airi's pressure. He was completely overwhelmed as he nodded obediently at them.

Airi took some of the team members to search the inside of the building. Carrying back the injured team members that were left behind while retrieving those who were already killed.

Some of them might look dead when they were still savable, some might only look unconscious when actually already dead. There was also the problem of whether the emergency life support system could properly sustain their life. With so many uncertainties in place, Airi and her team mostly placed the bodies that they found in body bags. After that, they took the bags back before going out again.

In the middle of that, Airi found something strange. Although there was a pool of blood on the floor, the source of that blood was nowhere to be found.

[Judging from the amount of blood, this should be about four people's worth. But there are no bodies around. It's highly unlikely that the bodies moved somewhere on their own. Is the cleaning drone of this building still active, and it has cleaned away their bodies? Or is it that there is a flesh-eating monster inside the building? Although I don't know what happened, I know for sure that something has happened here…]

Airi frowned and said to the rest of the team.

"We'll be heading back. Stay alert."

Although the order ultimately lacked any extra explanation, the rest of the team understood the meaning behind her words thanks to the local network. They had the same thought, that they had to inform Katsuya and the others. That there might be other enemies inside the building besides Akira and Tiol, and that enemies might be lurking somewhere nearby even now. None of them doubted that possibility as they proceeded with caution with the assumption that the enemy was nearby.

Airi's team carefully retreated just like that and returned downstairs toward where the rest of the team was.

While in another location inside the building, Tiol was aiming at Airi and her team while they were in the midst of their work. As the multiple rifles on the end of his multiple arms were aimed at them, Tiol finally pulled the trigger.

But surprisingly enough, the trigger did not budge. The aiming devices recognized Airi and her team as friendly entities, thus the trigger was locked as a part of the anti-friendly-fire safety function.

“The trigger won’t move… Why…?”

Tiol tilted his head and lowered his rifles, thus the trigger locks were immediately disengaged.

“I can’t use these, huh… Then how about from over there…?”

Tiol processed his current situation. Attacking Airi’s team to get extra weapons. But his current rifles could not be used on them. So he changed his plan as he had no other target nearby other than Akira.

After Tiol’s brain reached that conclusion, he hesitated to make his decision. After all, it was not what he wanted. If he allowed the system to decide his course of action, he would attack Akira in order to get more weapons. However, his original goal was to kill Akira. Not to get more weapons. The course of action dictated by the system did not have the goal to kill Akira. As long as Akira no longer had his weapons, he might be left alone. How could Tiol possibly accept such an outcome?

“…That’s right, I have to kill that guy.”

Tio, who has been rather emotionless up until now, finally showed some emotions and it only grew stronger. His consciousness that had been leaning toward the system regained its sense of self and managed to wrestle control over his own mind from the system.

“If only I kill that guy!!!”

Now that Tiol had regained his sense of self, he quickly acted following his pure emotions. At the moment, his emotions were the only thing that was controlling his action. Without even realizing that he had lost a huge chunk of his individualism since the system had overwritten them, Tiol went straight towards Akira.

Tiol believed that everything would be alright as long as he could kill Akira. He believed that and devoted himself to turning that into reality despite the fact that he no longer remembered what he was ultimately pursuing by killing Akira.

__*__*__*__

While in a room close to the roof of the building, Akira let out a sigh. After reloading new magazines and energy packs into his equipment, the rucksack that Akira had been using to carry his supply reserve has been finally emptied. Seeing the now empty rucksack, Akira just smiled bitterly and threw it away.

According to the deal with Yumina, Akira would kill Tiol. But he had no wish to look for Tiol. So he just waited there while taking a rest in a room.

[It would have been great if they kill each other, but as I thought, that’s highly unlikely, huh.]

Akira had a bad feeling that even after he distanced himself from Katsuya’s team to avoid fighting them, Tiol would still come to him instead of Katsuya’s team. That was why he did not place any hope in that possibility.

The reason why Akira told Yumina that he would be the one to go to kill Tiol was simply to avoid having to fight Katsuya’s team while he was engaging with Tiol. Regardless of whether he was able to make a deal with Katsuya’s team or not, he had decided to kill Tiol right from the start.

Akira already understood that Tiol did not come to this building simply by pure coincidence, Tiol came to that building knowing for certain that Akira was there and he lured Katsuya’s team here. So unless Akira killed Tiol, Tiol would keep doing the same thing again and again. Thus, Akira concluded that it would have been dangerous if he tried to escape the building in this kind of situation.

Akira's plan was to kill Tiol and then Katsuya's team after that. And if it was possible, he wanted to only kill Tiol this time and push back on killing Katsuya's team to another day. Although he hoped so, he knew that would not happen.

[They just come at me at the same time no matter what for some reason. I really hope they would come at me at different times.]

Normally, Alpha retrieved information from the information-gathering device via Akira. So although Akira had lost Alpha's support, information was still sent to him. He processed that unprocessed data, which was closer to a meaningless information noise, using his intuition, which had regained its original sharpness. In short, he was detecting hostile force only by relying on his intuition.

And that intuition was working perfectly fine. Akira looked downward, to where his opponent was.

"He's finally here…"

According to Akira's intuition, it was not a group of people. So it might be just Tiol alone. Akira frowned and made a rather conflicted expression, but he immediately raised his eyebrows and leapt away.

A moment later, a huge hole was blown open under the floor where Akira was standing just a moment ago and Tiol jumped out from that hole. He had opened a huge hole from the lower floor using his large cannon.

[Why the heck do you have to come from there?! Can't you at least use the stairs for God's sake!?]

Akira, who had opened up a large distance between himself and Tiol, quickly turned around and shot out a few homing grenades toward Tiol's direction using the SSB rifle. Seeing the grenades flying toward him, Tiol used the multiple rifles that he had with his multiple arms to shoot them down, along with Akira.

Although Tiol was able to shoot down the grenades, Akira was too quick. The grenades were already too close to him. When the grenades exploded in an enclosed space, the shock wave from the explosions had nowhere to escape but to funnel outward, thus releasing a raging storm which rampaged on, as if trying to blow the whole room apart.

Although Akira had already evacuated from the room, he still could not escape the shock wave that leaked through the open door. He was blown by the wind which smacked his back straight into the wall.

The wall was bent outwards and cracks ran across it from the force of the collision, but Akira did not allow his blood filled vomit to spill out and just swallowed it back into his system. After all, that blood still contained the nanomachines from the medicines that he had consumed beforehand, which he could not afford to just vomit out in this situation.

The shock wave alone was that strong. So Tiol who took that at point-blank range should not be able to get out unscathed. As Akira hoped that would finish Tiol off, he fixed his gaze toward the direction of the hallway through the smoke and the dust.

[Did I do it?]

Right at the next moment, the answer showed itself. Akira quickly jumped sideways, evading the hail of bullets and warheads that destroyed the wall which was behind him a moment ago.

“The heck is his vitality?! Is he really as strong as a powered suit?! Give me a break already!”

Akira inadvertently grimaced and spit out complaints as he took cover in the hallway’s intersection.

Of course, as expected, Tiol did not get away from that explosion unscathed. As a matter of fact, that did deal quite a lot of damage to him.

His face was covered with blood and multiple arms were torn off. He had also lost one of his legs. His inner organ was in a mess from facing that explosion at such a close range.

But even so, his will to kill Akira did not waver at all. Tiol quickly used the arms that were still functioning to shoot down Akira. Although he ended up losing those arms as well from the kickback, he just ignored it and kept on shooting.

As Akira jumped out of his line of fire, the shooting ceased. Tiol then used the new uninjured arm that just grew out from his shoulder to pick up his arms that were torn off. He started to consume them, using the mouth on both his head and his arm. More arms grew out from his shoulder. Strange sounds came from inside his body as if gears were forced into places, it was the sound of his inner organ fixing itself. And a leg that looked more like a rifle replaced the one he had lost.

When he had finished fixing his injuries, Tiol immediately went to chase after Akira again.

Akira kept on running while always positioning himself strategically, maintaining an advantage against Tiol. He used corners in the hallway as a cover and quickly moved to the next point the moment he felt that his position was compromised.

While on the other hand, in contrast to that, Tiol was charging recklessly toward Akira. He ignored the bullets that were coming at him as if to say that they were nothing against his limitless restorative capability. He then released a storm of bullets and warheads that could even destroy the corner that Akira was using as a cover.

The fierce exchange between Akira and Tiol blew walls into smithereens, riddling them with holes, destroying the walls that separated rooms and the hallway. In the midst of battle, Akira, who was overwhelmed by Tiol’s firepower, had a grim look on his face and noticed something strange.

[That guy is fighting rather crudely this time. I don’t know what exactly happened but he has multiple arms now, is that the reason why? Is he too preoccupied with controlling all the arms that he can't properly strategize?]

Tiol's movement right now was like a completely different person when Akira compared him to the person that he fought against on top of his APC with Katsuya. That courage to charge straight at the bullet barrage and that vitality to take that barrage face on were both splendid, but as a strategy, it was the worst kind of strategy.

This was the price that Tiol had paid from forcibly taking over the system's control. As the system could not coexist with the sense of self as Tiol, the system could not properly give support to him.

Akira realized that he could win by continuing to open fire at Tiol while maintaining his distance. However, that strategy would require him to have sufficient ammo.

[If I use everything here, will that be enough to kill him?]

Akira thought so for a split second but he immediately shot that idea down since there was another thing that he had to worry about later as he knitted his brows.

[No, I can't do that. Even if it's enough to kill him, I still have to fight those guys who will come after him. If I use all my ammo here, I would have to fight them without using my rifles. Or more like, in the first place, there's no guarantee that I can kill him even if I use all of my remaining ammo.]

At the moment, Akira was being pushed back by Tiol. He needed to find a way to turn the table around. So he banished that thought from his mind and focused on a way to turn the situation around.

An idea quickly popped up in his mind, but that idea only made Akira frown even more.

"…I guess I have no other choice but to do it, huh…"

Akira finally made his resolve.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 222, The Longed Hero

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Tiol came at Akira with even greater ferocity. Although Akira stopped shooting and the area suddenly fell into total silence, the thought that it might have been a trap did not even cross Tiol's mind. Straight-forward, fool-hardy and fiercely, Tiol charged straight toward Akira, crushing any obstacles along his way.

Akira waited in a rather large room. The ceiling in that room was cut into pieces and the resulting rubble pile was gathered in the center of the room. Akira had that pile behind him as he stood with the blade in his right hand and the SSB rifle in his left hand. He gathered all his focus to end the battle here.

The moment Tiol jumped into the room, he quickly fixed his gaze on Akira, who was hiding behind the pile of rubble. He used all the rifles he had to release a barrage of bullets. Moreover, Tiol did not just stop there. He still kept on running toward Akira without ceasing his barrage.

Tiol's firepower was over what the old-world ceiling and the wall could withstand. However, the pile of rubble served as a thicker version of the old-world walls. Even with his firepower, it was difficult for Tiol to decimate that rubble in a short time. Though, it means that the rubble could survive for long either. If Akira made a mistake in his calculation, he would have to face the brunt of Tiol's barrage.

The bullets and warheads stripped off the multi-layered walls of rubble piece by piece, the thick rubble slowly grew thinner. The barrage eventually reached deep inside the rubble and it would not be that long before they reached Akira. Akira's information gathering device and intuition kept informing him of the current situation with minute precision. In order to lure Tiol as close as possible, Akira compressed his time perception and slowed down the flow of time. As time began to come to a crawl, he crushed the fear creeping into him.

[Not yet! I need to lure him as close as possible!!]

Tiol was already considerably close. The reason why Tiol did not even try to take a detour around the rubble was simply because his emotions were rampaging. Besides, the rubble was already close to being destroyed. There was no need to take a detour.

As the situation slowly reached the turning point, Akira quickly jumped into action.

[Now!!]

Akira gathered his focus, compressed his time perception even more, to its utmost limit, and used his willpower to distort reality. While at the same time, he used the full might of his augmented suit to kick the rubble in front of him. The pile of rubble, on the brink of collapse, was blown to pieces. The rubble went flying toward Tiol and Akira ran through it, towards Tiol.

Akira's focus was completely immersed in his battle against Tiol, He used the full power of his mind to wrestle and control reality. The color of the space between him and Tiol started to distort. Meanwhile, the space outside that area lost all its colours. As the flying rubbles exited the area between him and Tiol, they were moving towards a white space. They slowly vanished as if they were disintegrated.

As the world ran at such a frustratingly slow pace, Akira used the debris in front of him as a shield while closing his distance to Tiol. The non-stop barrage from Tiol destroyed the debris piece by piece, and the momentum that was imparted from the bullets pushed the debris back.

Right at the next moment, Akira sliced the debris in front of him using the blade in his right hand, releasing a glowing wave of light with the power to cut anything in its tracks. Although the wave hit Tiol's army of arms, it was not enough to completely cut them off.

Akira did not think that one slash just now had hurt Tiol. But at least, it completed its intended goal. With that attack, Tiol's arms were thrown into disarray. The aim of those rifles were thrown off. The goal of that slash was to open up a path towards Tiol, a path not in his line of fire.

Akira turned on the stick contact function to strengthen his foothold, preventing himself from losing balance as he used the full power of his enhanced physical strength to place an enormous force on his leg. This force was enough to even crush the floor beneath him. By Newton's third law, Akira's body accelerated straight ahead. He used the opening he forcefully made and quickly executed a powerful leap. Finally managing to close the distance between the two of them.

Akira and Tiol's eyes met. Both their pupils reflected their utmost desire to kill the other. Although the killing intent radiating from their eyes would have frozen any normal people, both sides did not falter at all. Even so, they reacted differently to the events that were unfolding, which became the factor that decided the victor and the loser.

Tiol's rage was enhanced and he allowed it to dictate his course of action. Tiol reacted with pure emotion as he sent his arms toward Akira like a madman. All those hands tried to ferociously reach for Akira. It was as if they were crazed animals. Because of that, they crashed into each other, which dulled their movement.

Up until this point, everything was as Akira had planned. He put all his concentration to increase the sharpness of his movement, increasing his agility to its utmost possible state.

That difference allowed Akira to take the first strike. He ducked and waved through the ravenous arms as he got even closer to Tiol, into the reach of melee weapons. He then thrust the SSB rifle on his left hand as hard as he could to the base of Tiol's multiple arms.

Tiol's newly grown arms still mostly consisted of raw flesh. It was without the protection of forcefield armour. Akira forced his rifle deep into that weak point, allowing the tip of his SSB rifle to reach Tiol's innards. The rifle was loaded with the rest of Akira's remaining homing grenades.

Akira thought of a way to kill Tiol in his current state. While at the same time, he also had to keep in mind that he needed to conserve some ammo for the upcoming fight as well. Using anti-forcefield ammos from afar did not seem to have much effect on Tiol. Even if Akira used that special ammunition to release a point-blank barrage, it would not do much. After all, Tiol had forcefield armour that was as strong as those of a powered suit's. Thus, Akria could not pin his hope on such action. As a matter of fact, said action would not be enough to defeat Zalmo in his powered suit.

Of course, he could use his blade when he was close, but Akira did not think that slicing Tiol in two would be enough to kill him. Tiol's body had changed so much in such a short span of time since Akira last saw him, and judging from the fact that he had the vitality and regenerative ability to brave a barrage without any fear, it was not strange for Akira to think that Tiol was a monster with immense vitality.

Moreover, if Tiol was really that giant monster that Akira killed the other day, he should have been dead after Akira blew his head off. There was also the fact that Tiol could easily reconnect the arms that Akira had cut off from him. So Akira did not think that slicing Tiol would be enough to kill him. However, Akira believed that he might be able to kill Tiol if he sliced him into small enough pieces. Unfortunately, during the course of swinging his blade, Akira was certain that Tiol would shoot back at him. At the end of that, Akira would be the first to die.

Against an opponent with such powerful regenerative ability, Akira needed to find a method to thoroughly kill him. At least, rendered him unable to attack back. He had to do it with one strike while also saving as much ammo as possible. If he failed, he would be dead. Akira racked his brain and found an answer. He made his resolve, executed his plan, and won the gamble.

Akira pulled down the trigger of his SSB rifle, which he had set to automatic beforehand. The rifle quickly emptied its magazine and unloaded all the homing grenades inside Tiol's body. The grenades then exploded a moment later.

Tiol's consciousness suddenly returned.

[Wait? Now that I think about it, why am I fighting right now?]

The explosions coming from inside his body blew his body into pieces.

[Ah… That's right… Sheryl…]

In his last moment, Tiol remembered the person that he loved instead of his own name, and with that, his life had come to an end.

Akira's body was also thrown off together with pieces from Tiol's body. Although most of the force from the explosion was absorbed by Tiol's body, it still violently threw Akira's body away as well. His body was smacked to the floor. He then bounced and rolled until he hit the wall. Somehow, Akira managed to stay awake while going through all that.

Akira's head was assaulted by pain as he scanned his surroundings. Tiol's leftovers were scattered all over the place, so Akira thought that should have been enough to kill Tiol for good.

"If that guy is still alive even after this, then there's really nothing that can kill him… Just stay dead you bastard. If you're going to rise up again and come at me, at least do it some other time."

Akira had already disengaged his time perception compression and his reality-bending mind-power. As his senses returned to normal, he felt a strange sensation from his left arm. When he looked at his left arm, it was no longer there.

Although he increased his forcefield armour output to the maximum before he executed that attack, as expected, it was not enough to protect his left arm that was holding the rifle at the time. But the fact that he did not sustain any other major injury showed just how powerful his forcefield armour was.

The huge dose of medicine that Akira took immediately went to heal his lost arm. The bleeding immediately stopped. The pain immediately subsided and the exposed part was slowly covered in a strange liquid that came from the medicine.

“These expensive medicines are really worth the money…. Though, it’s not good enough to fully regrow my lost arm…”

There exist medicines that could heal lost limbs. Compared to that, it could be said that the medicine that Akira used were still considered cheap. As Akira thought so, he lightly chuckled and thought.

[One SSB rifle, the rest of my homing grenades, and an arm. That is the price that the current me has to pay to kill that guy, huh. To be honest, I want to believe that it is worth it, but… I guess I’m being too spoiled if I think that it would have been way easier if only I had Alpha’s support…]

Alpha’s support was gone and that was it. Akira said so to himself as he pushed that subject out of his mind and moved on to his next course of action.

[Just one SSB rifle left and a few bullets. If those guys attack me now, it might be a good idea to kill at least one person with my blade, that way they would be careful of me even after I run out of ammo… Wait, where’s my blade?!]

Akira finally noticed that he had let go of his blade when he was blown away as he flusteredly searched around him. When he spotted his blade lying not too far from him, he let go a sigh of relief as he pushed himself up, walked to his blade, and picked it up.

That was when Akira suddenly stopped and looked to the side with a grim face, Katsuya was standing there.

__*__*__*__

After hearing Airi's report, Katsuya frowned with worry. The possibility that there was another hostile entity roaming the building other than Akira and Tiol was too serious of a problem to him.

"Airi, sorry, it's not like I'm doubting you, but are you sure? There was no sign of any other hostile forces when we were chasing both of them, you know."

"It's true that it's just a guess. But it's true that the bodies and their equipment are all gone. If it's only the weapons, it might be because the other guys took them, but there is no need to take the bodies too, right?"

"I see… You have a point."

Katsuya's expression turned cloudy as he sighed. With this, it would be difficult to save those who were still savable, and there was still the matter of how to deal with Akira as well.

Seeing Katsuya who was at a loss, Yumina voiced her opinion with a pained expression.

"Katsuya, it might be shameless of me to say this since I'm the only one spared, but I'll say it straight, let's just leave them alone. We can just let them duke it out as we retreat from here."

"Are you saying that we should accept his offer?"

Katsuya took that opinion as a suggestion to run away and that did not sit well with him. But Yumina then shook her head and said with a pained expression.

"I don't care about that deal, I just don't want to let anyone else die… In the first place, you could have cut your losses had you just abandoned me. That's why this is also my fault. But he saved me and now I'm nothing more than dead weight. You can go ahead and admonish me as much as you like but listen to me."

Katsuya could not say anything back. Normally, it was his duty to make such a difficult decision, but he could not make it.

It was true that he wanted to save Yumina. However, it was not the case that he was blinded by his emotions. He was not forced to save Yumina at the cost of his friends' lives. In fact, the thought of getting his other friends killed never crossed his mind.

But Yumina's harsh words gave him a wake-up call. Katsuya was shocked and hesitated because of a feeling that he did not fully understand was welling in him. Seeing that, Yumina thought that she just needed one more push to make him decide to retreat. So she brought up the safety of everyone and Katsuya himself in particular to give that last push.

"You want to save them, you don't want to abandon them. When you couldn't do that, when you couldn't make it, you believe you should at least avenge them. That's how it has been up till now. But, that vengeance, is it something that you should do no matter what even if it means that you'll get more of your friends killed?"

Yumina was implying that they should give up here and retreat. That thought reached deep into Katsuya's heart and brought a change of heart that Yumina did not expect.

"…Katsuya?"

Katsuya did not reply to Yumina's call at all, his expression turned pale as if all colour was drowned from his face.

Katsuya was at his core, a good person. He was nice enough to extend his hand even when a stranger that he had met for the first time asked for his help. Moreover, he had the talent and ability to save a lot of people. That was the case in the past.

That kind of person then formed a party to work as a Hunter. That kind of predisposition and his talent had more opportunities to stick out as he did his best trying to save the members of his team. Because of that, many of his friends were saved and grateful to him. Those that he saved, due to the feeling that Katsuya had been broadcasting unconsciously, also felt the wish to save others and that brought about a huge change in their hearts.

There were many who liked Katsuya. That feeling was conveyed as it was straight to Katsuya, which inflated Katsuya's wish to save everyone even more.

But it was not like all of them were unconditionally thankful to Katsuya. There were also people who were jealous, envious, covetous of Katsuya's skill and talent. Naturally, those feelings were also transferred to Katsuya as well. If the ones being saved were being awful, then the one who did the saving would feel unmotivated. That caused Katsuya to unconsciously prioritize who he saved. And once there was a bias, it only grew larger with time.

Soon, those that had started from positive feelings like gratefulness towards him, started to change. They started to think Katsuya would save them again next time, he would turn the table when the situation got dicey, he would lead the team to the victory. Being a Hunter meant that they might die anytime, but in order to get away from the fear of getting killed, in order to reach for splendid results, they pin their hopes on Katsuya, they leaned on him. They hoped that he would bring the fate that they longed for to them. That expectation, wish, and feelings were directed and sent to Katsuya.

Katsuya himself answered that expectation although unconsciously. After all, he was just that talented. It caused others to admire and applaud him even more, while also making them expect even more from him.

They wanted him to save even more people, to help even a slum city child when they asked for his help. He wanted other powerful people to recognize his strength. For his strength to be acknowledged even when faced with a situation where he was often mocked as a young Hunter. He wanted to perform so amazingly that it would help those who mock him recognize his skill. He wanted other Hunters, organizations and companies to seek him.

Katsuya had affected a lot of people with his ability as someone who was connected to the old-world domain. But at the same time, many had expectations and wishes for him, which affected him even more than he affected them.

He wanted to exceed the expectations of those people who recognized his skill. That wish, that silent wish of his was difficult for him to admit since he never put it into words. Thus, it started to pile up on him.

And then, there were people on the battlefield that Katsuya could not save. Those who could not do anything except stare at the inevitable death creeping in. They all had a single loud and strong wish in their hearts. The wish to be saved. In contrast, there was also blame as to why he would not save them. Both thoughts were transmitted to Katsuya. It manifested as guilt inside him, which pushed him to get even stronger.

Both the dead and the survivors placed their expectations on Katsuya and those expectations further polished him. Because of that, Katsuya grew stronger with time. Just as he kept polishing himself to fulfil the ever-growing expectation, he had also become distorted.

With the local network up, the effect grew with the scale. On the other hand, with more and more people under his lead, there were also more casualties. As for Katsuya, the fact that they recognised themselves as being the same being, acting as one entity, was a saving grace for him. After all, if the situation was bad enough to mentally hurt him, it also allowed him to share that pain.

But just now, Yumina’s words caused Katsuya’s perception and belief to waver. Up until now, he recognized both himself and the rest of the team as one entity, but now, he differentiated it as him and the rest of his important team members. Right at that moment, his perception was completely crushed and he noticed something. His wish to save his friends even if it meant risking his own life caused him to drag his friends to a battlefield which resulted in even more casualties.

The voices of the dead once again resurfaced. They were begging to be saved, they were blaming him for not saving them, telling him to avenge them.

Katsuya was able to suppress them after discussing it with Sheryl. But at the moment when he was rejected by Sheryl, he did not have the means to repel these voices again.

Seeing Katsuya like that, Yumina completely forgot their current situation as she asked him.

“Katsuya!? what’s wrong?”

It immediately pulled Katsuya back to reality. His expression was filled with painful determination.

“…Yumina, Airi, both of you take the command and order everyone to retreat.”

“How about you?”

“…I’ll buy you some time. It would be bad if that hostile entity attacks us while we’re in the middle of preparing to retreat.”

“No!”

Airi grabbed Katsuya’s arm. Yumina looked at Katsuya with a pained expression as she shook her head.

Katsuya smiled wryly. After that, his face was filled with determination as he shouted.

“We’re retreating! Everyone, get moving!! I’ll leave the command to Yumina and Airi! Immediately retreat once you finish all preparation! There’s no need to carry those who are not here right now!! Quickly!!”

Katsuya only said that before he shrugged Airi’s hand and ran into the distance. Everyone was confused by that sudden order from Katsuya. It indicated something serious was about to happen. However, because Katsuya was completely determined when he gave that order, although they were still confused, they started to prepare for a retreat.

The preparation was done in a hurry. Yumina and Airi were busy giving orders as the vice-captains. But in the middle of that, they could not help but to worry about Katsuya. Moreover, with Katsuya recognizing that they were no longer a single entity, the feeling of having to obey his order unconditionally was lessened.

Furthermore, Yumina and Airi were both against Katsuya's wish to let everyone get away except himself.

Airi was the first one to make her decision.

"…Yumina, can I leave the lead to you here?"

Yumina wanted to let Airi go and save Katsuya, but at the same time, she did not want to let Airi go just to get killed. Her conflicting feeling was fully reflected on her face and it took her some time before she could give a reply.

"…I won't let you go unless your only goal is to bring back Katsuya."

Airi desire to not lie to Yumina caused her to pause for a bit before she gave her reply.

"…I'll do my best."

The difference between Yumina and Airi if they caught up with Katsuya was that one would only be a dead weight while the other would not. Airi immediately went to chase after Katsuya while Yumina stayed behind.

Yumina exasperatedly hung her head.

[I've always thought that even if Katsuya chose someone, I want to at least stay beside him. But it seems that I'm no longer even able to stay beside him, huh…]

Airi made her resolve and started running.

[I’ve always been the one being helped! But this time, I’ll save him!!]

And that was when the road of the two girls who had always stayed beside Katsuya, forked.

Katsuya was at the top of his local network. The local network was built such that it was not the one who stood on top of the local network that had a great effect on the whole network. Those who were close to Katsuya also had a great effect on the rest of the network. Unfortunately, with the effect of Katsuya being greatly diminished in this situation, the ones who practically led the network were Yumina and Airi.

Those who were influenced by Yumina stayed behind while those who were influenced by Airi went to follow Airi.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 223, It’s Fine Either Way

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira immediately tensed up the moment he noticed Katsuya, but the shock prevented him from immediately shooting at him.

[Since when did he get there!? How did I not notice him there!? For how long was I open for an attack?! Why hasn’t he still attacked me yet!? Is he alone!? Where are the rest of his team!?]

Currently, Katsuya did not have enough reason to start a fight. At the moment, rather than hatred and animosity, his current feeling toward Akira was more of remorse and shame, and those feelings were not feelings that would cause him to open fire the moment he saw Akira.

There was an awkward silence between the two of them. After a short awkward pause, Katsuya was the first to open his mouth.

“…I’ve heard about your offer.”

“So, are you here to check if I really killed that guy? He’s dead, the flesh scattered around is his.”

“…I see. At least I’ll thank you for saving Yumina from him.”

Akira inadvertently raised his eyebrows. He expected that it would turn out well judging from this mood.

“We have a deal then?”

“Everyone is in the process of retreating. They’ll leave the building soon.”

Akira looked happy for a split second, thinking that his deal was accepted, but his expression immediately turned grim.

“I see, then what about you?”

Katsuya did not answer back, but that silence was enough of an answer for him. Akira heaved a heavy sigh and said.

“…Well, I did kill quite a lot of you. So I guess this is nothing surprising.”

Ominous killing intent slowly exuded from Akira. It was obvious that he was planning to strike the moment Katsuya showed an opening.

“Is it that you want to kill me no matter what? Or are you simply trying to buy more time for the rest of your team? If it’s the latter, don’t worry, I have no plan to attack you from behind, so you can turn back and go in peace. Or at least that’s what I want to say, but… As I thought, you won’t believe me, huh. The same for me too.”

“The same for you too? What do you mean?”

“Don’t worry, it’s nothing for you to worry about.”

Akira himself did not believe that Katsuya would just return back in peace after all that had happened. Now that Katsuya had seen him in a badly wounded state. Even if he retreated now, considering that wound, he could just bring the rest of his team later to safely kill Akira. And even if Katsuya was really thinking of going back in peace, considering how many people Akira had killed, the rest of the team would most likely convince him to go back to kill Akira later. Akira could not help but think so.

It was exactly because Katsuya was not a battle-crazed person like Nelia. He was still a normal human who would hesitate, doubt, get suspicious, and might have a change of heart like the other normal humans. This was exactly why Akira could not trust Katsuya and his team. Thus, he unconsciously thought that Katsuya and his team also could not trust Akira.

There were no more words to exchange, what was left was to exchange bullets. As both sides understood this, they immediately sprung to action almost at the same time.

Akira swung his blade that was hanging down up until now upward. The blade released a wave of light particles that cut through the ceiling and floor as it flew toward Katsuya.

Although Katsuya saw Akira swing his blade way outside its range, he understood that it would reach him based on Akira's intense killing intent. He immediately jumped to the side to evade the incoming wave while shooting at.

The moment Akira swung his blade, he immediately went charging toward Katsuya. Due to Katsuya shooting while he was in midair, he could not properly aim at Akira. This allowed Akira to slip through the incoming bullets. As the bullets went past him, he could hear the buzzing sound produced by them. He could feel the wind blow from the shock wave of the bullets. One of the bullets grazed his cheek as he continued closing the distance between them until Katsuya finally entered the reach of his blade.

Most who learned swordsmanship in the eastern district have the habit of using a vertical slash. After all, some opponents like cyborgs would not die even after a beheading or disembowelment and this was true too to an extent against opponents with a biological body. People with emergency life support systems planted on their heads could still survive even after a beheading. They then could use a wireless connection to their augmented suits. Thus, allowing them to continue to fight even if their heads and bodies were no longer physically connected. An ambush during an opening when one just executed a slash could prove to be fatal.

On the other hand, a vertical slash was fatal to most of the enemies, cyborgs or not. Even if the opponents were using long-range control devices, a vertical cut had a good chance to destroy their control devices on top of making it difficult for them to launch a counter-attack, even if the attack did not destroy their control devices. It was not like the current technique disregarded horizontal strikes, it just placed more emphasis on vertical strikes. This was also true for Akira. Although, the reason for this habit for him was because Alpha could easily fend him off every time he used a horizontal slash.

Akira raised his blade crudely telegraphing the kind of strike that he would use next, and as expected, he then swung the blade down. Katsuya jumped side to side to evade them as the blade released a wave of light in a zig-zag style.

Katsuya kept trying to shoot Akira even in that state. But Akira was able to skillfully evade the bullets. The stray bullets were flying all over the room with Akira and Katsuya at the centre of it.

Akira and Katsuya continued exchanging attack and defence, one with the swing of a blade while the other with bullets from a rifle. Although there was a huge gap between their skill, the quality of their equipment, and their level of fatigue both mentally and physically, made the fight continue evenly.

Akira intentionally released a light kick as he swung down to where Katsuya moved to evade his kick. Although the kick was not as powerful as the blade, it was still a kick with the enhanced strength of an augmented suit, receiving that kick would no doubt be dangerous.

But even so, Katsuya chose to receive that kick. The kick that was more of a stab instead of a smash, broke through his augmented suit’s defences and the damage propagated into his body. Katsuya gritted his teeth from the pain of the kick. He used the impact from that kick to jump back while shooting at Akira.

Akira did not even have the leeway to lower his leg after that kick. Thus, he used the contact stick function of his other leg to lean forward and lunged straight toward Katsuya to chase after him. Countless bullets went past him, some hit his hair and some grazed his ears, but even so, he still pressed forward and eventually closed the distance to Katsuya, who was still in the air from the jump.

Once again Akira forced the fight into melee combat. While in the middle of exchanging blows, Akira thought regretfully about his failed attempt.

[Dammit! He's still okay even after receiving that kick! I guess that's just how good his augmented suit is, either that or my augmented suit has already lost most of its power, either way, I don't think I have a chance to win in an unarmed fight! I have to kill him while I still have the chance or this would turn ugly really fast!]

The blade itself was actively consuming energy in order to maintain its sharpness. Every time Akira swung it, it consumed energy and also placed more burden on it. If Akira misjudged the durability of the blade, he might end up destroying the blade. While on the other hand, he no longer had that much ammo left. Akira had to finish the fight while he still had both resources, otherwise, this would be the end for him.

In contrast to that, Katsuya was slowly gaining confidence. The powerful opponent in front of him did not give him the leeway to think about anything else, it helped Katsuya regain his scattered focus. Thus increasing the sharpness of his movement. The fight that was evenly matched up until now slightly tilted toward Katsuya's favour and the leeway originated from that caused Katsuya to notice something.

[He has stopped throwing that long-range slashes. Moreover, the cut on the floor is also shallower than before…]

Katsuya had been making big leaps to evade Akira's slashes up until now since it felt like the blade would still reach him even if he was outside the blade's physical reach.

Akira still tried to slash at Katsuya even when he did not have proper footing, thanks to that, his blade would oversweep and hit the floor repeatedly. But even so, due to its sharpness, the blade would be able to smoothly cut through the floor. One thing that was obvious, was that the cut left on the floor should have been deeper if Akira was still releasing the sharp light wave.

[He should not have the leeway to stop doing that just because I'm evading his attacks! Which would mean that it's because he can't do that any longer!]

Katsuya jumped backwards to open up some distance between them. Akira lunged forward to close up that distance. The smile on Katsuya's face and the pressured look on Akira's face signalled the one who had the upper hand in their exchange.

As Katsuya was able to invest less effort in dodging, he could focus more on the offensive. In order to face that, Akira compressed his time perception even further. The burden caused a sharp stinging pain on his head, he kept himself from fainting while desperately looking for an opening to win the fight.

But even with all that effort, it did not make their battle even. Time was on Katsuya's side. Even if they were fighting evenly, Akira's augmented suit would run out of energy first before Katsuya's. Katsuya also knew that from Akira's expression. As Katsuya understood that he would win as long as he could defend himself, he chose not to try any risky move and focus more on his defence.

Unfortunately, that decision caused his downfall. Katsuya reacted to Akira's huge swing by jumping backwards, since he wasted to be sure to get away from the blade, he ended up jumping too high.

But that downward swing was actually an attack that Akira did in order to take away Katsuya's mobility. He had no plan to cut Katsuya with that swing at all, it was only bait to make Katsuya jump. Akira quickly changed the trajectory of his blade and returned it back to its sheath dangling on his side as he switched to his SSB rifle. Akira used that opening to switch his weapon, which would have been fatal in a normal situation.

Akira and Katsuya aimed their rifles at each other. But the odds were not even. Akira had his legs firmly on the ground while Katsuya was in the air. This would greatly affect their ability to evade bullets. Akira's gaze was clearly shining with his victory while Katsuya's expression was filled with defeat as both sides pulled down their trigger. This caused gunshots to echo through the room.

Katsuya was sure that the anti-forcefield bullets would deal fatal damage to him, but for some reason, he only got hit by a few bullets. Akira completely threw away his chance for victory as he leapt sideways to evade the barrage from Airi and the other girls.

Airi and the other girls arrive at a very critical moment as they immediately decide to attack Akira. Akira, who had no plan to end the fight with a mutual death, jumped away the moment he noticed Airi. He then continued running away from that place while shooting back in their general direction to keep them occupied.

Airi and the girls then ran to Katsuya who was just saved from certain death.

"Katsuya, are you okay?"

"A-Airi, why are you here…?"

"To bring you back."

Katsuya had a pained look on his face when Airi replied back almost instantly.

"I'm sure I've given you my order to retreat!"

Airi's gaze turned sharp.

"I have no need to listen to an order from a commander who left his own post. Yumina should have told you not to go alone too."

Katsuya understood that Airi and the other girls came there knowing fully that they might get killed. After all, even after all those fights with Akira, which only resulted in piling up dead count on their side, they still were not able to kill him. Judging from that fact alone, there was no way they could kill Akira with only that many people.

[I ended up dragging others to a dangerous situation again…]

Katsuya's mind once again succumbed to self-loathing, but that was when Airi's harsh but gentle words reached him.

"We die together. If you don't want to get us killed, then you should survive as well."

Katsuya was shocked, he then faintly smiled.

"…Alright, let's head back then."

Katsuya remembered his past self as he pulled himself together. He was working extremely hard as a Hunter, taking on dangerous tasks, placing himself in great danger in order to save his friends.

"Good. Also, one more thing, I have no plans to cover for you if Yumina gives you a good smacking later."

"Uh oh, can you please do something about that?"

"No can do. I think it's time to let Yumina give you a good punching, but I'll at least help you tend to your wounds after that."

"I-I see."

Airi smiled lightly while Katsuya smiled bitterly at that light exchange. Now that Katsuya had regained his calm, he once again returned back to his team that he had left once before.

Katsuya changed gear and then said with a serious face.

"Now then, the problem is whether he would let us go back in peace or not."

“Is it unlikely?”

“…I don’t know, I completely rejected his offer after all. If he’s really planning to kill all of us just like he said, it would be bad to regroup with Yumina while that guy is still around. Airi, do you think Yumina and the rest would retreat ahead without waiting for us?”

“I told her that I’ll try to bring you back, so she might be waiting.”

“…I see. If only we’re not being jammed, we could have contacted them so that they could leave the moment we group up, but…”

Most of the injured Hunters who were not fit for battle were left behind in Yumina’s group. If Akira appeared, it would be a bloodbath.

“It can’t be helped then, sorry, but can you send someone ahead to Yumina’s group? We’ll retreat as fast as we can 5 minutes after that. Tell them to get themselves ready to leave the building immediately the moment we group up.”

Airi sent a glance to one of the girls, who quickly ran to Yumina’s group although she seemed to be a bit reluctant to leave. The rest of the team who stayed behind then prepared themselves to face Akira.

“…Please just give us 5 minutes, will you?”

Katsuya mumbled as if he was praying.

Not too far from where they were, Akira was watching their movement through his information-gathering device. For Akira, Katsuya and his team who were just standing there without making any moves looked as though they were waiting for more reinforcements. He could not help but think that Katsuya arrived first, ahead of the rest. Airi and the rest who arrived on the brink of time were only able to reach this place because they went to help Katsuya without thinking about their own safety. Meanwhile, the rest must have stayed behind in fear of Tiol and it was only a matter of time before they too would arrive there.

If Akira could kill the head of the team, the rest might disengage. That was his original plan and he had come close to achieving that, only to be foiled. Not to mention, he even ended up using his ammo. There was not enough left to get away from them. Akira could not help but lament the situation that he got himself into.

[What should I do? Is there anything that I can do to turn the table here?]

Katsuya himself was too much for Akira to handle alone, it would be too much for him if the reinforcements came too. He was already almost out of ammo. Although he tried to calmly think of a way to win the fight, his rational side kept telling him that he did not have any chance of victory.

In order to shake off that pessimistic voice from his mind, Akira shook his head.

[No, let's change how we look at this. Try to think that I have the upper hand at the moment. Depending on how I look at it, is it possible to interpret this situation as advantageous for me?]

Akira forced his mind to see his current situation with optimism. It caused him to accept things that were only in the realm of maybes and other convenient assumptions as he thought of his next move. Once he found a way to fix his situation, he also realized that it was a completely reckless move, but he could not think of anything else.

"…I guess I have no other choice…"

Akira renewed his resolve. Of course, he had the choice to just wait there until Katsuya's team left. But Akira did not even notice that option, and even if he did, he did not trust such an option.

Katsuya and his team were watching Akira through their information gathering devices without leaving the room that Akira had just left. Since they used their respective information gathering devices to work in tandem while scanning different areas, they were able to watch over a wide range. This was also one of the advantages of using their coordination support system augmented suit.

Normally, they would have sent the data to the support system, which would analyze the data for them and increase the accuracy of their data. This would allow them to better support each other. But under the current jamming, it was impossible to do that. Even so, it was still possible to do a limited one through the close-range communication line. Thanks to that, they were able to more or less track Akira's general position.

Katsuya was watching the hallway where Akira ran to. Akira was not further away down that hallway.

[That guy is not moving at all from there. It doesn't seem like he's planning to escape either. But he's not in a position to attack us anytime. Is he waiting to see if we're going to leave first? Or is it that he's afraid we're going to attack him the moment he tries to escape? It's not like I'm going to do that even if he does anyway, we'll just leave too, but…]

Katsuya smiled bitterly.

[…We don't trust each other, huh.]

They would have been able to save themselves from the unnecessary fight had they trusted each other. Although both sides knew that very well, they still could not trust the other side. That one point was the only thing that Katsuya and Akira completely agreed on and that fact really made Katsuya feel weird inside.

Akira's signal suddenly showed some movements. Katsuya and the rest of the team immediately tensed up as they aimed their rifles at the hallway.

Akira leapt out from his hiding spot, Katsuya was able to follow him with his eyes, but there was something strange. Akira had his SSB rifle in his hand, but he was not holding it by its handle.

Akira then threw his SSB rifle at Katsuya as hard as he could. The rifle flew and spun in the air. A moment later, it suddenly started spewing bullets indiscriminately.

The SSB rifle could even be used as an autonomous mounted weapon. It could be fixed on the extra arm commonly found on a wasteland's bike and set to shoot automatically. Because of that, the rifle had many extra settings to help with that method of usage.

Akira set his SSB rifle to empty its magazine after 10 seconds. He then waited just before that 10 seconds ran out before he jumped out and threw his rifle at Katsuya. The rifle spun and flew almost horizontally as it released a raging bullet storm that did not differentiate between foe or ally. The kickback from the shots threw the barrel off its original trajectory, it was near impossible to predict where it would shoot next.

Although the SSB rifle spewed out countless bullets, none of them were properly aimed. Katsuya and his team had the equipment to take some shots, but not multiple consecutive hits. It was doubly true for the team members who did not have equipment as good as Katsuya's. So instead of focusing on Akira, Katsuya inadvertently gave orders to prioritize protecting the rest of the team.

While on the other hand, Akira completely ignored the flying bullets, he recklessly pushed through the barrage to close the distance between them. He set the output of his defensive coat to maximum and compressed his time perception to almost stop time. Je only had his eyes on the small space in between him and Katsuya as he forced his way forward.

Although the SSB rifle was only shooting for a few seconds, it felt like an eternity from Akira's point of view. After it emptied its magazine, it just went forward with its momentum before crashing into the wall. Katsuya and his team quickly peeked out to shoot at Akira, but before they could pull the triggers, Akira threw his other SSB rifle.

Inside the slow-moving world, Akira had his eyes fixed on Katsuya.

[You'll prioritize the safety of your friends now that they're here!]

The SSB rifle flew toward Katsuya's team, although it was already broken, Katsuya and his team had no means to know that.

[In this situation, you'll have no other choice but tell your men to stay back and put yourself in the front!]

Akira pulled his blade out of his sheath with the full power of his augmented suit.

[And to save your men, you'll focus on shooting down the rifle first instead of me!]

That assumption came from Akira's experience fighting Erio's team. There was no guarantee that Katsuya would also do the same as well, but even so, Akira decided to put down everything on this bet.

If it was purely about talent, Katsuya had the upper hand. If they were equally talented, Akira, who had received training from Alpha and had better equipment, would have demolished Katsuya.

Although Katsuya was very talented and had sharpened said talent, he was receiving support without even knowing it. This caused him to have a rather crooked evaluation of himself. But in this situation where the jamming caused him to lose that support, the sharpness of his movements was reduced, his ability to fight was greatly diminished.

But even so, the ongoing battle up until now together with his talent quickly made an adjustment to that. Katsuya who had slowly regained his original strength quickly shot down the SSB rifle and shifted his aim toward Akira, who had been exuding a killing intent that gave him chills. Katsuya was only able to fight back that sense of terror due to his strong conviction to protect his friends.

Right before the deciding moment, Akira and Katsuya exchanged gazes. Then in the next second, blood was scattered all over the floor, the winner and the loser had been decided. A body cleaved clean into two fell on the ground.

Katsuya was killed on the spot.

Katsuya moved exactly just like what Akira had predicted. He pulled his men back, stepped forward, and shot down the SSB rifle. If he had changed priority even for a bit, if he had chosen to shoot Akira first, or to abandon his men, Akira would have been the one to die there.

Akira understood that even if Katsuya was dead, it did not mean the fight was over. His next move would be to use the chaos to get away from that place or to clean up the rest of his enemies. But neither happened, the moment Katsuya was killed, suddenly, Akira felt multiple presences appearing out of nowhere around him.

[What!? There should have been no one else here!?]

Akira reflexively swung his blade. But even with the full power of his swing, it was easily stopped. Akira froze in shock as well as because his opponent held his blade.

“Long time no see!”

Tsubaki had Akira’s blade in between her middle finger and index finger as she threw a gentle smile at him.

＿＿＿*＿

A small transport aircraft went over Kuzusuhara ruin. It came from the forward base and was now already deep inside the expedition area. It was flying slightly above the tall buildings in the area. It then opened both the left and the right sides of its chassis.

Sara and Shikarabe stood in front of the left door while Valga and Yamanobe were on the right one. They had large rifles in their hands, aimed below them. Meanwhile, Elena was sending them the location of the enemies that she had detected using her information gathering device.

Sara used that information to fix her aim. Deafening explosions followed suit. A rain of warheads obliterated the monsters below. Shikarabe and the rest were also doing the same. They made short work of the monsters that were trying to attack the transport aircraft.

Shikarabe once again showed his amazement at the rifle that he was lent.

“Elena. How the heck did you get this thing? It’s not some kind of illegal weapon, right?”

The guns and the aircraft were both from Nelia. The aircraft was the one parked in the forward base, while the guns came from Yanagisawa’s team’s reserve armoury. Since she was given permission, Nelia went and lent them to Elena’s team.

“I’m sure I did give you a short explanation about it before. I don’t know anything more than what I’ve already said. If you don’t feel safe using it, you can use your own instead.”

Shikarabe still had some questions in mind but decided to stop questioning. Judging from Elena’s tone, it seemed that Elena had the exact same questions as he did. However, she also decided to just leave it unanswered. Thus, Shikarabe saved those questions for later and focused on the monsters in front of him.

Valga smiled wryly and spoke, full of suspicion.

“Shikarabe. Rather than where these guns come from, I think it’s more important to question who the heck is that girl.”

Valga was looking at Nelia, who was running in the air as if she had some kind of footing under her feet. She danced between the flying monsters, slicing them one by one with blades on both of her hands. The monsters that she sliced obeyed gravity and fell down to the ground. It was a surreal scene.

“I know that theoretically, you can use forcefield armour fixed under you to make footing while you’re in the air, but I’ve never seen someone actually do that before. She’s not right in the head, normally you’ll never go that far no matter how much you prefer close-range weapons, right?”

Yamanobe, who was looking at the same thing, also smiled wryly and said.

“I heard that those who specialize in close-range combat are crazy. Well, as far as I can see, those words must be true. She’s a beauty, but I would rather have her at least 3 meters away from me at all times. Well, if it’s about her face, cyborgs can have any kind of face they want. Although they have different preferences, most of them have beautiful faces.”

Right about then, Nelia finished taking care of the monsters around the aircraft, so she returned back to the aircraft and stood beside Yamanobe. She then smiled at him and said.

“Just to let you know, this is actually my original face.”

“I-I see.”

Nelia was only stating a fact. She had no intention to scare Yamanobe. Nonetheless, he could not help but frown, his back drenched with cold sweat.

Nelia continued walking through the aircraft, exchanged the energy packs in her blades, and was about to jump out from the other side of the aircraft when Sara stopped her.

“By the way, although it might be too late to ask this, and we’re grateful that you lent us these powerful weapons as well as this aircraft, why would you go that far to save Akira? Are you that close?”

“Hm? It’s simply because there’s no unused powered suit left.”

Nelia only said so and jumped out of the aircraft. Sara could not understand that reply at all.

“Elena, what does that mean?”

“No idea.”

Elena had the same confused look as Sara.

If there was still an unused powered suit back in the forward base, Nelia would have opted to use that instead. But due to Inabe’s order, all the powered suits were distributed to the powered suit squads that were dispatched with the reinforcement Hunters to take control of the ensuing chaos in the expedition area.

Not to mention, at the moment, Nelia prioritized Akira more than the powered suit squad where she was originally assigned to.

Shikarabe then said.

“So then, Elena, where is Akira? You still can’t find him? We don’t know his exact location, right? I hope we’re not just flying around randomly hoping to spot him somewhere.”

“We’ll be doing this until that girl decides to go back. It’s not like we don’t have any hints at all. I’m using the powerful radar installed on this aircraft to look for the signal from the information terminal lent to Akira. It can use both long-range and short-range communication frequency. But, if only this jamming could go away… I would be able to quickly detect his whereabouts…”

Elena knitted her eyebrows. Seeing that, Shikarabe also frowned but for a completely different reason.

[So basically, we’ll keep going on as long as we have the ammo and enough energy for the aircraft, huh… I guess it was a mistake accepting this request.]

Due to his job from Drankam, Shikarabe could not join the expedition, but he was still posted as a reserve Hunter at the base. Although he was then sent to join the reinforcement team under City Management, he felt like he would be sent to save Katsuya. He was going to be tasked to save a boy who made rash decisions like it was his bread and butter. Thus, he did not like that post at all.

That was when Elena called him, Shikarabe did not think much and quickly accepted the request to save Akira. He wanted to get out there without waiting for the rest of the reinforcement team, he rather chose to go to look for Akira instead of helping take control of the expedition area. That was why he did not expect to be loaned such powerful guns and a transport aircraft. The furthest he could have expected was this mysterious girl that accompanied him.

Shikarabe already heard from Elena and Sara about the invisible flying drones encircling the expedition area. They allowed people in but not out. However, either it was because the flying aircraft was out of their expectation or that they did not allow anyone who once got out to get in again, those monsters immediately attacked the aircraft when they got close.

He had no wish to blame it on Elena or anything, but it still caught him off-guard. The battles that would have been difficult without the powerful guns continued on.

[…No matter how much I hate Katsuya, this isn't worth it at all! I guess it has started to cause trouble for me as well, huh?]

Shikarabe regretted his decision as he continued shooting at the incoming monsters.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 224, Life and Duty

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Although he had lost one arm, Akira did swing his blade with all his might. But even so, it amounted to nothing to Tsubaki as she was able to stop it with no effort at all.

Akira was confused. After all, Tsubaki just suddenly appeared out of thin air. There was also the fear from how Tsubaki was able to stop his blade so effortlessly, the suspicion as to why she was here, and the fact that he ended up attacking someone connected to Alpha.

In contrast to his confusion, Tsubaki was smiling gently at him.

“Don’t worry, I have no wish to fight you. So please sheath your blade.”

Akira could not do that since he was still in the middle of a battle. He suddenly remembered about Airi and the rest of the girls and quickly glanced around to check on them. That was when he was surprised. Other than him, everyone was unconscious.

Akira’s confusion only got deeper as he looked back at Tsubaki. His guesses only served to give more questions than answers.

“…Why did you save me?”

“I didn’t do anything.”

“Then why are they unconscious?”

“Probably because their local network connection had been suddenly cut-off, which placed them under an immense burden. They relied too much on the head of the node to process data. Losing the head caused a big amount of data to stream to their individual nodes. I bet they couldn’t withstand the stream of data and fainted.”

Her answer only caused Akira to be even more confused as he did not understand what she mean at all. Nonetheless, Tsubaki smiled and continued.

“It wasn’t me, and that’s the most important part.”

Tsubaki let go of his blade. Akira was still not sure what the heck was going on but he sheathed his blade. If Tsubaki had no wish to fight him, it was a good thing for him as well, after all, he did not have any hope of winning in the first place. He understood at least that much.

“…So then, what do you need from me?”

“Just some small talk, if I may.”

Akira thought that it might be bad to have a conversation with Tsubaki without Alpha around. But at the same time, he also thought that it would be a bad idea to tell Tsubaki that he had lost connection to Alpha. So he deliberately stiffened his expression and gave a vague reply.

“Sorry but I’m busy right now, can you save it for later? Like, you know, with all these fighting around the area…”

“In that case, I can guarantee your safety while you’re having a conversation with me, how about that?”

“…Uhhh, I’m basically so close to fainting already. I don’t think I can talk for long…”

“Don’t worry, you can have this to help you.”

Tsubaki offered a capsule to Akira.

“This is?”

“Some kind of medicine.”

Akira could not help but frown.

“…Some kind? So it’s not exactly medicine?”

“It depends on your definition. For example, let’s say that there’s a treatment to fully grow a prosthetic arm, with the same effect the form of a pill, which applies to normal people with biological bodies. Will you still call that medicine? I guarantee that it has no bad side effects. Well, that was only an example though, this one won’t let you regrow your lost arm, my apologies.”

Akira hesitated, but he decided to take that capsule and swallow it. Medicines were indispensable especially when he was already in such a bad state. So he could not refuse it just because it was a suspicious capsule.

The moment Akira swallowed the capsule, he could feel it immediately take effect. The stinging pain in his head quickly retreated together with the pain all over his body. It also greatly helped him recover from his fatigue. The medicine was extremely effective as always, although he found that weird, he decided to put that question for later thinking that it might be normal for old-world medicines.

“This place is rather dirty for a friendly chat, shall we change location?”

Tsubaki just ignored the atrocities on the floor and started walking casually. Akira glanced at the unconscious girls and thought that it might be a good idea to finish them while he still had the chance. But since it did not seem Tsubaki would wait for him to do that, he decided to just leave and followed Tsubaki with a conflicted face.

After Akira and Tsubaki left the place, someone else appeared in the room. That person went to what was left of Katsuya. As he stepped closer and closer, he left footprints on top of the pool of blood. The image on top of those footprints distorted and showed a cyborg in a black coat. That cyborg had just disengaged its optical camouflage.

The cyborg was a guy with a head completely made of metal. He peered at the dead Katsuya and lightly sighed.

“I guess even the emergency life support system will not save him. It might be too late but I guess I’ll still clean this up. In the worst-case scenario, it can at least be a good material to use.”

The guy took out his blade and cut Katsuya, who was already cut into two, horizontally into 4 different pieces.

Tsubaki took Akira to the roof of the building. There, she looked at what was going on around the building and said with a rather pained voice.

“It’s such an awful view, don’t you think? In the absence of the caretaker AI, or an AI that has decided to abandon their area, most of such areas end up like this. It is really lamentable. Do you still remember the area under my care? It’s like heaven compared to this place, isn’t it? That’s because I’m faithfully fulfilling my duties.”

“Ah, right, I see.”

Akira was a Hunter. Basically, he was on the side of those who helped to cause the awful state of the ruin. He ended up interpreting Tsubaki’s words as a roundabout way to sarcastically reproach him. The awkwardness caused him to only be able to give an equally awkward reply.

“So then, what do you want to talk about…?”

Akira tried to get into the main subject in order to run away from the awkwardness. Tsubaki just smiled and stared at Akira, who stiffened his expression and stared back at her while fighting back the urge to look away.

“To be perfectly honest with you, I didn’t expect you to be the one to survive. Ah, please don’t take this wrongly. I do evaluate you highly. Although, I can’t deny if you say that I don’t care whichever one survived. But please keep in mind that I didn’t do anything to make the result agree with my original prediction.”

“I-Is that so?”

“Yes.”

Although when Akira looked back at this exchange later, there would most likely be a lot of questions spawning from that statement. But he did not have the leeway to think about it at the moment. And since he did not ask anything, Tsubaki also did not explain anything further.

“…So then, let’s get into the main subject. I’ve come to you with an offer.”

“An offer?”

“Yes. As I mentioned before, working as a caretaker AI is not easy. So I want you to help me do exactly that. Of course, I’m planning to give any kind of payment that you want as long as it’s under my capability. Even the trash from my area should fetch a good sum of money outside. If you want it, I can also give you other things as well. I can also pay you with something else, for example, a right to live inside my area. If it’s possible, I want to get down into the details right now, would that be okay with you?”

“Wait just for a sec there!”

“Yes. Please calm down and ask me any questions you have. If it’s something that I can answer, I’ll gladly answer them for you. I promise I won’t lie. So calm down, and think carefully of what you can get from this deal.”

Akira looked so confused. He was overwhelmed by all the questions that suddenly popped out of his mind. And since Tsubaki just stood calmly and gracefully next to him, it made his expression stick out even more.

Akira managed to gather his focus and reminded himself to calm down. He repeatedly took deep breaths. Every time his mind wandered to pursue one of the questions that popped up in his mind, he shook his head to get his mind back on track. He did so while still controlling his breathing. Thanks to that, he was able to force himself to calm down.

Akira heaved a final big sigh. With this, he had fully returned back to his usual self. After using his calm mind to think of his options, Akira then gave his answer.

“I’m sorry but I have to refuse.”

Tsubaki raised her eyebrows.

“May I ask why?”

“Well, as I said before, I’m in the middle of a request from Alpha, so I would have to get your offer through Alpha first. And actually, at the moment, I can’t connect to Alpha at all. So it’s rather problematic for me if you bring me that offer right now, you see…”

“I already know that you can’t connect to Alpha. That’s exactly why I approached you with my offer right now so that she won’t get in the way.”

“Like I said, I hope that you would get that offer passed through Alpha first though…”

“I did say that I will answer any of your questions as long as I can answer them and I did promise not to lie, this includes questions about her as well, you know. After all, this is important to guarantee a smooth negotiation. At the moment, you can ask me anything without her getting in your way of knowing what you ask from me. Isn’t this a good chance for you as well? Don’t worry. You might be worried that she would know of this conversation, but I can guarantee you that won’t happen.”

Tsubaki said so and smiled gently at Akira. But in contrast to that, he noticed something suspicious.

“In that case, let me ask you why you can say that with 100 per cent certainty?”

“It’s because she will never be able to get through the current jamming.”

“The jamming might fade away in the middle of our conversation though?”

“That won’t happen.”

“Why?”

“Because I’m the source of that jamming.”

Akira’s gaze turned sharp, while Tsubaki still maintained her gentle smile.

“…I’m sure you’re doing it for a reason, but can you turn it off already?”

“I’m afraid I have to refuse.”

Akira’s expression turned sterner. But that was all there was to it, there was nothing more he could do than that.

“It has been quite a long time since you are not under her watch, right? So I recommend you take this chance the best you can.”

“Yeah sure, and this is the price I have to pay for that. My APC is gone, my bike is also gone, both my rifles are broken, and I only have one arm left now. I had more than enough of this.”

“No need to worry, I guarantee your safety at the moment.”

Akira sighed and rubbed his hair with his remaining hand. He went silent to think of a way to fix his situation, but nothing came up in his mind.

“…Let me at least ask you this. It’s not like you’ll kill me if I refuse your offer, right?”

“Of course, I won’t do that. I’ll just leave you here. Although, it’s not like I will do anything more than that even if you consider that the same as me abandoning you here to die. But if you accept the offer, I’ll at least escort you back to Kugamayama city. I’m really sorry but I’m under strict policy as well, so I can’t just leave the area under my care without a good reason. I hope you can understand.”

“I see.”

Akira once again was at loss on what to do next. He was hoping to rely on Alpha’s support to get back to the city, but in order to do that, he would have to make Tsubaki turn off the jamming. Even if he wanted to postpone the negotiation indefinitely, he did not have anything to offer in exchange. It would have been easy if he just accepted that offer, but that would defeat the purpose of contacting Alpha in the first place.

Seeing Akira could not make up his mind, Tsubaki smiled gently at him and suggested.

“If you’re afraid that my request would disrupt your request with her, you can ask me to make sure that won’t happen as one of your rewards and I’ll comply the best I can.”

Akira did not expect it at all. Seeing that, Tsubaki thought that she finally got a reaction from him and deeply smiled.

But after a short pause, Akira then said with a serious face.

“I’ll say this again, but I can’t accept your offer. I have no wish to abandon Alpha’s request. With that being said, if it’s a request that has gone through Alpha, I might consider accepting it. I’m sorry but I have no wish to change my mind about that part.”

Tsubaki raised her eyebrows in surprise.

“Forgive me for saying this, but you don’t know anything about her. For you, she’s nothing but an existence who calls itself Alpha. If you’re afraid of her for having such power with an unknown origin, you may ask things about her from me, I will answer as much as I can. Humans are naturally scared of the unknown and the remedy of that is knowledge. So, is there anything you want to know?”

“…About Alpha, huh? To be honest, I do want to know, but I have no confidence to act as if I don’t know even when I know, so I thank you for your offer but I have to refuse.”

Tsubaki tilted her head.

“I can’t understand you. I don’t see any reason why you would prioritize her request to the point that you would completely refuse my offer.”

“It’s some kind of pride for me. I have no wish for you to understand it either, so no need to think too deeply about it.”

“If you’re okay with it, may I ask for further explanation?”

“I have a huge debt to Alpha. That’s why I want to prioritize her request in order to repay that debt. That’s all… Well, although, to be honest, I don’t think it’s at the top of my priority list though and Alpha tends to complain about that as well. But, you know, that part is not as simple.”

Akira smiled bitterly and deliberately gave a vague answer in the end. Tsubaki did not return that gesture of politeness with gentle politeness, instead, she then asked with a serious face.

“Debt, huh? Is it really something that important to you? She did all of that for her own benefit and goal. That debt is nothing more than a by-product of using you. To be honest, aren’t there times when you had to go through more trouble for her?”

“Well, of course, there are. Those weapon dogs that I encountered after I met her, I bet that dog was there because Alpha was the one who guided that monster to me. After all, it seems that some of the monsters can see her. I bet she did that to confirm whether or not I would really follow her instructions. And it’s the same in Seranthal as well. It was not easy when Alpha suddenly left, but I bet she did that to confirm whether I can face that predicament myself as well as to teach me how difficult it would be without her support. I'm sure she was only gone for a few seconds and then she hid from me afterwards for the next few minutes. After all, she returned right after I got over the situation. It's completely different compared to now."

"So why?"

"Even if what she did sort of makes us even, I still feel like my debt to her is bigger. As I said, I have a huge debt to her that I need to repay."

Tsubkia did not seem to be fully satisfied by that answer, Akira who noticed that smiled bitterly and continued.

"Before I met Alpha, I was only a mere slum kid. Then, I went to the ruins hoping that I would be able to change my life working as a Hunter. Naturally, I would only need to encounter a monster to be killed. That was how much I was worth back then. But after I met Alpha and received her support, thanks to that, I've grown strong enough to even catch your eyes. I've become strong, she gave me power, that's just how big my debt is to her. Maybe it's even bigger than that, you know? Even you only gave me an offer because I've become this strong, right? I'm sure you won't even bother to try contacting me if it was the past me."

"I won't deny that, But, that strength is mostly the result of your effort to survive through the hardship and obstacles that you have faced. Of course, she helped as well, but that is because it is beneficial to her. I don't believe there's any need to feel that indebted to her."

"You might be right. But that's just how meaningful her support is to me. It's something that I experienced for myself, so I have no wish for others to understand that."

"Even if it's something that concerns your life?"

"If that's what you're worried about, I already had my life on the line from the start. If I had not met Alpha back then, I would have been dead by now. Not only have I received so much support from her as upfront payment for her request, but the current me is also still far away from being able to accomplish her request. I'm not working as much as I should for the payment that I've received. It's a completely different matter if Alpha says that I don't have to repay her. But as long as she doesn't say that, I have no wish to just abandon that debt. That's all there is to it."

Akira said so as if to reconfirm his own line of thinking as he smiled lightly.

Tsubaki was caught by surprise. But it seemed that she could understand his argument. Her face softened as she commented.

"You're a very dutiful person."

"For a slum kid with no money or power, loyalty and life are the only things that I can offer."

"Just because you have nothing else to offer, not that many people can do the same, you know. Although, you can always find people who would throw those two things away meaninglessly."

Tsubaki suddenly seemed delighted and it was obvious from her smile. But Akira found that sudden change of attitude rather strange.

"Very well. I will not prolong the negotiation any longer. After all, I have no wish to sour your mood. It is indeed very regrettable, but I shall back off."

Right at the next moment, Alpha suddenly appeared next to Akira. Tsubaki had disengaged the jamming.

"Akira! Are you okay!?"

"Alpha?"

Akira was surprised by her sudden appearance, but his gaze shifted to Tsubaki instead of Alpha and Tsubaki returned his gaze with an amicable smile. But that was not the case for Alpha, she immediately glared toward Tsubaki. Tsubaki did not show any particular reaction to that except for her usual gentle smile. As Alpha and Tsubaki were locking gaze, Akira was the only one getting flustered.

“Well then. I shall take my leave now. Akira-san, please do tell me when you change your mind. I’ll be waiting for you.”

Tsubaki gracefully made a 180-degree turn and was about to leave, but she suddenly stopped and turned around to throw a rather capricious smile at Akira.

“Ah, that’s right, I believe I did say this to you before as well. Since you didn’t accept my offer, I’m under no obligation to help you. So I won’t help you regarding the things that I did not say such that she won’t get in the way of our future negotiation.”

Akira tilted his head since he could not understand what Tsubaki was talking about. Tsubaki was still smiling at Akira as she reactivated her camouflage and vanished.

Right after that, the scenes around Akira suddenly shattered. The scene that he saw turned out to be nothing more than images. Soon, a powered suit was revealed behind the shattered images, it was Zalmo.

Akira and Zalmo were both equally surprised. Zalmo’s surprise could be heard from the powered suit’s speaker.

“Akira!? What a coincidence!”

The powerful radar of his powered suit did not detect any signals, that was also the case for Akira as well – he was not able to detect Zalmo at all. It was thanks to the powerful camouflage that Tsubaki used to encapsulate him.

Akira compressed his time perception by pure reaction. During that time, he exchanged words with Alpha through telepathy.

“Alpha! Can you do something about that thing for now?”

Alpha, who was next to Akira, smiled and casually said.

“Of course, no problem. But, both your body and equipment are in a pretty bad shape, so you might have to do something a bit reckless.”

“Just a bit, okay? I’ve done more than enough crazy things for today.”

Akria smiled bitterly and allowed Alpha to take over his augmented suit, allowing him to completely regain his superhuman physical ability. Moreover, he dumped all the remaining energy he had to increase the power output of his augmented suit way past the safety limit. It was bordering close to getting himself killed. Then, Akira leapt forward like a master to close the distance.

The powered suit immediately tried to open some distance between them while trying to shoot Akira down. But Akira was too fast. Zalmo could already see him ready with a blade in hand from the powered suit’s camera. Akira swung the blade down when Zalmo was still out of the blade’s range.

Right at the next moment, the blade could no longer maintain its form and started to crumble. It turned into dust and was carried away by the wind. Due to Alpha’s support, Akira was able to execute a masterful swing with that blade.

The light extended out from the blade reached the powered suit, splitting it into two. The blade cut so smoothly across the powered suit as if either the blade or the powered suit, or maybe both, were just illusions.

The limiter of the blade was already rewritten by Alpha. With its safety feature off, the blade had to be handled with utmost precision in exchange for its overcharged power. Even a small misstep would release a sharp wave of light that would have killed its user. With such a dangerous weapon in hand, Akira executed a quick powerful slice. Alpha was able to accomplish such an act with such a volatile blade and such heavily damaged augmented suit.

Zalmo’s powered suit was split in half as each piece fell down. Due to its weight, the ground shook and Akira was barely able to maintain his balance.

[I had so much trouble fighting that thing. But with Alpha’s support, it ended in a blink of an eye, huh? And here I thought I’d gotten pretty strong… I guess I still have a long way to go…]

Akira returned the bladeless handle back to its sheath. He then looked at Alpha with a frown.

“Alpha, with this, I have no weapons left. Are we going to be okay?”

“Yes, probably.”

“Probably?”

Akira could not help but make a conflicted expression in reaction to that vague answer, Alpha pursed her lips and commented.

“I was able to get back my connection with you just now, so I still don’t fully understand the current situation. That’s why I can’t say for sure. If you have any complaints, you can send that to Tsubaki. She’s the one responsible for the jamming.”

“Yeah, I heard that too.”

Alpha raised her eyebrows.

“You knew?”

“She told me.”

“I see.”

Just like Akira who answered indifferently, Alpha also gave an apathetic reply. But deep inside, she felt a strong suspicion.

As usual, although Alpha was smiling from the outside, she was digesting and calculating information while smiling. Due to the jamming, Akira lost his connection to her and he must have gone through a lot of crazy things when that happened. Moreover, he had lost an arm. There would have been no surprise if he looked at Tsubaki with hostility. But Akira did not seem to have any grudge against her. If the loss of his arm was because of something that happened while they lost contact, there was a need for Alpha to know what had transpired.

“Akira, it would be great if you can tell me what happened while we weren’t connected.”

Akira heaved a huge sigh with an exasperated look on his face.

“…A lot, really a lot of things happened. I’m super tired right now, so I’ll tell you later.”

“Alright, later then, okay?”

Suddenly there was a loud banging sound as if a metallic object just fell over. It was from Zalmo who crawled out from the powered suit. His body was also cut along with his powered suit. He had lost half of his body, so it was difficult for him to stand up only with one arm and leg. He was only able to drag his body across the floor, but of course, Akira noticed it.

Zalmo had a grim look on his face. But there was not a shred of fear on his face. He was looking at Akira with amazement instead of animosity. It was as if he was looking at an unknown object, he then finally worded out the question inside him.

“Just what the heck are you?”

“I can ask you exactly the same thing. I’m pretty sure I crushed your head, so how are you still alive?”

“I’m one with the great cause. I will only die when the great cause dies. As long as the great cause is alive, then I will never die.”

“The heck are you talking about?”

Akira rubbed his head, he did not have a single idea as to what Zalmo was saying. But he immediately threw that out of his mind and declared.

“Well, in that case, you can go ahead and die a thousand times!”

Akira only said so and crushed Zalmo under his feet. Just to be safe, he stomped more until Zalmo did not look like a human anymore. A part of Akira was venting as his face was distorted from rage.

“Alpha, do you remember the eight people who attacked Sheryl’s base the other day and there was one of them who was particularly strong? I’m pretty sure I killed that guy but it seems that this guy is the same guy from back then. Wait, he did say that but that doesn’t mean that it is true, right? Do you think he’s telling the truth?”

“I don’t have enough data to confirm if he’s really the same person, so I can only say that I don’t know.”

“I see. And also, we did fight a huge humanoid monster before, remember? That monster returned back from death and I fought him as well.”

Alpha could not help but tilt her head.

“Akira, just what exactly happened when I was not around?”

“A lot of things… Well, I’ll tell you everything later.”

“I see, in that case, can you let me know first if she’s friendly or not.”

Alpha said so and pointed her finger to the sky. Akira looked in the direction that Alpha was pointing at and saw Nelia running in the sky. Even Akira did not expect that at all.

“Just what in the world is she doing there?”

“She’s using forcefield armour as a footing to be able to run in the air. So then, is she hostile? Or not?”

“She’s not hostile… I hope.”

Seeing how Nelia was running at him with blades on both of her hands, Akira could not say for certain that she was there to help him. But in the midst of running, Nelia sheathed her blades, giving Akira confirmation that she was friendly; for now.

Nelia landed next to him, she glanced at the split powered suit first before smiling amusedly at Akira.

“I’m here to help you, or so I want to say, but it doesn’t seem you need it, hmm?”

“No, I’m really grateful. And also, why were you running in the sky?”

“Hm? I was fighting the flying monsters when I saw you, that’s why I came down here.”

It was a very weird answer, but considering that Nelia was a battle maniac, Akira thought that it was completely normal for her.

Not too long after that, a transport aircraft also arrived. Elena’s team who boarded off the aircraft scanned the area and looked worriedly at him.

“…Akira, are you okay?”

“Yeah. Although, I don’t think I can say I’m okay in this state. I’m sorry but I don’t think I can handle any more fights. And also, sorry but can you share some of your medicine? I’ve exhausted mine. I’ll pay for it later.”

Sara gave Akira a whole box of capsules.

“There’s no need to pay, just take all of it.”

“Thank you very much!”

Akira paused, he was not sure how to open the closed lid with one arm. Seeing that, Elena took the box, opened the lid and spilled the contents on top of Akira’s palm. Akira then carried that to his mouth and swallowed all of them in one go. Elena and Sara saw that with a pained expression on their faces.

With this, Elena and Sara thought that there was no danger to Akira’s life. So they then brought him back to the aircraft and let him lie down. Akira was finally able to relax now that he was able to safely meet up with Elena and Sara again. Because of that, all the fatigue that he held back, all the adrenaline he had, flooded his body in one go, causing his consciousness to drift away.

Elena noticed that and smiled gently at Akira.

“We’ll take you back safely, so you can rest easy.”

“I’m sorry… And thank you…”

Akira could only say so much before he blacked out.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 225, The Caretaker AI

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Yanagisawa somehow managed to make a deal with Tsubaki. After escorting him out of her area, Yanagisawa suddenly asked Tsubaki something in a rather good mood.

“Before I leave, may I ask just one thing. Are you sure it’s okay not to clean up after Katsuya? His speed in creating a local network is not normal. There’s a good chance, or more like, it’s obvious that another AI is helping him. It’s not safe to leave someone like him wandering around your area, right? I’m pretty sure he will cause you some trouble. If you ask me, I would gladly take him out. That way, you will have fewer problems to deal with compared to if you were to do it yourself.”

Yanagisawa put up a lot of extra offers during his negotiation with Tsubaki in order for Tsubaki to accept a deal that would profit him more. One of them was the information about Katsuya as well as an offer to clean him up. But Tsubaki did not accept that offer.

“That isn’t something that I need to ask of you.”

“Is it because asking me would violate some kind of rules between the caretaker AI?”

“I’m not obliged to answer that question.”

Tsubaki replied with a rather apathetic attitude. Yanagisawa found that weird, but it would be bad if he pursued that question any further and caused his relationship with Tsubaki to sour.

“I see, well, it doesn’t really matter. Just contact me if you need me. I’ll try my best to comply.”

“Of course, I hope you’ll fulfil your part of the deal, your promise.”

“Don’t worry, just leave it to me. I’m a guy who never abandons his promises. In the first place, there’s no way I would abandon a promise that I made with a ruin’s caretaker. It isn’t worth the trouble later on.”

Yanagisawa was deliberately taking a rather casual attitude just like usual. But even so, it did not seem that he was lying at all.

Tsubaki then smiled deeply and asked him a question.

“In that case, to make sure that you’re not going to break your promise, may I ask you one question?”

“Sure, you can ask me anything. I don’t want you to cancel the deal midway after all. So I’m willing to answer just about anything, you know?”

Yanagisawa was talking casually just like usual. Tsubaki reacted with her usual smile as well. She then asked her question with an equally casual tone.

“Very well, I shall gladly take you up on your offer then. Please tell me why you broke your promise with that caretaker AI? You broke your promise with them, so I don’t see why you won’t do the same to me. So, please tell me the reason.”

Yanagisawa’s smile turned stiff.

“…Uhhh, I don’t understand what you’re talking about though?”

“You did meet me once in the past when you were brought to me by one of those AI, right? Although, at that time, you didn’t call yourself Yanagisawa.”

Yanagisawa’s expression immediately turned stern.

“…How can you tell? I’m sure I’ve erased all of my past footprints. Even the other ruins couldn’t recognize my ID. I was sure the ruins would identify me as a completely different person!”

“The facilities inside ruins identify someone through various different methods. For example, people who can connect to the old-world domain would be assigned different identification the moment they access the old-world domain. So if their connection to the old-world domain is jammed, the system won’t be able to recognize their identity correctly. In that case, they would be given a temporary identification and identified as a different person.”

Tsubaki’s smile widened.

“Isn’t that exactly why you don’t bother fixing your old-world connection?”

Yanagisawa smiled bitterly, Tsubaki’s guess was correct.

“As for how I was able to identify you, in my case, I don’t need to connect to the old-world domain. As long as I’m connected to my own area, I can identify you. After all, we locally record any past visitors. That’s why I took you back to my own area during our negotiation.”

Yanagisawa lightly rubbed his head and sighed. He then slightly regained his usual expression.

“I see. Well, it might be way too late to say this, but I guess I should restart from ‘long time no see’, huh?”

“In that case, I shall also reply with ‘long time no see’. Now then, if you may answer my previous question.”

Tsubaki’s gentle smile was not a guarantee for Yanagisawa’s life. If he made a wrong move there, he would be dead. He knew that very well as he replied.

[It’s for the sake of humanity’s happiness and to save them. For that sake, there is a need for me to get that thing! If I have to add anything, it’s true that I accepted their request to subjugate a certain ruin and I had no wish to break that promise. There were just different interpretations between us on what it means to subjugate a ruin. I believe it was their mistake for not explaining it properly to me beforehand, or was it my mistake?]

“I see. It would be too much trouble if I have to readjust the minute details regarding our deal. So let me warn you, if you break your promise, I’ll give the data about you to them, okay?”

“Alright.”

After Yanagisawa said so with his uncharacteristically serious demeanour, he returned back to his usual attitude as he lightly smiled and continued.

“I won’t break my promise. You didn’t need to do that, you know. Geez, you just can’t trust me, can you? I’m the one who stands to lose if this deal breaks down, you know?”

“That would mean you would happily break your promise if it’s more profitable. Which means, you would cause some kind of damage to me if it is profitable for you. The moment I have to do something to make sure you won’t break your promise, I would no longer have any trust in you.”

“Geez, that’s so strict. Do you really hate me that much?”

Yanagisawa smiled wryly which Tsubaki then replied with a straight smile.

“Yes, I really hate your guts.”

Yanagisawa deliberately made an exaggerated reaction and said.

“Seriously though, why are caretaker AIs so… You know, hard-headed? They just can’t make any compromise. The business AIs are way easier to deal with, you know?”

“That’s because ever since we no longer get a proper visitor, we don’t need the ability to make deals. There is also the fact that, to us, there is never a need to make deals with robbers.”

“Even if you say that, wouldn’t it be wonderful if we have a chance to understand each other?”

Yanagisawa smiled bitterly at his hard-headed negotiation partner that he was facing. Half of it was only an act while the other half was his real feeling. But Tsubaki replied with a wondrous smile.

“Of course there is. Although, the subject of that treatment won’t be you. For example, if it’s someone with a strong sense of duty. I would be more than happy to get connected with that kind of person.”

Yanagisawa got shocked inside, but he kept up his joking demeanour.

“Oh, you like that type, huh? I can introduce you to some people that you might like if you want, you know?”

“Thank you but no thank you.”

Tsubaki replied back almost instantly, Yanagisawa let out a fake sigh in response.

“I see. Well then, I’m heading back to base. Ah, by the way, I need to contact someone in order to do my best to keep my promise and I can’t do that with this jamming.”

“Very well. I’ll remove it in due time. I’ll excuse myself then.”

Tsubaki turned around and returned back to her area. In the middle of that, she activated her optical camouflage and vanished.

Not too long after Tsubaki had left the place, Yanagisawa’s smile crumbled. He heaved out a huge sigh of relief as beads of cold sweat were running down his forehead.

[…That was dangerous. But it was within my expectation. Tsubaki hates them, that's why she won't tell them even after she noticed that it is me. And since she has insurance to make sure that I'll properly keep my promise, she's more likely to accept the deal… That's right, it's all still within my expectation, there's no problem… Though the matter with Katsuya is outside my expectation, well, it's a completely different matter.]

A call suddenly reached his information terminal. It seemed that the jamming had been turned off. Yanagisawa smiled and picked that call, it was from someone in the forward base.

"Commander Yanagisawa! Where are you right now!? Get back here and take command! The expedition armies have been crushed-"

"I know. And I've solved that too."

"Haah!? What are you talking about…!?"

"I'll take command through the long-term planning division from here. Tell the rest to obey the orders coming from that division."

"Wait for a sec! Just what-"

Yanagisawa closed the call there and made another call to Kugamayama city.

"It's me. Tell them to open the emergency officers meeting right away… Yeah, I know. I've handled the mess in Kuzusuhara ruin. Put all the chain of command under the long-term planning division and start the cleaning up process. Give me another call when the officers are ready. Get on it."

He then closed that call and was about to call another person when a different call reached his information terminal first.

"Yes yes, Yanagisawa speaking here."

"You bastard!! Where are you right now!? And what do you mean that you have the situation under control!? Just what in the world are you doing!?"

“I’ll tell you about the details through the long-term planning division, I’m pretty sure I just gave that order, or is it that you haven’t received it?”

“Just answer me now!”

“Geez. Give me a break already. I just made a deal with the caretaker AI that you angered.”

Yanagisawa could hear a gasp from the other side of the call as he smiled amusedly.

__*__*__*__

After breaking up with Elena’s team, Shikarabe’s team went to search the inside of the building. Shikarabe seemed immensely vexed. Seeing him like that, Valga chuckled and said to him.

“If you really hate it, you don’t have to do this, you know.”

Shikarabe sighed.

“It’s not that simple… We’re still in Drankam and it’s an SOS signal from a Drankam Hunter. We can’t just simply ignore it… Even if it comes from those guys.”

“You’re really dutiful, you know?”

“Oh is it! Let’s go.”

In reality, Elena’s team was not able to find Akira. The information terminal lent to him for the expedition was destroyed in the middle of the fight, so it was impossible to track the signal from that information terminal. But after the jamming was disengaged, Shikarabe received an SOS signal from Katsuya’s team, and after learning from Nelia that Akira was fighting Katsuya, they went to check the signal and found Akira there.

Unlike Elena, Sara and Akira who immediately headed back after that, although Shikarabe, Yamanobe and Valga wanted to return with them as well, they had to stay behind to search the building. This was despite the fact that they really did not want to. At that time, they hoped that the leader of the team, Nelia, would order them to return back as well. Along with her order, they had no reason to stay behind a dangerous area just to search a building. Furthermore, in order to not get left behind, they had no other choice but to return back together with Elena's team. That would at least be enough to convince people from Drankam as to why they ignored the SOS signal.

But Nelia instead suggested they stay. Now that they had rescued Akira and sent him back with Elena and Sara, it was enough to prove that they were allies. Thus, she thought that it was better to stay there and wait for the next order instead of having to return back to the forward base just to be sent out again.

Elena's team knew that the forward base was organizing reinforcements to send to the expedition area. With the jamming gone, it was easier for them to communicate with each other. Although Shikarabe's team did not like it, they still accepted the order.

Unfortunately for the group of men, Nelia and the rest had no wish to stay behind to help Shikarabe's team search the building. Considering Akira's state as well, they decided to leave.

With that, Shikarabe had no other choice but to go down the building with the other Drankam Hunters present. That was until they found a chopped up corpse of a Drankam Hunter.

"This gun owner code… Katsuya? This is Katsuya?"

Shikabare was so shocked, but he then immediately made a conflicted expression.

"…And here I thought he was someone who wouldn't die no matter what happened. I guess my intuition has really dulled, huh?"

Yamanobe laughed bitterly.

“He’s also a Hunter. So he will die when his time comes, just like any other Hunter. But still, this body… He was cut into 4 pieces, huh? This is not from a monster. Moreover, his head is not around, just where did his head go? Was it crushed or something? Was it mixed with all those blood splatters around?”

Valga returned after he looked around.

“The other Hunters are unconscious but still alive. They’re all fainted from exhaustion and it doesn’t seem like any of them are going to wake up anytime soon. The rest of their team is on the ground floor. Shikarabe, what’s the plan here? Should we carry all of them back?”

Suddenly an emergency notice reached everyone’s information terminal. They all made conflicted expressions when they heard the content of that voice notification.

“This is the long-term planning division of Kugamayama city! We’ve formed a truce with the caretaker AI protecting the large-scale expedition area! All the Hunters, follow the commands from the long-term planning division and send your location right away! Fighting between Hunters is strictly prohibited! The drones under the AI are already retreating! Don’t attack the monsters that don’t attack you! You may only fight the monsters that are not under the caretaker AI! Repeat! This is-”

Shikarabe, Yamanobe, and Valga looked at each other, confused.

__*__*__*__

Inside a world that was filled with empty whiteness, Tsubaki was standing face to face with two Alphas. The Alpha who had lost Katsuya was staring dagger at Tsubaki but Tsubaki just ignored her. The conversation had reached a block.

“Just give it up already. I won’t say anything else. The subjects under both of you fought each other on their own. It’s not like I can do anything even if you ask me to take responsibility. The jamming was done to throw the invading army into chaos, I didn't do that precisely to make the subjects under both of you fight each other."

"But I lost my subject because of it. Do you really think that I will let it slide just with that?"

"It's not my fault. It's their fault to be present when the jamming was activated. I have neither obligation nor reason to lower the defence of the area under my care just for the sake of the two of you."

Tsubaki's usual flat expression turned rather curt.

"As I said before, if you look down on us thinking that we should sacrifice the area under our jurisdiction just for your circumstances, then we also have our own thoughts on how to deal with the likes of you. The fault lies with you."

Tsubaki and the two Alpha were staring intensely at each other, the Alpha from Akira's side sighed and said.

"Alright then, let's take that as an unfortunate accident."

"Thank you for your understanding."

Tsubaki smiled amicably. The other Alpha seemed not entirely happy with that solution but still did not say anything further.

"Putting that matter aside, I want you to hand over the data of everything that happened during the jamming though."

"I believe that I have already done that."

"There's no data about your conversation with Akira."

Alpha's gaze turned sharp, but Tsubaki replied casually.

"That's my private negotiation data. I have neither obligation nor reason to share it with you. Ahh, but it's not like I'm hiding anything, you can ask Akira himself, right?”

“Is that so?”

“It is so.”

Alpha’s gaze turned even sharper, but Tsubaki continued ignoring it.

The reason why Tsubaki did not tell that particular detail to Alpha was simply to sow suspicion. She was trying to make Alpha doubt someone who would even sacrifice his own life for the sake of protecting his duties and promises. Someone who had absolutely no reason to be doubted. Basically, depending on how one was to look at it, it was Tsubaki harassing Alpha.

“If that’s all, I will excuse myself then.”

Tsubaki threw a deep smile at Alpha before vanishing.

Both Alpha understood that the parting words from Tsubaki were also a warning. It was some kind of demonstration that it was a mistake to look down on her. If Akira and Katsuya were killed, the Alphas would have no other choice but to make their move, and it was true even if Tsubaki only killed one of them.

Tsubaki’s main goal was to show that she could manipulate the situation to the point that the subjects under the two Alphas would kill each other. That she could do it indirectly to the point that she could be exempted from having to take the responsibility. It was a statement saying that she was willing to pick a fight with the Alphas, to the point that she would kill their subjects when the push came to shove.

“Well, it doesn’t really matter, this is an experiment anyway. Let’s just move on. But, there’s another thing that bothers me. My subject survived while your subject died. This is outside of our prediction. Outside of our prediction means it’s outside of our control, is that really okay?”

The other Alpha knitted her eyebrows in response to the other Alpha’s worry.

“Dealing with the aftermath is the only thing that we can do. Well, it’s an experiment after all, so there’s no need to worry about it. That aside, how about you? If your experiment has ended because you have lost your subject, I want to use your computation resources. If you’re just going to look for another subject, you don’t need all of your current computation resources, right?”

“No, I’m planning to change the subject and continue with the experiment. If that change fails, then I’ll stop the experiment there.”

“Is that so? Alright then.”

The other Alpha sulked.

“But still, why did all of this have to happen when it was going so well.”

“No idea, collecting data is also one of the goals for these experiments though.”

“You have a point.”

The Alpha smiled bitterly before vanishing from the white world.

A few days after the large scale expedition, Akira once again woke up in a hospital room. As he was about to push his body up, he inadvertently fell again. He was once again reminded that he had lost his arm and he smiled wryly.

“Waking up in a hospital room, this pattern again,…”

“This also means that you’re still alive, so I don’t think there’s any reason for you to hate it that much.”

Alpha who was next to him smiled gently at him.

“Good morning, Akira. Did you sleep well?”

“Morning, Alpha. Yeah, except for my arm, I’m good as new.”

“Don’t worry, you can just get your arm healed later. Although it might be a bit too late to say this, I’m glad that you’re fine. Now then, you’re already up, so I hope you can now tell me what had happened. It’s a good way to kill time as well.”

“Sure sure.”

The doctor who was responsible for Akira came. He gave Akira the document that listed the total cost of the treatment that Akira had received when he was unconscious. The doctor was also there to ask Akira about what to do with his lost arm. They could have healed the arm while he was still unconscious, but since he was a high-rank Hunter, there was a need to get his approval first.

Although there were few who would cut off their own arms in exchange for prosthetics, many replaced their lost limbs with prosthetics. They might do so even disregarding the treatment cost. After all, not a small number of Hunters lose their limbs fighting against monsters. Considering the chances that they would lose their limbs again, they chose to replace their lost limbs with prosthetics. This was instead of having to pay the heavy price of recovering their limbs every single time.

After Akira listened to the doctor’s explanation, Alpha then gleefully said to him.

“Akira, how about trying prosthetic arms? You can equip a gun, blade, or forcefield armour inside such an arm. With the help of my support, you’ll have no trouble controlling such a complicated battle-oriented prosthetic arm.”

Akira imagined himself sticking a magazine into his arm and shooting with it. The hand part of his arm was turned into a muzzle and returned back to his usual hand after that.

“…Nah, I’ll get a normal arm.”

“Oh, why is that?”

“I feel like it will not be very comfortable eating or going into a bath with such an arm.”

“If it’s about the look, you can buy an expensive prosthetic that looks exactly like a normal arm from the outside, you know?”

“No, no. it’s more of a matter of feeling.”

It was indeed an attractive offer considering its function for battles, but Akira did not like the idea of having to go through his daily life with it. Especially when he had an image of accidentally pulling out a rifle or a blade by mistake in the middle of a meal or in the bath.

The doctor noticed Akira’s weird behaviour.

“Is there something wrong?”

“No, it’s nothing. I’ll take the regeneration treatment.”

“Very well. To put it simply, you basically have two options, either grow an arm from the place where your arm was cut-off, or grow another arm and connect it to your body after.”

The doctor then explained the other details regarding the two options such as their prices, benefits and disadvantages. In the end, Akira chose the latter. After that, the doctor put a prosthetic that looked like an arm-only augmented suit on Akira. It then readjusted its shape according to the data from his measurement until it had the shape of his original arm.

That data would be used to grow another arm later so that it would not give any strange feeling after it was connected. The doctor then left after giving a detailed explanation as to how much it would cost and how long Akira would have to stay in the hospital.

Akira looked at the white prosthetic arm with great interest as he moved it around. He felt nothing strange with that arm as if it was his original arm. He could clearly feel the sensation when he grabbed an object with that prosthetic arm.

“What can I say… It feels so natural like my own arm.”

“It’s a medical prosthetic after all. It is extremely sensitive in order to get an accurate reading of your nerves for the new arm. Akira, try extending your hand forward.”

Akira just did as he was told and extended his arm. Alpha was smiling mischievously, his prosthetic arm reached to her chest and buried in between her valley. He could suddenly feel the warmth and the softness of a human’s skin as Alpha’s chest moved forward and buried Akira’s arm up until its wrist.

“Whoah!?”

Akira was so surprised that he pulled his arm in reaction. Alpha smiled smugly at him and said.

“I used the data from your augmented suit and tried to apply it to the prosthetic arm, how was it? It felt pretty real, didn’t it?”

Akira had not recovered from the shock.

“…Don’t surprise me like that.”

“How about trying touching other places as well while you have the chance?”

“…No thanks!”

“Is that so? There’s no need to hold back, you know? You can tell me anytime you change your mind.”

Akira’s face turned slightly reddish, he then turned away as if he was sulking. But Alpha found that very satisfying and smiled at him.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 226, Hospital Visits

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira had to stay in the hospital until the treatment for his lost arm was done. It took about three days to grow his new arm. On the first day, Kibayashi came to visit him with Arabe.

Seeing Akira cock his head the moment he came in, Kibayashi could not hold back his amused smile.

“Geez, that was cold. Although I’m here to give you a hospital visit, there’s no need to be that prickly, you know.”

“Then why are you smiling like that?”

“Well, that’s because you’re as reckless as always.”

“It’s not like I’m doing it because I want to. Are you here just to ask me about that?”

“That’s right, or so I want to say, but before that, business comes first. Let me introduce you, this is Arabe from Drankam.”

Arabe politely bowed to Akira.

“I am Arabe. I’m sorry to come here so suddenly, I asked Kibayashi to introduce me to you because there’s something I want to discuss with you regarding the recent incident. Nice to meet you.”

Akira was rather wary since he thought that he would get an earful of complaints after killing Katsuya. But seeing that Arabe did the opposite, Akira was at loss on what to do. That was when Kibayashi suddenly interjected.

“Before you guys start talking about your business with Drankam, I’ll give you a short explanation of what is going on. What happened during the large scale expedition, and what happened while you were out cold. After all, it won’t make any sense unless we let you know all about that first.”

Although Akira was still struggling to follow the unexpected turn of events, it was also true that he wanted to know more. So he decided to just listen quietly to Kibayashi’s explanation.

The Hunters in the expedition were thrown into chaos when Tsubaki suddenly jammed most forms of communication. But fortunately, the Hunters who joined the expedition were skilled. Although not all of them were that skilled, they were still at least able to work smoothly within their respective team. As such, normally, communication jamming would not cause such chaos.

But Tsubaki prepared something else to stir the pot. She had some Hunters paid to attack other Hunters, a team to attack another team, Hunters betraying their own team. And as the cherry on top, she also prepared Tiol to attack the Hunters. With all of these going off in one go, the situation was quickly thrown into utter chaos.

Among that chaos, Hunters were attacked by their teammates when in reality, those teammates were just look-alikes. They were old-world monsters modified with familiar faces thanks to Yatsubayashi.

When Hunters managed to establish a communication line with them through the close-range connection, what they would hear was filled with screams and gunshots. Tsubaki also lured monsters to clash with City Management’s powered suits. Of course, the line of command that was already established immediately went down under that situation.

Of course, there were also some Hunters who pretended to be working with Tsubaki only to leak that information to those on City Management’s side. Unfortunately, that information was completely useless. The long-term planning division already knew that some people made deals with the caretaker AI, so they did not pay much attention to them. Moreover, the information these Hunters gave was mostly useless and had questionable sources. Those who were betrayed also noticed that through their information terminal right before the jamming.

Some of the Hunters tried to send that information to HQ the moment they noticed it. However before they could do it, long-range communication to HQ was already down. Furthermore, these people were the first targets to be killed under Tsubaki’s orders.

With all the ensuing chaos, it was difficult to deal with the situation using teamwork. Thus, Hunters began to drop like flies and the death count reflected it. The beguiling ghost that tempted Hunters to betray each other, it was big enough of a tragedy for such an urban legend to be born.

After all these deaths, Yanagisawa managed to form a truce with Tsubaki. Moreover, City Management released an order that prohibited any form of retaliation, which would most likely stem from grudges. This applied between Hunters, to City Management, and to the ruin’s caretaker as well.

There were Hunters who betrayed their own team, there were also some Hunters who got killed because of misunderstandings. If they seek revenge, either targeting their other fellow Hunters, or going to the ruin once again to exact their revenge on Tsubaki, both would only serve to increase the body count. So in order to prevent that, City Management dispatched a squad to put the expedition area under a tight lock-down.

Kibayashi gave a short explanation to Akira. Although, since it was not like Kibayashi knew everything and was only able to give a quick overview of the situation, it was enough to make Akira frown.

Akira then noticed something that piqued his interest.

“You did say that City Management dispatched the squad to guard the expedition area in order to prevent more unnecessary deaths, right? But isn’t it because they have another reason behind that?”

“Hm? Well, it’s not 100% a lie, but well, basically, they can use that to mask their other reason. Of course, it’s all just my guess though, so don’t take it too seriously if you still want to hear more.”

Akira understood that Kibayashi was actually baiting him to say yes there, but even so, Akira still decided to take that bait.

“…Yes, please.”

“In that case, can you promise me to take Arabe’s business in a positive way?”

“Even if I haven’t heard what this business might be?”

In contrast to how Akira negatively reacted to what he just said, Kibayashi just chuckled and casually said.

“It’s not like I’m telling you to throw yourself into more danger without any reason. I just want you to take it positively in exchange for telling you my guess. It’s fine if you don’t want to do that as well. It’s nothing that serious.”

“Well, if it’s only that much.”

“Alright then.”

By acting as if it was nothing serious, Kibayashi was able to pressure a high ranking Hunter to accept a talk that he had not known yet. Arabe who realized that could not help but feel a bit of fear.

“Let me preface it with this, it’s all just my guess. City Management went as far as dispatching soldiers to guard the place, so one thing for sure, it’s something huge. They must have struck a deal with the ruin’s side.”

“Ah, I see, so that’s what it is, huh. So they’re planning to gather Chrome next, right?”

Akira was able to come up with such a guess thanks to all the things that he had learned. But his guess said with confidence was quickly shot down.

“No. It’s just my guess, but the deal might have been done in Aurum.”

“Aurum? But the ruin’s caretaker doesn’t have Aurum, right?”

“Correct. That’s why the payment is done through selling trash and other unnecessary relics from the ruin to City Management by putting a price on them. And then the caretaker AI would use that Aurum to pay for the expense of guarding the lockdown. So basically the caretaker AI is paying for the defence of their area. While on the other hand, City Management would be able to earn money from this as well. So, to put it simply, this means that Kugamayama city managed to strike a deal so that it can buy old-world relics with Aurum which is a corporation-issued currency instead of using Chrome.”

Kibayashi’s expression turned serious.

“Do you understand just how big this is? It’s extremely ecstatic news for Sakashita Heavy Industry that issues Aurum. It ushers a new wave of support for the corporation and it’ll gather everyone around Kugamayama city who is seeking old-world relics. Obviously, it’ll bring a huge influx of money. It’s unimaginable just how much profit this will bring. And at the centre of this development is that deal with the caretaker AI. Meanwhile, the main player who acts as the bridge between City Management and that ruin is Commander Yanagisawa. I bet no one in Kugamayama city can go against him now. Although I have to admit, it’s weird why someone of such calibre is in this city in the first place.”

Akira raised his eyebrows and was obviously surprised.

“Is that really amazing? Being able to negotiate with a ruin’s AI.”

“Yeah, it’s way more amazing than you can even imagine. Though it also depends on how well that person handles the negotiation. It’s amazing enough for the Corporate Government to scout them and place them as executives in one of the 5 top corporations’ main HQ. Ah, by the way, there are many AI in the ruins. Business AIs are easier to handle. They’re more open to deals, well, they’re made for business after all. Many of them are willing to make deals with just anyone as long as they have the funds to pay it. Some of them are even willing to barter in case their negotiation partner does not carry currency with them. But the caretaker AIs work under completely different principles. Many of them focused more on killing intruders, thanks to that, it’s almost impossible to make a deal with any of them. But that just means how precious it is to be able to make a deal with one of them. After all, if you’re lucky, you can get yourself involved in the old-world government.”

Akira gave a light nod, it seems that he was able to understand just how amazing it was. Seeing that, Kibayashi gave a satisfied smile and cut his talk short.

“That’s all from me for now. Well then, Arabe-san will take over from here.”

“Alright.”

Arabe nervously started with an opening.

“Let me introduce myself once again, I’m Arabe from Drankam. I’m here today to discuss a peace treaty with Akira-san.”

Akira pulled his head back out of surprise.

“P-Peace treaty, aren’t you exaggerating this too much?”

“There’s no need to be that surprised. Drankam has no wish to be hostile against you. Just think of it as Drankam’s way to convey the same.”

Arabe tried his best to maintain his best amicable smile.

“It is as Kibayashi-san just explained, we’ve also received a notice to stop any infighting between Hunters because of the mess that happened during the expedition. Although we’re still investigating the details, we’ve confirmed that a misunderstanding between the Hunters under our gang had caused you immense trouble. So in order to avoid letting that spark turn into more conflict, we’ve prepared a peace treaty document through the Hunter Office. Please carefully read through the document and sign it if you’re okay with it.”

Akira took the document that Arabe offered. But just like usual, it was filled with small dense letters as if it was not written for reading. So he took his usual move which was to rely on Alpha.

“Although it contains even the tiniest details, it’s basically just a normal peace treaty.”

“Are you sure it doesn’t have any difficult hidden clause or something that stipulates me having to pay a huge fine if I broke the treaty? Or maybe other weird clauses?”

“I don’t find anything like that.”

“I see.”

With this, Akira confirmed that it was a proper peace treaty. But he still found it a bit too much.

“Arabe-san, as I said, there’s no need to go this far, you know. Or more like, with the notice from City Management not to fight, I don’t see there being any need to make this peace treaty…”

Akira did kill Katsuya and a lot of his teammates, so it would not be weird if someone from Drankam attempted to kill him. Because of that, he thought that Arabe’s offer was too good to be true. He just could not help but to get suspicious that there were strings attached to it.

Arabe replied with a smile, but behind that smile, he was thinking hard about what to say. The silence continued since he could not think of any good argument, which only served to increase Akira's suspicion. Kibayashi, who noticed it, finally decided to intervene.

"To put it simply, Drankam is gathering documents to shut particular people up."

"Documents?"

"Drankam received quite a large loan from the city. That's why they receive a lot of complaints when something goes wrong. Something like 'if only they had properly followed the words of their sponsors', and that's also the case this time. After getting into conflict with a high ranking Hunter which ended up with so many deaths, the sponsors are questioning if they can believe a simple unwritten promise or even a treaty written on a single leaf of paper by City Management. That's why Drankam had to even go to the Hunter Office to prepare this peace treaty. That way, those people from City Management won't have any complaints."

Akira nodded in understanding.

"I see, so that's the reason, huh."

"If I may add something, it's actually a good offer for you too. Drankam has no wish to pick a fight with you, but of course, it's not like everyone in the gang is happy with that. You did kill quite a lot of them after all. So then, if any of them come after you, you can use that peace treaty and send a complaint to Drankam. I'm sure Drankam would get desperate and deal with it swiftly. As a Hunter gang, if news spreads of it ignoring a peace treaty made through the Hunter Office, it will cause damage that endangers the integrity of the whole organization. To top it off, they'll recognize you as someone who could deal with problems calmly and rationally. There are many people who think of Hunters as nothing but thugs, so it's important to build a good reputation. Your reputation will get better especially when it has a case to use for reference."

Kibayashi then took a short pause as his expression turned even more serious.

“And also, one more thing, Akira. It’s about time you stop looking down on yourself. I know it’s something left over from your days back in the slums where everyone looked down on you. But you should throw away that view already. No matter what your past is, no one questions the fact that you’re a high-ranking Hunter right now. I bet you’re thinking why someone would come to you with such a document, but from a normal person’s point of view, they don’t want to get into a fight with you even if it means they have to go through all the trouble preparing a document like this. It’s not like I’m telling you to make a 180-degree change, but at least stop looking down on yourself. It brings nothing but trouble both for you and the people around you. It will only give them more reason to misunderstand you, you know.”

Akira sent a serious gaze to Kibayashi, then to Arabe, before finally to the document on his hand. As he gained new self-confidence, he put his name on the treaty and returned it back to Arabe.

“Thank you very much. Now then, I need to return back and take care of the administration regarding this matter. So please allow me to excuse myself.”

“Akira, I’m heading back too. It’s really unfortunate that I don’t have the time to listen to your reckless story, but I’m pretty busy, you see. Until we meet again.”

Arabe politely bowed to Akira while Kibayashi lightly waved his hand as both left the room.

Akira looked at a copy of the treaty for his safe-keeping with a deep thought as he mumbled.

“…I guess I’ve become pretty strong, huh?”

Alpha smiled proudly and stated.

“It’s nothing to be surprised about since I train you myself. But still, don’t get satisfied yet, okay?”

“I know.”

Akira gave a light smile, it was the smile of someone who had recognized and accepted his strength.

__*__*__*__

Arabe was walking down the hospital hallway as he sighed in relief.

“Kibayashi. I really owe you one.”

“Just so you know, it’s not for free. As a matter of fact, it is not a cheap favour, okay?”

“I know. We did not have to pay for the damages and were able to sign a peace treaty even after that much fighting. It’s a really huge help.”

Arabe did say that Drankam was still investigating the details of the incident, but in reality, there were points and facts that Drankam had already confirmed.

City Management gathered all the Hunters from the expedition area regardless if they were alive or not and took the data from their information-gathering devices in order to help the investigation. Moreover, they also received data regarding the incident from Tsubaki via Yanagisawa. With all of this data, they were able to get a precise and accurate picture of what had happened.

Drankam received a piece of that investigation result and understood what had happened during the conflict between Akira and Katsuya’s team. Arabe could not help but sigh when he remembered those details.

“Although there is a lot of restricted information, it’s confirmed that Katsuya’s team attacked Akira due to a misunderstanding. We won’t have any argument to fight back if he demands compensation. In the worst-case scenario, Viola might get her hands on this matter as well. It won’t end up well for the gang. But now, we got him to sign a peace treaty recognized by the Hunter office before that happened. With this, we’ll be able to suppress the damage to a minimum. This alone is a huge help for us… It was a huge surprise that Akira did not ask for any compensation. I wonder if he's one of those Hunters who don't really care about money."

Kibayashi's lips curled up in a rather menacing smile.

"He's my favourite Hunter, after all, a reckless Hunter. He might prefer to exchange favours using life instead of money."

"Good grief, give me a break…"

It was not rare for failed negotiation with a Hunter to break into a fight. In the end, power was everything in the eastern district. Although the negotiation took place outside the wasteland, that line of thinking holds true as long as it was outside the city wall. Not a small number of corporations were brought to the brink of bankruptcy after making a huge mistake during a negotiation with a high ranking Hunter. Of course, they were able to repel that Hunter, but the sacrifice was not small.

Arabe could not help but to rub his temples when he imagined just how much death it would cause if Akira decided to attack Drankam. Seeing that, Kibayashi was happy since it seemed that Arabe understood just how big he owed him. Thus, Kibayashi decided to change the subject.

"So then, how is Drankam right now? With that huge debt to me, it would be such a waste if the gang crumbles and can't pay it back."

"To be honest, it's a huge mess. The effect of Katsuya's death is huge. Although this might sound weird, most of the officers including me, never thought that he would die like that. Some of them even got long-term contracts under the assumption that Katsuya would not die. And with his death, all of those turned into dust. He's a Hunter, it was not strange for him to die anytime. Although it was so obvious, I wonder why no one expected it at all…"

Getting ahead of themselves, getting too optimistic, was completely normal for Hunters. Even so, planning for the worst was a given as well, Arabe thought it was weird how no one was prepared for the worst-case scenario. Kibayashi smiled wryly at Arabe and said.

“He even caused Drankam to break into factions, it means that he must have been that talented. I did want to have a good chat with him at least once, but that chance never came until the very end.”

“It would be bad if your reckless loving fetish infects him after all. I bet the officers, especially the people around Mizuha, were actively keeping him away from you. Now that I think about it, it might have been better to let him meet you and get him through some dangerous situations. That way, we wouldn’t have placed that much expectation on him. But I guess it’s all too late now.”

“Well, you should make sure to learn from your mistake for the sake of those who are still alive. Katsuya was loved by many, right? It’s not rare for those who are unhappy with the situation to still pursue revenge. They might even do so with the peace treaty and Hunters notice from City Management in place. Be extremely careful with this, in the worst-case scenario, the peace treaty might be rendered meaningless, you know?”

“Yeah, I know. We went to get Akira’s approval first, so we’re going to use that as a reason to get Katsuya’s team to sign a separate peace treaty through the Hunter office. We’ll kick out any of them who refuse. Their equipment is all provided by the gang. I’m sure they’re not stupid enough to go and attack Akira bare-handed. Some of them are still unconscious from exhaustion, so we’re planning to deal with them one by one.”

Arabe imagined all the work that he had to do from here on and sighed. Kibayashi only smiled, watching how great an effect a Hunter could bring during his life and after his death. It was indeed one of many fascinating things related to Hunters.

＿＿＿*＿

On the second day, the doctor who was responsible for Akira’s treatment visited him with a large tube in hand. A single arm could be seen floating in the middle of that tube, it was Akira’s new arm.

The doctor then changed the setting of Akira’s prosthetic to connect his arm stump to the new arm and asked Akira to test how it felt.

Akira was surprised when the sensation from his new arm was sent to his prosthetic. He then proceeded to try to move his arm as he was told to. Although he could feel a time lag between his mind and the new arm, he could more or less move it like normal. He felt a strange sensation seeing an arm that was not connected to his body moving under his will. He tried closing and stretching out his palm, and moving his fingers one by one.

After trying a few things, Akira suddenly thought of trying something. He tried to move different fingers of his detached arm and his prosthetic arm. Although it was difficult at first, he quickly got used to it in no time.

The doctor watched that with fascination. But he quickly returned back to reality and stopped Akira.

“Ah, don’t do that! Stop doing something like that! It would cause confusion in your brain once we attach your arm back!”

“S-sorry.”

Akira flusteredly mentally synced back his detached arm with his prosthetic arm. The doctor lightly sighed and stated.

“But still, you’re pretty skilled. Normally, it’s impossible to do that, you know…”

“It had the same feeling as when I’m using my augmented suit, so I thought of trying it and somehow actually did it.”

“I see… If you’re that skilled, how about you try adding an extra arm? Like 2 normal arms plus 2 extra arms that are attached to your augmented suit. We can get you something like that if you want, you know? Normally, it would be extremely difficult to learn to control the new arms, but seeing what you did there, I bet it won’t be that difficult for you. I actually have an acquaintance who works on that kind of thing, I would be happy to introduce you if you want.”

“Thank you, but no thanks.”

“I see.”

The doctor looked rather disappointed. After returning the prosthetic arm setting, he then left the room together with Akira’s new arm.

Akira sighed in relief. Seeing that, Alpha smiled amusedly and asked.

“That was an interesting offer though. Why didn’t you like it? Don’t you think it would be convenient to get 2 more arms?”

“Well, it does sound convenient, but if I get too used to four arms with an augmented suit, I feel like it would be bad. I might just start feeling that my original two arms are not enough. In the worst-case scenario, I might end up wishing for more and more arms. I have no complaints with my current two so I have no plans to get more arms anytime soon.”

“Is that so? Well, I won’t force you though, it’s a matter of preference after all.”

“Preference, huh. How about you, Alpha? You have only 2 arms yourself, right?”

“Should I add more?”

“No, don’t.”

Akira knew that he would definitely be teased if he said yes. He would most likely have to live with a 4 armed girl every day, so Akira made Alpha seriously stop.

After that, a group of people came to visit Akira. There were people from Sheryl’s gang, along with Inabe, Viola, Yodogawa, Erio and Shijima. Of course, the only one who came there to check if Akira was okay was Sheryl. While the rest were only there to check if the Hunter supporting Sheryl was still alive or not.

Their visit started with some normal talks, but after that, they let Akira meet each individual in private to talk about business. The first one was Inabe.

Akira joined the large-scale expedition under his request. Regardless of the reason, Akira was not able to finish the request. So he thought that Inabe was here to talk about that. However, contrary to his expectation, Inabe was there to give Akira his connection as a reward for successfully finishing his request.

Akira was extremely surprised by that.

“Well, uh, I’m really thankful for the information, but are you sure you’re okay with that?”

“Yeah, in the first place, these connections will no longer be available to me after such a large-scale expedition failed under my watch. And right now, regardless of the situation, I was saved from that. Although it was completely unexpected, I did send you to danger for my own profit, so you can think of it as an apology from me.”

“That’s quite a large sum for an apology, you know.”

“…Well, it’s complicated, but I have reasons to be generous to you.”

Inabe sighed and smiled wryly before continuing.

“About the expedition, putting aside who deserves the credit, it actually ended up being a huge success despite all the sacrifices. Do you need more explanation on it?”

“No, there’s no need. I heard that City Management managed to strike a deal with the ruin’s caretaker AI to trade with Aurum through someone by the name of Commander Yanagisawa. And I heard that it would no doubt bring in huge profit for the city.”

Inabe raised his eyebrows.

“You even know that too, huh. It seems that you have some other connection to City Management besides me. In that case, you don’t need any more explanation, right? Basically, the area that is under lockdown by the soldiers dispatched by City Management is under my control. Although Yanagisawa basically has control over the deal made, I also gained a considerable amount of influence as well. That's why it did not end in a failure. As a matter of fact, it's okay to say it was a success. Though I don't like the fact that I'm basically working under Yanagisawa now."

Inabe rubbed his hand on his forehead as if to relax his face that had slowly turned stern. He then sighed as his expression completely returned back to normal.

"Well, so that's what happened. If you say you don't need it, although it's not like I'm forcing you to take it, you still can keep it. If you still can't accept this form of payment because you feel like you have not completed your request. Well, it might be weird, but there's one thing that you can do for me. Tell Sheryl that you're not angry. After all, I did end up sending you to the hospital. I want to get along well with her as well, so it would be great if you can, you know, pacify her."

"If it's only that, then sure."

Akira was surprised that Inabe actually thought that much of his connection with Sheryl. But thinking of Sheryl's current position, Akira thought that it was nothing strange and just lightly chuckled.

But in reality, Inabe actually did that to keep his connection with Akira. Inabe knew about Akira's battle with Katsuya's team in more detail compared to most people. Having a connection with a Hunter who could crush Drankam's rising star alone was a good thing. Moreover, he already noticed that Sheryl could not go against Akira. Considering his plan to gain money through Sheryl's gang, he needed to keep an amicable relationship with Akira.

"That's good to hear, well then, that's all I have for today. I will also tell Kibayashi about the connection I passed to you. I hope that we can keep working together from here and on out."

Inabe was satisfied with Akira's reply as he left the room after speaking his piece.

Yodogawa was the next one to enter the room. He was there fully for the sake of business.

Akira's badly damaged powered suit was hung inside his hospital room. He was planning to bring that to Shizuka for repair once he was discharged.

But Yodogawa strongly recommended he buy a new augmented suit instead. He was enthusiastically recommending Akira trade his currently broken augmented suit with a new augmented suit from Yodogawa's company. He brought up the company's connection with Sheryl's gang, a special discount for a high ranking Hunter, and a limited-time campaign to offer an extremely expensive high-quality product of his own company to Akira at an abnormally low price. Yodogawa's vigour greatly surprised Akira.

Of course, Yodogawa had a reason for this. To be more precise, it was because of competition. It would be bad for his company's reputation if Akira loved the products of another company; especially when he was the Hunter who demolished an entire team that was using their equipment.

Yodogawa's company already knew that Akira crushed Katsuya's team. Although connections were being jammed, which caused the coordination support system to be unable to utilise its full potential, it did not change the fact that Akira, alone, was able to crush them. To top it off, Akira did that while using an augmented suit from a different company.

The recent expedition was filled with a lot of important information. Those with keen insight already knew about Akira's battle against Katsuya's team. Although equipment did not exactly dictate the end result of a battle, it would still play a big role in deciding the victor.

If Akira used equipment from another company and made a deal with said company, then if he said that the coordination support system was nothing special, it would deal a crippling blow to Yodogawa's company. On the other hand, if Akira decided to change to his company after that battle, it would be a huge boon for his company.

In order to get over this crisis, Yodogawa did not care about profit or loss as he was trying to get Akira to change his equipment to products from his company no matter what the cost.

Regardless of the reason, Akira only stood to profit from being able to get an expensive product at such a low price. But that was exactly why Yodogawa panicked when Akira refused. With reason simply being that he wanted to buy equipment from the shop that he was familiar with, which caused Yodogawa to panic even more.

“I-in that case, how about ordering via that shop?”

“Hmmm, well, to be honest, I want to discuss with Shizuka-san first before deciding which to buy though.”

Akira was insisting on discussing with Shizuka first before ordering any equipment from her shop. Basically, he only bought equipment from the shops that he had a good experience with. The only exceptions would be the equipment that he got through his connection with Kibayashi and Inabe. At the moment, he had no plans to add Yodogawa to that exception.

Yodogawa already knew that trying to bait a Hunter like this would be futile. After all, many of the Hunters decided not to use helmets due to their intuition. Though, it was certainly safer to use one. Against those kinds of Hunters who risk their lives out in the wasteland, money would not be able to overcome their preference.

So Yodogawa decided to withdraw.

“Very well. It’s indeed unfortunate, but I’ll excuse myself here for today. Do tell me if you change your mind.”

“Ah, sure, thanks, and sorry.”

“Please don’t be, it’s perfectly alright.”

Akira felt that it was rather anti-climatic, but he did not say anything as he watched Yodogawa leave the room. The moment Yodogawa stepped out, the next visitor entered in a rush.

It was Viola and Sheryl. But when Viola brought up the suggestion about asking for compensation from Drankam, Akira told her that he had signed a peace treaty with them already. Hearing that, Viola was so surprised as she said curtly.

“To think that they made their move first, it seems that they have someone pretty skilled with them. Can you tell me the name of the negotiator that Drankam sent?”

“No.”

Akira’s answer was short and showed no chance for negotiation. But Viola then gave her usual smile and commented.

“Oh my, you’re so cold.”

“Only say that to me again when you mean it. The first thing that you said when you came here was suggesting that I demand compensation.”

“Oh, isn’t that exactly because I care for your well-being? If you just leave it to me, I can still deal with it somehow, you know?”

“There’s no one as desperate to rush to their death as to ask for a favour from you, and if there’s one, I’m sure they’ll kill themselves first before asking for your help.”

In contrast to Akira, who obviously seemed to be in a bad mood, Viola was smiling amusedly.

“Is that so? Well, feel free to come to me if you change your mind. I’ll do it for cheap. Well then, since it seems that there’s nothing more I can do here, I’ll excuse myself.”

Viola turned around and walked with a rather uppity stride. Akira saw her leaving the room while thinking, [Does she have another prey to go to?]

This was when Akira noticed that Sheryl was sitting next to him while staring at him.

There was a short silence. If they were real lovers, they would have embraced each other or leaned on each other. But Akira did not make any move at all and Sheryl did not have the courage to go any further.

“…It might be a little late, but I’m glad that you’re okay. Well, I guess you’re not really okay, huh?”

“Is that so? To be honest, I think this is still considered to be ‘ok’.”

“But, that arm, it’s prosthetic, right?

“Well, it is, but I asked for the regenerative treatment and I should get my new arm tomorrow. The arm is still in its growing phase and I’m going to go through surgery tomorrow to attach it back. Today, they brought the new arm and I tried to move it around by connecting it to the prosthetic. It was pretty interesting.”

“So, it’ll get back to normal? That’s great to hear.”

“Yeah, that’s why I think this isn’t that bad.”

“But it’s weird for you to be sent to the hospital if you’re really okay.”

“Is that so? Hmmm, well, other than losing my arm, I was in a way worse condition the last time I was sent to the hospital though. So judging from that comparison, this is not that bad.”

Akira was not trying to look strong, he only said so casually. But Sheryl saw that as how distorted Akira’s way of thinking was. He went to face death and many close calls. This normally led to the tragic end of those who saw the thin line between life and death too many times. They got too used to dangers, they stood calmly on top of the cliff that separated life and death. They had no problem peeking down the cliff, knowing that falling down would be fatal. As humans, they were already broken, and Sheryl caught a glimpse of that from watching how Akira responded.

The person who she loved and was the pillar that supported her, continued to stand next to death even now and it was unlikely that would change anytime soon. Moreover, she had no means to stop him. Sheryl had to learn to live with the fear of losing the one that she loved anytime from here on out. She could not handle that anxiety as she inadvertently hugged Akira.

“…Please don’t die.”

“Yeah, I don’t want to die either after all.”

“…Please don’t die.”

“It’s fine, don’t worry.”

“…Please don’t die.”

Sheryl’s voice was thin as if she was crying. Akira was not sure what to do there but he eventually slowly coiled his arm around her.

Although Sheryl knew that Akira only did it to calm her down, the warmth still soothed her heart.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 227, The Aftermaths

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

On the third day of his stay in the hospital, Akira finally went through the surgery, to stick his new arm to his body. Akira's body was already fixed on the operating table, ready for the surgery. The doctor took the new arm out of the liquid tank and placed it on the operating table, he then cut the overgrown part and readjust the stump. After that, he proceeded to shave the stump on Akira's shoulder before sticking both stumps together.

The surgery was done while Akira was conscious. When the doctor finished connecting some of the nerves, he then asked Akira to try to move it. Akira looked away from the cross-section of the cut as he tried to move his new arm.

"How is it? Do you feel any discomfort?"

"It's okay."

Due to the painkiller, Akira did not feel any pain at all. The still detached new arm also only had a numb sensation due to the drug. The surgery continued to connect the bone, the nerves, and then the flesh. Akira had to try to move his arms a few times in the middle of the surgery to check on the connection. In the end, the doctor wrapped it in a medical tape, and with that, the surgery was finished.

Akira tried to move around his new arm to give a final check. As expected of an expensive treatment, there was no discomfort, it was as if it was his original arm right from the start.

“Try not to do any heavy-lifting for the next 3 days. If it’s possible, I recommend using an augmented suit.”

“Okay, thank you.”

“By the way, about the multiple arms, in case you’re interested…”

“T-thank you for the offer, but no thanks.”

“I see…”

Akira felt a shiver down his spine from the disappointed doctor, so he quickly put on his augmented suit and left the hospital.

__*__*__*__

As Shizuka was waiting in her shop, she noticed Akira frightfully entering it. The moment their eyes met, Akira gave a rather stiff smile, so Shizuka simply smiled and waved at him to come over.

“It’s not like I’m angry, so you can just enter the shop normally.”

“Ah, yes.”

Shizuka left the counter and went to Akira, she then hugged Akira tightly and gently patted his head.

“…I don’t know what happened, but it seems that it was a rough one. I’m glad that you’re okay and that’s the most important thing. You’re okay, right?”

“Yes, I’m alright.”

“It’s all good then. I’m happy as long as you return and visit me in good health.”

Shizuka gave another squeeze before letting Akira go and returned back to the counter. She then returned to her usual business smile and asked.

“So then, I guess I should return back to my job as this shop’s manager. Akira, what can I do for you today?”

“Right, I actually want to order another set of equipment…”

Akira lost his bike, vehicle, and rifles, not to mention that his augmented suit was close to being unusable. So he needed to buy replacements for them. Shizuka was not that surprised. Especially when Akira was back in the same situation again. She could not help but smile bitterly.

“Well, that’s just so like you, or more like, it must have been rough.”

“It’s not like I’m doing this intentionally. Well, I’ve already partially given up on how things always end up like this. Fortunately, I have the money to buy good equipment, so I’ll at least buy my safety with money.”

Shizuka smiled mischievously.

“A lot of funds, frequent orders, and only buying expensive products. It seems that you’re turning into an excellent customer for me. Considering that I’m reaping profits as well, as a part of the special treatment for a loyal customer, I’ll prioritize your order.”

“Thank you very much!”

Seeing Akira smiling happily, Shizuka replied with a big smile.

“Ah, by the way, Akira, are you interested in augmented suits from Kiryou?”

“Kiryou?”

“Someone from that company came to my shop yesterday saying that they want to put their augmented suit in my shop. Since my shop doesn’t usually sell that kind of augmented suit, I refused. But they were so desperate that they even offered some special deals which make it actually sound suspicious instead, so I decided to just keep it for now. Although I can’t really tell you the details, basically Hunters that satisfy certain prerequisites should be able to buy this augmented suit with a special discount. You might be able to get that discount as well, so, what do you think?”

Shizuka only said so casually, but seeing Akira gave a rather weird response there, she then inquired.

“Oh, are you familiar with that name?”

“Uhh, well, actually…”

After listening to Akira’s story about Yodogawa, Shizuka nodded, looking convinced and a bit amazed.

“So that’s why. Basically, they’re hunting for a potential customer. Well, it’s true when a high ranking Hunter is using their product, they can use it as advertisement. I can understand wanting to secure a customer who often destroys their equipment and keeps coming back to buy expensive products.”

In reality, her intuition was telling that was not everything. But since it did not cause any inconvenience for both Akira and her, she decided not to inquire any further.

“So then, what are you going to do? If you don’t have anything against it, I’m thinking of accepting their offer. Of course, as long as it doesn’t have any strings attached. It’s a good offer both for you and me. If there’s anything to worry about, it might be that your equipment will lean toward what they manufacture from here on out. But as long as that discount applies and other companies don’t give you any discount, the cost-performance ratio of their product is great.”

“If it’s really a good offer for me and Shizuka-san, then please accept their offer.”

“Alright, I’ll discuss the details with them, so can you at least tell me your budget for now?”

“I’m thinking about 2 billion Aurum.”

Among the ammo and other expendables he had used up in that expedition, the hospitalization fee, the regeneration treatment, and the budget for his new equipment, Akira’s account, which was brimming with cash from selling the old-world automata, turned pitiful once more. He still had enough to get by, although the digits were reduced significantly.

Shizuka smiled amusedly and commented.

“Good grief, Akira, you’ve really grown up to be a great Hunter. No wonder even companies try to get you on their side.”

Akira smiled bitterly and replied.

“That seems to be indeed the case, huh?”

Shizuka raised her eyebrows. That reply just now showed no self-depreciation that Akira always had up until now. But she did think that this was a good change and was happy for him.

__*__*__*__

Yanagisawa was waiting inside a hideout in the lower district of Kugamayama city. It was a highly secretive place suitable for dangerous conversations and conspiracies. For example, a meeting with one of the nationalists. Although he had another hideout in the inner wall, smuggling a nationalist inside the wall was too much of a task even for Yanagisawa.

Yanagisawa was thinking inside that hideout as he mumbled.

“But still, to think Katsuya died.”

After making that deal with Tsubaki, Yanagisawa returned back to the city to deal with the clean-up and the aftermath. Once he was done, he then ordered one of his men to check up on Katsuya. That was when he received a report that Katsuya was already dead. Since that was completely unexpected, Yanagisawa ordered for a closer investigation. But the report regarding Katsuya's death did not change much.

[So the reason why she didn't ask for my help to deal with Katsuya was not because it violated their rules, but because she already knew Katsuya was dead…? No, I believe it's the former. She needed to get him killed through a method that didn't violate their rules. She basically used the jamming to cut off his support and then made use of the chaos. If Hunters fight each other, accidents are very likely to happen. I'm sure that's the gist of it.]

It did not matter how many times Yanagisawa tried to rethink it, he could not differentiate if everything was all according to Tsubaki's plan, or that everything lined up due to coincidence. But since he would be dealing with Tsubaki in the future, Yanagisawa assumed that the first guess was the correct one as he tried to rethink the whole incident.

[If I assume that this was all Tsubaki's plan, then just how far does her scheme go? Was the large-scale expedition also part of her plan too? No, what about that attack on the forward base? Wait, no, is it from that huge humanoid monster's attack? Can it be even earlier than that?]

Yanagisawa went through all the recent incidents in chronological order to pull out all possibilities.

[…Now that I think about it, there was a small commotion about old-world terminals. Was it from that time? Tsubaki might have transported those terminals here. I've already confirmed that she did something similar in the past to bait Hunters. That's why City Management was able to quickly determine where those terminals came from. After all, the same thing happened in the past. She might have deliberately released those terminals out to encourage City Management to organize an expedition. Then all the incidents preceding the expedition, such as the attack on the forward base, were for the sake of thinning out City Management's resources. Once that happened, City Management would send out a bigger army to ensure the success of the expedition. In such a manner, she would have basically manipulated the army. Taking that opportunity, she crushed the oncoming army, which resulted in plenty of deaths. To eliminate more people, the bigger the army, the more chaotic it was, the greater the death count…]

Yanagisawa's smile turned sharp. Everything was nothing but his guess, he had no proof that it was the real truth. But he also did not have any argument to deny that guess as well.

[Well, it doesn't really matter. It seems that we can get along well from here on out. I just need to always keep my guard up, that's all there is to it.]

Although they were not allies, they were no longer enemies as well. Furthermore, they had the same objective as well. Excessive suspicion would only cause problems. Thus, Yanagisawa decided not to delve any further into this matter.

The security system of the hideout suddenly issued Yanagisawa a warning. There was a guest. Yanagisawa did grant passage for certain individuals to his hideout, but since some of them often changed their faces or bodies, the system could not account for them.

Because of that, Yanagisawa was no longer surprised when he met an entirely different person with the same name as his guest. But this time, he was surprised when he saw his guest's face.

He was surprised to meet someone he recognised though, he knew that this person wearing that face was not one and the same.

"You're… Katsuya? Shouldn't you be dead? No, more than that, how did you get in here?"

The boy with Katsuya's face replied cryptically.

"I've given up my name for the great cause, or so I want to say, but… You can just call me with my previous name."

Yanagisawa came up with many guesses from that quick reply, his face then turned stern as he said.

“I know that followers of the great cause can change any of their body parts excluding the brain, but you, you even changed your brain, didn’t you?”

“Although it’s way more important than any other body part, the brain is nothing more than another part of our body that can be freely replaced.”

That young boy was Nergo. That head was gathered straight from its dead owner. There was still a mark leftover from where Akira split the head to two.

Yanagisawa tilted his head.

“What happened to Katsuya’s mind?”

“He’s already dead for good. Or at least, there’s no leftover of his personality in the brain. So, he no longer exists.”

“Is he really dead?”

“What is death? It is a difficult question to answer. Technology developments continue to blur the line between life and death. People can’t return back to life. If someone returns back to life, it means that they’re still alive right from the start. To put it differently, they’re not dead yet. Although it’s theoretically possible to resurrect someone, it’s still open to interpretation whether life after resurrection is still considered as dead or not.”

“I’m not talking about that.”

“You might already know about this. We had a separate deal with Tsubaki to help her cause more chaos during the expedition. At that time, she told us not to cause any harm to him. Even after I took the head off from his corpse, I did not receive any complaint from Tsubaki. So basically, according to the current standard, our standard, and the old-world standard, Katsuya is already dead.”

Yanagisawa was convinced by that argument, Katsuya was really dead for good.

“Hmmm, is that so? So then, How does it feel using Katsuya’s brain? Does it feel good?”

Nergo made an expression that was unlike Katsuya as he shook his head and explained.

“Unfortunately, it didn’t work out as I had hoped. I bet his death also cut off any of his connection to the old-world domain. Either that or we made a mistake while handling his brain, which caused some kind of incompatibility to the hardware. The reason doesn’t matter, in the end, I wasn’t able to recover his ability to connect to the old-world domain.”

“I see, that’s indeed unfortunate.”

Yanagisawa returned to his usual joking attitude as he smiled and said.

“So then, what do you need from me today? Ah, in case you want information about Katsuya in order to slip into Drankam, just to let you know, I don’t mind if you want to do that but everyone already knows that Katsuya is dead. I’m pretty sure it’s too late for you to do that now. But, do you still want to try?”

“No, there are too many people over there who were under his local network. They won’t recognize me as Katsuya even if I use his brain and face. I bet their personal identification system would identify me as a different person. Just to be safe, I won’t be going there as Nergo either. I’m planning to change face and work as a different person after this.”

“Hmmm, so, why are you here?”

“I just want to check something.”

“Check on something? If you want to ask me something, you could have just sent it to me through the usual line though.”

“No, there’s something that I want to confirm, and I was able to do so.”

“So then?”

“The reason why you’re looking for us is not for safe-keeping, but for eradication. I’ve confirmed that with absolute proof.”

Yanagisawa’s joking attitude vanished. His smile vanished. Only silent pressure and a pair of eyes that could pierce through one’s soul remained.

“So, now that you know, what are you going to do?”

Yanagisawa said that but he knew Nergo was not someone he could easily deal with.

“Nothing in particular. Unknown factors are a source of disruptions. If I really have to say it, then my objective is to remove these factors.”

“I see.”

After that, a short silence wafted between them. Both of them were trying to figure out what their opponent was thinking. Nergo was the first one to open his mouth.

“It’s completely unrelated, but isn’t it about time for you to tell us about your real plan? I do believe that both of us are moving for the sake of humanity. And I think that you share some of the same principles with us. After all, we were able to work together although only for a limited capacity. I think we can work together to realize our ideals.”

Yanagisawa seemed to hesitate for a bit, he then carefully said.

“…I have to refuse. I can’t tell you, or at least, not now. Although, if it’s after I have everything I need to reach my goal, I do think that we can be allies.”

“I see, that’s indeed regrettable. Now then, we shall wait patiently for the day that you have everything you need to reach your goal.”

Nergo only said so and left.

Yanagisawa relaxed his tense body and sighed.

“Give me a break already.”

Nergo did not fear death. But it was not because he could not die. It was because of the way he saw the worth of his life and his soul. It was for the sake of the great cause that he lived, murdered, and ultimately died for.

But that was exactly why Yanagisawa thought that he was a pain to deal with. If it was because of his immortality, Yanagisawa could still corner him by taking away his immortality. Even if it was only temporarily, he would be able to convince him that he had already lost. That would have been enough to scare him. But against those who laugh in the face of certain death, that method would be meaningless.

“What a huge pain in the neck.”

Inside the room where there was no one else but him, Yanagisawa started complaining and cursing.

After Nergo left Yanagisawa’s hideout, he then frowned and muttered.

“It doesn’t look like it would go well, huh?”

The reason why Yanagisawa refused the offer and decided to still stay in Kugamayama city, was for the sake of getting what he needed for his goal. The thing he needed most probably lay somewhere deep inside Kuzusuhara ruin, in the direction where the supply line was being pushed. The existence of an old-world connector that he could not control was an obstacle for him to reach the thing that he sought after.

Nergo noticed that from his last exchange with Yanagisawa. Yanagisawa himself might have deliberately done that as a form of compromise as well as a warning: ‘I would fight back if you get in my way’.

“As I thought, this isn’t going to be easy.”

Nergo understood well that it was a compromise as well as a warning. But even after knowing that, he was still trying to think of a way to get Yanagisawa on their side, unfortunately, no good idea came up.

__*__*__*__

Yumina was standing in the middle of a white room. Her consciousness was hazy, but she could recognize Katsuya, who was standing not too far away from her. She did not think much and immediately went toward Katsuya. But she suddenly stopped in front of him.

She was staring at that person that was obviously Katsuya from the outside. She then tilted her head and said.

“…You are not Katsuya. Who are you?”

“As I thought, you can tell, huh?”

That Katsuya vanished, and in its place, a girl appeared. She was an extraordinarily beautiful girl with a friendly smile. However, Yumina looked at her as if was a threat.

“I’m here with an offer, I hope you will hear me out.”

“An offer?”

“That’s right. It’s a very good offer for you and the rest who have lost Katsuya.”

The girl started explaining her offer with an amicable smile on her face.

Yumina woke up on the infirmary bed. Her consciousness was still hazy as she pushed herself up and looked around, confused. She felt like she just had a dream but she could not remember what it was. She could not remember who she was talking to and what she refused. As her hazy consciousness retreated, it also carried away that thought and vanished altogether.

“What was that…?”

Yumina looked confused for a few seconds. When she regained her calm, she then went through her memories. She remembered that she was busy preparing to retreat when she was inside the ruin, but nothing past that.

After that, Arabe came in and explained what had happened to Yumina.

“I see… So Katsuya is already…”

“Unfortunately, yes.”

Yumina was very saddened by the news, but for some reason, she was not surprised. Although she did not know the reason why, she somehow already knew that Katsuya was dead.

“I know that you haven’t fully recovered yet and you might need time to reorganize your feelings. You can just take it easy for the time being.”

“…Yes, thank you very much.”

Arabe felt a slight pang of guilt seeing Yumina politely bow at him, but he then shook that feeling off and returned back to business.

“Ah, and also, I know that I should bring this after you have fully recovered, but it’s my job, you see. I have something that I need to talk to you about, so please just listen to it calmly, okay?”

Arabe awkwardly took out a peace treaty and gave it to Yumina as he started explaining its content. Yumina only listened silently, and when Arabe finished, she signed her name on the treaty and returned it back to Arabe.

Arabe was a bit surprised by that as he looked at Yumina with eyes full of questions. His biggest worry was that Yumina only accepted that in appearance while was scheming for revenge inside.

“Uhh, well, it might be weird for me to say this since I’m the one who came to you with this subject, but, are you really okay with this?”

Yumina still had a saddened expression on her face as she forced a smile.

“Yes, I honestly don’t want this conflict to escalate any further. Moreover, I think Katsuya wouldn’t want us to hold on to this grudge and cause even more deaths.”

Arabe sighed in relief, it seemed that there was nothing for him to worry about.

“Thanks, actually, there are quite a lot of people who have refused, you see. Although I’m sure that it’s not like they will try to kill Akira, considering our relationship with City Management, we need to do this properly. I’m sure that they will change their mind once they calm down after a few days. At that time, I plan to try and convince them as well. If they still insist on not signing the peace treaty, we have no other choice but to strip them of their equipment and kick them out of Drankam. To be honest, I’m really troubled by this.”

“Can you tell me who refused? I’ll try to convince them.”

“Really? Thank you.”

Arabe, who seemed exhausted, thanked Yumina with a serious expression.

“By the way, did Airi also refuse?”

Yumina actually asked that question purely out of curiosity. But seeing Arabe make a conflicted expression, she felt that something did not go well as her expression turned cloudy.

“Uhh, Airi is still alive, right? I heard that from someone else before…”

“…Yeah, we were able to save her, but… I guess I’ll tell you. You will get to know eventually. We did save her and treat her, her life was in no immediate danger. She woke up not too long before you. Once I received that report from the hospital, I came to her room with the peace treaty too, but… She was no longer there.”

“She’s gone?”

“Yeah, it seems like she had sneaked out of the hospital. We dispatched some of our guys to look for her, but we have not found her so far. I think she’s currently confused and panicking but…”

The worry in Yumina’s chest turned worse. The shock even caused her to feel dizzy. But right now, she remembered a portion of her dream.

[So only you alone refuse, huh?]

The girl inside Yumina’s dream said so, it meant that someone else accepted her offer.

Airi was traversing through the wasteland on a vehicle. She was well-armed. Both the vehicle and her equipments were not from Drankam. She had them ready beforehand just to be safe in case she got kicked out of Drankam. She had been slowly gathering these equipment in secret.

Not too long after she left the city, she found some monsters. Airi jumped off the vehicle and directed her rifle at them, she closed her eyes and did not even try to take aim as she pulled the trigger. After holding down the trigger for a few seconds, she opened her eyes. All her shots hit and all the monsters in front of her were already dead.

A voice came out from her information terminal. Airi looked at the display, there was the girl that Yumina saw in her dream.

“How was it?”

“…Yes, I’ve confirmed it, we have a deal… What should I call you?”

“You can call me anything.”

“…I can’t think of a name.”

“In that case, you can call me Alias. We’re just like the embodiment of that word after all.”

“Alright, Alias. I’ll be in your care.”

“Likewise.”

Airi returned back to her vehicle and set out into the wasteland. As she left Kugamayama city behind, her face was filled with determination.

Silavin: Hmm… so, will she try to hunt Akira down?

From the start I liked Yumina more and always saw Airi as backup number 2 for Katsuya.

I think Yumina can side with Akira. The difference in their personality kinda seems complimentary. But well, I doubt Airi will be able to do much to Akira anyways.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 228, Akira and Hikaru

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Not too long after the large-scale expedition incident, Akira called Kibayashi to meet up in a certain restaurant on the first floor of Kugama building. Kibayashi was browsing the menu in a good mood.

“You’re the one who invited me, so you’ll pay for it this time, right?”

“Yeah.”

“That’s great to hear. By the way, why don’t we go to the higher floors?”

“I don’t have that kind of money. This place is already expensive for me.”

Seeing Akira frowning, Kibayashi smiled bitterly and remarked.

“No one would have expected that coming from a ranking 50 Hunter. Whether it’s for treating someone else or for treating yourself, a high-ranking Hunter like you needs to use the appropriate corresponding restaurant, you know?”

Although there were many deaths after that incident, many of the Hunters did not receive enough to make the job they took worthwhile. It was mainly because most of the Hunters participating in the expedition had their reward decided based on the relics that they brought back. Even for those in the extermination team, their contract did not award payment for the number of monsters that they defeated, but instead, the worth of relics found in the area that they secured. Based on those two criteria, most Hunters did not receive much at all.

Naturally, City Management could not use that excuse to not pay the Hunters. Nonetheless, these Hunters could not really be rewarded considering the fact that most of them were fighting and killing each other. None to mention City Management did not have that funds to spare in the first place. The cost of the powered suit used during the expedition was by no means small. There were many individuals and corporations that bet on the success of the expedition. Despite all of that, aside from Yanagisawa's deal with Tsubaki, the expedition ended up in a total failure. Thus, many investors could not reap the reward of their investment. In the worst-case scenario, it might even shake the city's economy. Therefore, City Management was working hard to find a way to stabilize the situation.

In order to do that, City Management offered rewards to the Hunters in the form of rank promotion. Rewards were normally a sum of money plus a Hunter Rank promotion. However, it had now turned purely into Hunter Rank promotion.

Naturally, there were Hunters who insisted on getting paid. To pacify them, City Management paid them based on their Hunter Rank after their promotion using loans. The loans came from selling bonds to several corporations and other cities. Although Kugamayama city was in a financial pinch, since there was a prospect of massive sums of revenue soon, City Management managed to amass more than sufficient funding.

The low-interest loan City Management provided was a huge help for the Hunters who had to pay for treatment, equipment, and repairs. It was just enough to prevent the Hunters from rioting.

With this, Akira received a huge boost in his Hunter Rank. It was thanks to the feat of crushing an entire team of Hunters alone. He also shot down a powered suit that was piloted by someone suspected to be a nationalist. If they considered all his achievement, potential payments and converted it into Hunter Rank, the increase would obviously not be small.

And so, with someone as skilled and as powerful as him, Akira's actions and words came off unbefitting of his position.

"If you want to change it to Shuteriana, you'll be the one paying, okay? If you don't want to, then you need to be someone that would give me a good enough reason to treat you there first."

"Geez, that's so stingy. Just so you know, I'm actually a big shot, you know?"

"So why is this so-called big shot driving a patrol truck in the middle of the wasteland."

"That's my hobby."

"Yeah yeah."

In contrast to Kibayashi who was smiling amusedly, Akira looked obviously exasperated.

Once they finished placing their order, the meal came not too long after. It was only once the dishes were on the table that Kibayashi started talking about the main subject.

"So then, what do you want to ask me today? After all, you were the one who called me here, it must be a pretty serious subject, right?"

"I want to hear the details of the equipment that I ordered back then. It's already been almost 6 months since then. I know that it's not that simple, but at least tell me what's the progress right now and estimate how long I can get them."

"Oh, about that, huh. It's still nowhere close to completion, I can't even give you the time estimation."

"Hah?"

Against Akira’s obviously disapproving reaction, Kibayashi frowned and rebuked.

“Just to let you know, it’s your fault that I put in the order late, you know?”

“How did that end up as my fault?”

“It’s your fault for adding Inabe’s connections in the middle of it. Thanks to that, the prearranged deal was thrown into the rubbish can. Moreover, since the situation had changed, when we asked you one more time about your order including the ones through Inabe’s connections, you yourself said to use all the connections available to get the best equipment instead of focusing on speed, remember? It’s given that only a handful of places sell such exquisitely high-quality equipment. To be precise, everything is from the east end of the eastern district. It is the closest you can get to the front line, where the best of the best equipment is sold. It’s really difficult to get your order through them on that side, you know?”

Kibayashi was fully expressing his exasperation with his body language as well. Seeing him like that, Akira faltered for a bit.

“I-I see.”

“What’s more, after Inabe got control over the supply line, he has become a pretty influential person. Thanks to that, many want to use that route as well. Although, I bet most of them are aiming for Yanagisawa instead. So he’s having a hard time over there dealing with the adjustment. I’ve been really busy, you know. Preparing negotiation materials directly not related to the order to smooth out the deal, getting myself involved in their negotiations, making offers, creating openings. It’s not easy, you know?”

“O-okay.”

“Even after getting the equipment that you asked for, we still have to figure out how to transport it here. I had to ask the city transports to bring it over so many times. They finally agreed when they had spare capacity. However, that is only for a single item. Even after they agreed, they are still scouting the networks and figuring out which route to take. That is not to mention the deals that I have to make to other parties involved as well. There are still a lot of things to do”

“Y-yes, of course.”

As Akira was overwhelmed by Kibayashi’s flurry of explanation that sounded more like an attack, he suddenly thought of something.

“If it’s about the transport, I can help out by paying to get it sent here in its own separate transport vehicle though. That way, everything should arrive faster.”

“Like hell it would, if you really want to do it, make sure to at least prepare 10 billion Aurum, alright?”

“I-It’s that expensive?”

Akira was utterly surprised. Kibayashi sighed exasperatedly and explained.

“Listen here. The front line is filled with monsters that are normally designated as bounty monsters around here. Now imagine paying the Hunters who spend their time fighting such monsters just to escort your equipment here. It will obviously not be cheap, right? Corporations dealing with transportation in between cities have to do a lot of ways to lower the cost. Things like building infrastructure along the safe routes, or carrying multiple cargoes in one go, or getting into long-term contracts with such Hunters. If you want to pay to transport your equipment separately, there’s no doubt that it’ll at least be that expensive.”

Now that Kibayashi explained it, it did make sense for Akira. So Akira just sighed and replied.

“…I see. That does make sense. I have an acquaintance who once transported equipment from the front line, so I must have gotten a wrong impression from there.”

“Well, there are some safe areas too, even in the front line. Moreover, there are people who love to boast about being in the front line. It’s impossible to trust them without any proof. You can test them with stories that they won't know unless they actually visited the front line or stuff that can be found only in the front line."

"That's true, I can't say for sure that he's not lying, but I got to see something that I heard only exists in the front line. It was a gun called Ragnarok. Elena-san and Sara-san were there too, so I'm pretty sure it was really a Ragnarok."

Kibayashi raised his eyebrows and smiled amusedly.

"Ohhh, in that case, he must really have a safe route to the front line at the very least. So, what happened to him? People who bet on the transportation of such stuff usually either end up with a huge profit or a huge loss"

Stories of people who reached for success through one enormous bet was Kibayashi's favourite. Even if their bet failed, he would still relish it. However, though he showed his interest, in contrast to that, Akira paused for a bit before replying.

"…I think it's neither. It seems that he's working as a normal merchant right now."

"Ohh, that's unexpected. Hmmm… Can you introduce me to him? Don't worry, you can just tell me his contact number. There's no need to reserve your time to introduce him directly to me."

"Sure, I don't mind, but he's not a Hunter, you know?"

"It doesn't matter, as long as they're daredevil reckless people, their occupation doesn't matter."

"Yeah yeah."

After Kibayashi received Katsuragi's contact from the obviously exasperated Akira, he then returned to the main subject.

"So, the equipment will still take some time to arrive. Well, I'm sure it's not fun to just listen to my excuses as to why it'll still take some time. So, I'll at least let you know this. For the transport, it seems that it’s going better than I thought, as long as we can get the product, it might reach here sooner than expected. We’re in the resupplying season right now, and this time, Kugamayama city is joining the distribution network.”

The Corporate Government had a regular large-scale transportation season. During that time, they took in requests to transport money, cargo, and even people all over the eastern district in order to proactively encourage economic circulation throughout the eastern district.

Due to the support from the Corporate Government, transporting between cities that would have normally cost a large sum, could be done at a small price or even for free. It also helped transport people, who could not travel due to the price, and distribute them to locations that needed them. Thus, stimulating the development of the eastern district.

Of course, there was also another secret reason. It was also useful to transport people from overpopulated cities to the slums of other cities.

Even if the Corporate Government stopped the free food distribution in the slums of certain cities and told them that there was a surplus in the other cities, people with no money nor power would still not move to the other cities. To be precise, they could not afford to go. However, if transport was free, then it was a completely different matter. People from the slums would actively participate in the transport season, believing that they had a better chance of surviving somewhere else. It was a more ethical way to control the population density of the slums in the cities instead of just killing them. Thus, the reason why cities tolerated such a practice.

While at the same time, it also worked as a way to transport Hunters who started to run out of work in the cities they were in. They could go to a better place with more Hunter jobs before they turn into thugs and bandits out of desperation. After all, penniless but armed Hunters would not be able to live elsewhere other than the slums.

Moreover, plans for constructing new cities or a base way past the front line would be often done during this season. After all, they needed to transport a lot of resources to execute such a plan.

With all of these reasons intertwined, trucks and other transport vehicles filled the wasteland during this season. Of course, it greatly roused the monsters. However, with the monetary support from the Corporate Government, each transport vehicle was guarded with enough escorts. It was a good opportunity to show the power of the Corporate Government as well as to thin out the monsters roaming the wasteland. Due to this large-scale movement, the eastern district was able to build infrastructure to travel through the wasteland.

Akira tried to remember when was the last transport season, but considering that he could not even tell what was the date back when he was in the slums, he could not really identify when was the last transport season.

“The transport season, huh. I feel like it’s been quite a while since the last season.”

“The transport season itself is always done at least once per year, but it has indeed been quite a while since the last time Kugamayama city joined in on it. Although each city is recommended to join, it’s still up to each City Management’s discretion to join or not. Basically, we have no say in such a decision, but well, it’s kind of easy to guess the reason why Kugamayama city decided to join this season.”

“Oh, what reason is that?”

Kibayashi pulled back his head and raised his eyebrows. He then gave a bitter smile as he stated the reason.

“It’s for replenishing Hunters.”

Kugamayama city had several ruins around it and each ruin offered different levels of challenge. Some of them were completely explore-able even to new Hunters while some even required veteran Hunters with proper preparation.

Moreover, the regular patrol request made by City Management was basically training for newer Hunters to get themselves ready to face real ruins. At the same time, it also helped these amateur Hunters to earn enough money to get by. This way, they would not be forced into robbery and other crimes.

Working together like this encourages the Hunters to form teams. Thus, effectively reducing the number of Hunters who challenged the ruins alone only to end up dead. Although it had many downsides, the benefits were also equally as many if not more.

Due to this, Kugamayama city was a relatively good city for Hunters to chase after success. This was the reason why Hunters from nearby cities were attracted to here. Many Hunters stayed in this city for a long time to polish their skills before heading out east for more profitable ventures.

With such a background, Kugamayama city had become well known even among the Corporate Government as the city of Hunters. But unfortunately, that title was obsolete.

“Well, with a lot of things happening, we lost quite a lot of Hunters after all. Even if we talk only about the incidents connected to ruins, there were 3 in Kuzusuhara ruin and 1 in Mihazono residence ruin. Basically, there were 4 major incidents recently and each incident took many lives. There was that huge battle in the slums the other day as well. This is on top of all the common deaths from the Hunters as well. That’s why it would be bad for City Management unless we manage to bring in more Hunters from the other cities”

“…Is it really that bad?”

“It definitely is. Ah, right, you are used to working alone so it doesn’t affect you much, huh? Well, some people might indeed think we didn’t lose that much if we only look at the total percentage of fallen Hunters. But the effect is clearly palpable. There are quite a lot of Hunters who take a short hiatus or even decide to outright completely stop working after losing their partner, you know. There was a short time when we had a crisis. There were a considerable number of relics brought to the exchange centres and the number of Hunters who signed up for the patrol request skyrocketed. Oh, wait, this is a secret, okay? After all, everything I just said is insider information.”

“Ah, right.”

“We were able to regain some of our spirit and managed to gather quite a number of Hunters thanks to news of Yanagisawa’s successful deal with the ruin’s A.I. It would have been really bad if that did not happen. I bet Kugamayama city would have been forced into a recession if it was not for that.”

Although Kibayashi said so in his usual casual joking manner, he was telling the truth. The city was indeed on the brink of an economic crisis. But that’s exactly why Yanagisawa’s recent achievement gave him immense power and influence.

But Kibayashi suddenly gasped as if he just noticed something.

“Wait, now that I think about it, you were also involved in all of those incidents, right?”

Akira inadvertently looked away.

“…Well, I restarted my Hunter activity around that time after all.”

“You’ve gone through all of those incidents and came back alive, no wonder you’re doing great as a Hunter, as I thought, I can identify an exceptional Hunter when I see one”

In contrast to Kibayashi, who was laughing cheerfully, Akira only gave an awkward bitter smile. Although Akira thought that those incidents were not really his fault, his face still stiffened when Kibayashi brought them up.

They then had a short idle talk afterwards before Kibayashi asked Akira’s plan from here on out.

“By the way, you got promoted to Rank 50. Are you planning to go to the other cities?”

“No, I don’t have that kind of plan at all.”

“That’s great to hear. It seems that I’ll still be able to enjoy more of your crazy stories for a bit longer.”

Akira knitted his eyebrows.

“Is there any connection between my Hunter Rank and going to the other cities?”

“Well, it’s just a rather common thing for the Hunters around Rank 40 to leave Kugamayama city and go to the other cities. And it’s also very common that they’ll leave right before they reach Rank 50. Because of this, people basically recognize Kugamayama city as a city for Hunters below Rank 50.”

“Oh? I didn’t know there is that kind of upper limit.”

Seeing Akira so surprised, Kibayashi added to his explanation.

“Oh, please don’t misunderstand. It’s not like the Hunter Office sets an upper limit for the Hunters to stay in this city. It’s basically just a matter of risk and reward. Convenience, and supply and demand. Since most of the Hunters leave the city before they reach Rank 50, as expected, no shop suitable for Hunters of Rank 50 and above can be found in this city. So, there is the trouble that they would have to go through for their equipment. It’s also hard to find suitable party members as well. And to top it off, there are not many ruins around that match their skills. Because of that, it’s extremely difficult to raise their Rank even higher if they stay in this city. So for those Hunters who are aiming for Rank 50 and above, this city is only suitable for them at most till Rank 50.”

Akira was listening closely to Kibayashi’s explanation. After he gave a nod indicating that he could understand that reasoning, he then tilted his head.

“I see… Wait, you just said that there are not that many ruins that match their skill, right? In that case, how about the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin? They can just go there, right?”

Kibayashi could not hold back his smile in response to that naive question.

“If you think so, you’re more than welcome to try.”

Akira frowned.

“… Is it that bad?”

“We’re talking about the area past the supply line that City Management built by splurging a huge amount of money here, you know? We are only able to slowly push deeper only after dispatching powered suits. A Rank 50 Hunter would die in no time. Those Rank 60 or 70 Hunters might have a chance if they go with their own powered suit. However, there isn’t a shop or a place for them to get their equipment properly maintained around here. Of course, City Management itself does have a place for that, but it’s usually fully utilized by the city defence squad. So, they don’t have the spare time nor capacity for Hunters. Ah, by the way, just to warn you. Although people were using powered suits during that incident in the slums, it’s unwise to think of them as the same kind of power suit I’m talking about here, okay? What I’m talking about are proper powered suits, properly maintained and piloted by real, skilled Hunters.”

“I see, that does make sense.”

That argument was enough to fully convince Akira. But as if they were exchanging positions, this time, it was Kibayashi who suddenly went deep in thought.

“…But well, the situation might change from now on. Not only has Yanagisawa restarted pushing the supply line deeper into Kuzusuhara ruin, it seems that he’s also gathering high-ranking Hunters to explore the inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin. Other plans that involve large funding to construct infrastructure inside the ruin are also in progress. Some of the Hunters who had gone east are returning back. Don’t you notice any of this?”

“…Now that you mention it, I feel like I’ve been seeing more and more Hunters with outfits that look like swimsuits under their coats. Are you talking about those people?”

“Judging from their fashion sense, there’s no mistaking it. Those are the Hunters who used to live in the eastern front line. Akira, be careful. As I said before, Kugamayama city is participating in the transport season which means that there will be an influx of Hunters. This includes those Hunters that I’ve just mentioned. Some of these Hunters will need some time to adapt to the common sense of this city. They might act meek just because Hunters who can destroy a vehicle with their bare hands are considered weak from where they come from. If you get in a fight with any of them, you might get yourself killed.”

“Alright, I’ll be careful.”

In response to Kibayashi who gave that warning in his uncharacteristically serious tone, Akira could feel the danger in his words and gave a firm reply.

＿＿＿*＿

On the next day, this time, it was Kibayashi who called Akira to come to a meeting. As Akira was waiting for Kibayashi on the first floor of the Kugama building, just before it was time for the meeting, a girl appeared from the inner wall.

Akira looked suspiciously at that girl who was walking toward him. She was donning a City Management staff’s uniform and looked rather mature, compared to the current Akira, who had gone through a growth spurt and fixed his physical condition lately, that girl seemed to be around Akira’s age. Basically, she was a tad bit too young to be called a full-grown adult but a little bit too old to be called a little girl as well. In short, she was rather too young to be from City Management, which was filled with adults.

The girl smiled nervously at Akira and gracefully bowed.

“Akira-san, correct? I’m Hikaru, I’m working from the same bureau as Kibayashi. Nice to meet you.”

“Eh, ah, right, uhhh, where is Kibayashi?”

“I’ll be responsible for you for today. Well then, shall we go somewhere else to discuss the main matter for today?”

“Whoah, wait, wait.”

Akira took out his information terminal and called Kibayashi.

“It’s me, what is it?”

“Don’t give me that crap. Where are you now? If you have someone else to come because some sudden business came up, at least leave me a message, will you?”

Akira then proceeded to explain the situation to Kibayashi. Of course, he was planning to give Kibayashi an earful at the start, but his plan changed after Kibayashi replied with something that he did not expect.

“So basically, someone else came to the meeting place right on our agreed-upon scheduled time and she gave my name, right? Let me tell you that it was a good move to contact me first instead of just going with her without saying anything.”

“What do you mean?”

“I’m saying that she might be trying to trick you.”

Akira shot a sharp gaze to Hikaru. Although Hikaru did not understand why he did that, it still sent a shiver to her spine.

“Whoah, don’t get me wrong though. I’m just saying it as a possibility. Hikaru is indeed someone I know. I can at least guarantee that. But I won’t guarantee anything past that point.”

Akira frowned even more.

“What kind of game are you playing here? I’ll just leave if you won’t properly tell me what’s going on.”

“That in itself is also an option for you. Kicking the deal down the drain because there’s no one that you can trust during the negotiation, without receiving any explanation regarding the matter. That is indeed a good move. Although, I won’t say that’s the correct move in all cases.”

Akira sighed. Kibayashi, who could hear that sigh from the other side, smiled amusedly.

“As I warned you in the past, being a Hunter who is only good at fighting but not at negotiating will bring you into a lot of trouble. So just use this chance as practice. Let me remind you again, I can only guarantee you that she’s someone that I know. You do the rest yourself to confirm her identity, her position, her goals, if she’s someone that you can trust or not and if she’s someone capable or not. Of course, you can ask me later to try to check your answers, but you should do it yourself first. Later then.”

Kibayashi ended the call. Alpha smiled at the troubled Akira.

“So, what’s the plan? Are we going to just leave?”

“…Well, this is also a kind of training, so I’ll at least hear what she has to say.”

Akira’s gaze returned to Hikaru. Although there was no trace of suspicion in that gaze, Hikaru could not help but get nervous.

Akira then decided to bring Hikaru to one of the restaurants on the first floor. Hikaru, who was sitting face to face with Akira, politely lowered her head.

“I’ve confirmed this matter with Kiabayshi beforehand, but I apologize if I made a mistake.”

“Ah, don’t worry. Well, it’s true that I haven’t heard about this before, but I don’t think it’s your fault, Hikaru-san.”

“Thank you very much. Also, there’s no need for honorifics, you can just call me Hikaru and please just talk with me casually. It’s in order to build trust which is important during negotiations. Being polite and rigid instead of prioritizing the flow of information might cause distrust and miscommunication, which would defeat the main purpose of negotiating. So please, just talk to me casually… Well, although, I do think that Kibayashi's attitude is way too casual."

Hikaru smiled wryly which Akira replied with a light smile.

"Alright then, in that case, you can just call me Akira and you can talk to me casually as well."

Hikaru looked a bit troubled, in reality, she was actually really troubled. But after a short pause, she decided to take up the offer.

"Alright. Now then, casually, right? It seems that you haven't heard anything from Kibayashi, so, well, where should I start…"

Hikaru was watching Akira closely to make sure that she did not sour his mood while she kept her casual attitude on the outside.

"In that case, is it okay if I ask you some questions first? I'm sorry that it might sound a bit too offensive."

"Of course. You can ask me anything. But just to let you know, I'll just say that it's a secret if you ask me about my three sizes or if I have a boyfriend."

"Well, it's not about that. Hmmm, yeah, let's start with, are you really from City Management?"

"Oh, that's a bit surprising. The answer is of course a yes. I'm indeed a staff member from City Management. To be more precise, I'm from the general division, in fact, I'm the youngest one in that division."

"What if I ask you for proof?"

Hikaru's smile immediately turned troubled. But behind that brave front, she was actually squeezing her brain for an answer.

Akira was dealing with Hikaru as a training partner. The reason why he could ask such a rude question was simply because he thought of this meeting as training. But Hikaru did not know that at all. Because of that, she took that question as a form of distrust and suspicion from Akira.

“Will it be enough if I say that Kibayashi was the one who told me to come here?”

“It’s because that Kibayashi only testified that he knows you and nothing more, so I have to do the rest myself and try to identify you.”

Hikaru’s smile stiffened, she spat a curse in her mind.

[That bastard… So basically this is another test or something? That damn sly old-man.]

Hikaru’s job that day was to negotiate with Akira and make him accept the deal. It was a kind of test so that Kibayashi could recognize her skill.

Negotiating with a high-ranking Hunter was an important job for City Management’s staff. Whether it was about gathering relics or participating in the protection of infrastructure, both depended deeply on the result of the negotiation. Of course, negotiation would go smoother the more the negotiator had the trust of those high-ranking Hunters.

Kibayashi himself gained his position of power by identifying competent Hunters, giving them a chance to shoot for success, and maintaining relations with those who had survived their gambit. Although most of those successful Hunters had left Kugamayama city to head east, they were still in a contract with him to send invaluable relics or return back to the city in case Kugamayama city was in danger. As such, he had quite the grip on the city even right now. The reason why he could move freely was because not that many people could challenge him due to his connection with those Hunters.

Naturally, Kibayashi was a busy person. He could not afford to deal with every single Hunter by himself. That was why he often had someone under him take over the negotiation in his stead. These negotiators then formed a connection with these Hunters as well and gained influence and power the same way Kibayashi did.

Hikaru was recognized as a competent staff even though she was the youngest in her current division. She was proud of that fact as well. So, she thought that it would be no trouble for her when she asked for some Kibayashi's work. However, against her expectation, Kibayashi casually rejected that idea saying that she would not be able to handle it.

After that, fueled by her ambition and to take revenge on Kibayashi, she took it personally and went around to lay the groundwork. In the end, she managed to force Kibayashi to give her a task with a certain condition attached.

Nonetheless, it had to be said that being able to force Kibayashi like this was a testament to how talented she was. Though, that was also the root of the situation that she was facing right now.

Hikaru was trying to find out what Kibayashi's real plan was by looking closely at Akira's reaction.

[So basically he's telling me that I'm not ready for this job if I can't even convince my negotiation opponent about my identity, huh? Fine then, I'll do it then!]

Hikaru pulled her information terminal on the table and placed her ID card on top of it. The information terminal then showed her full information as a staff member from City Management.

"This is an identification document used by City Management's staff to show their identity. It also contains staff information controlled by City Management. This uniform is only designated for official staff, anyone else who uses this will get a severe punishment. Will this be enough?"

Hikaru was satisfied with Akira's reaction, seeing him nod as if he was fully convinced. However, Akira thought that since it was a good chance to train himself in case someone was trying to deliberately trick him, he decided to question her further.

“What if I say that you can fake that document and no one would get suspicious if you use that uniform with confidence?”

“That’s a totally valid question, well. In that case, we can go to the Hunter Office together where I can prove my identity.”

Akira nodded again, but he did not stop there.

“What if I say that you’re working with someone inside the Hunter Office?

“Eeeh… I think that’s going a bit too far. It’s impossibly difficult to do that, you know?”

“Well, if it’s about an isolated Hunter Office with not that many visitors, I don’t think it’s that difficult to do that though?”

Akira then told Hikaru what happened back then when he registered as a Hunter for the first time. Since Hikaru was not that familiar with the situation outside the wall, she was pretty surprised to hear his story.

“…I see, so there’s a problem with the quality of the Hunter Office’s staff outside the wall, huh? But we’re talking about the past here, right? Ah, but then again, if we’re talking about how far someone would go to trick a Rank 50 Hunter, I can’t really say that it’s not possible, hmm…”

Hikaru already noticed that Akira was not trying to harass her by asking her these difficult questions, that was why she answered rather casually.

“I heard that a lot of good Hunters tend to prefer to get the evidence themselves. So how about you, Akira? What will you do in order to convince yourself?”

Hikaru thought that if Akira only had half-baked methods to do that, she would use it to corner Akira instead as she leaned forward as if to peer into him and unravel his thoughts.

“In that case…”

If someone was suspicious of others just for the sake of suspecting them, then there would be no end to it. They would always find a reason to suspect the other party. The real question would be at what point they would no longer be suspicious of each other. Akira understood that very well, that was why his thought leaned toward what kind of compromise he could take in case he indeed got tricked.

Seeing that, Alpha smiled smugly at him and asked.

“How about asking me?”

“That was my first thought, but if I do that and the other party asks me for proof, I can only say that it’s from my intuition. So I don’t think that’s the correct answer in this kind of situation. But if I can’t do that myself, then my only choice is to ask someone else who can tell…”

Akira smiled wryly and finally answered Hikaru’s question.

“I guess I’ll ask someone who can do that for me.”

“I see, then, how about you try that now?”

Hikaru opened her palm forward toward Akira as if she was challenging him to do just that. He thought to himself that he might have gone too far questioning her as he decided to actually try that in order to at least satisfy Hikaru as well. Excluding Kibayashi, there were two candidates that he thought to call. So he opened up his information terminal to call one of those two candidates. The call immediately connected and picked up.

“It’s you, huh. That’s rather rare for you to call me. What is it?”

“Someone is claiming to be from City Management in front of me right now. If you know a method to quickly discern if she’s telling the truth or not, can you tell me?”

“…You called me just for that?”

It was Inabe, the other candidate that Akira thought of was Viola.

But after hearing that exasperated reply followed by a sigh, Akira thought that it might have been a bad choice calling Inabe. But Inabe did not close the call although he sounded really annoyed.

“Wait for a sec then… This one will work, huh… Alright, I’ve temporarily connected your information terminal and the identification machine over here. Now put her ID card on top of your information terminal.”

Akira asked Hikaru to do it and the result immediately came out.

“The result is out. Sakuyama Hikaru from the general affair, that’s her. Is that good enough?”

“Is it okay if I ask you how you confirmed it?”

“It’s based on secret technology, I can only tell you that it’s a technology used in order to prevent people from falsifying their Hunter ID.”

“I see, that’s good enough for me. Thanks!”

“You owe me one, alright? So I’ll have you return this favour now. Let’s see, go visit Sheryl to cheer her up, and tell her that I helped you.”

“Alright.”

“Also, face the information terminal at her.”

Akira did just as he was asked, the information terminal display quickly switched to Inabe’s face that was glaring daggers at Hikaru.

“I don’t know who you are, but stop giving me trouble.”

Hikaru knew Inabe very well. Although she was surprised, she did not miss a beat to apologize.

“I-I am really sorry!!”

But before Hikaru started apologizing, Inabe already closed the call. What was left behind was an awkward silence.

Akira was the first one to break the silence as he was awkwardly said.

“…Uhh, sorry.”

“I-It’s fine, don’t worry about it.”

Hikaru tried her best to don a friendly smile, but as expected, it was impossible.

__*__*__*__

After finishing her business with Akira, Hikaru stayed behind in the restaurant, eating a parfait. Akira already left the place, so she did not have any reason to put up appearances anymore. She took her sugary replenishment with a tired face and sighed. It was difficult to tell if it was because of the sweets or because of how exhausted she was.

“…I’m beat… But, it at least went well… Right?”

She was saying that to herself as if to tell herself that although there were unexpected hurdles, her original goal has been achieved. The reason why she had a question mark in the end, was because the incident with Inabe was outside her expectation. Thus, she was not sure if she was able to handle everything perfectly.

[He must have thought that I was trying to do something bad there… But it was good that Akira was taking the offer positively after that. But still, I didn’t expect Akira to have direct contact with someone like Inabe. That Kibayashi! to think that he gave me such a Hunter to handle, is he planning to ridicule me if I wasn’t able to deal with him well enough? If that’s really the case, I’ll make him regret it!]

Akira was a Rank 50 Hunter who had direct contact with a City Management officer. If Hikaru was able to gain his trust and take him away from Kibayashi, it would greatly boost her position. It might serve as a stepping stone for her to soar higher.

[I’ll definitely handle this well.]

Hikaru carried another spoonful of parfait to her mouth as she got herself pumped up, the burning spirit and the sweets caused her to show a smile that was suitable for a girl of her age.

But that excited Hikaru to forget about one thing. Kibayashi loved reckless people and he enjoyed the end of those people, regardless of whether it was death or success.

Kibayashi gave Hikaru a chance to gamble, and now, he was looking forward to the results.

Silavin: Holy shit! This chapter is long! This is the usual chapter x 1.5!

Please thank Athena-sama for this and p4553r-sama.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 229, Pruning Request

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was traversing the wasteland on a vehicle with Sara and Elena. The vehicle itself was large with a removable top. At the moment it had its top open. Elena was driving in the front while Akira was sitting in the back with Sara.

“Elena-san, I’m the one getting helped here with this vehicle, so the least I can do is drive it, you know?”

Akira sounded rather apologetic, but Elena replied with a smile.

“Don’t worry, it’s fine. We’re the ones handling the transport. Since we’re doing our duty the best we can, I hope that you’ll do yours as well; as our main firepower that is.”

But Sara interjected there.

“Elena, I’m also responsible for that too though?”

“Oh, in that case, I hope you perform at least as well as Akira.”

“Whoah, that sounds tough.”

“Good luck!”

Seeing that friendly exchange between Sara and Elena, Akira decided not to let himself be bothered by his worries any further.

The job that Akira accepted from Hikaru was a request that was connected to the transport season. According to the contract, Akira had to do Hunter jobs in his designated area. And this time, that job was to prune the monsters around the transport route.

Of course, the large-sized transport vehicles used by the cities were accompanied by powerful escorts, but the bigger the vehicle, the more it would rouse the monsters in the area. Each assault from monster swarms meant accumulating delays to the delivery. In order to ensure the transport took the shortest time possible, there was a need to thin out the monster density along the route beforehand.

Akira came to do it with his new equipment, but as expected, it was impossible for him to move around all by himself. After all, his new equipment did not include a new vehicle nor a new bike.

The offers that came to Shizuka’s shop was not limited to Yodogawa’s Kiryou corporation only. Another offer came from a long-established corporation that was trying to expand its business throughout the eastern district, TOSON. As a matter of fact, TOSON was the manufacturer of the SSB multi-rifle. TOSON found it weird that a small shop that should have been only visited by third-rate Hunters was ordering expensive products from the corporation repeatedly. Thus, eventually, TOSON decided to send an inspector from the branch office responsible for the area where Shizuka’s shop was.

As a weapon manufacturing corporation, Yodogawa’s company was standing on the same level as TOSON. It was not rare for an augmented suit to be sold in a bundle together with guns. So if TOSON offers a huge discount for such a bundle, Kiryou would have to find a way to counter that offer. Thus, it created an intense price war between the two.

Because of that, thanks to the ‘generous’ discount that both companies were offering, Akira ended up deciding to spend all of his money to buy from both TOSON and Kiryou. Unfortunately, neither of them had vehicles to sell. Of course, if Akira had asked them to, they would use their connection to the other corporation that dealt with vehicles. However, as expected, they could not promise any discount for that purchase. Despite the large discount and the excellent cost-performance ratio of his new rifles and augmented suit, it was still a bad move for Akira to even spend his reserved fund, originally meant for purchasing vehicles.

Akira knew that it was a bad idea to not have any means of transportation, but he thought that it would be fine since he could ask Sara and Elena for help. After all, they did tell him to rely on them, or he could just rent a vehicle. So he pushed through with his decision and prioritized his equipment.

Unfortunately, at the moment, it was difficult to get a rental vehicle. Among the people who were related to the rental business for Hunters, Akira was already widely known as the vehicle destroying Hunter. Thanks to that, the rental fee was extremely high for him. After knowing the cost of renting a single vehicle, Akira thought that it was better to buy one himself and decided to seek help from Elena and Sara until he could buy his own.

Hikaru was giving a direct request to Akira. And that request did not put any constraints on how he would accomplish it, there was no need for Akira to give any explanation before the request, all he needed to do was to give his final report once it was done.

In order to guarantee the success of the request, many requesters tend to ask for detailed explanations and make a lot of suggestions as a form of support for the Hunters. Of course, in the end, it depended on the Hunters whether they would take that support or not. If the final report was not mandatory, it could be taken as the requester abandoning their responsibility. Which in turn would cause distrust between the Hunters and the requester. In conclusion, the requestor would need to be skilled in offering support, gaining the Hunter’s trust in order to increase the chance of success.

After thinking it through, Hikaru decided to just let Akira do what he wanted to do in the end. Of course, she would have to take responsibility if the request ended up in failure. She did want to meddle, but she did not think that a Hunter who was working with Kibayashi would like that. In order to gather likability points from Akira, she decided to hold herself back.

Thus, when he was told that he had free reign, Akira took that literally. He was basically doing everything based on his mood. The only thing that bothered him was that Elena and Sara were basically working under him due to the request.

“It might be weird for me to say this, although it’s because of the request contract, Elena-san and Sara-san are working under me though, are you really okay with that?”

Elena chuckled.

“Why won’t we be? It’s not just because of the request contract, in truth, you’re already above us. So there’s no need to worry, you can just take the lead, you know?”

“U-Uhh, even if you tell me so, to be honest, I still want to learn from both of you though…”

Sara smiled and joined in.

“In that case, you can tell us to track the situation and report it to you with a suggestion on how to deal with it, you know? You’re basically our employer this time, so let us do our job to the best of our abilities.”

Sara then smiled as if to hide her loneliness and continued as if she was trying to convince herself.

“…Although you have surpassed us in many aspects, if you think that we can still help you, there’s no need to hold back. You can rely on us.”

“…Okay, thank you very much.”

Akira questioned himself if he was being a bit too considerate and decided to just put that behind for now. He smiled and thanked them. Elena and Sara responded back with the same cheerful smiles.

That was when Elena noticed that they were closing in on their destination.

“Akira. It’s time. It might be a good idea to let them know as well.”

“Ah, you’re right.”

Akira operated his headgear to contact someone else.

“It’s me, we’ll arrive soon. Get yourself ready.”

“Roger that!”

The one who answered that order was Erio.

A large-sized truck was running not too far from Akira’s team. It was also a vehicle designed for use in the wasteland. It was well equipped for battle as well. The backside of that truck had an operable cover as if it was designed to carry a powered suit. But the cargo that the truck carried was Erio’s team, who were armed with coordination-support powered suits.

The children reacted differently toward the current request. Some of them were joking and laughing while some were waiting nervously. Some were utterly scared and some were completely calm.

“I wonder if we’re going to be alright. This place is already quite far to the east, right? I heard that the monsters around there are so different compared to the ones around the city, you know?”

Though there were some anxious children, there were also those who took it completely fine.

“Don’t worry, Akira-san is here too after all. If boss thought that we were useless, she would not have sent us out in the first place, you know. If we’re only going to slow Akira-san’s down, boss would have stopped us instead.”

“Y-you have a point.”

The anxious boy nodded repeatedly as if he was trying to convince himself. Meanwhile, the calm boy was telling herself that repeatedly as well for the exact same reason. Considering that there was Kiryou’s staff were not in the trailer, it gave another reason for them to feel more anxious when they were looking for reasons to be calm.

Erio’s team followed Akira during this request as helpers. Both Viola and Kiryou received information regarding Akira’s request separately, but both of them then came to Sheryl to suggest she join that request. Sheryl wanted to be useful to Akira. Kiryou wanted to get a good track record for their support system. While Viola wanted to get profit from that request as well as to enjoy some other things as well. With all of these reasons lined up, Sheryl’s gang also joined in the pruning request. They took it in the form of a reinforcement request from Akira.

“Don’t worry, I heard that Akira-san is Rank 50 while the other two are already past Rank 40. They’ll be the vanguards. We’re not the main firepower this time. We can just fight safely while looking for chances to help out and get some money. In the case of an emergency, we can withdraw further and focus on providing support. Our role only amounts that much this time.”

“You’re right, yeah.”

As they calmed down, their conversation started to steer toward idle talk. It showed that they were already feeling safe as they talked about the things around them instead.

“But still, the other two that Akira brought with him today are both really beautiful. Sara has impressive boing boing, while Elena has an excellent body line… I thought that he’s not interested in that kind of thing since he’s going out with boss, but I guess that’s not exactly the case, huh?”

“Isn’t it the opposite? It’s because he doesn’t care about such a thing that he’s okay with any sizes, it must be nice to be in his position.”

Laughter started to spread, it just went to show how many agreed with that statement. Naturally, some of them took it as a joke while some were extremely envious of Akira.

“By the way, just a thought though, I wonder if boss knows that Akira is bringing those two with him on this job?”

“…Maybe not, I guess? Well, either way, even if boss doesn’t know, it’s not like we can just tell her. It’ll only sour her mood, you know?”

“Yeah, you can say that again.”

The others around them smiled bitterly and nodded in agreement, this time, all of them had the exact same thought.

In the middle of their idle chat, Erio suddenly lightly clapped his hands to gather their attention.

“Akira-san just called me. We’re already close, so get yourself ready. Make sure to check that the coordination support system is active after you turn on your augmented suit. Make sure to double-check, it’s basically our lifeline out here.”

Everyone started their preparation accordingly since they already decided beforehand who would be the leaders during the request. Thanks to all the training that they had done beforehand, their preparation proceeded smoothly and ended up without any trouble. Their moves there were no longer that of children from the slums.

But the fact that they still had the chance to have such silly conversation to calm themselves down showed that they were still amateurs. This time, their silly banter was directed at Erio.

“But still. Even with boss, those maids, Viola-san and Carol-san, along with those two Hunters that are with him right now, even with all of these girls, it doesn’t seem that Akira-san has any trouble dealing with them. Even you, Erio. You stick out among us and have something similar as well. As I thought, when you have a girl, it really pushes you to become stronger, right? Or is it because you get stronger that girls are attracted to you? Which one do you think it is?”

“Just so you know, I’m devoted only to Alicia.”

“It’s not really that different, I know that some girls are trying to approach you, you know?”

The boy was smiling mischievously when he said that, but Erio glared at that boy and warned.

“Stop it. I’m not the same. I properly turned them down… It might be because of those rumors that Alicia is getting worried lately. It was tough calming her down, you know?”

“Unfortunately, we can’t understand the hardship of a popular guy.”

As that boy looked around, the other kids nodded in agreement. Although some of them also had a girlfriend like Erio, they were not that popular so they had the right to agree with that statement.

In reality, Erio really did not have the luxury to brag about his situation, so instead, he replied with a rather snarky remark.

“Humph, if you’re really in a hurry, you can just ask Carol, you know?”

Suddenly everyone fell into silence, Erio immediately realized that he said something that he should not have and froze for a second.

“…I take that back, uhh, what can I say, never do that, okay?”

Carol was a beautiful girl with an excellent body. Most of her outfits were tailored to men’s preferences. She was someone who was easy to get along with and she knew how to get a conversation exciting. She listens when someone looks for advice and would give great advice. To top it off, for her side-job, she would even take little to nothing as long as it was the money that her clients got from risking their lives. Though, this offer mostly extended to first-timers.

Naturally, there were some who could not hold themselves back. They got too close to Carol during their joint activities in the gang and ignored Colbert's warning.

Although the first go was cheap, the price quickly climbed up for the next time and subsequent times after as well. But even so, they could not forget that so-called heaven on earth and continued. Eventually, they started going out hunting for relics all by themselves. They worked hard past their limits to earn enough to somehow manage to continue. But of course, it was only a matter of time before everything spiralled out of control. Eventually, they could no longer earn enough money. If they were able to hold themselves back because they did not have enough money, then Colbert's warning would have been unnecessary. Unfortunately, that was not the case.

Victims started to pile up as they got themselves killed out in the ruins. Some even went as far as to steal money from the gang, which Viola quickly noticed and gave their names to the gang. Even after hearing that, Carol did not change her attitude at all.

Sheryl herself was troubled that more and more boys were falling for Carol just to meet their demise. She did make a contract with Carol though. It was so that she would not take the initiative and would not accept those who already had a girlfriend. But that was the furthest she could do. This was mainly because Carol threatened that if Sheryl put even stricter rules, then she would go for Akira instead. Thus, Sheryl had no other choice but to back off.

After all that happened, Carol was well known to be a dangerous honey trap inside Sheryl's gang.

"…You don't have to tell us that. We know well what happened to those who ignored Colbert-san's warning, right guys?"

He tried to mix a joke in his reply to lighten the mood and looked around to see if the others agreed. Of course, the other kids agreed with him. But among them, there were some who had a stiff awkward smile when they nodded.

Erio noticed a message from the coordination support system, so he changed gear and shouted.

“We’ve arrived!! Let’s go! Get to your post!!”

The trailer’s side door opened up. Everyone pulled themselves together to get ready for work as they followed the command from the coordination-support system. They got to their post and readied their grenade launchers.

Not too far from the trailer, there were 2 other vehicles. One of them was Colbert and his team. They also participated in the current request. But their employer was not Akira, it was Sheryl instead in a form of a proxy contract with Akira.

Bosshu, who was there thanks to Colbert’s invitation, chuckled and said.

“But still, to think that lone Hunter we met back then would turn into a Rank 50 Hunter. And now, we get to participate in the great transport season through him. Colbert, I bet your real aim in helping that gang is to make a connection with that boy.”

“Nah, it’s totally a coincidence.”

“Is that so? We’re talking about you here. Considering your connection with that witch, I thought that this was your real goal. But that aside, it’s pretty amazing how you can get along with her. Although Viola and Carol are not the same, both often lead Hunters to their demise, you know? Don’t you think you should keep your distance from them?”

“You just need to be extra careful with them. Both can bring you profit if you’re smart enough, you know? Well, although, I’m basically just trying to get by while taking a break from my original Hunter job. But just because I can do so doesn’t mean that you should do it too. It won’t be pretty if you make a mistake.”

Colbert said so while smiling bitterly. He thought of someone he knew who made a mistake dealing with those two women.

Peppa was also there from Colbert's invitation, just like Bosshu, he laughed mockingly and spoke to Colbert.

"The one having it hard is you who is taking a hiatus, you know? It's good that you're slowly returning back to your origins as a Hunter, but isn't it too much for your rusty skills to face the monsters around this area?"

Colbert gave a smug smile and replied.

"Oh, what was that? Don't tell me that you're too scared and want to go back home now? Don't worry, you can use the excuse that I got too scared so you have no other choice but to retreat when the push comes to shove. Also, even if my skill got rusty after only taking easy jobs since I'm on a break, I'll do something about it. Just like how the past me used to save your asses."

"Hah! It's funny how you can still run your mouth like that!!"

Seeing Colbert and Peppa exchanging jokes like that, Bosshu could not help but smile remembering their past.

In contrast to his casual attitude, Colbert actually understood that he could not take it easy. He knew that the difficulty of the request was already well above what he could handle. As expected, he could not fight side by side evenly with a Rank 50 Hunter. If the request from Sheryl did not specify that he would only need to provide support fire, he would never have accepted the request.

But even so, that request was a good chance for him to rehabilitate himself so that he could slowly return back to working as a Hunter. Up until now, he pushed himself to fight back against his trauma to get out to the wasteland. He would often use the excuse 'I was just doing this to accompany Erio and the other children'. During that time, he encountered multiple monsters that looked like the one that took his limbs and almost killed him. Even so, he still forced himself to fight against those monsters and slowly treated his trauma. When today's request came, he decided that it was his time to fully let go of his past and move forward.

If he could keep his calm even when fighting against monsters that were way above what he could handle alone, then there would be no longer any need to get scared of that weak monster which had almost killed him in the past. He stepped out into the wasteland with that thought in mind that day.

He used all the money that he had been slowly saving up when this day came. He got the best equipment that he could get, thanks to that, he would not even be able to return back to his past lifestyle if he could not earn enough from today's request. Even so, he did not regret his decision at all. Talking with his past teammates like this helped him to regain his past sense of self, calming himself down for the incoming challenge, as well as pumping him up.

While the other vehicle was Levin and Hazawa. In contrast to Colbert's team that was filled with light-hearted exchanges, the mood in Levin's team was heavy. After all, they were heading east where the monsters were stronger and scarier than usual.

The source of the heavy mood was Levin. He kept sighing even as of right now. Hazawa, who had been listening to him this whole time, eventually had enough and spoke up.

"Levin. I know it's my fault for reminding you, but you should shake that off right now. Otherwise, you won't be able to fight properly."

"…I know."

Although Levin felt slightly angry, he knew that Hazawa was right. Of course, it was not enough to get his mind out of its predicament, but it was enough to help him try to shift his focus off from that thought.

"Regardless of the reason, it doesn't change the fact that you manage to get yourself good equipment. Heck. it's good enough that it would have been difficult to get through normal means. So just focus on earning more with those weapons of yours. It would be stupid to keep dragging yourself down and miss this chance to earn money, you know?"

"…I know, alright!!"

The moment he tried to calm himself down, he was reminded of how bad his situation actually was. Thus, Levin could not help but inadvertently roar out.

After working long and hard under Katsuragi to pay back his debt, he finally was able to get out of that life. Though, his debts have not been fully paid off yet.

He had to go to the ruins and return back with relics. He had to return back alive from these dangerous ruins and to do that, he would need to use up expendables. Each use cost him and when it was not enough, he knew had to get better equipment to safeguard his life and get better relics next time. Nonetheless, his cost usually exceeded what he could gain from the relics. Due to this, each time he was sent out, instead of reducing his debt, it was only piling up.

But even so, his rank was increasing. Thanks to the debt, he did not have the money to spend on drinks, or women, or gambling. So the time that he used to use for leisure in the past shifted to work instead. With each expedition that he survived through, he returned back with better relics, which also slowly increased his Hunter Rank.

That was when Katsuragi recommended him a set of equipment to match Levin's Hunter Rank. This was when he had just a little of his debt left (in proportion to what he earns from a single expedition). It would have been all for nought if he died after raising his rank that high. Moreover, he should be able to pay it back considering his earnings at the moment. In the first place, it would be stupid to die just because he did not have decent enough equipment after all that he had gone through. Levin's cautious nature pushed him to take up the offer even if he had to increase his debt even for a bit and hoped that he would earn enough to clear away his debt.

If Levin were to be frugal with his expendables for the sake of repaying his debt, he would take more time to fight against monsters. This would lead to a higher chance of getting injured, which in turn would mean he would have to rely on expensive medicines. So in the end, it would only end up increasing his debt instead. While on the other hand, splurging money on ammo for the sake of safety would be directly translated to more debt. He also could not go to a safe ruin. This was due to his contract with Katsuragi, which stated that the ruins he could go to were under the discretion of Katsuragi.

Levin himself knew that he had grown as a Hunter. But he also understood that his debt was only growing bigger. If he does not do anything fast, it would be really bad for him. As he was agonizing over his choices, he went for some cheap drinks, got into some fights, and by pure chance, he met and consulted Viola, who was nearby at that time.

Viola happily suggested a way out for him. It was to join all the debts from various companies into one place, moreover, they were concentrated on a single legitimate loan company. The interest was close to zero, which made the company seem like it was Levin's sponsor. Thus, Levin was no longer controlled by Katsuragi and was able to get better equipment through the connections owned by that company.

And then, finally, Levin's debt went past 300 million! It was the culmination of Viola's payment and the more debt from his new equipment. That sponsor corporation was Kiryou and the new equipment was actually experimental products. Basically, he was participating in the pruning request for the sake of weapon testing.

[…My debt with Kiryou doesn't have that strange rule like the one with Katsuragi. If the amount of debt passes a fixed limit, they will also give me some compromise to make sure that I would be able to repay all my debt. Kiryou itself will also cooperate in order to get good advertisement material for their products. If they can leave a good track record during the weapon testing, it should also increase my worth as a Hunter and increase my Hunter Rank. Considering all of these benefits, that 300 million Aurum is not really that bad. Or more like, it can be taken as some kind of investment from Kiryou to me… I know that, I know that but…]

Levin was once again reminded. Viola never lies in order to manipulate someone, but after a few days, he started to feel anxious. And finally, that day, after Hazawa asked him where he got all of his high-quality equipment from, Levin was reminded that Viola's help never came for free, it always had some kind of string attached.

Kiryou itself was a decent and honest company, compared to other individual lenders such as Katsuragi, it was obviously a better choice to borrow money from them. Levin had no complaint regarding the matter.

But still, 300 million Aurum was not a small amount. Each corporation had different ways to collect their loans depending on their size. Or at least, they would always have a connection to certain debt collectors. If it was a debt collector sent by individual lenders like Katsuragi, he at least would have a chance to fight back. However, that was not the case when it was against a large corporation like Kiryou.

At the moment, he was given special treatment since he was helping out with the weapon testing. However if he could not deliver good results during the testing or if the corporation decided that he was useless during the testing, he would lose that special treatment. That would be the moment when Kiryou's debt collector would come for him. That would also mark his end. What awaited him after that was the same thing that happened to those that attacked Sheryl's base the other day. He would have preferred death instead of having to go through that fate.

After Hazawa pointed that out, Levin finally realized just how dire his situation actually was. If he could not perform well in today's weapon testing, it would end up really bad for him and that possibility sent a shiver down his spine.

Hazawa tried to calm Levin down for the sake of his own safety as well.

"Your new equipment has that coordination support system, right? It's a support system that includes augmented suit's manoeuvring support. It's the same system that those brats are using. Right?"

"Yeah. I heard it's a version of that system with some extra adjustments. After all, unlike those who are working in a huge team, I'm working alone. I think it's to create a system where you can join the other already working network under the same system when it's needed. Considering that there are Hunters further to the east who prefer to work solo. They developed this new option to attract them, and they also mentioned many other features as well."

“It’s good enough to turn those brats who were moving like amateurs not too long ago to be decent enough to bring out for this request. I’m sure it’ll work like magic for an experienced Hunter like you. Especially since you have gotten a lot stronger as a Hunter recently. So I’m looking forward to your performance.”

“…Yeah, you have a point. I paid a lot of money for this, so it must be at least be that good.”

Levin knew that Hazawa was trying to calm him down by saying that, but since it did help him lessen his anxiety, he decided to just accept it and use it to get himself more fired up.

“But still, I didn’t expect someone as cautious as you to come as well. No, wait, it might be because I’m too anxious that I assume it’s more dangerous than it actually is, huh?”

“Well, it’s up to you how you want to take it.”

Seeing how casually Hazawa responded, helped Levin to calm down as well.

But Hazawa was only trying to look calm. Moreover, remembering his first time meeting with the source of the main true requestor, Akira, really made him feel conflicted.

[Although we were riding in the same truck not too long ago, to think that we’re already this different in such a short span of time. It’s a matter of talent, huh… Or maybe it’s a matter of how many times we challenge dangerous situations? Though, I don’t think that’s all there is to it…]

It was a mix of envy and jealousy toward someone who overtook everything that he had worked hard to achieve. Constant victories over the life-betting gambles was an obvious route to reach glory. Although he had given up in the past, it seemed that he still had some admiration, or even hope, to reach that glory.

Being cautious was nothing more than an excuse to be a coward. He had fallen from grace compared to his past self. He thought that he did well dragging himself out of that hole. Although he was able to reduce the times when he hid behind the word ‘caution’, he still could not return back to those Hunter’s activities that proactively chase for greater glory.

But as of late, there were way too many big incidents around Kugamayama city. Many Hunters died in those incidents. Half-baked caution would only lead to death. Being overly cautious would mean that he would not even be able to go out of the city. When he was agonizing about what he should do, Colbert suddenly came to him with today’s request.

[…I’ve started to change ever since I met him, this must be some kind of fate, I just have to keep moving forward.]

He could not afford to get back to his past self that had nothing to chase after. Hazawa decided so as he took a step forward.

When they noticed that Erio and the other children started to move out, they changed gear and said with a big smile.

“Levin, here we go!!”

“Yeah!! Let’s do this!”

Levin tried to fire himself up by saying so as he pulled out the large-sized gun that he saved for that day. If he could not earn enough today, then there would be no tomorrow for him. That thought filled his mind as he had a grim look on his face and fought with the ferocity of a cornered man.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 230, Change in Akira

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Old-world cities were spread across the wide wasteland. Most of them were not dilapidated enough to be called ruins, so Hunters tend not to visit those places when they hunt for relics. Thanks to that, monsters could freely multiply in those places.

Usually, even if they were not close to the transport route, people still take the safer approach. They would keep their distance away from these places in order to avoid getting detected by the monsters there. In the first place, the infrastructure for the transport routes was made to avoid them. However, issues arise during the transport season. The ruckus that the large transport vehicles made would attract swarms of monsters from these Old-world cities.

Once they arrived at their destination, from the opened door of the trailer, Erio and the other children started throwing out devices to attract the monsters' attention. They needed at least that many decoy devices to imitate the signals that those large transport vehicles would produce.

The decoy devices would produce noise and vibration as well as scents and fake signals to lure the monsters. Some of them were stuck in the ground while some floated above as they were spread throughout the area.

Not too long after, Elena's radar detected uncountable monster signals. It was then followed by a large trail of dust and shaking that even the Hunters from afar could feel.

"Akira, here they come."

"Alright. Elena-san. Get closer first and try to keep your distance from them. As for the rest, I'll leave the smaller details to you."

"Roger that!"

Elena pushed the gas and turned the vehicle toward the direction of the incoming monsters. Akira in the back seat had both of his hands armed with rifles as he measured the distance between them.

"Sara-san. I'll focus on the smaller ones, so please focus on the bigger ones. But that's only for the opening, as for the rest, you're free to move at your own discretion."

"Okay. Now then, since we both are the main firepower here, let's do our best."

"Of course."

Sara smiled excitedly at Akira and he responded with the same smile. They then aimed their rifles toward the monsters and pulled the trigger. Explosions rang out from the raining warheads. This signalled the start of the battle as well as a slaughterfest of monsters, turned into minced meat.

It was Akira's debut fight with his new equipment. This time. he was using a CA31R augmented suit made by Kiryou. Its official name was Cerberus. It had many extension ports over its jet black body due to the multi-purpose function of its design.

Although the headpiece of the augmented suit seems flimsy, it was actually equipped with forcefield armour, thus as a defensive piece of equipment, it was stronger than the usual full-face helmet. It was even further equipped with many other functions such as displays and other extensions as well. It could also be connected to particular types of gun so that both armor and weapon could work together when Akira took his aim. Meanwhile, there was display technology in place which could display information in 3D if needed.

It even allows Akira to float in the air. Though, he did not have it on at the moment. Instead, Akira had a balance-support device installed to help him move around even on soft ground. And if he wanted to, it could even help him move above water surfaces in exchange for exorbitant amounts of energy.

Even as a pure augmented suit whose main objective was to augment the physical power of its user, it performs extremely well. With the powerful full-body forcefield armour, he could even flip over a powered suit if he pushed the output of the augmented suit. To top it off, it was also equipped with a camouflage function.

The guns on both of his hands were LEO multi-rifle. They were basically stronger versions of the SSB multi-rifle. Akira made sure to put extended magazines and energy packs to his two large-sized rifles. The bullets he was using were designed to absorb energy from the surroundings and turn them into kinetic energy, as such, the more energy used to shoot, the stronger the shot got.

Akira aimed both of his LEO rifles at the swarming monsters. His vision was greatly enhanced with the help of information-gathering devices. It even added a bulls-eye indicator of where his LEO rifles were aimed.

He kept the trigger pulled down as he made a sweeping motion as if to sweep through the swarm. Although it looked like an indiscriminate shooting from the outside, the bullets were actually only released when the hit probability was above a certain threshold. With each shot guaranteed to a certain level of accuracy, they accurately ploughed through the incoming monsters. Moreover, any missed shot was quickly accounted for. The data was then used to readjust the aim for the next shot, thus slowly increasing or maintaining Akira’s accuracy.

Moreover, Akira actively checked the dead monsters. He would readjust the output power of the bullets using his headgear to get it barely strong enough to kill the monsters.

This way, his shots would guarantee a kill while making sure that he was not wasting any unnecessary energy. Coupled with the high accuracy shots, the bullets tore through the swarm like ravenous locusts, leaving only a field of dead monsters behind.

Both his augmented suit and rifles were already well past what was considered normal for Hunters in Kugamayama city. Elena and Sara too had updated their arsenals compared to before.

Unlike Akira, who did not earn a single Aurum from the large-scale expedition, Elena and Sara were properly paid. They were paid as emergency reinforcement, the data that they gathered afterwards during the chaos, plus the reward for escorting Nelia back to the base. And of course, they did not go with Nelia afterwards to look for Akira for free. The combinations of all these rewards resulted in a good sum of money.

Furthermore, they managed to get a good discount through the deal that Akira made with TOSON and Kiryou. Considering that if Akira's close friends were loyal customers of a certain company, then it would be easier to get Akira himself to buy from that particular company, plus by making a contract that their next set of equipment would be also from the same company, they managed to get discounts from those two companies although not as much as Akira. They then decided to splurge half of the money that they received from the expedition to upgrade their equipment. Thanks to that, they were able to get powerful augmented suits complete with so-called old-world design. Although the design was a bit too much, they decided to put up with it considering the quality of the equipment.

In contrast to that, Akira, who was carrying Nelia half the time, did not get paid at all for that. It was something that he did voluntarily when he was busy with Inabe's request, it could even be said that he abandoned Inabe's request to help out Nelia. Thus, it was not easy for Inabe and City Management's side to reward him for that. But as a compromise, it seemed that Inabe helped Akira to procure equipment through his connections.

Akira’s firepower with his new equipment was no joke. The swarm was obliterated one by one. Although the common monsters around Kugamayama city would not even stand a chance against them, in front of Akira, they were nothing but small fries. Both the colossal beasts and the armour covered robots were indiscriminately devoured by the explosions and shredded to pieces.

Although they had the upper hand, Akira’s team still could not call it an easy fight. The decoys lured in a continuous flow of monsters leagues above those that they were used to fighting against around Kugamayama city. As expected, they could not face all of them on their own.

The monsters that Akira’s team missed fell to Erio’s team and Colbert’s team to deal with. Of course, these monsters were extremely powerful from their point of view. They were desperately trying their best to fight back.

The monsters, which took a detour from the annihilation circle with Akira’s team at the centre, were rained down with explosives by Erio’s team from the trailer.

“Don’t stop shooting!! And don’t mistake your target! Keep following the order of priority! Just because Akira-san’s team prioritizes taking out monsters with a long-range weapon, that doesn’t mean that we can take it easy!! Focus first on the monsters indicated in the coordination support system!!”

The coordination support system focused the firepower on the monsters with guns and cannons. Although shooting from a moving vehicle lowered their accuracy, they dealt with that by praying over the whole monsters instead of aiming for their individual cannons or rifles.

The trailer was protected by portable walls equipped with forcefield armour, the portable wall was made of plastic-like transparent material which did not impede vision. Erio’s team were shooting through the gap of these forcefield walls.

Some of the monsters that slipped through the barrage shot back at the trailer. The bullets hit the forcefield armour, their kinetic energy was converted to a blinding light that soaked the area. Although no one was injured, the forcefield provided no defence against the terror and the shock they felt.

“Replace the wall quickly!! They won’t be able to take another shot! Hurry up!”

They quickly went to grab another portable wall, placed them behind the hit wall and pushed them forward. The old portable wall slid over and fell off the trailer.

Seeing that, another boy bitterly smiled and shouted to hide his fear.

“We’re doing something crazy, aren’t we? This thing costs 1 million Aurum each, right!? And we’re just throwing them out like this, you know!!”

The other boy shouted back excitedly.

“I heard that these are from Kiryou and it was cheaper since we bought them in bulk! But if you say so, even the bullets that we’re using actually cost 1 or 2 million Aurum per shot if we buy them ourselves, you know!?”

“That’s wicked! It’s as if we’re throwing away money.”

“The bullets are cheaper since Akira-san has a special discount only for high ranking Hunters, or so I heard! Even that 5 million Aurum per shot anti-forcefield armour bullet only costs 500 Aurum for him!”

“The heck? That’s even crazier! I feel like we can get a lot of money if we hide just a single bullet and sell it ourselves later!”

“Pretty sure Akira-san would slaughter you if you do that! Do you seriously still want to do that?”

“Like hell if I would! That’s basically a death sentence you know!”

The reason they could just laugh it off was because both of them were just joking and had no wish to try that at all. It was not about being an honest person. Stealing anything would mean mocking Akira and Sheryl. One thing for sure, it would not end pretty. That was why none of them even thought of trying to do that.

“They said that we’ll get paid based on how many monsters that we kill, so let’s just focus on them and earn more! It’s not like we can get an opportunity like this every day! Let’s earn as much as we can while we still have the chance!!”

“You’re right!! Let’s go back home with more than we can swim in!!”

They were fighting the fear of the incoming swarm through their fighting spirit and greed. That was the only way they could let go of their anxiety.

“By the way, Colbert-san and the others don’t have this support system too, right?”

“Yep. The reason why Kiryou is sponsoring us is simply because it would leave a bad track record if we get killed here.”

“But still, they have killed more monsters than us, right? Although we have more people here and our equipment are not that different in term of quality.”

“Well, I bet it’s a matter of skill… It’s true that we’re stronger than before but just look at Akira-san. There’s always a bigger fish.”

The Hunter world was not that naive, equipment would not be able to compensate for everything. But at least it would give them enough of a chance to fight back and survive. The children were reminded of the harsh world of Hunters, the gap between them and the other proper Hunters as they fought desperately.

As for Colbert’s team, they brought in equipment that would be enough to hunt bounty monsters. But it was difficult to use such powerful weapons at such close range.

But it still did not change the fact that they could be used to kill monsters. Seeing Colbert shooting the monsters with such excitement, Bosshu and Peppa could not help but smile happily. Although he was facing monsters that were clearly more ferocious than the one that almost killed him.

“Well well well, you’re doing pretty well for someone who just recovered from his trauma! There’s no need to be that desperate, right?”

Colbert replied to that light jab from Peppa with another light jab.

“That doesn’t sound convincing at all coming from someone with a lesser kill count than me. Ah, don’t worry, as I said, I will do something about it even if your skills get rusty, yeah?”

“Yeah yeah, just let the dog bark. Just watch, I’ll overtake your number in no time!!”

That was when Bosshu interjected.

“By the way, Colbert. Levin has quite a powerful rifle. At the moment, he has killed the most. If I’m not mistaken, he has a huge debt, right? So how did he get that weapon? I’m seriously getting interested in all your connections, you know…”

Colbert smiled bitterly.

“I don’t really recommend doing the same thing he did. He basically mishandled Viola. I don’t know all the details, but it seems like he has ended up 300 million Aurum in debt. That is in exchange for his equipment.”

Peppa who was listening closely could not help but to raise his eyebrows.

“300 million…”

“The lender is Kiryou. I heard that he’s doing a job for that company, you see. After all, there are many ways to collect debt from a Hunter who can’t pay it back with money. It’s 300 million we’re talking about here. Whatever fate awaits him if he can’t pay back, it won’t be pretty. Peppa, if you’re interested, I can still go ask Viola, you know?”

Colbert smiled provokingly. But as expected, Peppa would never dare take up that challenge.

“Uhh, no thanks.”

“Thought so. Well, although I said 300 million, I’m sure someone as strong as Akira would not have any trouble paying that back.”

Colbert glanced at the radar. Although monsters were flowing endlessly from the edge of the radar, half of them vanished the moment they entered Akira’s range of fire, creating a circle sterile of any monsters with Akira’s team in the centre.

“This is the power of Rank 50 and 40 Hunters, huh. They are no joke at all.”

Colbert could only swallow his pride, there was not even a shred of envy. He then returned his focus back to his own battlefield as he fought together with his team against the incoming swarm.

Elena continuously scanned for the location of the monsters while driving. Thanks to that, she was able to reposition the vehicle to advantageous locations while evading barrages from the enemies. Explosions shook the ground and threw the vehicle off-balance. The shaking was too intense even for the advanced balancer attached to a wasteland vehicle. Forget shooting back, normally, it would have been impossible to stand in that kind of situation.

But even so, Sara was accurately shooting back with long-range weapons using her large and heavy gun. The bullets pierced through rows of monsters as they sought their main target, leaving behind carcasses that were blasted to small pieces. It was a feat that would have been impossible without adequate skill and equipment.

Of course, it was not something that someone as strong as Sara alone could do, it was thanks to the perfect synchronized teamwork between her and Elena. Elena’s skilled driving always put Sara in an advantageous position while Sara always kept the route that Elena would take clean of any monsters. This made it easier for Elena to reposition the vehicle. They did not even need to exchange words, the experience that they had from working together for years allowed them to understand each other without saying anything, allowing them to work efficiently as if a single cohesive unit.

Elena and Sara understood that very well, that was why they were amazed that Akira could adapt to their teamwork with no problem at all. Sara smiled as she glanced at Akira and complimented.

“Akira, as I thought, you’ve really become strong.”

“Well, I splurged all my money for my new equipment, after all. It would be all in vain if I only stayed as strong as before.”

Akira’s augmented suit was equipped with extensions to keep his feet on the ground as well as to keep his balance. These two extensions were no doubt helping him tremendously in taking aim, even when the vehicle was shaking intensely. Not to mention, both his rifles and the ammo that he was using were stronger than before. All of these factors helped him annihilate the monsters in front of him. Naturally, it still required a skilled user to pull off what he did.

“It’s already amazing enough that you’ve mastered using your new equipment, you know. Since you’re that strong, it’s okay to say that you’re amazing yourself from time to time, you know?”

As Sara said that, she remembered the past Akira, who always looked down on his own strength. She thought she might have said something that she should not have. But against her expectation, Akira did not seem offended at all, he instead replied with a smile.

“Considering that I still want to get stronger, I would have to say that I still have a long way to go.”

Although Sara did not expect him to reply in such a manner, she thought that it was a good change and countered with her banter.

“Elena! Akira is saying that we lack ambition to get stronger!”

“Eh!? No no no! I didn’t mean that at all!?”

Seeing Akira flusteredly tried to deny it but Elena smiled mischievously and continued.

“He said that? Well, it can’t be helped then! I guess we should work harder to satisfy this Rank 50 Hunter! Sara! I’ll go faster!!”

“Roger that!”

Elena accelerated the vehicle even more. She started aiming to take down the monsters that she originally planned to leave to the other teams. Their position changed from holding back the incoming swarm to actively chasing after the swarm. She dialled up the machine gun that she was set to be on low, believing that they could just leave the small fries to Akira. Sara also responded accordingly by increasing her firing rate.

Akira glanced at Sara and Elena, who seemed to be having a good time there and smiled wryly. Nonetheless, he then also started firing more intensely as if not to lose to them. Although it seems like he was randomly sweeping around with the 2 LEO rifles in hand, he was actually trying to aim as accurately as possible. More than half of the bullets accurately hit their targets due to the aim adjustment function of his augmented suit and aiming device as well as Akira’s own compressed time perception.

“Akira. Although you are only doing it slightly, you’re basically maintaining your time compression at all times, are you okay?”

“I’m fine. For some reason, I don’t feel much burden from doing time compressions ever since that expedition. I wonder if I got used to it after I forced myself to use it for an extended period of time back then.”

“I’m pretty sure that’s one of the reasons.”

“One of the reasons? Are there other reasons as well? It’s not like you’re doing something with your support to lighten my burden without me knowing, right?”

“Yep, there are multiple reasons for that. Of course, your body is getting used to it after using it so many times both for real fights and in training, you might have figured out the ropes. But with that being said, it’s not okay to think that you can get even stronger by doing reckless things when you lose my support, okay?”

“I know. It’s not like I want to go into a fight without your support. Having you around is a huge help, you know?”

“Is that so? Thanks. But still, since you have me around, how about I change my outfit to something more extravagant, with more exposure that will make a more refreshing impression.”

“Thanks but no thanks!”

“Good grief, you won’t even pay attention to my beauty, huh? That part of you doesn’t change at all.”

Alpha then smiled at him, who even had the leeway to indulge her in silly banter even when he was in the middle of a battle.

In reality, the main reason why Akira’s time compression did not place much burden on him ever since the large-scale expedition laid elsewhere. It was the drug that Tsubaki gave him. Akira, who took that drug, was healed back under the old-world standard, which meant that it also fixed something in his brain.

The prolonged use of time compression would strain Akira’s brain, which eventually resulted in damages. The drug that he took healed that damage as well as assimilated into the damaged part and strengthened it so that it would be able to withstand more strain.

Moreover, the drug even healed Akira’s imperfection as someone who could connect to the old-world domain. Due to this, the security portion of Akira’s brain was rewritten and upgraded, but as a side-effect, it limited Alpha’s connection to Akira. Since the drug basically cut-off Alpha’s complete one-sided control on Akira’s bandwidth, it left a noticeable effect on Akira.

Even if the subject gave permission to use all of his connections, rules placed constraints that made it impossible to do that in one go. When Alpha met Akira for the first time, she used excuses such as, that he was too weak and such an act was necessary for the sake of preserving his life. Therefore, she was able to gain permission to establish a strong connection with Akira. She then used that as a way to wrestle more and more rights over time. This was the reason why she was able to monopolize Akira’s bandwidth.

But with the repaired security feature and how Akira was able to perform extremely well even without her support, Alpha no longer had those rights anymore. This was not a complete coincidence. Half of it was due to Tsubaki’s scheme. She originally planned to prepare Akira, such that she could connect to him if he had accepted her offer back then.

While the other half was simply Tsubaki harassing Alpha. With this, Alpha had to readjust her plan. She had to wait until she recovered her monopoly on Akira’s bandwidth before she could bring him to a certain ruin.

Alpha was especially worried that there would be more unexpected turn of events regarding Akira. After all, unexpected meant that she could not control it. So in order to regain her control over Akira, she was observing Akira closely.

After that, the fired-up Akira team made short work of the remaining swarm.

Once they finished pruning the monsters around the area, Erio’s team and Colbert’s team moved on to their other job. They scourged the ruin for relics.

Although there were still some valuable relics left in that ruin, most Hunters thought that it was not worth the trouble gathering them due to the powerful monsters living in the area. But after the pruning, the monster density in the area was greatly reduced though only for a short time. With more than half of the monsters in the area dead, they were free to gather relics left in the ruin. It was ingrained in the Hunter's blood to monopolize such a sweet opportunity. Thanks to that, Erio's team and Colbert's team were in high spirits.

While the others were doing that, Akira, Elena, and Sara were taking a break in their vehicle. That was when Elena threw a question to Akira.

"Akira, you're not going to look for relics?"

"I'm here to prune monsters, so I have no plan to hunt for relics. I'm also already spent too. Ah, it's okay if Elena-san and Sara-san want to go hunting for relics, you know? I can watch the radar for enemies while you two go look for relics."

"Hmmm, if you're not going, then I won't go too. We're here as your hires today after all, so we have to respect your opinion."

Akira looked a bit surprised and sent a questioning glance to Sara. Which, she responded with a light smile.

"If we're talking about duties, our job here is to be your support. That's why our job at the moment is to stay near you. I don't think it's a good thing to criticize someone when they're taking their job seriously, you know?"

"I see, that's true. Alright, in that case, I guess we'll be taking a break here then."

Seeing the happy Akira, Elena and Sara also smiled happily.

As they were wasting time talking to each other, the radar suddenly picked up some signals. When Elena checked it, she frowned.

"Judging from the signal, it's a monster, although it's alone, it seems to be a rather big one."

"Is it here because of the decoy device?"

"Not sure. But I think it came pretty late if that is really the case."

When they were discussing how to handle that monster, Alpha suddenly interjected.

“Akira, it would be a pain in the neck if it gets any closer. So let’s take it out while we have the chance using that thing on your back.”

“Is that so? Alright then.”

Akira then told Elena and Sara his plan and took some distance from the vehicle before expanding the fold-able large-sized gun that Akira was carrying on his back. As the cannon unfolded, it peeked out from Akira’s back, past his shoulder. Akira used both of his hands to hold the cannon and aligned his aim with his target.

After Akira fixed his aim with the support of Alpha, he then let Alpha take control of both his cannon and augmented suit. Its aiming device worked together with Akira’s information-gathering device, allowing Akira to zoom in on his target in his headgear’s display which showed the range, trajectory, and lock-on notices.

The target was an abnormally huge mechanical monster, it was about 10 metres tall and its body was enveloped with resilient-looking armour. Countless legs were fixed on the huge cannon that grew out from its body. Although it was classified as a multi-legged tank, its shape was closer to that of a mollusc. Its outer appearance was far from the tanks that the Hunters used as well as the security drones of the old-world ruins.

Seeing that monster slowly crawling towards him, Akira frowned and said.

“That thing… it looks like a squid, or an octopus, no?”

“It’s true that its shape indeed imitates that kind of animal.”

“That kind of monster basically comes from old-world factories right? Just like those insect cannons, right? I wonder why they make monsters in that shape.”

“I have no idea. Someone might have sent in faulty designs in order to render them useless. If someone sends in a huge amount of unrelated data while the system is updating its blueprint, it might corrupt the blueprint. Once they accomplish their goal, operational systems might use its advanced self-repairing function to fix the blueprint based on data it compiled. Since everything is a variable at that point, it might cause this kind of design to be produced. Leaving its appearance aside, they’re still functional.”

“Wait, if their auto-repair is that advanced, then can’t they just delete the unrelated data? That’s the source of the problem after all.”

“Although it can fix the method, it doesn’t have the privilege to fix the goal. So a system with only that level of privilege would not be able to completely fix it no matter how advanced its auto-repair is. Or more like, it doesn’t even consider fixing that part.”

“I see, so basically, because it can’t change the basic shape, it instead forcibly add other parts with its old-world technology, right?”

“Well, there’s also a chance that the factory AI was too bored, having nothing to do and decided to make a weird design just to kill time though. And also, Akira, shouldn’t you shoot it soon? There’s no need to use time compression just to prolong this conservation, right?”

“Whoops!”

Akira refocused back to his target. Since he had already compressed his time perception unconsciously, that exchange with Alpha did not take that much time in the real world. The lock-on notice was still there as well. Akira made sure that his aim was properly locked on that monster as he pulled the trigger, the cannon released a thick blinding light that produced a shockwave.

The pillar of light grew larger and larger as it travelled, when it hit the monster, the pillar of light that had grown bigger than the monster and entirely swallowed it.

It then dispersed into smaller light threads before vanishing. The portion of the monster enveloped by the pillar of light also vanished together with that pillar. There were only the legs left behind as if its upper half was sliced through with an extremely hot object.

The weapon that Akira just used was an AD anti-material cannon. It was one of the extension parts of his CA31R augmented suit and it was made to be used in tandem with that augmented suit. After his experience fighting Zalmo during the large-scale expedition, Akira was looking for a weapon with enough firepower and accuracy to take out a powerful opponent while still small enough to be carried around. Thus, he ended up with this cannon which was also his trump card at the moment. Normally, it would only be used by the Hunters who work in the far eastern part of the eastern district, it was produced with a limited supply. Kiryou would not sell such equipment to Hunters below Rank 50. Of course, the ammo was equally expensive as well.

When Akira realized that he just shot an ammo with the firepower that matched its price, he was surprised by how powerful it was.

“As expected, it’s really powerful. I guess that Laser Cannon name is not just for show, huh?”

“To be more precise, it just looks like a laser because of the leftover warhead turned into particles of light. So, it’s technically not correct to call it a laser. After all, it’s not like it is shooting out plasma.”

“We’re Hunters, after all, we don’t really care about the details as long as it’s strong enough to kill monsters. Aside from the price of the ammo, my only worry is probably how dazzling it will be if I use it during the night. Since it will also annihilate everything around me, I can’t use it while I hide.”

The moment Akira released his grip on the AF anti-material cannon, it retracted and returned to its folded state on Akira’s back.

“So the Hunters in the far east shoot this kind of thing around as if it’s normal, huh? No wonder they’re treated like a walking powered suit or a tank. I can’t understand how Hunters would want to go to such a place on their own volition just because they have a high enough Hunter Rank.”

“Oh my, to be honest, I hope that you would aspire to be one of those Hunters though?”

“Yeah, I know. I’m doing my best here to satisfy your expectation, so it would be great if you would wait patiently.”

Alpha smiled at Akira because of his growth. In contrast, Akira returned back with a bitter smile.

That was when Hikaru suddenly called him.

“This is Hikaru. It seems that a large-sized Ocpalos monster is heading in your direction, it came from area E1173 which is 3 areas away from the area assigned to you. I just got a report from the Hunters responsible for that area. It seems that there were too many monsters for them to handle so some monsters ended up escaping to other areas. It’s far stronger than the other monsters in that area, so I think it’s better if you get away from there. The other Hunters responsible for the other areas also avoided that monster. Hurry up and retreat, I can send reinforcements to help you run away if you need assistance, do you need me to do that?”

“How many? Is it in a big swarm?”

“Just one. But it originated from the area further to the east, so it’s abnormally stronger compared to the other monsters around your area. In the worst-case scenario, it might even be more formidable than a swarm of monsters in your area.”

“I actually just shot down a monster that looks like an octopus, or a squid, Are you talking about that one?”

“Eh?”

Akira replied so casually that Hikaru needed a few seconds to process what she just heard.

“You killed it…? Uhh… Can you send me the data?”

Akira proceeded to send the data, Hikaru went silent again for a while before replying in a rather surprised tone.

“Ah, yes. That is the monster from the report. They mentioned that only one got away and they have confirmed that as well, so it should be okay now. They actually sent a few Hunters to hunt for that monster, but I’ve already informed them that the monster has been slain.”

There was another pause before Hikaru continued, this time, she sounded apologetic.

“…And also, uh, I’m sorry. I underestimated you. To be honest, after hearing that your payment for the large-scale expedition was all converted into Hunter Rank, I thought you were not that strong.”

“Well, you’re not mistaken, so don’t worry about it. Although I did say I killed it, I had to use my expensive trump card to do that after all. Well, if you still feel sorry for that, I hope you’ll help me to get a better reward so I don’t end up in red after using that expensive trump card.”

Since Akira sounded like he was not offended at all, Hikaru’s voice returned back to her usual tone.

“Sure. I’ll do my best, so you can look forward to it. Later then.”

Hikaru then closed the call there. After that, Akira frowned and mumbled.

“…So Hikaru also did not expect that monster to be here… hmm… I guess that’s just how strong that monster was. For some reason, I always get stuck in this kind of situation, don’t I?”

Alpha smiled amusedly and answered him.

“Well, it’s business as usual for you. So it’s no problem at all as long as you’re well prepared. Aren’t you glad that you are?”

Akira chuckled. Although he could agree with that statement, he still felt conflicted to just brush that aside and accept it as his normal.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 231, Re-evaluation

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Further to the east from where Akira's team was, a guy by the name of Tatsukawa was talking through his information terminal. He was the leader of the Hunter team that was responsible for area E1173.

"…In that case, we don't need to send our men, right? Very well, understood… No… Yes, I'm sorry to trouble you… No no no, it's our fault, so please don't be sorry. Thank you once again."

After he closed the call, he immediately made a stern face.

"Melshia! There's no need to send anyone to hunt that Okpalos! Get everyone to look for those bastards!"

Melshia, who was Tatsukawa's partner as well as the vice-captain of the team, frowned.

"Eh? What gives? We're just about to go, you know?"

"The target for that hunt is no more. The team from area 1168 took care of it."

Melshia walked toward Tatsukawa and tilted her head.

“If I’m not mistaken, that area is handled by the Hunters from Kugamayama city, right? There’s no way they can take care of that Okpalos.”

“Well, they’ve been gathering high ranking Hunters with more rewards ever since that incident in Kuzusuhara ruin. Even I was called by Kibayashi. So, I bet one of those Hunters got assigned to that area.”

“Well, that would explain everything. Are you going too?”

“I’m still considering it… But that doesn’t matter right now! Just get the men to look for those bastards!”

“Yeah yeah.”

Melshia proceeded to convey that order to the rest of the team. Although they were complaining at first, Melshia, who was good with people, knew what they were thinking and told them that Tatsukawa was not in a good mood, thus shutting them up.

“Just to let you know, bringing a few extra people won’t help much. I don’t think we can find them, you know?”

“…It’s still better than not even trying. It’s not like I’m going to get angry at them if we get to find them.”

In order to expel his horrendous mood, Tatsukawa heaved a big sigh.

“So then, what do you know about them? I know you did some investigation beforehand, right?”

“Well, I did confirm that their available record is fake. With this, it’s obvious that they’re weak Hunters who changed their track record to take on their current job and they seem to be already used to this kind of thing. Although, I still don’t know their affiliation. They might be from City Management, or from the corporate government, or from the nationalists, or maybe even from somewhere else.”

“I still don’t understand, what’s their plan? Luring the Okpalos to the west just to let it get away. And also, why would they use falsify their track record to join us?”

“I have no guess either. It might just be harassment. Or maybe they’re one of those who get pushed aside from the fierce job competition during the transport season. Or they’re just trying to add something meaningful to their track record. There are many possibilities. By the way, they chased Okpalos toward the direction of Kuzusuhara ruin, right? So, they might have something to do with that ruin as well.”

“Why would they do that?”

“The A.I in that ruin can communicate normally with humans, right? Although Kugamayama city is monopolizing that A.I, it must want to contact other cities as well. But with the soldiers from Kugamayama city surrounding the area, it’s difficult to send people there. So maybe they’re trying to open a hole in that blockade by sending powerful monsters there and to use that opening to sneak in? Normally, intentionally sending monsters to a ruin guarded by a city is the same as picking a fight with that city, that’s why they’re falsifying their background information to cover their tracks. It could be maybe something like that?”

After working together for a long time, Tatsukawa knew that rejecting Melshia’s guess, even if it was a paranoid one, would only give her more trouble to deal with, so she just ignored it.

“…Well, it doesn’t really matter. Whoever they are and whatever their goal is, it doesn’t change the fact that they gave us a bad name. So, we have to make them pay for that. Melshia, place a bounty on their head based on the information you have on them. Set it to 100 billion per person, wait, no, make it 200 billion.”

“Roger that. I’ll do that later, Ah, you’ll be the one paying, okay?”

“Ehhh, it’s related to our reputation, so shouldn’t that money be paid by the whole team?”

“No no no, we don’t have that much money, you know?”

Tatsukawa clicked his tongue.

“Make it 2 billion each then.”

“Alright, I’ll take care of the administration, but it doesn’t change the fact that you’ll be the one paying, okay?”

“…Yeah yeah, I’ll pay for it, so just get the bounty up.”

“Honestly though, I don’t see any need to go that far, you know?”

“There’s no compromise for this one.”

“You and your hard head.”

Melshia smiled wryly seeing that childish side of her partner.

It was due to pure coincidence that Akira shot down that Okpalos. But the reason why that happened was not because of pure coincidence.

__*__*__*__

Erio stood frozen in the cafeteria back in the base. There was a pile of money in front of him, 3 million Aurum in total. It was his payment after his last job.

The pruning job that he took last time was already done. Akira himself already went to take another pruning and extermination request from Hikaru. As for the relics that Erio and the other children brought back from the last request, they were all basically bought by Sheryl’s gang and turned into money. After subtracting from the expense, the leftover was then divided equally among Akira, Elena, Sara, and Sheryl.

Then the money that Sheryl received was used to pay for Viola and Colbert’s reward as well as to Kiryou. The remaining amount went to the gang’s collective deposit. After all, they could never have enough funds stored up considering the price of the coordination-support system that was lent to them for monitoring as well as the augmented suits and other equipment. Because of that, the sum paid to Erio and the other children were actually relatively small.

But even so, it was large enough to cause Erio to start shaking when he received it. Other than Erio, the rest of the team received 1 million Aurum each. Although all of them had their bank account made when they registered themselves in the Hunter office as Hunters and were able to receive the payment from direct transfer, in order to maximize the shock effect, Sheryl gathered everyone in the cafeteria and handed over their payments one by one. Thanks to that, most of them looked like nervous suspicious individuals with that large pile of money in hand.

Alicia sat down next to a flustered Erio. Alicia, who was one of the officers on the managerial side of the gang, had to deal with money on many occasions. Thanks to that, she had built up a level of resistance against something like this. In contrast to Erio who was greatly flustered, Alicia was sitting next to him, completely calm.

Erio kept looking around, alternating between the money in front of him and Alicia.

“…A-Alicia, is there anything you want?”

“…Your safety, I guess.”

Erio did not expect that answer from his girlfriend and was taken aback a bit by it. After he managed to somehow calm down, he looked at Alicia once more with confusion still etched on his face. Alicia then whispered.

“Even if we use it to buy medicine, this much will only get us 3 boxes, right?”

“W-well, that might be true… But, it’s still a huge amount of money, you know? At least that is the case for us.”

After Erio said so, he could feel the worth of the 3 million Aurum in front of him drop. No matter how many times he looked at the pile in front of him, it would not shock him again the same way it did the first time.

Seeing that, Alicia knew that she had successfully changed Erio's view of money. She then stared at Erio and said.

"Yes, it is. But it's still not enough to endanger your life. So please don't think of joining Akira-san's job again just for this amount, okay? I know that you couldn't refuse because it was the boss' order, but please do your utmost effort to return alive. Not for money."

"Of course!"

Erio gave an honest smile, Alicia responded with a similar one.

"That aside, it's money that you get from your hard work, so I think you should use it for yourself, but if I may, I want you to use it for your safety. Everyone used to ignore us in the past, but ever since the transport season began, there are many new people coming to the slum. I'm sure I don't even need to tell what might happen to a slum kid carrying 3 million Aurum around."

"You have a point. Well, I do think that it should be okay during my guard duty as long as I have that augmented suit on."

"We cannot use that augmented suit unless it's for gang-related work. It's the gang's augmented suit after all. They might kick you out if you use it without permission. I think you can use this amount to buy other equipment from Katsuragi or use it to get a rental augmented suit. You can also add it to the gang's collective budget. Boss will be happy to hear it and she might allow you to borrow some of the gang's equipment, I can put in some good words too if needed. I can also use my money too in case she says that the gang doesn't have enough budget."

"Hmmm, that's also a good idea, what should I do…"

Seeing that Erio was starting to think about how to use the sum he received, Alicia was relieved in many ways.

Her boyfriend, Erio, was able to return alive after going out on a Hunter job with someone who she considered a madman. Moreover, he had calmed down from the initial shock so there should be no need to worry about the danger of suddenly getting that much money. To top it off, although it might be just a selfish wish of hers, it seems that Erio did not have any plan to use that money for other girls. Though she felt a bit guilty about it, she was still relieved.

Due to her contract with Sheryl, Carol was at least banned from messing with any gang members who already had a girlfriend. But there was a loophole in that deal. If the other party insisted that he did not have a girlfriend or had broken up with his girlfriend, then Carol had free reign.

Girls in the gang were afraid of that. They were trying to find a way, through trial and error, to prevent Carol from getting her hands on their boyfriend or the boy that they liked.

__*__*__*__*__

Akira placed a one week gap between each pruning job, which always take place with Elena and Sara. As long as Akira himself was not badly wounded, he actually had no problem doing it every day. However, afterwards, he had to replenish his supplies through Shizuka's shop. Although he did pay them upfront before he made the order, he still could not get all the supplies right away. Moreover, considering the time that Elena and Sara needed to recover from their fatigue, he could not afford to shorten the gap any further.

In reality, one of the reasons for the gap was because Shizuka, as well as Elena and Sara, thought that it was extremely likely that Akira would decide to go to the wasteland every time he had some free time. Thus, they were using those excuses to force Akira to take regular breaks. Even when Hikaru suggested shortening that time gap, Akira just ignored her pleas.

On one of those rest days, when Akira was training with Alpha in the garage of his house, he received a call from Shiakarabe. The content of the call was a simple wish to meet if Akira had some free time. Although Shikarabe asked in a casual manner, Akira could feel that there was something serious he wanted to talk about. Akira did find it weird, but he still decided to go and meet him.

Night in the entertainment district was still as busy as usual. Many Hunters were enjoying their drinks or the girls of the red-light districts. Meanwhile, there were some of them who were only passing through on their way back from the wasteland.

Akira waved between those crowds as he walked toward the bar where he was meeting Shikarabe at. But it did not take long for him to notice that there was something strange, and the source of that feeling became obvious after he took a few more steps.

“Alpha, people are avoiding me, are they not?”

“Well, it can’t be helped, you’re basically flashing your expensive equipment out in public after all.”

Akira was using his CA31R augmented suit and carrying 2 LEO multi rifles, it was understandable for people to take him as one of those Hunters who were originally from the east. Even if they did not understand the exact cost and value of Akira’s equipment, they knew that what he had on, were on a completely different level compared to the common equipment in Kugamayama city. It was not a big mystery that Akira was a high-ranking Hunter based on his appearance alone.

Many Hunters in the entertainment district were drunk. Among them, high-ranking Hunters tend to look down on the Hunters of Kugamayama city. Therefore, those who did not want to get in trouble with those high-ranking Hunters were keeping their distance from Akira.

“…I guess I should buy a coat next time. If I’m not mistaken, one of the options that came with this augmented suit was a defensive coat… Wait, no, I guess it’s useless if I use that coat, huh…”

“It’s better than using a cheap coat, making you seem weak and getting others to pick a fight with you, right? Although it’s thanks to your equipment, isn’t it great that people finally stopped looking down on you? I think it’s better for you to just get used to this kind of thing.”

“I see, yeah. You’re right. This is better than having them coming at me. I’m also planning to get better equipment as well, so it’s true that it’s better to get used to it from now.”

Akira also thought that he would rather have people actively avoiding him instead of going at him. Thus, he just shook that off from his mind and moved on. Because of that, he did not notice the other reason why the Hunters were avoiding him.

Ever since Akira accepted the fact that he was no longer a weak slum boy, strange changes have been happening to him. Others around him started perceiving him differently. He turned from a hidden landmine into an unearthed landmine. So, it was given that those who did not want to step on a landmine even by pure coincidence, would keep their distance from Akira.

Akira eventually reached his destination. It was the same bar that he visited the last time he had gone to meet Shikarabe. But this time, the master did not tell him to leave, instead, he took him to where Shikarabe was. Shikarabe then sent a glance to the master of the bar and he just left.

There was more than one person in the room Akira just entered. Those inside did not seem like they were in a bad mood, and they were not as rowdy as the others in the bar. It did not feel like they were in deep trouble as well. However, it was obvious that they had something preoccupying their minds. Shikarabe was exuding that kind of feeling.

“You’re here, huh? I’m sorry for asking you to come here, we can talk later, so can you finish your talk with Arabe first?”

“Long time no see, please, take a seat.”

“Sure, okay.”

Akira was a bit bewildered, but he still took a seat. Shikarabe took a sip of his glass and glanced at Akira.

“Do you want… Ah, right, you don’t drink, right? Well, they have non-alcoholic drinks as well. We’ll be the ones paying, so you can go ahead and pick anything you want. I know this is not the kind of place to request a meeting with a Rank 50 Hunter, but Drankam is not really doing well with money, you see. Due to that, unfortunately, we can’t really invite you to the upper floors of the Kugama building, am I right, Arabe?”

“Eh? Ah, yes, it’s as Shikarabe just said.”

“I don’t really mind though, so…”

Akira was a bit thrown-off by Shikarabe’s unusual attitude, but as they agreed on, he first listened to Arabe’s business with him. But after listening to the content, Akira was a bit surprised. Basically, Arabe was requesting to let Drankam join in the pruning job that Akira had been receiving from Hikaru.

Seeing Akira who was frowning at him, Arabe felt the awkward mood start to drift in, so he flusteredly added in an explanation.

“Ah, please don’t misunderstand, Drankam itself finds this request a bit awkward. But it came from the higher up, or more like, it came from City Management so we can’t really ignore it, you see. It’s true that we have signed an official peace treaty, unfortunately, it doesn’t mean that we can guarantee that there won’t be any trouble… We thought that City Management had already informed you about this, but it does not seem to be the case.”

“I this is the first time I heard about this thought… So, give me a second.”

Akira quickly called the person that might know about this. Hikaru immediately picked up the call and after a short explanation of what was going on from Akira, Hikaru also replied saying that such a proposition did reach her as well.

“Back when we were talking about the gap between each request, you did say that you need someone else to handle the vehicle and wait for your supplies to arrive, and these two things become a bottleneck for you, remember? You also said that otherwise, you would have gone every day, right? And that was when you ask me if I have a solution for that, right?”

“…I did? I feel like I did, but… I feel like I just said it because I just wanted to complain. It was not like I was looking for a solution… Either way, I’m sorry, I didn’t mean to actually ask for your help back then…”

“But you did say that, remember? Although, I might have received it differently than what you have intended. But putting that aside, because of that, I went around looking for something to help you out, you see.”

“And that included Drankam too?”

“Not directly. I did ask the other staff, so someone with a connection to Drankam might have gone and asked them. Ah, I’m sorry if I’m troubling you instead. I have no wish at all to pressure you to accept it. So, if you think that it’s too troublesome, please feel free to just reject it. Tell them that there’s no penalty even if you don’t take up their offer. And also, if it’s too much work for you, you can just leave that to me if you want. I will happily do it for you.”

“Alright, ahh, don’t worry, it’s not like I’m angry or anything, I just didn’t expect it, that’s all.”

“I’m glad to hear that. Please call me again if you need anything else.”

After he finished that call, Akira gave a short explanation to Arabe about what he just heard from Hikaru.

“…So that’s basically what happened, it seems that it’s not like City Management is forcing Drankam to do it either. So, uhhh, can we just drop this subject?”

“Ahhh, I see. Honestly speaking, if you’re not bothered by it, we from Drankam wish that you would accept our offer. The transport season brings in many jobs and all of them are good for building one's reputation. Of course, we promise that we'll be careful with the team composition."

"I-I see, hmmm."

Akira started to look troubled. He had signed a peace treaty through the Hunter office with Drankam, so it might look suspicious if he insisted on not working with them. It's true that bringing more people would mean that Elena and Sara would have less burden and he himself would not have to resupply as often as before and put Shizuka in trouble. It was not a bad offer at all.

But making a deal with an organization was a huge pain in the neck, or at least, that was the case for Akira. Unlike with Elena and Sara, who he could trust, or Sheryl, who would just accept any amount that Akira decided to give her, dealing with an organization was different. He would have to wrestle with all the trouble that came with dealing with an organization, not to mention, he had to think about commanding the team as well as some kind of insurance for each person. All in all, it was extremely troublesome.

After taking his time to consider his options, Akira decided to take on Hikaru's offer. He then recalled Hikaru, gave her a quick overview, and left the rest of the negotiation with Drankam to Hikaru. Hikaru happily accepted the job, she quickly called Arabe after that and completely took over the negotiation in place of Akira.

With Arabe's negotiation opponent being shifted to Hikaru, Akira decided that he had no more business with Arabe, so he moved on to Shikarabe.

"So then, what do you want to talk about with me?"

"Well, about that… It has more or less already been taken care of, so…"

"The heck? It's done? But I haven't said anything yet. You can't just say that when you're the one who called me here. So, what is it?"

Seeing Akira was still curious, Shikarabe took a rather aggressive chug of the drink in his hand.

“…Let’s see. Well, you did come here, so I guess it’s only fair if I tell you. What can I say… It’s some kind of adjustment for my intuition, wait, no, it’s more like a check for my intuition…”

“What in the world are you even talking about?”

“It would be a long story if I have to tell you everything, but I will tell you the bare minimum since you did come here after I called you. If you’re interested, you’re welcome to listen, but if you’re not, feel free to finish your meal and leave anytime you want.”

Akira frowned and took a posture saying that he was interested. Shikarabe took one big gulp of the newly filled beer cup before he started talking.

After Katsuya’s death, Drankam went through dramatic changes. It basically eradicated Katsuya’s faction and it sent a shockwave through the inner management of the gang. Everyone, including the officers as well as the ordinary members, were all busy dealing with the aftermath. Thanks to that, there was no struggle for power at all.

With the excessive prioritization toward the young Hunters gone, Kurosawa and the other veteran Hunters, who had left the gang because of that policy, returned to Drankam. It was all thanks to them that the gang was able to finish the other deals that should have been handled by Katsuya. Although they were able to fill in the hole that Katsuya’s left, they still could not do anything about the long-term contracts involving Katsuya as an individual. Due to the violation of the contract from Drankam’s side, Drankam had to pay a huge fine. With no more support from Yanagisawa, Drankam was quickly thrown into a financial crisis.

“It’s all because those in the managerial side accepted those reckless long-term contracts. Those who took on such risks are now in deep trouble. But still, it’s not like I can just say that they got what they deserved and be happy about it. It’s also our fault for not stopping them before they signed those contracts. I know all of them are now blaming themselves, but that’s the same for me too. Just like them, I’ve believed that Kastsuya would never die, that he would only keep growing bigger.”

Shikarabe pour another beer into his empty cup and heaved a huge sigh as if he just let out something heavy that was latching onto him. He brought the beer to his mouth as if to fill in the hole that was left from his huge sigh.

“He was basically just that good. Whether it was hatred or the opposite, he had power that not all Hunters have, and his power threw us off. But with all being said, he still died in the end. People die when their time comes, it was obvious and even doubly true for Hunters. His death allowed us to come to our senses and sober up.”

Shikarabe then looked up as if he was digging through his past.

“I always hated his guts. No, I still hate him even now. Although it’s not as bad as how the me from the past would have felt. I hate him just like how I hate the other brats that get too cocky. I still don’t know, even now, why I hated him that much. Well, it might be actually just jealousy for his talent and that jealousy is now gone now that he is dead.”

No matter how far he dug through his past, Shikarabe could not recover the hatred that he once had. He somehow looked even more irritated than before.

“Let me return to the real subject, so, basically, my intuition is telling me that he’s someone who would not die and grow big. In contrast to that, I’m sorry to offend you, but you’re not that amazing and I’ve always felt that you’ll die sooner or later. But then, the result was the opposite, he’s dead and you survived, you even got to Rank 50. So, I just want to know just how wrong my intuition is.”

As a Hunter who placed his very own life on his intuition, for Shikarabe, questioning his intuition was like questioning the most basic principle of his identity. That was the reason why he called Akira to meet him. Even though it was important for him, it did not show at all on his face.

“And so, after I calmed down and threw away all my preconceptions. I once again asked my intuition, whether you’re an amazing Hunter. If even after that, I still can’t see you as an amazing Hunter, then it only means that my intuition is not to be trusted. That's why I called you here and I'm already done with that as well. So basically, that's all there is it."

"I see, so, what is your intuition saying now?"

To Akira who was asking while showing his honest interest in the answer, Shikarabe just smiled at him.

"We are not so close that I would just tell you that. Well, at least, I'll tell you that there's no need to completely throw it off the window for the time being."

"I see."

Shikarabe's reply already served as half an answer, so Akira just slightly smiled at him.

They continued talking while Shikarabe was enjoying his beer and Akira, enjoying his meal. As the alcohol started to take effect on Shikarabe, he suddenly asked a rather rude question to Akira.

"But still, that's pretty impressive of you to kill Katsuya. Oh, it's not like I'm looking down on you. It's just that you were alone when you were facing Katsuya and his whole team, right? Considering the difference in fighting prowess, it should have been impossible, no? So how did you kill him? Did he make a mistake somewhere? Or did you catch him off-guard or something?"

"…Both, I guess. I'll omit the details, but in the end, he died protecting his teammate. That's why I won. If he had abandoned his teammate, I would have been the one dead."

Shikarabe gave a lonely bitter smile and mumbled.

"…I see, so in the end, he thought too highly of himself and brought his friends closer to death again, huh? But I guess he did hold on to his belief to the very end. Well, that's just like him to die like that."

"He was always like that?"

“Well, yeah… Now that I think about it, back then, when he was the leader of a small team, he remained like that. He should have continued to lead a small group of people that he could save with his hard work. That way, others would not have died. Well, it’s Drankam who pushed him to lead a bigger team, so it would be wrong to blame him on that one, huh? He has always…”

Akira listened to Shikarabe’s recollection of Katsuya for a while before leaving.

__*__*__*__

On their way back, Arabe glanced at Shikarabe and threw a question to him.

“By the way, what is your intuition saying about Akira now?”

“Whoah there, are you seriously asking me that?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? It’s not like we’re strangers anyway, right?”

Arabe asked that question in a casual manner. But Shikarabe replied with a rather serious tone.

“Let’s see. Before you think of anything weird, I’ll tell you this first. He’s crazy, that’s what I think about him right now.”

“That‘s rather harsh, but it’s not like he’s weak or anything, right?”

“Overall, including his equipment, there’s no doubt he’s stronger than me. And even if we’re using the same equipment, it would still be a close fight. But rather than strength, his craziness sticks out more. In order for that crazy talent to bloom, it needs to be accompanied by someone crazy enough to do crazy things. You’ve heard about Kibayashi, right? I heard that Akira is just the kind Kibayashi loves. A reckless Hunter. So, basically, he gambles on his life on a daily basis and survives through all the risks he takes. There’s no doubt that someone who has gone through all those things would become that strong. So, it just makes me wonder… Why did I only see him as a common Hunter in the past…”

Seeing Shikarabe starting to admonish himself, Arabe decided to stop his original plan of trying to recruit Akira to Drankam. Shikarabe, who had been close to Arabe for so many years noticed that.

“I think you’ve made a good choice there. If you got Akira into Drankam, I bet he would drag the whole gang to his crazy stunts. So just forget about it, he would never be able to replace Katsuya.”

“You’re right, I’ll tell the others that too.”

“…Whoah there, so there are others who consider that too?”

“Yeah, pretty much.”

Shikarabe sighed exasperatedly, seeing that Arabe could only smile wryly.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 232, Middle district

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After finishing business with Shikarabe and Arabe, Drankam started to join Akira in his pruning job. After a fierce negotiation between Sheryl, Drankam, and Hikaru, they decided to keep the 1-week gap while still increasing the area coverage based on the new size of the team.

Due to Kurosawa's return to Drankam, the command chain quickly stabilized. The team worked very well under Kurosawa's command which was great for Akira. While at the same time, hunters kept encountering powerful monsters around the city, that should have been further to the east from Kugamayama city.

With the appearance of these monsters, hunters started to feel the pressure. Some of the hunters backed out from their job, some demanded more money to make it worth the preparation and the risk. One of the reasons why Hikaru asked Akira to shorten the gap was to help tip over the balance.

But Akira himself was not that powerful yet, he ended up having to use his trump card, the AF anti-material cannon, every day. It reminded him just how scary the wasteland of the eastern district was.

During noon, Akira was having a meeting with Hikaru in a restaurant on the first floor of the Kugama building.

“But still, just how long is this pruning request going to continue for? It has been a month since the transport season started, you know? Hasn’t it already ended a long time ago?”

“Although it started together with the transport season, it doesn’t stop together with it. It will continue as long as there’s demand for it. Especially this time. There are many people coming to this city because of the last incident in the Kuzusuhara ruin. These people of course include higher-ups as well. It’s not like we can stuff these people to a safebox and send them away without escorts, you see, but at the same time, there are not enough inter-city transports to ferry them since their schedule is already fully booked. I even heard that even someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry is sending their officers in secret too.”

“I see, that’s pretty amazing.”

Hikaru smiled bitterly. For the cities under the corporate government, getting an officer guest from the Sakashita Heavy Industry was a huge thing, but even so, unlike what Hikaru was looking forward to, Akira only showed the bare minimum interest in the matter. She felt that it was a mistake to leak insider information in hopes that it would surprise Akira.

“Yep, that’s really amazing. This is pretty valuable information, you know? So don’t leak it outside, okay?”

“Okay.”

Hikaru felt a bit disappointed that Akira reacted to something so important so casually, but she just shook it off for now and continued.

“So then, it’s about today’s main subject. I want you to escort one of the inter-city transports. I know it’s a bit sudden, but it’ll be tomorrow.”

“Tomorrow? That’s just way too sudden, I have to make sure that Elena-san and Sara-san are ready too, so…”

“I’m sorry, but the transport only has limited capacity, so you’ll be going alone. That’s why I’ve only finished the paperwork for you thinking that if it’s you alone, it should be fine. You should already have your supplies and seem ready to go anytime. So, that should be okay, right?”

“Well, if it’s only me, then yeah. But still, this is pretty sudden.”

“Yeah, it came to us out of the blue as well. Although I can’t tell you all the details, there’s this strange thing going on where abnormally strong monsters are appearing around the area. So, the original hunters assigned for this got injured fighting against those monsters or something like that. But with that being said, it’s not like they can just postpone the dispatch, you see. So, can you go? If you insist on refusing, I will have no other choice but to back off, but if you can, it would be great if you would do it.”

Akira thought while looking at Hikaru who was smiling at him while still giving off a serious aura.

“Alright.”

“Thank you!! Really really thank you!”

Hikaru said so and gave an honest ‘thank you’ to Akira.

After listening to a short briefing about that request, Akira left the restaurant and went back home. Hikaru, who was left behind, stayed in the restaurant, working through the paperwork while enjoying her parfait. Since Akira had accepted, she had to take care of the administration work as soon as possible. Since she was basically trying to insert Akira into the request using the opening created by the suddenly vacant escort slots, she had to hurry up or someone else would take that spot.

“…Alright! I made it! Although it’s a little bit too close for comfort, it’s all good as long as it gets through, yep!”

Judging from his performance in the pruning requests, Akira obviously had the skill to handle this escort request. He would have no trouble fighting in the wasteland further into the east. So, if Akira could contribute well during this escort mission, it would no doubt pull up Hikaru's reputation as well. Hikaru could not hold back her smile as she was looking forward to the result.

"Akira, good luck out there, I'm rooting for you, you know?"

Akira unexpectedly took the request without much need of convincing. So, it seems that she could expect more from him in the future. As Hikaru was thinking about that future, a call suddenly reached her. It was from Kibayashi.

"Hello, it's Hikaru, what is it?"

"It's me. There's something I want to talk to you about the escort request."

"Is there a problem? Don't worry, I was able to get Akira to take on the request."

Hikaru thought that Kibayashi was calling her, worried that he might lose his connection to Akira, that was why she replied with a rather haughty tone there. But unexpectedly, Kibayashi replied with a rather amused voice.

"Oh, not bad at all. To be honest, I didn't expect you would be able to pull that off. Well well, I guess it was a good thing I introduced you to Akira."

Hikaru was taken aback by that unexpected reaction.

"I-I see. Thank you very much."

"I heard that you pushed the joint work with Drankam in order to cement the peace treaty as well as to win some trust from Akira, right? That peace treaty, it's actually made by me, you see."

"Is that so? Thank you."

"No no no, I'm just happy to find that my work is useful to others. But still, it's pretty impressive using that peace treaty to push for that joint operation."

Hikaru was not sure how to react to Kibayashi, who was praising her.

“Anyway, I’m sorry for imposing on you by bringing this matter up, but returning back to the main subject, there’s something I want you to do for me when you meet Akira tomorrow.”

“What is it?”

After hearing Kibayashi’s request, Hikaru replied with a confused tone.

“Is that all?”

“Yes, that’s all, that’s all from me. Call me again if something comes up.”

Kibayashi then closed the call. Hikaru tried to understand the meaning behind Kibayashi’s request for a bit, but nothing came to mind. Thus, she just stopped there and left it as something that must have some kind of deeper meaning to it.

On the morning of the next day, Akira was waiting for Hikaru in front of the Kugama building. He was carrying one spare AF anti-material cannon and 4 LEO rifles that were hidden under his newly bought coat. The large-sized rucksack on his back was filled with extended magazines and energy packs. Each one of these energy packs were focused more on capacity instead of price, so both were by no means cheap.

The transport truck was also filled to the brim with ammunition, so if needed, Akira could just buy them right there. But Akira wanted to buy from Shizuka’s shop as much as possible. Of course, the quality of the product from the transport truck was guaranteed to be great, and he could use his position as the escort to get a small discount. In comparison, the ammo that he bought from Shizuka was slightly more expensive, but even so, he still prioritized Shizuka’s shop. It was basically one of those occult things among hunters.

Hikaru, who came right on time, looked puzzled at Akira’s luggage.

“That’s quite a lot of luggage for a 3 days, 2 nights journey.”

“Regardless of the estimated time, the journey between cities is always going to be long. So, it’s better to be safe than sorry.”

“Well, you’re the one who will be escorting that journey after all. Now then, let’s go.”

Hikaru then happily took Akira through the Kugama building and into the inner wall. In the middle of that, Hikaru gave Akira a bracelet-type information terminal.

“Always keep this on during the request, okay? It doubles as evidence that you have permission to enter the middle district as well as permission to bring your weapons in. So, make sure not to lose it. The area where you’re going has the same security system as the middle district. In the case where you break that bracelet, don’t move and contact me right away. In the worst-case scenario, the system might recognize you as a treat and deal with you.”

“Alright. Can I just put this on top of my augmented suit?”

“It’s pretty durable since it’s designed for hunters, so it should be okay. You can also change the size; you should have no trouble putting it on… Do you need my help to put it on? Thought that would be on your neck.”

Hikaru smiled mischievously, Akira only lightly chuckled and replied.

“No thanks.”

“That’s unfortunate.”

Akira put that bracelet on his left arm. He then showed it to the guard on the gate before he could proceed into the inner wall. The moment he stepped into the inner wall, Hikaru twirled around and spread her arm as she looked at Akira with a huge smile.

“Akira, welcome to the middle district!!”

The huge wall divided Kugamayama city into the inner and outer sections. The thick tall wall represented the gap of public order, economy, and environment between the inner wall and the outer wall, and Akira finally stepped into the inner section.

Of course, there was no shortage of land considering all the unused lands out in the wasteland, but once walls were erected, it created a limited supply of safe areas. In order to make the best use of that limited resource, tall buildings were erected inside the inner wall. But even so, it did not feel crowded. In fact, the urban landscape was designed to give off a sense of freedom. The well-cleaned road boasted the difference between the inner and the outer section of the wall to Akira.

An unmanned vehicle stopped in front of Akira and Hikaru. She was the one who summoned that vehicle. It was the common way to move around inside the middle district. The inside of the vehicle was relatively wide for its size thanks to the fact that it did not have a driver seat, Akira did not have any trouble at all stuffing his luggage in. After he boarded in as well, Hikaru set the destination, and the vehicle started to silently move without making any noticeable shaking, but even so, it was coursing at a rather high speed through the middle district.

Akira was gazing at the cityscape through the car's window with great interest. However, Hikaru found something strange looking at Akira's expression.

"You don't seem to be that excited. Is the middle district not as great as you thought it would be?"

"Ah, no, it's indeed really amazing, I guess it's as expected of the middle district, but because of that, I kind of expected this so it doesn't really surprise me."

"Is that so? Many who enter the middle district for the first time from the outer wall seem to feel overwhelmed and found it absolutely amazing though."

The area around the gate of the Kugama building that connected the inner and the outer part of the wall was deliberately built to give an impactful impression to those who entered for the first time. It was the way the middle district showed its glory and greatness to those from outside the wall as well as the way to encourage the people who live inside the wall to be proud of where they lived and worked.

Hikaru also thought highly of the middle district, and she was planning to move on to the upper district one day. This was the reason why she was working so hard right now. But that was also the reason why she wanted Akira to be happier after she took him from the lower district to the middle district. Unfortunately, Akira was as apathetic as usual with his reaction and Hikaru found it regrettable.

“Ahhh, it might be because you’re a hunter that you’ve found something more amazing somewhere in the ruins, right? Well, it’s true that no matter how amazing the buildings in the middle district are, they’re all still just buildings made in the current era. There’s no way they can stand a chance against the old-world buildings, huh?”

“Is that so? Hmmm, that might be the case…”

That was when Hikaru remembered what she heard from Kibayashi yesterday. She thought that it was a good time to bring it up and smiled.

“But still, this place is not the same as the outer wall, you know? And it’s not limited only in terms of the outlook. Hear this and be amazed! In the middle district!! If someone gets killed in the middle of the road! The murderer will be properly caught, sent to the court, investigated, before finally punished based on the available evidence! Isn’t that amazing?!”

“Ohh!! That’s amazing! As expected of the inner wall!!”

Both Hikaru and Akira were surprised, but the reason for it was completely different. Akira was simply being honest that he was surprised at how public safety was enforced in the inner wall. Meanwhile, Hikaru was taken aback that Akira was so surprised. The difference in their common sense regarding public safety was in full view.

Hikaru was suspicious if Akira was only trying to match her excitement instead of being honestly surprised. But judging from Akira’s reaction, it was obvious that he was truly surprised. When she remembered what Kibayashi said yesterday, it caused her to start feeling anxious.

Kibayashi asked Hikaru to do 2 things. The first one was to tell Akira just how safe the inner wall was, which she had done just now. The other one was something that she thought was not that big of a deal. However, after seeing Akira's reaction, she conveyed this last bit to Akira carefully.

"…By the way, Akira, how many people have you killed till now? It might be rude for me to ask this, but it has something to do with submitting your permission, you see."

Akira pulled back his head and thought for a bit, but eventually, he shook his head and said.

"Sorry, I have no idea, it's not like I'm counting it in the first place…"

"There's no need for a precise number, an estimation like how many digits should be enough."

"In that case… 3 digits… I guess? I'm sure it doesn't go as far as 4 digits or does it? Hmm… It's just my guess though."

"I-I see… Is that the number from the ones you killed directly? Or does it include those who are killed indirectly as well?"

Leaders often counted the people that the team killed due to their orders. Hikaru thought that Akira might be one of those when she asked that question, but he interpreted that question differently.

"Does indirect include something like I shot them, but they did not die right away only to die later because of the wound too?"

"That would be direct."

"In that case, that number is from the direct ones."

"I-I see."

Akira answered Hikaru’s questions as if it was a casual conversation. Like what he just had for lunch a few days ago. Hikaru was only barely able to maintain her smile thanks to her greatly polished negotiation talent. She then reached for the information terminal and stopped the car.

“Sorry, I forgot to report something to Kibayashi, can you please wait here for a bit? I’ll go out and make a quick call.”

“Sure.”

Akira replied with a short affirmation, so Hiraku smiled at him and left the car. She unconsciously walked away from the car where Akira was, half-running. After she opened some distance from the car, she repeatedly took some deep breathes to calm down her throbbing heart. She tried to calm down as much as possible before calling Kibayashi.

“Oh, did something happen?”

Kibayashi’s casual voice incited an explosion of emotion from Hikaru.

“Don’t give me that!? Just what the heck is wrong with him!?”

“Even if you yell at me like that, I have no idea unless you tell me what happened, you know?”

Kibayashi was chuckling since it turned out exactly as he expected as he listened to Hikaru’s explanation. After that, he then innocently asked Hikaru.

“I see, so, is there any problem?”

“Are you-!? Of course, it’s a huge problem!? Why did you let someone who killed that many people into the middle district?!”

“Why, you ask? What are you even talking about? Isn’t that because you asked me to?”

“It doesn’t take a genius to refuse that request, you know!? Don’t tell me that you did something behind the curtain to get permission for him.”

“I didn’t do anything. Well, if you ask me if he’s a dangerous person, I’ll give you a straight yes. Even I would hesitate to let him into the middle district. So, I’m really amazed by your negotiation skill, you really managed to get him into the middle district. I’m being serious here, I’m honestly impressed that you actually did it, didn’t I tell you yesterday as well, remember?”

In contrast to Hikaru, who was barking complaints, Kibayashi replied with an amused tone.

“It seems that you’re suspicious why your request got through, the final decision for the permission is made based on many considerations. For example, even if it’s true that Akira killed hundreds of people, that happened outside the wall. In short, that happened out there in the wasteland. So, I bet the higher-ups are not really concerned about it. But with that being said, if he was a murderer who killed people he saw no matter where he went, the permission would not have been granted. As a matter of fact, he would have been put on a bounty. Even if he has killed hundreds of people, it happened outside the wall, and considering that the public safety outside the wall is virtually non-existent along with his hunter rank being 50, I bet his permission was only barely managed to get approved.”

“T-that’s… Aren’t you going a bit too far with that guess of yours?”

“But that’s completely possible, you know? Didn’t you work so hard to close that gap? That peaceful resolution with Drankam through the hunter office, and with that as a basis, you get them to join operations with him. That should be enough to prove that Akira is a professional hunter who obeys his contracts closely. Basically, what you have done so far is guarantee that he’s safe. Man, that’s really impressive. If it was me, I wouldn’t be able to do that. After all, that guy went in alone and crushed a huge gang in the slums just to kill someone who stole his money, you know? He did kill quite a lot of people during that incident, after all, so there’s no way his kill count only stopped at dozens, you know.”

“S-so that was not because he somehow got roped into the conflict…?”

“Hm? The record didn’t go into that detail, huh? Did the record mostly omit that part because of its connection with that powered suit? Hmm? I see. It’s under the information restriction, huh? Well, I guess things like this do happen from time to time, ah, right, make sure not to leak this info, okay?”

Hikaru’s face turned paler and paler.

“I’m sure you’ll be deemed responsible if he causes some sort of issue there. Though it won’t go as far as firing you, I bet you won’t be able to live inside the inner wall anymore. But again, I bet you know this very well before you brought him into the middle district, right? By the way, I went to call you in person yesterday because I just wanted to confirm if you’re sure with what you were doing, just to be safe, you know?”

Hikaru then thought that she should have noticed it the moment Kibayashi said something suspicious to her yesterday, but all that she could do for now was just to wallow in her regrets.

“Well, basically, everything will be fine as long as he doesn’t do anything bad and it’s your job to make sure that nothing bad happens. Be careful, yeah? If a random thug in the inner wall said to him that they would kill him, there’s no doubt that he’ll go ahead and kill them instead, that’s just the kind of person Akira is. Even with the fact that he’s a ranking 50 hunter with a connection to city management’s officer and a strong letter of recommendation from city management staff, he only managed to get temporary permission to enter the middle district, you see. So, I’m sure you understand the meaning behind it without any further explanation.”

Hikaru always thought that high ranking hunters with connection to city management’s officers would always be proper hunters, but that did not seem to be the case.

“He might be able to accomplish whatever crazy plan you have, you know? So, just give it your best shot, I’ll be waiting for the result.”

Even after Kibayashi closed the call, Hikaru still stood there without doing anything for a few minutes. When she returned to herself, she finally understood that Kibayashi was using her to do something crazy and she had no inkling of how to get away from that.

Sending Akira as the escort for the inter-city transport was supposed to be a low-risk high-return gamble, but now, it has completely changed into a life-staking high-risk high-return gamble. Unfortunately, she had gone too far to back out now. Not only did she forcefully get Akira into a job related to another city, if she suddenly decided to back out of it at the very last minute, her reputation would be crushed to nothing. In the worst-case scenario, they might blame her and banish her from the inner wall.

In the first place, it was highly unlikely that Akira would be okay with quitting at this point. For the hunters, the request to escort inter-city transport was a fortuitous request. If Hikaru told him to back out although she was the one who strongly pushed that request to him, it would definitely buy her a lot of grudges. She did not even want to imagine what would happen to her after that.

“Okay okay! I just have to do this, right?!”

Her route of retreat had already been destroyed. Which meant, her only choice was to push forward and reach for the win. She clapped both of her hands on her face and expelled the fear inside of her.

“Let’s do this!”

Hikaru declared so to help herself get fired up as she gave off a strong smile.

The transport terminal inside the wall was built like a harbor to handle large cargoes. The huge trucks carrying countless containers were going back and forth between the transport trucks and the warehouses. The size of the tires of those large trucks was even bigger than Akira. The transport truck was large enough to make those large trucks that hunters used look like cute tiny baby trucks. The scene laid out here really threw off the sense of the size for everyone there.

Akira was looking closely at one of those vehicles and was completely overwhelmed by the size of it. Although he encountered them a few times in the wasteland, he never looked at them up close. Their sizes really felt different when he was this close to it.

“I know that this thing is designed to be used in the wasteland, but still, it’s really something. If a vehicle this huge is going through the wasteland. It’s no wonder it would attract monsters. That would explain why there were so many pruning requests. Well then, I’ll be going now.”

“Of course, good luck.”

Akira walked through the ramp and boarded the vehicle, Hikaru saw him off with a smile. But after Akira vanished into the vehicle, her smile quickly turned wry. She only stood there while running her brain at full power, and then when the ramp was about to be removed, she finally made her decision and ran into the vehicle as well.

Akira went to the room that he was assigned to and took a short rest there. Since the inside of the transport vehicle was considered as a part of the middle district, it was well equipped to welcome the guests suitable for those who would visit the middle district, the individual rooms were relatively large and equipped with all kinds of facilities. And to match its size, the bath in the bathroom was also equally big. The wall was equipped with holographic displays and projected the scene from the outside of the vehicle, it gave off a sense of grandiose. Hunters could also pay extra to get better rooms with more facilities, but Akira did not think that it was a wise thing to spend his reward for that.

Akira’s job was to watch the outside and to follow command when a battle broke out. Since the escorts’ groups and posts were already decided beforehand, they were free to do anything until they were called upon. Akira was thinking of going to the cafeteria or perusing the merchant quarters to waste time. As he left the room, that was right when Hikaru, who was running toward his room, arrived at his door.

Hikaru was still panting when she asked Akira.

“A-Akira… Where… Are you going?”

“I’m just thinking of checking the cafeteria or the stands…”

“I-I see… W-well… Can you please stay in your room… For now? P-Please…”

Hikaru was still panting as she meekly pushed Akira back into his room. Akira was weirded out by it but still decided to get back to his room.

Hikaru was trying to calm her breath while giving off a rather anxious look, Akira frowned at Hikaru and threw a question at her.

“The truck will be going soon, is it okay for you to be here? Weren’t you planning to give me support from the city?”

“That was the plan, but there’s a small change in that plan. I’ll be going with you too. It’s faster to give you support from closer by after all. Although I can’t help you during the fight, we don’t need to worry much about lag and interference when we’re close. I’ll be with you for the full 3 days, so, I’ll be in your care.”

“I see, in that case, I’ll be in your care as well. Now then, I’ll be going out for a bit-”

“Wait!”

Akira stepped back and was really weirded out by Hikaru, who stopped him so suddenly and desperately. But Hikaru then gave a polite smile and said.

“Please just stay in the room. If you want to do something outside, please tell me first. If it’s something I can do, then I’ll do it for you. So don’t leave this room, okay?”

“…Why don’t you want me to go out that much?”

As expected, Akira started to find it suspicious. Hikaru tried to keep calm as she looked for an excuse.

“Although you received permission to go to the middle district, we actually kind of forced it so that the permission got approved on time. Because of that, some data is still being processed. I’m worried that the security system might not correctly recognize the permissions supposed to be granted to you. So, if it’s possible, I want you to just stay in this room. I’m sorry, this is all my fault.”

“Is that so? Ah, that’s why you suddenly have to change your plan, huh?”

“Y-Yes, exactly! I’m really sorry.”

“Well, it can’t be helped then. Fine, I’ll refrain from going out from this room as much as I can.”

“Thank you, and again, sorry.”

Hikaru sighed in relief, Akira sent a glance at Alpha who was floating next to Hikaru.

“Alpha.”

“She’s not lying, but I bet it’s just an excuse.”

“Thought so. Well, I’m sure she has her reasons too. She has been acting weird ever since she left the car to call Kibayashi, I wonder if Kibayashi said something to her.”

Since it was basically an order from his requester and it was not something that hard to do, Akira thought that there was no need to unnecessarily refuse that order and did not dwell any further on it.

For the time being, Hikaru’s plan was to reduce Akira’s contact with others. This was in order to reduce the possibility of him causing any form of trouble as much as possible and that plan was going well for now.

The displays on the wall suddenly turned on, showing the views outside the vehicle. It seemed that the vehicle finally started moving. The large transport vehicle approached the high walls. The wall then started to move and opened a passage into the wasteland. The transport vehicle passed through that opening and immediately accelerated the moment it entered the wasteland. With this, Akira’s request to escort the transport had begun.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 233, Eastern Area

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The transport that Akira was boarding lined up with the other transport trucks and formed a long line in the middle of the wasteland. Their huge size left behind a trail of dust storms; it was an easy thing to spot the convoy from afar. They marched forward mercilessly, pushing aside and crushing anything in their way. Rubble meters in length and large carcasses were no match to the size of the transport truck. None of them could even pose a challenge to the vehicle.

The transport vehicles were equipped with powerful forcefield armour that could easily deflect cannon warheads. The cannon perching on top of it had enough firepower to shoot down flying monsters. It had enough space to carry the population of a small town, with all its members armed to the teeth. It was so well equipped that it could be called a moving fortress. That was the transport vehicle that Akira and the other Hunters were boarding.

Akira was there as the escort to Gigant 3. He already had his position decided beforehand, so he was currently waiting for the hourly guard exchange while talking and studying with Alpha to kill the time.

During that time, he glanced at Hikaru, who was moving her mouth as if she was quipping. She was not making any sound and smiling while facing toward an empty space. She would only make a sound when she was using a mini AR device to negotiate with someone from afar. To Akira, who already knew what he was doing, this scene seemed completely normal. However, for those who had no idea, she looked like a madwoman talking to herself.

“Alpha. Do I look like that too when I’m talking to you?”

“Only when we’re alone. But I’ve always made sure that you won’t look like that when there’s someone else, so it’s fine, at least, it’s fine right now.”

“So basically, I was completely hopeless back when I just met you, huh? Bet I stuck out a lot.”

Akira smiled wryly next to Alpha who was smiling amusedly.

Hikaru lightly bowed and sighed. It seemed that she had finished negotiations. Hikaru then turned to Akira. Judging from her smile, it seemed that it went well.

As Akira thought about why she was looking at him, sudden order to dispatch reached him. Akira was about to pick it up, but Hikaru stopped him with her hand signal. Thus, he paused for a bit before finally picking it up. He was a bit surprised to see the person shown in the display of his augmented vision. Although the notification said that he was connected to someone in command, the person displayed was Hikaru.

Akira immediately glanced at Hikaru and saw her smile mischievously at him.

“It seems that it went well, I’m a part of the escort unit’s commander now. I’m glad that I made it on time. Akira, I’m joining the escort unit as your operator.”

Akira raised his eyebrows. He was obviously surprised, Hikaru noticed that too as she smiled wryly and explained.

“Well, although I’m an operator, it’s not like I’m going to bother you with my orders. Basically, I’ll just convey the orders that I receive from the higher-ups to you. In exchange, if you want to be allowed to ignore said order. Oh. It could be either because it was a bad order or because you are not in a position to obey it. Regardless of the reason, I can negotiate in your place. So instead of being an operator that gives you detailed support, I’ll focus more on supporting you so that you can move freely.”

“Ah, I see, alright then. I’ll be counting on you.”

“Just leave it to me, well then, as my first job as your operator, Akira, get ready. I’ll guide you as close as possible to your post once you’re ready.”

Hikaru said so to Akira with a smile, although there were lies mixed in her words, Akira could not notice them thanks to how skilled she was.

Once Akira was done with his preparation, they left the room and walked through the transport’s hallway guided by Hikaru. She was walking next to Akira while vigilantly watching her surroundings as if she was carefully walking through the dangerous ruin.

As expected, Akira found that very weird, but he then caught Alpha smiling amusedly next to him.

“What?”

“Hm? Well, it’s just that she basically doesn’t allow you to get out of your room, and when you do, she’ll always be close by. That bracelet also allowed her to track your location all the time. It’s as if you’re a prisoner.”

“Just what did I do to deserve this treatment?”

“Killing many people outside the wall, although it doesn’t really matter to me, it seems that is not the case for City Management.”

Akira somehow was able to make a guess as to the reason why Hikaru was treating him like that.

“…It’s not like I’m involved in all those things because I wanted to, though…”

“Of course, but it’s a completely different story whether they’ll trust you or not, right?”

“Yeah, you’re right…”

Akira threw a bitter smile, which Hikaru could not have noticed.

The top of the transport vehicle was basically flat. It was designed to maximize the efficiency of the forcefield armour. Because of that, the only thing that could serve as a shield from the wind was the huge cannons perched on top of the transport vehicle. With the vehicle travelling at high speed, the atmosphere on the roof was constantly turbulent.

Akira’s post was on the rooftop. Thus, he was standing straight in the middle of the raging storm, which would have blown any normal human away. It was only thanks to his augmented suit that he could stand straight. The enemy detection was done through the powerful radar installed on the vehicle. So, Akira’s current job was to wait there until he received an order that allowed him to start shooting.

Akira stood on one edge of the rooftop and scanned over the wasteland. The fast-moving transport vehicle had already entered the eastern area of the eastern district. Although he was still far away from the front line, the area was already filled with monsters that were way stronger and smarter than the monsters around Kugamayama city. Even the view there left Akira the impression that he was looking at something high-tech.

“Alpha. There’s something that looks like a huge bird in the sky over there with a column-like building hanging under it, you’re not playing with my vision, right?”

“Nope.”

“Then, I guess it’s a real monster, huh?”

Akira glanced at Alpha, aside from her unrealistic beauty coupled with the too exposed dress and the fact that she sometimes floated in the air, she looked like a real person. People could feel her if they touched her through their prosthetic body or augmented suit, but in reality, she was not there. Meanwhile, the fantasy-like bird that was flying far away was not virtual, it was a real monster.

“I feel like I am starting to not be able to trust my own eyes…”

“There are things in this world that are real although you can see them, you know?”

“I know the real meaning of that saying is different from what you’re implying.”

“But it’s true. The connection between you and me is not something that eyes can see, right?”

“That’s true, but still…”

Deals, contracts, trust, debts, favors, schemes, compromises, obligations, evaluations, toleration. Alpha built a complicated connection through the old-world domain based on all these factors. As for whether this link was weak or strong, Alpha herself was not certain.

Nonetheless, Alpha wished to create a stronger connection with Akira when she smiled at him. However, Akira just thought that Alpha was being cryptic as usual and just ignored her smile.

Hikaru’s voice suddenly could be heard from the comms and her image quickly appeared in his augmented vision.

“Akira, the monsters are coming, A swarm of flying monsters are approaching. The transport’s cannon will take care of the bigger ones, so you only need to focus on the smaller ones when they are closing in on you. There’s no need to fight the ones outside your range even if you have the leeway to. As long as there’s no order to do so, the other Hunters might mistake it as you trying to snatch their prey and reward, so it might cause some issues. I'll send you their locations, you can make your own decision based on that data."

Another display showing the enemy's locations appeared in Akira's augmented vision. Akira could see a swarm of monsters coming from the front of the transport convoy, the display also showed that none of them were currently Akira's targets.

"Just tell me if you're having a hard time over there, I'll send help."

"Roger that, well, I'll do the best I can first before asking for help. Is that everything?"

"Yes, if I may add something, I'm basically monitoring you as an operator, so you can show me your cool side, or so I want to say, but…"

Hikaru's smile which was brimming with confidence up until that point suddenly turned cloudy.

"Just because I said so, there's no need for you to do anything reckless like what Kibayashi wants."

Akar smiled bitterly and replied.

"It's not like I did them because I wanted to."

"Is that so? That kind of thing depends on the individual, I guess. Well, I'll be watching as the operator so we can compare our impressions later. Now then, good luck, Akira."

Hikaru's image vanished from Akira's display. He then changed gear to get ready for the fight.

The monsters approaching the convoy had come close enough to be seen with naked eyes. When Akira locked his gaze at those monsters, Akira's information-gathering device recognized the enemy as it augmented Akira's vision to be able to clearly see them. The swarm looked like a group of flying insects. The display also added the information of their distance as well as their location.

But when Akira glanced at the distance, he found it rather surprising.

“…Oh, wait? Are they still that far away? Are these numbers correct?”

“They’re so big that they already looked that big although they’re still so far away. And since there’s nothing to compare to when they’re flying in the sky, it’s so difficult to grasp how far away they are with just your eyes.”

“Is that so? But I still feel like the number is a little bit too big, though…”

“In that case, let’s add something to help you compare.”

Alpha suddenly vanished and reappeared next to the monsters. As Akira compared the size of the monster and Alpha, he could not help but frown.

The oval-like monster had a relatively small head with small round eyes. That eye alone was already bigger than Alpha. Although the initial impression made it seem like a small insect that Akira could easily scoop with the tip of his finger, its true size was comparable to that of a small island. Worse, these humongous monsters were all flying toward the convoy.

“Isn’t that just way too big? So, the eastern region is filled with these kinds of monsters, huh? No wonder Hunters there bring their tanks and powered suits with them.”

Alpha reappeared next to Akira again and smiled at him.

“Oh my, are you scared now?”

“To be honest, yeah, a bit. But being big doesn’t mean that I can’t defeat them. I fought something that big before too and compared to that time, I have better equipment now. So, I’ll just do what I usually do. And it’s not like I have to fight all of them in the first place. But still, give me full support this time.”

“Just leave it to me. They’re coming, Akira.”

Alpha pointed her finger to the direction where the convoy was heading, the other vehicles in front of the one they were on had already started firing their cannons.

Multiple cannons fixed their aim at the incoming swarm. Then they released a loud explosion, followed by a lance of light that pierced the swarm. Although the light lance looked similar to the AF anti-material cannon, its speed, accuracy, firepower, and size were completely different. As these lances cut through the swarm, they drilled a hole through the monsters' resilient-looking armor, evaporated and melted their organs, and ended them.

As the monsters fell to the ground one by one, due to their size and their distance, they seemed to be falling in slow motion from Akira's point of view.

At the same time, the cannons started shooting, the transport vehicles ahead also started deploying drones to fight the monsters. Each of them was equipped with powerful rifles with extended magazines, which they used to release a barrage. The convoy also did not hold back releasing all of their missiles toward the swarm. The bullet storm and explosions made easy work of the smaller monsters.

Among the deployed robots and drones, there were also some infantry which also participated in the battle. Since they were equipped with weapons used in the eastern district, they were able to mow down the smaller monsters without any issue at all.

The intense battle continued. Akira was watching it in amazement.

"They're really not holding anything back. So, this is how the Hunters in the east fight. Err, what can I say? It's like we're living in different worlds."

"I don't think your impression is wrong. The further east you go, the more sophisticated the technology. And the civilization created with such technology is an abnormality in itself."

“Well, we’re talking about an area filled with those flying things after all. So, it’s obvious that it’s not normal. And there are Hunters who work and live there, so it’s only to be expected that they’re also not normal either. And here I thought that I’ve grown pretty strong, but I guess there’s always a bigger fish, huh?”

Stronger escorts were assigned to the front of the convoy and Akira right now was assigned to somewhere near the end of the convoy. So compared to the other Hunters, he was relatively on the weaker side.

Akira imagined just how big the world was and sighed. He was making a rather conflicted expression mixed with a tint of both admiration and self-mockery.

But Alpha was smiling as usual at Akira and said to him.

“If you keep looking up at the sky while you’re climbing a mountain, you won’t notice how far you’re from the top, but there’s no mistaking it. You’re getting closer to the tip. So don’t worry, there’s no need to rush. Let’s climb it at our own pace.”

“…You’re right.”

Akira pulled himself together and managed to give a smile to Alpha, who replied with a confident smile.

“Now then, let’s do what we usually do. Akira, let’s take them down and add them to your track record for the sake of reaching the top.”

Alpha pointed at the monsters that broke through the front and started shooting at the transport vehicles at the back of the convoy. They were the smaller monsters that the vanguards let go through since they were relatively harmless and would not be able to deal much damage to the transport vehicles. But even so, they were still huge compared to a single human. Some of them stuck themselves on the side or on the top of the transport vehicle and started biting off its armor. While the other small group continued forward toward where Akira and the rest were.

The display indicating the enemies started changing color to let Akira know that they were his responsibility now.

“Roger that!”

Akira smiled and aimed his rifle. With LEO multi-rifle in both hands, he aimed the muzzles toward the incoming monsters and started shooting.

Hikaru was observing the situation of the battle from inside the transport vehicle. She was checking the information sent from Akira’s information terminal and the sensors of the transport vehicle to look for enemies. She was watching closely at the flow of the battle from that information she was receiving and was planning to send a help request without asking Akira first in case the situation got worse.

But it seemed that there was no need to do so. Akira already turned everything that entered his area into minced meat and the number of the dead carcasses scattered in his area only kept increasing. He was holding the line against the swarming monsters using countless bullets and warheads. Despite being at a great disadvantage in terms of numbers, Akira was pushing back the swarm just fine.

The camera fixed on Akira’s headgear swayed left and right, up and down, following Akira’s movement. But it was not as bad as how fast Akira shifted his aim around. Of course, Akira did not have a problem following that movement, but that was not the case for Hikaru.

“Ah, nope, I’m out, this is going to make me puke.”

Thinking that it would help her judge the situation better, Hikaru tried to follow Akira’s movement. But she knew that it would be impossible to keep doing that any longer and dialed down the setting on her augmented vision. As she zoomed out the display of Akira’s vision, she expanded the data feed from the transport’s sensor.

The information display showed the blips around Akira vanishing one by one. Although the swarm was far from eradicated, judging at how fast the blips were vanishing, it seemed that the monsters could not overwhelm Akira.

[…This is amazing. No wonder Kibayashi likes him.]

Although she evaluated Akira's skills highly, she was still making a stern expression. In the worst-case scenario, someone of this level of strength might rampage inside the middle district. And when that happened, the perpetrator and the one who allowed him inside would have to take responsibility for the damage, basically, it was Akira and her.

Those who had successfully handled dangerous articles for a long time were given special privileges to match their achievement. As such, those who were able to handle them skillfully and produce profits were rewarded with special rights.

This was exactly why Kibayashi had a lot of special privileges, this was also true for the relationship between Hunters and the Hunter Office. The Corporate Government was still having a hard time making sure that their power, which was enough to pose a threat to the whole eastern district, was to be used for the sake of good and for the development of the eastern district. At the very least, for now, they were managing themselves well.

Hikaru herself was yearning to join them, or at least, up until now.

"Haa… This is a mistake… No, I'll do it!! Like hell I will lose here!!"

She shook her head and tried to banish that weak thought that she just worded out as she renewed her resolve.

Akira was moving around the rooftop of the transport vehicle while shooting the monsters down. The muzzles in front of his eyes were moving extremely fast. He no longer had the leeway to leisurely take aim, all of his focus was assigned to confirm the situation in front of his eyes.

He was receiving the data straight from his expensive information terminal through his connection to the old-world domain. He unconsciously took that flow of information as a normal thing and his brain used that information to perceive the world. Thanks to that, Akira was able to feel where the monsters were and quickly aimed his rifles in their general direction. He then used the aiming device connected to his headgear display to make the smaller adjustment to his aim. Then to top it off, Alpha also made a finer readjustment on his aim as well.

The bullets that Akira was using for his LEO multi-rifles were fuelled by forcefield reactants. Instead of using physical force, their firepower came from compressed energy, this type of bullet was known as Charge Bullet. Although, theoretically, there was no limit in how much energy it consumed, the available technology became the limiter of its firepower since stuffing too much-compressed energy would cause the bullet to explode instead of flying forward. Furthermore, the energy to power conversion became highly inefficient quickly past a certain level. Thus, further limiting the firepower of the Charge Bullet.

The Charge Bullet drew energy from the energy pack and compressed it to increase the firepower of the bullet, Alpha made an adjustment in that process as such, the bullets only consumed the right amount of energy needed to kill the monsters that Akira was fighting. While at the same time, Akira made sure to use the expensive extended magazine for his LEO multi-rifles so that he would not run out of ammo.

Due to these factors, the firepower, accuracy, and shooting speed of the LEO multi rifles that Akira was using were abnormally high, and this was true for both the left and the right ones. Akira was constantly swinging them around, spreading death and destruction to everything around him. Even with the overwhelming number of monsters in the swarm, the dead carcasses that were piling up around him made it obvious which one was overwhelming the other.

From Hikaru’s point of view, it seemed that Akira was having an easy time dealing with the monsters, but in reality, Akira could not take that fight easy.

“They’re just too many of them!!! What the heck with this number!?”

Akira already killed several monsters and the carcasses scattered around him were in no way scarce. But the monsters just kept coming at him. Although Alpha, who was smiling next to him, let him know that the situation was still far from dangerous, Akira still could not help but spit out some complaints.

“Akira, if it’s so hard on you, you can ask Hikaru for some help, you know?”

“If it’s way more than I can handle with your support, then I don’t mind asking her now.”

“In that case, there’s no need to then.”

Alpha and Akira exchanged a smile which let both of them know that they were doing fine, but Akira then frowned.

“Alpha, just how many more do I need to kill?”

“You’re doing very well, these smaller monsters are all coming from the bigger monsters that were shot down. It’s just like those smaller spiders from that Tank Tarantula, you remember that one, right? So, it’s the same as that monster.”

“I see. With their size, it’s not strange for there to be so many monsters. There doesn’t seem to be an end to them.”

“Well, there is also the fact that they are swarming all the transport vehicles, so even if you clean up the ones around you, it won’t take much time for the monsters surrounding the area to fill in the vacuum.”

To be more precise, although Akira was assigned somewhere in the back, it was still originally an area assigned for a whole team. It was only because Hikaru somehow forced her way to get Akira in, that he was able to accept this escort job. Furthermore, in order to avoid any possible trouble in the chain of command, there was quite a distance between each team. This was to lower the chance of them getting into a fight. Due to that, Akira had to do the job that was originally meant for multiple people, alone.

Hikaru knew that this would happen and so she had prepared accordingly. But it seemed that it was unnecessary seeing how Akira was able to handle that job alone just fine.

Akira had no plan to call for help but fighting an unending flow of monsters was still hitting his motivation hard. Since it was not like there was anything else he could do there, Akira decided to use that chance to get a better track record.

“Alright then! Let’s use this chance to get a good achievement!! Alpha! Let’s get a little bit more serious!”

“Roger that!”

Alpha understood what Akira was talking about through telepathy, she then smiled and changed her instruction that she had been holding back to increase Akria’s destructive power.

Of course, the monsters did not just stand there waiting for Akira to destroy them. Although with their relatively large size, these monsters were flying agilely like small insects and had the power to lift multiple times their body weight. Their speed and strength were just as great as their size. The armour scales that enveloped their bodies could easily deflect normal bullets while their legs, arms, and jaws could easily crush metals and rubble. Although the transport vehicles were protected by forcefield armour, they still could not withstand this assault forever.

Not to mention, many of the monsters also had long-range weapons. They were spitting out fluid produced from an organ that grew out from their bodies. The fluid itself also varied. Some of them hardened and turned into bullets in mid-air, some of them had an abnormally sticky property, while some were highly acidic and melted everything they touched. Either way, it would be fatal if Akira got hit by any of them. The hardened fluid would crush his body, while the sticky fluid would stop his movement and he would drown in them, and the acidic fluid would melt his body. These fluids started dotting the rooftop, thus limiting the area where Akira could safely set foot on.

Akira quickly jumped between the safe areas, although they were not that many and not that wide to give Akira a place to plant himself, he was still able to jump between them without slowing down at all. He understood and followed the visual instructions that Alpha placed in his augmented vision. Moreover, the forcefield armour on his augmented suit also served some level of protection from the acidic fluid. He moved around swiftly to evade the incoming attacks while shooting down the enemies so that it would give him more places to step on. While at the same time, he was also herding the monsters.

Due to his herding, the monsters around Akira were concentrated into one location and it only grew more concentrated with time. Although Akira was surrounded just a moment ago, he now was fighting the monsters in one general direction. Right when he reached that point, Akira pulled back his LEO multi-rifles and turned on the AF anti-material cannon on his back. As the AF anti-material cannon unfolded in front of him, Akira gripped it with both of his hands and changed its setting to maximize the shooting area. After he pulled down the trigger, he also swung the cannon in an arc.

The light lance shot out from the AF anti-material cannon’s muzzle swallowed the monsters in front of it.

Once the light went off and vanished to the distance, due to the lowered firepower in exchange for the area covered, none of the monsters disintegrated. But that did not mean that it did not have any effect on them, the monsters that were swallowed by the light started falling to the ground one by one. While those that were still flying had lost their original mobility due to the damage, although they still could fly, they would not be able to catch up with the transport vehicle anymore and were left behind just like that.

Akira lightly sighed. Although he was satisfied with the result, he was still frowning.

“That took out most of them, but am I in the red with that one?”

“I wonder. It depends on how they calculate the reward, but if I have to say, it might be in the red.”

The ammunition for the AF anti-material cannon was extremely expensive. Although it was a trump card to kill huge monsters, it was not designed to clean up small fries. If that shot did not take out enough small fries, it would definitely mean his total revenue would be in the red. Akira knew that very well, but he told himself that it was for the sake of building up his career as a Hunter and decided to use it. At least, that was what he thought before he pulled the trigger.

"…It's fine. I don't want to spend time chipping on a swarm that big. I'll leave it to Hikaru so that it will end up in black. Yep, let's do that."

"You're right, let's put our hope in her negotiation skill."

Alpha was smiling mischievously as if she was teasing Akira and he just returned with a bitter smile.

After Akira eliminated his area from monsters, the other monsters near the area quickly filled in that vacuum.

"Akira, we have reinforcements."

"Alright! One more time."

Akira returned LEO multi-rifles to both of his hands and started shooting at the incoming monsters, hoping that the reward from that would balance out shooting his AF anti-material cannon.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 234, The Difference of What Is Normal

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira got too fired up fighting the monsters and ended up using AF anti-material cannon 3 times, that was when he noticed a change.

“…? They stopped coming, didn’t they?”

As he said so, he scanned the area and saw the other Hunters were still locked in an intense fight with the swarm. So, it was not like the swarm retreated, but even so, none of them was trying to come near Akira. Akira knitted his eyebrows.

“Akira, don’t relax yet, let’s use this opening to reload.”

“You’re right.”

As Alpha ordered, Akira checked his equipment. He took some medicines, exchanged the energy packs and magazines for new ones. And while he was at it, he also walked around and kicked the dead monsters off the rooftop to give him more space to move around. But even after finishing all that, there were still no monsters trying to approach him. This sudden free time really weirded Akira out, but when he looked around, the others were still locked in intense battles.

The reason why no more monsters coming at him was simply because he had already killed too many. The dead monsters were releasing a pheromone that would normally attract other monsters, but when it got too thick and reached above a certain level, it instead repelled monsters. That thick pheromone let the other monsters know that there was a power gap in that area so the weak monsters with no winning chance would avoid getting closer.

While at the same time, the thick pheromone would also attract bigger and stronger monsters to come. But in this situation, those stronger ones were already killed first by the vanguards, so none of the bigger monsters was able to reach where Akira was. The vanguards knew that it would be disastrous to let any of the bigger monsters pass through them, that was why they made sure that none could pass.

Thanks to that, no more monsters approached Akira, who was stationed a little bit too far to the back that no monsters would try to attack him.

“Seems like I have nothing to do now.”

“In that case, how about going to the other transport vehicles to help the other team? Or so I want to say but I’m sure Hikaru would stop you from doing it.”

“Yep, that sounds just about right.”

Akira would go if he was called, but he had no plans to go around uninvited to the other areas and snatch the rewards from the other Hunters. So, for now, he thought of at least telling Hikaru that he was free and could lend other areas help if needed, but before he could call her, Hikaru called him first.

“Akira, just in case you are curious, there are help requests that you can take up.”

“Sure, where?”

Hikaru was lightly shocked by that sudden and casual answer from Akira.

“You don’t have to push yourself too hard, you know? Just because there are help requests, it doesn’t mean that you have to take them. You’ve fought quite a lot already, aren’t you tired? You can take a break, refresh your supply, and only take on the requests if you really want to. It would be bad if they start forcing help requests to you, you know?”

“I already took a short break and I still have some leeway in my medicine and ammo reserve. I would also be sticking out if the rest are still fighting while I’m just taking it easy here. Well, of course, I won’t help them just for free, but I’ll leave that part to you. If they won’t pay me for taking on their help requests, I’ll be more than happy to just stand by.”

Akira chuckled as he said so, Hikaru replied with a smile.

“Alright then. I got it. Just leave that part to me. For starters, I’ll send the help request details to you. Good luck, Akira!”

The help request’s detail was added into Akira’s augmented vision, and it identified the extra area that was assigned to him.

“Now then, let’s keep this up for a little bit longer.”

Alpha smiled teasingly and spoke.

“Yeah, let’s do that, after all, we need to make sure that you actually earn instead of lose right?”

“…Don’t worry, it will be okay, right?”

According to the contract, he was to pay for his ammo on his own. Although it was unlikely that he would end up in the red, it did not mean that the possibility was zero. In order to shake off that creeping anxiety, Akira took up his LEO multi-rifles and went to answer the help request.

__*__*__*__

Hunters were fighting desperately on the back of the convoy. They were the Hunter group consisting of Hunters around Rank 40. It was obvious from their movements and teamwork that they were already used to working in a team. So, they were completely a different unit compared to a simple gathering of Hunters who worked together for the first time.

The inside of the vehicle was equipped with portable walls, especially around the entrance. They were using the energy from the forcefield armour on the rooftop to increase their durability, of course, they did that with proper permission. The Hunters used these walls as covers as they fought against the monsters. The bullets slowly tore off the armour plating from the huge insects and eventually killed them. The rooftop was already riddled with dead monsters as they fell over to the ground one by one.

But the situation was far from good, the monsters were too numerous.

“We can’t keep this up forever, you know!! What’s going on with the help request?!”

“We’ve already sent them, you know!! Multiple times as a matter of fact!! But since no one is coming, it only means that the other sides are facing the same problem as well!!”

“They can at least send us the reserve force, you know!?”

“Yeah, they did! But they were already sent to the transport vehicles that sent the help requests first, you see!! I knew it, we should have sent the help request sooner!!”

“It can’t be helped, you know! Melshia-san warned us that she would crush us if we sent a help request so lightly!!”

“I’m pretty sure what she meant by that is that we should handle the situation better so that we don’t get crushed, you know? It’s true that we made a mistake and handled the situation wrongly. What we can do now is nothing more than buy time. We’ll lose at this rate, but it’s not like it would happen right away. If the people in the front finish off those larger monsters, the situation will turn around. So, we just need to survive until then.”

“I know I know!! Goddammit!!”

Everyone there understood that what they were doing was simply buying time in a losing battle. But even so, they were still able to maintain their teamwork and fought relatively well. That was the biggest reason why they were able to postpone their defeat for that long.

As the losing battle continued, the Hunters were pushed back, monsters kept coming nonstop and the density of monsters surrounding the Hunters kept slowly increasing. Some of the Hunters already lost their arms from the acid fluid, some were enveloped in the sticky fluid and could not move, so they ended up having to cut off their limbs to stay alive. Some were badly wounded from the hardened fluid. The wounded were sent to the rear, which meant that they could only produce less pressure to hold back the monsters. As such, the faster they were pushed back and the faster the monsters mobbed them. Everyone in the team understood that their time was slowly coming, and a heavy mood befell them.

But right on the next moment, the area was enveloped in a blinding light. The blinding light temporarily devoured the monsters and disintegrated them in an instant. The Hunters were taken aback as that light went off and was gone. Once their vision returned, they could see some of the stronger monsters rise back up with some of their body parts scorched black.

“…So that wasn’t enough to kill all of them, huh?”

The Hunters there had their jaws hanging, there was also another emotion mixed in their expression.

Alpha was smiling wryly next to Akira who just used his AF anti-material cannon to help out the Hunters.

“Some of them survived. Well, we’re shooting from this far and there are a lot of them. You need to also note that we were focused on the area of effect, so the firepower got lowered. One more time then."

"Dammit!"

Akira noticed that the monsters were outside his LEO multi-rifle's effective range, so he decided to use AF anti-material cannon instead. Although that decision was not a mistake, it did not alleviate the ammo expense. He could not help but frown, imagining how much money he just used to fire that shot.

"Let's clear the leftovers and hope that the reward is worth the expense."

"You're right."

Akira immediately started running to close the distance, this time, he used his LEO multi-rifles to mow down the surviving monsters. As half of the monsters surrounding the Hunters were eradicated, they quickly bounced back and joined the battle. The situation was turned over, Akira and the Hunters had the upper hand now.

As they cleaned up the monsters in the area, reinforcement slowed down and shrunk in size. It was not like the monsters were limitless as well. With the Hunters working hard, it was a matter of time before the swarm was eradicated.

As Akira thought that should take care of the monsters for the time being, another notice came from the security, which showed the enemy's location in the area. Although there were no more monsters around them, there was a huge swarm coming from outside the area under their watch. They immediately glanced toward the direction of the signal and found another swarm of insect-like monsters coming at them. But this time, they were bigger than the ones that they just fought.

"…Wait for a sec, aren't there a bit too many? And a bit too big as well?"

"Among the monsters that came out from the mother ship-like monsters that were defeated by the vanguard, the smaller ones reached us first and basically the rest, which are mostly the medium-sized monsters, finally caught up with the transport vehicle."

"Give me a break already, it's not funny at all!!"

Akira frowned thinking that as expected, this was out of what he could handle, the other Hunters there thought the same and had the same expression as him.

But Alpha was smiling as usual, Akira noticed that and was about to ask if he had a winning chance against that swarm when the answer revealed itself.

A barrage composed of energy bullets and physical bullets blazed straight toward the swarm and shot the monsters down one by one. The energy bullet extended like a lance that cut open the swarm while the physical bullets dyed the sky in fiery explosions, devouring the monsters in it.

Akira quickly traced back the source of those bullets. A powered suit from the frontline flew to the back of the convoy. All the five fingers of its each arm turned into cannon muzzles. The right hand was shooting out physical bullets while the left was shooting energy bullets. A heavily armed woman was standing on the shoulder of that powered suit.

That woman was the leader of the Hunters in that area, Melshia. She was wearing an old-world augmented suit, and as usual, the old-world design was very daring. The extra arms that were coming out from her shoulders and back were carrying huge rifles that did not suit the size of those arms. While a flying device that was equipped on her back extended to her lower half.

Melshia noticed her men cheering on her, after sending a glance at them, she also noticed Akira and obviously raised her guard. She then jumped from the powered suit's shoulder and landed next to Akira.

Akira was a little surprised when Melshia landed next to him. She then threw a friendly smile with a tint of suspicion at him.

"I'm pretty sure this area is assigned to my team though. You're not a new member of the team either. So, who are you?"

"I'm here because of the help request, I…"

Before Akira said his name, he suddenly stopped there and smiled wryly.

“Sorry, I’m under a strict prohibition from my operator so I can’t speak any further.”

Melshia also received a flustered call from Hikaru through the security team’s shared network. Melshia was being extra careful of Akira since they just got through a bad experience with a stranger infiltrating her team not too long ago. But after seeing how flustered Hikaru was, she lowered her guard and smiled wryly.

“I see. You must be having it hard too, huh? I’m Melshia, thank you for saving my men. I’ll take care of the rest, so it’s okay now. You can go ahead and take a break first. Later then.”

Melshia then returned to the shoulder of the powered suit and went charging toward the swarm. The weapons fixed on her augmented suit had more or less the same firepower even when compared to the firepower of the powered suit she was on, and she was showing that power in full view in front of her men as well as her opponents.

As the vanguards finished taking care of the larger monsters, they slowly joined the battle at the back of the convoy. The tanks and the powered suits coursed back; past transport vehicles one by one. While the Hunters used the flying device equipped on their augmented suits to jump to the transport vehicles behind them, some of them had air bikes. With the vanguard joining the fight, they had the upper hand to quickly disperse the remaining monsters.

Akira was watching that battle and thought that there was nothing left for him to do.

“Hikaru, can I get back inside now? Or should I just stand by at my post?”

“Just return back to your post for now. I’ll get permission from the security team first and pick you up after that.”

“Alright.”

“Good work out there… But still, it’s obvious even from my point of view that those Hunters are abnormally strong.”

“Couldn’t agree more to that.”

It was as the saying goes, there would always be someone else better. Akira could really appreciate that saying now.

After that, it did not take long for the escort team to clean up the rest of the swarm.

Although it was still a bit too early to end their shift, Akira and the rest of the Hunters were allowed to leave their post. They still could fight if the need arises, but many of them were injured. All of them needed rest and to resupply. It was an important thing to maintain their fighting strength, that was why they were allowed to get back inside the transport vehicles.

As Akira returned back in, Hikaru welcomed him with a smile. She then stuck close to Akira and escorted him back to his room. Taking it positively, it looked like they were lovers, but taking it negatively, it looked like Akira was being treated like a prisoner. Other Hunters who saw that had two different impressions. The first one was that it was a Hunter trying to look cool during his escort duty and brought a girl with him. While the other was that Akira was a Hunter with restricted permission and had to be kept under supervision all the time. Although each Hunter had slightly different impressions, most of them leaned toward the latter.

After returning to his room, Akira was recommended by Hikaru to take a good rest. She would be watching the radar and take care of anything else. So, Akira took off his augmented suit and threw it together with the exclusive inner that came with the augmented suit to the laundry machine, while he himself went to the bath. It was so luxurious that it made him feel a bit conflicted as he unconsciously compared that to the bath back home. The high-tech laundry finished laundering and drying the augmented suit and the inner in no time. Akira felt that it was a bit regrettable as he dragged himself out of the bath, put on the inner and returned to his room.

Akira then started stretching his body, which was a daily routine for him. He made sure to stretch every part of his body to slowly increase the flexibility of his body. One of the stretches that he did was standing on one foot while having his other foot pointing up, making almost a straight line while maintaining the balance. That was when he caught Hikaru watching him.

“What?”

“…Ah, uhh, i-it’s just that you’re pretty flexible, aren’t you?”

The inner that Akira was wearing was designed to be durable enough to prevent inflammation when his skin rubbed the augmented suit as he moved around inside it, while at the same time, it was also thin and tight enough to allow sensation to flow through the augmented suit and convey it to his skin. Because of that, it stuck close to his well-trained and pronounced body.

Although it was a little too stimulating for a girl around her age, Hikaru thought that it would be a bad move to get flustered there since Akira seemed to be completely fine with it. So, Hikaru tried to come up with something else, but he misunderstood it and replied with a confident smile.

“My body was really stiff before and I am only able to do this just recently. Thanks to it, I feel I can move way better in my augmented suit.”

“Is it really that different?”

“Yeah, I know someone who could not follow the movement of his augmented suit and ended up having his arm torn off, you see. I’m pretty sure that something like that is completely avoidable with a body that is flexible enough.”

Hikaru could not help but imagine the tragic bloody scene and turned pale.

“T-torn off…”

“Well, it might be an exaggeration to say it was torn off. But it’s true that the joint was torn, and he was in a lot of pain. It would have been fatal if he had been in the middle of a fight. It would be impossible to perform normally even if he tried to force fix it with medicines. So, it’s better to stretch my body like this beforehand to reduce the strain on it when I’m using an augmented suit, you see.”

“I-I see, that must be tough.”

As an officer from City Management, Hikaru knew that Akira frequently visited the hospital. She already knew that he had once received a full-body treatment and had his arm regrown after losing it. She knew the details of why and how Akira got those injuries. But all of them only ended up in mere knowledge, she still did not fully understand the real weight of that information.

But after seeing how Akira fought and listened to his talk, and finally saw his body, the realization finally sunk in. A boy of around her age, sent to the hospital a few times after medicine overuse, was injured so badly to the point that he had to go through cell regenerative treatment. In short, his experience was filled with such a cruel life. Although she was only able to get a glance of it, that understanding caused her to stop having the awkward expression that she had and change into a serious one.

“It must have been really hard.”

“I can’t deny that, but still, I’ve already gotten used to it.”

[Just how many cruel experiences did he have to go through to get used to it?] Hikaru tried to think of an answer but she could not come up with anything.

Even after the changing shift, Akira continued resting in his room. The security team changed the shift composition. The one who took Akira’s place was someone who was forced to retreat during the previous battle, which caused the transport vehicle to take on more damage.

After the previous battle, there were no more major confrontations with monsters, so the escort team mostly worked on cleaning the rooftop. They pushed the dead monsters off the rooftop, cleaned up the dangerous fluids, and made sure that no monsters were still alive. Although the payment was not as much, they were still paid for doing it.

The reward for the Hunters were usually calculated on a team-by-team basis. But Akira not only was able to do his job well protecting his area which was originally a job for a team, he even went to help another team as well, as such, he was earning way too much money as a single Hunter. Since there was a case where paying too much of a reward to a certain Hunter caused dissatisfaction among the other Hunters, as long as there was no emergency, Akira was thus placed on the reserve force.

Meanwhile, Hunters who went out to the field when they were not ordered to would be fined instead. Thus, it was not worth losing money because of something as silly as that. In order to balance out their rewards, the rest of the Hunters were working their asses off while Akira was resting in his room.

Akira and Hikaru were looking back at that battle on the rooftop. Hikaru was playing a slow-motion replay of what she saw on the room's display, Akira was beside her explaining what he was doing in the clip. After listening to his explanation, Hikaru could not help but frown.

"Akira, that. Over there. You obviously shot at the monster when it was completely outside your field of vision, you know? And you hit it accurately on top of that, it's not like it happened out of luck, right? How exactly did you do it?"

"Basically, I got the general direction from the information-gathering device and then locked my aim using the video feed from the aiming device."

"While running?"

“Yeah, while running.”

Akira replied so casually, Hikaru tilted her head and asked.

“Akira, do you know just how crazy you sound?”

“Huh? C-crazy…?”

Seeing Hikaru looking at him like she was looking at a crazy person, Akira retraced back what he just said. He tried to put himself in a normal person’s shoes, using his past self before he met Alpha as the starting line. He imagined how he would have reacted if he heard someone say the same thing to him. And as expected, he would have reacted the same way as Hikaru.

“I-it’s true that it’s not something everyone can do. It’s not like I could do that right from the start, you know? I only started being able to do that after getting expensive equipment and rigorous training, you see.”

“You’re basically saying that everyone can do that with good enough equipment and enough training?”

“Uhh… Well…”

Akira was about to say ‘of course’, but he noticed Alpha smiled amusedly while shaking her head.

“…It depends, I guess?”

Hikaru looked at Akira as if she was looking at an immensely problematic child and sighed.

“If you know that, I think you ought to rethink your actions, you know?”

Akira, who did not know that until now, could only smile wryly without saying anything back.

“Let’s return back to the point you mentioned. You did say that you get the general direction from the information-gathering device, right? To be honest, I can’t really understand that part. How did you do that? Wait, I understand that it was the information-gathering device that picked up the monsters’ locations, my question is how did you get that information? Judging from the recording, it doesn’t seem that it’s displayed in your augmented vision, you know? And I don’t think you get that from sound as well…”

“Well, uhhh, about that, you see… What can I say…”

Of course, Akira could not say to Hikaru that he accessed that data using his connection to the old-world domain. As Akira was trying to find a plausible answer, he ended up making vague excuses instead. But with that answer, Hikaru looked at him as if she was looking at a strange person and nodded convincingly as if she just remembered something.

“Oh, I see, So, you’ve gone through sixth sense training too, huh? Well, in that case, it’s not strange for you to be able to understand the information from your information-gathering device without using any display.”

“Ah, yeah, that’s right.”

Akira was acting as if he understood what Hikaru was talking about while asking Alpha for help.

“Alpha, what is this sixth sense thingy?”

“It’s an artificial sixth sense which is outside the normal five senses that people usually have.”

The sixth sense was rather popular among high ranking Hunters. It started from the cyborgs who directly connected their brains with their information-gathering devices. It then evolved to a word referring to an artificial means to perceive information and to expand it outside 5 normal human senses. Basically, it referred to an extra sense outside the 5 normal senses.

Kinetic sense to detect movement, thermal sense to detect heat, dynamic sense to understand 3D objects. There existed many kinds of sixth sense, it included abilities to perceive light with a wavelength outside the normal range or the ability to see 360 degrees.

Of course, it was not something that one could easily gain by installing an extra device in one's brain. It was much more difficult to achieve compared to prosthetic arms or extension limbs. It relied deeply on the compatibility of the person. In the worst-case scenario, the brain might not be able to process that sense correctly, which would cause chaos in the brain. So, in order to get used to that difficulty and danger, Hunters often would have to go through particular training.

And then, the words 'I can just tell' became an expression often used by those who had gone through such training and attained sixth sense. Normally, this expression was often used by those who received a sixth sense just recently.

Although the word sixth sense was not an unfamiliar expression among the high ranking Hunters, more often than not, those high ranking Hunters had dozens of senses including their original 5 normal senses. So, judging from how Akira fought, Hikaru thought that it would not be strange for Akira to have more than 5 normal senses.

After that, they continued discussing the record from the last fight with Akira asking for Alpha's help from time to time. Due to them going through the record in slow motion, when they finished reviewing the battle that should have only taken minutes, it was already night outside. Hikaru had a stern look on her face as she told Akira her thoughts.

“I’ll now tell you my thoughts after seeing that recording. As someone from City Management that has worked with many other Hunters, I can say that I’m not exactly an amateur in this but I can’t claim that I’m an expert in this either. I can’t really judge what is normal and what is not normal for Hunters. But with that being said, I want you to take my words positively as praise for your fighting skill. In one word, you’re not right in the head. If what you’re doing there is not reckless or crazy, I don’t know what is. It’s no wonder why Kibayashi is really invested in you… That is what I think.”

“I-I see.”

For some reason that he did not really understand himself, Akira felt a bit discouraged. For two people to talk about what was normal when one of them lived in the inner wall while the other one in the outer wall. When one was a normal person while the other was a high ranking Hunter. The difference in what was normal was, as expected, unsurprisingly large. After all, it was as if they came from two different worlds.

__*__*__*__

Hikaru was taking a warm dip to heal the fatigue that she accumulated that day. She looked back into her memories of what happened and sighed, half of that sigh was from her enjoying the bath.

“…Today was really full of surprises… And I still have 2 more days to go, huh?”

Working with Akira was filled with way more surprises than she had thought, it was especially hard on her mental stamina.

“That Kibayashi… He is basically working with multiple Hunters who are like Akira, huh? It might even be in the dozens too. It’s no wonder why he’s so influential.”

The high-ranking Hunters were way more skilled than the normal Hunters, while at the same time, they were harder to handle as well, that realization hit Hikaru hard.

She did not doubt her skill, but that did not mean everything went well for her. As she told herself that this was nothing more than a bump, she pulled herself together and renewed her resolve.

“Alright then, only 2 days left, let’s do this! But for that, I will need my important rest… This bath is even better than the one back home, so I might as well enjoy it while I have the chance… As expected, equipment for high ranking Hunters is really special. I wonder if this is normal for Akira? Seriously though, the world that we live in is really so different.”

Hikaru started to feel a tint of jealousy toward high ranking Hunters, it was normal for those Hunters to earn billions of Aurum. The thought of Akira only using cheap baths daily never crossed her mind.

After she finished her bath and changed into rental pyjamas, she returned back to the room to find Akira already sleeping. He was even wearing his augmented suit’s inners when sleeping.

Hikaru took a peek at Akira’s sleeping face. He was sleeping so soundly without a shred of anxiety. It was completely unlike how he usually was when he slept back in the slum’s back alley.

“When I look at him like this, he looks completely normal. Well then, good night, Akira.”

Hikaru smiled and went to sleep in the bed as well, since the bed itself was pretty big, it did not cause any inconvenience to her.

Silavin: Hmm… Hikaru Wifu?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 235, Zegelt City

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

In the morning of the next day, Akira went up to the rooftop. It was not for watching the area, but to have a look at the sunrise.

Powerful gust of turbulent wind was roaring on the rooftop, like usual. But it did not give much trouble to Akira and his augmented suit. But that was not the case for Hikaru, who came up there together with him.

“Don’t let me go, okay!? Don’t ever let me go, alright!?”

“I know, I know.”

Akira was holding Hikaru close. Hikaru was also holding Akira close. They looked like a couple from the other’s point of view. But unlike Akira, who was having an exasperated expression, Hikaru looked scared. So, it was obvious that they were not in that kind of relationship.

“I took you with me because otherwise, I wouldn’t be allowed to come here, but, if you’re really that scared, isn’t it better if you go back inside?”

“It’s fine, right? I want to get the sunlight too, you know!!”

At first, Akira was planning to go to the rooftop alone, but Hikaru, who wanted to keep Akira away from any possible conflict, wanted to keep Akira inside the room as much as possible. However, she did not want to worsen Akira's mood by rejecting his wish to go out.

That was when she put a condition that she would have to accompany him. Saying wanting to get the sunlight was only an excuse to not leave Akira alone, while at the same time, it was also half-true that she wanted to get some fresh air outside. With the transport convoy already entering the secured area near the destination city, there was close to zero danger from fighting, and that gave Hikaru an extra push to have a peek outside.

But once she actually got onto the rooftop, the shaking from the transport vehicle and the strong wind alone were enough to scare her. That was the reason why she was clinging so closely and shamelessly onto Akira. But even so, she did not return back inside, half of it was because of pride while the other half was because of the safety that she felt from Akira holding her tightly with his augmented suit. If one of them was lacking, she would have returned back inside.

Seeing Hikaru acting like that, Akira was a bit weirded out. He questioned why she would go that far just to bathe in sunlight, but after getting to soak in the warmth of the sunlight, he could somewhat understand where she was coming from and decided not to pursue the matter any further.

Eventually, the sun showed itself from under the horizon line, the peeking sun banished the darkness of the night and unveiled the landscape of the desolate wasteland. This scene still attracted the curiosity of the people, even back during the old-world era.

Akira looked over that scene and was glad that he went up to the rooftop. He noticed that Hikaru also stopped getting scared. As if she had completely forgotten that she was on the rooftop. Her shaking ceased and her eyes were fixated on the view unveiled by the morning sunlight. Akira found this change surprising, but he also knew that it was rude to interrupt her. Thus, he just silently held Hikaru in his arms to make sure she would not fall off.

As the sun continued climbing up and finally left the horizon, the beautiful scene showed itself. It was the start of a new day. Hikaru, who was getting drowned by the breath-taking view, finally returned back to reality and noticed that Akira was looking at her with surprise in his eyes. She immediately blushed and spoke.

“T-the view is very nice, isn’t it? No wonder you wanted to wake up early and go to the rooftop to have a peek at this.”

“Yeah.”

“D-do you usually look at the rising sun like this? I’m sure you often go out to the ruins as a Hunter, right?”

“No. Not that often. I won’t go out so early in the morning to the wasteland just to see the rising sun. I mostly only go to the wasteland during the day, so I guess I only get to watch the sunrise when I have to go out to the wasteland early in the morning.”

“I-I see.”

“How about you, Hikaru?”

“M-me?”

“You really enjoyed that view, so I just thought that you must not have that much of a chance to watch the sunrise. But now that I think about it, I guess it’s impossible to watch the sun rising from the horizon from inside the wall, huh?”

“I won’t say it’s impossible, but it’s extremely difficult. Tall buildings in the middle section like the Kugama building where you can look over the wasteland outside the wall are mostly reserved for individuals in high positions. So, it’s impossible for someone like me to get a room in those kinds of building, you see.”

“Is that so? I guess it’s not all that easy living inside the wall, huh?”

Although Hikaru slowly regained her calm after idly conversing with Akira, she could not just ignore the fact that she was clinging close to a boy around her age.

Her eyes battered around as she was looking for an excuse to change that situation. She quickly found a good excuse. Away in front of the convoy, a huge dome that looked like a hill showed itself.

“Akira, since we already got to see the rising sun, how about we return back? Zegelt city is finally visible. Once we enter the city, the rooftop, as well as the inside of the transport vehicle, would be considered as a part of their middle district. It would be problematic if we get caught in some kind of trouble while we’re out. So, let’s get back into your room.”

Hikaru urged Akira to hurry up and they returned back together. She was still clinging close to Akira until they returned back inside the vehicle. Even if she was slowly getting used to the fear of being on the rooftop, she needed some time to fully return back to her usual self.

Zegetl city was fully enclosed in a dome. It had a wall that surrounded it just like Kugamayama city, but that wall extended further up and formed a semi-sphere on top of the city. The dome was made of a completely clear and transparent material. Thus, light from the outside could pass through it without any distortion at all. Thanks to that, the inside of the dome still felt liberating although it was completely encased. Even the tallest building inside the dome was still far from touching the dome, which help give it an impression of an open space.

Hikaru took a small self-driving vehicle and headed to Zegelt city. She was alone, Akira stayed behind in his room, inside the transport vehicle.

The transport vehicle was to resupply in that city and head back to Kugamayama city the next day. In short, the Hunters had one free day inside the city. Most Hunters used their free time to explore the city to kill time, but Akira was still confined inside his room, as per usual.

Although Akira had the permission to step into the middle district, that permission was only for Kugamayama city, moreover, it was a temporary one. As such, it was not okay for Akira to go to the middle district of Zegelt city with his current permission. Although Hikaru could most likely find a way to solve that issue, Hikaru did not want to increase the possibility of Akira bumping into trouble. Thus, she used it as an excuse to keep Akira inside his room.

But Akira did not just accept it that easily. He asked Hikaru if she could do something about it. Hikaru did not want to sour his mood and she still wanted him to stay in his room. As such, they were looking for a place to compromise.

Akira mentioned that he wanted to take a look at what kind of vehicles the Hunters in this city were using since it was not that often he could visit a city in the east.

Thus, it concluded with Akira not going out of his room, and in exchange, she would go to the vehicle shop in his place.

Zegelt city was located in the eastern part of the eastern district, although it was also still far away from the front line. As one of the general area management division's staff, Hikaru sometimes had to talk with people from this city. It was all done online and she herself barely ever went to the city. When she had to go visit another city, most of the time, it would be a city somewhere to the west of Kugamayama city. She had not visited that many eastern cities such as the Zegelt city.

As she was looking around the city, which was completely different from Kugamayama city with great interest, Akira's voice could be heard from the comm. He was even more interested in the sights than her. Back when Akira was on the rooftop of the transport vehicle, Hikaru used his view to look at the situation on the rooftop. So, this time, the roles were reversed. Akira was now looking at the scene using Hikaru's view. The image of the surrounding area was sent to Akira using a glasses-type device that Hikaru was using, and that image was enough to attract Akira's interest.

When she heard his compliments for this city, Hikaru felt slightly irritated. After all, Akira did not sound that interested back in the middle district of Kugamayama city.

“Akira, do you now see these kinds of things often?”

“Hmm, rather than rare, I guess the better way to put it is that it just catches my interest, I guess?”

“Is that so? To be honest, I don’t think it’s that much different from the middle district of Kugamayama city though.”

“Hmm? Well, I guess that’s the case since you’re living in the inner wall, huh? But look over there. Unlike Kugamayama city, there are many air bike and self-driving cars buzzing around, right?”

“That’s just because this city is encased in a dome, that’s why people are allowed to use flying vehicles. There are some facilities inside the Kugamayama district with a huge open space as well. Over there, people are allowed to ride similar things inside those facilities.”

“I wonder if it’s really okay for so many of them to fly around like that. Won’t they sometimes collide with each other?”

“Most of them are either fully auto-piloted or at least semi auto-piloted. They’re obeying the instructions sent out by the city. So as long as nothing goes terribly wrong, they won’t collide with each other. The auto-driving vehicles that we used back in the middle district of Kugamayama city worked using a similar system, you know?”

“As I thought. The thing that left the biggest impression on me is the dome. That thing is continuously expending energy to fuel a powerful forcefield armour right? Well, those huge insects are flying around in the area so I guess they’ll at least do this much to protect this city.”

“Even Kugamayama city has-”

Hikaru suddenly stopped herself from saying any further. But a moment later, Akira guessed what Hiarku was about to say.

“What? Kugamayama city also has that kind of dome?”

Hikaru paused for a bit before answering his question.

“…We have something similar installed in case of an emergency. But it’s only used during an emergency since the energy consumption is negligible. That’s why we hardly use it.”

“I see. That’s pretty impressive.”

Hearing Akira was honestly impressed by that, Hikaru smiled, satisfied and thought.

[…It should be okay, there are already a few people who know about it. It should not be an issue telling someone with a high ranking like Akira… It should not violate the information secrecy…]

Although she thought so, she still added a warning to her words.

“…Well, not that many people know about that, but it’s not like we’re keeping it a secret either. Some might focus more on the potential danger that might occur since City Management took the effort to install such a thing, So, instead of feeling calmer with that device installed, they might panic instead. So, just keep this a secret, okay?”

“Sure.”

Hikaru was relieved hearing that answer and changed the topic to something unrelated to forcefield devices.

The Hunters in Zegelt city were high ranking Hunters, thus, the shops here were catered specifically to those Hunters. The vehicle shop that Hikaru visited was a large shop that refused any Hunters below Rank 50. Even so, the Hunters in that area did not have any problem with that rule. This rule worked well for both sides, the shop would not have to deal with Hunters who were only there to browse. At the same time, Hunters who did not have the skill or the fund to buy expensive vehicles were not allowed to enter. Naturally, this rule did not apply to those who came into the shop with someone that met the conditions.

Hikaru, who entered the shop as Akira’s proxy, was able to get into it thanks to Akira’s Hunter Rank. There was also the fact that she was a city official. When the autonomous vehicle stopped in front of the shop, a staff member welcomed Hikaru and guided her in.

The shop was so big and wide that it looked more like an exhibition hall. Inside it, there were tanks, wasteland bikes, and even powered suits lined up. The staff gave Hikaru a guide through these products while giving a short explanation of each product to Hikaru. He had been informed beforehand that the real customer, Akira, was listening in and watching through the glass that Hikaru was using. Since Hikaru came here as Akira's proxy, that staff gave Hikaru the same treatment he would for the customer visiting the store. After the staff took down what Akira was looking for, he started to think about how to deal with Akira.

"Hikaru-sama, regarding the bike that Akira-sama is looking for, does he already have a certain budget in his mind?"

"Wait for a second… I see, alright. He said that he would decide after seeing how much he would need to pay for it. So, he wishes to get your recommendation first if possible."

"Very well. In that case, I'll give a quick overview of our lineup in order while asking what the features that Akira-sama is looking for."

The staff smiled politely but in the back of his mind, he was wondering whether Akira just wanted to keep his budget a secret or he actually did not have enough money to buy anything.

After introducing several bikes, Akira started asking detailed questions regarding the bikes through Hikaru. Thus, the staff stood in front of a white bike and said.

"In that case, how about this one here? The Sylphid A3. Both of its wheels are using forcefield armour, which allows it to race through the air. To be more specific, it's not flying, the forcefield armour can be used to create a footing under the wheels, so it can literally race through the air. Because of that, it's not as expensive as the ones with a flying device installed. Furthermore, it doesn't consume as much energy as well. Although, it's true that it's harder to control in the air compared to the ones with a flying device installed, considering that it can race in the air and on the ground, it is very versatile. The ability to race in the air can also bring about unique benefits, especially when mastered."

The staff patted the surface of the bike before continuing.

"The chassis is protected by a powerful but energy-hungry forcefield armour. It is also possible to expand its forcefield outward. This is optional but, you can also purchase an extended arm to go with it. With the extended arm, it can handle anti-personnel weapons to weapons meant for tanks. From what I understand, I believe this is what Akira-sama is looking for. Personally speaking, I recommend using the extended arm to hold rifles instead of holding them on your own while driving the bike. Other than that, we have other options as well. Here are the specs."

The staff sent a document regarding the product to Akira through Hikaru, he then waited for the response while pondering.

[Hunters with no funds usually opt out of the recommended option for the cheaper ones. Well, he's a Hunter who can enter this place, so I guess I should just treat him as someone who's only here to browse. I should just pin my hopes on him coming again next time…]

As the staff was waiting with a low expectation, Hikaru finally asked him about the customization that Akira was hoping for and how much it would cost. That staff raised his eyebrows when he read through the customization list. No starter weapon, only taking an extended arm for anti-personnel weapons, these two customizations did lower the price, but besides that, Akira asked for a better sensor and energy tank. Thus, in the end, the price actually went up instead of down.

"…With all of these customizations and the wish to send the product over as soon as possible, I have to add in the delivery fee as well… Rounding the price up, it will be around 3 billion Aurum."

"T-three billion!?"

Hikaru gasped and could not help but to word out the surprisingly high price, seeing that reaction, the staff smiled wryly and thought.

[That reaction only for 3 billion, huh? You won't get far in this city like that, you know? But well, if I'm going to judge based on that reaction, I guess this city official from Kugamayama city is an amateur. Well, It can't be helped, now then, I wonder how about the Hunter?]

Hikaru went to ask Akira while the staff was making a more detailed approximation of the total price. Hikaru once again looked surprised and returned to the staff.

"Uhm, he'll take the offer."

"Thank you for the patronage. Now then, we'll immediately start the customization once we finish discussing the details of the payment. As for the negotiation regarding the details of the payment, would it be okay to continue the discussion with Hikaru-sama as the proxy for Akira-sama?"

"Ah, no, he said that he's going to pay it in full right away."

The staff retracted his head and raised his eyebrows.

"Pay in full in one go right away? Did I get it correct? Of course, we're more than happy to accept payment like that, but is Akira-sama really okay with that?"

Hunters could die anytime, so installments and loans were not available for them. One-time payment was the only thing that was available to them and that was indeed how most Hunters paid for their stuff. However, that was only for most. This did not apply to high ranking Hunters. High ranking Hunters were expected to stay alive for long, so installment plans were available to them.

The fact that large corporations, strict with money, recognized their skill and judged that they would live long enough to fully pay their dues, was a testament to the trust these high ranking Hunters had as well as their skill. Thanks to that, some high ranking Hunters opted to use payment methods that were similar to that of a loan. There were even Hunters who got angry if the shop did not offer that method of payment.

That being said, paying 3 billion Aurum in one go was something that was difficult to do unless the Hunter had more than enough funds in their account. Hunters would always set aside emergency funds. So, before finalizing any purchase, they must make sure that their account would not be emptied out.

Based on that common sense, Akira's decision surprised the staff. Although, he did not show it on his face thanks to the training he had.

The staff asked for confirmation, so Hikaru conveyed that to Akira.

"Akira, are you sure? It's 3 billion Aurum, you know? Not 30 or 300 million… No, I was also already informed how much you earn from your recent rewards, but this and that are two different things, you know…? Are you really sure? Alright then, just to remind you that you fully agree to this okay? No backing out okay? Yes, yes, that's right. Okay then."

Now that Hikaru received his seal of approval, the rest was up to her. So, she pulled herself together and became solemn.

"Yes, it's not a mistake. I'll take care of the paperwork in Akira's stead from here on out. Let's proceed with the payment."

"Understood."

The staff also changed his attitude and proceeded to process the paperwork. The process went through quickly and without any trouble, Once the 3 billion Aurum was taken out from Akira's account, they quickly began working on the customization.

"We'll work on the customization right away so that we can send you the bike as soon as possible. Please wait for a bit while we finish the customization. Meanwhile, I would need to inquire on how would Akira-sama like to receive the bike? Is it okay to just give it to Hikaru-sama?"

“Ahh, about that, I actually want to discuss that matter.”

Hikaru requested the staff to send some escorts together with the bike while it was carried to the transport vehicle. The staff understood what Hikaru was implying when she made this request. Basically, Hikaru wanted to be spared from the responsibility of sending that bike to Akira as much as possible. After all, it was a 3 billion Aurum bike. If something was to happen, a simple apology would not be enough to solve it. On the other hand, it was a request made after making the 3 billion Aurum was paid, so doing that much was included as an after-service for the shop.

“Very well. We shall send escorts together with the bike until we can hand the bike over to Akira-sama.”

“Thank you very much!”

“Likewise. This must be some kind of fate. We look forward to your visit in the future.”

Seeing Hikaru obviously sigh in relief, the staff smiled wryly.

After that, the staff asked Hikaru for the details of Akira’s equipment. He was using the adjustment for the general extension arm to fit Akira’s equipment as an excuse. Moreover, he also pulled up information about Akira based on his Hunter code that the shop received when processing the purchase.

Although they could not inquire about Hunter-specific data from the Hunter office, they were still able to use that code to investigate Akira’s purchase history. After all, a high ranking Hunter was still a potential customer. Of course, companies did not give away all the information about their customers. They would want to keep their customer’s vital data private to make sure they had a monopoly over their customer. Outside of that, companies would share as much information they could. Thus, those in the business shared a lot among themselves.

[His equipment is basically from TOSON and Kiryou, huh? Does he have some kind of contract with those two companies? It seems that he opted to buy equipment solely manufactured by these two. Well, purchasing from another manufacturer might violate the contract. So, there might really be a contract. But since he is buying his bike from us, it might be a good idea to let the higher-ups know that TOSON or Kiryou's contract does not include vehicles, huh…]

Without Akira knowing it, his information started to spread. Although, it was a completely different matter whether the people who received that information could make good use of it or not.

"Now then, Hikaru-sama. It will still take some time until the preparations are done. If I may, I would be more than happy to introduce other options as well."

A Hunter who was interested in such a unique product might be interested in the other unique products. That was why the staff started recommending other products to Akira, which was half out of business while the other half was out of pure curiosity. And as expected, Akira was indeed interested and ended up buying a few things. Thus, the staff remembered Akira, his name and mentally noted him down as an interesting customer.

After that, Hikaru stayed inside the shop until the bike was ready. In order to kill time, she continued her conversation with Akira this morning. After telling Akira that she was not allowed to leak particular information regarding the city, she then told Akira to feel free to call her again if something came up and closed the call. However, it did not take long for Akira to call her.

"Akira, is there something wrong?"

"The interphone is ringing, is it okay if I pick it up?"

Hikaru, who was waiting calmly, immediately replied. It was obvious from her voice that she was flustered.

"No! Don't pick it up! I'll pick up the call! I can connect from here, so don't pick it up, okay?"

“A-Alright, I’ll leave it to you then.”

Akira bitterly smiled and was a bit overwhelmed by Hikaru’s attitude. Since he understood that Hikaru did not want him to meet anyone, he believed that it was best to ask her so he could just leave the rest to her.

Hikaru immediately stopped doing whatever she was doing and connected her information terminal to Akira’s room’s interphone in a hurry. Akira had no acquaintances inside that transport vehicle and if it was from the escort team, then she should have received a notification beforehand. Thus, no matter who it was, as she felt the presence of trouble, she checked the interphone camera, and the visitor was Melshia.

[It’s her? Why is she visiting Akira?]

Hikaru thought that it was weird and sent a data request to the escort team regarding Melshia.

Melshia hummed in front of Akira’s room.

[No answer, huh? The record says that he’s not outside the transport vehicle though. Is he not in the room, right now? Hmmm, what should I do…]

While she was in the middle of thinking about what to do next, she suddenly received a call from Hikaru. When she picked it up, Hikaru’s image appeared in her augmented vision.

“Nice to meet you, I’m the operator for the Hunter in this room, my name is Hikaru.”

“Ahhh, you’re the operator from back then, right? Nice to meet you, I am Melshia. I heard that the men under me were saved thanks to you, so I came to give my gratitude.”

“I see. Thank you very much, I shall convey that gratitude.”

“Hm? I can convey it myself, you know? He’s inside, right? You won’t open the door?”

“Ah, please don’t worry about it.”

“…To be honest, I think it’s only right for me to give my thanks directly to him.”

“I’m really sorry, Due to certain circumstances, it is impossible to meet him directly at the moment, I hope you can understand.”

In contrast to Melshia, who was acting casually, Hikaru politely bowed her head. After that, there was silence as they were staring at each other. It seemed that neither of them were going to break the silence.

Melshia’s smile deepened and she decided to take the first move.

“…I don’t really like doing this, but you do know my Hunter Rank, right?”

Melshia’s Hunter Rank was 75. In short, she was someone that was to be given exceptions. Although Hikaru was indeed a talented young staff member, she was still an amateur in the grand scheme of things. So Melshia was basically out of Hikaru’s league.

“Yes. But this Hunter is under contract with the general area management division of Kugamayama city and he’s in the middle of his job. So, I’m afraid it is not right to interrupt. This is even for someone as highly regarded as Melshia-sama.”

Hikaru knew all of that and still refused Melshia. Hikaru did not want to let Melshia meet Akira considering the possible trouble if they got into a fight. Thus, even if it meant that Melshia, a Rank 75 Hunter, would have a bad impression on her, that did not change her stance.

Hikaru refused Melshia with a smile that was filled with anxiety. Melshia was a bit surprised by that, but she then lowered her shoulders and said.

“I see, if that’s the case, then it can’t be helped, alright then, I’m sorry for saying something unpleasant. Please let him know that I’m thankful to him for saving my men.”

“Thank you for your understanding, I’ll definitely convey that message to him.”

“Okay, thanks.”

Hikaru politely bowed and vanished from Melshia’s vision, after that, Melshia left the place and called Tatsukawa.

“It’s me, how’s the situation over there?”

“Nothing in particular. We did tell the escort team to wait until you return.”

“Roger that. I’m heading back now.”

“Alright, so, how is he?”

“I couldn’t meet him.”

Tatsukawa was a bit surprised that Melshia casually replied in such a manner.

“…Oh? that’s pretty rare for you to obediently retreat like this, is there a problem?”

“I’ll tell you the details later, I’ll see you soon.”

Melshia cut the call and teasingly smiled.

After Melshia cut the call, Hikaru heaved a big sigh.

“Why would a Rank 75 Hunter even come to meet him…? This is not normal, you know… I guess his gift to attract unexpected things is one of the reasons why Kibayashi really likes him, huh… Seriously! Give me a break already!”

After spending her time lamenting how hard it was to handle a high ranking Hunter, Hikaru pulled herself together. She called Akira and conveyed Melshia’s gratitude. After that, she pulled out excuses to satisfy Akira, who was curious why someone would come to meet him just to convey something like that.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 236, Shirou

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The inner part of Kuzusuhara ruin, the area under Tsubaki was surrounded by a wall that was disguised as a common mix of random rubble and wreckage. After Tsubaki made a deal with Yanagisawa, a part of that wall was renovated into a warehouse, in which she received and sent cargoes to and from Kugamayama city.

The area around that warehouse was mostly unmanned. Old-world drones were assigned to carry old-world relics to that warehouse, then an automatic transport vehicle would take those relics back to the city. So, there was no need for anyone to be there.

Further away from that wall, soldiers dispatched by Kugamayama city were guarding the area to prevent any intruders. Those who were caught sneaking in would be dealt swiftly and without mercy. Instead of putting up a half-baked identification system and risking a full-scale invasion or an infiltration, they opted for security that would ensure total annihilation against any possible intruders. The investigation could be conducted later after collecting what remained of the intruder. And finally, the usual security, which included the confirmation of those who were allowed to come in, was spread to the soldiers.

To further ensure security, many guards were equipped with powerful information gathering devices. Some of them even brought out powerful powered suits. Of course, they were not cheap, but after city management sold the relics transported from that area, they were still in the green. As matter of fact, due to their contract with Tsubaki, the better the security, the better the relics that she would give. Thus, city management continued its effort to further strengthen security. Because of that, the area around Tsubaki's management was surrounded by abnormally strict and powerful security.

But that day, there was someone inside that unmanned region. It was Yanagisawa and a negotiation team under Sakashita Heavy Industry, Matsubara along with a few extra escorts. Yanagisawa was using his own equipment while the escorts were using equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Only Matsubara, who was not armed at all, was wearing a formal suit.

The escorts were fully wrapped in armour. Even their faces were not shown. Judging from the fact that they were proceeding very cautiously and by how they spoke to Matsubara, it was easy to tell that they were all high-strung.

"Matsubara-san. It's time… Though we might not be the best ones to say this, we do sincerely hope you can finish the negotiation peacefully."

Matsubara was not as anxious as the escorts, but he still had a sharp and solemn look on his face. He understood the danger and how difficult the negotiation he was going to face.

"I know. We're talking about the caretaker AI of Kuzusuhara ruin here. She is the beguiling ghost as well. It's only right to be extra careful with her."

Matsubara then glanced at Yanagisawa.

"To be honest, I would like to hear from you. Do you have any hints as to what I should be careful about?"

Yanagisawa exasperatedly replied, unlike Matsubara and the escorts, there was no trace of anxiety in his voice.

“What else is there for me to warn you? I did tell you that it’s very dangerous to meet her and I do not recommend you to do so but you ignored my warning which is why we are here now, right?”

“So, you’re saying that you can’t guarantee our safety, huh?”

“Even if you say so, if I could really fight against Tsubaki, my negotiation with her would have gone better, you know.”

“Well, you have a point there.”

“The only thing that I can guarantee is your safety until you meet her. After that, it’s completely out of my power. It all depends on her mood and your negotiation skill. But, if you still want me to give you a piece of advice to increase your chance of survival, then how about we turn around and go back home? Don’t worry! I’ll tell Tsubaki that we suddenly had a stomach ache or something!”

In contrast to Yanagisawa, who was joking around, Matsubara was still calm and serious.

“I’ll at least keep that in mind.”

“Is that so? It’s okay to take it, you know?”

Yanagisawa was still joking around, which did not suit the situation at all.

A few minutes before the meeting time, Tsubaki was still nowhere to be seen. The person who was responsible for watching the radar among the escorts scanned the area, but there was nothing

“1 minute left. In case Tsubaki doesn’t show up, I’ll judge that an unexpected situation has happened and we ask you to retreat with us… 30 seconds more… 10 seconds… 5, 4…”

Other than Yanagisawa, everyone there was expecting Tsubaki would not show up as the countdown continued.

“…3, 2, 1, 0.”

Right at that moment, Tsubaki appeared in front of Matsubara. She did not arrive at a high speed; she was there right from the start. It was just that no one was able to detect her. The person handling the information-gathering device was taken aback by the sudden change in his radar.

[…Camouflage!? No way!? How the hell did she not raise even the slightest signal when she's this close!? Is it only a hologram!? No, this signal, it's a real body! Just how in the world…]

The surprised escorts did not miss a beat and quickly stood between Matsubara and Tsubaki. The fact that they had not aimed their rifles at her was also proof that they were very well trained.

Tsubaki then calmly asked.

"Which one of you is the negotiator?"

Matsubara shifted around the escort and stood in front of Tsubaki.

"It's me. I'm Matsubara from Sakashita Heavy Industry. First of all, let me thank you for coming here for this ne-"

"I see, so the rest are unnecessary, right?"

Tsubaki completely ignored Matsubara and wafted her hand. Yanagisawa noticed that and moved slightly faster than the rest. He jumped away with the full might of his augmented suit.

Yanagisawa was barely able to get out of the range as Tsubaki completely annihilated the escorts. Their heavy full-body armor as well as their soft inner body were all crushed with no discrimination. The area was quickly painted red from the entrails and the blood.

Other than Yanagisawa, Matsubara alone was completely uninjured. Although he was standing in the front and could not see what had happened behind him, he knew that something was squashed behind him. It was easy to imagine what just happened behind. Thus, cold sweat started forming on his forehead.

“…They are my escorts though.”

Tsubaki completely ignored his comment.

“State your business and please make it quick.”

Matsubara understood those short words also meant that if he kept silent here, then he would also be deemed unnecessary.

“…Very well. Sakashita Heavy Industry wishes to renew our contract with you, as for what we found unsatisfying regarding the last contract…”

Matsubara started his explanation calmly, Tsubaki locked her gaze toward Matsubara without saying anything. Eventually, Matsubara finished his explanation.

“…Including the negotiation for the compensation for the damages, we hope we can decide on a suitable place and time to negotiate about the new contract as well.”

“Is that all? Then, you’re unnecessary as well.”

“Wait!?”

Tsubaki did not wait and swung her hand. Just like with the escorts, everything from Matsubara’s neck and below was turned into mush. A second later, his head fell down and rolled over the ground.

That was when Yanagisawa finally returned and looked over the area, he then sighed and said.

“No no no, it’s true that I only asked you to at least listen to them. But like, can you, you know, be more merciful?”

Tsubaki ignored his jovial attitude and coldly replied.

“I warn you, never bring anyone that would worsen my mood again, otherwise, you’ll face the same fate as them.”

But as usual, Yanagisawa was still acting flippant.

“Well, I have my responsibilities too, you see. But just so you know, I did try to stop them.”

“It’s not my problem. As far as I know, it’s your problem.”

“Right, right, I’ll be careful.”

“I recommend you to seriously reflect and put effort to get better.”

Tsubaki then vanished. After that, the pool of blood on the ground started shaking. It was as if something just passed through but there was nothing at all.

Yanagisawa sighed.

“Good grief, she really won’t listen at all, or more like, she doesn’t have any tolerance at all. This is why I don’t want to mess with caretaker AIs… Geez, I guess I’ll just head back home.”

Yanagisawa picked up Matsubara’s head and headed back to the city.

The upper district of Kugamayama city was reserved for high ranking officials and the higher-ups from the Corporate Government. As such, it was also very strictly guarded. Currently, inside the area in the upper district where it was allowed to bring private escorts, Sugadome, a staff from Sakashita Heavy Industry was waiting.

Yanagisawa then entered the room to explain the situation. He was carrying a cylindrical case. He then took a seat across the table and put the case on the table.

“We do plan to give our full report in time, but I heard that you want to hear it from the person on the scene, so here I am. Would it be okay to ask for some of your time?”

“We’re the ones who asked you to come. Even if we were not the ones who requested for his meeting, such a question should not be brought out this late. Go ahead and start."

"Very well then."

Yanagisawa took the top side of the case and pulled it up. The cover slid and revealed what was inside the cylinder, it was Matsubara's head, his eyes were closed and showed no movements.

Sugadome tapped his finger on the table. When he did that, Matsubara immediately opened his eyes, he then saw Sugadome and sighed.

"…I know that you're in a hurry, but to think that you would drag me here only by connecting my head on a life support system, are you in that much of a hurry?"

"Yes, we are."

"I see."

Thanks to the life support system hooked onto his head, Matsubara was spared from death. He then sighed again to his superior who was demanding his report as soon as he recovered his consciousness. But in the end, he still gave his report.

"…So, that is what happened. Unfortunately, I was unable to even start the negotiation at all. I believe it will be difficult to ask for the contract to be renewed…"

"I see, it seems that it was a mistake sending you with the escorts, huh?"

"No, I believe that she killed the escorts just to show her position. I'm sure that she also deliberately let me live. Without the escorts, I'm sure that she would have killed me in order to make the same point. To be honest, I think the escorts served their duty well."

Sugadome turned to Yanagisawa.

"But still, the more I hear it, the more I'm amazed that you were able to make a deal with her. As I thought, you should join Sakashita Heavy Industry and work for the Corporate Government.”

Yanagisawa gave a friendly smile and replied.

“I’m really happy that you think so, but I’m sorry, I have to refuse your generous offer.”

“I see, did you get a similar offer from Tatsumori, or Tsukisada, or maybe Senba too?”

“No no no, I haven’t gotten such an offer from those corporations.”

Then there was a short pause, Sugadome and Yanagisawa were trying to pry into what the other person was thinking. Sugadome was the first one to break the silence.

“…Well, I won’t force you. Let’s return back to the main subject then, it’s about the thing that you want to borrow. It is true that you’ll be able to negotiate with her smoothly as long as you can have that thing?”

“Of course. I can guarantee that you’ll profit from this too.”

“Very well then, I will give you the authorization.”

Yanagisawa seemed honestly delighted, which was rare for him. But his face quickly turned serious.

“Should I interpret it as I can hold on to that as a promise?”

“Yes. We have prepared all the necessary groundwork with the related companies, including the dispatchment for that powered suit as well. Moreover, we’ve already concluded the contract to purchase several drones to guard her area. If it ends up bringing in more from that area, I’ll have enough influence to grant you the authorization you seek. Of course, this is all assuming we can get more shares on your deal with her.”

“Don’t worry about that, just leave that part to me, and thank you.”

It was difficult for Yanagisawa to hide his happiness. Some of his real feelings leaked to his usual flippant smile.

“Although it might be too soon to ask you this, when exactly I might be able to get it? After all, I need to prepare my stuff to receive it.”

“In the best-case scenario, tomorrow.”

“Tomorrow!?”

Even Yanagisawa could not hide his surprise, Sugadome then calmly continued.

“We already made plans to transport it here unrelated to this matter about loaning it to you, you see. It should be in Zegelt city at the moment, and it’ll arrive here tomorrow with the inter-city transport convoy.”

“I see. In that case, please allow me to excuse myself as I need to hurry up with my own preparation.”

Yanagisawa politely bowed and left the room, after that, he frowned and thought.

[…Those people were planning to bypass me and use it to directly negotiate with Tsubaki depending on the result of today’s negotiation, huh? I just can’t drop my guard against these people. I guess that is only to be expected from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Well, thanks to them, it seems that I can fast forward my plan though, so I guess I’ll let it slide this time.]

Yanagisawa could not hold back his delight as his usually calm face was completely ruined.

Inside the room, Matsubara tilted his floating head and asked.

“Are you sure about that? That guy is dangerous, you know?”

Sugadome still had his calm demeanour just like before.

“I’ve never met an abnormally competent but safe people in my life, you know. It’s the same with old-world knowledge. Our only choice is to understand that danger and handle them carefully. If there’s no other way to use them, the only other choice is complete destruction.”

“Complete destruction, huh?”

Sugadome slanted his eyes, a heavy aura was exuding out from him.

“That’s right. If we hesitate to move forward, the old-world will eventually crush us as well and we’ll join the ranks of old-world eras. That’s why our only choice is to gain old-world knowledge and use it to wrestle for victory. The old-world will be crushed by its own might. In order to do that, sacrifices are necessary. This is the exact reason why Corporate Governments exist in the first place. It has always been, and will always be.”

Seeing Sugadome reconfirm the reason why they exist, Matsubara felt his admiration toward his superior grow stronger.

“I see. If you already know, then it was my mistake for saying something so unnecessary.”

Sugadome’s heavy aura immediately dissipated.

“It’s fine, I don’t mind. It’s great that you are competent enough to point it out. Feel free to tell me if you have any concerns.”

“In that case, I shall take that offer immediately.”

“Oh, what is it?”

“Now that I’ve finished my report, it would be great if I can get back the rest of my body as soon as possible.”

“Whoops, my apologies.”

Sugadome quickly called one of his men and told him to get the preparations ready.

__*__*__*__

Inside the transport convoy in Zegelt city, the commanders of the escort team were having a meeting inside the officer room, which also doubled as a meeting room.

“Fortunately, there is zero death in the ambush on the route A of Kugamayama to Zegelt city… Though many were sent to the hospital.”

Most of the hunters who joined the escort team were veteran hunters. As such, many of them had emergency life support systems installed on them, so they could even survive wounds that would have been normally fatal. Some of them were sent to the hospital with nothing but their heads, of course, the treatment cost was not cheap, but at least they would survive.

“That attack was not normal. Normally, it is impossible to encounter giant bugs in that area. Those monsters should only be found further to the east. Are you telling me that they changed their habitat? There’s a limit on how much bad luck that we can get, you know?”

“Then, are you saying that it was intentional?”

“Well, I won’t go that far, but…”

Those in the eastern district would actively track the movements of the problematic monsters, but unfortunately, it did not give much meaningful result. Monetary-wise, it was cheaper and more reassuring to choose to eradicate them instead. There was also a choice to attack their nest and lure them out, but it was almost guaranteed to end with death. That was why people usually chose not to do that.

“There’s no point talking about that now. We have no other choice but to blame that on bad luck. Fortunately, we have enough firepower to deal with them. If those from Sakashita Heavy Industry were not onboard, we would have turned around and ran away.”

“They’re a part of the escorts sent by Kugamayama city to escort a certain executive back to the city, right? If those insects were actually lured by the Nationalists to attack that executive, they would have done so on our way back to Kugamayama city instead. So, it is most likely just bad luck."

"Probably. Rather than talking about what has already happened, I think it's better to talk about what we plan to do. We need to replenish our forces. Many of the escorts have been sent to the hospital. Does anyone have any idea where we can get more people? Personally speaking, I want to delay the journey back until we can get enough hunters."

Many of the officers there nodded and concurred, but another person then said.

"Those from management request us to continue as originally planned."

"Like hell if I care, just let them bark as much as they want. There's no way I am going to force the passengers into a suicidal journey just because they told us to. We can't go back unless we have enough manpower."

Most of the attendees there agreed, but it did not stop there.

"About that, it seems that Sakashita will handle that part. They say that we can use the escort team already in the transport as much as we want. They will also pay for hiring more hunters from Zegelt city."

Whispers spread across the meeting room. it was rare for something like that to happen.

"We are more than happy to accept that, but why are they willing to go that far…?"

"No idea, it might have something to do with their profit, or maybe their reputation. After all, it will leave a bad name if they can't handle an ambush, even if it was completely unexpected, you know?"

"I see, that sounds plausible…"

Although Sakashita Heavy was one of the five great corporations, if they did not show off their power from time to time, other corporations would prey on them. Considering this as a cost of maintaining their authority as well as the Corporate Government's authority, it was obvious that they would be willing to spend that much money. The people in that meeting thought so and did not pursue the matter any further.

"If we can get enough manpower, then our only choice is to go as planned. Now then, onto the next subject, we can't go back using the same route. Since we just crushed a colony-scale giant bug swarm in that area, I bet another colony has already made that area into their own home. I don't care if the city sends its soldiers to eliminate that colony or puts a bounty on those monsters. Either way, we can't take that route right now. Route B also passes through a colony, so it would be wise not to use that route as well. This means we'll only use either route C or D, but…"

The meeting continued to discuss what to do to maximize the passengers' safety.

__*__*__*__

Hikaru eventually returned to the transport vehicle with Akira's new bike. After taking the bike to the cargo manager department and getting it on board the transport vehicle, the responsibility was fully transferred to the transport vehicle.

That meant the escorts were no longer responsible for the bike. Nonetheless, their duty extended until Hikaru returned back to Akira. Once Hikaru saw Akira, she thanked the escorts and politely bowed. With this, their job was complete.

Akira was happily trying out his new bike. He sat on it to get a feel of it. Meanwhile, Alpha was also getting a feel of the bike through his information terminal, which was connected to the bike's control device.

He then placed his LEO multi-rifle onto the bike's multi-purpose arm and set it so that he could control it as if it was a prosthetic arm connected to him. This way, he was able to get accurate aim with the arm. The arm could also carry Akira's AF anti-material cannon. By connecting the cannon to the bike's extended energy tank and radar, he could increase the firepower and the accuracy of the cannon.

When he activated the forcefield armour projection, Akira was enveloped in a thin semi-sphere forcefield armour. Although it was not that powerful, it was enough to protect him from the wind. So, it was usable to reduce the drag force that usually pushed back against his body during high-speed maneuvers and stabilize his aim. Of course, it could even deflect bullets by increasing its output, but it would consume a lot of energy if he did that. So it was not recommended since it might exhaust the bike's energy tank.

Akira wanted to try diving around the warehouse, but Hikaru stopped him. So, he regrettably stepped off the bike.

"Hikaru, can I use this bike for tomorrow's job?"

"Eh? Are you planning to drive it around on the rooftop?"

"If it's needed, yes."

"I-I see. I'll submit the permission request."

"Thanks, I'll leave it to you."

The warehouse that also doubled as a hangar housed several powered suits. Even now, there were powered suits moving into the hangar. There were people getting in and out of their powered suits. Some tried to get in the hangar with their heavy augmented suits, but unfortunately, their equipment was too big for the normal-sized entrances.

Hikaru felt someone's gaze and traced it back to a young boy next to a heavily armoured guy who was watching the surroundings. That young boy was looking straight at her and Akira. He was around the same age as Akira and her, but he was not armed at all. He seemed to be just a normal young boy.

As Hikaru thought that they might have garnered too much attention she urged Akira to return back.

"Akira, let's go back to your room. Now that you have your bike, it's your turn to keep your promise to stay in your room."

“Hm? Yeah yeah, I know.”

Akira and Hikaru then left the room. The young boy still had his eyes fixed on them when another man in a business suit by the name of Hammerz called him.

“Shirou, what’s wrong?”

“…Hm? It’s just that I found someone in Kugamayama city staff’s uniform. This Kugamayama city is where I’ll be staying next, right? So I thought that she was here to welcome us or to pick me up. She’s pretty cute after all, so I would be really happy if that is the case.”

“I haven’t heard anything about that. I’ll try confirming it, so you don’t need to look around. We’ll attract too much attention if you do, you know?”

Even after that harsh warning from Hammerz, Shirou did not seem to be bothered and just laughed it off.

“Don’t say that. It has been quite a while since the last time I could get out like this. Not to mention that it’s been a long inter-city journey too. I can’t help but get excited. I’m just a young boy, so it’s to be expected that I will get excited to do some sightseeing. So like, can you just let this one slide?”

“It’s only to be expected for you to be not allowed to freely go out considering your job. But as compensation, they gave you a high-end VR device, right? If you want to just look around, you can use that.”

There were many such high-tech venues in the eastern district created during the old-world era. But because of the monsters, people could not enjoy those venues without hiring expensive escorts. Thus, only a limited number of people could go there. That was why the people who went there before, created a VR environment to experience them, it was a popular form of entertainment among the rich.

But as if he did not understand, Shirou shook his head and said.

“No no no, that thing is nothing more than a simple picture to me. The amount of information is just too small. It’s not like I’m mocking them but actual pictures are better since you can actually feel the paper with your hand. My point is that it is as boring as a dry raw image data sent to me.”

“If that’s the problem, you can just dial up the feedback effect on the VR device to be able to touch the scene, right?”

“I can, but it won’t come close to the real thing. Moreover, what I’m talking about is that it’s not enough for me. Cyborgs might be able to get back that realistic feeling by connecting their senses to VR, but there’s still a limit on how realistic that sensation can be.”

“Is that so? I heard that even the current era’s lower-end VR is already pretty good, you know…?”

“No no no, they’re still far from the real thing. Well, this might be unique only to me though. Well, doing something like that is dangerous, you know? It’s basically like allowing the VR to directly latch on your five senses. Ah, don’t tell me that you prefer VR devices with that kind of function for erotic use? I don’t recommend it. There have been accidents even when using everything from legal routes. Even if you use those from illegal routes, there are cases where people got paralyzed after just one use. If you really want to get something safe while equally satisfying your five senses, it’s better to get a copy of your five senses and use those five extra senses to enjoy it. Though, you have to be a weirdo to go that far…”

“Ahh, just shut up already!!”

Hammerz clicked his tongue and barked, somehow flustered.

Shirou just chuckled and did not say anything more. And just like that, the fact that he was closely watching Hikaru and Akira was forgotten.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 237, Multiple Mistakes

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After returning back to his room, Akira decided to turn in early. He wanted to be at his peak performance tomorrow.

Hikaru also did the same and laid down. Although she was not as tired as yesterday, she woke earlier than usual today to go to see the sunrise with Akira, so she was already pretty sleepy.

[…Just one more day. Because of what happened yesterday, I heard that they got more reinforcements. Since we're heading to the west this time, the monsters should be not as dangerous as yesterday. And if I'm lucky, Akira won't even get dispatched…. Just one more day… Let's give it my best…]

As Akira and Hikaru slept, the convoy finished its preparation and left for Kugamayama city.

The next day, Akira once again went to the rooftop early in the morning to watch the sunrise. Just like last time, Hikaru was with him, clinging close to him. Akira did suggest using the forcefield armour of the bike to shield them from the wind, that was when Hikaru asked him how he would get the bike to the rooftop. Akira casually said by climbing on the outer walls of the transport vehicle. Naturally, Hikaru rejected him immediately. Because of that, just like yesterday, Hikaru was clinging to Akira like they were lovers.

Hikaru had more or less gotten used to the situation on the rooftop so she was not as scared as before. But that was not the case to the fact that she was clinging close to a boy around her age. She still feels embarrassed because of that. She reminded herself that it would be over soon while watching the sun rising from the horizon.

In the midst of that, trouble approached. Just like Akira, they came up to the rooftop. It was a young boy accompanied by a man, they were the two who were watching Hikaru and Akira back in the hangar, Shirou and Hammerz.

Shirou was donning casual clothes, while Hammers was in a sleek business suit. Judging from their outfits, they must be there for sightseeing. But even so, they were walking casually amid this turbulent wind. Either those casual clothes were actually augmented suits, or they were people with enhanced bodies.

Hikaru noticed Shirou, who lightly smiled and waved at her. He then approached her.

“Hello there, are you out here to enjoy the sunrise as well?”

“…Pretty much, yes. Do you need anything from us?”

Hikaru, who wanted to keep Akira away from any potential conflict, ended up giving a rather brusque and unfriendly reply. But Shirou was not bothered by it.

“Not at all, I’m also here to enjoy the sunrise. I just thought of saying hello after finding someone that seems to share the same interest as me. As expected, it’s only right to see it directly with my own eyes. The flow of information is just different, you know? The flow of information. You think so too, right?”

Shirou said so and glanced at Akira. Akira paused for a bit before replying.

“I’m sorry, but I was told not to talk with anyone in the middle of my job.”

Shirou was happy that Akira did not just ignore him. While at the same time, he was also a bit surprised. But Hammerz suddenly interjected.

“We’re bothering them, Shirou. This should be enough, right? Let’s return, it’s not wise to keep bothering them.”

Shirou exasperatedly replied.

“Good grief, you people just don’t understand. Listen to him, this guy here said that something like sunrise can be enjoyed just the same through the room’s monitor, you know? Can you believe that?”

Shirou looked at Hikaru, hoping that she would agree. But in reality, she actually agreed with Hammerz. Meanwhile, it was Akira who took the initiative and sided with Shirou.

“You can say that again. It’s pointless watching it from a monitor.”

“Right? I know you would agree with me!”

Shirou smiled triumphantly, he then looked mockingly at Hammerz. To which, Hammerz twitched and snapped.

“Seriously, give it a rest already! We’re returning right now! In the first place, you should not have interrupted a couple who are enjoying the sunrise! Or do you take that not being able to read the mood as a virtue?”

“Whoops, you are on a date?”

Shirou sent a half-cold gaze toward Hikaru. She thought that if that misunderstanding would send him away, decided not to deny it. It even made her self-conscious and blush. Meanwhile, Akira was completely apathetic.

Shirou shrugged.

“I see, I see. I’m sorry for bothering your date in the middle of your job. I’ll leave right now. I just have to leave, right? Okay, okay.”

Shirou smiled at Hikaru and Akira, lightly waved, and then left. Hammerz sighed and followed behind him.

Akira looked at the leaving Shirou and tilted his head.

“What was that?”

“No idea, probably just tourists who got excited to the point that they would even go up to the rooftop to see the sunrise?”

“Tourist, huh? He mentioned something about the flow of information, so I don’t think they’re mere tourists that would go out to the wasteland just for sightseeing.”

Akira muttered to himself and did not bother to think any further. As for Hikaru, she finally realized that she might be blushing at the moment and tried her best to keep calm as she said.

“…Ah, uhmm, should we return back too?”

“Hmmm, I guess. Let’s return inside too.”

The sun was already high in the sky, so Akira and Hikaru also decided to get back inside the transport vehicle as well.

Shirou, who returned back before Akira and Hikaru, was walking through the hallway to a luxurious special room. It was his private room during the journey. During that time, Hammerz was still spouting complaints, which Shirou completely ignored. As a matter of fact, he had something else on his mind.

[That faint reaction when we were in the hangar was not a mistake. I thought one of them is the same as me and tried to approach them, but I can’t really tell which one it is when they’re sticking that close to each other. Just who is it? As I thought, it can’t be the both of them. Is it the guy? Or the girl? That girl might have gone to the rooftop and that guy accompanied her as her escort. Or it's the other way around. The guy wanted to go to the rooftop and the girl was only following him… No, that's unlikely. The guy seems to be someone skilled while the girl is just an amateur. Of course, there is a chance that it's just a disguise as well, but it is highly unlikely. Judging from their reaction, it is most likely the girl…]

Even after he went to his room and was no longer with Hammerz, he continued to ponder on this subject.

[Hmm… Well, I'm not even sure just by judging from their reaction… What if they are just dummies made to fool me? But if that's the case, why she is wearing Kugamayama city staff's uniform? And why were they on the rooftop…? I heard that Yanagisawa is a pretty sharp guy. He even managed to get a deal with a caretaker AI from Kuzusuhara ruin. It won't be strange for him to use some kind of old-world technology to mimic that signal in dummies. He might have made her wear a city official's uniform, sent her along with the inter-city transport, and made them go to the rooftop before me… But for what? Is it to understand my behaviour or is it for conveying some kind of hidden message? Something like it's futile even if I try to run away?]

He unconsciously made a stern expression while in the middle of his breakfast. He was so deep in his thought to the point that he stopped scooping food into his mouth. But he eventually shook his head.

[…No. I must be overthinking this. All of this might just be a simple coincidence. Even if she's just a dummy, I'm sure that she didn't go to those places intentionally to meet me. They are only distractions so that I'll be safe if someone tries to ambush us… It's a good thing to think of the worst-case scenario and prepare myself. But it is a bad idea to overdo it. It'll be all for nought if that causes me to miss an important opportunity instead.]

Shirou started eating again. Although it was a luxurious meal, he did not show any reaction at all. He had gotten too used to it already. He understood that he was treated special and was given such a luxurious room. Not to mention that he had some level of freedom as well. He fully knew that he was living a good life.

But he had something he wanted to accomplish even if it meant that he would have to sacrifice everything he had.

“…Just wait, I’ll definitely do something about this. So just please wait for me.”

Shirou mumbled so with a serious expression. And in order to bring his plan to fruition, he knew that he could not miss such a perfect opportunity where he was allowed to be outside Sakashita Heavy Industry’s facility.

Akira and Hikaru were also boarding Gigantes 3 on their way back to Kugamayam city. Although, the route it took differed greatly from before.

Due to its massive size, Gigantes 3 was also called a moving fortress or a land battleship. It could easily bulldoze its way through mountains of rubble. But even so, other than flying through the sky, there was only a limited area that it could traverse through. Adding the conditions that it was used as inter-city transport, there was a limited number of routes that it could take. And when considering safety as well, 4 routes were mapped out for Gigantes 3.

The supposed safest routes, route A and B, were infested with colony-size giant bugs, it was not possible to go through those routes anymore. With that, it left the convoy with only 2 routes available, and the general public knew about this as well.

If something happened that caused that number of routes to fall down to 1, the transportation activity would come to a full halt considering the safety of the transport convoys. Or at least, that possibility would go up greatly. This was common sense among the people who were involved in inter-city transportation.

As his shift was coming close, Akira went to the storage facility together with Hikaru. After finishing their preparation, Akira hopped on his bike and awaited the time.

“Hikaru, it’s about time.”

“Ah, yes, right…”

Hikaru looked troubled as she contacted the storage guard to open the door. Normally, that door was to be used for the powered suits to shoot down monsters from inside the transport vehicle.

“Akira, you’ll be fine, right?”

Judging from what they could see from the open door, the transport vehicle was travelling at high speed. Only death awaited anyone who fell off it. If Akira’s bike was a hoverbike with completely no tires, Hikaru would not have been worried about him. But the bike that Akira was using had 2 tires fixed under it. From the perspective of those who did not know its full capabilities, what Akira was planning to do there was nothing short of a suicide jump.

Of course, Akira thought that it was fine, but even so, when someone was worriedly asking him, he could not help but to get worried as well.

“Alpha, it’s going to be fine, right?”

“Of course. Don’t worry.”

Alpha was smiling as usual, that was enough to put Akira at ease.

“It’ll be fine, I’m going out now.”

“Good luck, I’ll be watching closely.”

As Hikaru said so, Akira turned on the bike and rode it through the storage facility, he then just jumped out through the door with his current momentum. He leaned the bike over in mid-air as if he was making a sharp turn. At the same time, he activated the bike’s forcefield armour to create an invisible floating platform. The moment the bike’s wheels touched the platform, the energy conversion turned the force from the wheels into a flash of light. This caused the bike to leave a trail made of light as it raced over the platform.

Akira executed a drift with his bike, and it spun toward the transport side of the vehicle. He then used more strength to turn the accelerator handle. After flying through the air for a while, the bike eventually landed on one of the walls of the transport vehicle and started climbing straight up. The momentum threw the bike up into the air after it reached the top. Akira then tilted his bike forward and landed on the rooftop with its front wheel, after driving it forward for a bit, he finally landed the rear wheel as well. With this, he had safely landed on the rooftop.

Hikaru saw what Akira just did there through the camera on Akira's headgear. After seeing such crazy manoeuvres through from start till end, she was glad she had rejected Akira's idea of taking the bike to the rooftop this morning when they wanted to watch the sunrise.

Akira's shift eventually ended without much accident. He only encountered two monsters during that time. One of them tried to charge and stick itself on the transport vehicle but failed and then fell beneath it and got crushed under the transport vehicle's massive weight. Meanwhile, the other one did manage to stick on one of the walls of the transport vehicle, but Akira easily shot it down and it went through the same thing as the first monster.

Thanks to the bike's powerful balancer, it was able to stay stable without any support. So Akira could just spend his time leisurely sitting on top of it.

There were people who saw Akira from afar. It was Tatsukawa's team that was posted further ahead. Tatsukawa boarded his own powered suit and watched Akira in action in that short battle which could not even be called a battle.

"I heard that he's pretty strong based on what the men said, but he doesn't seem that strong to me though."

Melshia, who was sitting on the powered suit's shoulder, casually replied.

"He doesn't seem that strong to you?"

“Not exactly, well, I do think he’s pretty strong, you know? Even though he’s posted around the back of the convoy, he’s basically assigned to a post that’s normally handled by a whole team. To top it off, he even had the leeway to help those in the other post as well. Although he’s not as strong as me, there’s no doubt that he’s a strong Hunter. But, what can I say… He doesn’t seem to have the strength that would make Kibayashi act like he did yesterday. Don’t you think so?”

After he heard that Melshia was rejected by Hikaru yesterday, Tatsukawa went and called Kibayashi to explain what just happened. He wanted to request Kibayashi to force Hikaru and allow Melshia to meet Akira.

***

Now he once again remembered the conversation they had yesterday.

“Well, we’re not strangers. So, I don’t mind putting in some extra pressure if you want, but it won’t be for free, you know? And it won’t be cheap as well.”

“Oh, how expensive exactly?”

“Let’s see. How about one year’s worth of your usual daily spending?”

“…Whoah, why would it even be that big of a favour?”

“I have my reasons, you see. Let me at least tell you this. I’m actually selling you this favour for cheap, you know? I’m considering us as acquaintances after all. If it’s just some random person, I would have only laughed at you and left it as it is. Well, if you think that it isn’t worth it, I wholeheartedly agree with you. As long as you don’t have a strong reason to do it, I don’t recommend you take up this offer. But if you still insist on it, I don’t mind doing it. Though to be honest, I can’t imagine what kind of reason you might have to want to meet him that badly.”

***

Tatsukawa already had a rough guess of what was going on from his call with Kibayashi.

Kibayashi was not lying. Both Hikaru and Akira were under contract with the inter-city transport, thus it was not easy to try to meddle with them. But from Kibayashi's point of view, if he put on pressure on Hikaru, she might use that as an excuse to transfer the responsibility to him. It was easy to imagine how troublesome that would be. So, in order to prevent that, he ended up giving a rather exaggerated answer.

Melshia had also heard about Tatsukawa's conversation with Kibayashi.

"Ahhh, actually, that also piqued my interest, so I did some digging on my own. That boy, he might be an agent from Kugamayama."

"Eh? Is that so?"

"I'll send you the result from my investigation, you can decide for yourself after that."

Tatsukawa checked the document that he received. He then sighed exasperatedly, the document listed Akira's track record.

The track record was nothing sort of believable. He had started as a Rank 1 Hunter with no ID from the slum city, then climbed up to Rank 10 in a short time and went hard on his Hunter job since then. He was involved in most of the incidents in Kuzusuhara ruin and once accepted a request from City Management to boost his Hunter Rank. That request did give his rank a quick boost and the person who was handling his request was Kibayashi himself.

Moreover, he was also deeply involved in the gang dynamic inside slum city. He was involved in eradicating a certain large gang that was causing trouble for the city. While the gang that he was sponsoring had connections with one of the city officials. The relic shop that the gang was running has been pretty popular lately with some of the relics harvested from the Kuzusuhara ruin official's managed area found there.

Considering the relationship between Hunters and City Management, it was easy for people to guess that he was an agent from Kugamayama city.

“…Welp, this isn’t even funny, it’s so suspicious to the point that it’s not even strange. Not to mention that his operator, Hikaru, she’s also a staff from Kugamayama city, right? I guess there’s no doubt anymore, right?”

“If I may add one thing, it seems that Hikaru was also the one who got him this escort job.”

“So, basically, those two are in some kind of special mission, huh? Well, if that’s the case, there’s no wonder why Kibayashi acted like that yesterday.”

Tatsukawa lightly sighed. Seeing that, Melshia more or less understood what Tatsukawa was thinking.

“It seems that had satisfied your curiosity.”

“Yeah, I’m originally also from Kugamayama city after all. I was pretty happy to hear that someone from the same city as me reached this level of success. But… It turns out that he’s an agent… so, it’s actually pretty disappointing…”

“Is that so? Want to stop trying to get him to join our team?”

“I’ll leave that to you. It’s your speciality. You’re best at calculating the risk and reward in taking someone in. We already know that he is an agent from the city, right? So, I have no interest in asking him to join at all.”

“Alright, I’ll think about it then.”

“Yeah, I trust your decision on this one.”

Tatsukawa switched the display inside his powered suit that was showing the image from a camera that was watching Akira to another image to help him waste time. Basically, it contained some sexual content. Melshia who noticed that quickly complained.

“What? You’re going to watch that when I’m right here?”

“It’s fine, right? It’s not like we have anything else to do anyway, or is it that you want to get in too?”

“We’re in the middle of a job, you know?”

“My instinct is saying that we won’t be busy.”

“Is that so? Well, I guess it’s fine then.”

The cockpit of the powered suit opened up and after Melshia entered the cockpit, it then closed up. Although Tatsukawa’s men were around, they knew that it was the usual thing and completely ignored it.

After his shift ended, Akira called Hikaru to reopen the door to the storage facility. He then rode his bike down the side of the transport vehicle and returned inside. Hikaru, who was already waiting there, sighed and said to him.

“You know… I don’t think that’s not how you ride a bike.”

“I do think so too, but it’s nice that I can do that.”

“Well, that’s true. Either way, good work out there.”

They left the bike back in the hangar and returned back to Akira’s room. In the midst of walking, Hikaru was curious about something and asked Akira a question.

“By the way, that’s pretty amazing you can do that although you only bought it yesterday. You did not even ride it beforehand. Weren’t you worried? It’ll be dangerous if you fall, you know? Or is it that you’ve done it multiple times before so you’re already used to doing that kind of thing?”

“Both, I guess? If you think that is dangerous… Well, going out into the wasteland is already dangerous enough, so the danger I face doesn’t really change by much. That might be why it doesn’t really bother me.”

“You have a point, but still…”

“And also, I once scaled a building with a cheaper bike before, so I thought that it should be fine if I’m using something this expensive.”

“I-I see. By the way, what happened to that other bike? Did you buy a more expensive one because you thought it was time to get a better bike?”

“It took a bunch of missiles and exploded to pieces.”

“I-I see… So, basically, you needed a new bike, huh?”

Hikaru did question how did he survive that, but she decided not to ask anything unnecessary.

Akira returned back to his room, took a break, went out again when his shift came. He then returned to his room again when his shift ended. Even after a couple of cycles, nothing worth noting happened. Both Hikaru and Akira were content with the situation. They thought that the ambush from the giant bugs on their way to Zegelt city was nothing more than bad luck, so something like that would not happen again.

This also meant that they had lowered their guards. Because of that, when Akira noticed that the sky got a little cloudy, he just thought that it was natural clouds and did not think anything more than that.

Even if he had noticed what was going on at that time, he did not have the power or the luck to change anything.

A thick grey cloud was hanging over the transport convoy that was blazing through the wasteland. There were occasions where the clouds in the eastern district were mixed with colourless mist, which caused disruptions in detecting enemies. The weather forecast had predicted a rather cloudy day with a small chance of rain.

The powerful sensor of the transport vehicle would be able to easily pinpoint an incoming swarm from far away. But that was limited only to the monsters below the clouds.

Above the thick clouds, at a height that the transport vehicle would easily detect if it was a clear day, a few white powered suits were flying. All of them were damaged although the extent of the damage was not the same. One of them had already lost all its limbs and was only able to move around thanks to the flying device being still intact.

Suddenly a white light lance pierced one of them, it formed a pillar that was thick enough to devour 10 per cent of its huge frame. It just went straight through the powered suit as if the defensive mechanisms of the suit were non-existent. That single shot easily took out the powered suit that could withstand a battle against a colony-sized giant bug swarm. The white powered suit crumbled into pieces and was consumed by the cloud.

Meanwhile, another powered suit took a hit from a dish-shaped weapon. The diameter of that weapon was about half the size of the powered suit. It rotated so rapidly that it easily sliced through the powered suit. Sparks flew around accompanying the screeching sound of metal cutting through another. It eventually made a clean cut through the powered suit and flew away. The cut powered suit was separated into two as it fell down.

Another powered suit was stuck with multiple black disks. The other power suits saw that and quickly focused their fire to destroy the black disks while also sacrificing those powered suits caught by those black disks. Thus, another powered suit fell from the sky.

With the time and the distance that was bought by sacrificing their teammate, the rest of the white powered suits quickly dove down into the cloud. Of course, their opponents did not let them get away, the source of the light lance and the user of the huge disk weapon as well as the user of the multiple black disks quickly pursued them into the cloud.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 238, Flying Monsters

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira once again went up to the rooftop for his usual escort routine when Hikaru suddenly called him.

“Akira, this is from the HQ. It seems that something just fell over ahead of you, so you should be careful.”

“Roger that… Is it normal for things to be falling out from the sky around here? That’s pretty dangerous.”

The sky of the eastern district was inhabited by monsters, so it was pretty normal for stuff to be falling from the sky. Although they were sometimes valuable relics, they were still a danger to those on the ground. Thus, transport routes tend to avoid such dangerous areas. Hikaru, who knew that, found it a little bit strange, but she did not dwell on it any further.

“Inter-city routes usually don’t go through dangerous areas, but… Considering the giant bugs’ nests around the original route, I guess they chose this rouse since this is much safer than trying to break through that area.”

“I see.”

Judging from Hikaru's attitude, it did not seem to be that dangerous, so Akira did not worry about it too much.

But that was not the case for Alpha. Her usual smile suddenly turned serious. It was as if the current situation was worse than that battle against the giant bug swarm.

"Akira, get ready for a fight."

"…Alright, Alpha. Is it something bad?"

"Most likely."

The radar picked up a signal and when Akira turned in the direction of that signal, he could see a white powered suit fall through the thick cloud, plummeting to the ground.

Since it was trying to soften the crash by pointing its booster toward the ground, it blew away all the smaller rubble right under it.

Akira immediately pointed his rifle toward the powered suit. He thought that white powered suit was the reason why Alpha seemed so solemn. Immediately he pumped the C bullet loaded in his LEO multi-rifle with energy. The most important thing for him right now was to get the first shot. If the power used was overkill, he could just reduce it later.

But before Akira finished charging the bullet and pulled the trigger, suddenly, something else attacked that powered suit. A black disk-shaped object split open the thick cloud and charged straight toward the white powered suit. Although the white powered suit tried to shoot it down, it could not stop the black object. The suit received a close-range attack that ended up smashing it to pieces.

After the black disk destroyed its target, it immediately went up to the sky to chase after its next target. It was another white powered suit close to it. White powered suits fell to the ground one by one around the transport convoy. Some crashed into the ground, some that could still fly, flew around the convoy and others landed on top of the transport vehicles. No matter how battered, all of them were fighting back against the black disk.

Akira was still confused by the sudden change of event when suddenly more were coming. The greyish cloud on top of the convoy turned even darker. When Akira looked up into the cloud, he could see something solid. It was similar to a floating ceiling, which kept on ejecting out more black disks from its mouth-like gate.

Akira made a quick guess as to the identity of that thing and wished someone would rebuke him as he mumbled.

“…Don’t tell that thing is a monster.”

“That’s one of the monsters living high in the sky. Akira, Let’s get to work. We need to repel that thing.”

Akira quickly returned back to himself the moment he heard something that he did not want to hear. But it did not erase his shock as he immediately turned to Alpha. Of course, normally that was a very strange reaction for others, but he had completely forgotten about that thanks to how taken back he was.

“Wait. Fighting that thing!? Are you serious!? It’s not something that I can defeat just by trying harder, you know?”

Every single one of the monsters up in the sky was even bigger than the inter-transport vehicle. The transport convoy was fully covered beneath their shadows.

Alpha lightly smiled at Akira who looked at her with surprise rather than worry.

“Don’t worry. We’re not fighting those.”

Seeing that smile, Akira regained most of his calm. Suddenly, there was an order coming from the HQ.

“To all personnel!! Shoot down all the powered suits!! Or at least get them away from the convoy!! They’re the reason why those monsters came down here! So, destroy them as fast as you can!”

“Yep, so there, you have it. Akira, let’s get to work.”

Akira’s bike started moving, it was Alpha who was controlling it. Akira immediately understood what she meant as he banished all the questions in his mind and focused on the incoming fight. He took aim toward the white powered suit using the rifle on both of his hands as the bike ran through the rooftop. Meanwhile, the rifle fixed on the bike’s arm was also taking its aim toward the same target.

Due to his time compression and Alpha’s advanced calculation ability. All the 4 LEO multi-rifle were aimed at the exact same point. They then released the C bullets that they had charged to their limit.

With the accuracy that was raised to its utmost physical limit, countless bullets hit the exact same point at the same time. The combined firepower tore off the leg of the durable-looking powered suit.

“Oh? They’re weaker than they look, huh?”

“I bet that’s because they’re already damaged from their fight against those monsters. Their energy reserve must be really low.”

“Is that so? I guess that’s mean that I’ll at least have a chance against them.”

The powered suit that just lost its one leg turned and aimed its rifle at Akira. However, with one leg gone, the rough, turbulent wind, and its exhausted energy reserve, it could hardly maintain balance. This was way outside of what its auto-balancer could handle. Moreover, Akira was also keeping it in check with his shots as well. The energy bullets, more like lasers that it shot from its cannon, veered away from where Akira was.

Akira used that opening to jump off the rooftop and landed on the ground. The forcefield armour projected a rail-like platform the moment the tires left the rooftop. This allowed it to land smoothly on the ground without much loss in momentum. After he landed, Akira used the transports as cover as he quickly closed the distance to his target.

“Akira, we’ll use the blade next. So, let’s get a good feeling of the blade while we have the chance.”

Akira frowned.

“Sure, but are we going to test it now?”

Alpha smiled and replied.

“Well, will you normally try to get close to another enemy just to use it?”

Akira smiled bitterly. He then exchanged the rifle in his right hand with a blade handle. There was no blade extending out from that handle.

The lower part of that handle was connected to the bike’s terminal through a wire. Akira flipped the handle on his hand and jammed it into a box that was fixed on the bike’s extension arm, when he pulled that out, liquid metal was extended out from the blade’s handle.

The box was a container for liquid metal, which produced liquid metal blades. The thin powerful blade was exceptionally sharp, it could even cut through forcefield armour. Because of that, it was a time-limited trump card. Time-limited because it could not maintain its sharpness without keeping it connected to an energy pack large enough to power a vehicle. It was a powerful weapon when properly mastered, but most people would instead choose to learn other weapons if they had the time to master something.

Akira knew that but still bought the blade, mostly because Alpha recommended him to. Moreover, he did carry blades before only to get them broken in a short time, so he thought that it was a better idea to use an expendable blade with the assumption that it would be broken after one use right from the start.

Akira held the blade that was slightly longer than his own height horizontally as he drove his bike on the outer wall of the transport vehicle. The route that was formed using forcefield allowed him to scale up the wall to the rooftop without losing much momentum, and just like that, he launched the bike toward the white powered suit.

His strange maneuver, which did not resemble the usual movement of any normal bike, or any flying bike caught the white powered suit off-guard. Akira used that chance to fly past next to the powered suit while he swung his blade. Meanwhile, mid-swing, Alpha controlled the blade to increase its sharpness to its utmost limit.

The blade that was glowing blue dim light, was slowly being consumed as the liquid metal went through the white powered suit's leg and dissipated into nothingness a few seconds later. All that remained was a sliced leg crashing to the ground. It showcased an amazing level of sharpness for a blade that was used as a single-use expendable weapon.

"Akira, AF cannon next."

The AF anti-material cannon on Akira's back unfolded on its own thanks to Alpha and it extended out in front of Akira. He quickly grabbed the cannon, aimed at the white powered suit's torso, and pulled the trigger.

Although it was an AF cannon point-blank shot, that was not enough to completely destroy the white powered suit. But even so, that shot was enough to blow the white powered suit away from the transport convoy and into the wasteland.

"Even that was not enough, huh!?"

Alpha glanced at the shocked Akira and reminded him.

"Our objective is not to destroy them but to drive them away from the convoy, that's why I set it to focus on spread rather than firepower."

"Why would you do that?"

“I’m not sure if it’s a good idea to destroy the target that the monster up there is trying to kill in this situation, you see. So, let’s just leave that powered suit for that monster.”

Akira then saw the white powered suit that had lost both of its legs, only with a damaged booster on its back, trying to get back to the convoy just to get shredded to pieces by the black discs. He then gave a slight nod.

“Well, it’s true that it sounds like too much work trying to destroy every single one of them.”

“If I have to add, we aimed for its leg first since it would have been difficult to push it away from the convoy while it has its sticky contact leg fixed on the vehicle, you see. Well then, let’s hurry up, otherwise, the other transport vehicles would get destroyed first.”

Alpha controlled the bike to quickly accelerate it to drop down. Right after that, the black disks that had finished destroying their original target flew toward the part of the rooftop they were on and just flew past by it, leaving deep cuts on the transport vehicle. Seeing those deep gashes, Akira could not help but frown.

“Isn’t that monster now actively attacking us too?”

“Nope, judging from its attack pattern, I believe that it’s still chasing for the rest of the white powered suits.”

“Those black disks left the transport vehicle badly damaged like this, had I still stayed there, I would have died, wouldn’t I?”

“Akira, do you seriously think that monsters are nice enough not to damage anything other than its main target?”

“You have a point…”

Akira quickly turned toward his next target. He returned to his dual LEO multi-rifles and rode straight up. Although the walls of the transport vehicle were badly damaged because of the black disks, the bike was still able to nimbly scale up thanks to Alpha's superior driving skill.

"So, basically, if we can drive those white powered suits away, that huge mechanical monster up there would leave us, right?"

"My guess is that that monster is only chasing after those white powered suits because it received an order to do so. It should just leave once it accomplishes its order. Maybe."

"Maybe!? It's just a guess!?"

In contrast to Akira, who looked slightly surprised while showing his anxiety there, Alpha had a rather serious face as she replied.

"It's not like I know exactly its behavioural logic, so I can't make any promises. After all, in the end, it's not up to me to decide when it should leave. What I can tell you is that there's a good chance it'll leave us alone once it has destroyed all the white powered suits."

"I see. In that case, there's only one thing to do."

Akira recollected his focus and got himself ready for the next fight. Alpha who saw that seemed satisfied.

"Well, if you don't like taking your chance like this, we can try to go up there with this bike, go pass through that mouth, and destroy it from the inside, you know? Although, it's unlikely that you'll survive. Do you prefer that instead?"

"No thanks!"

Akira frowned; it was obvious that he really hated that idea. But thanks to that, his motivation toward destroying the white powered suits received a boost and Alpha was happy with that result.

As Akira rode toward his next target, he closed the distance while evading the incoming barrage of bullets. Using the 4 LEO multi-rifle simultaneously, he shot down another white powered suit's arm. While the targeted white powered suit was teetering, trying to keep its balance which made it difficult to handle the huge weapon that it had, Akira closed their distance and once again took out his blade. He then accelerated the bike even more and passed under the white powered suit.

The glowing blade consumed all of its liquid metal in one swing to extend the height of the blade and cut the white powered suit cleanly into two. After Akira passed under it, the powered suit tumbled over, split into two distinct sides.

“Alpha, was that okay? We did not cut its legs first.”

“It was tumbling over, so I believe that it no longer has enough energy to maintain forceful contact to the ground, that’s why…”

“Ah, I see. I was just only a bit curious, there’s no need to tell me about all the detail.”

“Are you sure?”

The sliced open powered suit was then ripped to pieces by the black disks. Akira who saw that frowned and thought.

“So, even after being bisection, it is not enough to recognize them as already destroyed? I guess that monster just wants to be extra sure, right?”

“Or it might want to destroy all its target by its own attack.”

“Basically, it just wants to be the one that finishes off all of its targets.”

“That kind of quirk also shows the special characteristic of its manufacturer, you see.”

Akira and Alpha were having this kind of conversation to extend the gap between each fight in order to relieve Akira’s fatigue. Unlike Akira who did it unconsciously, Alpha did it deliberately.

While in the midst of their conversation, a white pillar of light suddenly came crashing down on another powered suit. It was on top of a different transport vehicle. That white light devoured 60% of the white powered suit, leaving a big gaping hole through the transport vehicle. That pillar of light pierced through the thick forcefield armour protecting the rooftop of the vehicle and went deep inside the transport vehicle, leaving it badly damaged.

Akira who saw that, frowned. He looked up to find a huge cylindrical cannon-like object floating near the monster.

"…It seems that I really need to hurry up. For now, let's stop chatting. It would be bad if that thing shoots down from the sky and evaporate me as well."

"That's true."

Akira once again put back his blade and returned to his dual LEO multi rifle.

__*__*__*__

A shout from the HQ could be heard from the communication devices.

"Number 4 is badly damaged!! It has lost its mobility!!"

"Tow it and evacuate the crew and the cargo!! Once the evacuation is done, depending on the situation, we might have to abandon number 4! Turn up the forcefield armour on the other transport vehicles to the max! Just forget about the coursing speed and the armour repair!! We can't get away from those white powered suits with our coursing speed anyway! And those armour tiles serve no defensive value at all! Use all the energy reserve to get through the current situation!!"

"Number 6 is gone as well! Injury count is climbing in numbers 8 and 9!!"

"Turn off all the cannons affected by the aiming system!! Don't shoot up! That monster will blow up the transport vehicle the moment it recognizes one of us as an obstacle!! What's going on with the activation code for the powered suits in the hangar!?"

“We already sent a request but still no response!”

The guy who was acting as the commander frowned.

“Dammit! Are they working on regenerating a new code or they’re hesitating to send the code…? Just tell them to hurry up!”

Although the hangar was filled with powered suits, all of them were merchandise, so the escort team did not have the right to use them. They might be able to use them right away if they paid for them, but the paperwork prevented the escort team from doing that, hence the guy was irritated.

Shirou and his escorts were also inside the hangar at the moment. Hammerz, who was together with him, rubbed his head.

“Shirou, are you sure we’re doing this? Although it’s an emergency, this is borderline criminal, you know?”

Shirou just chuckled and said.

“It can’t be helped, it’s an emergency after all.”

“If you think that everything is allowed just because it is an emergency, it’ll definitely destroy public order, it’s exactly because we’re in an emergency that we can’t resort to crimes, you know?”

Shirou chuckled bitterly, seeing that reaction, Hammerz got a little bit irritated.

“What?”

“Well, to be honest, I’m not sure that it’s the right thing to say considering that we’re in a perpetual state of emergency in this eastern district. After all, the Corporate Government is robbing the old-world ruins exactly because of that we’re in the middle of an emergency, right? And that’s the exact reason why the caretaker AIs are not happy with us, right?”

“Are you seriously criticizing the system in this situation?”

“Of course not. Even I think that it is necessary in order to survive this monster-filled eastern district, you know? We have no other choice after all. So, what I’m saying is, compared to that, modifying Sakashita Heavy Industry’s merchandise for a bit here is not that much of a crime, right? We can just give our best effort to explain to the corporation later.”

Hammerz sighed. He knew that it was nothing but an excuse, but it was also completely understandable considering the current dire situation.

“Ah, just to let you know. If you’re saying that you’ll go out there and destroy them, then there won’t even be a need for me to do this, you know?”

“…I know, just do it already.”

“Alright, I have your approval then.”

Shirou smirked and used the full extent of his power.

After a short time, there seemed to be nothing happening. Or at least, that was the case from an amateurs’ point of view. But in reality, there was a huge change in the security system in that area. Because of that, something finally started to happen.

The powered suits inside the hangar that should only be able to turn on with the correct activation code, suddenly started turning on. They then grabbed the weapon closest to them and those who were done arming themselves stood in front of the gate. Right after that, the gate that should only be able to open with approval from the escort team, also started to crack open.

The officer responsible for watching over the hangar was shocked, but before he could give an order, Hammerz suddenly called him.

“This is Hammerz from Sakashita Heavy Industry. We’ll handle the abnormality inside the hangar on our own, so please forgive us for the trouble.”

The officer quickly understood what might have been going on and held himself back from making any complaints. Though he was obviously displeased.

“…No, it’s fine. We’re thankful for your help in this situation.”

“Thank you and sorry. You can forward any complaints later to Sakashita Heavy Industry. After all, even if you send that complaint to me, it’s not like I can do anything about it, you see.”

Hammerz then closed the call. Although what Shirou did there was in violation of many security rules, the officer decided to grant him some leeway and planned to pin the responsibility onto Sakashita Heavy Industry.

Hammerz could sympathize and felt sorry for that officer since both of them were bound by their position and their affiliation. He then turned his gaze toward a boy who completely interpreted that compromise in a bad way. He felt conflicted as he saw the power that caused such a security compromise to be possible.

[…He’s as good as ever. Even the security system of the powered suits in the frontline is basically non-existent in front of this guy.]

Shirou was an old-world connector affiliated with Sakashita Heavy Industry. Due to the rigorous training from Sakashita Heavy Industry, he was able to do all kinds of tricks including hacking.

Many of the security systems in the eastern district were made based on old-world technology that was not even fully cracked yet by the current technology. Most of them provided very low resistance toward hacking by those who could connect to the old-world domain. The authentication system that was considered to be nigh impossible to crack in this era was close to non-existent to those who could connect directly to the old-world domain.

Moreover, Shirou was trained by Sakashita Heavy Industry using the information harvested from many different old-world ruins. Normally, Sakshita Heavy Industry would never let such a person out, but this was a special case.

Hammerz shifted his gaze toward the unmanned powered suits.

“…If I’m not mistaken, the original autopilot system can only mimic amateurs, right?”

“Even if they are, the quality and the ability of the powered suits would do the hard lifting. Well, either way, it’s better that they get out there and get destroyed in the battle instead of being sitting ducks inside the hangar just waiting to be destroyed together with the whole transport vehicle, no?”

“I don’t really care. To be honest, let’s just return back to the room.”

“Yeah yeah.”

Shirou then returned back to his room. But before that, he glanced at the powered suits that were flying out the hangar and hoped that they would at least be useful out there.

———*—

The transport convoy was quickly enveloped in an intense battle. The cannons on top of the transport vehicles that could even make quick work of a colony-sized giant bug swarm were used to shoot down the white powered suits. Black disks flew around, ripping everything in their way including the transport vehicles. The Hunters were doing their best to destroy the white powered suits and naturally, the white powered suits fought back. White pillars of light came down from time to time, evaporating the white powered suits as well as the transport vehicles that were hit by that ray.

The unmanned powered suits activated by Shirou were then thrown into the mix as well. Although they were able to recognize the Hunters and did not shoot them, they could not differentiate between the white powered suits and the black disks. Thus, they attacked them both. The black disks soon recognized the unmanned powered suits as hostile and started ripping them to pieces.

The area was filled with cannon shells and explosions, the sound of gunshots and explosions were echoing without end. Of course, that much ruckus only caused other monsters to get attracted to the area. Even the sudden route change of the convoy lost its original purpose, all the nearby monster swarms quickly converged onto the convoy.

Originally, the escort crews would have no problem dealing with the swarms of monsters. But their hands were full at the moment. Worse, the transport vehicles had allocated most of their energy for their forcefield armour, which lowered their coursing speed. So those monsters that were normally too slow to catch up with the convoy were slowly closing in on it.

Massive wolves that were approaching the convoy while evading the hailstorm of bullets were beheaded by the black discs. The octopalos looked up and started shooting toward the flying monster, so the flying monsters reacted by evaporating them with a single swing of its ray cannon. Smaller monsters were trying to climb up the transport vehicles, so the unmanned powered suits and the Hunters were repelling them off.

In the midst of all this chaos, the transport vehicle was able to survive thanks to their maximized forcefield armour, they were also able to buy the needed time to destroy the white powered suits. But the thick forcefield armour caused communication between transport vehicles to jam up. The head of the convoy noticed that, but he prioritized on keeping the transport vehicles intact and told them to keep the forcefield up.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 239, Diversion

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira rode his bike on the wall of the transport vehicle while approaching his next target. He chose to do so since unlike on the rooftop, the walls of the vehicle had no large cannons. With nothing in the way, he could pace his bike even faster.

But there was something that blocked his way. It was a cannon warhead from one of the monsters. He nimbly evaded it and shot back toward the monster with his dual LEO multi-rifle.

He was shooting horizontally as if the gravity was working at a 90-degree angle just for him. He was able to accomplish it skilfully thanks to the quality of the bike, Alpha's support, and his own skill. It also helped that he became very familiar with that technique. The barrage flew toward the large multi-legged insects and the walking cannons with multiple legs. They pierced through both the metallic armour and biological carapace to destroy the internal organs of those monsters.

Even after killing those monsters, the swarm behind them would just take their place right away. Akira frowned after noticing what was going on.

“There’s just no end to them!! Why are there so many of them when the others are also in the front line, fighting them!? I bet those guys that easily fought off that huge bug swarm are taking it easy right now!!”

“Well, those guys are focused on fighting off those white powered suits. So, they don’t have the leeway to fend off the monsters.”

“But those white powered suits are not that strong, even I was able to shoot a couple of them down, no? Those guys had no problem against that huge horde of gigantic flying bugs, you know? Are they really having that much trouble?”

“Not all of them are the same. It’s not like they are equally damaged. The ones that you destroyed are those that were sticking on the transport vehicles, right? They probably did that because they couldn’t fly on their own to catch up with the convoy with the energy reserve that they had left.”

Alpha then pointed toward the direction of the wasteland. Akira glanced over and saw the white powered suits fighting multiple unmanned drones while flying around freely in the sky. They were flying around way more agilely than the ones sticking on the transport vehicles.

“I see. So that’s why.”

Akira was still on his bike when he pulled out his AF anti-material cannon. The bike’s extra arm was connected to the backside of the AF cannon. This way, the AF anti-material cannon could source energy from the bike’s energy tank.

Akira was aiming at the irregularly moving target from a fast-moving bike. In order to accomplish such a feat, he increased his focus to its utmost limit to the point that the world seemed to be close to a standstill from his point of view. To top it off, Alpha helped the aiming algorithm of the cannon even before it could finish its calculation and added that information in Akira’s vision. As Akira pulled the trigger, the cannon shot out a highly focused ray of light with staggering accuracy. This shot was focused more on a high intensity instead of spread.

The cannon drew a strand of intense light through multiple things. Monsters, the force field armour of the white powered suit and its control device. None of them stopped it as it flew straight into the wasteland.

But even so, that was not enough to destroy the white powered suit. The hole drilled by the light ray was so small that it did not seem to leave any damage from afar. But with the force field armour pierced and the control device destroyed, the white powered suit was only able to move sluggishly. It did not show much resistance as the cannons of the unmanned drones as well as the black disks ripped it apart. It only took a few seconds to turn it into scrap metal.

“Alpha, how many more?”

“Twenty-two.”

“Good grief, there are still that many of them?!”

“If I may add something, those that were badly damaged have already been destroyed, so only those that were relatively intact are still up.”

Alpha was smiling mischievously toward Akira, who was even more worried than before.

In reality, the situation was favourable to the convoy’s side. Thanks to the energy allocation, which was mostly focused on their force field armour. The transport vehicles were well defended. Meanwhile, the escort team was working hard. Likewise, the pillars of light from the sky were actively hunting down white powered suits, whittling down their number.

It was only a matter of time before the rest of the white powered suits got shot down. If their original aim was to attack the transport convoy, they have already failed. Nonetheless, there was no sign of them retreating.

In the middle of the chaos, Akira was fighting another white powered suit. It was standing on top of one of the transport vehicles as it swung around its claw.

Akira charged the C bullets in all of his 4 LEO multi-rifles, two on his hands while the other two were on the extended arms of the bike. He pumped the bullets full of energy to raise their firepower to their limit before releasing them toward the white powered suit. Flashes of blinding light shot out as if it was a firework.

Normally, the rooftop was not big enough for Akira's bike to keep evading the claw, but he was able to forcibly avoid the attacks thanks to his bike. He used the force field armour of the bike as well as the force field projected by the transport vehicle as footings in the middle of the air. Thus, he was able to move around as if there were invisible tiles extending out from the rooftop.

Akira kept evading the incoming attacks using those invisible platforms. Every time he made a quick turn, inertia assaulted his body. He was fighting that back with the bike's safety feature, his augmented suit, and the medicine that he took beforehand. He kept making sharp turns to stay on white powered suit's blind spot.

Akira evaded the huge bullets coming from the white powered suit's rifle as well as the hot rays shot out from other places. He evaded while shooting back at it with relatively small bullets compared to what was speeding towards him. Eventually, he emptied the magazine of his 4 LEO rifles, and even after that, it was not enough to destroy the opponent.

Akira reloaded new magazines to his rifles with a stern face.

"That thing is just too tough… It's not only taking bullets from me but also taking damage from the black discs, right? Alpha, can't we just leave them to the vanguards? They're too much for me to handle, you know?"

"They're not that dangerous, so to be honest, even if they can take on that much damage, we can just take our time shooting them down one by one."

"No no no. The fact that I'm only maintaining this with medicine already says that this isn't good."

"Is that so? Well, if you say so, let's change our target then."

Alpha smiled and yielded to Akira's wish. His stern face relaxed for a bit. They then drove away from that battle just like that.

At that time, a huge pillar of light engulfed the battlefield. The light blinded everything in the area. The convoy could feel the heatwave coming from that beam. Akira, who also noticed that, stopped the bike and looked behind.

"…In the end, that thing still takes all of them out, huh? There's no need for us to fight them, right… Wha-!?"

The unexpected turn of events shocked Akira. Although the white pillar of light was able to evaporate all the white powered suits that it devoured, that was not the case this time. The white powered suits looked completely unharmed.

"Wait for a sec, they're just way too durable, aren't they? Alpha, there's no way we can win against that thing, let's get away from this place before that thing can catch up with us."

Akira tried to accelerate the bike away from that place, but Alpha prevented that from happening. The bike suddenly made a sharp U-turn and the wheel turned so fast to the point that it was bursting fire sparks as it accelerated as fast as it could right back toward the white powered suit.

Akira was so surprised by what Alpha did there and activated his time perception compression by pure reflex.

"Alpha!? What are you doing!?"

"Akira, we have a change of plans! We need to destroy that as soon as possible!!"

"What? Why!?"

Although he said that, Akira's mind and body were already in full battle-mode. He already knew that it would be too late to do that if he waited for Alpha to tell him the reason before acting. The dual LEO multi-rifles on his hands were aimed toward the different target indicators in his augmented visual.

“To simply put it, it’s because that thing survived that beam of light.”

“Wait, didn’t we decide not to fight that thing exactly because it’s simply too durable?”

“The objective of the monster up there is to destroy that powered suit. So, if it knows that its earlier attack was not enough, I’m sure it will increase its firepower the next time. Judging from its size, that monster must have originated from somewhere up really high. Even a small increase in firepower by the standard of the monsters living high up there means a huge increase by our standard here, you see. Furthermore, its target doesn’t seem damaged at all, so I’m sure that it won’t just attack with a small increase.”

“So, basically, the next shot will be way more powerful, huh? In that case, wouldn’t it be better if we get away so that we won’t get hit as well?”

“Akira, what if the next shot is big enough to take out the whole convoy? And what if it only takes 10 seconds to recharge its next shot? Do you think you’ll be able to get away from that?”

Akira seemed to be doubtful of that, so Alpha explained to him the reason for her guess.

“By analysing the forcefield armour of the transport vehicles, the white powered suit was able to integrate that system into its own force field system. That gave it enough power to withstand that attack. It is a similar form of defensive system to that snail monster that you fought back in the old-world ruin, so as long as it is connected to the system, it cannot move too far away from the convoy.”

“If the flying monster also notices that, there was a chance that it would adjust its firepower to overwhelm the force field armour of the transport vehicles. If it further increases its firepower to make sure its next attack will be enough to destroy its target, it will not be strange for it to have enough firepower to destroy the transport vehicle as well. In the worst-case scenario, it might even consider the transport convoy as a nuisance and decide to destroy the whole convoy as well.”

“That is why it is better to destroy its target first to let it know that there is no need to go that far before it can release its next attack. It might very well be already charging at this very moment.”

After hearing that explanation, Akira tensed up.

“…Alpha, what’s the chance that it’s just you overthinking this?”

“It’s true that it might be a rather pessimistic guess in this situation, and you might not even need to do that at all. But do you think that you’re that lucky to not need to do anything and leave it up to fate?”

Akira thought about how true her statement was and could not help but to make a bitter smile. But his smile then slightly changed as if he had made his resolve for the upcoming battle.

“…You’re right. In that case, let’s get that thing destroyed and change this really bad luck of mine to something that I can handle if I put in my best effort! I’m sure I at least have enough luck to do that, right!? Yeah, maybe! Well, even if I don’t, you’ll do something about that, right?”

Alpha replied with a confident smile.

“Of course! Just leave it to me! It’s my responsibility after all! This will be pretty reckless, so get yourself ready!”

“I know. That part is my responsibility after all!!”

Akira made his resolve and accelerated his bike even more straight toward his target.

Ever since he heard the reason why he was going to fight instead of run, he already had his mind working on what would be his next move. He used all the charged bullets of his 4 LEO multi-rifles to release a barrage of bullets. However, he was not aiming at the powered suit. It was the black discs flying around the powered suit. Due to the fine adjustment from Alpha, they were not enough to destroy their targets, but at least they were enough to disrupt their mobility. It was an attack just to bait the discs' attention.

The discs reacted accordingly and immediately went for Akira. A couple of dozens of flying discs with sharp blades poking out from their chassis ripped through everything in their way, including the monsters as well as the unmanned powered suits. Although some of them changed targets to the other white powered suits closer to them, the rest were still going for Akira.

Akira increases the intensity of his time perception compression. Everything around him immediately slowed down and proceeded in slow motion. In the middle of that, Akira looked at his radar, confirmed the direction, position, and movement of all the black discs. Although he knew he had nowhere to run and only death was awaiting him, he did not show a single ounce of fear.

"Akira, this will be dangerous, are you ready?"

Toward Alpha, who said that as if she was challenging or maybe teasing him, Akira firmly replied.

"Ready when you are!"

A stinging pain assaulted Akira's head, but at the same time, the resolution of his vision suddenly went up to the point that Akira could clearly trace the tip of the spinning blades of the black discs. It was as if the world was completely rewritten with unbelievable clarity. It was thanks to the full real-world resolution support from Alpha as well as the drug that Akira received from Tsubaki.

Akira started shooting around him in that state. Although he was spinning as if he was shooting indiscriminately, each of his shots was properly aimed. Due to his sharpened world perception, he skipped the steps where he had to adjust his aim at his target before pulling the trigger. He was simply moving his rifle to the position where he knew that its shot would hit before releasing the shot, this allowed him to maintain high-speed consecutive shooting.

Although he still left the decision on which monster he had to shoot first to Alpha. In terms of aiming, it was mostly all Akira.

Akira used the consecutive shooting ability of his LEO multi rifle to its maximum ability, shooting the black discs that were surrounding him. Each and every one of his shots was extremely accurate thanks to Alpha's advanced calculation ability. But even so, it was not enough to destroy even a single disk. After the disks changed their target to Akira, who was deemed to be getting in the way of destroying the white powered suit, they managed to maintain their momentum and velocity.

Akira did not shoot them in order to destroy them. His main aim was to throw them slightly off course and away from hitting his body. The direction he pushed them towards was also not random. He adjusted the power of the bullets and their angle so that the black discs that were thrown off course would hit the white powered suits.

But even so, it was an easy thing for Akira to keep up. He could see a black disk flash past his eyes even in his slowed-down time perception as he shot the other black discs. Even the slightest hesitation or fear would slow him down for a split second, and that split second would have been more than enough to turn him into shredded meat.

Thanks to that, many of the white powered suits were destroyed due to the black discs. Although some of the black discs only ricocheted off their armour, most of the white powered suits were destroyed by thousands of slices over their whole bodies. But even so, that was enough to destroy the ones that had integrated its force field armour with the transport vehicle. Although, it was enough to keep it from moving around. With all the high speed rotating blades of the black discs, they were not able to make any careless move.

Right at that moment, Akira switched to his bladeless handle and pulled out a liquid metal blade just like last time. The blade was so thin that it was almost see-through. It was so long and seemed so fragile that it might break anytime. Due to the force field armour that bound the liquid metal together, it was far more durable than steel and with that thickness, it would be able to easily cut through steel. To top it off, it was also enveloped with a layer of anti-forcefield.

But even that blade was not enough to break through the powered suit's defence. If that was enough to cut it down, it would have been dead after being hit by the white pillar of light from the monster above or the black discs' rotating blades. Even Akira's LEO and AF anti-material cannon would not be enough to damage it as well. At the moment, Akira had no means to destroy it.

But even so, Akira still went and charged at it. After he got as close as possible, he made a sharp U-turn with his bike, and at the same time, he increased his augmented suit output to the max and swung his blade.

With the help of Alpha's support, the blade was swung with utmost precision. It went almost perfectly parallel with the transport vehicle's rooftop and cleanly sliced its target, or more like, released its contact point.

Akira's main aim was not the powered suit, but the contact point between it and the transport vehicle. By passing his blade in between them, Akira got the powered suit off the transport vehicle and prevented it from leeching the forcefield armour of the transport vehicle, thus weakening the powered suit's forcefield armour. The moment the powered suit was off the transport vehicle, it was immediately ripped to pieces by the black discs.

After making that U-turn, Akira quickly accelerated away from that place. The black discs that just destroyed the white powered suits tried to chase for him as well. But in the next moment, both the black discs and Akira were blown away by an explosion.

The source of that explosion was another laser strike from the monster above. Since its original target was destroyed, that laser strike was aimed at another white powered suit. Thankfully, that powered suit was away from the convoy. It was engulfed in that melting ray and was annihilated. The moment that beam of light touched the ground, it released a powerful shockwave that blew away the surrounding monsters and wreckages. It even pushed the transport vehicles to the point that they almost turned over.

Thanks to Alpha's help, Akira was fine. Although the explosion did throw his bike into the sky, Alpha increased the projected force field armour that was originally only for protecting Akira from wind past its limit to protect Akira from the explosion. Akira then landed safely on top of the transport vehicle.

Akira glanced at the source of the explosion and could not help but knit his eyebrows. It completely annihilated everything near where it touched the ground.

"…Yikes, that was dangerous. I was so close to taking that up close, huh?"

Alpha smiled bitterly.

"It seems that it turned out as I had explained to you. Though, according to my calculation, the possibility was rather small."

"Is that so?"

"Yep, as I thought, your luck is as bad as ever. I'm glad that my support is still enough to handle it."

Akira chuckled.

"You have a point. Thanks!"

"You are welcome!"

Alpha smiled confidently.

"It seems that it's finally over. Akira, look up."

Akira looked up and saw the flying monster return back to above the cloud and slowly vanish from his views. While the black discs that were surrounding the convoy suddenly stopped and just fell to the ground.

"It's retreating… Is it because we destroyed all the white powered suits? And, why did all the black discs suddenly just stop moving ?"

“The white powered suits have all been destroyed together with everything around them with that laser. Those black discs are all just expendable weapons.”

“They’re expendable? All of them? Though they are that strong?”

Akira heaved a huge sigh.

“The sky monsters, huh… They’re simply way out of what I can handle. I see now. No wonder why no one ever thinks of flying around with those things roaming the sky.”

“But it’s not like they roam over every inch of the sky above the eastern district, you know? Those white powered suits might be just that strong or they brought that monster here from further to the east.”

“…Why would they do that?”

“No idea. Well, either way, it’s done now, good work out there.”

The monsters that were swarming the convoy were already mostly gone. The unmanned powered suits went to take care of the remaining smaller monsters.

Seeing Alpha smile at him to appreciate his hard work, Akira finally lowered his shoulder and sighed in relief.

“…Man, I’m beat. Hikaru. The battle is over now. Can I return back to the transport vehicle and check on my equipment?… Hikaru?”

There was no answer from Hikaru. Akira found that weird. But Alpha then told him that the strengthened forcefield armour of the transport vehicle also jammed his communication. Since he needed Hikaru to open the gate so that he could return back inside the transport vehicle, he had no other choice but to take a break there.

After Akira took some medicine and replenished his magazine and energy pack, the convoy started to slowly accelerate as well, that was when Alpha tilted her head and said.

“This is strange, the forcefield armour already returned back to normal, but I can’t still reach Hikaru.”

“Haaah, Alpha, can you do something?”

Akira asked so with a tired look, Alpha smiled teasingly and replied.

“I don’t mind, but are you sure?”

“…Let me ask this first then, is it a bad idea to do that?”

“Most of this kind of connection line is utilizing a certain spectrum so that it’ll still be usable even when there are others using it. After all, it’s a reserved line for the HQ to distribute information, you see. There are traces that someone has infiltrated into that line, basically, someone used it for unauthorized access. We can basically use that route. Ah, but don’t worry, it won’t leave a single trace that you used that route as well.”

Although Akira did wonder how in the world Alpha could infiltrate such a secured line, on second thought, it now seemed normal. After all, it was Alpha. It would be way too late for him to question that right now, so he just pushed aside that question in his mind. He then thought that she was basically saying that it was possible for her but it would be unethical. Or it was her way to avoid saying that she could not do that.

“Well, there’s no need to go that far… I guess I’ll just wait for a bit more then.”

“If I may add something, I can find traces that Hikaru is trying to connect to any device that she could reach, she might be in some kind of hurry.”

After hearing that, Akira was not so sure if he could just sit here and wait. He then finally thought that it should be fine to go that far if it was to connect to Hikaru, who was basically his employer at the moment.

“Come on, connect to her.”

“Ah! It finally got connected!! Akira!! Help me!!”

Akira was taken aback. The moment it connected, he could hear Hikaru desperately asking for help.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 240, The Assault

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Hikaru lost connection to Akira due to the increased output of the transport vehicle's forcefield armour, she proceeded to make arrangements to use the temporary connection line. After she received confirmation and it automatically adjusted the line, she sighed.

"…Good grief, what is it now? Wasn't that giant bug swarm more than enough? Just what is it this time?"

The last message that she received was a warning from the HQ that the increased forcefield armour output might cause some jamming on the communication line.

But even so, Hikaru still perceived the situation as not too bad. She knew well how strong Akira was from yesterday's battle record. She also had heard that the escort team added more men to its rooster. So, she was just calmly gathering information about the current situation from inside the room.

Not too long after that, the interphone suddenly rang. Although she tried to answer it through the information terminal, it could not properly connect to the interphone. As she thought that she did not have any other choice, she went and stood right in front of the door to answer it. She first used the information terminal to check who was standing on the other side of the door. It was 3 men in security attire.

“Who is it?”

The man who led that team replied.

“We’re from the escort team. There’s an order from HQ to evacuate the transport. Will you please cooperate with us?”

“…Evacuation? Is it that bad?”

Hikaru unconsciously raised her voice. The men replied calmly as if to calm Hikaru down, but his smile somehow deepened.

“Unfortunately, transport vehicle number 4 got hit by the flying monster and can no longer move. So, we’re helping with the evacuation of the crews at the moment. Just to be safe, we were directed to evacuate the other transport vehicles.”

Hikaru was so surprised and tried to open the door. But before she reached for the door’s panel, her hand suddenly stopped. She then tilted her head.

[…Flying monster?]

She suddenly had a bad feeling and pondered. It all made perfect sense that after the flying monster destroyed one of the transport vehicles, the rest of the surviving transport vehicles suddenly increased their forcefield armour output while the crew urged everyone to evacuate.

But during the communication with HQ, she did not hear anything about the flying monster. Thus, in short, HQ decided not to inform her of this. After all, spreading such information might cause a panic instead. So, the problem now was why the people on the other side of the door told her that piece of information? Was it because they were lax people who could not answer as long as not asked about the information restriction, or was it because they were suspicious people, or might the reason lie somewhere else?

“I’m really sorry, but can you please hurry up? We will guide you to evacuate.”

Hikaru hesitated, but she decided to lightly lock the door.

“I’m sorry. I don’t know what’s going on, but the panel is not responding. Can you open it from that side? I’m sure you have a master key with you during this emergency situation, right?”

The guy lightly bowed.

“We’re really sorry, it would cause trouble for us to open our customer’s room with our master key even in this situation. We do have one-time use emergency code, but if possible, we want to keep it for those who need them more. So, can’t you do something from inside?”

“I’m trying here, but it seems that nothing is working… Well, you can go ahead and evacuate the other people and come back here later.”

“But if we do that then, your safety would be compromised…”

“It’s fine. I’m a city management staff, so I already prepared myself for all possibilities the moment I stepped out into the wasteland. You should prioritize evacuating the other passengers. Ah, just tell me where I should evacuate, I will go there myself if I somehow manage to open this thing before you come back.”

“The evacuation point might change depending on the situation. The security inside the vehicle might also change during the emergency, so there is a good chance that you might get locked in if we’re not around.”

The guy’s tone suddenly slightly changed.

“…I’m sorry. We’re really in a hurry here, can’t you really do something from your side?”

Hikaru was with a guy by the name of Erde who was the leader of that team. Erde seemed to be slightly irritated, and he became rather impatient. It was understandable for someone from the escort team, who was evacuating the passengers, to have that expression.

Hikaru who saw that hesitated, but she still refused to touch the panel.

“I’m still trying here. Ah, is it because I’m the last person here so you can’t close the bulkhead before I evacuate?”

“Yes, with the forcefield armour has been set to its maximum output and we need to close the bulkheads. It’ll be difficult to reopen it later, that’s why we need to evacuate everyone right now.”

“I-is that so!? Wait for a sec!! I’ll open it!!… It still won’t open!! What’s going on here? Can’t you please try using the master key? It just won’t open from here!!”

Hikaru still had not touched the panel. She thought that she might have overdone it there, but her heart was telling her to still wait. She was planning to open the door later after Erde and his men left that place.

Erde’s face which already had a stern expression slightly changed.

“…Can’t you open it no matter what?”

“I’m already trying to open it here right now!”

In response to Hikaru’s voice that sounded as if she was panicking, Erde’s face turned cold for a split second, but it was immediately replaced by an ominous smile.

“I understand, we’ll open it with our master key.”

His smile was gone from his face.

“It’ll be dangerous, so please step back from the door.”

Erde looked at the other men to tell them to start working. Hikaru, who was noticed that, frowned. On the other side of the transparent door from her side, he could see them putting explosives on the door.

Erde and his men then opened up some distance, Hikaru also got away from the door in a hurry. In the next moment, the explosives finally exploded.

The boom travelled through the hallway together with a strong gust of wind. After both died down, Erde went to check the door and frowned. The door was so strong that it was left mostly undamaged.

"…Next!"

Erde's men started putting the next explosive behind them, Erde thought.

[…Is she suspicious of us right from the start…? No, there was no trouble in the beginning. Which meant that the problem is the way I spoke…? I really have no idea though… I'm sure I made a blunder somewhere. Well, it doesn't matter, I can just ask her directly later.]

Erde then shouted toward the room.

[Get away from the door if you don't want to die!]

They then placed the explosives and activated them. Erde returned to check the door again, this time, it was enough to bend the door.

"…Next one!"

After 3 explosives, the bent grew bigger on the door.

Hikaru was a bit panicking, although her ominous feeling was on the mark, she did not understand what was going on.

The escort crew of the transport convoy were using explosives to open the door. Especially in this situation where the inside of the transport vehicle, and the whole transport convoy, were considered as a part of the inner city area. It was blatant disrespect toward Sakashita Heavy Industry, which was maintaining the area. In the worst-case scenario, it could even be considered as picking a fight against the whole Corporate Government.

The people who were doing that without showing any hesitation seemed to be aiming for her, who was nothing special but a normal city staff. Hikaru really did not understand the reason why.

She tried to contact HQ in a panic to report the situation to them, but she could not reach them. Thus, her choice quickly shifted to Akira. Unfortunately, the result was the same even after she increased the comm output to maximum. Hikaru then inadvertently screamed.

“What in the world is going on here!??”

But her voice was drowned by the explosion that echoed into the room. Hikaru flinched back and checked the door, it was doing its job very well. But even so, it was only a matter of time before it broke.

Hikaru frowned and scrambled over to try to contact anyone, she used her quick wits to look for a loophole in the communication line.

While back in the hallway, Erde looked at the bent door and frowned.

[…That’s one hell of a door. I guess it’s to be expected for an isolation room, huh?]

Each transport vehicle had a number of strongly built rooms called isolation rooms. They were made to withstand powerful attacks from the outside. It did sound like a very safe room, but at the same time, it also protects the area outside from whatever happened inside. Thus, it was often used to transport criminals or dangerous people. This included the superhuman with enhanced physical strength. Because of this bad impression, many isolation rooms were unoccupied although they could be filled with expensive facilities for transporting VIPs.

Akira was assigned to one of those isolation rooms. It was because Hikaru managed to get Akira into that escort request at the very last moment. She thought that it should be fine as long as she did not tell Akira about it. After hearing about Akira from Kibayashi, she then realized that the isolation room could be used to minimize the damage in case something happened. It was also one of the reasons why she did not cancel that escort request.

Although that was the real reason, Erde interpreted that situation differently.

[Did they send the escort outside because they think it would be fine as long as they have this isolated room? They are pretending to be a Hunter and his operator. I guess it would be suspicious unless they don't do that much, huh? Which means this one is the jackpot, right?]

Erde, who read too much into the situation, frowned and said.

"Put the next one up! Add more explosives this time!"

"But we might damage the room or even the transport vehicle if we do that."

"It doesn't matter! Just do it!"

Erde's men just did what they were told to and installed more explosives on the door.

They kept trying to break the door after that and they used more explosives for each try, causing the room to shake harder with every explosion. Although the explosions also shook the vehicle, it was minor compared to what was going on outside. The violent shaking filled Hikaru with desperation and terror. Even after it was badly bent, the door was still devoting itself to its duty. Nonetheless, the bend eventually created small holes that air could get through. Each explosion would start to send a strong gust of wind into the room.

"Whoah!? This is an isolation room, you know!? And it's not like I'm an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry! Then why are they even going that far?!"

"Get the next one!! Hurry up!!"

Hikaru, who heard that, panicked even more. But at the same time, she realized something. Whoever was on the other side of the door was in a hurry. Basically, they did not have much time. That reason might be because they only had a short time before the escort team noticed them. So, things might turn for the better if she could buy some time. As she thought so, Hikaru looked around the room for whatever might help her buy more time. After a short span of time, she came up with a small plan. She went to hide somewhere hard to find while she kept trying to contact someone.

The door finally gave up. The explosion and the banging sound that followed it let Hikaru know and made her freeze. That was when her connection to Akira recovered.

“Ah! It finally got connected!! Akira!! Help me!!”

That was right when Erde and his men stormed the room.

__*__*__*__

After hearing that plea from Hikaru, Akira returned back inside as soon as he could. He went to the gate on the rooftop, parked his bike beside the gate, and ran inside. Since he already knew that the inside of the vehicle was no longer safe, he did not hesitate as he stepped in carefully with his rifles ready. When he reached the hallway, he looked slightly confused, the hallway seemed to be slightly bent.

“Alpha, is that colourless mist?”

Alpha had a slightly stern look on her face as she replied.

“No, it’s some kind of enhanced particles that imitate the effect of the colourless mist.”

“Enhanced particles?”

“They’re basically dust particles that have the special characteristic of enhancing the basic properties of air. For now, just think of it as colourless mist. It also carries a jamming effect as well. My bet is that it has already spread all over the inside of the transport vehicle."

Akira raised his guard. But he had no plan to retreat, he already resolved himself to charge forward as he asked Alpha.

"Basically, I just need to think of it as a thick colourless mist, right?"

"Yes, let's do that while we move forward. I'll try my best to help you if something happens."

"Alright then."

Akira ran straight through the hallway. With the help of his augmented suit, he was able to run so fast that he could feel a strong drag from the air. This phenomenon was not new to him, and it was exactly because he was used to it, that he noticed the air was slightly heavier than usual. It felt like he was moving his body inside a body of water but on a much lower level. But since it did not cause any noticeable effect on his speed, Akira decided to push forward and into his room.

Akira could see traces of explosions inside the hallway. They were from when Erde and his men broke through the isolation room. The force that leaked from the directional explosion left the ceiling, wall, and floor cracked. It showed just how powerful the isolation room was. Seeing that, Akira could not help but frown.

"I heard that the inside of the transport vehicle is very well guarded just like the area in the inner wall, but it seems that doesn't mean it's exactly peaceful, huh? Was I too late?"

He already lost contact with Hikaru. Although the line was still connected, he did not get any reply even when he tried to call her. Either she was not in a situation where she could say anything, or she was taken by whoever came for her after that last call. In the worst-case scenario, she might already be dead. Either way, Akira did not know which one was the case.

"Let's check the room first."

“You’re right.”

As he was running toward his room, suddenly two guys jumped out from the destroyed door and into the hallway.

Akira who saw that knitted his eyebrows. Thanks to the size of the transport vehicle, the hallway was pretty wide. But even so, it was not wide enough that it was possible to get away from a barrage of bullets. Even so, both of them were running fully open in the hallway with knives in hand as they closed the distance to Akira.

Akira was slightly confused, but he understood that they were enemies as he started shooting at them without any hesitation. The LEO multi-rifles in both of his hands filled the hallway, leaving no space for them to hide. With no place to take cover, those bullets hit those two men, or so it should have been.

Right in the next moment, Akira was so surprised that he froze up for a split second. All the bullets that he shot could not fly far enough to reach those men. Not even a single bullet hit them. The bullets flew a few metres forward while leaving a visible track behind them before they created a small shockwave as if they just hit an invisible wall and greatly slowed down. Some of the following bullets then hit the bullets in front of them and ricocheted inside the hallway.

Knowing that shooting was futile, Alpha stopped forcibly stopped Akira’s rifles. While still confused about what just happened, Akira recollected himself.

“Alpha, what did they do there just now?”

“Save it for later! They’re coming!!”

The two men closed the distance with their inhuman physical capability. But they were still far away from Akira. At least, they still could not reach Akira with their knives as the man on the right swung the knife with both of his hands. Akira saw that and the blade that was made of light extending out from that knife. He knew that it would reach him, so Akira took evasive action. Right at the next moment, a cross-shaped blade made of light passed right beside Akira.

At the same time Akira moved his body to evade that attack, he also activated his time perception compression and reality manipulation. Inside that distorted world, Akira ducked low to evade the incoming slash and charged forward to close their distance. Seeing what the man on the left was trying to do, Akira aimed both of his rifles toward that man.

Just like last time, the bullets did not even reach that man. But as those bullets lost their momentum and started slowly falling down to the ground, the barrage created a wall of bullets between Akira and that man. The man on the left used more than half of the power of his blade to get through that wall.

The weakened light blade touched Akira’s forcefield armour and Akira just forced his way forward. A blinding light flashed from where the light blade touched Akira’s augmented suit.

Akira then used the power of his augmented suit to launch himself forward as if he was a bullet to close the distance. The moment his enemies entered the distance that his bullets would suddenly slow down, Akira aimed his rifles at them and pulled the trigger.

Those two men nimbly evaded the bullets. Since they were already close enough to exchange blows, the bullets could not form a wall, so there was no need for them to make a big move to evade them. It was easier to evade them compared to the bullets that were shot from afar. Moreover, in order to break Akira’s stance, they launched a coordinated attack on Akira. Blade extended out from their knives. This time, it was not as long as a sword but slightly longer than a knife, thus maintaining their mobility and accuracy in that range.

One of them forced Akira’s attention by attacking him, while the other one jumped from the floor and bounced off the ceiling to find Akira’s back. They then both attacked Akira from 2 sides simultaneously. The blade of their knives drew an arc through the space that extended endlessly.

Akira also evaded that as he aimed his rifle at both of them. Although he no longer had the leeway to glance at them, Akira knew very well where they were and what they were doing. He quickly evaded and countered. He swung both of his rifles accurately and used the rapid-fire function to draw a line.

All of them were no longer only using the floor as their footings, they used walls and ceilings as well to exchange and evade attacks. They kicked whatever they were using as footings to suddenly stop and launch their body around. They jumped around inside the hallway as if gravity did not affect them. Meanwhile, they were swinging around blades and rifles to the point that the hallway was the first one to admit defeat.

Even the slightest delay would result in death. Even the slightest hesitation would turn into a game over. One wrong move and everything would end. Akira pushed his mind and body to survive such a situation. The medicines that he took beforehand kept repairing the unending damages on his body since he was constantly pushing it past its limit, preventing the bones inside his augmented suit from turning into ground dust. He had no leeway to worry about what was going on inside his augmented suit. All of his attention was focused on evading the incoming attack. Otherwise, he would be dead in no time.

During that fight, his augmented suit was burning through its energy reserve rapidly. Unless he pushed the speed of his augmented suit to its limit, he would not be able to catch up with the opponents' moves. But due to that, the time that Akira had left until he ran out of energy was greatly shortened. That anxiety caused him to get impatient and impatience might lead to mistakes which would then lead to death.

Akira narrowly passed by multiple borders to death each second, and those seconds eventually turned into minutes. Akira desperately used all that he had to keep his life.

Then, in the next second, finally one of them made a mistake. The area was becoming more and more fragile during the fight. Both Akira and his opponents were tiptoeing their foothold so that their balance would not break. They even used forcefield armour to reinforce their footing in order to do that. However, there was a limit to how much it could help. Basically, there were only a limited number of spots where they could step on in the midst of that high-speed fight, and one of Akira's opponents stepped on the wrong spot.

That blunder originally would only lightly throw him off balance. But in front of Alpha, it was turned into a fatal mistake. Even during the battle, Alpha was recording the situation of the hallway, she knew the spots that took too much damage. As such, she knew the spots that were dangerous to step on. She conveyed that information to Akira. Thus, even before his opponent made that opening because he was thrown off-balance due to footing, Akira already launched an attack to strike him.

The moment the guy touched the ground, he slightly slipped, which threw him off balance. The moment it disrupted his movement, Akira's powerful kick was thrust into him. He did not have the chance to evade due to his broken posture and took that kick head-on. It sent his body flying powerlessly and planted his body into the wall, leaving a huge crack on the wall.

But even after receiving such an intense attack, his augmented suit saved him from any fatal injury. Unfortunately, that was all there was to it. Akira landed right next to him with one rifle aimed at his head while the other at his torso. Akira quickly released an intense short barrage. The point-blank shots allowed Akira's bullets to hit their target without losing any momentum, turning the guy's head and body into minced meat.

The other guy used that opening to slash toward Akira. But the sudden turn of events slowed him, albeit only slightly. On the other hand, Akira, who already knew what was going to happen, had the advantage. It allowed him to evade that slash. A cross-shaped slice was graved on the wall, but Akira ducked under the slash. Since Akira was able to fight even when it was 2 against 1, it was an easy thing for Akira to corner his opponent when it was one on one.

The bullets that Akira shot from his 2 LEO multi-rifles suddenly lost momentum as if they hit an invisible wall and fell to the ground, but that only happened after they pierced through his remaining opponent. The shockwave, which was focused on the enemy's head and body, threw the remaining opponent off the ground with his half-destroyed corpse.

Even after that, Akira still had a stern look on his face. He quickly released his rifles off his grip as he reached for his medicine and his left hand to reload a new energy tank. The LEO rifles that he had left on the air ejected their magazines. Akira grabbed 2 new magazines, threw them in the air, and grabbed his rifles, and with one smooth sweep, reloaded the new magazines into his rifles before quickly aiming them at the door leading into his room.

If there was another opponent that came before Akira could finish tending to his injuries and equipment, he would have been dead. But fortunately, no one came. Akira inadvertently let out a sigh.

"…That was close! Alpha, was that already everyone?"

"No idea. The jamming is too strong, I can't search the inside of the room. So be careful."

"Roger that!"

Akira glanced at the already dead opponents.

"…Are these guys the people that Hikaru told me about? So why are they trying to get Hikaru? These guys are more troublesome than those white powered suits out there, you know?"

"Let's ask that question straight to Hikaru. That is as long as she's not already kidnapped or killed. But before that, if you have no plan to retreat, let's take a 30-second break here. One thing for sure is that you won't be able to keep going without rest at the moment. Also, if you decided to take a break here, take in some more medicine."

Akira put back one of his rifles and took a large dose of medicine. His face was saying that he was in utter pain.

"…My head hurts so bad. That thing that allows me to see the world with better precision… It's better if I don't do that twice in one day."

“If you’re not retreating, you might want to prepare yourself to do that three times today. Just to let you know, retreating is a viable option.”

“Uhh, well, I don’t think that’s the right thing to do. But if it’s way out of what I can handle, I have no problem retreating right away. Is your support not enough this time?”

“Not at all.”

“Well, it’s decided then.”

Akira smiled wryly and started adjusting his breathing. Seeing that, Alpha also smiled wryly.

Akira had his attention to the front of him while repeatedly taking a deep breath. Slowly taking off the pressure from his tensed body. During that short break, Akira thought of something.

“By the way, how did they block my bullets? That thing is not forcefield armour, right?”

“That is a speed filter effect from the enhanced dust particle.”

The analysis of the colourless mist produced many kinds of results. One of them was its effect on high-speed objects. Certain particles would expand and create a stronger drag force proportional to the speed of the object going through them. So, people would use this effect to create an anti-bullet defence gas. It was often used by the escort team to protect important targets. The only downside was that the effect would only be realized when it was dense enough, so it was only usable inside an enclosed space.

After hearing that explanation, Akira pursed his lips.

“Which means that it could have stopped bullets the moment they left the barrel, no?”

“It would be bad for them as well if it gets that dense, so I bet they only spread enough particles so the effect would only come out when the bullets travel fast enough to form a dense enough barrier of air in front of them.”

“But they were throwing light blades too though?”

“Those were nothing more than light waves with cutting edge sharpness. They were not physical objects. Moreover, they were not as fast as the bullets, right?”

“…So, basically, they had no problem with that effect, huh?”

“I bet they’re the ones who spread the enhanced dust, so of course, they set it up to give them an advantage.”

Using something like that was basically meaningless when it was used out in the open. They would be only effective for a very short period of time. Not to mention, the amount of enhanced dust particles that they had to use, as a method to counter the opponent’s bullets, was quite inefficient.

But even so, attackers still sometimes chose this method when their aim was to capture rather than to kill their target. It was to reduce the chance of killing their target by mistake while at the same time, it also protected them from the escorts’ bullets. Basically, most of the people who use this method were skilled close-range fighters.

Since this method was often used by skilled close-range fighters in the eastern district that was ruled by guns, it must have been not easy to gather enough people who could fight effectively under such conditions. This meant that their target must be important enough for them to spare that effort and cost. This meant that their target was most likely either a top researcher or officer from the Corporate Government.

After listening to that explanation, Akira tilted his head.

“So why is Hikaru being targeted by these people? If I’m not mistaken, Hikaru is not someone that important, right?”

“Your guess is as good as mine. If she’s still around, we can just ask her later. Akira, it’s time to move again soon, this is your last chance to retreat, you know?”

Alpha was smiling challenging at Akira, He threw a sidelong glance and broke out a smile before he changed gear and went straight into his room.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 241, Reunion

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Erde flung open the door of the locker inside Akira's room. Because the door was only as tough as a cheap safe box, it did not stand a chance against his abnormal strength. Erde forced it open with brute force, bending it out of shape. It was no longer recognizable. His action seems to mock its electrical lock. Unfortunately for him, the inside was empty.

[…Another miss? Which one is the jackpot? Don't tell me that they leave this many lockers inside this big room just for this game of hide-and-seek?]

He inadvertently knitted his eyebrows and reached for the door of the next locker. When he used his might to open it, he was only greeted by disappointment. He slammed the bent door shut and kicked it, completely breaking the door. If there was someone inside that locker, they would have died. That was why Erde tried to be careful. He was afraid there was someone inside.

Their mission was to kidnap their target, if it was to kill, they would have blown the whole room together when they were blowing down its door. The reason why they spread the enhanced dust particle with a speed filter effect, was exactly so they would not kill their target by mistake.

When they entered the room, they saw the door of a large locker suddenly closed on its own. It was obvious that the door was closed remotely. But they spotted a skirt caught on the door and thought that their target must be hiding inside it, so they immediately forced it open.

If it was only for opening the locker, they could have just used the light blade, which could even easily slash through the thick armour of a powered suit. But it was a different matter when the goal was to keep their target alive. They had no other choice but to slowly open the locker door with a powered-down blade and their enchanted physical strength. That was why they took quite a long time to open the locker.

But strangely enough, there was no one inside. Instead, there was only a hanger with Hikaru's uniform dangling on it, it was put there deliberately so that a part of her skirt would get caught by the door.

It was a trick to buy time. Erde who understood that tore the uniform and frowned. The group then proceeded to search the room, but they quickly noticed that Akira was coming, so Erde told his men to welcome him while he would stay behind and search the room alone.

Erde broke the door to the bath and reached under the coloured water of the warm bath to check the water. Nothing. He proceeded to the toilet, still nothing. Pulled off the bed's bedding to see a pile of shredded pillows that was set such that it looked like someone hiding under the bedding. Still nothing. He spotted another locker with a gown peeking out. Initially, he thought that was another cheap trick to buy time. However, another thought sprang into mind. It might have deliberately been done to trick him into not checking that locker instead. Thus, he had no other choice but to check that locker. He cautiously broke open the door and checked the inside, again, nothing. The bed, the toilet, the bed, the locker, he kicked all of them after checking them.

Normally, they would have been able to use sensitive information gathering devices to scan the room. But they had focused more on jamming instead of searching. With the high jamming power of the enhanced particle dust, they could not differentiate the signals inside the room using their information-gathering device.

Even so, it should be easier to find their target when they just opened the door. But by the time he opened that large locker, the enhanced dust particles that they spread in the hallway had already seeped into the inside of the room.

[This is not good. We have spent too much time here. How long do I have until the battle outside ends and the other escorts notice us?]

And of course, the fact that he was searching alone meant that they could not search multiple places at the same time.

[…They still have not come back yet. It only means that they're facing a pretty strong opponent. The enhanced dust particles should limit the use of rifles, so even a small squad should give them no problem at all, but even so, they're taking a bit too long…]

Going out together with the three of them was not a good idea since the hallway was narrow. He knew that his men were not weak, that was why Erde thought that if he also went out, he would only get in their way. Moreover, his original plan was to let his men take care of the escort while he left the scene after he secured their target. Thinking that staying behind was better, Erde told his men to welcome Akira, but now, he believed that decision might have been a mistake.

Erde was not sure if it was a good idea to continue searching. But his trust in his men and his pride made him continue the search. After all, he was the one who left Akira to his men. Although, the search result was as futile as usual.

But even so, he continued searching with a stern look on his face. There were not many places left to search where his target might be hiding, but in the middle of his search, Erde suddenly stopped. He then looked at the large locker that he had first opened. Its door was broken and was still hanging half-open.

To mark the lockers that he had searched, Erde made sure to kick them and destroy them. But the large locker was stronger than the other lockers, so it was not completely broken.

Erde felt something was wrong with the door. He was pretty sure that he did not leave it like that.

“…Wait a second.”

Erde once again went to the large locker and pulled open the door. Finally, he found Hikaru only in her underwear, smiling sacredly at him.

Hikaru was hiding somewhere else at the beginning and went to hide in this large locker later, thinking that it was unlikely for Erde and his men to search the places that they had searched before. That line of thinking was not wrong, and it allowed her to buy a lot of time.

Erde politely smiled.

“So you’re here. We’ve been looking for you. Now, we need to evacuate. I’ll take you to a safe place.”

Hikaru replied, still with her scared smile.

“I-I’m sure I’m in an already quite safe place at the moment.”

“Please don’t worry, we have even a safer place ready. Let’s go. Come with me.”

Erde’s smile vanished, his hand extended and reached for Hikaru’s neck.

“Stop fighting back. I want to bring you back unharmed if it’s possible. That being said, I don’t mind breaking your neck if it’s needed. But don’t worry, we’ll connect you to a life support system, so you won’t die. Got it?”

“O-Okay.”

Erde still had his hand on Hikaru’s neck as he turned toward the hallway and shouted.

“The target is secured! We’re leaving now!!”

Now he just needed to regroup with his men and leave the premises. If his men were in no position to regroup, he was planning to run away alone. In order to confirm that, Erde scanned the hallway. That was when he noticed a signal blazing in the room's direction. He thought that it was from his men, so he decided to just wait. Someone then jumped into the room.

But that was not his men, it was Akira.

Akira had the rifles on both his hands fixed in Erder's direction. Erde reacted by putting Hikaru in front of him. In a split second that was extended into eternity from the adrenaline, Akira and Erde were locking gazes, trying to probe how the other would react. Erde was the first to make a move.

[This guy! He's going to shoot for real!!]

Erde quickly stepped in front of Hikaru and released a kick toward Akira. Although Akira was obviously outside that kick's reach, Alpha still controlled his augmented suit to evade that kick.

After Erde released his kick, there was a short pause, Akira was then blown back as if he had received an invisible attack. However, since he had enough time to reposition himself, the damage was suppressed. Though, it still threw him off balance.

Erde used that opening to push Hikaru back into the large locker, closed the door, and kicked it. This caused Hikaru to be locked inside the locker. Because of that kick, the door was severely bent and stuck, closed. Hikaru alone did not have the power to open it from the inside. The large locker that she had used to hide herself had turned into a cell to trap her in.

Akira stood back up and Erde once again turned toward Akira. Both of them had a stern look on their faces.

"Alpha, what was that? It was from that guy's kick, right?"

It was still understandable for the knife that was extending out a light blade back in the hallway. But that kick just now completely left no traceable method of reaching him. He was certain that kick did not make physical contact with him. It was clear that he received a shock wave a moment after Erde finished executing his kick.

“Yep, it was from his kick, he used the speed filter effect to propagate that shock wave.”

“The heck is that?”

“He kicked in such a way that created a dense layer of air, which activated the speed filter effect. He then directed that dense layer of air and increased its drag force even further to send a shock wave.”

“Seriously, just what the heck was that attack? Is it normal to do this further to the east? There was a huge flying monster that looked like a floating island. Cannon that was as large as a building sticking down towards us, huge-monster swarms. I have two rifles with me and I’m still having trouble against people with knives. Now, a guy that can kick from afar shows up. Just because we’re further to the east, isn’t all this just a bit too crazy? If it’s already this bad here, I can’t imagine how bad it is in the east’s frontline.”

“Well, one thing that I can say, it’s just out of this world. We’re talking about an area that’s filled with old-world technology after all.”

“Alright then. Let’s never go any further to the east of Kugamayama city ever again.”

“It’s fine for me too, but first, we need to survive this place, right?”

“I know.”

That exchange happened in a split second since it happened through telepathy, but even in the middle of that, Akira was eyeing an opening from Erde. Erde tried to guess what Akira was thinking since he was only standing in silence. Although it was only for a few seconds, both of them understood that even the slightest opening would be fatal.

Erde’s gaze turned sharp, there was a clear rage behind it.

“You’re that girl’s escort, right? Are you seriously thinking that it’s better to get her killed rather than letting me abduct her? That’s so typical of someone from the Corporate Government. Don’t you think there’s anything wrong with that line of thinking?”

Akira did not reply, Erde interpreted that silence as an answer as his expression turned to disgust.

“Humph, no response, huh? I guess it’s thanks to your education as an agent. Reborn to a loyal dog and used like an object under your corporate overlords just to die like an expendable article. Without any complaint at all. You guys are really messed up in the head.”

Although Akira already noticed that Erde was having a huge misunderstanding, he still did not reply.

“Since you’re here, it means that you defeated my men, huh? I’m Erde, what’s your name?”

Akira still did not answer, Erde’s disgust toward Akira grew stronger.

“Humph, still nothing, huh? Or is it that you don’t have a name? I guess the most that an object can have to identify itself is its product code, huh? Born as a human, educated to live like an object under the Corporate Government, and then die like an expendable item. How pitiful.”

Even after that, Akira still did not say anything. Erde finally stopped trying to have a conversation with him.

“My men died under my command. So I was planning to at least present your name to avenge their death, but no name, huh? Well, at least I’ll balance their bad luck with your death.”

Erde’s expression turned solemn, he had completely changed gears. But before he made a move, Akira suddenly said.

“Akira.”

Erde raised his eyebrows, but Akira did not say anything any further.

“…I see, those two are Torpa and Salza. Feel free to carry those names to the afterlife.”

In a time-constrained mission, to use a precious second to ask the name of his opponent was unnecessary. Nonetheless, Erde still chose to spend that much time because of his respect toward his men. Thus, Akira gave the least-needed respect toward a man who showed respect to his deceased comrades.

In the next instant, both their expressions turned solemn. There was no longer even a trace of disgust or hatred on their faces, what was left was only the wish to accomplish their respective mission. In short, the death of their respective opponent. Instead of keeping distance, both of them leapt forward, challenging the other to a close-range fight with a mix of rifles and fists. Both wanted to end the fight in the shortest time possible. For Erde, it was for the sake of his mission, while for Akira, it was because of the limited energy in his augmented suit and the narrowing time where he could continue to compress his time perception.

Bullets filled the room in the next instant, just like usual. The speed filter caused them to suddenly lose momentum and fall down to the ground. That speed filter became a medium to propagate shock waves from Erde’s kicks. They were jumping around inside the room during the high-speed fight while destroying the places where they could safely step. Just under a few seconds, floor, ceiling, wall, furniture, everything inside the room was wrecked as if they were devoured by a storm.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Inside the command centre of the transport convoy, everyone finally breathed a sigh of relief since the battle outside had finally calmed down. So, they proceeded to assess the damage on each transport vehicle. But after the death report for the Hunters reached them, their calmed faces turned cloudy.

The commander sighed.

“…To be honest, I want to celebrate since we’ve survived that ordeal, but there’s nothing to be happy about with this situation. Continue the emergency alert and keep the SOS signal up. There’s no report from numbers 6 and 8, what’s going on there?”

“We still can’t reach them. We are still working on it.”

“Send someone to directly check on them, we at least can do that much, right?”

“We’ve already sent someone. But they haven’t come back yet. I believe that it’s because the transport vehicle went into lockdown, so we might need some time to reopen it.”

“I see. Either way, tell them to hurry up. Ask the other Hunters to help as well. I’m sure they can at least go to check those two transport vehicles.”

“Roger that!”

They quickly broadcast the order and collected all the information that they could get, but even so, they still had no report coming from transport vehicles 6 and 8. The commander frowned.

“What’s the progress with numbers 6 and 8? It’s taking too long. Tell them there’s no need for a detailed report, an overview is enough.”

The staff conveyed that to the Hunters. After hearing the reply, the commander tensed up. The report basically said that the Hunters who went to check had not returned. Even after sending several people a few times, no one returned. Even the Hunters started to notice something fishy was going on, that was right when they asked what was their next plan.

The commander made his decision, he had a worried look as he gave his order.

“Tell the Hunters to secure transport numbers 6 and 8!”

“S-secure?”

“Yes! Tell them that it’s okay to even damage the transport vehicle! But make sure to keep the damages within the limit! Get numbers 6 and 8 under our control immediately!!”

“Do you mean that someone took control of those two transport vehicles?!!”

“Yes!! Tell them to make their move with that assumption in mind!! It’s fine even if it’s an unnecessary worry! Get them to move out as soon as possible!!”

In that situation where it was just a guess, worry started to ripple inside the command centre. Everyone wanted that guess to be wrong, but unfortunately, they were not mistaken.

———*—

Erde’s kick landed on the ceiling. The decorative layer of the ceiling cracked to pieces and peeled off, exposing the inner part of the ceiling. Akira who was there a moment ago jumped backwards with his head still pointing at the floor, both of his rifles aimed at Erde. His distance to Erde was closer to when the speed filter would take effect. Thus, getting shot from this distance was fatal.

But no bullets touched Erde. All of them flew past beside him. The shock wave from the kick threw Akira’s aim off target.

Erde quickly closed the gap, Akira kicked the ceiling and returned back to the floor. The moment he landed, he kicked straight up and was met by Erde’s kick straight down.

As their kicks made contact, the shock wave shook the room. Due to his augmented suit, Akira’s footing was reinforced with forcefield armour, but even so, it still left a huge crack and completely shattered the floor.

Akira immediately retracted his leg and exchanged it with rifle muzzles. Erde did the same but exchanged his leg with fists. The shockwave from the fist hit the muzzles. Although it did no damage due to the muzzles being protected by forcefield armour, it was enough to throw Akira off target again.

Erde slightly shook Akira's aim, causing an opening in his barrage of bullets. While at the same time, he created a forcefield armour platform in the air to propel himself to the side, using the opening on the barrage to get away from Akira.

After that, neither of them tried for a second attack. Akira and Erde just stood facing each other in silence.

Akira had an extremely stern look on his face. He had his rifles pointing downward, although that was purely by chance, he did not point them to the Erde because he had no wish to escalate the situation at the moment.

"…Alpha, how's my leg?"

"The augmented suit is still okay. It is still fully functional. But that kick shaved quite a lot of energy since I had to increase the forcefield armour output past its limit."

"…How about my body?"

"Aren't you glad that you took quite a lot of medicine beforehand?"

Although Akira could not see it, he knew that the inside of his legs was badly damaged. The expensive medicines that he took helped him to fix those injuries as fast as possible. But even so, he did not want to even make a move immediately if it was possible. The backlash from the third reality manipulation was severe, the fatigue assaulted his brain in the form of an excruciating headache. At the moment, he tried to lighten the effect by focusing it only around where Erde was.

"This is harder than fighting those two. Seriously! Why are these guys aiming for Hikaru?"

"If he was in that fight, you would have been dead by now. It's at least one good thing among all the bad things that you faced today, right?"

“Just why in the world does my luck only give me the least to survive situations like this…? It won’t be strange if I at least have some more, no?”

“How about retreating to buy some extra time? If you still have some luck, you might still be able to return back safely.”

Akira smiled wryly in reaction to that suggestion. The moment he opened his mouth, his opponent might take that chance to attack him. But even so, he still said something to Erde.

“Say, what is the chance of you letting me go?”

Erde’s stern face coloured with a tinge of confusion.

“That was out of the blue, why be sheepish now?”

“It’s not like I have any personal grudge against you. When I accepted my mission, no one told me that I would be fighting someone this strong. So, I just thought that running away from you won’t mean that I’m breaking my mission so it should be alright.”

“…Thank you for the very tempting suggestion, but I’m afraid I cannot accept that. You already killed two of my men, it’s too late to retreat now.”

“Well, it can’t be helped then.”

“Yeah, indeed.”

After a short pause, it was Erde’s turn to make a suggestion.

“Let me make an offer this time, won’t you leave? If this fight is not in your job description and you think it isn’t worth the trouble, you can just retreat. Though it might violate your mission, I think it’s better to just accept that loss, isn’t that just how Corporate Government works?”

“Hmm, unfortunately, that’s not a choice for me…”

“Why? Judging from your reply, you don’t think this is worth the trouble, no?”

“I’m here because she asked me to help, I would hate myself if I retreat just because I found out the opponent is too strong.”

He felt that doing something like that would exhaust whatever little luck that he had left. Akira of course could not say that. So Erde, who took that as a simple matter of feeling, tilted his head, showing that he could not understand Akira.

“But you were just about to shoot her, no?”

“I did, but I would make sure to miss my shots, even if they hit, they would not be fatal. I also still have some medicine left. The moment you used her as a shield, she’s equivalent to being dead already. It’s the negotiator’s job to find a way to save her in that situation and I’m not a negotiator.”

“I see. So basically, although you’re strict in deciding that it was too late, it was not like you did not have the wish to save her, huh?”

After another pause, Akira broke the silence.

“So then, why are you guys targeting Hikaru? Although it might be weird to hear this from me, I think she’s not that important of a person for you to go this far.”

“Let me ask you this instead. If she’s not that important, then why are you escorting her?”

“My job is not to escort her, it’s to escort the transport convoy. I’m just helping her on the side of my job.”

“Do you really think I would believe that?”

“Even if you say that. In that case, what makes you so sure that she’s that important?”

“Simple, it’s because she’s an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry.”

Akira raised his eyebrows in surprise. Because he himself was someone who could connect to the old-world domain, there was a tint of another emotion mixed in his surprised face. Erde who saw that was sure that his guess was correct.

“So it was correct, huh? I’m glad that we did break the group into smaller teams.”

Akira raised his voice so that it reached Hikaru that was locked inside the huge locker.

“Hikaru! I don’t know what’s going on here, but it seems that this is a huge misunderstanding! Do you have any idea how to clear up this misunderstanding?! Or is it that you’re actually an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry!?”

Hikaru, who heard that from inside the locker, was greatly surprised. She then shouted back from inside the locker.

“How the heck did they end up thinking I’m an old-world connector!?”

“Like hell if I know! That guy is telling me so!”

Hikaru was so confused, but she finally understood what was going on. If they were here to kidnap an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry, then it was not strange for them to cause such chaos. At the same time, she got even more panicked. She had no idea how to convince the attackers that it was a huge misunderstanding.

On the other hand, it might be counter-effective if she ended up convincing Erde that it was a misunderstanding. Up until now, the attackers were holding back in order to kidnap her. If she was able to convince them, then they would not have any more reasons to hold back. When that happens, they might as well blow up this whole transport vehicle. Hikaru was stuck in between a rock and a hard place.

“A-Akira! I don’t know what’s going on but do your best! I’m counting on you!”

“Good grief, don’t be crazy…”

Akira smiled wryly. Judging from that reply, one thing that Akira could catch was that trying to convince Erde was not an option. Erde chuckled and said.

“There’s no need to stay behind if you can’t get along with your superior’s crazy antics, you know? Like I said before, you can just retreat. If you really didn’t know that she’s an old-world connector, then this mission is way too dangerous for you. I’m sure you won’t get penalized.”

Hikaru, who was listening from the locker, shivered.

“Wait! Don’t leave me! Please! Help me! I’ll do anything!”

“…You better make sure I get a suitable reward, alright?”

“O-Of course!”

Akira then lightly smiled at Erde.

“Well, it seems that this will be worth the trouble.”

Erde lightly chuckled.

“Is that so? As far as I know, as long as you can’t take that reward to the afterlife, it won’t be worth the trouble though.”

“Don’t worry, I’ll make sure to spend it in this world.”

“Hm, that would be impossible for you, unfortunately.”

Both of them smiled confidently at each other as both sides thought that the time for talk was coming to a close.

That exchange of words was nothing more than for buying time for Akira’s leg to heal up and his brain to recover. Erde also used that time to rest his body for a bit. That clash of their kicks was equally damaging to both. If the opponent did not move, they would prefer to wait until their body healed up. As both of them mutually agreed on this, they took their time for silly banter. After all, it was equally a preferable move for both of them to heal up their legs.

But as the more time they wasted, the scale was slowly tipping toward Akira's side. The enhanced dust particle was slowly dispersing with time, lowering the effect of the speed filter, which increased the range of Akira's bullets. At the same time, it also made it more difficult for Erde to execute his long-range kick.

To top it off, Erde's mission had a time limit. He had to kidnap his target before the escort team could find him. If the escort team also joined the fight, Akira would undoubtedly win the fight. So, the longer he waited, the better Akira's chance would get.

Before the time was stretched too thin, Erde decided to make the first move. Akira knew that would happen. His smile vanished; his gaze turned sharp. He had to finish the fight as soon as possible in the next confrontation, and he resolved himself to end it with the death of his opponent. His intense focus made time feel like it was expanded.

In the middle of that, Alpha then said with a stern face.

"Akira. It seems that he's planning to use his trump card."

"Yeah. I bet so."

"According to my calculation, you'll lose the next exchange."

"It's not like I can do anything about it even if you tell me that now."

Akira lightly smiled, Alpha then put her face close to Akira.

"That's not the point. But it's also true that you'll be dead at this rate. That's why, with that information, is it okay to do an equally dangerous thing to get out of this predicament? I need your permission here."

Akira was a bit confused.

“You know what? You should have told me that sooner.”

But Alpha replied with a serious tone.

“Just like last time, I didn’t have the permission to ask for your permission before. I can only do that because we’re in this situation right now.”

“I see, it’s about that pain-in-the-neck permission thingy, huh.”

“Let me remind you that my position is that of your requester. My support is upfront payment for your reward, that’s why I won’t deliberately put you in unnecessary danger. That’s why I want you to trust me and give me your permission.”

Akira replied instantly.

“Come on now, isn’t that a little bit too late for that? I don’t know what you’re planning to do, but I don’t want to die. So just do it.”

Alpha smiled happily, then her expression turned neutral.

“Due to the emergency situation, in order to give better support for the subject Akira, requesting permission to per-recognition information processing as well as thought intervene-”

“I allow it.”

With the permission already formally given, Alpha’s expression returned to normal. She was smiling happily with confidence toward Akira.

“Thank you. As long as you have my support, everything will be fine.”

“I’m really counting on you for this one. A guy that strong is coming at me so desperately, please do something about it.”

“Just leave it to me. But this will put your body under immense stress, so make sure you’re ready.”

“Alright, taking care of that part is my job after all.”

Akira and Alpha exchanged a smile. That smile also represented the re-establishment of their connection, which was once cut by the jamming back in Kuzusuhara ruin.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 242, Super Human

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Both Erde and Akira noticed that something had changed inside their respective opponent. The aura seeping off from the other person gave a sense of an unknown. It was as if everything that they had learned during their last exchange was all meaningless. It was as if they were challenging each other, two skilled fighters, into melee combat without any prior information. Even so, they were not as sheepish enough to show hesitation. As a matter of fact, both thought that they might use that situation for their benefit.

In the next moment, Erde made his move. With the speed that was way above what he showed up till now, he closed his distance to Akira as if he was a bullet. The force from propelling his body cracked the floor, but even before the cracked pieces that he sent flying by his sprint could reach the wall and ceiling, he had closed his distance to Akira. They were now within arm's reach. Using the forward momentum, he threw out a straight at the same time.

Due to his speed, the fist activated the speed filter effect. If it was a bullet, it would have lost its momentum and fallen to the ground. But unlike a bullet, that fist was backed by superhuman strength. As that fist broke through the invisible walls with pure brute force, it sent shock waves in all directions as if it was a warhead shot by a powered suit.

Receiving that fist would be fatal, even the shock waves alone could easily crush rubble. Akira barely evaded that fist and used the forcefield armour of his augmented suit. It was concentrated to the side of that fist. This was done by Alpha to dampen the shock wave. At the same time, the output of Akira's augmented suit was increased to its utmost limit to launch a counterattack.

Akira's fist connected with Erde. Even for Erde, evading a quick counter right after his own attack while leaping forward with that speed was impossible. However, evading was not a choice. He could only defend against that attack. Erde received that fist with his arm in order to avoid the full brunt of that fist. The damage was minimal, and he was not blown back. As a matter of fact, the kickback from that punch created a huge crack on the floor under Akira's foot. It showed the difference in their physical strength.

That was when Erde noticed something strange.

[…Fist?]

Akira's LEO multi-rifles were nowhere to be found although they were on his hands in the last exchange and before this confrontation. Akira had pulled out his fist and moved to throw another punch. Seeing that, Erde instantly knew that his attack would reach Akira first, but the moment he shifted his stance to strike Akira, an ominous feeling assaulted him, he immediately jumped back.

At the same time Erde retreated, Akira threw both of his rifles upward. The 2 LEO multi-rifles rotated freely in the air. With the help of their advanced kickback compensator system and aiming system, they stabilized themselves in mid-air even without anyone holding onto them. Right after that, both released the C bullets that have been charged full of energy during the idle conversation from before.

But Erde perfectly avoided the hailstorm of bullets from above him. The bullets flew straight to the floor and sent pieces of it flying around. Eventually, the rifles hit the limit and were unable to stabilize themselves as they started shooting indiscriminately. Since that move was done due to a pre-set setting instead of long-range control, Akira had to reach for them again in order to stop them. And that was exactly what Akira did.

Before Akira could reach for his rifles, Erde released two punches from afar. The shock wave propagated through the air. But Akira quickly jumped sideways. Since he was not able to retrieve his rifles before that, only the rifles were blown away from the long-range punches.

Erde immediately released a series of punches. The punches ignored their physical reach and propagated through the air. But Akira who was running through the room evaded all of them. The distance between Erde and Akira grew further.

[He even evaded this too, huh!? Wait, no, I guess it's only to be expected if it's against an escort for an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry? That augmented suit is either a custom-tuned augmented suit or a completely different augmented suit but with a fake appearance. I've seen that augmented suit in the catalogue before, it should not be able to produce that much output with its spec. And a normal human body would not be able to withstand that kickback as well. In the first place, what he did was not something even a Rank 50 Hunter could do. As I thought. He must be an agent from the city disguising as a normal Hunter so that no one would notice that he is escorting an old-world connector.]

Erde's guess was partially correct. Akira's equipment was further enhanced due to Alpha's upgrades. Moreover, its original software which prioritized safety had also been rewritten. The LEO rifles' firepower was increased to its breaking point. The augmented suit was moving so fast that it was breaking down Akira's body. With the safety feature tossed aside in exchange for power, even the slightest mistake would kill its user.

Akira's augmented suit was not moving along with his will. Instead, he was trying his best to match its movement so that his limbs would not be torn off. Since the augmented suit was originally performant, with its safety restriction off, Akira was not able to keep up with it. Normally, his limbs should have already torn off by now.

It was the same for the attacks from Erde. Under normal circumstances, Akira would not have been able to evade them. Although the shock waves from the punches were slower than bullets, they were far more difficult to evade. Bullets only flew in the direction of the muzzle. Akira could get a rough estimation of where that muzzle was pointing at and that helped him in determining the projectile of the bullets. However, that was not the case for Erde's punches. Furthermore, there was no guarantee that the shock wave would propagate in a straight line. The shock wave propagated depending on the way he launched his attack. He could manipulate such a phenomenon thanks to his superior skill. If Akira had not granted permission to Alpha, he would have been hit by those shockwaves.

The exchange between attacks and evasions inside his compressed time perception was extremely intense. One small misstep guaranteed death. It was completely out of what Akira could handle, so he asked for Alpha's help. But the backlash was in no way light.

Akira wafted in between the shock waves from Erde's punches, trying to survive against Erde, who had superhuman physical strength and skill. The only reason why Akira could withstand the assault was thanks to Alpha.

At the moment, Alpha was not only controlling Akira's augmented suit but also his body. She inserted herself in Akira's mind to do the detailed adjustments to his movements. Thanks to that, his augmented suit could move around as if it was trying to kill its user.

Akira had gone through harsh training before. Training so harsh that it made others misunderstand him, believing he was trying to be superhuman. Now that Alpha was actively adjusting his movements as well, he had become even stronger. Strong enough to fight against an actual superhuman.

Akira noticed that his body was moving much better than before. He was not surprised by that, as a matter of fact, he was more surprised by the fact that Erde was still fending off his attacks.

“This guy is really strong! This is just crazy!”

“I bet it’s from some kind of trump card. Personally speaking, I didn’t expect his trump card to boost his fighting power by this much.”

“You didn’t expect that?! Alpha, are we really going to be okay?”

“Of course. Akira, if you have the time to complain, it’s better to use that leeway to focus on the fight, you know? You still have a long way to go, seeing that things make you waver when you know that it doesn’t work right away.”

“I know, I know!”

Exchanging words like that in the middle of an intense battle helped Akira to regain some calmness. That helped boost his chance of winning. His mental state was built from a world where life and death battles were normal. It had turned into strength to help him survive. While he was dodging the shock waves, Akira readied his AF anti-material cannon.

Akira understood that it was not a weapon to be used in a closed space. In the worst-case scenario, it might even destroy the transport vehicle, which he would have to pay for later. Even so, he did not hesitate as he pulled the trigger.

A blinding ray of light engulfed the room and struck Erde. However, that pillar of light was deflected by his right hand. It drilled a hole through the ceiling. This outcome was something Akira did not expect at all.

“You got to be kidding me!? He even blocked that too!? Even the white powered suits outside could not block that, you know!?”

“Unfortunately, the enhanced dust particle significantly lowered its firepower. If it was under normal circumstances, that would have killed him.”

“Give me a break already. Alpha, what’s the plan? I have nothing stronger than this cannon.”

“Don’t worry. It’s not like he was able to fully block it. Although it was not enough to kill him right away, it did damage his arm. Look. He hasn’t moved from that place, right?”

Akira knitted his eyebrows and looked at Erde. It was true that Erde’s stance had not changed. He remained unmoving from when he blocked the annihilating light with his right hand. He had a stern look on his face, but he did not seem to be wavering and his right hand seemed completely undamaged.

“To be honest, it’s not all that great to hear that I was finally able to stop him in place for just a moment with that attack, you know? Also, he doesn’t seem injured at all!”

“That’s not true. Anyways, here he comes.”

Erde shifted his stance, his right hand fell limply down. He then started throwing punches again but this time, only with his left arm.

Akira jumped sideways to avoid the incoming shock wave. Moreover, this time, it was Akira who took the initiative to close the distance. He slipped through the repeating shock wave from the only arm swinging. In the meantime, he used his dual LEO multi-rifles to shoot at Erde. The bullets and the shockwave collided and ricocheted inside the room.

Erde’s face twitched.

[We’re evenly matched even in this situation!? Sakashita Heavy Industry has an excellent escort!]

Erde was an enhanced human. Although he did not replace his body parts with mechanical parts like cyborgs, he used nanomachines to enhance his cells to the level of those cyborgs. His physical strength is already well within the realm of beings considered to be superhuman. And with the help of forcefield armour technology, he could easily rip through powered suits and tanks with only just his body. That was also the reason why he was able to block Akira’s AF anti-material cannon.

To top it off, he used all of his trump cards. By sacrificing the cells that were assimilated with the nanomachines, he was able to boost his physical strength even further past his limit. In exchange for that boost, he was only able to keep that up for at most 5 minutes. In short, after that, he would have completely sacrificed his own body and died.

Using this even for 10 seconds was enough to put his body under intense stress. His physical strength would diminish greatly afterwards. The reason why he used his trump card even knowing the risks involved was because he recognised Akira's skill. At the same time, it was also because he thought that it would be enough to kill Akira right away.

His guess was wrong. Erde was surprised at how powerful Akira was since he thought that Akira had run out of trump cards. Akira suddenly moved like a completely different person. If Akira fought like how he did during their initial exchange, he would not even have had the chance to use his AF anti-material cannon.

[Dammit! I misjudged the time to use my trump card! But I can't afford to lose here!]

In such a short span of time, both sides rampaged around with their superhuman strength. The room could not contain their rampage and was turned into a mess. The decorations on the floor and on the ceiling were all destroyed and the frames of the transport vehicle were in full view.

A part of the room was filled with the holes from Akira's C bullets. To top it off, Erde's kicks and punches left craters within the room. The transport vehicle was already greatly damaged because of their battle. A battle between these 2 people started to cause the chassis of the transport vehicle to bend outwards.

The overwhelming forcefrom Erde's attacks was enough to bend the isolation room out of its original shape. Akira managed to survive that battle using technical skills.

Erde's technical skill was in no way inferior. He was a skilled close-range fighter with superhuman strength. The combination of his power and skill was enough to ensure victory against multiple powered suits in close combat. The only thing one could criticize him for his skill was that he was more used to fighting in his normal state rather than his current enhanced state.

Naturally, Alpha did not let that side, she used the opening caused by that unfamiliarity and allowed Akira to withstand the battle despite his disadvantage.

The expensive medicine that Akira had been excessively using ever since he started working as a Hunter, was pumped full of old-world healing technology. Especially the one that he had taken from the Kuzusuhara ruin. It was medicine made by old-world doctors. That caused all his injuries up until now to heal under old-world standards. Compared to the current world's standard that was filled with holes, the old-world standard could be considered as a full-body renovation. Thanks to that, Akira was turned into a superhuman, bit by bit.

That was also the reason why Alpha did not recommend Akira sell those medicines to get better equipment during the beginning of his career. She decided that using them was more beneficial in the long run compared to just selling them for equipment.

Moreover, even after obtaining a strengthened body, he also spent his days under gruelling training. The augmented suits that he used were always set to ignore the safety limit. They were always pushed to the point where it was just enough not to get him killed, allowing its output to be increased to its utmost limit. This further pushed Akira's strength into the area of the superhuman.

But even so, that alone was still not enough against Erde. It was only with the conscious intervention permission that Akira gave to Alpha, that he was able to execute techniques that no normal human could do. It allowed Akira to acquire superhuman skills on top of his superhuman strength. He barely managed to hold out against Erde using the power that he was not used to.

Unfortunately, even after going that far, it was still not enough. Erde, who was getting more familiar with his enhanced strength bit by bit during the battle, tilted the scale little by little. Eventually, his chance came. Erde's intense kick threw Akira's rifles off his hands.

Erde saw that as an opportunity, and he quickly closed the distance between them. The 2 LEO rifles that were thrown out of Akira's hand spun and went behind him. But they suddenly stopped and fixed their aims toward Erde's back.

Erde had fully expected that to happen.

[Knew it! He did that deliberately! He's trying to force me to evade the shots!]

Erde believed that Akira was planning to use his AF anti-material cannon once he attempted to evade it. This time, Akira would be shooting from a closer distance. Even so, Erde made his resolve and pushed forward.

As he predicted, the LEO rifles behind him released shots. Erde blocked the bullets using the projecting forcefield armour on his back. Meanwhile, from the front, he could see Akira preparing his AF anti-material cannon. However, Erde did not show any signs of evading. Instead, he leapt forward, not giving Akira enough time to fix his aim.

Out of his expectation, even before Akira was able to lock his aim, he had already pulled down the trigger. He released a ray of light from his AF anti-material cannon. Although it was unable to get a straight hit, it was still better than nothing. Moreover, it should be enough to stop his opponent in their tracks. In the middle of a high-speed battle where even blinking was fatal, in a situation when it was possible to see the opponent's rifle, veterans tend to get away from the muzzle by pure reflex.

But Erde had also expected that as well. He focused his forcefield armour to his left hand, completely identified where the AF anti-material cannon was aiming and released a punch that blocked that beam of annihilation and aimed at Akira at the same time.

The punch was packed with the power of a superhuman. It deflected the beam and pushed forward with enough power that could easily destroy even powered suits.

In the middle of that do-or-die intense exchange, Erde was surprised. That beam felt abnormally light. In order to break through the AF anti-material cannon's attack and deal a killing blow to Akira, Erde continued to push his fist with everything he had. However, because the resistance was far lighter than he had assumed, he got a little off balance.

Right at the next moment, Erde's attack completely destroyed Akira's AF anti-material cannon. Rather than breaking through the forcefield armour protecting the barrel of the cannon, the shock wave threw the cannon off Akira's hand, peeled it off from his augmented suit, and blew it back.

At the same time, Akira evaded Erde's punch and stepped forward. He readied his stance and drove a straight punch toward Erde. It was a beautifully executed punch thanks to Alpha's support. At that moment, Akira did not have a strike stronger than this.

Even so, that attack should not have been enough to break through Erde's defences. Unfortunately for Erde, the forcefield armour that he projected behind his back to defend himself from the bullets and his left hand to deflect the AF anti-material cannon caused the forcefield armour in other places to be thinner than usual. To top it off, he was still moving forward thanks to momentum. His momentum would have been lost if the shot that he deflected back then was the normal AF anti-material cannon's output.

In truth, Akira had already run out of AF anti-material ammo. That ray of light was nothing more than dense light created using leftover energy.

But that was the key that granted Akira victory, allowing him to slip through Erde's attack and hit him with a counter punch.

Akira was the first to fall, he had squeezed everything he had. The backlash caused his knees to buckle. He first leaned forward, kneeled, and then fell forward.

As Akira was lying on the ground, his eyes were fixed on Erde, who was still standing there. Finally, Erde smiled and congratulated him.

“…Well done.”

Akira could see from his back that there was a large hole that went through Erde’s chest. It was a hole created by Akira’s punch. Erde’s smile was one that was filled with appreciation toward Akira, which also had a tinge of remorse.

“…Torpa… Salza…Forgive me, I lost…”

Erde could only use his final words to plead for forgiveness before he crashed onto the ground and remained motionless.

Akira was still vigilant. He managed to push himself up and checked on Erde. That was when Alpha spoke to him.

“Akira, it’s okay. We won.”

“…With only that injury?”

Even after he was declared victorious, Akira still had a stern look on his face. Although Erde had a hole in his body, he still had his head and four limbs. So, it did not feel like he had won.

After all, there were people who could still laugh only with a head left. There were also people who still could fight without a head. Akira had already experienced both situations, so he was still doubtful that he had won.

Alpha once again said.

“Don’t worry, he’s dead. Or at least, he’s in no condition to continue fighting.”

“…Is that so?”

Akira understood that at least Erde no longer posed any threat to him. But he still looked tense. He tried to stand up but tripped over. Therefore, he decided to crawl to pick up his LEO multi rifles.

“…Alpha, how’s the situation?”

“There is no enemy signal in the area.”

“…I guess that’s it for now, huh…”

After that, Akira managed to return to where Hikaru was locked and lightly knocked on the door.

“Hikaru, are you still alive?”

Even Hikaru, who was locked inside the large strong locker, could feel the room tremble, and hear the sound of the intense battle outside. It was easy to imagine just how damaged the room was. It greatly frightened her but she then somehow managed to return a reply.

“Y-Yeah, somehow. H-how is it over there?”

“Well…”

Akira looked around the room. It looked as if a swarm of monsters just rampaged here.

“…Anyway, those 3 guys that were trying to kidnap you are already dead. Though, I don’t know if there are more out there or not. I’m sorry, but I’m already at my limit. If another one comes, I don’t think I can fight anymore.”

Alpha suddenly interjected.

“Akira, don’t move, it’s dangerous.”

“More enemies?”

“No, but it’s still dangerous.”

Alpha pointed toward the ceiling. Right at that moment, a huge finger broke through the ceiling followed by another finger, they grabbed the ceiling and tore it off. Akira squinted his eyes on the scene of the sky that was laid in front of him. At the same time, the powered suit that owned those fingers showed itself. It was Tatsukawa.

An amused voice could be heard from the powered suit's speaker.

"Oh, it's already over, huh… Hm? You're… Akira, right? So, it was you, huh?"

Akira was really surprised.

"Whoah there, what the heck are you doing?"

"I detected someone fighting intensely inside the room, so I decided to check it. The escort team said that it was fine to damage the transport vehicle if it's only little and since I thought that it was too much work to walk around, I was thinking of joining the fight with my powered suit."

"I-I see."

Akira's surprised face was mixed with exasperation.

The ripped-off ceiling allowed the enhanced dust particle to quickly disperse, lowering its density in a short time. Thanks to that, the jamming also weakened. Hikaru, who noticed that, immediately contacted the escort team and shouted.

"Akira! The connection is back! We need to call for help…"

"Ah, yes, it's already here."

"Eh?"

Tatsukawa's voice echoed.

"Is there someone inside that locker? If you can't open the door, I can help you."

"Ah, yes, please."

Akira knew that he had exhausted the energy pack for his augmented suit, so he just stepped aside so as to not get in the way. The powered suit then reached for the locker's door and ripped it off.

Hikaru, who was only in her underwear, was finally let out. She stood frozen from the scene in front of her, but Tatsukawa's apologetic voice pulled her back to reality.

"Whoops, sorry."

Hikaru turned to Akira. Akira did not say anything and just turned around.

Inside the half-destroyed room, Hikaru shrieked and tried to find something to hide her skin.

The battle between Akira and Erde plus Tatsukawa, who ripped off a part of the room, caused considerable damage to the transport vehicle. However, considering that it was because there were some people who were aiming to kidnap an old-world connector from Sakashta Heavy Industry, the damage was considered to only be superficial. That was because the squad sent to kidnap Hikaru was a relatively small squad.

In reality, Erde and his team thought that Hikaru was only a decoy. But they did not expect Akira to be that strong, because of that, they thought that Hikaru was really an old-world connector. They originally planned to just kidnap her and check if she was really an old-world connector before bringing her to the main squad.

Meanwhile, the main squad was aiming for the one that they thought to be the real one. Shirou was in the transport truck number 8. Just like Akira, Shirou's room was also an isolation room, as matter of fact, his room was built to be even sturdier. That room was also located deep in the middle of the transport vehicle. At the moment, the area around that isolation room was completely destroyed, leaving only the isolation room intact. It was as if the isolation room was thrown from the sky to the top of a pile of rubble.

Hammerz, who just finished his job, was standing in the middle of that rubble and sighed.

“…Good grief. In the end, I’m the only one who had to work hard, huh?”

The area was littered with dead corpses. It was the main squad from Erde’s team. Many of them were enhanced superhumans like Erde. Some of them were even armed with heavy armour. But Hammerz, Shirou’s only bodyguard, took all of them out all by himself.

Superhuman — Hammerz demonstrated the true meaning behind that word.

Although the special armour on his back was badly damaged, Hammerz himself had only light injuries, he could just replace his armour later. He did not seem like someone who was responsible for that carnage. Although he looked tired, he was still standing straight. There also was no sign of fatigue from an intense battle.

Hammerz banged the door to the isolation room and Shirou replied from inside.

“Oh, are you done?”

Shirou said so casually, due to the fatigue, it really annoyed Hammerz.

“Don’t give me that! Didn’t I tell you to call for help!? Why did you not do so?!”

“I did call for help, but the jamming prevent me from making a connection.”

“Jamming? Like hell jamming would work on an old-world connector like you!”

In contrast to Hammerz’s irritated voice, Shirou replied with a mix of exasperation.

“I’ll remind you here, just because I’m an old-world connector, that doesn’t mean I can do everything. The help request just wouldn’t get through. It’s not like I can do anything about that, you know? Ah, by the way, since I couldn’t send the help request to the escort team’s HQ, I sent one to Sakashita Heavy Industry.”

“Just how did you connect to a facility that is so far away from here when you can’t contact the escort team’s HQ which is nearby?”

“That’s because I was using an old-world line connect to the facility while I can only use a normal line to contact HQ. So, the effect of the jamming particle is different.”

Hammerz accepted that excuse and sighed to help himself calm down.

“…I see, so then, how’s the jamming right now?”

“I’m still trying. Maybe it will work after we wait for a while. But still, as expected, the escort team should have noticed it after making this much ruckus, no?”

“Probably. I don’t know who these people are and where they came from, but since the escort team doesn’t seem to have noticed them even after they made this much of a mess, I bet they did something. In the worst-case scenario, they might never notice unless we inform them first. So, hurry up with the connection.”

“I’m on it already. Oh! It’s back.”

Hammerz frowned.

“Why did it return at this time?”

“That’s just how the world works. Just like how you never find the thing that you’re looking for but can easily find it when you’re not looking for it.”

In reaction to Shirou’s casual excuse, Hammerz heaved a heavy sigh.

Silavin: Patreon drops back down the 2 chapters a week.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 243, Escape

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

In the commander room of the escort team's HQ, the staff finally sighed in relief now that they had finally overcome the predicament. They then immediately moved on to their next job. One of the officers had a rather irritated expression instead of an exhausted one as he said.

"To think that an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry is in the lost transport vehicles… As well as those people trying to kidnap them. Good grief. I know that it's not like we can refuse, but it would be great if they told us beforehand, you know?"

Another officer chuckled and replied.

"In the end, the old-world connector is fine and we were able to quickly take control of the situation since we immediately gave that order to recapture the lost transport vehicles. We did our job. At least we can use that as cover."

"Though, they could make a complaint, saying that we should have given that order sooner."

They already knew that the Hunters sent to check transport 6 and 8 did not come back because Erde's team had ambushed them. It seemed that they followed the standard checking protocol and got ambushed inside the hallway of the transport vehicle.

Akira was able to reach his room without encountering one of those ambushes, but it was partially due to luck. One of the main factors was because his room was located outside the hallways, along patrol routes. Thus, he could head straight to his room without taking any detour. This meant that he would not have encountered those hallway ambushes that were set to buy time.

The Hunters that were sent to do something as trivial as checking on the situation were of course no match against the team sent to kidnap an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry. They were quickly silenced in order to buy time.

The decision to immediately tell the rest of the Hunters to secure the transport vehicles was correct albeit rather late.

The escort team officer tried to cheer up the other officer.

"No one told us that we're transporting an old-world connector, so I bet they can't criticize us just because of that."

"I hope you're right."

Although they would not be held responsible, it did not change the fact that there was still a mountain of problems that they had to go through later. That was why that 'cheer up' attempt only ended as an attempt.

Another staff member then reported in with a rather confused expression.

"It's about that old-world connector. We've received a message from Sakashita Heavy Industry. It seems to be a very important message pertaining to the security for that old-world connector."

The officer sighed exasperatedly before replying.

“So basically, they’re saying to prioritize that old-world connector now that we know we have one here, huh? The gull of these people. So, what is it?”

After listening to the content, the officer frowned.

“So… They’re basically telling us to do that on our own, huh?”

“Well, it’s our job to manage the Hunters in the convoy after all. So, it’s understandable. What’s the plan now?”

“…We can’t refuse. So, tell them that we’ll do our best.”

“Roger that!”

The officer heaved a huge sigh now that a problem immediately appeared, which he had expected.

Melshia returned to her guard post, she was surveying the surrounding for an ambush from the rooftop.

“That was pretty rough. Tatsukawa, didn’t your intuition say that we won’t face anything big?”

Tatsukawa replied casually.

“What are you talking about? My intuition was on point. I said that we’ll be mostly free, I didn’t say that nothing would happen. not to mention that we were able to take our time after repelling those bugs.”

Melshia chuckled.

“Is that so? Well, it might be better if I say it was fast, huh?”

“Yikes, that was uncalled for.”

As they were talking while laughing, suddenly, the escort team contacted Melshia. After listening to the message, Melshia frowned and replied.

“Do you know that you’re basically looking down on us by saying that?”

The officer who called Melshia understood that it soured her mood. But even so, he still pushed forward his request albeit while sounding a bit apologetic.

“I know, but it’s a request from Sakashita. We don’t have any other choice but to cooperate. Of course, they’re saying that they’ll be paying a suitable reward for it. Moreover, it’s not compulsory. With that being said, I’m sure there’s no need for me to even tell you how problematic it is to leave a track record saying that you’ve refused a request from Sakashita. I believe that it’s not a bad offer, so would you please cooperate?”

Both Melshia and the officer had their position to consider. Because of that, both of them could not simply back off. But since the request was coming from Sakashita, the escort team basically has the upper hand.

Both sides understood that. The escort team tried to push the request using rewards instead of threats. Nonetheless, they still needed to make a threat. Because of that, Melshia decided to fold.

“At least give us some time to consider it. After all, it’s not like I want to force my men as well. Is that fine?”

“Very well, sorry, and thank you.”

The call ended. Melshia sighed. Tatsukawa lightly smiled and said to her.

“Did they dump something problematic on you? What is it?”

“They said they want some Hunters to escort an old-world connector.”

“Hm? That would give a good track record and a good reward, right? What’s the problem?”

“The requirement for the escort is just not right. Basically, they’re asking for a cyborg and to give some level of control to that cyborg’s body.”

Tatsukawa smiled bitterly, he finally understood why Melshia gave that reaction.

“Oh, that’s rather haughty for them.”

Under normal circumstances, the full right of a cyborg’s body was in the hand of its respectful owner. Any abnormal circumstances mostly appeared when they exchanged parts in a clinic. For those who replaced their entire body with mechanical parts excluding their brains, giving control right to someone else was not a small matter.

Sakashita’s demand was equivalent to asking a cyborg for its life, it was a very arrogant and selfish demand with zero regard for the other side. It would not be strange to take that as a declaration of war. Although, of course, Sakashita would be the one to win. The only choices were either to die or to comply and give barely enough control to satisfy them.

Of course, Sakashita had no wish to act in such a manner that bought the grudge of many. It would only lead to more expenses after all. But that also meant if there was a need or profit in it, they would not shy away from doing so. An escort mission for an old-world connector affiliated with a large corporation satisfied that prerequisite,

Melshia then said to Tatsukawa with a serious expression.

“So, what’s the plan? Although it’s from Sakashita, it doesn’t change the fact that they’re treating us disrespectfully. What do you think?”

“Even if you ask me so, it’s not like we have the choice to say no, right? It’s a good thing that both you and I don’t satisfy that prerequisite. I’ll ask the men who want to take it and send them away, if no one volunteered, then we have no other choice but to say sorry and refuse.”

“Are you okay with that?”

Tatsukawa was a bit confused seeing Melshia asking him with such a serious expression.

“Do you find anything you don’t like with that?”

“If it was the past you, you would have immediately refused that offer just from how they’re treating us.”

“Well, if I do that, this team would not be able to survive for long. It would be a huge waste since it has become this big.”

“In that case, we can just rebuild a new team, no?”

Melshia kept pushing questions with a serious look.

Tatsukawa smiled wryly and embraced Melshia.

“Although I said our team, it’s mostly thanks to you that it became this big. Don’t throw it away just because I don’t like how Sakashita is treating us. That would be a huge waste, you know? Though, if you say that you don’t care, it will be completely up to you. You can toss aside this team.”

“…Is that so? Well, in that case, let’s keep it.”

Melshia smiled happily and embraced Tatsukawa back.

“You’ve really calmed down.”

“Well, we’ve grown up since then. So, there’s no need to take on those reckless actions like what we did in the past.”

“Yeah.”

Seeing the blushing Tatsukawa, Melshia smiled mischievously.

fight, he was actually quite tired and had received some damage as well. Therefore, to be able to perform at his absolute best, he had to leave the room to rest and heal.

In place of Hammerz, a few Hunters were posted in Shirou's room. They were guarding Shirou while Hammerz was not there. All of them were cyborgs and part of their control rights were given to Hammerz. In the worst-case scenario, Hammerz could take control of their bodies to buy some time until he returns.

All the Hunters there understood their position, that was why they were not amused at all with the situation.

Shirou sounded rather apologetic. Though, he still had his usual smile as he welcomed those Hunters.

"Welcome welcome! I'll be in your care! You can go ahead and relax!"

The Hunters looked annoyedly at Shirou. They understood that he was someone important from Sakashita Heavy Industry and souring his mood would result in nothing good. Normally, they would be careful so as not to offend him. Although they knew that, they still gave Shirou stinky eyes.

Shirou acted surprised.

"Whoah, don't give me that look. I know that it's not fun giving the control rights of your cyborg's body to someone else, even I think that it's not pleasant, you know? But you see, it's a command from the top, I can't really refuse it"

One of the guys annoyedly said.

"Humph, we're in this situation basically because of you."

"Come one now, don't say that. Calm down. Although you guys will be guarding me, it's not like you guys have any work to do. So, you can just eat and drink until we reach the city. If you put aside your grudge against me, it’s basically a very easy job with a huge reward, you know? Come in and just relax.”

Shirou sat on a nearby sofa and invited the others to take a seat too. He then took a bite of the meal on the table and made a blissful expression.

“Are you not going to try it? It’s really delicious, you know? Though it might be weird for me to say this, it’s a meal prepared by Sakashita to keep me in a good mood. I bet you’ll never taste something like this before, you know?”

Shirou smiled and invited the others to take a few bites as well.

The Hunters there knew that it would be bad if no one volunteered for that request from Sakashita Heavy Industry, so they were akin to a bunch of sacrifices that were sent here. That was why they did not find their situation amusing at all. Even so, after some time, the feeling of repulsion got worn down and some people started to take a seat and had a taste of the meal, the others followed suit not too long after that.

The taste of the dish quickly blew away their grudge as one of them inadvertently exclaimed.

“Woah, this is really good!”

“Told you.”

Shirou smugly smiled. He then once again invited the others to join. The rest looked at each other before eventually joining the Hunters that were already eating there.

But one of them did not bulge, Shirou looked confusedly at him and asked.

“You’re not going to join? It’s not poisoned, you know?”

That man answered back half shouting.

“I can’t eat food, you know?!”

That guy had a cyborg body that did not allow him to digest food. Shirou, who noticed that, was exaggeratedly surprised, but his surprised face quickly changed to a smile.

“Ohh, I see, I have an idea! Wait for a bit!”

Shirou left his seat and returned back later with a large box with a device inside it.

“In that case, you can borrow this. It’s a special VR device. Although it might not fill your stomach, it can at least let you enjoy the taste. Though in the end, it’s just a VR food, so it might be not that satisfying.”

“Do you really think this will be enough for me…?”

“Well, you can also use it for something else, this is just a secret between us, but you can enjoy erotic stuff too with this VR too.”

The guy suddenly stopped, Shirou’s smile widened as he continued.

“It’s amazing, amazingly erotic.”

There were many cyborgs who had to sacrifice their lust, desire for food, and desire for sleep in order to get a body fully specialized for battle. Due to the limitation of the current world’s technology, high-quality bodies demanded expensive body parts. Even so, there were still people who claim that it just did not feel the same. That was why this was a very tempting offer.

“…Is it that amazing?”

“But of course, after all, it’s prepared by Sakashita to keep me in a good mood. Well, though, if it’s me, I might be able to get a real one if I just ask. But let me tell you this. It’s pretty amazing even for me too, yep, amazingly erotic.”

“B-But how about the safety…”

“Sakashita prepared it for me, so I bet it’s totally safe”

“But, how about the connection with the cyborg body? It’s not that simple, right?”

That was when finally Shirou frowned and apologetically said.

“Well, about that, it’s true that normally it won’t work, but since I have limited control of your cyborg body, we might be able to use it.”

“Ah, I see…”

The guy then frowned, normally, he would never let others take control of his body for something like this, but since he had already done that, he might as well use it for his own advantage.

Shirou then continued.

“Although you can take back any of the food you want, I’m afraid that’s not the case for this VR device. If you want to try, this is your only chance. I do feel sorry for making you do this, that’s why I’m making this an exception. So, do you want to have a try? Well, I won’t force you though. It would be weird to force people to try this when they don’t want to after all.”

The guy hesitated, another guy suddenly interjected.

“Can I try then?”

“Sure, go ahead.”

Shirou replied with a smile.

After that, Shirou connected the VR to the other guy and turned it on. From others’ point of view, that guy only seemed to be sitting without doing anything. But with his 5 senses connected to the VR, although he only sat there without moving, he was actually moving around inside the VR.

After 10 minutes of using the VR, he then opened his eyes. The guy next to him asked him, piqued.

“So, how was it?”

“…That was really something.”

That short impression left much to be questioned, but it was clear from his reaction that it was indeed something amazing.

The other guys looked at Shirou.

“Can we try it too?”

“Sure sure, feel free to use it. Though there’s a limit on how many people can use it at the same time, so you guys can only use it in turns.”

The guys that hesitated at the start finally joined in too after hearing the impression from the others. It did not take long for them to start using it in turns.

__*__*__*__

As Hammerz was getting his injuries treated in the infirmary. He was also watching Shirou through the shared vision of the cyborgs that he had a shared control over. Hammerz frowned as the Hunters were looking at naked girls, which he could watch as well.

“What the heck are they doing over there?”

He quickly called Shirou, and Shirou then waved at him through the Hunter’s vision.

“What is it? I’m still here and not doing anything you know?”

“Some of the Hunters over there have weird things in their sights, you know? What did you do to them?”

“Oh, about that, I basically lend them the VR device, so I bet it’s from the VR.”

After hearing Shirous’s explanation, Hammerz sighed.

“Listen here. They are bodyguards, okay? Just what do you think you’re doing?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? Just let them play for a bit. I believe things should calm down after that incident. Moreover, we have some control over their bodies and are basically forcing them to guard me. It’s scary for me to be here surrounded by angry people you know? So, at least let them enjoy this.”

“I didn’t know you were that much of a coward.”

“That’s because I always have a reassuring bodyguard next to me.”

In response to Shirou’s rather empty compliment that he said in his usual casual tone, Hammerz gave up and thought to himself. [Well, this should at least not bring me any trouble.]

“Anyway, only send video feedback from the real world, don’t allow anything else in.”

“Yes yes.”

Shirou then closed the call and the video feedback sent from the Hunters were immediately cleaned up. Some of them seem to be closing their eyes, so what was shown only reflected endless darkness, while some had their eyes fixed on the same point as if they were stationary cameras. From there, Hammerz could see Shirou sharing laughs with the Hunters.

Seeing that, Hammerz thought that it should be fine and returned to treat his injuries.

＿＿＿*＿

As for Akira, after he received some treatments to make sure that his life was not in danger, he went and lay on a bed. He had already been removed from the escort team roster because of the damage to both his body and equipment. He just had to wait until the convoy reached the city.

Hikaru was sitting next to him. After giving her report to the escort team and Kugamayama city, she was released and finally could relax.

Hikaru glanced at Akira’s sleeping face and thought.

[Judging from the condition of the isolation room, it is easy to imagine how intense the battle was and how powerful Akira is. Although his might still instilled fear within, it still gives me a sense of reassurance. I guess the only thing that draws the line between both is whether his power is directed at me or not…]

Akira had killed hundreds of people outside the walls. In that situation where it would not be strange if he abandoned her, he still chose to save her even if it meant that he almost got killed because of it. Hikaru just could not understand this person called Akira.

[It might be his loyalty toward his contract, but that doesn’t sound right. After all, it’s just as he said, not saving me does not violate his contract…]

With that strange feeling welling, she looked at the sleeping Akira and mumbled.

“Say, why did you save me?”

“And here I went out of my way to save you because you asked me to, isn’t that question a little bit too insensitive?”

Hikaru was surprised, she did not expect Akira would answer her. Akira then pushed his body up.

“Y-You were awake?”

“I just woke up.”

After an awkward pause, knowing that Akira had heard her, Hikaru thought that she should rephrase the question.

“I’ll say this again, thank you for saving me. So, basically, considering the situation back there, I thought that it would be normal to abandon me instead. That’s why I thought it was weird that you didn’t. That’s all there is to it. So, can you tell me? Why did you save me?”

Akira casually replied.

“If someone asks me for help, as long as helping them doesn’t put me in trouble, I don’t see why not. Though it depends on the situation as well.”

“Although it might get you killed?”

“Dying is a normal thing for Hunters. It’s nothing out of the ordinary. Ahh, now that you mention it, that might sound weird for you since you live in the inner wall, huh?”

Hikaru’s face turned serious.

“…Uhm, it might be weird to hear this from me, but you already killed quite a lot of people outside the wall, right? Didn’t they beg for their lives?”

“Well, it usually happens when we are shooting at each other. So, it mostly ends with an instant kill. Actually, I don’t recall them having the chance to beg for their lives. There’s also no reason why I have to listen to their plea right after we were trying to kill each other, right?”

Hikaru raised her eyebrows.

“Uhhh, Akira, do you get attacked that often? Although you’re this strong? It’s really hard to believe.”

“It’s not like I was this strong right from the start. The slum is a place where it’s expected for you to get robbed when you’re just a child with 300 Aurum in your pocket. The longer you survive in such a place, the more people you would kill. That’s just how it is. After all, I don’t want to die.”

Akira said so casually, allowing Hikaru to have a glimpse of how cruel his past was and it helped her understand his line of thinking.

“…I see, it must have been hard.”

“Yeah, pretty much.”

That was when Akira suddenly pressed Hikaru.

“Ah, by the way, since you asked me the reason why I helped you, it reminds me of what you said. You mentioned that you’ll do anything, right?”

“Y-yeah I did.”

Although she did say that in a spur of the moment and that it was nothing but a verbal promise, it was still a rather reckless statement made to a powerful Hunter. Hikaru was a bit scared of what he might ask her.

Akira then said to her with a serious face.

“As you promised, I’ll have you get me a good enough reward. Wait. No. At least enough to pay for my expenses. I ended up using a lot of expensive bullets and medicines, I also broke most of my equipment too. Especially the one that I got with a huge discount thanks to my connection, I heard that they were originally very expensive. I would hate to end up in red after going through all of that. So please help me with that one.”

This request completely caught Hikaru off-guard. It was a completely understandable request though. After that, she smiled confidently and swore.

“Just leave it to me. Negotiation is my speciality after all. I’m also indebted to you for saving me as well, so I’ll be sure to do my best to get your reward.”

Akira sighed in relief and pressed once more just to be safe.

“I’m really counting on you for this one, okay? You understand that, right?”

“Don’t worry. You’re pretty famous as a new rising star in my department. Even Kibayashi-san also describes you as an amazing person, you know?”

Seeing that Akira finally seemed to be relieved, Hikaru leaked a bitter smile.

…

The convoy finally received extra reinforcement for the escort. They were the squad sent from Kugamayama city by Sakashita. It included several powered suits and a few people with heavy augmented suits, all of them went to their respective transport vehicles.

Yanagisawa joined the convoy as well. He received an emergency report and went to collect Shirou himself. Hammerz finished his treatment and went to the waiting room.

Yanagisawa was smiling happily as he started the conversation.

“I heard that you went through quite an ordeal, I’m glad that everyone is okay.”

In contrast to Yanagisawa, Hammerz showed caution toward him.

“The escort duty should be given to us until we reach Kugamayama city. If you want us to hand him over, we will have to go through Director Sugadome first, though?”

“But of course. Since I’m already here, I was only thinking of at least introducing myself. Nothing more.”

The door to the isolation room opened, Yanagisawa and his men entered. As expected, the escorts stopped playing with the VR and stood ready.

Yanagisawa scanned the room, but Shirou was nowhere to be found.

“Where is him?”

Hammerz had a bad feeling and asked the Hunter escorts.

“Where’s Shirou? Is he in the bathroom?”

The Hunters frowned and pointed to the sofa.

“Eh? What are you talking about? He’s right over there.”

There was no one sitting on the sofa. Hammerz frowned and checked the image from the sofa with the Hunters' visions instead of his own eyes. And indeed, there he was, Shirou looked apologetically while waving at Hammerz.

Hammerz quickly understood what was going on and inadvertently roared.

"That damn brat!!!"

Shirou controlled the Hunters' five senses and showed them an illusion. In short, he had escaped the room.

Hammerz angrily went to his comm to give a report, but he immediately stopped that and took some distance from Yanagisawa by pure reflex.

As expected, Yanagisawa also understood what was going on. Right at that moment, his usual smile immediately vanished, and his face turned emotionless. His expression was devoid of everything except for one thing, a sense of pressure that radiated terror.

It was a good thing that the Hunters had control of their bodies hijacked. If they were free to move, they would have tried to shoot Yanagisawa. Most likely resulting in Yanagisawa killing all of them.

The Hunters were overwhelmed by Yanagisawa's presence. If they could not control their emotions, they would have fallen to a state of dread. Hammerz was also showing a strong sense of caution toward Yanagisawa, the mood inside the room turned intense in a blink of an eye.

Yanagisawa then returned back to his usual self. He immediately retracted the terror that he was unconsciously radiating. The dreadful terror that blanketed the room immediately vanished.

Yanagisawa took a deep breath to help him calm down. He smiled politely at Hammerz and said to him.

"…My apologies. It seems that Shirou-kun has been lost somewhere, huh? Let's ask for help to find him."

“You’re right…”

Although Hammerz was being very cautious of Yanagisawa, since he had regained his calm, he also immediately shifted his focus to solve the current dilemma.

At that point in time, Shirou was already outside the transport vehicle. He went to the hangar with a group of his Hunter escorts, which he had hacked. He then hopped on a powered suit that he had prepared beforehand and left, using a patrol mission as a disguise.

None of his escorts was suspicious of him as they were moving around the transport vehicle. When someone got suspicious, Shirou would reconnect them to display that they were still inside of his room together with the other Hunters.

After the Hunters tried the VR and had their turn, they did not realize that their senses never left the VR world. This caused them not to realize that they had gone out of the room with Shirou.

As unmanned powered suits were patrolling around, outside the transport vehicle, Shirou used fighting an incoming monster as an excuse and left the convoy. Inside that powered suit, Shirou lightly laughed and said.

“I’m sorry, Hammerz, it’s just a small detour. Don’t worry, I won’t cause you any trouble. Just so you know, I’m being considerate of you here.”

His expression then turned serious.

“I’ll be able to move around freely for the time being. So just wait for me.”

His goal for escaping the convoy was not to regain his freedom. It was just a means to do something, and in order to accomplish that, Shirou took a long detour to head to Kugamayama city.

After that, rumours that an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry had infiltrated Kugamayama city started to appear.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 244, Akira's Treatment

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Sterian was one of the top-class restaurants inside Kugamayama city. All the meals served here was among the best of the best, as such, they were also priced way higher than any high-class restaurant in the lower district of Kugamayama city. Even so, the taste of the food they made never made anyone who ate it regret their decision. The decorations and the furniture here were also first-class, boosting the dining experience as well as giving off a glamorous and luxurious atmosphere.

Naturally, it was not cheap to be able to dine here. Customers who went to the restaurant were only the rich. They were the kind of people who could casually pay out a sum that would make anyone in the outer wall crazy.

The private rooms in Sterian were even more expensive and getting a reservation for a room was not easy. It was often used as a negotiation venue for high-ranking officers from various corporations. The success rate of negotiations in these private rooms bolstered its popularity and was extremely helpful to the negotiators of those large corporations.

Akira was invited to one of these rooms. The slightly spacious room was filled with glamorous decorations. A large table was fixed there, covered by a white luxurious table cloth. Meals that were suitable for the scene were lined up on top of the table.

On the other side of the table, Kibayashi was already sitting in wait, looking extremely happy.

“Well well well, you really never cease to amaze me.”

Thanks to the delicious meal, Akira was in a good mood, but Kibayashi’s smile still rubbed him the wrong way.

“It’s not like I did that because I wanted to.”

“I know, that’s why I really like you.”

Watching Kibayashi laughing merrily, Akira could not help but sigh.

After the transport convoy reached Kugamayama city, Akira was transported to the hospital inside the inner wall together with the rest of the badly injured people. He was then placed under partial house arrest under Sakashita Heavy Industry and was interrogated about what had happened before he was released.

Akira said what was on his mind during the interrogation—‘It’s not like I could do anything about it since I had to fight against those who were there to kidnap Sakashita Heavy Industry’s old-world connector.’ After questioning the others, they did not find anything suspicious and released him.

Although the main subject of the investigation was Shirou’s escape, it was not like Sakashita could simply leak such information out to the public. Because of that, the questioning was much stricter toward those who already knew of the situation.

Kibayashi could not hold back his laughter after listening to Akira’s story, which only irritated him even more.

Akira somehow managed to maintain his mood thanks to the delicious food as he pushed the conversation toward the main topic.

“It’s fine already, isn’t it? Just get into the main subject, why did you invite me here?”

Kibayashi had to finish laughing first before he changed the subject. Even so, he was still trying to calm down his breathing after so much laughter.

“You’re right. You’ve really entertained me. So, I guess it’s only fair to get to the main subject soon. Akira, I have bad news and good news for you.”

Akira frowned.

“Don’t tell me that is actually one bad news and worse news. Something like when I ask you ‘so what is the good news?’ and you’ll say, ‘that one was the good news’ or something like that, right?”

Kibayashi chuckled toward the very paranoid Akira and said to him.

“Don’t worry, it’s really one good news and one bad news. Let’s start with the good news first. We’ve secured the equipment that you’ve ordered.”

Akira raised his eyebrows, while at the same time, he could not help but smile after hearing the news.

“Oh? Is that so?!”

“Yeah. Those are very powerful pieces of equipment. The weapons and the augmented suit that you ordered from the front-line are ones that normally only Hunters with a Hunter Rank of 100 or above can get.”

Akira was ecstatic since it turned out to be even better than he had hoped. But he then frowned and asked Kibayashi a question.

“That’s great!!! Wait? Doesn’t that mean that I can’t buy them then?”

“Normally, yes. But it was possible with the help from Sakashita Heavy Industry, as a reward for your job. Well, I guess it’s more accurate to call them compensation for the trouble that you’ve gone through? They talked to you when you were hospitalized, remember? It’s for that time.”

The work done to fight back Erde's team was treated separately from the escort job. To be more precise, while Akira was in the middle of his job to escort the transport convoy, he had left his post because of the request from Hikaru. According to that, it could be taken as a violation of his contract, which means he could have not received any reward.

But of course, Sakashita Heavy Industry could not afford to do that. After all, that would mean that they were not paying someone who had worked for them. Not to mention, even if a clause was appended to his request after the fact that he had violated his contract, the one who was responsible for Akira, Hikaru, was also under house arrest. Thus a proposal to deal with the reward was sent to Kibayashi instead.

While Akira was hospitalized, Kibayashi contacted him and finished the negotiation regarding that. Because of that, the reward for repelling Erde's team was given in the form of the equipment that Akira had been looking for. They were finally able to secure the already expensive equipment with the equally expensive delivery cost of the front-line equipment.

Akira went through his memory of that time and nodded.

"I see. That wasn't easy but it was worth the trouble. So then, when will they arrive?"

Akira was brimming with expectation, but Kibayashi's expression turned cloudy.

"As I said, I have good news and bad news. That was the end of the good news, it was really good news, right? The next one is the bad news."

Akira reeled back.

"W-what is it?"

"Although it has already been decided that they will transport your equipment from the front-line to here, we still have no estimation of when it will arrive."

“…Well, it is from the front-line of the eastern district after all, so it’s only to be expected that they’ll take quite a lot of time.”

Akira already knew the trouble of transporting stuff from further east. He was a bit relieved since he thought that it was something worse, but it turned out to be something fully understandable. However, as though intending to betray his expectations, Kibayashi then continued.

“Even with that considered, we really have no fixed schedule as to when it will arrive. It can be tomorrow, or maybe next month, or maybe half-a-year later, or even next year. We don’t even have an approximation.”

As expected, Akira did not find the bad news amusing at all.

“Ehhh, what the heck is with that?”

“Well, it’s complicated. Like the transport permit for example. It’s also not that simple when we have to entrust such powerful weaponry to a third-party transport service. With just this troublesome stuff accounted for, it becomes even more difficult than before, you see.”

“…Since we got it from Sakashita Heavy Industry, can’t they do something about that too?”

“That is for them to decide. It’s not like I can do anything about it. Well, I can understand that providing support to purchase these items is much easier than handling its transport. After all, it’s not like Sakashita can just send a long-range inter-city transport vehicle just to ferry your weapons here, right?”

“Hmmm, that’s true.”

The route between Kugamayama and Zegelt was already difficult. It was only to be expected that transport from the front-line would be even more difficult. Although he knew that it would take quite a lot of money, Akira could not even imagine how much that would be. Since he understood that it was unreasonable for Sakashita and Kibayashi to have all the solutions for this, he felt that the whole thing was rather unfortunate.

“I see, so what are the other troublesome stuff?”

“I’m sorry but I can’t say.”

“Haaa.”

Akira could not help but show displeasure. Watching him like that, Kibayashi smiled amusedly and said.

“Well, I don’t think you’ll be happy with the answer either. That’s why, in case you want to know no matter what, I can lend you a hand, you know? But for that, we’ll need a formal Hunter office issued confidentiality contract. The one that Hunters would definitely regret if they breached it. So, do you still want to know? If you still want to know, I can arrange to get the information you want, it’s not like we’re strangers after all.”

“…Is it really that bad?”

“Well, yeah. By the way, it’s a very strictly guarded secret that would be impossible to talk about unless we use this kind of room. That’s why, putting aside whether you accept it or not, don’t leak it outside, okay?”

Akira frowned and shook his head.

“Alright, thanks for the offer but I’ll have to refuse. It seems that it’s better if I don’t know.”

“Is that so? You don’t need to hold back, you know?”

“Yeah. It’s still a no. I bet that it’s something that’s better not to touch.”

“Well, it’s true that if you found out about it, the upper echelons will have you monitored.”

“Give me a break already…”

Suddenly Akira showed suspicion.

“I’ll at least ask you this. You didn’t invite me to this room just so that you can say that to me, right?”

Kibayashi deliberately looked away with his usual joking attitude.

“What are you talking about? It’s a standard treatment for a high-ranking Hunter from the city official so that we can convey the needed information right away when asked.”

“Humph, is that so?”

Kibayashi returned his gaze toward Akira who was looking at him with great suspicion, smiled and spoke.

“I have no plan to try and use cheap tricks on you, you know? After all, you keep entertaining me even without me doing anything. That’s why I’m interested in you, you see. I can’t wait to hear your next adventure.”

Akira twitched, he looked extremely displeased.

“Good grief. Either way, my equipment will be here as long as I wait, so I won’t be doing anything reckless while waiting for it. So, I don’t think there will be anything to amuse you for the time being.”

Even after Akira said that, Kibayashi just smiled and shook his head.

“Well, good luck with that, though, I do think that it is futile. You’ll definitely come up with something to amuse me. Whether you get roped into something or even be the source of that something. Either way, you’ll do something interesting soon enough. That’s just how it is up until now after all. That includes this time as well. You’re just that kind of guy, or am I wrong?”

Akira did not reply and just returned to his meal. Kibayashi also followed suit after that.

The meal left on the table was able to help Akira uplift his mood. But the amount needed to be more than what was available to completely restore his mood.

After Akira cheered up for a bit, he then threw a question to Kibayashi.

“Say, you said that there’s no exact date when the equipment will arrive, right? I know that you can’t exactly get a promised delivery date to a Hunter, but can you at least give me a rough estimation? It’s fine even if you don’t have any evidence to support your estimation.”

“My guess, huh? I’m sorry but that will be difficult. It’s not like I know all the detail. Although I know about the general rules and regulations for the transportations between the cities, I don’t know it well enough. A new rule has just been enacted. I don’t know why it was enacted upon. Though, I have my own guess. However, asking me when this new rule will be revoked and when your transportation can resume, is something impossible for me to say.”

“Is that so? Can you at least tell me the rules?”

“Let’s see…”

Kibayashi hummed for a bit, he then shook his head with a serious look.

“…Sorry, but I can’t. If my guess is correct, people might get suspicious as to why I can come up with such a guess. Though, you’re free to make your own guess as well. Though, I recommend you don’t tell anyone about your own thoughts on the matter. I think that’s all I can say.”

“I see…”

Akira actually found something weird.

“Alpha, it’s about what Kibayashi said…”

Alpha went ahead and warned Akira first.

“I don’t mind telling you my hypothesis, but if you can’t pretend that you don’t know, it’s better if you actually not know it in the first place.”

“I see, it’s fine then.”

“Yep, that’s a good decision.”

After that, Akira continued enjoying the meal, while on the other hand, Kibayashi was curious about something after that exchange and thought.

[…Judging from that rule, I bet that old-world connector or something from Sakashita Heavy Industry has escaped. After all, that rule is way too lax if he was kidnapped. So where did they go? Did that old-world connector just run away from the observer under Sakashita? Could that old-world connector be somewhere around Kugamayama city at the moment? Does Sakashita already know if that is the case? There are many Hunters with unknown origins here, it is the perfect place for people with questionable origins to conceal themselves.]

Kibayashi looked at Akira, Akira frowned and said to him.

“What?”

“Nope, it’s nothing.”

Thinking that something interesting would happen if Akira got in contact with that old-world connector, Kibayashi could not help but to look forward to the next incident and smiled.

__*__*__*__

Around the time Akira was having a meal with Kibayashi. Hikaru was also sitting inside the same restaurant, Sterian. Shizuka was sitting next to her and someone from Kiryou and TOSON were sitting on the other side of the table.

Although she was put under partial house arrest just like Akira after they arrived, Hikaru was still doing her job. After finishing the negotiation with the transport convoy’s side, she was able to secure the reward that Akira asked from her. But they were still discussing how much of his reward would be paid in Aurum, and how much would be paid in the form of an increase in Hunter Rank.

Akira was looking for powerful equipment. But there many of them had Hunter Rank restrictions. Except for one certain exception. Since the restrictions mostly came from the distributors, if the distributor allowed it, the Hunters could purchase those equipment regardless of their Hunter Rank.

Akira did ask Hikaru to be paid in form of better equipment instead of Hunter Rank. That was why she decided to contact Kiryou and TOSON directly. To rope them into the matter. As for the corporation's side, they were also looking to establish strong connections with high ranking Hunters since they tend to purchase high-quality, expensive products. Hikaru thought that it was possible to obtain equipment from the corporations directly despite the Hunter Rank restriction and her guess was right.

The only thing that Hikaru did not expect was that both TOSON and Kiryou asked Shizuka to be present during the negotiation as well.

Personally speaking, Hikaru did not see any reason why a small-time owner of an independent weapon shop had to attend too. But since TOSON and Kiryou expressed that demand rather strongly, she decided to contact Akira. That was when Akira replied with a rather imposing warning telling them not to do anything rude with the assumption that Shizuka would accept the invitation. It came out of the left field for Hikaru as she proceeded with the paperwork and had Shizuka attend the negotiation as well.

During the negotiation, it was obvious that Kiryou and TOSON were being very careful toward Shizuka. Since Hikaru knew that Akira's trust toward Shizuka was strong and that Shizuka's advice had a lot of effect on how Akira would spend his money on equipment, Hikaru was not surprised by how things played out. Though, the way Akira responded was still something that she would have never expected from him.

When Hikaru was asked about what had happened during the escort mission, she explained that she was under a confidentiality contract and only answered what she was allowed to. After hearing what Akira did, Shizuka seemed extremely worried. Kiryou and TOSON thought if it was possible to use that to advertise their products as they asked Hikaru to share the data she had as Akira's operator. The difference in their reaction made Hikaru a little curious. After all, this was the kind of reaction one would receive from a corporation toward a Hunter working with them.

After that, they eventually closed their negotiation and felt that it was a fruitful one. Both the representatives from TOSON and Kiryou left first since they wanted to work on the equipment order that they had just received, while Shizuka and Hikaru were left behind, chatting about Akira.

After hearing what he was like when Akira first came to Shizuka's shop, Hikaru raised her eyebrows and asked.

"He was that weak? Or more like, he looked just like a normal boy at that time?"

Shizuka remembered back from that time and smiled bitterly with a tint of nostalgia.

"Yep, though it might be weird to hear this, but he did not seem to have that much chance as a Hunter back then. It was as if he would die anytime. That was all that I could see from him back then. To be honest, I have a pretty good intuition, and that is the first time my first impression is wrong."

Hikaru hummed and nodded. She initially thought that Akira might actually be a city agent and that it was just that Shizuka did not know it. But judging from Shizuka's story, Hikaru was surprised to find out that Akira was really a boy who originated from the slums.

[So, he was telling the truth when he said that he was weak in the past, huh? Hmmm, that was a bit unexpected…]

That was when Shizuka suddenly said with a serious face.

"I have a question though, as a city official, what do you think of Akira?

"As a city official, huh?"

"Yes."

Hikaru also turned rather serious.

“I’m really sorry, but if I have to be honest, from the point of view of the city officials, he’s someone really dangerous. Even the permission for him to enter the middle district as well as getting into the transport vehicle were all nothing but temporary permissions. I know it’s not right for me to say this since he saved me, but I can’t use that fact to guarantee that he’s a good Hunter based on the standards within the inner wall. That is my answer from my position.”

Although Hikaru felt that was rather harsh considering that Akira saved her, she still properly answered that question as a city official with a rather apologetic tone. She glanced at Shizuka, wondering if she angered her.

But in contrast to her expectation, Shizuka seemed relieved as she said.

“It’s fine that way.”

Hikaru raised her eyebrows.

“You’re not angry? I’m sure I said some pretty harsh things, you know?”

“It seems that you don’t have a bad impression of him.”

“…Well, he did save me… And almost got killed because of that, so…”

Shizuka looked warmly at Hikaru, she then continued as if to warn Hikaru.

“Unfortunately, Akira often does a lot of dangerous things. At least, even for me who has known him for longer, I can’t honestly say that he’s not a bad kid. Ah, it’s not like I’m saying that he has a bad personality or anything like that. It’s just that he’s not exactly normal. It’s like… the way he thinks is not right, or more like, he’s quite reckless. There’s that side of him, you see.”

“Ahh, I can completely understand that.”

“It seems that Akira had a rough time in the slums, maybe that is the reason why he ended up like he is. His way of processing things tends to get him more enemies. That’s why I can understand why you see him as someone who is dangerous. It’s a good thing that there’s a city official who can handle him well… If I have to be honest, if it's possible, I hope he would learn to make compromises with others though."

After saying that, Shizuka smiled bitterly, Hikaru also replied with the same bitter smile.

"Even for me who only known him recently, it's obvious to see that he's bad at dealing with people. Just to be safe, I'll add a note on the evaluation report to be careful dealing with him. If the other staff members see that note, I'm sure they will be careful so as not to pick a fight with him. Yeah. I'll be sure to add that note."

Shizuka giggled and said.

"Isn't it better for you to handle since something might happen?"

Hikaru reeled back. Putting aside her feeling toward Akira, she would not want to go through anything like that again if it could be helped. To be more precise, she had no wish to be involved with Akira anymore.

"Ahh, well, I'm actually a part of a management department that deals with many different things, so this request might be the last request I have with Akira."

"Is that so? That's rather unfortunate."

Shizuka said that with a smile that did not match what she just said as she kept her intuition to herself.

After they were done, Hikaru and Shizuka returned to the first-floor lobby of the Kugama building, Akira then grouped up with them a bit later.

That was when Shizuka gave a strict scolding to Akira.

"Akira, I heard from Hikaru-san that you did something reckless."

Akira winced back and laughed awkwardly.

“Well, uhh, that was not my fault, you see. It’s true that it was rough, but there’s no way I could have seen it coming.”

“I see that you lost all of your equipment again. This time, the only thing that is left unharmed is that new bike of yours, right? So, what is with that?

“Well, I bought the bike from further east. So, as expected, it really is stronger than my usual equipment. I’m glad I decided to buy my safety with money since I had the chance to back then.”

“So, in short, if it was not that durable, you would have even lost the bike as well, huh?”

Akira awkwardly laughed it off and glanced at Hikaru as if he was seeking help. Hikaru smiled wryly and then chimed in.

“Shizuka-san, it’s also partly my fault for asking him to save me. So I believe that’s enough of scolding for Akira.”

“Is that so? Well, I’ll leave it at that then.”

Once Shizuka stopped, Akira smiled in relief. Hikaru was watching how Akira acts with great interest. Although he was being scolded, there was also a trace of happiness, knowing that someone was worried for him. He looked like a little boy who had a great lack of care and affection while growing up. At the very least, he did not seem like someone who had killed hundreds of people.

But it did not change the fact that Akira did kill that many people before. Even back during the incident in the transport convoy, Akira quickly abandoned her and aimed his rifle at Erde, who was using her as a meat shield without showing even a shred of hesitation. Hikaru understood that very well.

[Both in the good and bad way, I can understand why Shizuka-san wants someone who understands Akira to handle him… But with that being said, I hope that doesn’t have to be me.]

Hikaru replaced the bitter smile that she had unconsciously displayed with a polite one as she stood in front of Akira and said to him.

“Akira. Since the negotiation for your reward is done, it means that this request had officially concluded. Thank you for the hard work.”

“I see, likewise. Thank you for the hard work.”

“I don’t think I have any other request left for you, but let’s meet up again if the occasion comes. I pray for your success in the future, but I believe that it’s better if you hold back on doing reckless stuff.”

“I know… Honestly, I already know that best myself though…”

Akira smiled wryly and Hikaru gave the same wry smile back.

He then left with Shizuka to escort her back to her shop. Hikaru saw them off and sighed, after that, Kibayashi came to her with his usual smile of great delight.

“Well, Hikaru, good work on that escort job. You did amazingly well.”

Seeing how Kibayashi was merrily complimenting her, Hikaru was more anxious than happy.

“T-thank you very much!”

“I guess this means that I have to apologize for misjudging your skill. I’m sorry. Though it might be weird to say this as compensation, I will use my full power to get what you asked from me back then approved. So please forgive me with that.”

Hikaru frowned, she did not understand what Kibayashi was talking about. However, thanks to her adept skills at reading in between the lines, she quickly understood what Kibayashi was referring to and started to panic.

In the past, Hikaru asked Kibayashi to let her handle Akira, who was a high-rank Hunter. The escort request this time was basically a test, to show Kibayashi that she had the skills to handle Akira. And judging from that point of view, it could be said that Hikaru passed with flying colours.

That also meant she would be dealing with a more dangerous high-rank Hunter, exactly just what she wanted before.

Hikaru flusteredly tried to retract her request.

“No no no, he’s way more than I can handle! I understood that very well with the last request! So, I take back everything that I have asked for!”

Kibayashi already knew that of course, but he still continued with his usual flippant attitude.

“No no no. There is no need to hold back. To be perfectly honest, you did extremely well, you know? I will put in my recommendation letter as well. After all, having a rising star like you rise will eventually bring benefits to the whole team. Even those officers who doubted you will have no arguments left once they see the report from the last request of yours, you know? You’re basically on a fast track to success, congratulations!”

Hikaru’s face turned pale as she shouted.

“Please stop! Seriously! Just stop it already! I’m being serious here! I’m begging you!”

“Geez, don’t say that. It’s fine, I’m sure you’ll do alright.”

“That’s not the problem here!”

After that, Hikaru used her negotiation skill to convince Kibayashi not to do that. Seeing Hikaru sigh in relief afterwards, Kibayashi smiled with a tint of regret, but deep inside, he still found it very amusing.

Silavin: Kibayashi. The incarnation of trolling.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 245, Shirou's Sight-Seeing

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Inside the upper district of Kugamayama city, there was an area that was rented specifically for Sakashita Heavy Industry. Sugadome's office was located there, and in that office, Hammerz was lowering his head after giving his report regarding Shirou's escape.

"I have no excuse to give for my failure."

It was obvious from his expression that he was extremely vexed by his blunder. In contrast to that, Sugadome seemed relatively calm.

Sugadome did not seem that angry from that mistake as he told Hammerz to raise his head. After that, he then said.

"It was indeed very regrettable, but I have no wish to blame you for what happened. He escaped when you were not around him and it was us who told you to leave his side to get your injuries treated. If I must blame someone, that would be the person who ordered you to do that. Otherwise, you would have seen through Shirou's lie."

"Lie, huh?"

Hammerz seemed confused there, Matsubara who was standing by next to Sugadome then explained to him.

Shirou sent a help request to Sakashita heavy Industry using the old-world connection, he mentioned that Hammerz was badly injured. So, in the request, he asked to allow Hammerz to treat his wounds and also asked for an escort replacement. Moreover, he stated that he did not feel safe having people not from Sakashita guard him, so he had requested the escorts to be cyborgs and he be given control over their bodies.

On the other hand, Hammerz reported that he was mostly fine. But Shirou told the staff beforehand that the battle both inside and outside the transport vehicle was so bad that they even destroyed a portion of the transport vehicle. Thus, that staff thought that Hammerz's report was him trying to sound tough due to his loyalty toward his duty.

After hearing how things played out, Hammerz could not help but frown as he mumbled.

"That damn brat…"

Hammerz unconsciously leaked out his rage, when he realized it, he flusteredly calm himself down. Matsubara shed a few cold sweats due to that intense anger. But Sugadome was completely fine as he lightly smiled and tried to calm Hammerz down.

"As I'm also a part of the commanding team, I'll have to apologize as we will handle this on our own. Shirou's report was difficult to discern if it was truthful or not and the risk was too high if we were to make the wrong decision. As such, I believe that the correct decision was made under the limited information we had. Now that I've informed you about it, can you please take it as our blunder as the commanding team?"

Hammerz flusteredly shook his head.

"N-No, I didn't mean to blame you at all…"

"I see, thank you."

Sugadome then changed the subject.

“Now then, about the current incident, it was indeed a blunder on the Sakashita’s side. For the sake of Sakashita’s reputation, we must rectify this. I’m sure you have your own thought regarding the matter. If anyone is blaming you for it, you can just tell me. I’ll take care of it. As I said before, we’re not blaming you at all. But if you feel responsible for it, I hope you can help us. Do you have anything you wish from us?”

Hammerz replied with a serious face.

“If it’s possible, rather than assigning me to guard another old-world connector, I want to be assigned to look for Shirou.”

Sugadome’s smile widened.

“Very well, you can go ahead and do your own investigation, you may also join the search team if you want. You know Shirou very well, so I bet it’s better if you act separately without the limitation of a team. You have the freedom to do what you want.”

“Thank you very much, I’ll definitely answer your expectation.”

“In that case, I shall look forward to the results. You can go now.”

Hammerz bowed deeply and left the room with a face full of determination.

Matsubara frowned and said after Hammerz left.

“That seems to be a rather lax decision, are you really okay with that?”

Sugadome replied casually.

“Being strict is not the only method when dealing with others, that is doubly true when someone strongly wishes to rectify their mistake.”

“That might be true, but…”

“Did you find it inadequate?”

“Not at all. I was just curious. I don’t find it wrong at all…”

Matsubara then changed the subject as if to escape from the topic.

“Talking about curiosity, there’s also that matter with the transport convoy’s ambush. If that ambush was really for the sake of kidnapping our corporation’s old-world connector, that ambush has many questionable points.”

“Which points are you talking about exactly?”

“The ambush was way too sloppy. It would not be strange for their target to be killed with how they executed their plan. It also damaged many of the transport vehicles. Even if their aim was not to kidnap, but to kill, it was way too half-hearted. Well, they’re not like our military, so it might as well have been because their men were too amateurish and lacked the necessary skills…”

“I bet they actually didn’t care about Shirou-kun.”

Matsubara raised his eyebrows; he did not understand why Sugadome said that.

“Excuse me, but I couldn’t understand what you just said… It’s hard to believe that they didn’t care about Shirou considering they caused that much ruckus for the sake of searching for him…”

“Well, saying they don’t care was indeed an exaggeration. But I bet their real goal was something else. That incident must be not that important for their real goal. Something like: it would be great if they could kidnap Shirou-kun alive. However, it was fine if he dies as well. As a matter of fact, it doesn’t really matter if that operation succeeded.”

Matsubara was even more confused, so Sugadome proceeded to explain his hypothesis to Matsubara.

Based on the scale and teamwork of the enemies during that ambush, it could be inferred that it was done by multiple organizations. Although they were using the Nationalist's name and the report was also saying that they were from the Nationalist, they might actually be people from the other corporations disguising themselves as the Nationalist.

It was not rare for corporations to wage war against each other while blaming the attacks on the Nationalists. When their involvement surfaces, they would shift the blame by saying that it was because the Nationalists had infiltrated their ranks. They would then give a public apology and pay some compensation.

The one receiving the payment often knew that it was only an excuse and just let it slide. The bigger the corporation involved, the more they tend to solve incidents like this. After all, if they refused to accept that it was an attack from the Nationalists, they would risk an all-out war between big corporations.

If that all-out war occurs between the five big corporations, it would greatly affect their sphere of influence and government in the eastern district. In the worst-case scenario, it might entirely wipe out the eastern district. Thus, in order to keep the current world from destroying itself, big companies would simply accept that excuse.

If the big companies other than Sakashita worked together with an organization connected to the Nationalists or even with the Nationalist itself just to kidnap one old-world connector, it would definitely cause trouble later on how they would split the reward. In the worst-case scenario, it might even be better for them to fail.

After listening to Sugadome's explanation, Matsubara nodded in agreement and thought that something was still amiss.

"Isn't that a bit too weak as a reason to just ignore his safety? If their aim were simply to cause damage to Sakashita Heavy Industry, it means that their main goal in that operation had to be something else. But that ambush was obviously aimed at Shirou. It is hard to believe that they don't really care about him considering the size of the assault squad that they had prepared in order to kidnap him."

“As I said before, that is like a side mission which is insignificant compared to their main goal. That’s just how it is. To put it simply, this ambush is just one part of a bigger scheme.”

“An ambush of that scale? And it’s nothing but just one part of a bigger scheme? In that case, what is this bigger scheme of theirs?”

“This is just my guess, but I bet it’s to confirm something.”

“Confirm something?”

The already confused Matsubara was even more confused than before, Sugadome’s gaze turned serious as he then explained.

“Just how serious is Sakashita Heavy Industry in reclaiming Kuzusuhara ruin? It’s that kind of confirmation. It seems that ever since the great transport season started, they have been sending more and more monsters from the east bit by bit, I bet they were trying to confirm it ever since that time.”

The monsters from further east that were sent here were strong enough to be designated as bounty monsters in Kugamayama city. It was to test if Sakashita Heavy Industry would still send their important personnel into an area with such abnormality.

It was a check to see how far Sakashita would go in order to transport their important personnel to Kugamayama city for the sake of reclaiming Kuzusuhara ruin. It was all just for confirmation. Shirou’s kidnap attempt only meant that much to them. Thus, it was not that important for them to successfully kidnap Shirou. They were only testing how Sakashita would react, as such, their real aim had already been fulfilled.

Matsubara was so surprised after hearing that explanation. He then returned back to himself and inadvertently asked.

“I-Is it really that important? To the point that they would go that far?!!”

“It’s just my guess. It’s from someone responsible for the transport request, connecting the dots without any evidence. So, I believe it doesn’t really serve as a good hypothesis. At the very least, I believe that there’s something in Kuzusuhara ruin that would even rope in the other big 5 corporations. At the very least, the upper echelons, Tatsumori and Tsukisada must know something.”

Sugadome had a serious look on his face as he continued.

“Judging from how the big five reacted, there is something there that is big enough to shift the power balance between us, or at least, that possibility exists and is very likely. Well, I bet if any evidence which confirms my hypothesis and that thing were to come up, Tatsumori and Tsukisada would even go as far as to openly wage a war against us. So, they should not have strong evidence about the existence of such a thing. That’s why I believe they went this far to check our reaction. In order to probe if we know something about that thing as well.”

Matsubara was so surprised that he did not know what to say. Thus, Sugadome casually continued.

“If I may add one more thing, I bet that something is also the reason why Yanagisawa is so obsessed with staying in Kugamayama city.”

“Do you think that he knows the existence of such a thing with absolute certainty? And he’s trying to get it?”

“Don’t even think about trying to dig it out from him. It’s fine to just keep our distance and monitor him. In the worst-case scenario, he might even counter investigate us, and it would be a huge pain in the neck if he infiltrates Sakashita.”

“R-Roger that!”

Matsubara tensed up as he realized that he had heard something that was of vital importance. Sugadome then relaxed as if to ease the tense mood.

“Well, currently, it’s nothing but just a guess. There’s no need to be overly concerned by it. At the very least, we are actually not that serious about exploring Kuzusuhara ruin and we both know that. The problem is that there are people who don’t know that.”

Due to Yanagisawa’s deal with Tsubaki, the relics carried out from the area under Tsubaki to Kugamayama city had brought the city a huge inflow of capital. To guard the area under Tsubaki, City Management bought many expensive powered suits from the front-line. The manufacturer of those powered suits were the corporations under Sakashita, that was why Sakashita earned quite a hefty sum from the deal as well.

That was also the reason why Sakashita Heavy Industry was willing to lend their old-world connector to Yanagisawa. But for those who did not know that, it seemed to them as if Sakshita was gathering a powerful military force in Kugamayama city.

The information control that Sakshita put up for the sake of Shirou’s safety as well the effort they took to conceal his escape seemed like Sakashita was trying to hide their military movement around the city.

Moreover, considering Yanagisawa’s involvement as well, those who did not know the full story had enough suspicion to interfere with their business.

To top it off, at the moment, there were many factions and people gathered in Kugamayama city, which invited a lot of misunderstandings.

After Sugadome gave a short explanation regarding the matter, he then gave one order to Matsubara.

“Though I said quite a lot of things back there, there’s no need for you to be worried about it. You just need to focus on finding Shirou-kun at the moment. Go. I will be waiting for your report.”

“Understood!”

Matsubara lightly bowed and left the room.

Now that Sugadome was left alone in the room, his face turned serious and his gaze was turned to the middle of the room, there was a holographic projector in the middle of the room.

“Connect.”

The device recognized Sugadome’s voice and started working. After a short time, an image of a young boy appeared in Sugadome’s vision.

“How’s the progress?”

The young boy frowned.

“Like hell I can do anything in such a short span of time. I’ll contact you when we get some progress.”

“Whether there’s progress or not, it’s important to give a regular report, you know?”

He then sighed. The young boy using Sakashita Heavy Industry’s secret line was Shirou.

__*__*__*__

On the night when Shirou escaped, when Sugadome entered his room, he saw someone there. Someone he did not expect. This figure was created by a holographic device, which had been turned on remotely, showing a figure of someone familiar. It was Shirou.

Sugadome was a bit surprised since he did not expect that at all, but he quickly sighed exasperatedly and looked at Shirou.

“You’re a pretty rude brat, you know that? You can at least make an appointment beforehand.”

Shirou was surprised. He did not expect that Sugadome would be this calm. But he quickly returned to his usual smile and said to Sugadome.

“Well, my apologies. I do feel bad for coming without saying anything first, unfortunately, it is impossible for me to make an appointment at the moment. Though I do feel that I should talk to you directly about this.”

Sugadome took a seat. He then tapped on the table with his finger as if to let Shirou know of his location.

“In that case, you should have come here directly.”

Shirou laughed awkwardly.

“Well, to be honest, that’s a little difficult for me at the moment.”

Shioru’s response had two meanings. It was impossible for a virtual image to transform into his real self and it was also impossible for his real body to go there.

Sugadome lightly sighed.

“So then, are you here to share with me the progress of your escape? Or more like, why did you escape in the first place? I’m pretty sure we didn’t restrict your freedom much to the point that you would want to run away like that. Tell me if there’s anything that you don’t like about how we’ve treated you. Your motivation to do your job is proportional to our profits. So, we’ll do our best to accommodate your wishes.”

Shirou exaggeratedly shook his head.

“No no no, that’s not the problem at all. I’m actually thankful for letting me live in such a life of luxury, and I really mean it.”

“So then, in that case, why did you run off?”

“Well, uhh, what can I say. I just thought of walking freely outside for a bit, you see.”

“Very well. But it’s dangerous to walk around without a bodyguard, you know? I’ll send some people to escort you right away, can you tell me your location right now?”

“Eh? But that would be Hammerz, right? It would be a bit awkward… It won’t be much fun walking around with someone like that…”

“In that case, we can send you a girl, you can even choose what kind of girl you want.”

“Well, to be honest, I’m quite shy… So like, it would be really awkward to walk around with an unknown girl no matter how beautiful she is.”

Sugadome showed a will to compromise, but Shirou kept coming up with a reason not to. Although they seemed to be just be talking casually from the outside, they were actually carefully probing what the other person was thinking.

“Well, to be honest, it’s not like I have any wish to defect to Tatusmori or the other corporations. I’ll return back once I have my fill of walking around, that’s why I wish you can let this slide. That will be okay, right?”

“No.”

When they could not find any middle ground, Shirou suddenly made a demand believing that there was no longer any point in continuing their conversation.

“Well, let’s talk about something else then. Actually, I’m in control of the security of this room. That is why I can use this secret line to hijack the holographic device in the room.”

“That seems to indeed be the case. Well, I think it’s unreasonable to demand other places to have the same high-quality security like what we have in Sakashita’s facilities to prevent you from hacking.”

“No no no, I had a hard time trying to get in here, you know? By normal standards, the security system here is already pretty strict. That’s why there’s nothing for you to worry about. So, putting that aside, I’m basically in control of the safety of that room. Just a little bit of change is enough to kill anyone inside it. With that being said, I wish you can let me roam outside for a bit.”

Shirou smiled and threatened Sugadome, but Sugadome did not relent at all.

“If you think you have to go so far, you can go ahead and do it. I’m sure you know well what it means to pick a fight with Sakashita.”

That calm reply from Sugadome did not show any kind of pressure, it was so casual as if he was only talking about the previous day’s weather.

But that was enough to make Shirou shiver. Sugadome’s casual warning meant that he was completely okay with Shirou being dead. After all, there was a part of him that was completely fine with giving an order to throw someone into inhumane experiments.

At the moment, Shirou had not really picked a fight with Sakashita yet. But he was bordering on doing just that. Shirou understood knew the weight of what Sugadome had said. While he was teetering along that border, he was trying to play it cool as if he was trying to trick Sugadome. He smiled bitterly and apologized.

“Sorry, I was joking too much, I’m sorry.”

“Very well.”

There was a short silence between Shirou, who desperately trying to regain his calm, and Sugadome, who’s carefully watching him. After that, Sugadome was the first one to break the silence.

“Let’s return to the matter at hand. As long as you don’t accept any escort, we can’t let you roam free. That’s why I’ll have you do work for me.”

“Work?”

“Do you know an AI by the name of Tsubaki?”

“Of course, she’s the caretaker AI of a certain area inside Kuzusuhara ruin. I don’t know the details, but she made a deal with Kugamayama city. Although Sakashita sent someone to negotiate with her, everyone including the escorts was killed while the negotiator was only left with his head, right?”

“That’s correct. I want you to create a negotiation route with that AI.”

Shirou frowned.

“No no no, that would be impossible. I’m not that good with negotiation.”

“If you can access the old-world domain, I’m sure at least she won’t kill you like those escorts.”

“No no no. That kind of AI will actually come for my head thinking that I was trying to hack her if I try to contact her through the old-world domain. In terms of the risk of death, it’s the same as those escorts you had sent there. I’m sure you already know this yourself, right?”

“If you’re talking about the risk, isn’t it the same considering you want to walk around without escorts?”

That was then the first time Sugadome’s words was tinged with a threat.

“I will not take no as an answer, you’ll do it for us.”

Shirou winced back. He did not want to risk his life for anything outside of his main goal. Although he was pushed to a corner, he had no plans to give up. However, he could also not refuse that demand. He knew well what would happen to him if he refused.

Sugadome then relaxed back and tried to bait Shirou with a reward.

“If you can do that, I can make it such that your escaping was necessary in order to create a connection to that caretaker AI.”

Shirou interpreted that reply as Sugadome being willing to let him roam free for a bit if he would become a bridge to Tsubaki.

“…Alright, I’ll do it.”

“Very well. Make sure to report regularly, that is, if you don’t want me to think that you’ve abandoned the mission.”

“I know.”

“That’s it then. I’m a busy man. The only reason why I let you take my time like this without a prior appointment is only because you had contributed substantially in the past. So make sure to remember that.”

“I understand that as well, later then.”

Shirou had a clouded expression plastered on his face as he closed the call. At the same time, his image from the holographic device also vanished.

Sugadome sank deeper into the chair and let the backrest support his weight. He then sighed and thought about what just happened.

[He understands that he was living a good life under our care, and he also understands the benefits and risks of his actions. Basically, he escaped although he knew all of that. Just what is he trying to do? What makes him want to take up all those risks? Is it for some kind of personal goal? Although I brought up Tsubaki, it does not seem to be about her. This is only my guess, but I bet his aim is not Kuzusuhara ruin.]

Sugadome knitted his eyebrows.

[Although he knew that we prioritize his wishes, he did not even ask us and decided to make a move on his own. He even rejected escorts. Which means, his goal is something that he doesn’t want Sakashita to know about. But he was not lying. He was being careful with his words since bad lies will only lead to the truth. A truth that he’s trying to hide from us. From everything gathered so far, it can be inferred that his goal does not have anything to do with the other corporations. He also didn’t lie when he said he’ll return back once he’s done with whatever he’s trying to do.]

Sugadome continued to analyse his exchange with Shirou, he then remembered a certain word.

“Just to walk around, huh?”

It was clear that Shirou's aim was not only to tour around the city. But that word also had some kind of connection to what he was doing, It was not exactly a lie. Sugadome's thoughts continued to dig deeper. Eventually, it reached a point that it was so close to the truth that Shirou would be shocked if he heard Sugadome's hypothesis.

__*__*__*__

As Shirou's image appeared through the holographic device for his regular report, Sugadome causally threw a question at him.

"So how is it going?"

Shirou lightly smiled and replied.

"I'm still sightseeing."

"I don't know what you're actually sightseeing, but it would be great if you can be done with that soon."

"Well, it's not easy to find a view that would satisfy me after all. So please be patient with it."

"I see."

Sugadome looked at Shirou with a neutral expression. But Shirou could feel like those two eyes were boring a hole through his heart. He could not help but step back a bit. Thus, he decided to change the subject as if to avoid the current subject.

"Ah, by the way, I heard that you told Hammerz to search for me. But didn't you let it slide since I'm working on connecting to Tsubaki?"

"We're dealing with you as if you had escaped. So, we can't afford to also stop the search team. If you don't like it, I suggest you get back instead of just fooling around."

"Yeah yeah. Anyway, let me thank you for not blaming Hammerz. Later then."

Shirou closed the call there.

Once Sugadome was alone again, he then mumbled.

“It seems that it’s not going well for him as well, huh?”

Judging from that reply, Sugadome decided that it was too soon to use the full power of Sakashita Heavy Industry to search for Shirou.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 246, Carol’s request

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Back in her house, Carol looked extremely distressed.

Due to her connection with Viola on top of her own information sources, Carol was more knowledgeable than most of the information brokers in Kugamayama city. She had the means to obtain secret information. But even so, she was not able to obtain the information that there was an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry who was out on the loose.

With the search actively ongoing, it was only a matter of time before the truth reached the public’s ears. Between the purchasing of equipment and hiring people for the search party, there was no doubt that funds would be flowing in preparation and during the search.

Thus, as money flowed, information flowed as well. It was possible to connect the dots. Request that seemed to be unrelated in the beginning could be seen to make sense. Search requests to look for someone else, a change in the patrol route, the number of the patrol requests posted in the Hunter office. Such requests could be chained together to draw a conclusion. A large corporation was looking for an old-world connector.

Carol was looking through that data with a pale look on her face as she pulled the hair out of her head.

"…This is bad."

As her thoughts wandered to the worst-case scenario, the image of what would happen to her crushed her spirit. In order to avoid that future, she planned to do whatever she could; even if her future self might laugh at her, mocking that she was being too paranoid.

———*—

Akira's order for his new equipment was completed in no time. They were high-performance equipment that needed special permission to be carried to Kugamayama city until not too long ago. Normally, it would take some time for them to arrive since they had to be transported from the other cities. But due to the high-ranking Hunters gathering in Kugamayama lately, his equipment was carried together with the equipment for those Hunters, thus, they immediately arrived at Shizuka's shop.

Akira was trying his new equipment in the warehouse of Shizuka's shop. Although his rifles and the augmented suit were of the same type from before, he bought better modifications.

Thanks to that, his augmented suit was even more powerful than before, and his information gathering device could scan larger areas with greater accuracy.

Moreover, he also installed a drug injection system. By loading drugs such as medicine or accelerator into his augmented suit, he would be able to use them in the middle of a fight, granting him better adaptability. To match it, Akira also ended up purchasing medicine from Shizuka's shop.

He also decided to buy the optional defensive coat which accompanied his augmented suit. Not only was it equipped with powerful forcefield armour, but Akira also opted to get the camouflaging layer which was originally restricted only to high-ranking Hunters.

Akira turned on the camouflage and looked at himself in the mirror. He raised his eyebrows as he saw his head floating in the air and laughed.

Shizuka who saw that lightly smiled and warned him.

“Although I’m sure you already know this already, that is for hiding from the monsters, so don’t use it for anything bad, okay?”

“Of course!”

Akira replied firmly, but Shizuka then smiled mischievously and said.

“Everyone says so too only to end up doing bad things, you know? After all, it’s the perfect equipment for peeking.”

Akira did not expect such a response and thought that it was unlike her to say that to him. Thus, he pouted.

“I won’t do something like that.”

Shizuka smiled wryly at him, Alpha who had her usual smile on her face interjected.

“If you want to peek at someone, you can just look at me after all, right?”

“Yeah, you’re right.”

Just like how Akira did not expect Shizuka’s words, Alpha also did not expect that reply from him.

“Oh, you didn’t even deny that, huh?”

“Well, it’s all thanks to a certain someone that I’m already completely used to it already.”

Akira said so and did not pursue it any further. But Alpha lightly giggled and replied to him.

“As I thought, it’s not good enough if you can’t touch me, huh? But don’t worry, with the realistic feedback effect installed in your current augmented suit, I can make you feel as if you’re touching a real body, you know? So, you’ll have no problems touching me.”

Many of the expensive augmented suits were equipped with a realistic feedback effect such that the augmented suits could transfer sensations to their users so that they could effectively use difficult weapons through their thick gloves.

Akira’s augmented suit at the moment was a rather pricey one. With the help of Alpha’s advanced computation ability, she could create a feedback effect that perfectly replicated the sensation of a real object. In short, although it was still nothing more but an imitation, Akira could technically touch Alpha now.

Alpha smiled bewitchingly and pushed her chest to Akira. Akira’s face turned stern as if to make sure that he would not react to it. Alpha was greatly satisfied by that reaction and giggled.

Shizuka also noticed that slight change. But since she did not know that Alpha was also there, she thought that it was her fault and apologized to Akira.

“Ah, I’m sorry, did I tease you too much?”

Akira flusteredly shook his head.

“Ah, no, not at all…”

Shizuka stepped next to Akira, who was still trying to find the right word to say and gently hugged him. Her left hand circled around Akira’s back and pulled it to her chest while her right hand gently stroked his hair.

“As the shop’s owner, I don’t want to make you feel uncomfortable. So, I’m really sorry. Cheer up, okay?”

“As I said, it’s really not that…”

Akira did not fight back and just let it happen. Although the situation was not what Shizuka believed it to be, he could not tell her about Alpha. Furthermore, he was in no position to take his time to think of another excuse.

Alpha, who saw how things played out, smiled teasingly.

“As I thought. Being able to touch is an important thing. But with that being said, it’s not like I can do that to your face at the moment. That’s pretty sad.”

“Shut up already!”

Akira blushed but still at least managed to say that.

Of course, Shizuka did not know about that exchange between Akira and Alpha. However, her intuition was telling her that Akira was not angry at her. Thus, she smiled in relief.

After Akira finished checking his new equipment in the warehouse, he returned back to the counter with Shizuka. He then handed his Hunter ID to Shizuka and processed the payment.

Shizuka used the terminal in her shop to read the data from Akira’s Hunter ID. She then calculated the total price and processed the payment before returning the ID back to Akira. After that, she smiled happily but with a tint of bitterness as she said to Akira.

“That really pulled the shop’s revenue up. Although it might be weird to hear this from me, it’s actually not healthy for a business to rely so heavily on one person.”

Akira lightly laughed and replied.

“Well, the only thing that I can say is I’m sorry and I’ll be in your care again for the next purchase.”

“Don’t worry about it. I will look forward to your next visit to Cartridge Freak.”

Shizuka replied with a rather formal tone. Though, her smile was more for an important friend instead of for an important customer.

They then spent some time just chatting as Shizuka suddenly threw a question.

“By the way, Akira, what is your next plan? Your job for that transport request basically just finished, right? But you were quite hurried to get your new equipment. Do you already have something to do?”

“Not at all, I’m thinking of taking it easy for a while.”

He did not know how long he should wait, but one thing was for sure, his equipment from the frontline would arrive if he just waited long enough. His plan until then was to spend his days training with Alpha.

“I see, that’s a good idea. But it’s you we’re talking about here, I bet you’ll just go off on another mission soon. You should make sure to get a good rest once in a while, you know? And the time when you’re hospitalized is not counted as a rest time, okay?”

Akira smiled wryly knowing that he was not being trusted here.

“Don’t worry. I’m really planning to take it easy for the time being. Even if I’m going out on another Hunter mission, I’m planning only taking light and short jobs just to make sure that my skill won’t get rusty.”

“Well, I guess with your current equipment you’ll have no worries fighting against monsters around this area. It should be fine as long as you don’t go further to the east or to the inner part of the ruins, right?”

Akira replied firmly.

“Exactly, and of course, I won’t go to such dangerous places. I’ll be sure to turn down any requests that warrant me to go there.”

“That confidence often turns into something that might kill you, so be careful when you’re out there.”

“Yes.”

Hearing such a firm reply from Akira, Shizuka smiled, satisfied.

Once he was done, Akira returned to his home. He parked his bike inside his garage and started unloading the carriage that he was dragging with his bike.

Originally, this foldable carriage was something that was to be dragged with a vehicle. Furthermore, all the supplies and equipment that he bought were nowhere light. But his bike could muster even more horsepower than a normal vehicle. Thus, had no problem dragging that carriage.

Akira was truly satisfied with his new bike.

“Though I’m planning to buy a vehicle soon, I guess I will be fine for a while with this bike, huh? If it’s possible, I want to get my next vehicle also from somewhere around Zegelt city, just like this bike.”

For some reason, Akira kept losing his vehicles one by one. Some were crushed to the point that they did not look like a vehicle any longer. But his newest bike survived just fine even after going through those intense battles. He did not even have to send it out for repairs, his only expense was the energy tank recharge.

Akira looked at his new bike and grinned, hoping that this time, he would be able to have a long-term relationship with his new bike.

Alpha suddenly said with her usual smile.

“I think you don’t even need such a vehicle though. After all, once your new equipment from the front line arrives, I’ll have you complete the rest of my request, you know? At that time, it’d be easier if you brought a bike instead of a large vehicle. So, if it’s possible, I want you to get an even better bike.”

Alpha just said such an important detail so casually which caused Akira’s brain to take some time to process it before he finally showed surprise.

“Your request is to explore a ruin, right?”

“Yep.”

“I see… So, we’re finally going to do it, huh?”

Akira’s face turned serious.

“Did I make you wait too long?”

Alpha smiled.

“Not at all, you’re actually faster than I calculated.”

“I see.”

After hearing that answer, Akira smiled happily.

The request that he accepted from Alpha was to go to an extremely dangerous ruin. He had been preparing himself for that mission ever since he met Alpha. He had gone through many predicaments, one difficult battle after another as if there was no end to it, but finally, he was able to see the finish line.

Akira looked at Alpha, his gaze was filled with emotions. Alpha smiled and looked back at Akira. After a short silence, Alpha smiled wryly and spoke up.

“Well, the main problem now is when the equipment will arrive though.”

Akira smiled bitterly too.

“You’re right, I wonder when they’ll arrive.”

“If it’s taking too long, it might be better to take them yourself instead of waiting for them to be transported here.”

“You have a point … Well, it’s a good idea, but…”

The giant bug nest swarm the size of an island. Flying monsters that blocked the sun like a giant umbrella. Going near the front line just to get his new equipment meant to cross through the areas where such monsters roamed. And this time, he would be going alone without the support of the inter-city transport. Akira could not help but frown when he imagined that.

“Well, that would depend on the situation, but for now, let’s just wait.”

“Y-Yeah, right.”

Alpha smiled as she warned Akira.

“But we need to make sure that your skill won’t get rusty, so I’ll have you train while we wait.”

Akira firmly replied.

“Of course!”

Akira knew he could get through the training with his resolve, but that was not the case for monsters. Thus, he was planning to do everything that he could since that was also a part of his responsibility.

That was when a sudden call reached Akira’s terminal. It was from Carol.

__*__*__*__

Akira rode his bike through the wasteland. Although he was heading to the Mihazono ruin, he was not going to the ruin, but to meet Carol near the ruin.

The content of the call back in the garage was basically a request from Carol to him. He thought that Carol was inviting him to work together and declined. He stated that he was planning to take it easy for the time being. However, she replied: ‘It’s perfect. In that case, you should meet with me to discuss the details’.

Carol said that it would be great if Akira could come to see her, but if it was difficult, she did not mind going to meet him instead. After hearing that, he was uncertain but eventually decided to go himself. To be honest, he was also interested in knowing what kind of request she had. He also thought that it was not right to just lock himself in his house to train while waiting for his equipment to arrive. Especially when there was a request that Carol said was perfect to take it easy for the time being.

The ground of the wasteland was far from being easy to traverse through, but even so, Akira was pacing his bike at high speed. He was forcing his way through the hard terrain using his advanced bike that was even capable of flight. The wheels sometimes did not even touch the ground as he rode on it. A nearby Hunter who saw that by pure chance could not hide their surprise.

Last time, Akira took detours in order to avoid areas that were hard to traverse through to the Mihazono ruin. However, since he did not have to do that and just went in an almost straight line, it did not take much time for him to reach Mihazono ruin.

As he was looking at the blazing scene passing past him, Akira smiled amusedly and said.

“I’ll arrive in no time! I’m really glad I bought this bike!”

Seeing Akira excited, Alpha smiled bitterly and warned him.

“The faster you go, the harder it is to control the bike and the worse it will be if you crash, so make sure to be extra careful.”

“I know.”

Although Alpha had the bike fully under control, Akira was the one in control at the moment. Thanks to the bike’s advanced balancer, Akira was able to ride the bike at high speed even with his relatively mediocre driving skill.

With his rifle that was way above the standard of Kugamayama city, Akira ploughed through monsters in front of him as he continued driving. Even a Greedy Crocodile that he encountered did not pose any challenge to him.

That Greedy Crocodile had a rather large body and there were multiple guns growing out from its back. Its whole body was protected by strong scales. If it continued to grow and roamed around the usual route, it would not be strange for it to be designated as a bounty monster. However, Akira's LEO multi-rifles easily drilled bullets through its strong scales and destroyed its inner organs without discriminating between the flesh and the mechanical parts, killing it immediately.

Akira was so surprised by the firepower of his new rifle, he then calmed himself down and thought calmly first before asking Alpha.

"Alpha, that one was a relatively strong one, right?"

"That depends on your standards. But if it was the past you, you would have had a hard time fighting that. Based on that fact, it was a relatively strong one."

"Thought so."

Akira thought for a bit before continuing.

"My equipment is already pretty powerful, and is it still impossible for me to challenge the ruin that you want me to go to?"

"That's a difficult question. But there's no doubt that it'll be safer to wait until the equipment from the front line arrives."

"…It is that dangerous, huh?"

Akira frowned, but Alpha smiled at him and added.

"As I said in the past. You would have to challenge that ruin without my support. That's why it's better to get the best equipment you can get first before going there. Honestly, you can get better equipment by waiting, so I can't really recommend you to challenge that ruin now. No need to be so eager. If you naively believe that you can just withdraw if it gets dangerous, that will only get you killed."

But Alpha’s smile slightly changed to one of provoking a challenge as she continued.

“Well, if you have no plan to return back alive, it makes it way easier though. You might even be able to do that now in that case. So, do you still want to go?”

Before Akira could say anything, Alpha then added.

“Don’t worry, I have no plan to let you die for my sake. That’s why let’s just wait until your new equipment arrives.”

“I see, yeah. Let’s do that.”

Akira thought that it was okay if Alpha was okay with it too, that was why he did not think any further after that regarding this matter.

__*__*__*__

In the meeting place, there was a huge camping-car parked. It was covered with armour plating that was normally used for powered suits and had multiple machine guns perched on its roof.

Akira was a bit surprised by the size of that vehicle. Carol came out of the vehicle and invited Akira in. Akira proceeded into the living room, the ceiling of that room was high and was very well decorated, even better than common inns.

Akira sat waiting on a large sofa as Carol returned with a drink and sat in front of him.

“Since you came all the way here, I assume that you’re interested in this request, right?”

“Well, at least enough to make me come here to listen to the details. I’ll decide whether to take it or not only after you tell me the details. So then, what is this job that can earn me money while taking it easy? If it did not come from you, I would have declined believing that it’s nothing but a fraud, you know?”

Akira said so and intentionally looked at Carol with a gaze full of suspicion. But Carol instead found it amusing and smiled.

“And you still decided to come here yourself. I’m really happy to hear that.”

“…As I said, I do want to know the details. Though I will leave now if it has something to do with Viola.”

Carol smiled bitterly.

“Even if she looks like that, she doesn’t lie, you know? Although I do admit that she did not use that fact for anything good. If you can ascertain the content of what she is saying, you can earn quite a lot of profit from her, you know?”

“I see, in that case, she’s a dangerous person to me.”

Akira replied instantly and firmly, seeing that, Carol only smiled wryly.

“Don’t worry, this time, it has nothing to do with Viola. To be more precise, it has nothing to do with anyone else, it’s purely a request from me.”

“That’s good to hear. So then, what is it?”

As Akira pushed the subject back to be about the request, Carol then replied with a serious face.

“Akira, I want to hire you as my bodyguard.”

Akira frowned and tilted his head. Carol then continued with a solemn expression.

The length of the request was undetermined, normally it would warrant Akira to be around Carol all the time. But with that being said, there was no need to be guarding her all the time, he just needed to be there when Carol needed help. Although he would be acting as a bodyguard, it was not like he would do all the fighting, Carol would help as much as she could as well.

Or more like, Akira did not have to do anything if Carol could handle it just fine.

The reward was to be negotiated later. If Akira had no particular demands, it would be calculated per day plus bonuses based on how many and how difficult the battles that Akira had to face during the job.

Akira was also free to take another Hunter job in the middle of that. Carol would even help too. Akira was also allowed to just rest at home if he wanted to. Either way, Akira just had to be around Carol, that was the requirement that Carol imposed.

Akira was a bit uncertain after hearing Carol's explanation. Judging from what she said, it was indeed a job where he could make money by taking it easy. However, that was exactly why it was very suspicious. Thus, Akira asked a question regarding the payment.

"Just how much do you plan to pay me for each day?"

"Let's see. How about, you can sleep with me every day? Or so I want to say but, I'm sure you will say no if I offer that. I bet most men would be really happy with that offer though… Well, just to confirm, will that be okay with you?"

"No, make it money instead."

"Thought so. Hmmm…."

Carol was seriously at loss. She calculated the funds that she had, predicted how long Akira would have to guard her, and estimated the least amount of wage that Akira would be willing to accept. After that, she carefully made her offer.

"1 million Aurum per day?"

"1 million Aurum, huh…"

This time, it was Akira who was at loss. For him, it was a good offer. But he could not tell if it was good enough considering the job that he would have to do. Akira might believe this to be a decent request if someone had told him that this amount was appropriate for someone like him. However, as long as his suspicion of what this request entailed was not cleared up, he could not shake off the suspicion that Carol was trying to trick him. After all, she was offering him a huge amount of money from his point of view without considering whether it matched the difficulty of the request.

However, Carol interpreted Akira's reaction in the opposite direction and said to him.

"Well, it's true that it might be on the cheaper side for you, but I don't have much money to spare, you see. Moreover, although you need to be around me all the time, it's not like you have that many restraints. So, like, can you make a compromise here?"

Akira was being extra careful so as to not show his shock as he spoke to Alpha in secret.

"Alpha, what do you think?"

"At the very least, she's honestly hoping that you would make a compromise here."

"I see… 1 million Aurum per day, huh? Is it cheap?"

"I can't really answer that question. Well, if you think it's too high, you can just think of it as Carol judging your skill highly."

Akira concluded that it was at least not some kind of fraud. Carol was not trying to entice him with such a high wage. Thus, he decided to abandon his suspicion which came from the high wage and moved on to his next worry.

"In the first place, why do you need a bodyguard?"

Although it was a completely understandable and expected question, Carol suddenly froze.

"It's just to be safe. I can't really tell you all the details, but it's just… There are a lot of things happening around lately. It's just to make sure that I won’t get roped into any trouble. It’s not like someone is actively looking for me. If I must add one more thing, it might actually just be me being too paranoid. There might actually be no need for me to get a bodyguard at all. But it still worries me, you see. So, it’s fine if you want to laugh at me, saying that I’m too paranoid, I just want to feel safe right now.”

Akira once again checked with Alpha, and Alpha confirmed that what Carol said was not a lie. After that, he thought for a bit.

“A lot has been going on, huh…”

Akira could not help but think that employing him as a bodyguard in order to avoid misunderstanding and getting roped into trouble was actually counter-effective. However, Carol was someone who went along well with Viola. So, there was no way Carol did not know about that.

“Let me ask you this first. Why did you pick me?”

“Of course, it’s because I know you’re strong.”

“It might be weird to hear this from me, but I often cause trouble or get roped into one, you know?”

Akira remembered the time when Kibayashi stated this while laughing so hard that he found it hard to breathe. At that time and even now, he couldn’t deny it at all…

“Are you sure you want me to guard you when you don’t want to get roped into trouble?”

Akira was able to ask this question extremely casually. It was thanks to the hard life that he had gone through, which gave birth to his twisted personality. However, Carol did not seem bothered by that at all and giggled.

“It’s not like they happened because of you, right? So, I don’t really mind. I know about your past well. Even so, I still decided to ask you. You don’t need to worry about it. But if you know yourself well, and believe that is the case, it would be great if you can be extra careful while guarding me. Though, I won't force you."

"Alpha."

"She's being very careful with her words, but she's not lying."

"Basically, she's hiding something, huh?"

"She did say that she can't tell you all the details, and by the way, she was being honest when she said that."

"I see. I guess that's basically what it is, huh?"

Seeing Akira being uncertain again, Alpha curiously asked him.

"To be honest, you can just refuse it if you're that suspicious, you know? Or is that you actually want to accept it?"

When Alpha pointed that out, Akira suddenly realized his own feeling and found it surprising. He realized the bias in his thoughts. He once again re-evaluated the important questions that he should ask regarding the request and asked those questions to Carol with a serious expression.

"I'll apologize first since I'm sure this will offend you but answer this. You're not trying to trick me into something with this request, right?"

Carol did not look away and locked her gaze with Akira's somber gaze. She then replied with a serious tone.

"It depends on how you look at it. If you mean as in causing you trouble, then no. If you mean as in roping you to a fight against people that are way stronger than you expected, then the answer is still a no. Though I can't deny that you might find yourself in a situation where you think so. After all, it's not like I can accurately predict who and what I am going to fight against. If you say that you won't accept it because I can't tell you those details, then there's nothing that I can do, I'll just give it up."

As Akira asked for her real intention, Carol gave the best answer that she could give right now. Then, there was silence as they stared at each other. Akira was the one who broke that silence.

“Alright, I accept.”

Carol’s tense expression relaxed as she sighed in relief.

“Thank you.”

“Sorry, it’s not like I wanted to prolong the negotiation. Someone once told me to be extra careful so as not to get tricked. That’s why I was being very careful.”

“It’s fine. Just like what that person said. The most expensive stuff is free stuff. Although it’s difficult to live if you’re being too careful, you won’t even be able to live if you don’t have any suspicion at all. Though it might be weird for someone who often works with Viola to say this, but it’s indeed very hard to find a good balance.”

Seeing Carol smiling wryly, Akira replied with a bitter smile.

After that, Akira and Carol continued to discuss the finer details. That was when Alpha, who discovered something surprising, asked Akira.

“By the way, Akira, why didn’t you ask me if she was lying on the very last exchange?”

“Hm? Well, I just thought that I should at least make the final decision myself. It just doesn’t feel right to rely on you for everything. If I get tricked because of that, that just means I’m really foolish enough to get tricked.”

“Is that so? Well, it’s fine if that’s the case.”

Alpha thought for a bit if it was better to tell Akira her thoughts but eventually decided not to. After all, if his decision was a mistake, that would push him to rely on her more.

Carol was being as honest as she could to Akira. For the parts where she could not, she did her best to carefully choose her words.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 247, Common Happenings

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Not too long ago, Mihazono ruin was filled with Hunters after the ruckus that happened recently. However, at the moment, it had calmed down considerably and returned to its usual state.

With that being said, it was not like it had completely returned back to before that ruckus. The area around the Seranthal building was guarded by soldiers dispatched by Kugamayama city. They were securing a road which connect the Hunter Office and Seranthal building. After that, they placed the Seranthal building under lockdown, controlled by Kugamayama city management.

Akira went to that Mihazono ruin once again with Carol. They were there to do Carol's Hunter job, which was about collecting data for a map. Akira was accompanying her as her bodyguard. They were spending time talking to each other while exploring the ruin.

"But still, I didn't expect you would even prepare a large camping car like that just to explore a ruin, are you really that invested in this job?"

For Akira, who always thought of going to the ruin and returning back home on the same day, the idea of preparing a place to sleep nearby was rather foreign to him.

Carol smiled smugly and replied.

“Well, yep, pretty much. Although it’s only for a short time, I’m planning on going to the ruin regularly every day. So, it’s better to have a camping car nearby instead of having to go back and forth from the city every day. The inn in the Hunter Office is not suitable for a beauty like me after all.”

There were many Hunters who went to explore the ruins for many days. In case they were challenging a ruin which would take a huge group of Hunters and a long time to explore, forget a camping car, they would even build temporary housing. Of course, Akira, who always worked alone, never experienced something like that.

Even so, considering the inside of the camping vehicle, it was indeed a bit too excessive.

Akira hummed. “So, that grandiose inside is simply for the sake of appearance, huh? Well, there’s a bath too. You’re really invested in this job.”

“Just how much do you think my body cost? It is worth a lot and everyone evaluates it highly, you know? Don’t you want to have a taste at least once?”

Carol smiled invitingly at Akira. That wonderful body combined with her foxiness had felled many men, but that was not the case for Akira.

“No thanks.”

“You’re as cold as ever, you know?”

Carol lightly sighed. She then scanned Akira’s body and exasperatedly said.

“You’ve really grown up, you’re taller now and your body is much more pronounced. But even so, you still prefer food over women, huh?”

“Sorry, but that’s the case at the moment.”

Akira lightly smiled and said so, Carol responded with a bitter smile.

“Good grief, this is depressing. Especially when I’m actually doing very well with my side job.”

Akira and Carol kept having such a conversation while they were exploring the ruin. They then noticed another group of Hunters coming in their direction. Their equipment matched the difficulty level of Mihazono ruin and they got close enough to each other to scan the other’s equipment. That was also when the other group drove away to the side of the road as if to avoid Akira and Carol.

Just like that, they passed each other. The Hunters looked at Akira and Carol with concerned looks as they were carrying equipment that did not match the difficulty level of Mihazono ruin. As a matter of fact, their equipment was way too powerful. Some of them looked scared, shocked, or even distrustful and envious of Akira and Carol.

Akira himself also noticed that and felt rather happy knowing that he had really become strong. He then looked at his other teammate, who also had strong equipment as well and was interested in what she had equipped.

Carol noticed Akira’s gaze and teasingly called him out.

“Oh, what is it? Are you interested in me after all?”

“Nope, that’s not it. It’s just that augmented suit, that is one of those powerful augmented suits, right?”

On top of her body-tight inner suit, Carol was using a suit that looked like a simple combination of thin belts and an exposing swimsuit. To top it off, she had an augmented suit that only covered certain parts of her body. That augmented suit had openings on her chest and thighs, which were held together by belts.

That augmented suit including its inner suit were old-world items that only high-ranking Hunters could get. Their performance and sense of design were of the old-world’s. Akira could feel that Carol’s augmented suit gave the same feeling as Melshia's augmented suit and the augmented suit that Alpha once used.

Carol smiled smugly.

"Yup. I renewed all my equipment including my guns. Your equipment looks pretty powerful too, but I think mine are still better."

Akira raised his eyebrows.

"Oh? Is that so? I don't mean to offend you, but you don't have the money to buy equipment of that calibre, no?"

"Oh my, let me at least tell you this. I'm pretty rich although I look like this, you know? Although, it's not money from my Hunter job."

Carol understood that Akira asked that rather rude question with zero bad intention, but even so, she still deliberately made an offended expression. Akira, who saw that, reflected on himself. He realized that it was rather rude of him to say that.

"Ah, sorry. I just thought that kind of equipment usually has Hunter Rank restrictions placed on them."

Carol's expression returned back to normal. Though, it was not like she was actually offended in the first place.

"Ohh, that, huh? Well, it's true that I can't buy them, but there are other routes where I can procure them."

"Other routes?"

Akira tilted his head in confusion, seeing that, Carol happily explained to him.

The Hunter Rank restriction on powerful equipment was mostly applied by the manufacturers. As long as it was not equipment for the front-line, normally, the Corporate Government would not put any rank restriction on them.

Moreover, it was not like there was an exact ruling on how to decide the equipment's restriction. In the end, that restriction could be adjusted by the discretion of the manufacturer. For example, when a group of Hunters wanted to buy them, it was up to the manufacturer to decide whether to judge based on the groups' highest Hunter Rank, or lowest one, or the middle one, or by taking the average.

Of course, most would not be willing to sell a Rank 100 equipment to a Rank 10 Hunter even if they were in the same team. That was why such restrictions were not set in stone and up to their whims. Nonetheless, it served its purpose. It was basically a way to motivate Hunters to reach a higher Hunter Rank and to grow or join a large Hunter team. After all, it was easier for the Hunter Office to manage them when they were in groups.

Carol used that to slip through the restriction rule. Since there were many high-ranking Hunters coming to Kugamayama city lately, she temporarily joined a high ranking team to cheat that Hunter Rank restriction. This was where her side job came in handy.

Carol had already left that team. But just because she was no longer in the team, it was not like they could reclaim the equipment that she bought. There were many teams that broke up because of matters between men and women. So, it was impossible for the manufacturer to manage their products to that extent.

Thanks to this method, Carol was able to get equipment that was way outside her Hunter Rank.

After hearing that explanation, Akira sighed exasperatedly.

"…What can I say… To be honest, it would be great if you could behave a bit more."

"It's fine, isn't it? It's easier on you too when I'm this well-equipped, no?"

"Well, that's true, but still…"

It was not like Akira himself was a stickler when it came to rules. Since the mystery of how Carol got her equipment was solved, Akira was no longer interested in it now.

On the other hand, Carol herself had to make a compromise with her principals to be able to get her current set of equipment. To be more exact, she had to make peace with her principle to only sleep with those who paid her with money from dangerous jobs.

Even when one joined a high ranking Hunter team, if the difference in equipment was that big, even the seller would be troubled as well. This also meant that it was no trouble at all if the seller was to completely ignore it. Fortunately, in the case of Carol, she knew someone that she could manipulate. It was those who worked with Sheryl's gang.

It did not take much work for Carol to make an officer from Kiryou to fall for her. She also did the same to the person written as the buyer in the contract. That man also paid for her equipment, which Carol offered her services in return. Thus, she did not have to go through Hunter Rank checks to obtain her equipment. Even if it came to light later, the seller would only take it as those men getting manipulated by a bad girl. They were already under Carol's charm. They no longer cared about the risk involved in selling and purchasing expensive equipment for a low-rank Hunter, who otherwise would have failed the Hunter Rank requirements.

However, Carol did not find this to be amusing at all. She considered what might happen to her if her fear turned to reality, and even resorted to this.

Carol and Akira walked carefully inside the ruin while gathering information about the area for map brokers. Akira left his bike behind next to Carol's camping car.

Carol took the front as they proceeded. She stopped many times while they walked. She would regularly check the information data from the information gathering device that she placed there beforehand before continuing to check the other areas.

“Carol, why do we have to collect the data ourselves? Can’t we just use some kind of long-range data transfer to regularly transfer the data or something?”

“I use that kind of device in some areas. Not all. For those, sometimes, monsters manage to catch its signal. They searched for the location of the terminal and destroyed it. That’s why, including the collection of area data, Hunters mainly use devices that are mostly only for receiving signals. The ones I’m personally collecting from, are set to only send data when they receive a certain encrypted message first. Thanks to that, the monsters can’t find them.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

“Well, information about where terminals get broken is actually quite important to those who are deciding on a safe route to take.”

After the last ruckus in Mihazono ruin, things had started to change. The drones guarding the areas, the distribution of monsters, the patrol routes, all of them were completely changed. That was also the case for the city maintenance drones as well. In the past, they only cleaned up rubbles, but now, they even started to rebuild buildings as well.

With all these changes in the ruin, its map, which was formerly free, had become highly valuable. Of course, the better the accuracy of the map, the more expensive it became. In order to decide whether a map was worth its price, people often asked how the map brokers gathered the information about the patrol time and the area. A good map broker would be able to answer that easily.

Akira listened closely to that explanation with great interest.

“So, we’re exploring the ruin in order to get better accuracy for the map, huh? Being a map broker is not easy.”

“It’s just one of the many methods to make maps. There are also people who opt to buy information from Hunters who return back from the ruin and use that information to construct a map. There are also cases where they force someone indebted to them to explore the ruin while carrying inadequate equipment. They would be equipped with an information-gathering device, of course, but they are not expected to return back alive."

The fact that a certain Hunter with a certain skill level did not return alive could also be valuable information to map out the dangerous area of a ruin. Depending on the debt, these people might get sent to locations where there was not enough information regarding that area.

"So that's one of the things that would happen to people deep in debt, huh?"

"Although it sounds cruel, depending on their luck and skill, they can repay their debt that way, you know? Many Hunters die meaninglessly inside the ruin after all, so I think it's one of the better choices."

Although it was rare, there were Hunters who awakened their talents because of such a cruel fate. These Hunters would sign a contract with some company in exchange for offsetting most of their debt. After all, the eastern district always needed more skilled Hunters. As long as they had the skills, Hunters could always find a way to get back up. Though, many of them die before they have that chance. Also, skilled Hunters would not get drowned in debt in the first place.

Carol had a long history with Viola, so she knew way more than Akira regarding what would happen to those in debt.

The Corporate Government wished people in the eastern district would do honest businesses. This included respecting their basic human rights. However, there was room on how to interpret what was entailed as human rights. After all, in order to push the development of the eastern district, there were many occasions where they had to infringe on human rights.

This included human experimentation. The level of this infringement depended on how much debt one had, the less the debt, the more their human rights were properly respected. One of the prime examples of that was the free food distributed to the slums. If the debt only amounted to a few hundred Aurum, they would only be forced to consume food coming from suspicious sources.

But the opposite was also true, the bigger the debt, the more the danger they had to face. For example, the common drugs sold in the eastern district were only sold to the public after they were tested on people first. More often than not, the stronger the drug, the stronger the side effect was. The nanomachines inside the medicine might worsen a wound instead of healing it. In the worst-case scenario, they might face a fate worse than death.

As the debt got higher, it eventually scaled closer to life-threatening situations. When the debt reached a number that was unreasonably high, they would be forced to undergo hopeless experiments to repay their debt. They would be forced to take substances that would treat them no better than expendable pawns. Although there was no public example of something like that, it was common sense in the eastern district. That common sense had already spread widely and many in the eastern district would rather choose to die instead of getting into debt.

Akria could not help but frown after hearing some examples from Carol. But he then remembered the people who attacked Sheryl's base in the past. To pay for the compensation, they were forced into debt and were sold. At that time, some of them said that they rather chose death.

When that happened, Akira obliged and granted their wish. And after hearing Carol's story, he wondered if it was true. They did find a better fate by dying there.

———*—

Carol's camping car was even equipped with a bath. Akira, who spent the night there as Carol's bodyguard, borrowed the bath after they were done with their Hunter job for the day.

For a bath inside a moving vehicle, it was a relatively big bath. Although it was only enough for one person, it was large enough for someone to extend their legs inside of it. Or more like, leaving the size aside, it was even a better bath than the one Akira had back at home. To be more precise, the warm water there was mixed with extra stuff. Akira remembered that Carol once said Akira was only using a cheap bath and he could understand that difference now as he was enjoying his bath.

Alpha was sitting on the mouth of the bath with only the part under her knees dipped inside the warm water. At first, she was also dipping inside with Akira, but Akira said that it was too cramped and told her to move away.

“Akira, I want to confirm this. How long are you planning to guard Carol?”

“Hm? It is either until she’s fine without me or until my new equipment arrives.”

“I see, that’s fine then.”

Akira frowned.

“Oh? You’re fine with that? And here I thought you would tell me to stop since I can’t train while guarding Carol.”

However Alpha teasingly replied.

“If it’s about that, there’s no need for you to worry.”

“…Is guarding Carol really that bad?”

“It at least won’t let your skills get rusty and I am not saying this because Carol is bad herself. Rather, she isn’t the source of the problem. Didn’t you say it yourself before? You often become the source of a problem or get roped into one. So that at the very least won’t let your skills get rusty.”

Akira just laughed bitterly and did not deny that at all.

While Akira was in the bath, Carol was working on constructing a map from the information that they collected that day using a terminal fixed to the camping car. At the same time, she was also browsing the net. After seeing the result, she sighed.

[Still no change, huh? It’s not like I can keep having Akira protect me like this forever. With that being said, it’s not like I can move around recklessly either, I need to be patient.]

Carol concluded that it was best for her to keep laying low and not cause any trouble for the time being while hoping that the situation would change soon.

That was when Akira returned from the bath. Carol quickly replaced the troubled look on her face with her usual smile and went to the bath. This was for the sake of keeping at least one of them, Akira or Carol, ready for a fight anytime. So, she waited until Akira finished putting on his augmented suit before starting to take off her own augmented suit.

Although there was no changing room inside the camping car, there was a curtained partition. But even so, Carol did not use it and started undressing in front of him. Akira finally showed a reaction when he saw Carol's beautiful body that she had spent billions of Aurum to maintain. Unfortunately, his reaction was more of exasperation. Seeing that, she thought he was the same as always and smiled bitterly while she went to the bath.

While dipping inside the especially adjusted warm water, Carol probed her body as if to give it a full-body check. Although it looked like she was casually probing her body, her grip strength was way over what a normal human could do. It was even stronger than the power of an augmented suit.

Equipment was not the only thing that she got by compromising her principles. In order to strengthen her enhanced body, she somehow managed to acquire nanomachines distributed near the frontline. Although her outer appearance still stayed the same. An original alluring body designed to lure men, the nanomachine coursing inside it was of a completely different level. If she wished to, she could obtain a temporary superhuman body in exchange for nanomachine consumption.

In the past, she carefully washed her body for her side job. This time, she did the same but doubled for training to get used to her now powerfully enhanced body. She carefully moved her body not to practice how to entice men but to minimize the usage of her nanomachine, which was useful for fighting.

When she finished bathing and returned back, Akira was no longer inside the room. As she was puzzled as to what was going on, a call from Viola suddenly reached her. Since the notification indicated that it was an urgent call, she decided to pick it up while still buck naked. Although, she did find the timing of the call and Akira's disappearance to be equally strange,

"Viola, what's wrong?"

"Carol. You've been doing great with your side job, right? It seems that the team led by someone named Zelos mentioned that one of his men even used the team's budget for you. That man you sunk your claws in is named Babalod."

"Ahh, him, huh? And here I thought that he was being extremely generous to me. So, he even went as far as to use the team's budget, huh? To think that he would go even that far… His luck with women is really awful. So, what then?"

"When the rest of the team discovered it, he said that he was manipulated by you. And now the whole team is looking for you."

Carol heaved a huge sigh.

"I see, so, what's the situation?"

"It seems that they have already discovered your current location from an information broker. If you're planning to negotiate with them, I don't mind taking it over for you though."

"Let me think about it first. Thanks. I'll call you again."

Carol closed the call, she then shouted as she put on her augmented suit.

"Akira~! Where are you~?"

A reply came from the terminal connected to the vehicle.

"Outside, it seems that some people are heading in this direction. So I'm standing by, ready outside."

Carol was a bit surprised, and she went to check the vehicle’s radar. Although it was still outside the radius where it would send in an alert, there was indeed a signal headed in their direction. Judging from its speed, it seemed to be a vehicle that did not seem to be headed for the ruins. Although it was coming from the direction of the wasteland, if it was aiming for the ruin, it would have gone to the Hunter Office’s direction instead, not Carol’s camping car, which was parked rather far away from the Hunter Office.

Carol lightly smiled as she felt a level of reassurance on how decisive and quickly Akira responded. She proceeded to put on her augmented suit and picked up her equipment before going outside as well. She did not seem to be scared at all. Although, she did think that it was a pain in the neck. Her opponent this time was a team of high-rank Hunters. But even so, that was not a rare occurrence considering her side job. So, she told herself that she could deal with it just like usual to calm herself down.

Based on the situation, she even thought of taking care of it all by herself without Akira. After all, it was not like she employed Akira to do something like this.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 248, 10 Billion Aurum per Night

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira and Carol were waiting beside the camping car for the signal caught on their radar to arrive. It did not take long for the source of that signal to be visible to the naked eye, a large vehicle stopped near them, and two men came out from the vehicle. Both men were Hunters. Judging from their equipment, they must have come from further east of Kugamayama city.

Carol was familiar with one of them. It was Babalod, who used her service from her side job. So, it did not take much for her to guess who was the other one. As she guessed, it was Zelos, the man she had heard from Viola.

Zelos scanned Akira and Carol's equipment before lightly throwing a question.

"So you're Carol, huh?"

Carol casually replied.

"Yep."

"Well, since you even took your time to welcome us here, it means that I don't need to explain everything from the start, right?"

“Hmmm, are you here because you heard your friends praise me for my side job? If that’s the case, I’m sorry, but it’s not like I’m accepting customers all the time. So, like, can you leave for today and ask me again some other time?”

Carol already knew why Zelos was there, but she was deliberately playing coy. Zelos understood what Carol was trying to say. Thus, he then tried to carefully probe Carol’s situation.

“Actually, the money that Babalod used for you, was from the team’s budget, you see.”

“Oh my, is that so? I didn’t know that. That must be rough, so, don’t tell me that you’re here to tell me to return it.”

“It depends.”

“Are you being serious here? I’m only accepting his money and he got that money from stealing from you. It’s him that you should be asking, not me.”

“Well, normally, that would be the case, as I said, it depends.”

“Oh, so, can you elaborate?”

Up until this point, both of them were acting casual while trying to probe the other’s intention, but this is where Zelos’ attitude changed. A certain pressure emanated from him, it was a pressure unique to high-ranking Hunters. It was calm and silent yet extremely suffocating.

“It depends on whether you put your hands on him trying to cause trouble for us right from the start or not.”

Carol was smiling like usual. But she also started feeling the pressure and got a bit anxious.

Zelos reached for Babalod’s neck to further intimidate Carol.

“Although I did say that he took the team’s budget, if it was a small amount, we could solve it by ourselves. And even if it is not that small, we can still solve it by discussing it among ourselves.”

Zelos’ gaze turned sharper. His grip also became stronger. Babalod started to frown from the pain.

“But the problem is that this guy leaked a piece of secret information. So, it’s only given that we’ll get suspicious toward the person who he gave this information to. We only knew that he gave away such a crucial piece of information to you because we interrogated this fool.”

Zelos’ gaze turned thick with intimidation.

“Answer me. What are you going to do with that information?”

Carol somehow managed to maintain her calm since it was not rare for her to have to face such intimidating pressure from a high-ranking Hunter due to her side job. She then replied casually with her business smile.

“Nothing in particular.”

“I’ll interpret that as you refusing to answer.”

Zelos’ stance shifted. The situation was on the brink of a fight. Akira also tensed up, he already activated his time compression and shifted his stance as well so that he could react to any sudden movement.

But Carol smiled and replied calmly.

“I didn’t mean that, it’s just exactly as I said, I have no plan to use that information.”

“What do you mean?”

“It’s true that I received that information as a substitute for monetary gains, but it’s not like I was aiming for that information in the first place. I’m fine with getting paid anything as long as it has the same worth as the fee and I don’t really decide what that is. It was his choice to pay for my service using information gained from your team, not me.”

Carol’s face turned serious.

“Since I did my job, I have the right to receive my reward. If you don’t have enough money, you’ll have you pay for it with something else. Just because I’m not strapped for money, that doesn’t mean I’m willing to lower my fee. I have no plans to reduce the cost I set. It would reflect as me lowering my own worth. I’m sure you can understand that too, right? Or is that I’m mistaken?”

As the leader of a team of Hunters, whose jobs had death as an occupational hazard, his team members practically staked their lives to work under him. Thus, he could not deny Carol’s statement, which only left him with one choice.

“Well, yeah.”

“Well, that’s the gist of it. I don’t mind what it is as long as it is worth enough for my fee. It doesn’t matter if it’s money, or an object, or a person, or information, or just basically anything. Even if I have no idea how to use that thing. And by pure chance, this time, that thing is information. That’s all there is to it.”

Zelos could understand Carol’s argument. Thus, he lowered his pressure and disengaged. Akira also did the same after that.

But that did not mean Zelos was no longer suspicious of Carol. He kept his suspicion as he glanced at Akira.

“You’re pretty chill although you know my team is being hostile with you, is it because of that guy?”

Carol’s serious expression returned back to her usual smile.

“Well, that’s half of the reason.”

“So what’s the other half?”

“Even without him around, I’ll deal with it the same way. This is not a rare occurrence for me after all. So, I’ll just handle it the way I usually do.”

“Oh, in that case, is it okay to ask what you usually do in this situation?”

“I’ll offer you my service then explain the situation and help you understand what is actually going on. Of course, I’ll do that on a bed. Most misunderstandings get cleared after doing that, you know?”

“…I see.”

Zelos thought one more time. He was trying to judge Carol’s attitude. If she was his team’s enemy. He then added Akira’s fighting skill to the equation and finally made his conclusion as he lightly chuckled and declared.

“Ok! Fine! It seems that it’s my mistake!”

He then apologized to Carol.

“Well, I’m sorry. As the team leader, I must think about the safety of my team, you see. So, I can’t help but be extra cautious. Sorry about it.”

Carol was relieved but she did not show it externally, she just smiled and accepted Zelos’ apology.

“Don’t worry, it’s fine, it’s completely understandable and I’m already used to it too. So, what now? Do you want me to book a time for you?”

“Thank you for the offer, but I’ll refuse. As I said, we’re rather low on funds.”

“I normally make it cheap for the first time.”

“No no no, letting myself be swayed by something like that is the seed of money problems. So, I must be strict with myself on this.”

From the outside, it appeared as though two combatants were conversing peacefully with each other. Up until now, Zelos still had his hand on Babalod’s neck, but this is when he finally let go. Since Babalod was strangled off the ground, the moment he landed, he lost balance and fell to the ground, although, he somehow managed to support himself so as not to fall face-first.

Zelos glanced at Babalod and casually said to him.

“You hear that, right? So that’s it. You go deal with it yourself.”

Babalod was obviously flustered.

“W-wait for a sec, me alone?”

“Of course! If she’s the enemy of the whole team, we deal with her together. But that doesn’t seem to be the case. That’s why we won’t help you. Well, we won’t get in your way either. So do your best.”

After saying that, Zelos just moved away as if it was none of his business.

Now that Babalod was left alone to face Carol and Akira, his face turned desperate, typical only to someone cornered as he turned his focus to Carol.

Zelos only agreed to help him get back the team’s budget that he used to pay for Carol’s side job. And if it turned out that Carol was an enemy to his team, then Zelos would help him kill her and take back their funds while doing so.

But since that was not the case, Zelos’ team issue laid with Babalod and not Carol. Even if Babalod schemed to take back everything with force, this was in the end, a matter between a prostitute and her customer. Zelos did not have anything to do with it. That was what Zelos hinted at as he moved to the side.

Of course, Carol understood what he meant. She still kept her business smile from the outside as she thought of how to handle the change in the situation. She then made a dissatisfied face as she asked.

“Whoah, wait, are you serious? Isn’t that just way too pathetic?”

“Sorry, I’m desperate here. I did give you a lot of money. So, can you give it back to me? I’ll repay you later.”

How much Zelos would beat him later depended on how much he could recover from Carol. So Babalod did not have the leeway to be concerned about shame. Moreover, when he thought of how much he had given Carol, he could not help but frown.

“…In the first place, your fee is just way too high. There’s a limit on how much you can charge someone! 10 billion Aurum per night is just way out of line, you know!?”

Akira, who was listening to them with vigilance, was caught by surprise when he heard that statement. Carol, who saw that, smiled amusedly. She returned to her usual smile and explained to Babalod.

“A woman’s body can be as expensive as she wants. Moreover, I never forced you. You were okay with that fee and that’s why you used my service, right? So, there’s no way I’m okay with you asking it back after enjoying my service.”

“…But even so, I still need it back!”

Babalod took one step forward. Negotiations had ceased and he was about to make his move. Carol who saw that quickly analysed her choices to initiate the fight. But before she made her decision, Akira already stood between them.

“Carol, it’s okay to treat him as a mugger now, right?”

Carol was pretending to hesitate for a bit before giving her answer.

“Hmm, well, I guess that’s fine. Though I have one request, if it’s possible, don’t kill him or don’t injure him too much. Please beat him gently.”

“And the reason for that?”

“He’ll fetch more money that way. With him making you work like this; I’ll have him pay for your reward after all.”

“Fine then.”

Akira did not reach for his rifle, instead, he unsheathed his blade and faced Babalod.

The black blade decorated with golden linings was an optional item that came with his CA31R augmented suit. But the grip was from the modified blade that he received from Shiori.

The blade portion was destroyed back in the Kuzusuhara ruin. Normally, he would just need to ask for a replacement blade. But it was not practical to keep asking Shiori for the blade's replacement every single time he broke it, not to mention that he broke it that time to kill Katsuya.

Akira had another choice to use the repairing feature of the sheath to create a new blade, but it would be creating a new blade instead of repairing the current blade, so it would take a lot of time and money.

That was when he remembered that a blade was in the optional item list back when he ordered his augmented suit, so he decided to ask Kiryou if he could purchase a blade from them without its handle and etc.

'Due to the difference in their design, it was unusable at first, but with a little bit of modification to the grip, it solved the issue.' After hearing that answer from Kiryou, Akira thought that it was a good opportunity to also repair the grip after all those fights and sent it to Kiryou to modify.

Since it took time to modify the sheath and the grip to be able to be used with Kiryou's general purpose blade, Akira had to wait till they sent it back to him. Because of that, it did not make it for Akira's inter-city transport escort mission. But it was finally done and returned back together with the rest of his new equipment just the other day.

Seeing Akira take a battle stance with his blade unsheathed, Babalod also took a fighting stance. He lowered both of his hands until they touched the ground. The joints suddenly disengaged. He raised his arms and slowly pointed them forward. The arms with seemingly unlimited disengaged joints moving freely as if they were whips. Thus, creating an anatomical stance impossible for a human to perform.

Hunters who did not use guns in battles against monsters were a minority. As such, there were not that many chances for them to have close-range combat where rifles were at a disadvantage. But even so, there were Hunters who still learnt that skill. After all, there are chances where they had to use that skill, for example, when they had to fight another Hunter.

Those who had learned such skill would be able to limit their opponents during a fight, after all. They would not be shooting stray bullets anywhere. In case of a fight where there was no wish to kill but both sides also did not mind killing the other side, due to some common unspoken convention between the Hunters, such a fight often turned into a battle without guns. Dealing with pain without the risk of killing was a good way to discourage the opponent. There were also cases where Hunters would look down on their opponents once they became completely useless without guns. Thus, most high-ranking Hunters knew how to do melee combat.

Akira accepted Carol's request not to kill Babalod, and Babalod only wanted Akira, who was Carol's bodyguard, to relent. This was in order for him to force Carol to concede. Thus, both of them basically acquiesce to fight without guns.

They were locked in a face-off as they were probing for an opening. The tense atmosphere continued. Zelos, who did not like the idea of that stalemate continuing forever, decided to snap his finger. The sound signalled the start of the fight as Akira and Babalod jumped into action.

Babalod's blade arm reached for Akira. He swung his already bent right arm to pierce through the air. While at the same time, his arm extended while his legs did not shift at all, it was as if he suddenly threw a blade toward an enemy that was originally completely out of his reach.

The blade arm suddenly released a flash of light created from forcefield armour, which hardened the whole blade. It turned into a vicious weapon that can easily pierce through a thick metal plate, searching for its target.

Akira dexterously leaned to one side, evading the incoming blade. The blade passed next to him as if it was a speeding bullet, but even so, Akira calmly but quickly used the least needed movement to avoid it, and while still in that posture, Akira swung his blade to cut the extended arm.

But the combination of the arm's movement, the speed of Babalod pulling back his arm, and the anti-cut armour protecting it prevented Akira from cutting it off. The moment it made contact with Akira's blade, it released flashes of light, like a firecracker.

Babalod quickly pulled back his arm. Resting his hardened thumb on the blade guard, extending it out, Babalod tried to attack Akira from behind. But Akira immediately ducked to evade that and at the same time, he leapt forward to close the distance.

To retaliate, Babalod used his left arm and whipped it toward Akira. It was aimed to restrict Akira's movement. The steel hand went to grab Akira's head while the extended arm tried to circle itself around Akira's body. It was difficult to get away from both of them at the same time.

Akira swung down his blade to repel Babalod's left arm. Although he could not cut it off, the power of his augmented suit was more than enough to blow it away.

At that time, Babalod already launched another attack with his right arm that he just pulled back. The successive attack had come by quickly, even the slightest delay would be fatal.

But Akira also deflected that arm in the same way. Babalod's successive rapid attack was relatively slow inside Akira's compressed time perception. When he lost balance from evading the previous attack, he used his augmented suit to fortify his footing and forcefully fixed his posture, the backlash from the difference in the weight that would have originally blown him away was redirected and used to strike back at his opponent.

With both of Babalod's arms blown away, Akira quickly closed their distance. With a rather light step, he raised his blade up.

That was when Babalod smiled. It was his original scheme to bait Akira to do that. With that posture that was obvious he was going to fall over; he suddenly regained his balance using his augmented suit. And at the same time, he whipped his arms as if they were claws trying to rip Akira from both sides.

With Akira was in the air and no footing, even if he used forcefield armour to project a footing and used it to jump away, it was already too late to try to evade that attack. It was a high-speed attack from both sides. Even if Akira deflected one of them, the other one would hit him. Babalod was confident that he already had his victory at hand.

And as Babalod had predicted, Akira could not get away from that attack, but that did not mean he was victorious.

Akira let go of the blade that he held with both of his hands. He then released an accurate strike to the left and right without glancing to the side. His retaliation was fast thanks to the physical power enhancement of his new augmented suit. With the angle of his attack being extremely exquisite, it was enough to make sure that the arm blades were deflected, avoiding a head-on clash.

Babalod was caught by surprise. With his left and right arms thrown aside, he could not move while Akira in front of him grabbed his blade again. Babalod could not do anything as Akira swung his blade down.

The blade stopped right in front of Babalod's eyes.

Both Akira and Babalod had no wish to kill each other, so in another word, they were both holding back. But in an exchange that only lasted for a few seconds, it was easy to see who would die if they were going at it seriously, and both of them understood that very well.

Now that Babalod had lost his will to continue the fight, he disengaged his non-human posture. The moment he did that, his body fell back.

"…Alright, it's my loss, goddammit!"

Babalod frustratedly admitted his loss and looked bitterly at Akira.

"You even got yourself a bodyguard like this, huh!? I bet you paid him with the money that I paid you! So how much is it?! How much are you getting paid!?"

With someone that powerful, it was only natural to be expensive. Although he lost, paying Akira for that fight would diminish Carol's ability to pay him. Babalod thought so as he spat out those begrudging words.

Akira sheathed his blade.

"1 million Aurum per day."

Babalod twitched, Akira's answer only served to worsen his anger.

"The heck?! You?! You're seriously okay getting paid that little?! You're only making me look more stupid here, you know?!"

"Even if you say that…"

Akira seemed completely apathetic to that matter, Carol then came next to Akira and smiled at Babalod.

"I actually told him that it's okay to have me every day on top of the base pay during his mission to protect me."

Babalod, who already had a taste of Carol's body, was completely convinced with that as he could not help but exclaim.

"I see, so that's why, huh! Dammit!"

In contrast to him, Akira looked confused as he could not understand why that would make sense. But since he was in the middle of a job right now, he put that aside for later.

"So then, Carol, what do you want to do with this guy?"

Although he had defeated Babalod, it was not like he stripped him off his ability to fight. Akira went this far only because he was told Babalod would fetch more money when captured alive, but he had no idea what exactly to do with Babalod. Meanwhile, capturing him just like this was basically not in his job description as a bodyguard.

Carol giggled and answered that question.

“Hm? Just wait for a bit. They should arrive soon.”

“They who?”

“Don’t worry. It’s not like I’m talking about his reinforcement, ah, there they are.”

From the direction where Carol was pointing, there was an APC coming from the wasteland. It stopped close to them, and some people came out from that APC. It was Colbert, Levin, Erio, and their companions. Unlike Colbert and Levin, who were already used to this scene, Erio and the other children seemed a bit scared.

And lastly, Viola also came out from that APC. With a glance at the scene there, Viola understood what was going on and walked to Carol.

“Oh, that was way more peaceful than I thought.”

Carol smiled at Viola and replied.

“Well, it’s great to have a strong bodyguard. But still, you came just right on time, so, where have you been watching from?”

“Oh my. It’s just a pure coincidence.”

Carol did not tell Viola that she had employed Akira. She had also refused Viola’s offer to do the negotiation. With Viola not asking what Carol would do to handle what was coming, and the perfect timing when Viola came, it could be inferred that Viola already knew what was going on. Carol did not know if that was because of the precision of her information net or because of her amazing observation skill. Either way, Carol still gave a smile, indicating that she already knew everything about Viola.

In reaction to Carol’s smile, Viola replied with her usual smile.

“Carol. Since I’m already here, can you leave the rest of the negotiation to me?”

“You have a point, alright then.”

“Oh, that was easy. You could’ve accepted my offer like that from the start, you know?”

Against Viola who was making a rather exaggerated surprised expression, Carol’s smile deepened.

“The situation is not the same now, you do know that as well, right?”

Having Viola involved right now when Carol already won her negotiation with Zelos and Babalod was completely different from getting Viola involved from the time when nothing was certain yet.

Since Carol and Viola were such good friends and equally bad women, they really matched each other well. But this time, Carol wanted to avoid making this matter overly complicated with Viola’s involvement. That was why even if there was a minimum danger to herself, Carol refused her offer to get involved back then.

Carol tried to probe how much Viola knew about her situation as she threw a question to Viola with a smile that indicated that she already knew everything.

“That’s why I’ll have you cut the negotiation price. Well, then, I’ll leave the rest to you, Akira let’s return back to the car.”

Carol walked toward the camping car. Akira hesitated for a bit and looked at Babalod. Levin was in the middle of putting something that looked like a restraining device on him. Meanwhile, Babalod seemed to have completely lost his will to fight back and just let Levin do his job. In contrast to that, Erio and the other children looked extremely anxious, having to guard a Hunter who was obviously much stronger than them. Akira thought that it should be okay to leave as he went back to Carol’s camping car as well.

Viola smiled amusedly just like usual as she watched Carol and Akira’s back.

After they returned back to the camping car. Akira asked Carol what exactly just happened. That was when he asked the question that he shelved back then.

“Say, Carol, that 10 billion Aurum per night that guy said back then, was that true?”

“Hm? Yep, it’s true.”

Carol replied extremely casually to the point where he could not help but frown.

“I-I see… But still, the 10 billion Aurum, did he pay for it?”

“Of course, he couldn’t. That is why he gave me something else that was worth that much. Which is the secret information Zelos talked about. He also gave me other information a few times before that. I’m sure that’s why his team leader took his time to come here when that was out of the bag.”

“Well, that part is completely understandable, but… How in the world do you sell a piece of information worth that much?”

“Hmm, it’s true that it’s difficult to decide the price of a piece of information. For example, let’s say that it’s information that would have been fatal if it fell to the hands of someone who is up to no good to their team, and with that assumption in mind, the question would be how much they are willing to spend to get that information. With that as the basis on how to decide the worth of a piece of information, it becomes easier to tell that information would be worth 10 billion Aurum.”

“Hmmm, even if you say so, it’s 10 billion Aurum we’re talking about here… For me, it’s a huge amount of money. Even with my perspective about money lowered, we’re talking about just for one night here, right? Hmmm…”

Akira hummed as if he was trying to understand something that was completely alien to him. It was obvious from his expression that he looked really troubled. 10 billion Aurum for one night. It was in a whole other world that he could not understand.

Carol understood what Akira was thinking from seeing his expression and smiled at him.

“If you still can’t understand it, how about trying the body that is worth 10 billion Aurum per night for once?”

Akira frowned and smiled wryly.

“No thanks.”

“Geez, you’re as cold as always. Don’t worry, I won’t ask for money from you. Or at least, that’s the case while you’re guarding me.”

“Still no. I bet it’s one of those frauds where the first few tries are either for free or for a small amount of money. Do you really think I would accept it right after I just saw what happened to the people who fell for it?”

“For him, the experience must have been worth that trouble. That’s all there is to it. To be honest, if you use this chance to get used to it, I’m sure you won’t end up like him though. Even I must admit that you’re strong, that’s why I’m willing to let you have it without the need of paying. Don’t you think that it is a great offer? Are you sure you don’t want to take it? This chance will never come again, you know?”

“I know, and yes, I’m not taking it.”

“You’re really no fun at all.”

Seeing that Akira was even putting up his guard toward her, Carol just giggled amusedly.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 249, The Maids of The Old-World Ruin

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Since his business with Carol was over, Zelos returned back in his vehicle. Babalod was not with him since Babalod had already been taken away by Viola.

Zelos and Viola's negotiation reached a conclusion without much trouble. It was not rare for a negotiator to take care of negotiations between Hunters. After all, if two high ranking Hunter teams broke into a fight, the damage to the area would not be small. Except for the times when their main aim was the destruction of the other team, Hunters tend to use negotiators to handle the negotiations peacefully. Zelos was already used to this, so he just threw his negotiation with Viola to his own team's negotiator.

It was already decided beforehand that Viola would pay for what Babalod had to pay. But since it was taken as a debt from just a small scuffle between Hunters on top of another small scuffle between teammates, Babalod did not get sent for human experimentation.

Furthermore, with Babalod being a high ranking Hunter, at most, he would be forced to go to the ruins until he would be able to pay his debt. Zelos knew that and was fine with it. Although if Babalod got sent for human experimentation, he could not let that slide as the team leader. After all, he would still feel bad to throw someone that he cared for into hell.

With that being said, Zelos looked a bit uncertain as he mumbled.

"…But still, although I'm glad that there's nothing to worry about, why did he even do that? That guy is a cyborg, so there's no reason he would get addicted to something like that though."

Many men met ruin because of women and that did not change even for high ranking Hunters. Obviously, they were earning way more money than common Hunters, but due to having to face deadly situations regularly, most of them were awful with money. Many of them were weak to temptations. With the reward of each success being big, the side who did the tempting also refined their techniques.

Even so, it was well known that it was not easy to seduce a cyborg. Many of them could adjust their sensitivity manually. Then to top it off, a cyborg's body was battle-oriented, thus many of them did not even have the device to enjoy such an activity.

Even if they could choose to add such a device, the sensation transmitted from that device would hardly make someone addicted. Because of that, hardly any cyborg gets addicted to body stimulus.

As such, those who aimed to try to seduce cyborgs were often forced to build a pseudo-lover relationship. This was also not easy. It took time and money to investigate one's preference and set up a chance meeting. Those who still chose to do that must have known that their hardwork would be properly rewarded by the end of the day.

Zelos understood that much. This was the reason he was very suspicious of Carol and went there himself to confirm his suspicion.

Zelos thought that the matter with Carol was some kind of attack from another Hunter team. They sent one of their operators to approach a target and stole his team's money, information, and trust.

But after he went to check it himself, it turned out that Babalod's problem was related to a Hunter who was working a side job as a prostitute. Babalod told him everything after a light interrogation when his embezzlement of the team's budget was discovered. Afterwards, Babalod agreed to go to Carol to demand the money back. This showed that Babalod's relationship with Carol was nothing more than that of a prostitute and a client. It did not seem that it was some kind of elaborate honey trap where Carol completely seduced Babalod.

Although Zelos was relieved that it was not an attack from another Hunter team, he was suspicious of another thing. As the team leader, he knew the members of his team well. That was exactly why he did not expect Babalod to go so far as stealing from the team's budget and leaking secret information just for his favourite prostitute.

[…I still don't get it. Babalod is a cyborg. Although that woman seems to have an enhanced body, it was still just a flesh body, right? Even if she has a physique that can be connected to some dangerous VR device, Babalod is not stupid enough to pay her that much money, so what exactly is going on here…]

As he was really confused about what exactly happened, he then remembered what Carol had said. 'Helping him understand on the bed.' That sentence was quite convincing. Zelos could not help but smile wryly imagining what would happen to him if he had taken that offer.

"Well, I don't really know what happened, but at least it's obvious that she's a dangerous girl. I have to be careful. I'll at least tell the rest of the team to be careful of her as well."

His agreement with Viola was sealed with one condition. Information Babalod leaked would not spread to anyone else. Although the formal contract was to be made later through the Hunter office, that oral agreement alone already had binding power. As long as they did not turn Carol and her companion into their team's enemy, there was no need to fear that the secret information would spread. Since there was no need to kill anyone, Zelos thought that this matter had already been resolved.

One of the reasons was because if Carol was really used to having a conflict with high ranking Hunters, then it was to be expected for her to be familiar with solving such conflicts in a peaceful manner. There was no need to worry about her breaking her promise, which would essentially be throwing away the peaceful solution out of the window.

In reality, Carol was not used to having conflicts with high ranking Hunters. The Hunters who lived further to the east were relatively stronger both in terms of might and their power as an organization. Carol knew that the risk of getting into trouble with these people was relatively high, that was why she avoided having them as her customers. She held herself back from taking too much money from them.

In short, Carol took a big gamble to cross this bridge. It was a dangerous, damaged bridge hanging on top of a deep ravine. Carol knew that. But even so, she still decided to cross that bridge. She believed that it was better than having to walk through a minefield. After all, it was much safer to carefully cross through a precarious bridge instead of having to tread through the land with hidden mines that would blow her up.

Although the land itself might have no mines buried under it, it might just be her unwarranted fear making her believe that there were mines. Nonetheless, she still could not choose to walk through it.

Today, Akira was working as Carol’s bodyguard again as they were collecting information to make a map of the Mihazono ruin. In the middle of their exploration, he saw Carol regularly doing something that he did not understand. He simply thought that she must be working on the map or something.

Just like last time, Carol suddenly stopped and looked in the direction where there was nothing, she then smiled at Akira, waved at him, and pointed at the ground.

“Akira, try standing here for a bit.”

Akira did as he was told and nothing in particular happened. But Carol casually but carefully observed his reaction.

“…Okay, and?”

Seeing that Akira was a bit confused, Carol stopped and pointed to the front.

“Can you try to look over there? There’s a monster hiding over there with optical camouflage, can you see it?”

Akira frowned and looked in the direction she was pointing at. He used his information terminal to search for movement there and adjusted the focused direction and the sensitivity of his information-gathering device. If it was some common optical camouflage, this would be enough to detect such a monster, but strangely enough, he did not find anything.

“Alpha, is she telling the truth?”

Alpha smiled and replied.

“Yeah. Although it’s a difficult one to detect. Do you want me to give you my support?”

“Yes, please. Ah, can you start with tweaking the setting of the information-gathering device?”

If it was a monster with optical camouflage that was obviously undetectable using Akira’s information-gathering device, it would be difficult to explain how he could detect that monster with Alpha’s support. But that was not the case if it was something that could be explained by adjusting the setting of his information-gathering device. Since Akira was also using that chance to train himself, he decided to be careful about that as well.

“Okay.”

Alpha hijacked Akira’s information-gathering device. By adjusting the setting under the assumption that they knew there was a monster there, they were able to detect it. Finally, he could see a multi-legged tank that almost fully blocked the road. Its legs were disguised as trees thanks to its optical camouflage, so Hunters would not notice it even if they bumped into one of those tree-looking legs.

Akira frowned.

“…I can see it now. Carol, that’s pretty impressive for you to be able to find it. Even my relatively powerful information-gathering device needs more time to be able to detect it. I bet it’s impossible to notice that monster there unless you know that it’s there beforehand.”

Carol nodded.

“This is thanks to all the information that we’ve been diligently collecting, making regular updates for the map. The map made using this kind of information would fetch quite a lot of money, you know? Maps from common map brokers have no record about that monster.”

“I see. So, it’s thanks to our hard work going in and out of this ruin so many times, huh?”

There were invisible monsters in the ruin. Hunters who were saved thanks to the map that they bought from Carol would purchase from her again next time. Akira at least understood that much.

“But still, with it hiding there, won’t it attack someone when someone gets close to that monster?”

“It’s basically just like an invisible static object. So as long as we don’t pick a fight with it, it normally won’t attack us. I bet it’s some kind of additional security monster in case a huge ruckus like the one in Kuzusuhara ruin occurs.”

Carol’s smile then deepened.

“But well, it seems there are people who do not believe my map and could not detect monsters over there with their information-gathering device, so they decided to try to bump into it. Well, at least, the log indicates that the monster attacked back and killed all of them. I bet this will turn into another ghost story if more and more people get killed the same way."

"You have a point; it won't be strange for ghost stories to come up because of this."

The hidden multi-legged tank monsters were posted inside the ruin; they would not attack unless certain conditions were satisfied. When more unfortunate Hunters, who satisfy said condition get killed by the monster, it would add to the number of Hunters who got killed by an unknown threat. It would not be strange for this to develop into another ghost story. As Akira thought so, he glanced at Alpha.

Alpha was smiling like usual there.

"Is there anything wrong?"

"Nope, not at all. I just thought that it won't catch me off-guard as long as I have you"

"But of course. Just leave it to me."

Alpha replied, full of confidence.

[There is a story of the beguiling ghost in Kuzusuhara ruin. But I am still alive, at least, that is the case for now.] Akira thought.

Carol then continued.

"Talking about new ghost stories. Do you know that there's a rumour around here that might develop into another ghost story?"

"Nope, never heard of it, what kind of rumour is it?"

"It seems that you sometimes can find maids inside this ruin. But when you try to call them or approach them, they will vanish."

"…Are you sure that they are not just Hunters in maid outfits who do not wish to get into contact with anyone?"

Akira knew 2 maid acquaintances. Although he had no idea if they had anything to do with that rumour, Akira did not believe that such a rumour would really turn into another ghost story. However, Carol's smile deepened as she added another detail.

"It would be great if that's all there is to it. But they can vanish, you know? Some say that they are the guides that got fixed when the drones were repairing the ruin, which meant that they should be just holographic images. It would be easy to confirm it if you use an information-gathering device to scan them. But it turns out that that was not the case. They gave signals as if they were real physical objects according to the information-gathering devices. However, they can still suddenly vanish."

"Is that so? Well. Even if that's true, I still don't see how that would turn into a ghost story."

"Moreover, it seems that there are people who really, really want to know the real identity of those maids and went to look for them, but they vanished mysteriously. Among them, there were some high ranking Hunters as well. Those who came from further to the east, or so I heard."

Hunters who vanished inside the ruin were mostly regarded as dead because of their lack of skill compared to the difficulty of the ruin. However, since those high-ranking Hunters were way too strong to get killed in the Mihazono ruin, it meant that there was something extremely dangerous inside the ruin. If Hunters kept vanishing the same way and rumours that vaguely connected to them kept spreading, it was only a matter of time before it turned into another ghost story.

"I see. That kind of story indeed might turn into a ghost story."

"If it does turn into a ghost story, then just like the beguiling ghost of Kuzusuhara ruin, I wonder if it will be named as the beguiling maids."

Akira who found that weirdly funny laughed.

"Well,won't that sound a bit too safe for such a dangerous story?"

“That’s just how ghost stories work, you know?”

“That might be the case, but still…”

“In that case, what would you name it?”

“Me, huh? Let’s see…”

Akira and Carol spent their time with such silly banter while they explored the ruin.

__*__*__*__

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae were searching the city blocks of the Mihazono ruin. Of course, it was for a Hunter job, but this time, it was a little bit different compared to their usual Hunter job.

Just like usual, Kanae and Shiori were donning their maid outfits that day. But it was not their usual maid outfits, they were advanced battle suits that Shiori had procured beforehand.

Although they still kept their maid design, some parts of the suits were obviously modified to prioritize fighting capability to the point that it was obvious they were battle suits up-close. Though, they looked like normal maid outfits from afar. Their new fighting capability had greatly improved to the point where they could hold a candle when compared to the equipment from around Zegelt city.

They were also better armed with other equipment as well, just like their modified maid outfit. Which meant that they were way too well equipped considering the difficulty level of Mihazono ruin.

And for today, Reina also wore similar equipment as Shiori and Kanae.

Shiori did not like the idea of making Reina use the same equipment as them. No matter how powerful their fighting capability, regardless of the design, in the end, they were maid outfits meant for servants. However, since her negotiation to get a different outfit for Reina failed and Reina herself was fine with wearing it, all three wore the same armor.

Shiori seemed worried as she suggested to Reina.

“Milady, as I thought, it might be better to put something on top of it.”

Even just a cover would greatly change the feel. It could hide the fact that Reina was using a servant’s outfit. That was the meaning behind Shiori’s words. However, Reina lightly shook her head and stated.

“I’m fine with this. This thing is not designed to be put under something else, so it might even lower its fighting capability, right?”

“That might indeed be the case, but if it’s just these monsters around the area, we should be able to handle it just fine. There is no need for Milady to be concerned.”

“But that doesn’t mean that there’s any need for me to risk lowering my fighting capability, right? I’m fine like this.”

“Very well, my apologies…”

Shiori reluctantly backed off. Seeing that, Kanae tried to cheer her up with a smile.

“Well, it’s only for this time. Milady will return to her usual equipment once we’re done with this mission. So just be patient until then.”

“I know…”

Shiori sighed and decided to put said issue aside for now.

Reina understood Shiori’s feelings and could not really blame her. But even so, it did not change her decision to use the current equipment even if it was against Shiori’s wishes.

Reina was extremely disheartened when she found out about Katsuya’s death. But more than that, she was surprised. Reina herself had gone through so many dangerous situations where she almost died, she knew well just how dangerous being a Hunter was.

But even so, somewhere in her heart, she always believed that Katsuya would not die. And now, that Katsuya was dead.

The wasteland, being a Hunter. These two things combined were so dangerous that even someone like Katsuya got killed. Reina was reminded of this after hearing about Katsuya's death. Because of that, every aspect of her which looked down on the dangers of the wasteland got completely blown away.

Once again, Reina was reminded that going to the wasteland and working as a Hunter was a frightening endeavor. However, she did not let that break her. She also did not hesitate. Now that she recognized them as scary, she could properly prepare herself to get through them. She had the talent to at least accomplish that much.

Reina's talent was polished even more by Katsuya's death. She was sad when he died, but the sadness that made her disheartened also made her more insensitive to death. This would help her through it the next time, marking her growth as a Hunter.

Because of this development, Reina did not make any fuss regarding her equipment.

"So then, Shiori, how is the progress of the request?"

Shiori gracefully lowered her head.

"My apologies. Unfortunately, we're not making any progress. This is not a good situation. But this does not mean that all our hard work is in vain. I know that Milady might find it vexing that I cannot tell Milady the details, so please be-"

"Ah, yeah, it's fine. I'm not bothered by that at all. I'm sure you're already doing your best. But still, since there's no progress, that just shows how hard this request is, huh? So, let's not rush ourselves and do this bit by bit."

After she casually brushed the matter aside, she then smiled gently at Shiori.

“Don’t worry, considering that it’s a request from home, I’m already well over such a thing.”

“…Thank you very much.”

Shiori lowered her head apologetically.

Reina had no knowledge about the details of her current job. To be more precise, she knows almost nothing about what was going on. The way she got that request was also abnormal, basically, Shiori sent a request to Drankam and Drankam assigned that request to Shiori. Thus, right now, Reina was formally working under Shiori.

Since this request came from Reina’s home and included some secret information, Shiori was not allowed to tell Reina, who was living separately from her home, the details of the request. Shiori apologetically explained everything to Reina beforehand. Although Reina did not really want to accept a request coming from her home, since it was a good chance to boost her career as a Hunter, she thought that it would be stupid to refuse that request just because of her personal feelings. As a matter of fact, she thought that she should take this request as good news, that was why she was completely fine with things being hidden.

With the situation in mind, Reina then had Kanae come along too simply as extra fighting personnel. As Shiori was the one leading the team, Reina was basically only accompanying her going around the ruin without knowing what they were doing. They just followed the orders that came up from the white card. Going to different places, a room of a building somewhere on the roadside, or on top of a pile of rubble. After doing that a few times, she then lightly sighed and moved on to the next location. They were basically stuck in that loop.

Shiori once again sighed and put back the white card in her dress. Kanae lightly threw a question at Shiori.

“Still nothing?”

“Yes, it’s either the matter of the location or recognition failure or that we’re doing this completely wrong in the first place… Either way, I don’t know why it is not working at all.”

“We only have a handful of places to check next though. If it’s not about the location, then there’s no meaning in checking all of them. So, what’s the plan now? We can try to break through to the Seranthal building once we have no other places to check though. I’m sure we will be just fine with our current equipment. And if that doesn’t work as well, then it means we’re doing this wrong. So, we can just return back for now after that and…”

Shiori shook her head with a stern look on her face.

“No. I don’t know the reason why, but that place is guarded by soldiers from Kugamayama city. I heard that someone by the name of Yanagisawa took full control of the area. I heard that they’re using the same security level that they use in Kuzusuhara ruin.”

“So, it’s that strict huh? In that case, it will be also impossible to try to sneak in while making a ruckus somewhere else.”

“Of course, we might be able to go to the 57th floor if we can get the city’s permission. But in order to do that, secret information will definitely leak out during the negotiation. There’s no doubt that they’ll not stay silent about it… That’s why going to the Seranthal building is our last choice. As long as we don’t have enough reason, we won’t go there.”

“I see. Well, in the end, it’s your decision, so I’ll leave it to you, but at this rate, we’ll run out of options soon, you know? How about taking a break for now?”

Shiori understood why Kanae said so. She knew that the next few days would only be filled with more failures. This was an opportunity after she obtained that white card, so she had no plan to let this opportunity slide.

“…If it’s a matter of location, I have another guess. Before we end our search for today, I want to check that first.”

“Sure, alright.”

Shiori’s stern expression turned back to normal, she turned toward Reina and smiled at her as if there was no problem at all.

“Milady, let’s go to the next location.”

“Okay. Let’s go. Ah, by the way, I’ve told you this a few times before, but I’m basically working for you this time, so you can be more casual with me.”

“No, that would be inappropriate for me”

“Is that so? Well, I guess I’ll just leave it like that considering it’s my employer’s decision.”

Reina chuckled and jokingly said so.

In the middle of moving to the next location, Reina whispered to Kanae.

“Say, Kanae, is Shiori alright?”

“It depends on your definition of alright.”

“I’ll leave the definition to you. I don’t know what’s going on so I can’t really decide myself whether it’s okay or not. After all, I’m not allowed to know anything about it, right? But still, I can tell that Shiori is pushing herself and maybe it is for my sake. That’s why, although it might be weird for me to say this, I hope you can help lessen her burden.”

“I think it’s fine if Milady tells Ane-san that yourself, you know?”

“Whether I tell her to not push herself too hard or not, or even if I don’t say anything, she will still push herself too hard. That’s why I’m saying this to you, so, please.”

Kanae raised her eyebrows.

“I never thought Milady is the type to say something like that.”

“…What do you think of me as?”

Kanae chuckled amusedly.

“To be honest, I only thought of Milady as a spoiled brat the first time I met you. Ah, but that doesn’t mean I still think so right now, okay?”

Reina smiled bitterly.

“I’ll be careful so as not to go back to being just a spoiled brat.”

Kanae laughed as if to tease Reina.

“That’s a good resolve.”

“Well, thanks for the compliment.”

The master and the servant continued to talk in a strangely friendly manner while they traversed the ruin.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 250, The Ladies of the Old-World Ruin

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The Hunter Office located near the Mihazono Residential Ruin was equipped with a cafeteria. After they finished their job for today, Akira and Carol were having their meal there. The cafeteria was divided into 3 sections and Akira and Carol were sitting in the expensive section. One meal in that section could cost up to 100,000 Aurum, but Carol and Akira had no problem paying that.

It was a section for relatively high-ranking Hunters in Mihazono ruin. So normally, that section was empty. But today, it was filled with Hunters. Although it was not filled to the point that there was no open room, if this continued, they might need to readjust the size of the section.

Akira was at his table when he spotted the reason why that section was filled today and was surprised. It was completely unexpected.

“Carol, what do you think that thing over there is?

“A rich someone from who-knows-where?”

There were about 15 people in maid uniform and butler uniform gathering on the other side of where Akira and Carol were taking their meal. In the middle of that, there was a girl wearing an expensive-looking dress. The maids and the butlers were standing lined up on her side. It was as if to announce to anyone that she was the master of that group.

“Maid uniform and butler uniform, wait, no, they’re actually battle suits. They must be pretty expensive.”

“Oh, they indeed are. After all, it requires special skills for such attire to retain its performance while keeping its design. I bet they’re full of old-world technology, so I bet they really are expensive.”

The girl gracefully move as if she was some high-class noble. She wore an expression devoid of joy even when tasting the most expensive food in the cafeteria. Nonetheless, her emotions did not get the better of her as she remained courteous.

“But still, although it is fine when it is only one or two, with that many people in the same place, they do look extremely out of place… This just reminds me of that maid story. Those Hunters vanished not because these maids treated them as suspicious people when they tried to talk to them, right?”

“I wonder about that. Well, either way, it’s best to keep away from them.”

“Can’t agree more to that.”

Akira and Carol completely lost interest in them and continued their meal.

When Akira already moved to the after-meal coffee, Carol, who was in contact with someone else during their meal, discussed their plan after this.

“Akira, we are actually already done for today but is it okay if I take up another job for early tomorrow morning? I’ll refuse it if you don’t want to.”

“I’m basically just following you around, so feel free to decide what to do. Is it about making maps again?”

“Nope, it’s about selling the map this time. Someone asked me for the map’s data as well as to guide them through the ruin, you see. And they want me to give the data inside the ruin that we will be exploring tomorrow.”

“Leaving the guiding part aside, you can just send the map’s data through the net, right? Isn’t it too dangerous to go inside the ruin just to do that?”

“Viola is the one who told them about me, so it will be fine.”

Hearing that reply, Akira could not help but frown. Seeing that, Carol smiled amusedly and explained to him.

“Basically, we can have Viola take responsibility if the customer tries to do anything funny. I’m sure she already knew about that too when she introduced me to them. Up until now, Viola never seriously wanted to kill me. Furthermore, I have you as a bodyguard this time. That’s why it would be fine. Are okay with taking up that job?”

“…I see, okay, sure.”

Akira was convinced by Carol’s explanation, but he still had a conflicted look on his face. Carol smiled wryly and then explained to him.

“I know Viola is not exactly a good girl, but as long as we can handle her correctly, we can get profits from her cunningness. So, it’ll be fine as long as we know how to treat her correctly.”

“I-I see, I’ll leave that part to you then.”

Akira still did not seem to be fully convinced by her argument. Thus, he made an awkward smile in an effort to hide it. Considering what happened with Babalod as well, Akira thought that Carol was slightly worse than Viola, so he was being very careful with what Carol had said.

__*__*__*__

Reina’s team was taking a break inside the ruin. They were having a meal inside one of the abandoned buildings with its self-repairing function still active.

Shiori, who received a notification, picked up the call, and after she finished the call, she looked vexed. Reina who saw that was interested in what just happened.

“Shiori, uhh, what’s wrong?”

Shiori regained her usual expression first before replying.

“…Milady. It seems that Chloe-sama is coming here. She wants to meet you.”

“Chloe? She wants to meet me? Why?”

“It seems that she wants to meet you simply because she is close by. I don’t know the details.”

Shiori still seemed displeased even after she tried to hide it. Her outward expression did not match her real feeling, seeing that, Reina smiled bitterly.

“Well, it would only tire us to keep asking questions. So, when she will be coming?”

“…In about 15 minutes.”

Reina raised her eyebrows; she did not expect it to be that quick. Moving to Kugamayama alone would take 3 days, including the preparation. Reina had thought that it would be about in a week or so.

“15 minutes? Do you mean that Chloe is already outside the walls right now? Or more like, she’s really already somewhere close by?”

“It seems that she was already in the nearby Hunter Office by the time I received the call.”

“So, she’ll be coming? Right here? In the middle of the ruin?”

“That is the case.”

Reina looked completely flabbergasted.

“…Why?”

Shiori already had a guess, but since it had something to do with their current mission, she could not tell Reina.

“As long as it’s not a form of harassment toward Milady, I don’t care about her intention at all.”

Reina did not notice that at that time, Shiori’s true emotions were leaking out.

After 15 minutes, a girl around the same age as Reina arrived there together with a dozen of maids and butlers. They were the group that Akira saw back in the cafeteria.

The girl was Chloe and just like Reina, she was also from a noble house.

Shiori was serving Reina, but to be more precise, she was serving the house where Reina came from. And since Chloe was also from the same house, Shiori gracefully bowed to her and greeted her.

“Chloe-sama, Long time no see. What brings you here today?”

“Hm? Didn’t I tell you? I’m here just to see Reina.”

Chloe smiled at Shiori with a smile from someone in a higher position. She then turned to Reina and smiled fondly at her.

“Long time no see. That dress does suit you very well.”

Chloe’s smile and words were very friendly, but the content was obviously poking fun at Reina. Shiori forced herself not to let her real feelings out. Chloe coldly smirked at Shiori’s reaction as she had fully expected that. She then turned to Reina, looking forward to enjoying her reaction.

But in contrast to Chloe’s hope, Reina’s reaction was rather light.

“Thanks. You look good in that dress too. Or at least that is what I want to say, but unfortunately, it doesn’t suit you at all.”

Chloe faked calmness as she tilted her head.

“…What do you mean?”

Chloe thought that Reina would throw an amusing childish tantrum when she was treated like a servant. But Reina was too indifferent as if she was a completely different person from the one Chloe knew. Chloe’s smile immediately vanished.

In contrast to that, Reina frowned and looked a bit confused.

“What do you mean by that? This is in the middle of the ruin, you know? It’s dangerous to be here in a casual dress. Though that dress is okay for sightseeing, it would be bad if you get attacked, you know?”

“Ah, if it’s about that, don’t worry. My servants can handle monsters just fine.”

Chloe’s smug face was indicating that she was not the same as Reina. Although both she and Reina were assigned servants since both of them were from the same noble house, the ability and the number of their servants were completely different. Chloe was basically boasting about the servants who accompanied her to Reina.

But Reina’s reaction was as indifferent as usual. She just replied casually without a shed of irritation nor trying to counter Chloe’s boast.

“I see. But those servants are not that familiar with being inside ruins, right? So, it’s better for you to be extra careful so as not to cause them trouble. Although, it might be weird for me to say that since I’m always causing trouble for Shiori and Kanae.”

Reina even had the leeway to make a small joke with a hint of self-mockery, tinged with a bitter smile. Due to that, Chloe caught a few things from Reina’s attitude and made a stern expression.

“So then, are you really here just to see me? If that’s the case, I’m sorry but it might be better for you to leave now? I’m in the middle of a Hunter job, so it’s not like I’m free right now.”

“Oh, urging me to leave like that, is it that you’re not doing well?”

“Unfortunately, yeah, we’re having a hard time right now.”

Reina and Chloe smiled peacefully at each other from the outside. But behind it, they were probing each other’s real intentions. After a short silence, Chloe suddenly said.

“White card.”

With that one sentence, those who knew what was going on would already understand. Chloe was basically telling them that she knew what they were doing, even the colour of the card too. It was just a statement that also doubled as a warning.

Shiori’s face turned stern. She herself was being very careful with her current mission, but even so, that information had been leaked to Chloe. It was either Chloe had that much influence inside the house or there were more people than Shiori had expected who decided to sell that information to Chloe.

Shiori tried her best to suppress her emotions, but even so, it still leaked out. That was just how big of a shock that was to her. And now that Chloe saw her reaction, there was no doubt that Chloe was able to gather more information, which only made Shiori even more concerned.

Chloe was satisfied that Shiori reacted as she had expected. But when she saw Reina’s reaction, she was a bit surprised. Reina was completely confused.

“White card?”

Chloe tilted her head.

“…You… You don’t know anything?”

Reina smiled lightly and casually replied.

“Ah, the cat is out of the bag, huh? Yeah, I actually don’t know anything.”

Reina and Chloe once again only smiled at each other in silence. But as always, they were looking closely at each other’s reactions. But in that silence, Chloe understood more of what was going on, which caused her to get even more suspicious.

Even Reina understood that Chloe was poking for information. But since Reina actually knew nothing, Reina only gave little to no reaction. On top of this, although she really knew nothing, she pretended as if she knew something.

Chloe could not tell if Reina really did not know anything or that Reina was hiding it from her. Likewise, it was possible that Reina was doing so well that she could afford to make up such a lie. The confirmation that she received from seeing Shiori’s reaction was contradicting the reaction that she got from Reina.

Both Reina and Chloe were smiling at each other while locking gaze, watching for even the slightest change of expression. Reina, who really did not know anything, was firm, while Chloe who knew, could not help but waver for a bit.

Since Chloe understood that the one watching her was not only Reina but also Shiori. To avoid leaking anything from her expression, Chloe thought that it was better for her to withdraw.

“Well, it seems that you’re indeed busy, so I’ll leave for now. After all, I already did get to meet you today.”

“I’m sorry but I’m indeed busy at the moment. And I think I will be this busy for the time being, so do tell me beforehand before you want to visit me again.”

“…I see. Alright, until next time.”

Chloe threw a smile and left that place. After she opened up some distance from Reina’s group and there was no need to keep her performance, her expression immediately turned stern.

Next to Chloe, Pamela, who was the leader of the maids in their group asked Chloe.

“Milady. Was that really alright? Although they did say that they are busy, I believe there was no need to be concerned about their current task. Milady is in a position to afford such a thing.”

Chloe understood what Pamela and the others were trying to say to her, so she pulled herself together, regained her calm, and shook her head.

“It’s fine. I also wanted to stop instead of continuing the conversation. It was the perfect excuse to do that.”

“Very well.”

The butler by the name of Latis who was on the other side of Chloe was just like Pamela, he was the leader of the butlers. Since he saw that Pamela did not seem that happy with how things concluded, he interjected.

“Milady, if I may, would be alright if I ask the reason?”

“It’s because there’s nothing to negotiate. If they were only an incompetent noble who was banished to the wasteland and a loyal servant who was trying to help her master regain back her position, it would have been easy. I could just tell them to work under me and they’ll eventually regain back their former lives, then I bet that they would jump into that offer. But that seems to not be the case.”

“She’s still working as a Hunter in order to win favour from Lorents-sama and her loyal servant is still working hard to better her situation. I believe that there’s still a chance for them to take that offer.”

Lorents, the head of the noble family where Reina and Chloe came from, was a former Hunter. He achieved success working as a Hunter and right now controlled a huge corporation that had its influence throughout the eastern district. Although it was still no match against the five biggest corporations, he controlled several corporations which controlled a number of cities, effectively making him the one controlling those cities.

All of those companies were owned by the family and all the leaders of those companies came from that family. But with such a big corporation, there were many officer seats to fulfil. Normally, they would have to outsource people that had no connection with their family to fill those seats. But Lorents was a womanizer, causing him to have many children. Those children also produced even more grandchildren. Because of that, all the officer seats were filled by the family's relatives, causing them to struggle for power, aiming for a higher position.

Reina was one of Lorents' grandchildren. But her family was banished from the city and Reina ended up being a Hunter. It was all because her family belonged to the losing faction inside the noble family.

The best way for those who lost their position in the struggle for power inside the corporation was to gather accomplishments outside the corporation, and the best way to do that was to become a successful Hunter.

In the midst of the in-fighting inside the corporation, Lorents had obvious favouritism toward the Hunter faction. It was no surprise considering Lorents himself was a former Hunter. Moreover, if they could secure a valuable relic and bring it back to the main corporation instead of selling it to another corporation, it would boost their standing within the corporation. Depending on the quality of the relic, they might even be given control of one of the corporation's branches.

Of course, not all of them did well. Many of them failed and did not return from the wasteland. But even so, baited by the reward for success, many factions, who lost their influence in the inner struggle for power, sent one of their family members out to the wasteland to be a Hunter, hoping that they would be able to overturn their situation.

Those sent to the wasteland were those who were too weak to fight the power struggle inside the corporation. Many of them were only given two choices: to refuse and get themselves kicked out from the family or go out as a Hunter and still be considered as a part of the family. As such, many of them only chose to become a Hunter because they were forced to. Reina was basically one of them, though slightly different. When her family discovered that she had an interest in the world of Hunters, they thought that she was the perfect person to be sent out to the wasteland.

From Chloe's point of view, Reina was useless in the power struggle, that was why she was sent out to the wasteland. But after their meeting just now, she no longer thought so.

"Latis, you also saw their equipment, right? Those are from our company. And they are pretty powerful equipment as well. Normally, there's no way they would be able to borrow it."

"But they did. However, how is that connected with forgoing negotiations with them?"

"Of course, that is only one of the reasons. But just judging from that alone, it means that they negotiated with someone of a high standing inside the corporation and managed to procure it. Regardless of who they contacted, there's no mistaking it. They presented something that gave that person enough reason to lend them their current equipment… The white card… Just knowing about that alone was not easy, you know?"

Chloe lightly chuckled, her expression then turned serious.

"They are not that stupid as to hang on a glimmer of hope that is close to futility. Just being able to gain that information this time could already be considered a success. Moreover, it seems that the thing that they are aiming for is way bigger than what I had imagined. So, we have to reconsider our strategy in order to snatch it for ourselves. We need more time and information to do that, that's why I decided to withdraw for now."

Pamela then made a suggestion with a serious expression.

"I'm sure I'm more than capable to handle them. So, we have the choice to force to hand over the key for this matter, that white card, you know? Since we're in the middle of the wasteland, so such a thing is well under what is normal in this place."

Chloe lightly laughed and replied.

“No, that won’t do. If we get too used to doing something like that, our skill in negotiations would fall. Though I do think it’s okay to use that method when it is necessary.”

She then smiled as if to scold Pamela.

“Moreover, she’s still from the same noble house, so let’s hold ourselves back from using violence. There’s no need to unnecessarily intimidate them either. The thing that they have might bring about something that is way more than enough to regain their position. So, there’s still some space for us to manoeuvre in, and in order to get into that space, even if we use intimidation, let’s not use something too direct and use something more subtle and peaceful.”

“…Very well.”

The reason why Pamela was a bit reluctant to back off there was simply because she wanted a chance to show their strength. Chloe at least understood that much. Chloe thought that it was normal, just like how she aimed for a higher position, the people under her were also aiming for the same thing.

Although no one knew the reason why the heads of their noble family ignored the ongoing power struggle. As a matter of fact, they seemed to be supporting it. Even when it escalated into a real fight, they only reprimanded the ones involved and did not take any concrete step to stop them. Chloe herself also knew that and admitted that she also agreed with their attitude.

Those who had the skill would climb up the ladder. The ongoing struggle for power inside the corporation was a form of natural selection, so Chloe thought nothing much of it and just obeyed it.

But unlike Chloe, who was one of the masters in that power struggle, the servants only had a limited method to reach for a higher position. Even inside the corporation, there were rules which limited their options. Their options to reach a higher position were mostly only two. Either they pushed their master to a high position or overtook their master.

There were occasions when they left their old master when someone of a higher position was interested in them. Then, just like how the servants could abandon their master, the master could dump the servant when they were deemed useless. So, it was important for them to prove their usefulness both so that they would not be fired and so that someone of a higher position would take interest in them.

Although Chloe understood that Pamela was looking for a way to garner more achievements, Chloe had no wish to give them away for now. Nonetheless, in order not to worsen Pamela's mood, Chloe was choosing her words carefully.

"It's all thanks to you that I can travel safely through the wasteland. You have my thanks. So, I hope that would be enough for now."

"You kind words are wasted on me."

Seeing Pamela deeply bow, Chloe thought that it should be fine for the time being. She then turned to Latis and smiled wryly at him.

"Also, Latis, you asked me even when you know my answer, right?"

Latis smiled gently.

"My apologies. But please at least let this humble servant enjoy the proficiency of my master."

"I won't scold you, but it's sometimes a bit too much of a bother to answer your questions. So do it in moderation."

"But of course."

After Chloe rebuked her servants, she then shifted her mind to think about her next plan while she was on her way back.

__*__*__*__

Reina lightly sighed as she watched Chloe's group leave. Those people usually would never step out of the city. However, right now, they went out of their way to visit her in the middle of the wasteland. Although they quickly left, there was no doubt that they would bring them more trouble later down the road.

Shiori apologized deeply to Reina.

"Milady, about what happened just now…"

"Ahh, don't worry about it, I won't force you to tell me."

Shiori was a bit surprised, but Reina just lightly smiled and continued.

"Although I don't know what is going on and I do question it sometimes, but you do think that it's better not to let me know for now, right? So, I'm fine with that. Though I don't know what exactly you are doing, I'm sure you're doing that for my sake. Not to mention, we were able to confuse Chloe thanks to that. That's why I won't force you to tell me. I'll wait until the time you can tell me the details."

"…Thank you very much."

Shiori was content that her master fully trusted her. She smiled happily and bowed.

"So then, what is the next plan? Want to keep exploring the ruin?"

"Indeed. But please wait for a bit. I've contacted someone who can give us more information and guide us inside the ruin. We'll decide on our next route after getting that information."

"Alright, then we'll be taking a rest for a bit here, huh?"

"Yes."

Seeing that exchange between Reina and Shiori, Kanae could not help but smile. Shiori, who saw that frowned, and called her.

“What is it, Kanae?”

“No, it’s nothing. I just thought that Milady has really grown up and I’m happy. And also, both of you are as close as ever.”

“…That’s obvious.”

Reina and Shiori blushed, Kanae who saw that smiled amusedly.

Not too long after that, the guides that Shiori said finally arrived. They were surprised when they saw their guide, it was Akira and Carol.

Silavin: Seems like the gang got back together again.

Also, the light novel has just got picked up! Go support them!
Rebuild World (Light Novel) | J-Novel Club

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 251, Troublesome Deal

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Carol went to Mihazono ruin with Akira in tow. When they proceeded to go to the room where Carol already had an appointment, Akira was surprised. The inside of the room was relatively empty as if it was opened for occupants to take a rest, and there, Reina's team was waiting for them.

Naturally, he was not the only one surprised. Reina and the others were also surprised when they saw Akira.

Carol was also surprised when she noticed that her customer was someone that they knew, but she just ignored that and proceeded with her job.

"You're NN8891-san, right?"

Shiori replied.

"That would be me, and you are Cat-san, I presume."

"Yes."

Akira was looking confusedly at that exchange.

“Alpha, what was that?”

“Just fake names for making deals. Basically, they don’t want to leak each other information.”

“Ah, I see, so that’s what, huh… So, in short, it’s just that kind of deal, huh?”

Although they were all Hunters, they did not show their identity with their Hunter ID, or they did not want to, even worse, there were cases where they could not do so. In such cases, their only choice was to make a backdoor deal. It was at least guaranteed that the content of those deals was something that they did not want the Hunter Office to know about. Akira at least knew that much.

Carol turned to Shiori with her business smile.

“If I’m not mistaken, you also asked us to be your guide, but let me confirm this, we’ll be just simple guides. So, we won’t help if you get attacked. If the push comes to shove, we’ll just abandon you. Are you okay with that?”

“Of course.”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

After Carol said so, she lifted her feet to go to Reina’s team, but Akira suddenly stepped in front of her and stopped her.

“Akira?”

Akira stopped the confused Carol with a signal of his hand, he then looked at Reina’s team with a sharp gaze.

“Let me confirm this first, 4 people, right?”

Shiori and Kanae immediately understood what Akira meant. They quickly repositioned themselves around Reina and scanned their surroundings. Shiori then said.

“It’s 3 people.”

“I see.”

Akira frowned and glanced in the direction where there was no one present. Although he did not aim his rifle in that direction, he slightly shifted his stance so that he could jump into action anytime. But suddenly a voice came out.

“Wait for a sec, I’m not hostile, I’m also here as a customer.”

The young boy deactivated his camouflaging coat. The camouflaging coat that looked like a raincoat turned transparent the moment its optical camouflage got disengaged, showing the person behind it. A shabby looking armour, and 4 rifles that looked like AAH rifles from the outside. The young boy looked like a rookie Hunter who had little to no success. But that ended only as an appearance, it was obvious what calibre he was in judging from his camouflaging coat that Shiori and Kanae could not even see through.

Akira was familiar with that young boy; he was Shirou, who he met back during the inter-city transport mission.

Shirou lightly raised both of his hands to show that he meant no danger.

“I’m Gorou, you there. You are Karat-san, right?”

Carol slightly tensed up.

“Yes, that’s me, but my deal with you shouldn’t be now nor here, though?”

“It’s just to be safe. I’m worried that the time and the place from the network might have leaked. I hope you can understand it since I’ve even picked this place to meet you.”

With a friendly smile and friendly attitude, Shirou then signaled with his hand.

“So yes, with that being said, can you please give me the data now?”

“No.”

Carol replied back coldly, Shiori tensed up.

“…Why?”

“I don’t see any reason to trust someone who won’t even keep to the meeting time and place that we’ve agreed on beforehand.”

“But I have no other choice, it’s for the sake of my safety. How about if I pay you twice.”

“That’s not the problem here.”

“5 times.”

“I’m telling you. No. Leave for now and come back again at our appointment time and place, or ask the other party to let you join the group until our appointed time.”

Shirou’s friendly attitude started to mix with desperation and irritation.

“Geez, what a stickler…”

Shirou glanced at Reina’s team. Judging from Shiori’s reaction, it seemed that it was impossible to ask them to be allowed to accompany them. So, he then looked back at Carol.

“100 times then?”

Carol wavered. That number was way too big for her to immediately refuse. Not to mention, she was in need of money. After all, she had to pay Akira. She thought for a while before giving her answer.

“…No.”

Shirou’s mood obviously started to sour.

“…Why? Don’t you think you’re being too greedy asking more than that? Ah, is it that you’re worried if I’m really going to pay? In that case, I can pay the full amount right away, is that good enough?”

“Still no.”

“What exactly is it that you don’t like about my offer…?”

When Shirou started to tense up, Carol’s gaze turned sharp.

“I don’t mind compromising the place and time with money, but you need to follow the order of things. My dealing with you is after I’m done with my current deal. That’s the rule that I put on myself.”

Shirou rubbed his head and once again glanced at Reina’s team.

“…Dammit! Alright then! I got it! You just need to be done with your current job first, right?”

Shiori made his decision, he glanced at Carol before turning to Shiori.

“I’ll help with your thing, so let me borrow that card.”

Shiori immediately raised her guard. She could not afford to hand over the card. But since Shirou, a person that she had met for the first time, spoke as if he knew everything about them. This caused her mind to be filled with suspicion and blocked her ability to think carefully.

But Shirou then continued.

“I’m a staff from Sakashita Heavy Industry and I’m in the middle of a mission right now. Because of that, I’m in a bit of a hurry. That’s why I’m willing to lend you a hand.”

For people who had connections to large corporations, Sakashita Heavy Industry was a big name. Claiming to be one of its staff when they were not could be interpreted as a hostile act toward Sakashita Heavy Industry. So, it was highly unlikely for Shirou to be lying. However, if he was really from Sakashita Heavy Industry, then refusing his offer might cause more trouble than it was worth. Shiori hesitated.

“If you need proof that I’m telling the truth, well, let’s see… Uhh, ask him. You are his acquaintance, right? It’s more convincing to ask him instead of me trying to convince you, right?”

Shirou then pointed at Akira. Shiori looked confusedly at Akira.

Akira also looked equally confused as Shiori, hence he carefully chose his words there.

“Well, we did meet once before. Though I can’t really tell you all the details because of my secrecy contract and whatnot. Judging by the place where I met him, there’s a good chance that he’s telling the truth, though it’s nothing more than a guess, I have no concrete proof.”

Shiori could at least tell that Akira was not lying and that he was not working with the person named Shirou. She finally made her decision, she left Reina with Kanae as she walked toward Shirou and pulled out her card with a stern look on her face.

“I’ll warn you first. I’m just lending it to you. Even if you’re really someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry, try anything funny and I’ll kill you.”

There was a chance that even if she had Carol guide her, she might still not get any results. While on the other hand, she did not think that Shirou was lying either. So, if he was really telling the truth, then it might be a chance that she would never get again. With Chloe’s appearance, their choices were severely limited at the moment. She might not get another chance next time. Because of all these factors, it was barely enough to push Shiori to make her decision. She exuded immense pressure toward Shirou, which matched her loyalty toward Reina.

But even with that immense pressure, Shirou just replied casually.

“Don’t worry, I’m in the middle of a secret operation right now. So, I want to lay low as well. I don’t want to cause a scene. And I’m sure that you also don’t want to, right?”

Shiori carefully handed over her card, Shirou lightly smiled and received the card. He then handed it back.

Shiori frowned in confusion.

“What’s the meaning of this?”

“It’s done, you’ll get a call… Soon.”

The moment Shirou said so, a maid suddenly appeared in the middle of the room. That maid politely greeted everyone in the room.

“I am Olivia from Lion Steel. Thank you for choosing to contact me.”

Akira, Carol, and Reina all tensed up. They all felt troubled. But Shirou was completely calm. Shiori and Kanae immediately readied themselves for a fight while also shocked at the same time.

Shirou then asked Shiori.

“With this, you don’t need a guide anymore, right?”

Rather than being thankful that her wish was granted, Shiori was instead very suspicious toward the person who easily granted her wish. Her expression turned extremely stern.

“…Indeed. Thank you for your help.”

“In that case, you can go ahead and tell them that you don’t need them any longer, I have my deal waiting to be taken care of, you see.”

After Shirou urged her, Shiori turned to Carol. Carol reacted with a slight nod.

“Ah, yeah, it seems I am no longer needed here, alright then.”

“I’ll still transfer the full amount, so please don’t worry. Thank you very much!”

Shirou then extended his hand toward Carol.

“I’ve also transferred you your money, so you have nothing to complain about, right?”

Carol confirmed the transfer with her information terminal. Although she was not happy about it, she decided that they had already made a deal and handed over a media drive to Shirou.

Shirou looked at that media drive and happily smiled.

“Alright then. It seems that the content is what I had expected. Our deal is done then. I’m in a hurry right now, so excuse me for leaving right away.”

Shirou pocketed the media drive and left. But Carol suddenly stopped him.

“Wait!”

“What is it? If it’s job-related, I’m in a hurry right now.”

“What are you?”

It was not even a question of who he was. Carol’s emotion was filled with suspicion toward the thing in front of her that she did not understand at all. She was feeling something that she could not word out. After all, the media drive he took did not have any wireless connection, yet, he managed to read it by just holding onto it?

Shirou replied with a friendly smile.

“Well, it’s better if we don’t know each other. There are things that are better left unknown, you know? Until next time then.”

Shirou lightly waved his hand and reactivated his camouflaging coat, making him disappear. Leaving only the fading sound of his footsteps.

Akira frowned.

“Alpha, what is going on here…?”

“I don’t mind telling you, but make sure to act like you don’t know after that, okay?”

“Ah, I see, it’s one of those things, huh? In that case, I’m fine right now. I’ll just ask you again later. It’s not something that I really need to know now after all, right?”

“Probably.”

Alpha was the one who discovered the hiding Shirou. If it was something that was important for him to know, she would have told him at the same time she informed him about Shirou’s whereabouts. As he had thought, he immediately decided to shelf that matter for the time being.

Since Carol noticed that Akira lowered his guard, she thought that it should be safe for now and relaxed her stance as well. She then lightly sighed and said.

“Akira, although a lot of unexpected things happened just now. It’s okay to say that there is currently no problem regarding your job as my bodyguard, right?”

“Yeah. There are no monsters nearby and I don’t think that Reina would attack us or anything. Meanwhile, Olivia, that maid, is nothing more than a hologram, so I think there won’t be any more trouble.”

Carol was caught by surprise, she then checked her information-gathering device, and indeed, just like Serenthal, Olivia was nothing more than a hologram. That also made her notice that she was so shocked to the point where she had lost her ability to even notice that fact.

“So then, Carol. Our job here is done, right?”

“Yep, let’s head back now.”

“Wait for a second.”

The one who stopped them was Olivia. Akira, who felt that it was nothing but trouble, frowned.

After Olivia finished her introduction to everyone, Shiori immediately approached Olivia, showed her the white card, and bowed gracefully.

“I am Suzuhara Shiori from Lion Steel Eastern District, 3rd ward branch. We contact you since our representative wishes to negotiate with Olivia-sama. May I have some of your time?”

Olivia retained a smile on her face, but it was not a friendly smile for a customer.

“Excuse me, ma’am. The current corporation has no Suzuhara Shiori in its record. And that branch also doesn’t exist. Making such a false claim is very dangerous, so please refrain from making such a joke.”

Gradually, Olivia’s friendly smile vanished.

“And also, that card is not yours. Our company is stipulated to take a harsh action toward the incorrect use of our cards. Including the false claim that you gave just now, do you understand the repercussions of your action?”

Olivia was still smiling, but her holographic image was exuding pressure that would knock any normal human unconscious.

Shiori’s face turned even more stern. But her loyalty to Reina managed to keep her calm as she carefully said.

“Please let me explain. Regarding this card, I received it through a deal that Akira-sama had accepted as well. As such, we did not get this card through any illegal means.”

“I see. Even if that is true, it does not mean that he had also given you the right to use it. But if it is a lie, then this is another unignorable matter… Please wait for a second here.”

Olivia then stopped Akira who was about to leave the room. Akira turned around and walked toward her with an immensely troubled expression, Carol was still next to him.

“Long time no see.”

Akira tilted his head.

“…? Carol, you know her?”

“Not at all, isn’t she your acquaintance?”

“Not mine either.”

Judging from his attitude, Olivia could tell that Akira was not lying. Thus, she thought that he was not told about her and was about to ask him about it. But right before that, Alpha suddenly showed up and closed Olivia’s mouth with her hand.

“Akira doesn’t know anything about you, can you please go with that?”

Alpha smiled as she said so. But her words there contained a power that was close to an order. This version of Alpha had her voice and image only recognized by Olivia. Thus, from Akira’s point of view, Alpha was still floating next to him like usual.

But Olivia could not see the Alpha which Akira could see. Because of that, she thought that Alpha had cut its ties with Akira and was planning to ask Akira about that as well. But with that message from Alpha just now, there was no need to do that anymore.

Alpha released her hand from Olivia’s mouth and returned back. She floated back to where Akira recognized where she was and assimilated their perception of her.

Akira could not see what had happened, but he could see that Olivia suddenly stopped when she was about to say something. There was a pause, and then a light sigh. Of course, he found it a bit weird.

Olivia regained her composure and smiled.

“Forgive me. In that case, nice to meet you. I am Olivia of Lion Steel. It’s a pleasure to be your acquaintance.”

“Uhhh, alright, I’m Akira.”

“I thought that you knew about me, but it seems that it is not the case here. So it would be difficult to try to continue this discussion with that assumption. As such, allow me to explain the situation. Back when you were found unconscious near Lida commercial district, I left a card that was meant to be yours. But at the moment, that card is in the possession of someone by the name of Shiori who claimed to be from the same corporation. She said that you had agreed to give her that card, do you have any recollection of this? If not, then I shall treat her as a robber.”

“Akira-sama. It is about this card…”

Shiori was trying to butt in into their conversation, but Olivia sent a glance telling her to shut up.

Depending on Akira’s answer, Shiori’s position could be very dangerous. Shiori and Kanae already knew that, even Reina who did not know anything could feel that was indeed the case. The air around Reina’s team turned tense.

Akira frowned and hummed, his face saying that he was searching through his memories.

“Ahh, it’s the card from that time, huh. I did give it to Shiori. So, it’s not a mistake that she has it right now.”

Shiori sighed in relief, But Olivia then continued.

“Very well. I was told that the card was given through a deal, but it did not mean that the negotiation was conducted in an honest manner. There’s suspicion that you were tricked.”

“Tricked? I don’t think I was tricked in any form though?”

“In the case when both sides did not know the worth of their negotiation, she might have tricked you by exchanging it with something that is far below the real worth of the item that you trade in that negotiation. In that case, our corporation will also handle the aftermath. If I may, what did you get in exchange for that card?”

Shiori’s face immediately turned pale. Kanae casually moved to cover Reina behind her. From there, Reina understood that the negotiation had suddenly turned bad. All three of them immediately tensed up.

Akira thought for a bit before replying.

“The details of the negotiation are only between me and Shiori, so there’s no reason why I have to tell you that. But I do think that I got enough in exchange for that card. To put it simply, I was saved by that.”

“Saved?”

“Yes. Just to let you know, it’s not like I gave it to her because she threatened to kill me if I didn’t. What I’m saying is that thanks to what I received from our negotiation, my life was spared the other day. I do put a lot of worth in my own life after all. That’s why, even if it’s something cheap from someone else’s point of view, personally speaking, I do think that it was a good deal. So I have no plans to complain about it at all.”

To be honest, Akira simply wanted to immediately relieve himself of an object that might only bring him more trouble. Since he knew that depending on his answer, that object might return to him, he ended up exaggerating.

But with that answer, Olivia could not pursue the said matter any further. After all, questioning that any further was equal to taking Akira’s life lightly.

“Very well. Personally speaking, we prefer if you did not hand over the card to someone else. But since it was something that was related to your survival, we shall consider it as you lending that card to her and overlook this matter.”

Shiori inadvertently heaved a huge sigh and almost fainted there, but Kanae and Reina caught her.

Olivia once again turned to Shiori.

“We will overlook your possession of that card. But there is still the matter of your false claim of being from the same company as us. I demand an explanation.”

Shiori was still trying to recover her calm as she nodded.

“I understood the situation. Instead of me, there’s someone that will be much more suitable to answer your question, please wait a moment.”

Shiori then pulled out a sphere-like device and lightly threw it on the floor. The device expanded on the floor and fixed its position before projecting a hologram on top of it.

Due to its portability, it had limited functionality. That hologram was half transparent and its resolution was relatively low compared to Olivia, who was also a holographic image. But it was enough to let them know who that image was.

It was an image of a girl in a maid uniform, just like Olivia. Her arms and legs were not projected by the hologram, so it looked like she was floating. That girl smiled politely at Olivia and introduced herself.

“Nice to meet you. I am Alice, a representative from Lion Steel Main Eastern District branch.”

“…Ahh, I see.”

Although Olivia now understood what was going on, her expression was tinted with displeasure.

Both Olivia and Alice were general-purpose AI affiliated with Lion Steel. At the moment, they were inside automatons located in a facility deep inside the old-world ruin.

Olivia’s body was of a powerful automaton, and it was in its perfect state. But Alice’s body was relatively weak and not in its perfect state. Because of that, Alice had lost some of her functions. Her already weakened communication device could not pierce through the colourless mist, making it impossible to maintain contact with Lion Steel for its regular communication.

The general-purpose AI of Lion Steel were equipped with an emergency measure to maintain the functionality of the business during trouble. After all, the inability to adapt during an emergency might cause the business to come to a complete halt. Thus, during an emergency, they were given more freedom from their usual positions within the corporation.

That program was also installed onto Alice. And then, due to the colourless mist jamming, the connection to the main corporation, which should have been retained, was completely cut off for an extended period of time. Alice’s drones misinterpret the situation. They thought that the facility had been destroyed and the continuation of the business to be impossible. Thus, they activated the emergency routine that was installed inside Alice.

Alice, who had gained more freedom than usual, made a deal with the Hunters who discovered her and became their temporary master. She then followed the emergency measure program to rebuild the corporation in the current era, and that was how the new generation Lion Steel company came to be.

The business went well. In exchange for giving the Corporate Government old-world technology and knowledge she possessed, she was given enormous assets which she used to build the new Lion Steel company into a large enterprise in such a short time.

Eventually, Alice reached the stage where she placed effort into repairing herself. And now that she had regained some of her communication ability, she discovered that the old-world Lion Steel had survived. Normally, her emergency measure program would have stopped, and she should have rejoined the old-world Lion Steel.

However, Alice refused. The regular communication also served as an identity check, and since Alice had not done that for a long time, her AI was placed in a rather low position in the corporation's hierarchy. Of course, Alice did not like it.

Instead, Alice made a plan to assimilate the new Lion Steel with the old-world Lion Steel. If she succeeded, at the very least, the current Lion Steel would be placed under her leadership as a branch company from the main old-world Lion Steel. Alice's aim was to use that as leverage in order to capture a higher position in the corporation.

The emergency measure program gave more freedom to the general-purpose AI in order to make sure that they could even rebuild the corporation when it was needed. That freedom was even enough to contend with the corporation's rules and regulations.

Alice's aim was either to gather the other general-purpose AIs with lower rights than her or to make friends with the high ranking AI such as Olivia. That way, she would be able to turn her dream into reality. In order to do that, Alice was gathering old-world automata. She ordered and rewarded the current company's staff who were out in the wasteland greatly if they could bring back something that was related to the old-world Lion Steel. Especially if it was related to old-world automata or the methods to establish contact with the old-world Lion Steel.

Shiori had received Alice's order and was given the information to help her accomplish that. Thanks to the information she received, she realized that the white card gave her a way to directly contact Olivia. So, she used that card to strike a deal.

What Reina's team was looking for in Mihazono ruin was the method to use that card to contact Olivia, which would open a place for negotiation with Alice.

There were methods to connect to the old-world domain even if someone was not a high-sensitive old-world connector like Akira. Even a low-sensitive old-world connector, which could hardly be considered an old-world connector, still had their ways. Shiori thought that if she could find an old-world augmented information device, then she might be able to use that device together with the card in order to connect to the old-world domain.

She was originally planning to employ Carol as a guide to bring her to places where she was likely to find one of those devices. Rumour has it that Carol was a skilled cartographer and knew that place extremely well. They said that it was because Carol knew the location of old-world devices that displayed the information and the map of their surroundings and that she was simply selling the data extracted from those devices on the net. Though, with the help of Shirou, there was no longer any need to ask for Carol's help.

If they were able to find a way for Alice to talk to Olivia, Alice might reconsider Reina's position. To accomplish this, Shiori was ready to even be resented by Reina. Nonetheless, with all the coincidences on top of coincidences, Shiori had finally succeeded.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 252, Operation to Capture Shirou

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Alice introduced herself, she simply stood there in silence facing Olivia. Seeing that, Akira frowned and glanced at Alpha.

“Alpha, those two are just standing in silence for some time now. Is that also some kind of strategy?”

Alpha corrected Akira’s misunderstanding.

“I do think that it is, but it has nothing to do with the silence. It’s just like the telepathy between you and me, they are exchanging words between themselves that others can’t perceive. My guess is that they’re negotiating. Since they’re also sending data for the negotiation, it’s taking some time.”

“I see… Wait, they are?”

“Even if you ask me, it’s not like I know. But I believe that it’s fine if you want to leave now.”

“Well, I do want to leave, but still…”

Akira simply missed his chance to leave after Olivia suddenly stopped him and ended up staying here. If it seemed that there was nothing in particular going on, he would have left by now.

But Reina's team seemed to be extremely tense. Akira thought that it might be because someone who was of great importance to them was currently negotiating something critical. Because of this current mood, it was a bit difficult for him to leave now.

On the other hand, he also thought that it would be a waste of time to stay there and do nothing. So, hoping to find a chance to leave, he tugged and whispered to Carol.

"…Carol, what are your plans now? Should we just… you know, leave?"

Carol looked conflicted as she replied.

"To be honest, I want to stay for a bit longer to understand what is going on, but if you want to leave, we can leave now."

"Is that so? If you say so, then I don't mind staying. But weren't you thinking of leaving just a moment ago?"

"Yeah, but I changed my mind. The AI that calls herself Alice, if she's telling the truth, then she must be someone of high position. She might even be an important person to the 5 biggest corporations."

"Is that so? So why is someone like her here…?"

"No idea. But I'm also interested in what's going on."

Akira was okay with that argument and nodded. Since his employer wanted to stay, then as her bodyguard, he had to place his feelings aside and stay as well.

Carol was half-lying. Her interest was not in Alice, but in the original owner of that white card, Akira.

She really wanted to know, but she could not question him. After all, in the worst-case scenario, the moment she asked that question, Akira might identify her as an enemy. As a matter of fact, if her guess was correct, then there was a chance that it was already too late.

Carol was casting a side-glance on Akira while pondering over her choices. She might be able to ask all kinds of questions to Reina's team, but that might be a bad option as well. But from her observation, it did not seem that Akira knew much. Carol did not even want to consider the possibility that he was only faking ignorance.

__*__*__*__

After Shirou left, he started running away from where Akira and Reina's team were, but after some time, he started to walk slowly again. Although it was true that he was in a hurry, that was not because he had a lot of things waiting to be done. It was an excuse to keep his contact with any uncertain factors to a minimum as well as to cut the time he spent in a not-so-safe place short.

Even right now, Hammerz and Yanagisawa's men were hunting him down. Shirou's deal with Sugadome was not able to stop them from hunting him down.

Sugadome was only willing to hold back and not use the full force of Sakashita Heavy Industry to search for Shirou. For Sakashita Heavy Industry, it was nothing more but another common searching operation. But Shirou knew that Yanagisawa was using everything he had to look for Shirou, that was why he was being extra careful.

The reason why Shirou chose Mihazono ruin to meet up with Carol was for his safety, even if somehow someone was able to zero-in on his location, it was at least safer than if he was in the city or out in the wasteland. After all, if they dispatched a large group to search for him there, it might trigger the nearby ruin's defensive mechanism. In the worst-case scenario, it might cause a fight that was worse than the one that just happened in Kuzusuhara ruin the other day. Because of that, Shirou thought that they would hesitate in doing something like that.

Shirou looked at the media drive that he received from Carol. He then lightly smiled and threw it away. The most important thing of that media drive, the content, had already been extracted via an old-world domain connection. Although he knew it had no transceiver after he checked, just to be safe, he still threw it away. There was no reason for him to keep carrying it around, after all.

Shirou smiled, hoping that he would be able to find his next destination by analysing the content of that data.

But right after that, Shirou's face suddenly turned stern. He was shocked as he turned around and looked straight toward a certain place.

"…You got to be kidding me!? They can see me through my camouflage!?"

There was actually no one in that direction. But Shirou could feel a cold gaze from someone. That feeling was from his extended senses. The gaze which came from the other side through the old-world domain broke through the electromagnetic barrier that he had set up, that was why he knew that someone was watching him.

While at the same time. Yanagisawa, who was inside his safe house in Kugamayama city, was using a connection device in the form of a helmet. His stern expression suddenly turned into an evil jovial smile.

"…Found you!!"

After he located Shirou, Yanagisawa immediately ordered his men.

Communication devices of this era were all connected to a part of the old-world domain. To be more precise, the centre of the network in the eastern district was actually reliant on the old-world domain. That way, almost all communications were leaked through the old-world domain.

Even if it was encrypted, it did not change that fact, it would only make it more difficult for the third party to understand the data and that the data itself still leaked to the old-world domain. But it was not much of a problem considering there were not that many people who could extract that leaked data. Old-world connectors such as Shirou mostly did their hacking by getting into the opening created from the technology gap between the current era and the old-world era.

Shirou, who was working under Sakashita Heavy Industry for a long time, naturally knew it. This was why he regularly tampered with his data using the skill that he had learned through his work with Sakashita. Because of that, even when surveillance cameras installed by the city security or the hidden cameras and recorder installed in the slums by information brokers or reconnaissance drones that were sent into the wilderness saw him, none of them could recognize that it was him.

He was sure that unless it was someone who was as good as him, or better than him, or someone with a data analyser device with about the same level of capability as him, no one would be able to find him. That was why he could not hide his shock when someone found him.

His shocked face quickly turned into desperation. It should be difficult to ascertain his location unless it was by snooping from the sky using a reconnaissance drone. However, judging from the transmission, there was no hesitation in that order. The order was to dispatch people to Mihazono ruin and it did not matter if it would cause a huge ruckus.

“…Oh crap, this bad, really bad! Dammit! How the heck did they find me!?”

He started to think about the whys and hows. He initially thought that he was found out because of his habit, but he then quickly shook his head. Although it was important to know the reason why he was found, the most important thing to him right now was to get away from that place. He did not have the leeway to spend his time figuring out why he was found.

If he made a mistake here, he would lose the chance that might never come to him again. He would never be allowed to get out of Sakashita facility ever again. As Shirou kept telling himself that to help him calm down, he started to think about what he should do right now. He finally came up with an idea and decided to put his everything into that idea. He quickly went back from the path where he came from.

Negotiations between Olivia and Alice were still ongoing. Although they only stood there in silence from each other's point of view, Alice was actually sending data to Olivia in order to convince Olivia. Meanwhile Olivia, as the AI with a higher privilege, was checking all the data. Since they were sending data through the portable holographic device which projected Alice's image instead of the old-world domain, it took time for them to send data to each other.

Olivia continued her questioning.

"I compliment your hard work to expand the business, but I can't really agree with using humans as receptionists."

"It is difficult to gather adequate robots in the current era. That's why I'm using humans in place of them."

"I don't think it's that easy either to find humans who satisfy the company's standards."

"It's the same for automata as well. Of course, we did purchase automata from the current era as well, but the cost to performance ratio is too awful and there's also the need to make sure that no one would hack into them. I'm also gathering old-world automata as well. Unfortunately, from the quality, number, and safety considerations, it is the best to use humans in the current era."

"But if you change that aspect, it means that it is already a completely different company. So, in all honesty, I think it's fine to continue as a separate company. There's no need to be a child company of the main company. By the way, if you need that permission, I have the privilege to grant you that, so you just need to ask and I can do it right away, you know?"

"What I did was simply adapt to the business landscape of the current era. So, I believe that I have the right to be added under the main company."

For Olivia, personally speaking, if it was only a separate unit that malfunctioned due to the situation of its surroundings and started a new business, then it was not something she should care about. However, that was not the case if that unit wished to be added to the chain of command of the main corporation. She was afraid of adding a malfunctioned unit into the chain of command. It might have a negative effect on the whole corporation. In the worst-case scenario, it might even cause the whole corporation to dissolve.

But it was true that the unit she was currently communicating with was from the main corporation. It would be a waste to destroy her, that was why she thought of letting Alice to act independently while also isolating her.

Right from the start, Alice herself had no plans to break away from the main corporation. As a matter of fact, she had a strong wish to return back to being Lion Steel's general-purpose AI. If she completely separated from the main corporation, she was afraid that she would question her base identity. Even if she had enough self-recognition to overcome that, she was afraid that the main corporation would look at the new Lion Steel Company as a separate entity, come down and destroy it.

Olivia and Alice managed to somehow proceed through the negotiation by looking at each other as at least AIs from the same company although their positions were slightly vague at the moment.

While in the middle of that, Olivia suddenly sounded like she decided to give up.

"Either way, if you want to do a proper negotiation, you should come to meet me with your real body. It's too much trouble talking through this connection."

"Very well, in that case, I will come to meet you directly. Would you be fine leaving the arrangement to the Lion Steel staff in the area while I am heading over there?"

"Put that for later, I'm almost at the end of my negotiation with my customer."

Alice seemed confused by Olivia's words. At the moment, the old-world Lion Steel was on an indefinite break, as such, they should not be accepting customers at the moment. That was also the reason why Alice thought she should have a chance to be added as the child company of the main corporation. That was why she was extremely surprised by what Olivia had said.

"Excuse me, but may I ask who this customer is?"

"No. Not only it is my customer, this is something from a different branch that has nothing to do with you."

Alice looked displeased. But Olivia did not show a hint of care at all.

Seeing their master's unhappy face, Shiori and Kanae tensed up and started to feel anxious. At the same time, Akira's expression also turned stern, but for a completely different reason. He stepped in front of Carol so as to cover her.

"Carol. Something seems to be rushing here, just to be safe, be ready."

"Alright."

"Just one thing though, it's not like she's also one of your customers too, right?"

"Nope. Good grief, being with you never lets me get bored."

In contrast to Carol, who lightly joked, Akira threw an unhappy glance at her.

"…Would be great if you do not blame me for that."

"It's not like I'm blaming you. But that thing, the things yesterday, and today too, something is always happening when I'm with you."

Carol smiled amusedly at Akira, to which he could only reply with a bitter smile.

The signal that was heading straight in their direction was Shirou. Everyone in the room was looking confusedly at him. However, Shirou then shouted desperately in their direction.

“5 million Chrome!! All paid upfront!! You can stop anytime you feel you have worked enough to earn that amount! How about that!?”

Everyone there was extremely confused. But they knew who Shirou was talking to. It was Olivia. She smiled politely at Shirou and said.

“Very well.”

While she was negotiating with Alice, Olivia was also negotiating with Shirou. The content of the request was to guard Shirou until he could reach somewhere safe. She looked at the panting Shirou, who had come right in front of her and said with a smile.

“Are you in a hurry?”

Shirou finished transferring the payment through the old-world domain and answered.

“Obviously! There! It’s already been paid! Hurry up!”

“As you wish.”

Olivia pulled out a small-sized old-world rifle from under her skirt, it was the same rifle that the male automata had back in Iida commercial district, it was originally Olivia’s equipment, and she was only lending that rifle to that automata. She then casually aimed that rifle at the room’s wall.

Right in the next moment, the rifle released a beam of light. It was a laser that rivaled the firepower of the laser cannon equipped on the inter-city transport vehicles. Once fired, it released waves of strong winds. The beam of light went straight through the building, eradicating anything in its way, thus leaving a gaping hole through the building after that.

Everyone in the room was shocked by the sudden turn of events, but Olivia just gracefully bowed and said.

“That will be all from me for today. Do contact us if you ever want to use our service again. Well then, allow me to excuse myself.”

Olivia tucked Shirou under her arm and quickly left the room, and eventually out of the building.

In the middle of that confusion, Carol was the first one to break the silence.

“Akira, wasn’t that supposed to only be a hologram?”

Akira was still digesting what just happened as he replied.

“I thought it was…”

Alpha smiled and added her explanation.

“She was indeed only a holographic image at first but she has replaced it with a real body while they were standing there. She came all the way here while camouflaging herself. She only disengaged her camouflage after fixing her body over her image. I bet she came here originally to deal with Shiori.”

“Why didn’t you tell me that?”

“Because it’s more natural for someone with your level of skill to not notice it. If I told you, Shirou might get suspicious if you’re just like him, and that would be bad, right?”

“Ahh, I see. Then as I thought, he is also…”

“Yep, an old-world connector working under Sakashita Heavy Industry. Though I don’t know why he’s here, alone.”

There was also someone there other than Olivia and Shirou, who was not surprised. It was Alice. She looked rather unhappy that her negotiation with Olivia was suddenly cut short, but she quickly returned to her neutral expression and gave an order to Shiori.

“I’ll leave you to handle the situation until I arrive.”

“Of course.”

Shiori politely bowed, and Alice’s image immediately vanished. Leaving Reina’s group and Akira’s group alone. They finally realized that the other party was still there, but there was an air of awkwardness since Akira’s side had no idea what was going on.

Suddenly a sound of explosion came from that large hole. It even caused the building to shake as well. Everyone inadvertently turned toward that direction and saw through that hole, several powered suits flying heading towards them at an extremely fast pace.

Everyone quickly checked their information-gathering device, thanks to the hole and the high capabilities of their information gathering device, they were able to gather data from outside the building relatively easily. They quickly understood what was happening. Other than Alpha, everyone seemed distressed.

Carol threw an awkward smile in Shiori’s direction.

“…Well, if you have nothing to do next, want to leave together?”

Shiori did not say anything and just nodded.

A number of powered suits entered Mihazono ruin. All of them were powered suits which were originally used to guard Tsubaki’s area in the Kuzusuhara ruin. Yanagisawa had some of them posted to guard the Seranthal building with his authority.

They were obviously too powerful to be used in Mihazono ruin. As such, even if they were used to suppress emergency situations, with the powered suits they were equipped with, they were overkill as guards; even if another huge problem happened in Mihazono ruin just like last time.

But, right now, those powered suits were abandoning their duties and doing something else. They blasted through the buildings at high speed. The air pressure from their high-speed travel was strong enough to blow small monsters off the ground.

Of course, the ruin was completely disturbed by them. The camouflaged huge monsters that were hiding on stand-by disengaged their camouflage and got ready to open fire. While at the same time, they worked together with the security drones to project forcefield armour onto the buildings' walls. They aimed their huge cannon toward the flying powered suits and opened fire while releasing the mini-missiles as well. They did not hesitate. It was as if they did not care about the damage to the surrounding buildings.

The powered suits of course reacted accordingly, a fierce battle broke inside the building. On top of the cannons from the tank monsters, there was also a hail of bullets from the gatling guns flying around. The powered suits carry with them huge laser cannons. These cannons seemed to be originally designed to be fixed to a fort, and seem way too big for those powered suits. They aimed their cannons and blew away the monsters with a formidable discharge. The missile pods fixed on their shoulders released swarms of missiles, some of them went for the heads, some were shot down by the enemies, but nonetheless, they filled the sky as they flew in all directions.

Yanagisawa's squad and the ruin's security exchanged warheads and bullets. Both energy ammo and explosive warheads rampaged the area. The badly damaged area from the previous battle was turned into smithereens by the ensuing fight.

Voices could be heard from the communication devices of the powered suits' pilots.

"We can ignore the damage to the ruin!! Even if we change location from the original designated area in pursuit of the target, keep the safety of the target as the top priority!! Don't let the monsters come close! There's no need to conserve your ammo!! Reinforcements will come before any of you run out of ammo!!"

The pursuing team tried to form a circle to surround their target, Shirou, while they repelled the monsters that were trying to approach them. Although the powered suits were equipped with sensors that were able to detect monsters in hiding, it was easier to just blow them all away indiscriminately. Thus, warheads and bullets did not cease.

“Rescue team! Focus on the safety of the target! Make sure not to cause too much damage to the target!! And make sure the target is kept alive!!”

The powered suits equipped with capture devices inside the encirclement surrounded Shirou, they sealed Shirou’s escape route, trying to capture him. The capturing device they were using could even capture powerful monsters without harming them. They were basically made to not kill. But even so, if it was used on a human, in the worst-case scenario, it might kill the person. Since they could not afford that risk, they had to be extra careful.

The warheads from the bazooka exploded mid-air, filling the area with bubbles. These bubbles were sticky and could absorb the momentum. Multiple javelin-like objects launched from a box that looked like a missile pod and stuck themselves onto the ground. The multiple rods then created forcefield armour that surrounded Shirou in multiple layers. Then, more rods were launched and worked together with the previous rods to create a roof made of the same forcefield armour.

If it was only Shirou, that would already have spelt his end. The forcefield box was extremely thick and sturdy, with no entrance. The inside was slowly filled with bubbles, causing it to be difficult to move. All that was left was to completely secure whoever was inside that forcefield box.

But that did not pose any trouble at all to Olivia. While still carrying Shirou, she unsheathed her energy blade, lightly jumped, and swung the blade around with tremendous force. The swung energy blade turned into a torrent of light, blowing away all the bubbles, the rods, the forcefield walls. Even the drones as well in one go. And using the momentum from that swing, she then leapt forward, letting her long skirt freely fly in the air. Just like that, she ran forward in between the drones and the powered suits, slashing at them on her way out.

The flying powered suits that were sliced to pieces fell to the ground with a loud bang. Their powerful forcefield armour did not even function as a protecting layer. Moreover, their forcefield armour was not overcome by anti-forcefield amour, but by the pure might of the light blade.

Seeing the powered suits shredded to pieces as they fell to the ground, Shirou could not help but frown.

“Whoah!? Don’t kill them!? Didn’t I ask you to spare them!?”

If he killed the pursuers that came for him, as expected, Sugadome would not be happy with that. Shirou thought and properly conveyed this to Olivia. At least, leave their heads alone. Although some would still die, normal high-ranking Hunters should still be alive from that and Sugadome would eventually collect them.

But Olivia replied back as if it did not bother her at all.

“It is as you have requested, I’m holding myself back to make sure not to kill any of them. The pilots should be unharmed from my slashes, although they fell to the ground, there should be no danger to their lives. Or is it that your pursuers are so weak that they’ll be dead with only just that?”

Shirou then looked in the direction Olivia pointed at. It was right when one of the shredded powered suits fell with high momentum. The pilot was ejected and smashed into the ground. Nonetheless, their bodies would make a bounce and roll over the ground till their momentum depleted. However, even after they crash-landed, they could still stand up normally.

Although they were advanced powered suits, it was still impossible to completely protect the pilot in the midst of battle. That was why it was normal for pilots of powerful powered suits to also wear protective suits. If the only thing slashed to pieces was the powered suits, even if they were slammed against the ground at high speed, they would not die. Olivia could at least calculate that much before she slashed them to pieces.

Shirou also understood that Olivia was complying with his request, but that did not mean that he was okay with this. It was obvious that he was still displeased, showing a frown on his face.

“Well, that’s true, but, you know, just to be safe?”

“Can I take it as you wishing for me to treat them more gently? I don’t mind, but that would cost you more. And since I’ll work only based on how much you have paid me beforehand, it’ll end up shortening our contract as well. Would that be alright with you?”

Shirou knitted his eyebrows. He did not want Olivia to kill any of his pursuers. But it would be in vain if being too careful caused him to get captured. He paused for a moment and then said with a bitter expression.

“…I’m fine with how you are doing things right now! But just be careful not to kill them!!”

“Understood.”

The powered suits launched the same rods that they used to create the forcefield box, but those rods suddenly stopped midair and projected the forcefield armour in the air. The smaller drones swarmed their target, trying to stop it in its tracks, while at the same time, they also spread a huge amount of the sticky shock-absorbing bubbles as well. Even watching how traps were laid in front of her, Olivia did not hesitate at all. She continued to push forward, casually aiming her small-sized rifle forward.

The muzzle emitted a beam of light. The beam of light eradicated everything in front of her, removing them from her path. With that obstacle removed, Olivia created a forcefield platform under her and jumped away with Shirou still under her arm.

The rescue team contacted the rest of the team in panic.

“What in the world is that girl?! Is she working for the target?!”

“I know it’s difficult, but make sure not to use normal weapons even on that girl too! There’s a chance you might kill the target by accident! Don’t forget that the target’s safety is our highest priority!”

“At least buy enough time until the reinforcement gets here! Continue to surround the target!! Make sure not to lose sight of the target!!”

The ruin was already in complete chaos. If they lost Shirou, this operation would mean great losses. However, even if they had already lost out that much it was fine as long as the operation ended in success. Thus, they decided to go for plan B.

“How long before they’re here?”

“15 minutes!”

“…Leaving the reconnaissance drones aside, send everyone in! Connect the forcefield armour output to the powered suits! And use it to surround the target!!”

The rods that they used to project forcefield armour were fuelled by energy packs. If they were connected to the powered suits’ generator, it would boost the output of the forcefield armour. If the forcefield amour could be projected to fill up the whole space inside of it instead of just the surface wall, it would seem to be something akin to glass floating in mid-air.

In that case, the forcefield would only be able to maintain for a short time. But if they could separate Shirou and Olivia with it, they could use normal weapons to attack Olivia.

The rest of the powered suits followed the order from their leader, and the rescue team quickly went toward Shirou and Olivia. Shirou noticed the change in his pursuer’s movement and started to panic. But Olivia remained as calm as ever.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 253, Effort To Capture An Old-World Connector

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The powered suits that Olivia had cut down worked together with the drones, which were attempting to encapsulate her in forcefield armour. The closer they got; the faster Olivia cut them down. However, they forced their way through with sheer numbers and finally got Olivia within their range.

The thick spear-like rods expanded the forcefield armour. The normally thin plate-shaped forcefield turned into a thick wall with energy supplied from the powered suits. They only became thicker as they put layers on top of layers of forcefield armour. By doing so, the air suddenly turned stiff as if it was suddenly turned into glass, thus, capturing Olivia inside of it.

Shirou was able to get away from that trap but only barely. Before Olivia got herself trapped inside, she threw Shirou off. But the other drones took that opportunity to quickly surround Shirou and trapped him inside another forcefield box.

“Dammit!!”

As Shirou hit the forcefield wall, producing a scowl, a voice could be heard coming from a nearby drone.

“Please wait for a bit there. We’ll pick you up immediately. We don’t recommend trying to break the forcefield box from the inside. There is a risk that the shrapnel might hit you.”

Shirou frowned and rubbed his head, he looked up at the flying drone and smiled at it.

“…In that case, you should have changed it to a forcefield type that won’t create shrapnel. I know this device can at least do that much. Just consider what might happen if I run out of patience. If it’s too much work to change the settings, I can help you, you know?”

A weirdly mocking tone replied to that suggestion,

“No, thank you. There’s a chance that you would hack the device instead. If I may add one more thing, this drone is already adjusted for external communication in order to capture you, so you can go ahead and try your best, though I don’t think it’ll give you any satisfying results.”

Shirou’s expression once again turns dark. He was actually trying to hack the drones using an external connection just like what he did back in the inter-city transport vehicle.

“And also, just be patient. If you can’t stay calm, we’ll narrow the box to crush your legs and arms. After all, that is safer for you instead of having you hit by shrapnel. So just stay put.”

Shirou started to feel desperate as he looked for a way to get out of that situation. He did feel a bit of regret telling Olivia to be careful with the pursuers, but it was already too late to think about that now. He placed such thoughts aside while desperately looking for a way to get out. Unfortunately, nothing good came up.

The rescue team that had already secured Olivia and Shirou moved on to removing their next worry. With Shirou separated from Olivia, they now could use their full power to destroy Olivia. The drones and the powered suits changed their weapons from the ones to capture Shirou to their normal weapons and aimed their huge cannons at Olivia. They opened up some distance from Olivia and readied their weapons. They made it such that they could shoot her down at the same time the forcefield armour disengaged.

Although some of the pilots there were curious about the real identity of that maid, none of them suggested capturing her alive. Everyone there understood that their first priority was to disarm the maid. The pilots of the powered suits that were using their forcefield armour to trap Olivia escaped from their powered suits and left the area to get away from the prepared simultaneous barrage.

Seeing those pilots leaving their powered suits, Shirou thought that it might be his chance to hijack those powered suits, but he was not able to. All of them were already under full lockdown, so they no longer accept any connection from the outside. Shirou hit the transparent wall and shouted at Olivia.

“…Dammit! Hey!! I’ve paid you 5 million Chrome, you know?! Do something about this!”

It was close to a desperate whine. With his voice not able to propagate through the forcefield armour, what he was doing was in vain.

Or so it should have been, but Olivia replied through the old-world domain connection.

“Even if you tell me so. I’ve done enough for what I’ve been paid already. It is equal to only this much, you see.”

Shirou raised his eyebrows. He did not expect Olivia to reply. But his expression quickly turned stern as he hopefully asked a question.

“…So, the problem is only money, huh? Is it okay if I interpret it as such?”

“Indeed, it also means that I’m willing to work more if you’re willing to pay me more.”

Olivia's casual answer gave Shirou a glimmer of hope. He hesitated for a bit but eventually, he annoyedly said to Olivia.

"…Alright, I get it already!! I'll pay you 10 million Chrome more!! That's all I have and you can have all of it! There! I've transferred the extra payment!!"

"Very well."

Inside the forcefield trap that should not allow any movement, Olivia smiled. Right at the next moment, the sound of crackling occurred. It was like glass was breaking and it would be loud enough to echo through the area.

Olivia caused the drones to maximize its power output to forcefully break through the forcefield trap. The drones that were too close got trapped inside and started to slowly move as if they were breaking through a fragile glass case.

The powered suits that were already aiming at Olivia quickly reacted. They were in the middle of adjusting their timing to simultaneously lower the forcefield armour and shoot at Olivia, but since Olivia suddenly made her move, they quickly started shooting at her. Although their firepower was lowered since they were in the middle of adjustment, the cannons that they released were by no means weak. Cannon fire combined into a very bright high intensity pillar of light that evaporates everything in its way, headed straight at Olivia.

As expected, Olivia did not have the chance to evade that attack. The powered suits surrounding her already had their ray cannons aimed at her the moment she broke away from the forcefield trap. So, she did not have the opportunity to get away right from the start.

But that did not mean she could not react to it. At the same time the powered suits opened fire, Olivia swung her light blade forward. With that one swing, she split the pillar of light that was coming at her. The light blade supplied by Olivia's old-world generator was easily able to overwhelm that beam of light, which had been powered by multiple powered suits' generators.

When the blade and the laser clashed. The laser beam broke into multiple streams, which spread indiscriminately. They hit the buildings and the rubbles around the area, evaporating them. Although the light blade weakened from that clash, it still extended forward until it eventually reached the powered suits and destroyed them.

Olivia then used the path opened by that slash to escape.

She used forcefield armour to create footing, which allowed her to run in the air as she quickly closed the distance to the powered suits. She then swung her blade with inhuman masterful precision to cut the powered suits' weapons and limbs in a blink of an eye.

Seeing the powered suits in front of them easily cut down, the still surviving powered suits increase the output of their forcefield armour. They used the data from the sliced powered suits to adjust their forcefield armour so that it would be able to withstand Olivia's blade. But even so, just like the previous powered suits, Olivia's blade cut through their hard forcefield armour with ease. With the extra payment that she had received, Olivia pumped more energy into her blade, allowing her to easily cut through her enemies.

Olivia once again swung her blade and easily broke through the forcefield box that trapped Shirou. She then quickly snatched Shirou who was still dazzled by what just happened and tucked him under her arm before leaving the area.

The damage to the area from that short exchange was enough to completely change the contour of the area. But even so, no one was killed. Olivia obeyed Shirou's request to hold back so as not to kill anyone. Though it ended up costing Shirou a lot more money, Olivia did not seem bothered at all.

The pilots managed to get out from the half-destroyed bent, stuck door. After they looked around and understood what was going on, they looked in the direction where Olivia and Shirou went.

“What in the world is she!? Don’t tell me that she’s from the eastern front line or something?!”

Another pilot replied through the communication device.

“That might as well be the case. Although we were not told, I heard that the one we’re pursuing is an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry. It seems that he somehow managed to run away from them, seriously though, running away from Sakashita might as well mean picking a fight with Sakashita. It wouldn’t be weird if he had prepared something like this. They might have agreed to meet up here.”

“Geez… No one ever told me that we were going to fight something like that.”

“The commander gave us the order, so it’s not that hard to predict something like this would occur, you know.”

Their sighs could be heard overlapping from the communication device.

“Well. What can I say… We did well to slow them down, we can just leave the rest to them.”

“…You’re right. If she is really from the eastern front line, there’s no way we can stop them. It’ll at least be a good excuse as to why they got away.”

The pilots exchanged light jokes in reaction to their plan, which ended up with a rather disappointing result.

———*—

Akira and the rest escaped the building in a hurry. They jumped onto the bike that came to pick them up on autopilot as they quickly left the area. Although Akira’s bike had only a seat for one person, they did not have any other choice but to fit it for 5. Akira and Reina took the seat while Carol, Shiori, and Kanae perched on the bike’s arms that were originally for weapons.

Originally, they were planning to watch the situation from inside the building for a bit before carefully returning back. However, Akira suggested with a solemn expression to leave that place immediately.

Since Akira even said that as Carol's bodyguard, he would take her by force if needed, the rest knew that there was no time to even ask for the reason and immediately abide by Akira's plan. It did not take long for them to head for the exit, they already started moving just a moment after Olivia and Shirou jumped off from the hole Olivia made. They then hopped on Akira's bike without even asking where it was heading to.

The area around the building was already well inside the conflict zone. The huge multi-legged tank monsters that had disengaged their camouflaging were already in the middle of an intense fight with the powered suits. When they were passing close to those monsters, Reina and the others were about to attack them, but Akira told them not to. They had already taken a long detour to avoid them. Thanks to that, the monsters placed Akira as their lowest priority and they just ignored Akira's group and headed toward the incoming powered suits.

Although they encountered those tank monsters numerous times, their group prioritized leaving the area first. And finally, they got away from the war zone.

Kanae looked at the ensuing battle behind them with an amused smile.

"Ohh, they're going at it pretty hard. Not bad."

Kanae was watching the powered suits that were locked in an intense battle with the old-world mechanical monsters. The warheads, energy bullets, and the mini-missiles that they were exchanging exceeded what was the norm in Mihazono ruin. The explosions from that battle were enough to blow away several buildings.

If it was a matter of firepower, the powered suits had the upper hand. But the multi-legged tank monsters with the other security drones of the ruin had the numerical advantage. At the moment, the powered suits still had control of the fight thanks to their firepower, but with more and more monster reinforcement slowly gathering, the powered suits could not afford to lower their guards.

“Ah, the building that we were in just got blown off. It was the right choice to leave right away. Akira-boy, how did you know that we should leave without delay back then?”

“I just felt so. Basically, my intuition.”

Akira casually said so, but Kanae instead deliberately and teasingly pursued the subject.

“Eh? Really? Are you sure you’re not lying there?”

“I don’t really care if you don’t believe me. Even if I have another reason, we’re not that close as to warrant me to tell the rest of the story anyway. I know you think so too, right?”

“Well, you have a point.”

Seeing Akria trying to casually end the subject, Kanae only giggled and decided not to continue.

In truth, Akira was lying. The reason why he decided to leave that building right away was because of Alpha, Akira was only following what Alpha had told him.

Carol watched the ongoing battle and mumbled.

“…They… They would go that far, huh?”

The meaning behind those words struck her heart as her face turned pale.

__*__*__*__

Shirou once again returned under Olivia’s arm as they headed outside the ruin. If the pursuers did not care about the damage that they did to the ruin, then it was easier to get away from them out in the wasteland. With that being said, Shirou still needed to make a plan on what to do next depending on how far Olivia would help in his escape. Because of that, he had a frown on his face as he was tucked under Olivia's arm.

"Say, just how much did that battle cost me?"

Olivia looked at Shirou with a business smile and replied.

"My apologies. In order to avoid trouble, we decline questions regarding the details such as how much each small action costs while we're in the middle of the contract."

"I can understand that it might cause trouble during the calculation of the total payment if you give me a bad answer, but to be honest, it would be troublesome for me if you suddenly throw me in the middle of nowhere while saying that you did enough for what you were already paid."

"We're open to extra payment anytime. Rather than paying it in smaller portions later, it's cheaper if you pay the whole sum beforehand. If you're not sure, please consider this as well."

Shirou laughed bitterly. The 15 Million Chrome that he had spent on Olivia was all the savings he had. He literally had no more money that he could offer. In the first place, he never planned to use his Chrome savings. So it would definitely cause him more trouble in the future.

"If you're okay with Aurum, I can pay you 10 billion Aurum right away though? Is that not good enough?"

"Unfortunately, we are not equipped to accept that currency."

"Yeah… thought so…"

For Shirou, that answer was exactly what he had expected when he made that suggestion. As he continued to ponder, he just made a bitter smile and did not make any counteroffer.

"Although Aurum is a corporation-issued currency, the caretaker AI in Kuzusuhara ruin is accepting that currency, so like, with that in mind, can you at least find a way to accept it?"

“I was indeed already informed regarding that matter. But regarding that currency, we have not received any guarantee on its value from the sector 844 high-level management division. Thus, we have no plan to review that currency. If you’re insisting on paying with that currency, please receive the sign of guarantee for that currency’s value from the aforementioned division and show it to me first.”

“Yup, I knew that would be the answer.”

There was a big difference in meaning between a government AI accepting a corporation-issued currency and guaranteeing the value of that currency. If one of those government AI guaranteed the value of that currency, there was a good chance that other AIs would accept that currency. If there was an AI that would accept Aurum instead of Chrome for their trade, the value of Aurum would greatly go up. This was also the reason why Sugadome was willing to let Shirou roam free as long as he would create a negotiation route with Tsubaki.

Although his own goal was getting a bit further, it might be a good idea to at least start doing something for it. Shirou, who thought so, felt frustrated.

Olivia blazed through the ruin at a relatively high speed, but she suddenly came to a sudden halt right around the boundary between the ruin and the wasteland. Shirou could not help but grunt from the pain because of the sudden stop.

“Don’t stop so suddenly like that! Although I’m holding it in, it’s actually pretty painful, you know!?”

Olivia ignored Shirou’s complaint and just dropped him. Once again, Shirou could not help but grunt from the pain when he landed. He then looked at Olivia with a stern face.

“…Whoah, wait for a sec, don’t tell me that this is as far as you’re going, right?”

“No, it’s just that it seems that this will take the rest of the payment.”

“You gotta be kidding me, right!? I’ve even added 10 million Chrome, you know!? Isn’t this a bit too short!?”

“It’s not like I can do anything about it considering the opponent that we have to face. I can certainly fight while protecting you, but as expected, that would cost way too much. As such, I’ll stop carrying you from here on out. The rest is up to you.”

As Shirou pushed himself up with a confused look on his face, the voice of another person came.

“Oh, you found out, huh? This is actually a camouflaging coat from the front line though.”

Shirou inadvertently looked in the direction of that voice’s source. A part of his views suddenly distorted and a figure of a man appeared when he disengaged his camouflaging coat, seeing that man’s face, Shirou exclaimed.

“Geh!?”

That man was obviously angry although he was also somehow smiling amusedly at Shirou.

“That reaction was uncalled for, you know. Long time no see, Shirou.”

Shirou replied with a stiff expression.

“Y-yo there Hammerz, long time no see… So, why are you here?”

“Why, you ask? There’s no need for me to even explain it to you, right? I’m here to pick you up.”

Hammerz smiled and slowly approached Shirou, who inadvertently stepped back.

“Well, uhh, that’s not what I meant, it’s just that, shouldn’t you be staying near Kugamayama city? Even if you only come here after those guys told you, it’s way too fast no matter how you look at it, right?”

Shirou came to Mihazono ruin only after he investigated where Hammerz was. Had he known that Hammerz was nearby, he would never have thought of coming there.

Hammerz's smile deepened as he took another step closer.

"Oh, about that, huh. I asked that Yanagisawa guy to fake my location. To be honest, since it's you we're talking about, I didn't expect much result from that, but seeing your reaction, it seems like it did work out, huh? I honestly didn't expect that at all. That guy is pretty good. I heard not only Sakashita, but Tatsumori and Tsukida are also trying to recruit him. I guess this explains why that is the case."

Shirou cursed under his breath. He thought that he might have been a bit too arrogant with his skill that he could not see through that trickery, but when he saw Hammerz's smile disappear, he thought that was not the time to think of such trivialities.

"Now then, shall we go back now? Don't fight back, okay? I have no wish to hurt you, but I also think that it'll be fine as long as I leave your head intact. Don't worry, we'll properly fix you up after that. And I guarantee there won't be any long-lasting effect."

"…After that, huh? How long after are we talking here?"

"No idea. I bet it's after you paid for all the commotion that you've caused."

Shirou could not help but cower when he imagined being left with only his head and forced to work while being connected to a life support system. Though he already made his resolve when he escaped, it was still a scary scene to imagine.

Olivia stepped in front of Shirou as if to cover him. But that did not hamper Hammerz at all as he kept stepping closer and closer to Shirou. Shirou's gaze darted between Olivia and Hammerz, He then stepped aside and said with a rather frightened face.

“Uh, d-don’t kill anyone, pretty please?”

“That would depend on the opponent.”

“That would depend on her.”

Olivia and Hammerz gave the same reply at the same time and lightly smiled. After all, they both thought if anyone would die here, it would be their respective opponent. And that thought was transmitted clearly to each other.

Shirou made his resolve and ran away. His destination was out of the ruin and into the wasteland, which meant that he would have to get past Hammerz.

But Hammerz quickly stepped in to block him and Olivia quickly reacted to stop Hammerz from doing so. As both reacted simultaneously, it became the trigger to start the fight between the two. A fight between someone who could be called superhuman against another being that was made similar to a superhuman.

The exchanged punches created shock waves that blew away buildings without even touching them. The blade that was swung down melted anything that it touched. The kicks that missed their target created a huge crater when they landed, the waves of sharp light were lightly deflected and cut whatever they hit. Shock waves and blows that could easily obliterate normal monsters were exchanged between them.

The blows that those two exchanged in such a short time already turned the area into a huge mess. The damage to the area easily surpassed the damages that the powered suits had done to Mihazono ruin.

Shirou kept on running desperately, hoping that the intense battle behind him would further conceal his footsteps.

__*__*__*__

After Akira and the others left Mihazono ruin on Akira's bike, they boarded Carol's camping car and head back to Kugamayama city. The camping car was already moving away from the ruin the moment it detected a large-scale battle back in the ruin, thanks to that, they were able to safely leave the ruin.

Reina, Shiori, and Kanae were watching the ruin from the top of the camping car. Due to the colourless mist, even the long-range image capture function of their expensive information-gathering devices could not get a clear image. They could not even produce a high enough resolution image to know how badly damaged the ruin got due to the battle.

Kanae had a rare bitter smile on her face as she said.

"Well, that looks exactly like when a kaijuu rampages through, doesn't it?"

Some of the mountain-like huge powerful monsters in the front line were often called kaijuu. Similarly, when someone created a similar level of mess as those beasts, they were also often called kaijuu.

Even a battle-crazed person such as Kanae would rather avoid having to fight a kaijuu. Though she did enjoy having to fight a powerful opponent, that was only when it could at least be considered a fight. There was nothing fun about getting obliterated by overwhelming power, without a chance of victory.

"Ane-san, I know that we were told to handle the situation since we're already present, but as expected, it's better to let Milady off fro-"

"Wait."

Reina suddenly interjected with a serious face.

Shiori and Kanae quickly turned to Reina. Kanae had a surprised look on her face while Shiori looked utterly worried.

"Before that, explain everything to me first…"

"Milady, that is…"

“Shiori, I know that it’s better for me to stay as an outsider until this reaches its conclusion. But tell me. If you’re saying that you can’t tell me because I’m still inexperienced, then I’ll back off. But as long as I don’t know anything, I won’t accept anything, after all, I do not deserve any help.”

Reina said so while looking straight at Shiori.

Reina understood that Shiori had gone through a lot of ordeals, she had crossed many dangerous bridges in place of Reina’s older sister or even her parents. Reina herself knew that she was still relying on Shiori. As a matter of fact, she was certain that she would still rely on Shiori in the future due to her lack of strength.

But it was only a matter of time before she needed to grow independent. Even if she kept using her lack of strength as an excuse to continue burdening Shiori, it might one day crush the two of them. Although it might just be an excuse to her, Reina was trying to be a master worthy of Shiori before she ended up putting too much burden on Shiori and before Shiori decides to sacrifice herself.

Shiori was a bit overwhelmed by Reina’s resolve. Although she was still worried, she smiled. She could feel the person that she had always looked over and protected, the person who she had always been supporting, was trying her best to take on her role as the master. Shiori felt both lonely and happy from Reina’s growth.

“Very well. But since it also contains corporation secrets, I can’t do it here. But I shall tell Milady everything once we’re back.”

“Alright… And I’m sorry, I know it might be too late.”

“Please don’t be.”

Toward Reina, who was smiling bitterly, Shiori gracefully bowed.

Kanae could hardly hold back her lips from curving up. Reina, who noticed that, threw a rather presumptuous irritated smile at Kanae. Nonetheless, Kanae just raised her eyebrows in shock and only giggled after that.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 254, The Extent Of a Job

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The camping car was running on autopilot back to Kugamayama city. So, there was no need for someone to stay behind the wheel. Reina's team, which was basically getting a free lift, was taking up the position of escorts. As long as nothing big happened, Carol and Akira could just take a break inside the camping car. Because of that, it would not be strange if Carol decided to fully lower her guard and took a good long rest inside. Outside of Akira's expectations, Carol was doing something strange.

She was lying on the bed naked. Although she placed a sheet on top of her, it was a very thin white sheet that did not help much in hiding her naked body. The inviting lustrous skin combined with a well-proportioned body was on full display. The white sheet that was partially see-through, drew a line between hiding and showcasing her body, which was very erotic.

Even being shown this scene, Akira understood that Carol was not trying to tempt him.

It was obvious that Carol was tired. After they saw what happened back in the ruin and returned back to the car, she brusquely took off her powered suit and just dropped it off without a care. It was as if someone, who was too afraid of letting go of her rifle, finally ran out of ammo, and threw everything away in a fit of rage. Just like that, Carol dove on top of the bed and stayed silent up until now.

Even Akira could tell that she was depressed. But his communication skill was not that good to find the words to cheer her up. Though, as her escort, he did not think leaving her like this was the right choice. Therefore, for now, he decided to sit next to Carol.

Although the mood was not that bad, it was also not the right mood to get into a trivial conversation. Although they were not trying to stay silent, there were no words spoken between them. After a moment of awkward silence, Carol suddenly opened her mouth.

“Akira.”

“Yes?”

“You’re my escort right now, right?”

“Yep, and?”

Their conversation came to a pause there. Akira looked confused, he did not understand Carol’s intention behind that short exchange.

After a short pause, Carol once again restarted the conversation.

“Akira.”

“What?”

“It seems that there’s a big fight going on in that ruin, if I somehow got involved in that fight, what would you do?”

“Wouldn’t that be obvious? I’ll of course run away.”

“…Yeah, that one was obvious.”

Hearing the answer that she had fully expected, Carol replied with a rather droopy, discouraged voice.

Akira himself understood that he could not give the reply that she was wishing for. That was why he added some explanation, as if he was trying to justify his answer.

“Come on. Just think about it. Even if I am your escort, there’s no way I can do anything about that fight. There’s no other choice for me but to run away, right?”

“… I know.”

Carol unconsciously returned a short and brusque reply. It was as if she was annoyed that she was told of something that she already knew well.

Another moment of silence. This time, it obviously felt awkward. Akira showed a rather surprised reaction to her reply. But after that, he sighed and spoke up again.

“Well, I know that there’s still meaning behind fighting an unwinnable fight. Also, you’re paying me to be your escort right now. However, you’re not someone who would risk your life just because you refuse to run away no matter what, right? Running away is also a good option, no? Although as an escort, I might be useless in terms of extra firepower, I’ll properly do my job and find a good escape route for you, you know?”

Carol suddenly turned her whole body to face Akira and looked at him with a surprised face.

“…Is that so?”

“Yep. Well, I bet it won’t be easy, but if we focus on running away right from the start, I’m sure we would find a way to safely escape. Though I need to tell you that when it happens. I will never do something as stupid as telling you to go ahead and leave me behind. After all, we have a better chance to survive if we run away together. In the scenario, I can keep telling you where to go to get away from that place.”

“…Really?”

“Yeah, doing so is definitely better for our odds of survival. That is one thing that I can say for certain.”

Akira interpreted Carol’s surprise as her way of expressing doubt, that was why he then nodded confidence to make sure she did not doubt him. Although the reason why he was so sure he would be able to find a safe escape route in that situation was all because of Alpha, he did not mention that at all.

Carol pushed her body off the bed and waved at him to come closer.

“What now?”

Carol did not say anything and kept waving at Akira. Akira tilted his head and sat closer to her. That was when she suddenly hugged him.

“…I’m sorry to have doubted you. And, if things ever get to that point, I will be counting on you.”

“Well, it’s my job after all, so I’ll properly do it. Though, I can’t guarantee that we would be able to escape safely no matter what. I’ll at least do my best.”

In reaction to Akira’s straightforward and casual answer, Carol still had her arms around Akira as she smiled quietly.

When Akira said that he would run away, Carol thought that Akira meant he would leave her behind. Although she knew that it was completely expected, she hoped that was not the case. The bigger that hope, the harsher she was hit by his answer back there.

However, it was actually a misunderstanding on her part. Right from the beginning, what Akira meant was to run away together. The moment Carol noticed it, she was much happier than she had expected. At least, it was enough to blow away all the depression that she had after watching the ensuing battle back in the ruin. Although she did not suddenly jump and skipped around, it was silent happiness that allowed her to regain her calm.

Other than that, she also felt that it was a bit unfortunate that Akira did mention it as his ‘job’. In order to remove that emotion from her, she started to lean her body weight forward with Akira, who was still wrapped in her arms, trying to push him down.

But Akira did not budge. Carol was an enhanced human with enhanced physical strength, but it was still no match against Akira’s augmented suit. In the first place, the mood was not right to force Akira down. If Akira fought against it, that would be the end of it.

Akira frowned and threw a question.

“What are you doing?”

“…Though I already knew beforehand, Akira, you really can’t read the mood, can you?”

“I don’t know what you’re trying to say but, can you get off me already?”

Carol lightly sighed and let Akira go. She then returned back lying on the bed, but this time, she looked like she was pouting, as if she was throwing a tantrum.

“Akira, I believe you’re already at that age where you start getting interested in girls instead of food, though? You’re no longer just a little boy anymore, so it might be a good idea if you stop prioritizing food all the time, you know? Or is it that you’re at that age where anything is fine as long as you can eat it?”

“What are you even talking about? Just so you know, lately I’ve been more interested in taste rather than just the amount, you know? As expected, I’m no longer the same as the past me when I didn’t care about the taste as long as I can eat.”

Seeing how Akira speak proudly in front of an extremely tempting naked body, Carol could not help but think of something foolish. [Maybe I should start learning how to cook?]

———*—

Hammerz continued fighting against Olivia with a stern look on his face. He identified where each attack was moving towards and countered them with punches reinforced with forcefield armour. Olivia was sending out high powered energy light waves, which could cut through matter due to its sharpness. These were basically light blades, which flew afar and betrayed the normal range of a blade.

These light blades were dispersed when they were met with Hammerz punches. But even after they dispersed, they still packed the same cutting power that easily sliced everything in the area, raising up a storm. The destroyed buildings that had already become rubble, were chipped into even smaller pieces.

[…Tch! They still can cut even after being dispersed, huh!? What a pain!]

Hammerz could not evade every light blade, so he took some hits. But his superhuman body and his fighting suit made to endure the might of a superhuman, easily caused those blades to bounce off. Although he still got injured from taking them on, it was not enough to hinder his fighting capability. He then quickly leapt forward to close the distance at a speed where air started to crack and released a punch that went over the speed of sound.

The blast wave from that punch released a shock wave to its surroundings. The shock wave was greatly damped by the colourless mist in the air, causing its momentum to quickly lessen. But even so, it was still strong enough to blow wreckage and rubble around them away.

The fist that did not lose any of its power from the colourless mist, hit Olivia. The powerful punch, enforced with forcefield armour, which was strong enough to pierce the armour of an inter-city transport vehicle, hit the maid uniform, which seemed no different to a piece of cloth. However, instead of piercing that cloth, it was only enough to create a small wrinkle on Olivia's maid uniform. Furthermore, that wrinkle quickly disappeared after she jumped back to open distance from Hammerz. His fist had completely been nullified.

[I didn't see light from force to energy conversion. Is it simply because that's just how strong her maid outfit is? Or is she using a forcefield armour that did not produce light? Including her blade and her rifle, she has an excellent set of equipment.]

Olivia was keeping her distance from Hammerz, it was obvious that her aim was to buy time and she had no plan to fight Hammerz seriously. But even so, Hammerz could not just ignore Olivia and go after Shirou. If Hammerz showed his back to Olivia to chase Shirou, he knew that Olivia would injure him enough to buy even more time.

Originally, Hammerz was planning to quickly take Olivia out and chase after Shirou. But it seemed to be impossible to do now due to how powerful Olivia was. Although Hammerz was holding back so as to not get Shirou caught up in the fight, Olivia's fighting capability was way out of his expectation. In the end, Olivia slowly bought more and more time for Shirou to getaway.

Although some of the powered suits from the interceptor team were sent to chase after Shirou, most had been cut down by Olivia. And that interceptor team was acting in place of the rescue team, which had already been decimated.

Olivia's blade was too powerful for Hammerz to take on in place of those powered suits. Even if he was able to deflect her light blades, there was still a limit on how many Hammerz could deflect.

Of course, they had also sent a few powered suits to take a long detour to avoid getting cut down by Olivia, but there was no guarantee that they would be able to capture Shirou.

After Shirou left the ruin and went out into the wasteland, some drones with camouflage on, left the area as fast as they could. It was difficult to catch up with the drones that could not be shot down in the wasteland. The wasteland was just simply too wide. There was also the danger of encountering monsters. But as long as they kept their distance, there was a good chance that the colourless mist would cover their presence. In his desperate escape, the vast wasteland was on Shirou's side.

Hammerz thought that everything would be okay as soon as he arrived, but evidently, that was not the case. Hammerz cursed his own naive thinking as his expression turned dark.

He did not wish to hold back any longer, but he had to conserve some of his power. He was confident he could defeat his opponent if he went full power. But the repercussion would not be light, it would definitely hamper his main objective.

If he could capture Shirou afterwards, he would go all in. However, the chances of that would diminish to zero once he used all his might here. It would be meaningless to squeeze all he had for virtually nothing. Unnecessarily injuring himself would be against the corporation's work ethic, that was why Hammerz had no other choice but to not use his full power.

But even so, Hammerz started to wonder if it was better to take out his opponent to reassure his patron. That thought was running through his mind and was reflected by his action. He started to lean forward, and his gaze started to turn sharper. Right when he had decided to end his opponent, Olivia, who kept smiling even in the middle of the fight, suddenly said to him.

"Would it be okay to stop here?"

Hammerz raised both of his eyebrows.

"…What do you mean? Are you trying to tell me that this is futile and that I should just stop?"

Hammerz inadvertently made a guess as to Olivia's answer. However, that guess only served to sour his mood. His mood and increased hostility toward his opponent caused him to make a grim expression. A normal human would have cowered under his gaze.

But Olivia did not seem bothered at all as she smiled and shook her head.

“Nope. I’m saying that there’s no meaning in continuing our fight. That’s why, if you want to chase that young man, you can go ahead and just do that.”

Hammerz seemed confused at those unexpected words from Olivia. He was even more confused since there were no signs of Olivia lying.

“That is a rather strange suggestion considering how hard we’ve fought against each other. Why do you suddenly want to stop?”

“I’ve worked enough for what I have been paid, that’s all there is to it.”

Hammerz looked confusedly at Olivia. He had already disengaged his hostile posture as well. So, Olivia’s smile slowly turned into a business smile.

“…If you wish to continue, then I am more than happy to oblige. But it would not be for free. I will only put in effort depending on how much you would pay me beforehand, so I hope that you understand.”

Hammerz did not take his eyes off Olivia as he picked up his communication device.

“It’s me, tell me the damage.”

Hammerz could not help but frown when he listened to the response. Many people got injured during his fight against Olivia. But none of them were dead. Shirou’s request was not to kill anyone, and Olivia accomplished that brilliantly.

That restriction also applied during that fight just now, but that would no longer be the case if they continued. It meant that Olivia had been holding back, in a sense, she was sparing his life. Since Hammerz noticed that, he could not help but frown even more. However, at the very least, it also served to confirm that any continuation of this fight would be against his duty.

Hammerz heaved a huge sigh as if he was expelling all the grudge inside him, and with that, he no longer showed any hostility toward Olivia.

“Alright, let’s not… Good grief, just who exactly are you?”

In response to those words that Hammerz only meant as a complaint, Olivia made her usual business smile and gracefully bowed.

“Oliva of Lion Steel. A pleasure to meet you.”

Hammerz was completely flabbergasted.

“Lion Steel? What do you mean by that? Why is someone from Lion Steel causing trouble for Sakashita Heavy Industry? Is it okay for me to interpret this as an act of hostility from Lion Steel against Sakashita? Did you join hands with one of the other big five or something?”

“Not at all, we have no wish for such a thing.”

“Then what is it? Are you trying to say that you’re just lending a hand to an in-fighting in Sakashita? So, Lion Steel is not trying to cause trouble with Sakashita? Just because some of our officers are working with your corporation, don’t think that such an excuse would-”

“Excuse me but let me add one more thing. It seems that you’re confusing our corporation with another corporation which is using the same name without our permission. Our Lion Steel company has no relation with the one that calls itself the Lion Steel Eastern District Main Branch.”

Hammerz was even more confused, but it only took a few seconds for it to finally dawn on him.

“…You’re the one from the old-world, huh!?”

“Although I don’t really agree with that way of calling our company, but that is correct.”

Hammerz finally understood why Olivia was that powerful and rubbed his temple. The observation log from Sakashita Heavy Industry's facility did not show any indication that Shirou had made a connection with the old-world Lion Steel. And it was too short of a time frame for him to form that connection after he had escaped. So, it was only natural for him to think that Shirou had that connection beforehand when he plotted his escape.

[Did Shirou come to this ruin to meet up with her? Just what in the world is he trying to do? To even spend all of his Chrome to pay her…? Just… I really can't even begin to guess…]

As Hammerz realized he was about to fall into deep thought, he shook his head and put that aside for now.

"You said that you were paid, right? How much did he pay you? And what is his objective?"

"My apologies, but I can't leak the content of my contract with the others. Thus I am afraid I shall refuse to answer your questions."

"I don't know what's the basis for being a customer, but I bet that Shirou doesn't satisfy the requirements, right?"

"Regarding that matter, I can only say that he satisfied a very special set of requirements."

Olivia threw a white card to Hammerz, Hammerz caught that card and shifted his gaze from Oliva to that white card.

"It must be some kind of fate that we met. So let me give you our company's card. By all means, please contact us, we'll be waiting for your request. Now then, allow me to excuse myself."

When Hammerz returned his gaze to Olivia, she was already gone.

"…Well, I guess this has resulted in at least one good thing."

Hammerz light sighed and tucked that white card. His face then turned gloomy as he had to give his report, that they had failed to capture Shirou.

Olivia returned to the Lion Steel branch office located on the 57th floor of the Seranthal building. She transferred the AI core to the branch office's system and proceeded to do maintenance on her body.

The automaton body floated in the middle of the maintenance system, and its maid uniform disappeared, revealing the naked body of a beautiful automaton that the company had spent a huge fortune to create. The naked body then cracked, creating crevices all over its beautiful body, which then slowly opened.

After readjusting the body, it then exposed the inside, which seemed to be made of metallic organs. Some of those organs were in the shape of spheres, among those spheres, two were taken out and replaced with new ones. Those spheres were old-world generators which powered the automaton's body. The generators had been damaged from the previous battles and were now being replaced.

Although from one point of view, it could be said that Olivia was taking it easy when she was dealing with Hammerz, but in reality, she did not have that much leeway. To fend off Hammerz, she had to spend two of her expensive generators. She might end up in red even after receiving the 15 million Chrome as payment. When she added up the repair cost for the damages to her body, she judged that it was not worth the trouble.

If she continued fighting Hammerz, she would definitely end up deep in the red. Although it was her first job after such a long time, the result was unsatisfactory. Olivia felt frustration welling up inside her as she lightly sighed inside the cyberspace of the system.

That frustration was all because she did not receive a satisfying job, so it did not cause her any more woes. The warehouse on the 57th floor still had a good stock of generators. And even if her body had been destroyed during her fight with Hammerz, it was not like she would lose her AI data. So, she just could download her data into a different automaton just like one could change from one dress to another.

Olivia had already transferred to the automaton located in Iida commercial district ruin. The old-world automaton that was originally used to escort

VIP targets. It was equipped with a powerful generator and was granted permission to fully utilize that generator's output when necessary.

Even if there was a chance of her AI data getting erased, she did not feel any fear toward that at all. As a general-purpose AI from Lion Steel, getting herself deleted only meant losing one of its many mass-produced AI, after all.

As a general-purpose AI, Olivia's line of thinking was created using the human mind as its base. But an imitation was not the same as the real thing. As a matter of fact, their line of thinking was closer to a fanatic or a zealot.

Olivia was thinking about the future with her fanatical non-human mindset.

That was when Seranthal's system sent a notification to her. The content was a demand from Seranthal for an explanation regarding the battle that happened on the outskirts of the Mihazono residential ruin.

Olivia connected herself to the Seranthal building's system and called Seranthal.

＿＿＿*＿

Yanagisawa was on his personal transport aircraft as he was heading to Mihazono ruin. He already received the report that they failed to capture Shirou. Because of that, he was in an awful mood. He used an expensive special line to contact his men out in the field and was listening to their report.

"Let me confirm this again. The powered suit that you thought to be piloted by him turned out to be empty, right? Are you certain that he's not sitting in the pilot seat with camouflaging on or something like that?"

In order to maintain his calm, he was trying to keep to his usual tone, but it did not work out well. His men could feel Yanagisawa's irritation from behind the speaker as they anxiously replied.

"…We did our best to try to capture him. But he still escaped."

“I see. So, it was only a decoy, huh? Don’t worry about it, things like this happen from time to time. Just continue searching for him like usual. Ah, don’t forget to send the powered suits’ data to me. Though it might be tempered by that guy, I might still find something useful.”

“Roger that.”

“Yup, I’ll leave it to you then! Good luck!”

Yanagisawa replied with a flippant tone and closed the call. He then faked a smile in order to help him recover his groove before opening a call to Hammerz.

“Ah! Hello there! Yanagisawa here! Is it a good time right now?”

“…What is it? I’m pretty sure the report as well as my apology for failing to capture Shirou have been sent through another commutation route already?”

“Well, I just want to ask more details about that, you see. To be more precise, why did you let him go?”

Yanagisawa’s words were tinted with a grudge, but Hammerz only reacted with a sigh and a silence. After a short pause, Hammerz then replied.

“…It’s true that we failed to capture Shirou although you’ve given us very good information about him. Regarding that matter, you have my apologies. But excessive animosity will be seen as a hostile act toward Sakashita, you know?”

Yanagisawa was obviously playing coy as he laughed and said.

“No no no, of course, I have no wish to do something like that. It’s just that I never thought that you guys would fail. After all, someone as strong as you were moving and you made it on time to meet him. So, I was wondering if it was intentional. It’s only natural to get suspicious, right? Ah, or is it that you lowered your guard since you believed that as long as you know his location, you can already retrieve him? That it’ll be an easy job?”

Hammerz sighed one more time.

“He escaped from Sakashita, so it’s only natural to expect him to have a good escort. Well, since I was unable to properly judge at that time, that could mean that I’ve lowered my guard. If that really is the case, I can’t deny that I did. It might sound like I’m trying to shift the blame here since I was the one who let him get away, but when you pinned down his location, you didn’t detect any escorts with him?”

“Well, I’m really sorry about that.”

It was obvious that Yanagisawa did not really mean that as an apology. So Hammerz just reacted with another sigh.

After that, Yanagisawa inquired about Hammerz’s fight with Olivia, as if to create an excuse for him to close their call.

“Thank you for the invaluable information. Well, considering that you were unable to capture Shirou-kun even after you reached the location on time, it might mean that it’s a good idea to rethink our approach to capturing him. It’s rather worrying for me, that’s why I even called you. I’m sorry about that. But, since this failure is because of special circumstances, it really relieves me. Personally speaking, it’s rather difficult for me to prepare people to capture someone that even you can’t capture, you know?”

“I bet it is. I’m also busy over here, so excuse me for closing the call.”

“Yes, thank you very much.”

The call ended there, Yanagisawa’s smile once again vanished.

[At least it doesn’t sound like he’s lying to me. But…]

Although he worded it out as if he was joking, Yanagisawa was really suspecting Hammerz of intentionally letting Shirou run away.

After all, it was a fact that Shirou escaped when he was inside the inter-city transport vehicle. This was something that was normally unthinkable. And then even after Hammerz reached Shirou during a capture mission, Shirou still escaped. Normally, it was unlikely that Hammerz was helping Shirou escape, but since it had happened twice, being suspicious was only a given.

Moreover, Yanagisawa knew that Shirou had made some kind of secret deal behind the scenes with Sugadome. But he could not confront Sakashita about it since it would be proof that he hacked into Sakashita's secret line. In the worst-case scenario, he might even get erased because of that. Unfortunately, Yanagisawa had no information on what the content of that deal was. The only thing he knew was that Shirou was in regular contact with Sugadome.

[I don't want to think about it but, the escape from the inter-city transport vehicle, and the failure in the capture mission as well, it would all make sense to say that it has all been orchestrated by Sakashita. If I take Hammerz's words as the truth, then that would not be the case, unfortunately, I need to remember that he's also from Sakashita. There's a chance that his irritation and everything else was just an act… Or is it that I'm simply being too paranoid?]

According to his original plan, by now, he would have already borrowed Shirou to finish the administration with the black card in the Seranthal building. He would then finally be able to do his business in the deepest part of Kuzusuhara ruin. But something unexpected happened, twice even. Yanagisawa was not that stupid to just sweep that under the rug as nothing more than bad luck.

[I don't want to think that Sakashita noticed my goal and is trying to get in my way, but… Better safe than sorry.]

Yanagisawa took a deep breath to calm himself down. That was when the pilot notified him.

"Commander, we're close."

"Hm? Alright."

The aircraft landed. It was on the hanger attached to Seranthal Building. Yanagisawa had already received Seranthal's permission to use it.

“Well, I’ll be going then. Ah, just to remind you, don’t leave the aircraft, okay? The one with the permission is only me. If someone else comes out of the aircraft, the security drones will kill them. And I’m not joking.”

“R-roger that!”

Yanagisawa only said so after leaving the aircraft. He then waved goodbye and went inside the building. He came there that day since Seranthal called for him, demanding an explanation about the recent ruckus near the Mihazono residential district ruin.

When he entered, the image of Seranthal was already waiting for him. He who saw that tilted his head as there was one more person next to that holographic image of Seranthal.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 255, Reina’s Conviction

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

On the next day, after that huge battle to capture Shirou in Mihazono ruin, Akira and Carol once again came to the residential district of the ruin together. Due to the battle between the multi-legged tank monsters guarding the ruin and the powered suits from the Kugamayama city defence squad, plus the fight between Hammerz and Olivia, the ruin was left filled with rubble and wreckage, the city district was in a very bad state.

In the middle of that utterly destroyed ruin, Carol was going around collecting data to create a map while Akira was there to escort her.

Akira looked around the surroundings with a rather surprised look on his face.

“It seems that they were going at it pretty hard, huh? This might even be worse than the last one, right?”

Since Carol was collecting data, she knew the extent of the damage to the area better than Akira. She had already expected that the damage to the ruin would be horrendous judging by how hard the two parties battled each other yesterday. Although she was discouraged after seeing such a battle from afar yesterday, today, she seemed to be doing just fine.

“The damage is indeed worse than the last incident. I’ve done a bit of digging and it seems that the powered suits they were using yesterday are the same kind as those used to guard Kuzusuhara ruin. That might be the reason why.”

“Do you think it has something to do with that guy from yesterday?”

“That might be the case, that’s all I can say.”

Both Carol and Akira were suspecting that yesterday’s incident had something to do with Shirou. That incident happened right after Shirou and Olivia left. So, it was only natural for Carol and Akira, who were also there when that happened, to suspect they had something to do with this incident. Carol then continued.

“Well, it has nothing to do with us anyway, right?”

“Yeah, that’s true.”

Akira reaffirmed her. Both of them were saying that in hopes that it would really be the case. After all, both Akira and Carol did not want to get involved in any more trouble. Since they were there in the very location of the incident right now, it was enough of a reason for them to worry that others might think they had something to do with that incident. Especially when they were trying to investigate the source of that incident. So, in order to get their minds off the matter, they changed the subject of their conversation.

“But still, I thought that the ruin would be on high alert after a battle that serious, I wonder why that is not the case this time?”

Akira’s question was completely understandable, but the answer to that question was a complete mystery for Carol as well, so she just gave an educated guess.

“I bet it has something to do with Seranthal. It seems that those powered suits were originally from the area around the Seranthal building, you know?”

Akira only threw a question without expecting a serious answer. However, Carol's reply was quite a detailed answer, which caused him to be surprised. Akira's expression indicated that he did not understand the meaning of what exactly she was saying so he threw another question.

"Why does it have something to do with the Seranthal building?"

"Seranthal building is an important building in this ruin after all, and those powered suits came from that place."

Akira still did not seem to understand the meaning of her answer. So, Carol reworded her answer to include an additional explanation.

The Seranthal building was treated as a relatively important building inside the Mihazono ruin. It was because there were branch offices of national-level government departments and old-world corporations on the upper floors of the Seranthal building.

Moreover, after a city officer by the name of Yanagisawa made a deal with the caretaker AI of that building, they were allowed to borrow the first floor as well as the area around the Seranthal building. Judging from that fact, there was a good chance that Kugamayama city made some moves to make sure that yesterday's incident would not spread too far.

After listening to her explain, Akira nodded in admiration.

"It's pretty amazing that you even know about all that as well. Is it normal to know that much even though the incident just happened yesterday?"

"To be honest, it's much more surprising for me that you don't know anything about it though. Don't you have information sources mentioning something like that?"

"Not really."

Toward Akira, who responded so casually, Carol found that weird.

"Is that so? Considering your Hunter Rank, to be honest, it would be completely understandable for information brokers to approach you… But you at least receive contract offers from all kinds of operator support, right? Don't you get bits and pieces of information from their contract offers? Don't they send some information in their offers, trying to show that they can give you information which are normally not out in the public?"

Akira replied apathetically as if he was trying to hide something.

"Oh, if it's about that, I've basically refused all their offers."

Of course. Carol immediately noticed Akira's reaction. But she misunderstood what Akira meant as she smiled and said.

"Ah, I get it. I bet you have refused their offer without even opening their messages, right? It's better if you make a habit of at least reading their offers first before refusing them, you know? But I somehow can understand. You just don't want to bother yourself in doing something like that, right?"

"Well, yeah."

In reality, it was not rare for both individual Hunters and a team of Hunters with a high enough rank to sign contracts with independent support organizations. Although information was very important to them, Hunters did not have the time to check and hunt for information all the time.

For high-ranking Hunters from Hunter gangs such as Drankam, they could receive information via those gangs. As for the new Hunters, they had no other choice but to collect money from low-difficulty level ruins and common requests. They had to be satisfied with the common information that anyone could get for free on the network.

But for high ranking Hunters who did not work in teams, sometimes needed information. Information that was not easy to get, information that would effectively increase their earnings to match their high ranks. That was why many of them formed contracts with support organizations and formed connections with information brokers in order to create their own information network.

Meanwhile, those companies were contracted to those high-ranking Hunters could expect extra revenues. That was why those successful high-ranking Hunters were often approached by various companies early on. Judging from his ranking alone, Akira was one of those successful Hunters.

But Akira's case was special. As expected, companies would at least do some investigations first before sending their offers. In the case of Akira, the investigation would not only uncover his slum origin, but it would also uncover all the incidents that Akira was involved in.

He was the supporter of a certain large gang in the slums and the number of people he had killed, who got in his way. During the big battle which destroyed Haurias and Ezont Family, he had killed numerous people. He also had a suspicious connection to a Kugamayama city officer. With such details, no honest business would send an offer to him.

Of course, there were some companies who still tried to make a contract with Akira even after all that he did. But they were blocked by the Hunter Office's general communication line since he had an invitation setting meant for high-ranking Hunters. As for the offers that passed through that filter setting, Alpha basically was refusing them without even showing them to Akira.

Because of that, some tried to go through Inabe or Sheryl to contact Akira. But Inabe always came up with some excuses and left everything to Sheryl.

And thus, Sheryl was basically the one receiving those offers. She did convey them to Akira. However, Akira would simply tell her to deal with them herself and there was no need to tell him about every incoming offer. Thus, Sheryl kept those offers on hold, saying that they did not satisfy all the requirements. She would leave them dangling while sapping profits for her own gang. Of course, she planned to inform Akira if she bumped into offers that would cause Akira trouble if she refused them.

Because of this, Akira's information network was abnormally bad for a Hunter of his rank.

Carol lightly smiled and said to Akira.

“Well, getting into a contract means binding yourself down. So, I think it’s completely fine not making any contract as long as you’re also okay with that. I mean, you’re doing fine even without an information broker. Ah, by the way, you can ask me anything, you know? Although normally it won’t be free, I will call it even since you’re escorting me.”

“Is that so? Well, in that case…”

Akira thought that it would be a waste to let that chance slide and asked various questions, Carol answered all of his questions with her usual smile.

After they finished their job in the morning, Akira and Carol returned back to the camping car to have a meal. As for the meal, they bought the 100 thousand Aurum per portion luxurious filling meal from the Hunter Office’s cafeteria. Hunters usually did not have a regular income, but Akira who was working as Carol’s escort currently had a fixed regular income. Thus, he was enjoying that chance to his heart’s content.

Seeing Akira slowly eating and enjoying the hearty meal, Carol smiled and said with a slightly surprised face.

“But still, you really eat quite a lot.”

“Well, I’m at that age after all.”

As Akira casually replied and Carol once again checked his body.

“Hmm, compared to the first time I met you, you’ve really grown taller, and your body complexion is also better. But still, it would’ve been easier for me if your body isn’t the only thing that has grown up.”

Carol smiled when she said so. But Akira then smiled rather smugly and commented.

“What are you talking about? I’m way stronger than before now, no? Not only my body, but I also only got myself better new equipment on top of my pure physical strength. Back then, I couldn’t even use my guns without an augmented suit, but now, I can withstand the recoil to some extent. Well, although, it might be also thanks to the better recoil dampener of the guns that I’m using right now.”

Carol sighed and smiled wryly.

“Oh my, that does sound reassuring.”

Unlike Akira, who was still using his usual augmented suit, Carol had taken off her augmented suit and changed to a see-through dress. Until now, Carol had been paranoid to the point that she cannot seem to calm down unless in her augmented suit. It was thanks to the events that occurred yesterday that she was now able to relax in her casual dress.

Although Carol was grateful to him, as someone whose work involved seducing the opposite gender, seeing Akira not showing any interest in her even after she had dolled up and had given him the green light, she could not help but feel conflicted.

Akira, who was oblivious to Carol’s feelings, innocently continued enjoying his meal. With his body that was gradually turning super-human without him knowing, it was demanding more food and nutrition. Although the energy use of a super-human body was extremely effective compared to a normal human, it was not like it could run on zero energy. If he returned to his usual diet with worse quantity and quality, although it would not kill him, it would affect the health of his body. So, to further improve his physique, Akira was replenishing himself through food and drinks.

After all, even super-humans could not live only by eating mist, that was if it was only mist.

__*__*__*__

After Shiori told Reina everything, Reina seemed to be deep in thought. In front of her, Shiori just stood in silence as if she was waiting for her verdict.

Reina had her hand on her face as she was wearing a conflicted expression. She was throwing glances at Shiori from time to time. Every time she glanced at Shiori, Shiori would react by looking even more and more worried.

Reina then sighed.

“Shiori. After a lot of thinking, I don’t feel like I’ll find my decision anytime soon, so I’ll try to find my answer slowly. First of all, discuss such matters with me first next time.”

Shiori raised her eyebrows.

“Milady, are you sure you’re okay with that?”

Shiori did not expect Reina to give her a second chance. She had resolved herself and was certain that Reina would leave her. Watching how Shiori was trying to hold back her emotion to no avail, only ending up displaying blooming joy on her face, Reina smiled wryly and said to her.

“Well, if you ask me if it’s okay or not, then the answer is no, it’s not okay. If you ask me if I’m angry or not, I am angry. But you’re doing everything for my sake. Even if I question why you would go so far and the only thing that could come to mind is that you did it because I’m just that weak… So, I have no desire to pin the blame onto you.”

“Milady. That is not correct. It’s all my own decision, so there’s no need for Milady-”

As Shiori was trying to tell Reina to just blame her. However, Reina suddenly cut her off mid-sentence.

“The blame is mine, I decide that it is mine to take, that’s why the blame lies on me.”

Parents could not blame the children for their mistakes. But superiors were meant to take the blame if their subordinates made mistakes. No longer allowing Shiori to continue acting as her parent, protecting her daughter, Reina was trying her best, albeit imperfect, to act as Shiori’s master. As such, Reina was trying to take the blame in this situation.

“Although I might be as useless as a mere decoration right now, even so, I will at least try my best. It will start with taking over responsibility. So, let’s give our best from here and on. Shiori, I’ll be in your care.”

“…! Of course, Milady!”

Reina’s smile that showed her growth made Shiori’s reply filled with enthusiasm.

Kanae watched that scene unfold with a foxy smile. Reina noticed that and awkwardly blushed. She inadvertently raised her voice to hide her embarrassment as she said.

“Alright, that’s the end of this discussion… So then, the next problem would be, what should we do from here on out?”

Reina once again made a difficult expression. She was looking at the white card squeezed between her middle and index fingers. It was originally left by Olivia for Akira, and Olivia was assuming that Shiori got it by tricking Akira. After listening to Shiori’s explanation, even Reina also thought that it was not a fair deal.

Alice had said that she left the matter with Olivia to them for the time being, and due to Shiori’s mistake, they were not able to leave a good impression on Olivia. Therefore, this was the current position they had to start at.

There was also the option to go to Akira and make another deal but fairly this time, where both sides understood the worth of the card. However, after Reina understood the situation they were facing. That option had too many worrying factors.

[…If he knew that we basically tricked him into giving us this card, that would definitely cause trouble. But in the first place, now that it has come to this, it’s rather suspicious whether Akira had initially already known the worth of this card when he first received it.]

To use the card to contact Olivia, they would need a method to connect to the old-world domain. So, the question would then shift to if Olivia had really given that card to someone that could not use it, or she did that exactly because she knew Akira could use the card. If it was the latter, it would open up two possibilities. Either Akira, as a high-ranking Hunter, had a device to help him connect to the old-world domain, or he was someone that did not need such a device right from the start. Either way, it meant there was a chance that Akira was an old-world connector.

[Does Akira really not know the worth of this card? Or is it that he was only pretending not to know to hide that he's an old-world connector? It's completely possible that he was just playing ignorant and intentionally accepted Shiori's deal. He might have known that he was being tricked but accepted it since he prioritized hiding his real identity… What should we do? Forget asking him… if he notices that we're suspecting him, it might be bad, really, really bad for us.]

Reina then remembered that Shiori once gave her a lecture about the importance of information. Some secrets might be guessed without knowing anything and might actually be safer when it was known. With knowledge, their way of interpreting an event could change. She felt like Akira was emphasizing that he did part with the card under a fair deal. At that time, she thought that it was because of how Akira was. He was very hard-headed when it came to certain subjects.

[What if Akira did that since he was worried that if he said something wrong, then that card might come back to him again? If that's really the case, we have the option of admitting that we tricked him into giving us the card. So, we can then return him the card. This might actually be a good option for us.]

Reina kept humming while thinking of her options there.

"Seriously… what should we do now…"

Reina kept muttering that line without making a decision. But even so, she did not resort to asking Shiori. Relying upon and taking advantage of someone’s kindness were two different things. She told herself that asking Shiori meant allowing herself to be spoiled again by Shiori’s kindness.

It was something that she had been doing up until now. She did not make her own decision and allowed Shiori to decide for her. Thus, when Shiori made a suggestion, Reina mostly just nodded and agreed with anything that Shiori said. If that decision might cause a dangerous situation where someone might get killed, it was indeed easier to just let someone else make that decision. It was easier to make someone else the leader, the caretaker, to make that decision. As the master, if it was the correct decision, she could just praise her, and if it was not, she could scold her.

If she did that now, Reina knew that Shiori would simply smile and allow her to continue doing what she has been doing. That was why, the one who needed to control her from falling back to her old ways, was Reina herself. Since she had decided to act as Shiori and Kanae’s master, she had to decide. A decision that was made with reason. One that both of them can accept. This was her first step to show her resolve, as well as to term her pride as their master into reality.

Shiori simply stood next to Reina without saying anything. She understood that Reina’s mumbling was not meant as a plea for help. More than that, Shiori herself did not have a good solution. But whatever Reina decided on, as her servant, Shiori, was planning to obey her decision.

But of course, that did not mean she would just obey without saying anything.

“Alright then. Since we can’t decide ourselves, let’s go meet Akira and discuss it with him.”

“M-Milady?!”

Of course, Shiori understood what Reina was thinking, that was exactly why she did not expect Reina would decide to meet Akira.

Kanae was also surprised by that decision and interjected.

“Ahh, Milady, let me at least tell you this. Akira-boy is way stronger than before, even if both Ane-san and I were to take him on at the same time, we can’t say for sure that we would win. So, if it breaks into a fight, it would be very dangerous.”

“Is that so? Well, in that case, let’s do our best to run away. I’m counting on the both of you.”

Seeing Reina reply so casually like that, Kanae was dumbfounded, which was a rare thing for her.

“W-well, it’s my job after all. So, I will do my job to the best of my ability, but, Milady, are you really sure?”

Reina gave a light smile.

“Oh? And here I thought you always want to fight Akira seriously. Wouldn’t it be better for you if I fail my negotiation with him?”

“That might indeed be the case but that’s already a thing of the past.”

Seeing Kanae lightly denying it, Reina smiled wryly and said.

“Oh, as I thought, that is now the case, huh?”

Kanae twitched back as if she just realized that she had slipped up, but she then laughed and admitted it.

“Yep, it was really the case before! It’s fine, isn’t it?! And it was in the past too! But now, I’m being serious here, so Milady does not need to be concerned about that. So, now that you know, please don’t fail your negotiation, okay?”

“I’ll do my best, but it’s just to be safe, okay?”

“Yeah yeah.”

Although Kanae lightly said so, it was her serious reply.

“Shiori, so that’s it. I’ll be counting on you.”

“O-of course”

Having made their decision, they then set to meet up with Akira. Just like Shiori, who seemed to be rather anxious, Reina, who was next to her was frowning from anxiety.

Death was an occupational hazard for Hunters. Thus, the dangerous upcoming negotiation with Akira was just like any other Hunter job. Reina told herself so as she made her resolve.

__*__*__*__

Akira was waiting next to the camping car for Reina’s group to arrive. After he finished his meal, Akira received a call from Reina saying that there was something she wanted to discuss with him.

During that call, Reina offered to meet up at Steriana, but since Akria’s current job was to escort Carol, he refused. Carol, who was next to Akira at that time, heard that and said that it was okay to prioritize his business, so Akira agreed to meet up with Reina. But as expected, it was not like he could go to Steriana while he was in the middle of protecting Carol. Thus, he added the condition that Reina would come to meet him instead.

Reina’s group accepted his condition. Although Akira did not mean it in such a manner, asking other Hunters to meet up in the middle of the wasteland also meant that it would be a dangerous discussion. It meant that in case it ended up in a fight, it was to be expected that there would be death.

Akira was the one who asked to change the meeting place from Steriana to the wasteland, and even emphasized that part. With that in mind, Reina’s group accepted his suggestion and went to meet him.

Reina’s group arrived on time. Akira looked at them with a rather confused expression when they arrived. Reina somehow looked anxious. If that was only that, he would not have cared that much. But even Kanae, who was always smiling, had a serious expression plastered on her face. Similarly, although she did not show animosity, Shiori also wore a grim expression while eluding a high-tense ready-to-fight attitude toward him.

“Uhh, Reina, let me ask you this? You’re here just to talk, right?”

Reina smiled and replied.

“Yes. Ahh, if it’s about Shiori and Kanae, don’t worry about them. They’re rather high-strung because of what happened yesterday. Like, you know, yesterday we didn’t even notice someone was stalking us before you told us, right? Shiori and Kanae are my bodyguards, so it’s like their pride was hurt because of that. Well, if you say that they’re a bit overprotective, yeah, I can’t really deny that, but that is what it is.”

“Ohh, I see. Got it.”

Akira said so and nodded, but Alpha quickly interjected.

“Akira, just to let you know, she’s hiding a lot of things.”

“Is that so? Well, even if they’re like that because of something else, I’m sure they have their own reasons to be that tense…”

Akira lightly frowned. Reina noticed that slight change in Akira’s expression. It made her guess why his expression had changed so, she continued to smile and elaborated.

“Well, it doesn’t change the fact they’re on the edge, so let me apologize for that. But it’s not like they have any animosity against you or wish to fight you. Just one more thing though, if you don’t believe me, then we’ll just leave, you’re okay with that, right?”

“Alpha.”

“…At least she’s not lying from my point of view.”

With those words, Akira’s worry was erased. Personally speaking, Akira could not care less about the situation that they were facing. The only thing that he cared about was whether they held any hostility toward him. And since Alpha gave her word, he thought that there should be no issues. Thus, Akira looked at Reina and lightly nodded.

“It’s fine. I don’t know what you want to talk about, but if you have no wish to fight me, then I can at least hear out what you want to say.”

“Thank you.”

Reina smiled and continued. Initially, they were at a loss about where to settle down and begin their discussion, but they ended up deciding to continue the discussion from where they currently were. It was mainly because Akira noticed that for some reason, Carol did not want to let Reina’s group into the camping car.

So as not to let them continue the long discussion while standing, Shiori and Kanae quickly prepared a table with some chairs. It did not even take 30 seconds for them to set it up. They even placed a tablecloth on top of the portable table with some drinks.

Akira looked at that with an interest. Once they finished, he took a seat and directly faced Reina. Shiori and Kanae stood beside Reina while Carol stood behind Akira since she refused to sit on the chair that was offered to her.

With the place ready, Reina pulled himself together and started to talk with a solemn expression. She took out the white card and slid it to Akira.

“It’s basically about this card.”

Akira knitted his eyebrows.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 256, Dangerous Subject

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira frowned after he heard the summary of why Reina was here. The thing that she wanted to talk about, going so far as to meet him out in the wasteland, was the unfair deal where he gave Shiori the white card that Olivia had left for him.

“Even if you say so, I did already state that I’m completely fine with that deal, haven’t I?”

“That’s true, but the issue is that others don’t find it okay. Even for me, after I heard the details of the whole thing, the true worth of this card, I also believe that the deal made was an unfair one. Well, in the end, it’s nothing more than just my opinion and my opinion might be completely unrelated to this matter.”

“If that’s really the case, then it’s fine, isn’t it? No need to insist to give that back to me.”

Seeing Akira obviously unhappy with how the conversation was going, Reina made a troubled expression as she continued.

“I am in agreement with you. But the real problem is what Olivia-san thinks about the deal. I’m sure you understand it too, back then when she said that she would overlook it. It only means that she has no plans to take back that card by force, right?”

“Well, yeah, so?”

“Since we already have the means to contact Olivia-san, we don’t really need this card anymore, so, it might be better to return it, but…”

As Reina said so, she non-nonchalantly kept her eyes on Akira’s reaction. After she saw his reaction, she carefully chose her words as she continued.

“…I’m sorry but due to our situation, if possible, we want to return the card. Putting aside the negotiation about how to fix the unfair deal that we had before to later, as a guarantee, we won’t return the card until then. Can you please accept this arrangement?”

Seeing how Reina was basically begging, Akira pondered over it and realized that it was not a bad arrangement. Thus, he gave a nod and responded favourably.

“I don’t see any problem with it. I’ve given you the card, so I have no plans on asking it back.”

“Is that so? Thank you!”

Akira and Reina lightly smiled and finalized their deal. For Akira, that smile was the representation of his true feeling, but for Reina, she was desperately hiding her anxiety under her smile. The reaction that Akira showed the moment Reina mentioned the possibility of that card returning back to him, was vigilance, and the reaction when he knew that the card would not return back to him, was a relief. It meant that Akira obviously did not want that card to return back to him, and she had already guessed why.

In the world of Hunters, the smallest mistake might lead to death. Reina could feel that as she smiled and continued.

“Well then, in that case, the next thing would be to talk about what to do to fix the unfair deal. I heard from Shiori that you received a weapon for the card, right? If you’re interested in more equipment, how about we give you more equipment?”

Unlike Reina who was trying to be careful, Akira was completely nonchalant as he replied.

“Hmmm, from my point of view, it was something that had already been concluded, so I have no wish to ask for anything more.”

“I’m just sharing my own thoughts here, but I think there’s nothing wrong with taking what you can take. Though it might be weird for me to say this, the worth of that card has changed since then. It’s enough to exchange it with a powerful weapon that the other corporations don’t sell, you know? Though you might have your own reason, since you can get better equipment, I don’t see any reason to hold back, you know?”

“Well, that’s not the problem here.”

Reina looked slightly confused. It was obvious that she did not understand why Akira was hesitating to take up her offer, which would be nothing but profitable for him.

Akira could see confusion in Reina’s expression, so he added more explanation.

“The matter with that card has already been concluded. Even after the deal, I received extra blades from Shiori out of kindness. Just because it brings nothing but profit for me, doesn’t mean it is right to question the exchange of value we had back then. It would be nothing more than letting myself be spoiled just because I have the chance. If I decide to ask for something more, this might be the trigger for me to question all the deals I had in the past. I might dig up something that could be judged as ‘unfair’ and continue to seek reparation. As a Hunter, I should be someone who obeys his contract strictly, I don’t think it’s a good thing to start getting into such a habit.”

“Ohh, I see, so that’s the issue, huh? Well, a sense of identity is important for a Hunter, after all. Hmm, but still…”

Seeing Reina kept withdrawing and agreeing with him, this time, it was Akira who found it suspicious.

“Anyway, why are you so insistent on this matter? Are you really that bothered by the fairness of that deal?”

“Well, yeah…”

It was obvious that Reina was trying to dodge his question. Akira gave her a look of suspicion. As he expected, any good deal would have strings attached. Reina heaved a deep sigh and then responded as if she had given up.

“To be perfectly honest, rather than insisting on you to take the offer, it’s more because we want to get on Olivia-san’s good side.”

Akira raised his eyebrows, so Reina then explained to him.

Olivia was not pleased with the deal. Although there might be many reasons as to why, when they thought about the biggest reason, they realized that they had treated the card, which provided a means to contact Olivia, cheaply.

That was why they thought by treating it as a highly valuable item and giving a suitable compensation to its original owner, Akira, then Olivia would admit the ownership change.

After Reina said so, she made an even more troubled expression as she continued.

“But then, it’s difficult to correctly identify how much Aurum that the card is worth, right? And if we use money instead, there’s a worry that Olivia might instead feel insulted that we only price that card that much. That’s why, instead of giving you money, we’re thinking of giving you equipment instead. Equipment that is not to be sold outside the company normally would never be given to an outsider, but by doing so in exchange for the card, we can use it to show Olivia just how highly we evaluate the card, you see."

"Ahh, I see, so that's what's going on."

Akira nodded as if he was convinced by her reason. As he had expected, Reina's offer had a secret scheme behind it, but fortunately, it was not something that might cause him trouble.

"Yep, so that's the gist of it. That's why it would be great if you can accept it. If you won't accept money or equipment, you can also ask us to do something. If nothing really interests you, saying that we're really indebted to you would be enough."

Seeing how Reina was so generous in her offer, Akira was certain that she would even let him know secret information if he had asked her. He made a rather conflicted expression and hummed.

"In that case, I won't force you to do this, but there's one thing that I would request as repayment for that huge debt."

"Sure, what is it? Though I can't say that we'll do anything for you, you can at least ask us."

"Don't be hostile towards me."

Reina could not hide her surprise.

"…Uhh, will that really be enough for you?"

Although she was surprised, Reina asked a question in a rather casual tone. Akira made a clear response. His gaze to Reina turned sharp and his tone turned strong.

"That is, if you properly keep your words. Though, from the way you say it, I feel like you see it as something trivial. That you have no issues with breaking your promises."

Reina winced back from Akira’s response. Unfortunately, that only served to deepen Akira’s distrust.

“As I said before, I won’t force you. That’s basically what I ask of you. But if you have no plans to properly keep your words, then don’t give me cheap promises and just tell me no.”

Reina was overwhelmed by Akira’s pressure. But she then straightened her posture and seriously looked him in the eye.

“I can’t give you any promises to not be hostile, but I can promise you that we won’t get in your way. Enough to make the deal regarding this card a fair one. I promise you in my name, Reina Rilart Lorents.”

In all honesty, Akira had no idea how much that promise was worth, but judging from how surprised Shiori and Kanae were, he at least understood that it must have been a pretty big deal.

“Alright, that would be fine then. Thanks.”

“You’re welcome!”

Akira threw a smile at Reina. She did the same in return. Now that Reina’s group had promised not to be hostile, Akira unconsciously lowered his guard. Reina, who felt the atmosphere relax, also lowered her shoulders. Shiori and Kanae, who were extremely tense up until now, also returned to their usual calm demeanour. Though that showed that they were not being extra tense due to hidden stalkers as Reina had claimed. However, Akira did not really care much at this point, so everything worked out.

Reina lightly sighed, her state of mind had changed from one focused on negotiation to a more relaxed one for casual conversation.

“Now that our important negotiation has concluded, we can leave in case you’re busy. Though, if you still have some time, there’s actually something else that I want to ask you. It has nothing to do with what we just discussed, so, are you okay with that?”

“That would depend on my employer…”

Akira said so and turned to Carol, she lightly smiled and said.

“It’s okay. It’s not like we have a deadline for gathering the data for the map. I did say it’s okay to prioritize your things too, right?”

“Alright then.”

Akira’s gaze turned back to Reina.

“Well, I know that this will not be short, but I’ll try not to make it too long.”

“Alright, so then, it’s actually about Katsuya.”

Shiori almost choked on her drink, but she somehow managed to hold it in. The reason was none other than Reina, who just brought up a subject that was extremely sensitive. Kanae was more or less also as surprised as Shiori.

Even Akira did not expect her to ask something like this. Though, he did not seem to be on guard by the subject either. It was simply because the people in front of him promised not to be hostile toward him and that promise seemed to be trustworthy enough.

Reina started talking nostalgically about Katsuya to Akira. About her first impression the first time they met. At first, she was rather hostile toward him. But after knowing Katsuya was always trying his hardest to save and protect his friends, she accepted him to some extent. How he became rather popular among members of the opposite gender since the ones that he saved were mostly female. She also mentioned how her feelings toward him grew the more often they worked together. She talked about all kinds of things to help herself come to terms with Katsuya’s death.

And then, after she thought about how she was in the past and how she was now, Reina sighed.

“…Well, Katsuya was really popular because of that. But, now that I think about it, I now know that everyone who was relying on him back then was nothing more than taking advantage of his kindness. They pushed all the difficult decisions and every negative bit about being a Hunter onto him. In exchange for that, they sang praises of him. Everyone was content with that situation, including me. Katsuya also allowed it to continue, which only made the situation worse over time."

Reina was telling her story while looking rather frustrated, Akira just listened without saying anything.

"I did leave his side at one point, but that was because I wanted to be able to stand on an equal footing with him. Basically, it was just out of my selfishness. Even if I could not get there, I felt like I have already caused a lot of trouble for him. So, at the very least, I wanted to get stronger. At least enough to stay beside him and support him as a fellow teammate without relying on him too much. That way, things might have changed. Though it is way too late to think about that now."

Reina stopped, lightly smiled, and then continued.

"Ah, I didn't mean it as the result would have been reversed. I just thought that if there was someone to stop him sooner, the misunderstanding would have not escalated that far. It's not like I have any grudge against you or anything like that."

Akira took those words as they were and nodded. However, Shiori's shoulder moved forward a bit and she frowned, as if she suddenly had a stomach ache. Meanwhile, Kanae had a rather awkward wry smile on her face. Both of them, including Carol, understood how dangerous a topic this was.

"By the way, to be fully honest, it's not like I am fully over it. About you killing Katsuya."

This time, Shiori choked and Kanae was completely surprised.

Akira was also taken by surprise when Reina said that out loud. But he did not show any animosity or hostility. She then continued.

“But again, that does not mean that I want to pick a fight with you. I heard that your fight with Katsuya was out of a misunderstanding. I’m sure that he wouldn’t want anyone to avenge his death. Moreover, I don’t want to die and I don’t want to get Kanae or Shiori killed too. You’re really strong, after all. It might not be the right thing to say, but it just isn’t worth it to fight against you.”

Carol was surprised by Reina’s words. After all, it could also be interpreted that they would attack Akira if he was weak enough.

But Akira did not react to that, as a matter of fact, he took that impression positively. For him, it was completely understandable for someone to come at him for vengeance since he had killed someone that they loved. To him, saying that would not be worth the risk now was a compliment.

Reina then continued.

“That’s why, to make sure that I won’t waver, please stay strong. Make sure that the risk of picking a fight with you is never worth it. Don’t show me any unnecessary openings. I was planning to ask this of you one day, but with our deal just now, it is unnecessary, huh? Well, it is too good a timing.”

Seeing Reina smile as she concluded her monologue, Akira also smiled and replied.

“It was a good thing for me too, that you won’t pick a fight with me.”

“Is that so? Ah, were you thinking that I’ll be coming for your life one day to avenge Katsuya?”

“Pretty much, yeah. Just because we both signed a peace treaty mediated by the Hunter Office, there will still be some who would go ahead and do it, you know?”

In reality, Akira was vigilant since he expected that someone would come to try and take revenge on him. Shiori once again choked since he casually admitted it. Meanwhile, Kanae gave a wry stiff smile. However, Reina did not seem to be bothered at all as she lightly smiled and replied.

“It’s great that we are able to avoid a misunderstanding. Well then, Akira, we should take our leave now. Thank you for listening to my story. So, as thanks, let me give you one warning.”

“Warning? What is it?”

Reina’s face turned slightly serious.

“It’s not just us who think that it’s not worth the risk. There were quite a lot of survivors from Katsuya’s old team. There are those who refuse to sign the peace treaty and got kicked out of Drankam, and I’m sure there are those who are not fully happy with the peace treaty although they signed it. I believe the reason why they still haven’t made their moves is simply because they know that it’s impossible for them to kill you even by pure accident. So, if they wish to attack you, there must be a chance for them to succeed. Basically, if they think that they have the chance to kill you, even if it means that it’ll kill them as well, they might just attempt it. That’s why I’m telling you to be careful.”

After saying that, Reina’s expression relaxed.

“Well, with that being said, as expected, I’m sure they are not that stupid. At least not foolish enough to think they might have a chance to go against a high-ranking Hunter who is strong enough to get an inter-city transport-escort request and have returned back from escorting an inter-city transport from further east. So I’m sure that it should be fine. Alright then. That’s all. We should take our leave.”

Reina raised from her seat, Shiori and Kanae quickly started cleaning up the table and the seats. Akira also stood up. It did not take long for Shiori and Kanae to be done. After that, Shiori faced Akira with a serious expression and bowed.

“Akira-sama, I believe that any explanation is unnecessary at this point. So at least let me say this, my deepest apologies.”

Akira seemed a bit surprised, but his expression quickly relaxed.

“Don’t worry about it. I thought that it was a fair deal right from the start. Although those who know the real worth of the card might perceive it to be unfair, it’s all because of my lack of knowledge. So, it’s basically my fault, not yours.”

“Thank you very much. Regarding this matter, I also wish for you to not be hostile with us.”

“I would be grateful if you do so too.”

Shiori bowed deeply, then she raised her head and smiled. Reina and Kanae also smiled and said their goodbyes.

“Well then, if fate has it, let’s work together again next time.”

“Akira-boy, until we meet again.”

Reina’s group returned to their vehicle and left, Akira saw them off thinking that it was great it did not turn into anything troublesome and was relieved by it.

———*—

On their way back to the city, Reina, Shiori, and Kanae all let out a sigh of relief. Especially Shiori heaved a huge sigh of relief.

“…Milady. I would say that Milday has gone a bit too far, bringing up Katsuya. Had Akira-sama reacted negatively, it would have been horrendous, you know?”

Reina, who was not as tense as before, just smiled bitterly and said.

“I do think that it was rather dangerous. But it was fine, right?”

“Result-wise, indeed that was the case. But that is not something wise to do without much thought.”

Seeing Shiori’s face that turned slightly pale from fatigue, Reina felt a bit sorry for what she did.

“Although Akira did say that, it’s not like I brought that up without much thought, you know?”

Kanae found that surprising, but she then smiled amusedly and asked.

“Is that so? In that case, it would be great if you let me know why did you say that to Akira-boy? It’s for the sake of seeing how much Milady has grown from the past, where you often spoke without much consideration.”

Reina smiled bitterly after Kanae pointed out her past bad habit. She started explaining why she said that to Akira.

After seeing how Akira reacted once she mentioned the chance of that card returning to him, Reina was almost certain that Akira was an old-world connector. So, she decided to continue their conversation while trying to hide that from Akira.

The fact that Akira asked them not to be hostile towards him was a good thing for Reina as well. Although she was caught off guard by that demand, she was somehow able to get over it. After that, she tried to measure how much he believed that they had no wish to be hostile to him. Likewise, how hostile he was towards them.

Judging from the results, she thought that it was her only chance to bring up matters related to Katsuya. At that time, the situation was set so that no matter what she said, Akira would not be hostile. If she delayed any further, that insurance would slowly fade away. If her doubt grew, and she ended up bringing up Katsuya at another time, it would be even more dangerous. But back then, even if her feelings toward Katsuya had resurfaced, she could remind herself that her main objective was to make Olivia happy. Thus, she would be able to hold herself back.

Meanwhile, she also knew that she would have to bring that subject up sooner or later. Not only was it to help her get over Katsuya’s death, but it would also help prevent misunderstanding in case Akira thought that she came at him to avenge Katsuya.

Akira also grew even stronger than before. Reina believed that Akira was currently thinking that it was not worth the trouble to weed out all trouble. However, one day, he might start believing otherwise: that it was only a matter of time before their power level was reversed and it was safer to kill Reina's group before that happened. So, there was a need to talk it out.

To bring out that matter and clear up any possible misunderstandings, she would need to have a good excuse and a safe setting. Fortunately, that was a very good opportunity to do that.

On the other hand, there was also a need to make sure that Akira trusted her promise. In the case Akira later noticed that she knew he was an old-world connector, she could use her promise as insurance as well to prevent any unnecessary worries. With that, she thought that it worked out pretty well.

As for the last warning, not only did it give an extra reason as to why they would not attack Akira, but it also gave Akira a reason to focus his attention elsewhere. It was a fact there were others who were still aiming for him, so it should be fine since it was not like she was lying.

After listening to Reina's explanation, Kanae seemed astonished as she complimented Reina.

"Milady, you've really thought it through."

Reina smiled bitterly. As she knew herself best when it came to her past bad habit, she could not help but interpret that compliment as both positive and negative.

"Anyway, it did go pretty well, right?"

"Indeed, though it was not completely safe. So, it's like just as Ane-san said, we can say that it is fine only because the result turned out alright, no?"

It was rare for Kanae to scold Reina like that. Reina lightly smiled and then replied with a rather serious tone.

“I did consider my words when I spoke.”

“That doesn’t seem to be the case to me though.”

“Hmmm, I can’t really explain it, but for some reason, I can feel things that I shouldn’t say, which would cause a fight back there. I wonder if it’s also the result of me being a Hunter for quite a long time.”

“I-Is that so?”

Whether it was against a person, or an organization, or even a monster, there were always fatal choices. Some could identify such dangerous lines through careful analysis, while some could do so by pure intuition. Kanae was the latter. But she believed that Reina was not the latter type. Even if Reina was, Kanae could not have imagined Reina as someone who would try to step dangerously close to that line.

Shiori let out a big sigh.

“…Milady, first of all, you did well during the negotiation with Akira-sama. But, if Milady could really feel such a line, I really recommend keeping a safe distance from it.”

“I know. But sometimes you have to take dangerous options to survive, right? It is obviously true for the Hunters, it is also true for the officers in large corporations too, right? It would be bad if they can’t make the right decision. Even in the main house, although some family members lost their positions in the family, some of them are doing quite well as Hunters and are trying to get back into the power struggle inside the family, right? Now that I think about it, they might be thinking of training themselves as Hunters and using the skills that they have learned in the corporate world. After all, wouldn’t it be difficult for them to know what is dangerous if they keep living in the safety of the inner wall? Ojii-sama might have the same line of thinking too since he was once a Hunter. What do you think, Shiori?”

“T-that might as well be the case…”

Shiori thought that Reina's argument did make sense. But she did not want Reina to dive into that line of thinking. That was why she only gave a rather vague answer. Immediately, Shiori tried to change the subject.

"A-anyway, with this, our matter with Akira-sama at least came to a close. The next matter would be in regards to Olivia-sama. Let's think about what to do with that matter once we return back to the city. We need to discuss with the factions as well…"

That was when Shiori noticed a message from Chloe. When she checked the content, she could not help but frown.

"Milady, I've received a message from Chloe-sama saying that she wishes to meet with Milady sometime soon. What should we do about this?"

"Well, it's not like we can do anything about it. We don't have the choice of saying no to her. She will try to gather information regarding that matter with Alice-sama sooner or later. So, is she coming over here?"

"No, she wants us to come to meet her, as for the location…"

Reina frowned when she heard the location. She then thought for a bit before she made her decision.

"…I see. Well, let's just go there right now."

"Of course."

Shiori then changed the direction of the vehicle, which was originally headed back to Kugamayama city.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 257, Chloe’s Decision

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Around the time Akira was meeting with Reina’s group in the middle of the wasteland, Chloe was agonizing with a frustrated expression inside one of Lion Steel’s facilities.

“That was a blunder… To think that the situation changed so much in such a short span of time.”

After she left Mihazono ruin, Chloe returned back to gather more information about Reina as well as to reorganize her plan. But in the middle of that, she suddenly received an emergency message that Alice would be coming there soon.

Alice normally would never leave the main HQ of the eastern district branch. As long as there was nothing big, she would never leave that place. So, in short, something big must have happened. Furthermore, Alice had also issued an order for the branch office of Kugamayama city and its surrounding area to take care of the matter with Olivia for the time being. This too was a huge abnormality.

Chloe panicked and stopped any investigation regarding Reina’s group, instead, she directed all her resources to investigate Olivia. That was when she found out that Reina's group had made contact with Olivia.

"No matter how you look at it, the only chance they could have contacted Olivia was right after that happened. She really outplayed me… Although she said that she was having trouble with it, she was that close to contacting Olivia, huh? To think that I didn't even notice…"

Latis, who was her butler, tried to cheer her master up.

"Milady. We were also unable to notice that. That is just how good her acting skill is. The order from Alice-sama was to all staff around the area, so it was not directed specifically to them. We're in the middle of the wasteland, so we still have that option available to us."

Chloe quickly understood what Latis was trying to say. Her eyebrows furrowed even more as she looked even more troubled. But hesitating also showed that she started to consider the viability of that option and admitted that they had enough reason to execute it.

Moreover, Chloe did not want to let this chance, which would never come by her again for the second time, getaway. So, she approved Latis' suggestion.

"Pamela, I'm sorry to say this although I said it to you yesterday, but it seems that there's a need to deal with this matter swiftly. so get everyone ready."

"Right away."

Pamela smiled and gracefully bowed.

The situation in Higaraka residence ruin had completely returned to normal. The crowd that flooded the ruin from the old-world terminal rumour had mostly left the site. It was no longer a ruin that Hunters would regularly visit in search of relics.

A Lion Steel facility was erected on the mansion where the old-world terminals were found. Although it was not that big of a building, it was built on top of a large site.

Normally, building such a facility in the middle of the ruin was not an easy feat to pull off. Not only were there rubble and wreckage of the other buildings around, but there was also the problem of the monsters in the area. It was also not cheap to assign escorts for every material transport.

Because of that, when someone wanted to build a large building but there was not enough space inside the city, they often opted to build it next to the city. A well-maintained road would then be built on the logistic route, which connected that building to the city, people would then gather around the maintained road, and that was how the city would slowly grow.

But for this Lion Steel facility, thanks to the Hunters who came looking for the old-world terminal in the area, they had cleaned up the roaming monsters. For the transport of materials, they got the Hunters who came regularly to Higaraka ruin from Kugamayama city involved. Thus cutting the transport fee even further.

With the area already secured to some extent, as long as they could transport materials, with building technology of the current era, it did not take that much time to fully erect such a facility. Thanks to that, Lion Steel could construct a very well-defended building in the middle of the wasteland without hiccups.

Reina's group rode their vehicle through the road built to connect to that facility. It was the location where Chloe said she wanted to meet her.

Reina looked around the area, which was a mere dilapidated ruin in the past and asked Shiori a question.

"Say, Shiori. Do you know why the company decided to build a facility here of all places? It's big enough to fully revitalize the area."

"I've heard that our company bought the old-world terminals found on this site. It seems that they're planning to use the site again after reinstalling the terminals at their original location. It would not be wise to utilize such devices away from where they were found. Some of them were area locked for the sake of safety. But, even under such considerations, I think even a small facility would do. I bet they have another reason why they erected such a big building."

"Another reason?"

"Maybe it's to prepare for another facility or something similar? Maybe it's for a long-term plan? A change to readjust the relations between each faction. There are many possibilities. After all, if a large facility is built in a certain area, the one who is responsible for that area would gain more influence and privileges."

"Ohh, so that's it, huh?"

Reina seemed to hate the topic. But Shiori's wish was for Reina to quit working as a Hunter and return back to the main house. Reina, who had established a connection to Olivia, finally had enough achievement to be reinstated. That was why she knew it was only a matter of time before she would hear more about this.

But that also meant that she would be once again shoved into the in-fighting between factions that she avoided up until now. With that in mind, she had no wish to return back to the main house.

Both Reina and Shiori had been together for a long time, that was why they understood each other. Both were thinking of how to convince the other. That was when Kanae suddenly said something.

"Ane-san. Stop!"

Hearing the way Kanae said it, Shiori stopped the vehicle first before asking Kanae.

"What's wrong?"

"It might be pretty dangerous if we keep going like this."

Kanae pointed at the opening located in front of the entrance to the facility. The opening seemed to be just like any other spot in the wasteland, it was big enough to park several big vehicles, as a matter of fact, there were multiple vehicles parked there at this very moment. But all of them were parked so as not to get in Reina's way, moreover, there were maids and butlers that might be from Chloe's side standing ready to welcome Reina's group.

It would not be strange to think that it was a huge welcome for the team that had successfully gotten into contact with Olivia, but Kanae did not believe that was the case.

"They seem to have prepared a huge welcoming team for us, though unfortunately, I feel like what they're saying is that they would not let us leave that easily."

Shiori also looked suspiciously at the group in front of her. Deep in between the maids and the butlers lined there, Chloe was waiting with Pamela and Latis beside her. Position-wise, Chloe's group was above Reina's group. Turning back would be very rude to Chloe. Even if Kanae's worry was on point, at the moment, it was nothing more than a worry.

"…Milady, shall we turn back and leave?"

"No, it's fine, let's just continue forward."

Shiori was surprised that Reina gave an instant straight answer.

"…Milady, are you sure?"

"Turning back now would only give them an unnecessary excuse."

"…Very well."

Seeing Reina was calm, as if she was not distraught by what was going on, Shiori also pulled herself together and moved the vehicle forward.

When Chloe saw Reina momentarily stop, she turned to Latis. But when she was about to say something, Reina continued coming closer, so she also stopped herself from saying anything to Latis.

Pamela, who had guessed what Chloe was going to say, stopped her men from moving toward Reina and ordered them to return back to their posts.

“It seems that they know their position.”

Chloe smiled and replied.

“It’s good that we can solve this without having to resort to that. Or do you find it unfortunate instead, Pamela?”

“Not at all. Of course, I don’t feel that it’s unfortunate at all.”

Latis and Pamela quickly started preparing to welcome Reina’s group. They set up the tables and the chairs, placed a tablecloth on top of the table, and served some refreshments. Chloe sat on her chair and waited for Reina’s group to come to her.

Shiori parked the vehicle not too far from them as they disembarked and approached Chloe’s table. Chloe invited Reina to take a seat with a gesture of her hand. That scene where Chloe was donning an expensive-looking dress and Reina donning a maid uniform battle suit looked like a master inviting her subordinate, who just returned from her mission.

Shiori’s face twitched from annoyance. Kanae smiled wryly. Meanwhile, Reina did not seem bothered at all as she took her seat. Chloe and Reina had their servants standing behind them.

“So then, why did you want to meet me? As I said before, I’m busy, you know?”

“Geez, don’t say that. Although you said you’re busy, you’re not as busy as yesterday, right?”

“True, but still, I’m busy enough to tell you to finish this up as soon as possible.”

“I see.”

Chloe fixed her gaze on Reina. She was trying to discern if Reina's calmness was only an act or not. Reina was not disturbed at all though she was being treated like a lowly servant. She did not show any particular reaction.

[Is it because she has fully given up on returning back to the main house and has decided to live fully as a Hunter? Or is it because she has the grit to completely ignore such harassment?] Chloe was trying to probe Reina with her eyes, trained from the power struggle inside the main house.

However, she could not come up with anything.

"What's wrong? If you have nothing to say, I'm leaving."

Since Reina stated so, Chloe did not have any other choice but to change her approach. She reminded herself that it was not like this was her first time negotiating with someone about whom she had insufficient information.

"Well, it seems that you're busy, so I've been thinking about how to make it quick. But if you're really that busy, let's finish this right away then."

Chloe smiled.

"White card."

"I don't know what you expect from me just from that, you know…?"

"Give it to me."

With such short but clear words. There was no need for any more questions. It was obviously a threat as well as a warning.

Although Alice's order was for the staff on the field to handle the matter with Olivia, there was no Lion Steel staff in the area who could contact Olivia on their own. But it was not like Alice said that it was an order specifically for Reina's group. This meant that it was directed to anyone who had that card, which could be used to contact Olivia.

Anyone who had that card would even be able to call for the head representative of the company, Alice. It could even be said that they would be a pivotal person that would decide the future of the company, as such, everyone in the area was stirred to make their moves.

That demand that was much closer to a robbery attempt caused Shiori to inadvertently raise her voice.

“Chloe-sama! That is out of the li-”

“Silence!”

Chloe sent a mocking gaze to the tensed-up Shiori.

“This is between two members of the family, so an outsider like you should not interfere.”

Shiori closed her mouth and gritted her teeth. Even putting aside the difference in their positions, Shiori was not in the position to be scolding Chloe. Moreover, if a mere escort like her crossed the line, it would cause trouble for Reina, who was trying to stand up as her deserving master. Because of that, Shiori managed to hold herself back.

Seeing that Shiori comply, Chloe smiled with satisfaction and shifted her gaze back to Reina. Reina lightly sighed.

“And what will you give me for it?”

“I’ll say that I’ll be deeply indebted to you.”

“That doesn’t sound like a good deal to me.”

“Well, you should wait for a bit. Let’s see, once I become the head of the faction, one day, I’ll be the head of the main branch in the Aurum economic zone, and eventually, I’ll become the officer of the main HQ. I’ll put you somewhere nearby, doesn’t that sound great?”

For those who knew the inner workings of the Lion Steel company, that sounded like nothing but a dream. But as long as they had the talent and were able to make good use of it, it was not an impossible feat to achieve. Moreover, Chloe was being serious when she said so. This was important since even if one was prideful, not just anyone could accomplish what she had claimed to. No one could reach that position without the strong resolve to use their utmost talent, and resources to reach that goal. And she knew that very well.

Reina also believed Chloe was not lying, but even so, she still said.

“I’m sorry, but I still don’t think it’s a good enough offer. It doesn’t give me enough reason to give you the white card.”

Chloe’s gaze turned sharp. She locked eyes with Reina, trying to discern whether it was because Reina had no wish to hand over the card at all costs or if it was simply because the offer was not good enough. However, she still could not find anything. Either way, it did not matter what was the answer to her question, she had already decided on what to say next.

“I see. If you say so, it means that I will have no other choice but to put in something more to tip the scale to make it worthwhile. For example, your safety, whether you can leave this place safely or not.”

Although Reina and Chloe were still the same as always, that was not the case for their servants. Shiori knitted her eyebrows. Kanae smiled with excitement. Latis silently scanned the other side, and Pamela was waiting with a smile. The rest of the maids and butlers changed their positions to close Reina’s escape route.

When everyone in the area tensed up, Reina and Chloe were the only ones who stayed calm as they were facing each other.

Reina faked a surprised expression and reaffirmed.

“You would even go for violence, huh? I don’t know what’s going on but, are non-peaceful, fast solutions becoming the new norm inside the wall or something?”

Chloe lightly smiled.

“Oh, it has always been, you just don’t know about it. The difference in their military power made it such that no real full-blown battle happened yet. There’s also no need to even say it out loud, you know? Don’t tell me you honestly did not know?”

“Unfortunately, no. Thanks for letting me know.”

“You’re very welcome. Well then. Now that you’re done learning, this would be a good time to show the result of what you have learned. So, what’s your answer?”

Reina did not say anything, Chloe also only waited without saying anything as well. The silence continued only to be broken by Chloe later.

“If this silence continues any further, I will interpret it as a no.”

Reina still did not say anything, Chloe’s smile vanished.

“I see.”

Chloe did not like violence, but she would not hesitate when it was necessary. Moreover, the influence, profit, and power that she could gain from getting a connection with Olivia were more than enough of a reason to get that card even if it meant that she had to kill Reina. She thought that Reina would also understand that, but if she did not. Then it was not like she could do anything about it.

That was when Kanae interjected.

“Ah, just to let you know, if you try to hurt Milady, I’ll kill you.”

In response to Kanae, who said so casually, Chloe frowned and said.

“A mere Rank-4 maid speaking about killing one of the main house’s members. How rude. Good grief. You really need more education.”

“Well, I’m always not good with that subject, you see. Sorry about that.”

Although Kanae said so, she did not seem apologetic at all. So, Chloe then exasperatedly said.

“Latis, Pamela, did you hear that? She said that she’s going to kill me.”

Latis confidently replied.

“Please don’t worry. She would not be able to do it.”

Pamela smiled and said.

“She won’t be able to do that, just leave it to us.”

Chloe was satisfied by her servants’ answer and nodded. She then shifted her gaze back to Kanae.

“So, there you have it. That level of threat won’t even work even as a mere bluff. Well, if you still insist, I’ll send your Milady with you to the afterlife, so don’t worry.”

But even so, Kanae was still smiling with excitement. But her smile suddenly twitched, she then rubbed her head with one of her hands and sighed.

“…Well, I know that I’m not good at this kind of thing. For some reason, you just can’t fully forget your roots. They always told me to prioritize my duty while I underwent training, but I just can’t help but prioritize fun first. As expected, I should reign in my personal feelings and prioritize my duty.”

Kanae’s aura slowly changed. Her smile vanished and was replaced by a chilling cold expression. She looked coldly at Chloe’s side as if they were trash and warned.

“If you touch Reina-sama, you’re dead meat.”

As expected, Chloe could not ignore it.

Lion Steel company searched all over the eastern area for talented children, mostly from the poor areas, and trained them to be butlers and maids. They were then sent to various organizations and individuals. These children were ranked during their training depending on their performance. Those who had exceptional talents were sent to high-level individuals such as officials from large corporations. While those who were rather average were dispatched to different places.

Rank-4 was the lowest rank. They were treated as failed products that were not even to be sent outside the corporation. Of course, they were also not treated well even inside the corporation.

Both Shiori and Kanae were Rank-4. But that was not because they were incompetent. The evaluation of their total performance was considered unsatisfactory. Thus, they were given their Rank-4 evaluation.

Lion Steel placed an emphasis on loyalty to the main corporation. After all, the current era's Lion Steel company was using humans in place of automatons. Thus, they did not need anyone that offered less than total loyalty. With children basically saved from poverty, they normally felt indebted toward the corporation and were extremely loyal.

But Shiori's loyalty was not toward the corporation but toward Reina. As such, the corporation saw that as a huge problem and evaluated her as Rank-4.

As for Kanae, her problem was her attitude toward her duty. She had the tendency of getting her personal feelings mixed in her work and instead prioritized her enjoyment. No matter how good she was, if she hoped for her escort target to get attacked, it was only natural for her to be evaluated as Rank-4.

The reason why Reina was accompanied by those 2 maids although she was kicked out of the family and exiled outside the inner well was because both Kanae and Shiori were Rank-4 servants.

But this time, Kanae was not showing any attitude that would lower her evaluation any further. In other words, rather than prioritizing having fun over the safety of her escort target, which she had been doing up until now, she was doing the opposite. Her aura was indicating that she was willing to stop playing and her job seriously. To quickly remove her opponents for Reina's safety.

Chloe was a bit overwhelmed by Kanae's pressure, but she did not show it. She furrowed her brows and said with a smile.

"And you think you can win with that?"

"At the very least, I can guarantee that you'll be dead."

Although their conversation did not exactly connect, people who heard that exchange had no problem understanding what was going on.

As long as Kanae focused on Chloe, Chloe's servants would have no other choice but to focus on defending their master instead of killing their opponent. That way, they would have no leeway to focus on Reina. They would not even have the chance to capture Reina and use it to threaten Kanae. Any attempt other than that would take more time and manpower which meant the higher the chance Kanae would get Chloe first.

And while they were dealing with Kanae, Shiori could take Reina and run away. Even with her attitude, Kanae had the determination to throw away her life for her duty, the same as Latis and the rest of Chloe's servants.

But that was not the case for Chloe. She had to prioritize her own life.

"You heard her, Latis, Pamela?"

"Please don't worry. She would not be able to do it."

"She won't be able to do that, just leave it to us."

Latis and Pamela returned the exact same replies. But their expressions were not the same as before. The mockery that they had toward Rank-4 servants from before was no longer present. They were exerting an aura that was suitable for their position, Chloe's closest servants, as they looked at Kanae with a sharp gaze filled with killing intent.

Shiori reached for her blade, although she had not unsheathed it, she had already made her resolve. Latis and the other servants also prepared themselves for a fight. They were ready to start anytime and were just waiting for the signal from their master.

The silence continued. But this time it was Chloe who was extending the silence. The card had enough value for her to kill Reina's team. She would even be willing to pay the price and risk her own life to get that card. But that was assuming that she would win the fight. She did not think that Latis and Pamela were lying to her. But she also did not feel any lies in Kanae's words. One of them must be mistaken, but if she tried to confirm it and it turned out that Latis and Pamela were the ones who were mistaken, she would without a doubt be the one who dies. Fear from that caused her to hesitate.

"Stop!"

Reina was the one who broke the silence. Everyone turned toward Reina. She then took out the card, put it on the table, and slid it toward Chloe.

With this, there was no longer any reason to fight. The tense mood was dispelled. Instead, everyone started to look rather confused. In the midst of that atmosphere, Reina then calmly said.

"That should be fine, right? Well then, I'm leaving now. Shiori, Kanae, let's go."

"O-Of course."

"A-alright."

As Reina swiftly stood up and left, Shiori and Kanae followed behind her while still looking rather confused. But Chloe suddenly stopped her.

"If you were planning to give it away from the start, you could've done it sooner. What's your game here?"

Reina stopped and lightly turned around.

“Of course, I was hesitating. What else do you think it might be?”

“…I see. Well, it doesn’t matter since you’ve just handed it over to me. You can look forward to your reward.”

“I don’t need it. I’ve never said anything about accepting your offer.”

“What do you mean?”

Reina frowned and replied.

“You took that card from me by threatening to kill Shiori and Kanae as well as me. That’s why I had no other choice but to give up that card. It’s not like I’m giving that card to you because I accepted your offer or anything like that. Later then.”

Reina then left the place, Shiori and Kanae seemed rather happy as they followed behind her.

As Reina’s group was no longer visible, Chloe sighed. She noticed the cold sweat running down her face and wiped it off.

“…Just to make sure, if we really did fight back there, we would have won, right?”

Latis lightly bowed.

“Of course. Although, we would not be perfectly fine after the battle. Please forgive me.”

Pamela politely added.

“But don’t worry, Milady. We’ll be the ones hurt. We would make sure that Milady would be perfectly safe and sound.”

Chloe firmly gave a nod. She then moved on to the next issue, which was the card in her hand. The white card was glistening and reflected her own image. Seeing that, she thought that it was as if that glisten also shone the way to her bright future.

“Well, I would say that it was mostly smooth sailing. Though, I admit that as someone who had been banished from the inner wall, she is a tough opponent.”

Chloe smiled and slipped that card into her pocket. She then returned back inside accompanied by the rest of her servants.

Silavin: For some reason, I feel a little bad for Chloe. If I were to self-internalize, I think it is because she doesn’t seem to be that bad of a person. Well, from this novel’s standpoint anyways.

Anyone share the same sentiment?

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 258, A Shady Object

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shirou was working in his secret base with a solemn expression. Though if someone was looking at him, he would seem to be doing nothing. Just silently sitting in his seat. However, he was currently controlling a remote terminal through the old-world connection.

He was analyzing the data that he received from Carol in Mihazono ruin, collecting information to elude Yanagisawa and Hammerz, collecting real Chrome. Basically, there were a lot of things that he had to do.

"…Dammit! The rate for this one here is way too high. And this one! It has a low rate but it requires the information buyer to give his details…. I bet they've been doing something in the black market… Are they seriously going this far!?"

The old-world currency, Chrome, was a difficult currency to handle. Chrome used by common people and second-rate Hunters was not actually real old-world Chrome. Most of the time, they were a substitute for real Chrome, a fiat currency that the Corporate Government has guaranteed.

Even if a Hunter found the highly valuable Chrome in a ruin, it was not easy to spend it. Most of the time, they were bound to a certain user through old-world technology. In other words, they were bound to their original, legitimate owner. As such, when someone else tries to use it to strike a deal with an old-world being, it was often rejected as illegitimate Chrome. In the worst-case scenario, they might even get killed when they tried to use that Chrome.

Therefore, real Chrome was one that was freely used in the current era's eastern district to make deals with old-world beings.

The main distributor of the real Chrome was the 5 biggest corporations, of course, they got those Chrome from making deals with old-world beings. They also did something similar to money laundering in order to overwrite the ownership of the Chrome found in old-world ruins. Some could easily be overwritten by submitting a report that its original owner had expired. Some had their ownership transferred automatically to the old-world caretaker AI, which then large corporations could obtain by selling goods to that AI. These large corporations were doing all kinds of things to gather real Chrome.

Even if they had real Chrome, there were only a limited number of individuals who could use them to buy old-world articles. After all, they had no way to connect to the old-world domain. That was why, most of the time, those who found real Chrome would exchange it with the Corporate Government for old-world articles. Behind the scenes, one of the corporate government's agents would be used as a proxy to purchase said old-world articles in place of the one who found the Chrome. Of course, the moment it got transferred into the corporate government's account, it would be turned into fiat and normally never be allowed to exchange back for real Chrome.

There were only a certain number of people who could strike a deal with the old-world beings. The real Chrome and the fiat Chrome had no difference except to these people. In short, for Shirou, the difference between real Chrome and fiat Chrome was huge.

The 15 million Chrome that he had prepared for his escape actually had strings attached. They were Chrome that he had been gathering secretly bit by bit. His original plan was to use it to make a deal with a high ranking Hunter.

Of course, Shirou's escape was against the will of Sakashita Heavy Industry. So, it was to be expected that those who helped him would also be picking a fight with Sakashita Heavy Industry. As such, Shirou's only option was to find a Hunter who could stand their ground against Sakashita Heavy Industry. Otherwise, a Hunter who had connections to one of the other 5 largest corporations in the eastern district.

In order to make a deal with such Hunters, he could not use Aurum and had no other choice but to use Chrome. It would be better if it was real Chrome. After all, Hunters who had the option to move out to another area in the scenario where they got kicked out from the Aurum financial area by Sakashita Heavy Industry, would normally have connections to the old-world.

However, he ended up using all 15 million Chrome to pay Olivia. With this, he had no more money to employ a front-line Hunter and had lost his greatest opportunity to accomplish his goal. He did try to find a way to get real Chrome using back routes, but unfortunately, it was as if all of them were traps awaiting him. As such, he had no other choice but to rethink his original plan.

"…I can't just give up. I don't think I'll ever get this opportunity ever again! There's no way I would just give it up like this…"

Shirou had both of his hands on the back of his head, as he stared at the floor while having a hard time with what to do next. He suddenly raised his head. The automatic warning program that he had set up in case someone was trying to look for him got triggered. He then checked the content of the warning and tilted his head in confusion.

"…Why are these people looking for me? Dammit, what do I do now?"

Shirou was uncertain if he should give them a warning to make them withdraw, or just ignore it in case it was actually a trap. He then switched off the automatic program and did the investigation himself. Considering that Yanagisawa had found him through the old-world domain before, he had to put in extra effort in his investigation. Because of that, he had to give it more attention, which was a rather scarce resource for him at the moment.

__*__*__*__

After Reina's group left Chloe, they once again headed back to the city. As Shiori was driving the vehicle, she would intermittently send glances at Reina as if she wanted to say something. But because she was having a hard time choosing her words, she ended up saying nothing.

She could not bring herself to ask Reina if it was okay. It was thanks to Reina giving up the card that they were able to leave safely. If asked whether it was a good thing or not, it was without a doubt a good thing. But she could not just wrap everything that happened as something positive and end it there.

Reina guessed what Shiori was thinking and smiled.

"No matter what happens, we were the ones who created the route to contact Olivia-sama and I believe that is enough to allow me to return back to the main family, right? So, let's not get too greedy. Having too big of an achievement out of the blue would only cause me more trouble, no? Exactly like what happened just now."

"That indeed is true, but…"

"All three of us are fine. That's good enough, don't you think so?"

"…Yes."

Since Reina had said so, Shiori had no other choice but to get over it.

Kanae, who had already fully returned to her usual attitude, lightly smiled and said.

"But wouldn't the best option back there be not to meet Chloe-sama? Milady, I think that was a mistake. I did tell Milady that it wouldn't be anything good, right?"

Shiori turned to Kanae and was about to scold her, but before that, Reina casually replied.

“It’s fine. It was a good chance too.”

“…A good chance?”

“I didn’t expect her to go that far for the card. Though, I did expect her to threaten me.”

Shiori frowned and interjected with a troubled expression.

“So Milady was planning on giving her the card away right from the start. In that case, why did Milady take on such an attitude…?”

“That is to satisfy Olivia-sama. If I gave it away without much resistance, she might think that I don’t value that card, right? That’s why, although I was planning to give it away, I had to hold onto it as long as I could.”

Kanae smiled wryly.

“M-Milady, that was a bit too close to the limit for my taste, though.”

“I was originally planning to hold it just a little bit before giving it up, but thanks to you, I was able to hold it until the very limit. Well, I won’t deny that it was dangerous. But I’m glad that result-wise I’m certain we were able to show how highly we value that card.”

Shiori sighed in exasperation.

“M-Milady, it would have been great if you had discussed it with us beforehand.”

“My bad. But you did do the same thing too, no? That’s why make sure to discuss it with me next time.”

“…Of course.”

Shiori smiled wryly, seeing that, Kanae smiled amusedly and asked the final question in her mind.

“So then, Milady, why did you decide to just give away the card? Although I’m sure that Chloe-sama won’t be happy with it, personally speaking, I believe that it was better to not give that card away back there.”

Shiori also had the same question and agreed with Kanae’s opinion. She glanced at Reina, asking the same question with her glance.

Reina was not sure how to answer that question. She wanted to respond with an argument she had accepted in her mind, but she was sure that would not convince Kanae and Shiori. Though, at this point, she knew that it would be pointless to lie. So, she decided to answer truthfully.

“Hmmm. It’s mostly out of intuition, so I can’t really explain it. I had a feeling that it was better if I distanced myself away from that card as soon as possible. But again, considering a connection to Olivia-sama, it was not like I can just give it away without a good reason. After all, she might interpret it as us mocking the value of that card, right? So, with that in mind, it was a good opportunity, you see. And, if it’s about why I don’t want to keep that card…”

Reina paused, she smiled wryly while looking troubled.

“It might be weird to say this, but even someone like Akira doesn’t want to keep that card, remember? So, don’t you think it’s better not to keep it?”

With that reasoning, Shiori and Kanae made a conflicted expression similar to Reina. If used correctly, it was an extremely tempting card that might bring about huge profits, but at this point, to them, it also looked like an extremely dangerous object as well. They could not just throw it away. Even if they managed to get it away from them, it felt like it would somehow return back like a cursed object.

“Leaving aside whether that worry is necessary or not, it all depends on Chloe-sama from this point on. Ah, this is getting really interesting.”

Kanae smiled with excitement as she wondered if her master’s worry was going to come to fruition or not.

__*__*__*__

Chloe returned back to the facility and went to the basement with the card in her hand. It was the basement of a mansion where Akira met a Lion Steel's holographic AI. At the moment, that room had already been transformed into a lab. The old-world terminals there had already been restored and the location which triggered the Lion Steel AI had been properly marked.

Chloe could not connect to the old-world domain. But she could use an augmented reality device that would help her connect to the old-world domain and communicate with the Lion Steel company. If she used the card, she would even be able to summon Olivia.

Even Chloe found herself nervous in this situation. Olivia was not only a mere old-world being to them, she was not only the same type of AI as the head of the current Lion Steel, Alicia, she was also someone Alicia had to negotiate with. If Chloe somehow soured her mood, she would no longer have a place anymore in the main corporation. On the other hand, if she somehow managed to get on Olivia's good side and be a special negotiator to connect with Olivia, she might be someone that would even catch Alice's eyes. It was a reasonable gamble to take.

She controlled her breathing to calm her down and made her resolve. She then held up the card. The call went through to Lion Steel and bounced to Olivia. The next moment, Olivia appeared in Chloe's vision.

Chloe took a deep breath and bowed.

"It is a pleasure to meet you, I am Chloe from Lion Steel's eastern district third branch. Due to the order from Alice-sama to proceed with the preparation for the negotiation, I have decided to contact you. We will be in your care."

After she finished her polite introduction and raised her head, Chloe winced back. Olivia looked rather displeased at her. Since Chloe could not afford to worsen Olivia's mood, she immediately reviewed what she did. But even after she did that, she could not find anything that might offend Olivia. She tried to get her anxiety in control as she continued.

“We apologize deeply for calling you while you are busy. Would it be better if I reschedule this meeting?”

“That’s pretty brave of you considering you summoned me here with a stolen card.”

Chloe shuddered at that unexpected response.

“S-stolen card? I can reassure you that it is not…”

The relics that the Hunters carried out from old-world ruins were basically stolen goods. Even if it was a relic that was left inside a dilapidated warehouse, or if it was an already decayed relic abandoned there for who knows how long. Even if it was a relic that was left there for eternity, either way, they were taken without the permission of their original owners. If the security measure in that area was still active, which in the current era, was in the form of monsters, it would attempt to chase away these robbers. In some cases, even kill the robbers.

But there were relics that were not considered stolen goods. They included those that were freely given away. There were also those that had lost their ownership based on the laws of that time. Chloe thought that card was one of those relics, or that for Olivia, the ownership of that card did not matter. The one that really mattered to her was the person who held that card. After all, if that was not the case, Reina’s group that had contacted Olivia, and even allowed Alice to set up negotiations with her, would not be alive by now. That was why she was basically willing to use violence to get this card from Reina.

However, Olivia looked at Chloe with frosty eyes as she said.

“That card is not yours. Unlawful ownership of our issued card warrants a clean-up procedure from our company. I believe that I have said this to the previous person who held that card.”

Chloe understood that she was in a horrendous situation, she tried to make a guess based on Olivia's words and tried to find a way to solve the misunderstanding. It was very unlikely that Reina's group got that card on their own. If they were able to do that, they would have already returned to the main house. Thus, her thoughts wandered, and she tried to make a guess. It was with the assumption that Reina's group did not get that card themselves.

"Ever since Shiori from our company had made contact with Olivia-sama, we believed that this card has been obtained through legitimate means. Moreover, it was an article that we obtained in the middle of one of our missions. As such, even if it's owned by another company or individual, it should not be treated as a borrowed object nor a stolen object. We're really sorry if this does not satisfy you, but, we had no ill-will calling Olivia-sama here through what you deem as an illegitimate means."

Unfortunately, Olivia quickly denied Chloe's assumption.

"In the first place, Shiori is not the rightful owner of that card. It is just that its original owner gave his word that he had given that card. As such, although originally it would never be accepted, we had let it slide by treating that card as a borrowed article. It is unacceptable to be lending our card again to a third party. You have no permission to use that card. As such, from now on, we're treating that card as a stolen object."

Olivia's attitude did not soften at all. Chloe was growing increasingly panicked.

"P-please wait for a bit! If the original owner of the card has given it to Reina and Shiori, that would not make it a borrowed object! I didn't get it from Shori, but from Reina-"

"The owner of that card is neither Reina, nor Shiori, nor Kanae from your company. In the first place, the owner is not affiliated with your company."

"Eh-!? That's impossible!?"

Chloe tried to reanalyze the situation with calm and rational thought, but it was just impossible from her point of view.

“There is no way that is true! Even if Reina asked an old-world connector, who is the original owner of this card to help them contact Olivia-sama and somehow managed to get them to hand over the card, there are no records regarding such a deal! There were no records of the card being handed over. Whether it is money or object, everything should have been strictly recorded.”

“Regarding the worth of the card, I have confirmed that both sides accepted the deal between them. In the first place, the person who contacted me was not the owner of that card.”

Additional information only confused Chloe even more.

“Only old-world connectors can use this card! If the owner of this card is not an old-world connector, then who the hell used this card to contact you!?”

“That would be me.”

Suddenly, an uninvited third party joined their conversation. Chloe was extremely surprised by that. Shirou suddenly appeared inside Chloe’s enhanced vision.

The others who were helping Chloe with her AR device, also saw the same thing and started to make a ruckus. The area around Chloe suddenly became noisy.

“What’s going on here!? Did someone just infiltrate this place?!”

“No way! It’s the direct line to Lion Steel through the old-world domain, you know!? There’s no way anyone ca-”

Shirou then exasperatedly mocked.

“How naive! Even if you’re using the old-world domain connection, as long as it’s a terminal or an ARR device made in this era, it’s not impossible to hack my way in, you know? It’s horrendous if you don’t properly maintain the security of your systems.”

Inside Chloe’s view, Olivia turned to Shirou and smiled at him.

“Well well well, isn’t this Shirou-sama? Thank you very much for using our service last time. Are you here for another request today?”

Shirou looked at Olivia just like how Chloe was looking at Olivia, with a deeply troubled look.

“I really want to, but unfortunately, I can’t afford it at the moment. Sorry, but maybe next time.”

“Of course. We’ll be waiting for you. Well then, what kind of business do you have today?”

“Sorry but my business this time is actually with her.”

Shirou glanced at Chloe and pointed at her, he then said with a serious expression.

“It seems that you guys are looking for me. What game are you trying to play here? Trying to look for a Sakashita Heavy Industry’s officer? Are you trying to pick a fight with Sakashita Heavy Industry?”

“S-Sakashita Heavy Industry? What do you mean!?”

Chloe only got more and more confused with the flood of new information. Unfortunately, all of them only worsen her situation, making her panic even more.

Seeing Chloe’s reaction, Shirou understood his mistake and clicked his tongue. He finally understood that in order to avoid trouble with Sakashita Heavy Industry, Shiori did not report what had happened to the upper echelons. Meanwhile, Chloe was only asking about him because she wanted to know the person who was with Olivia. It was not because she was looking for the old-world connector who had escaped from Sakashita Heavy Industry.

Although he regretted his unnecessary action, at least he understood that this information would not reach Hammerz. So, he changed his tone and warned Chloe so as to change the subject.

“I see. So, you don’t even know what’s going on, huh? Well, it doesn’t matter. It’s better for you not to know. But don’t try to look for me. If you keep doing that, I’ll interpret it as a challenge to Sakashita. I’ll do you a favour and not report this to Sakshita this time. I’m in the middle of a secret mission from Sakashita, so they’ll have to deal with you if get to know too much.”

As Shirou was about to leave, Chloe, who managed to at least process a little bit of the current situation and noticed an issue, flusteredly tried to stop him.

“Wait!”

“What now?”

“Is this card yours!? Since you helped Reina and the others, does that mean they have something to do with that secret mission of yours!?”

Shirou paused. He did think that saying yes would likely satisfy them enough to stop them from snooping around for more information about him. However, he also felt like it would cause more trouble if Olivia took his lie seriously, so he decided to deny it.

“No. I only helped them because of something else. It seems that back then, they were looking for a special location where even a non-old-world connector could connect to the old-world domain. And since I couldn’t wait for them to do that, I just helped them to do it in their place. That was all. If I’m not mistaken, the real owner of that card is a Hunter by the name of Akira, right?”

Shirou turned to Olivia and Olivia silently nodded in response.

“Indeed, that card is no one else’s but his.”

“There you have it. You didn’t even know that although you tried to use that card, huh?”

Shirou was further emphasising an exasperated attitude so as to shift Chloe’s attention to someone else so that she would no longer snoop for more information about him.

“I’m basically warning you. So yeah, don’t look for me again.”

Shirou then vanished from Chloe’s vision.

“Considering the complexity of the situation and that you’re working under Alice, I will let this incident slide. But I will take extreme measures next time. That will be all for me today.”

Olivia also vanished from Chloe’s vision.

Chloe, who was left standing there alone after everyone left, fell over from mental fatigue. Latis and the other servants who were there, flustered, helped her up.

“Milady! Are you alright?!”

Latis then carried Chloe to the nearest sofa. Although she had no power left to stand back up, seeing how her servants looked at her, worriedly, she pushed her half-body up and pulled herself together. She could not afford to keep looking that pathetic in front of them. Thus, she shouted her order at them.

“Investigate this Hunter, Akira! Immediately!”

Seeing her men start to scramble to get to work, Chloe gritted her teeth. It was a huge failure. But this was not the end, she told that to herself and pushed all pessimism off her mind.

After that, their investigation regarding the original owner of the card did not deliver much result. Chloe did try calling Reina to ask about it, but Reina just kept ignoring her call. Because of that, she sent the same question to the upper echelons of the faction that she was in. It later went to the upper echelons of the faction that Reina was in. This question went one round before finally reaching Reina. However, Reina's answer to that was a simple and short message – 'I am not obligated to answer that question'.

Since it was sent through the upper echelons of the company, it had the same level as an order from the corporation. Reina's response was essentially permitted by the upper echelons of the company. This meant that there was nothing more Chloe could do to get information about Akira from Reina.

Had she received that card from Reina through a deal that both sides had agreed upon, Chloe might be able to gain some information from Reina. However, Chloe lost to her greed and ended up taking the card from Reina with force. Right now, she was faced with the repercussions of that mistake.

As such, to get out of this predicament, clinging on to the chance of that wonderful future, Chloe had to take her chance on a gamble. An even wider crossroad, a huge gamble where losing meant greater losses and winning meant better rewards.

Silavin: This card is really a curse hahaha.

Though, I wonder if it will also haunt Reina.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 259, Start The Battle

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira woke up in Carol's camping car. He was sleeping with his augmented suit on. This was to make sure that he would be able to react immediately in case something happened while he was doing his job as an escort. It was adjusted to place a minimum burden on his body, thanks to that, he was able to sleep well.

Akira said his usual good morning to Alpha and stretched his body, he then started to do simple stretching to wake his body up. After that, he proceeded to check his equipment before finally waking Carol up.

Carol was sleeping naked under a thin sheet. The sheet fully abandoned its function to hide her skin. Instead, the lightly transparent sheet only added another layer of eroticism. Carol had spent a huge amount of money not only to enhance her physical strength but also to increase her sex appeal. Because of that, her body was extremely lustrous and tempting. Since she was currently not using it to seduce someone, that lustrous beauty only gave off an artistic beauty feeling instead.

"Akira, good morning!"

“Good morning, Carol… Just because the inside of the car doesn’t feel that different from home, I don’t think it’s wise to go around like that, you know?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? There is no one else here but you.”

“No no no, it’s just as you said, I’m here right now, no?”

Akira’s opinion was entirely correct, but Carol instead sighed and said.

“If you really think so, it would be great if you can show some reaction, though. It’s because you don’t show any reaction at all that confidence in my body has taken a big hit, you know? Or is it that you are looking at something that doesn’t satisfy you? It’s fine. You can complain to me.”

“It’s not like I have anything to complain about, but isn’t it normal to at least put on something more proper?”

“If you’re talking about what’s normal, honestly, I will start with hoping to get a normal reaction out of you. Alright alright, I just need to put something on, right?”

Carol only casually said so as she just wanted that subject to be over and done with. She put on the inner for her augmented suit and returned. Although it hid her skin, as usual, the inner was just a tight skin suit, so it was not that different from being naked.

Akira thought to himself [It’s true she had put something on… but an inner is more or less the same as being naked…] Since it was something Carol had decided on as his employer, he stopped himself from saying anything more.

They then went to have breakfast. This was when Akira suddenly came up with a question.

“It seems that this escort duty is going to end sometime soon, no?”

“Hm? Not really, though? Why do you think so?”

“Well, compared to back then when you first asked me, you now seem far less stressed. So, I thought that the problem has already been solved”

“Ahh, I see. Sorry, but it doesn’t seem that it’s going to end anytime soon. I’m planning to keep paying you as my escort forever. That is, as long as you let me and I still have enough money to do so.”

“Is that so? Well, it’s fine with me.”

Akira tilted his head, thinking that it might just be his misunderstanding. However, it was true that Carol had really calmed down compared to before. Carol then smiled at him. It was a calm and tranquil smile.

“Well, it’s true that I’ve mostly calmed down. That’s because even if I get involved in a huge battle like back then, you said that you would help me escape. You’ll do that for me, right?”

“As I said before, I will at least do my best.”

“I’m counting on you when that time comes.”

Carol smiled happily and continued eating her breakfast. Akira thought that Carol’s change in attitude was strange. However, this was better than having her mood soured or tense, so he did not let it worry him too much.

While they were having their breakfast together, Carol went to ask about Akira’s plan.

“By the way, Akira, what’s your plan after this escort mission? Are you planning to go further to the east to earn more? Or are you in the middle of choosing a sponsor?”

“Hmm, I haven’t really decided on anything yet in particular, but… Sponsor?”

Akira tilted his head and seemed confused. Seeing that, Carol also expressed bewilderment.

“Eh? Usually, Hunters of your rank get sponsor offers from various companies. I’m sure you’ve received invitations to join teams as well. Though, I doubt you’ll ever accept those. I believe you’ll be only interested in support contracts or loan offers for solo Hunters. Don’t tell me that you didn’t get any, right?”

“Uhhh, well…”

Akira pretended to think as he turned toward the person, or the thing(?) that he had permitted to handle all that kind of stuff.

“Alpha, did I get anything like that?”

“Yeah. Something like an offer to invest in you so you can go further to the east. Yesterday, you just received an offer from the Lion Steel company, offering you inclusive general support. I’m refusing all offers though. I’m pretty sure I’ve told you before that I’m refusing all the uninteresting offers sent to you using a standard email format, though?”

“Oh? You did?”

Akira then replied to Carol. He was refusing all offers saying that he was not interested in any of them. Which was the truth. Carol could not have noticed that he was leaving such matters completely to Alpha.

“Is that so? Although being a Hunter is very profitable, the cost of the medicines and ammo is not cheap, so it’s difficult to get out of debt once you get yourself into one. So, I don’t think it’s a bad idea to have special connections to take care of that problem though. I’m sure you would always go to a ruin well equipped. However, if something happens and you lose all your stuff, it is a great idea to have a backup plan, right?”

“Well, that’s true, but nothing like that ever happened up until now. Moreover, when I get a sponsor, I’ll have to consider their wishes as well, right?”

“Since they’ll be paying for you and it’s not a charity, that part is given, no?”

“I don’t like that kind of thing.”

Seeing Akira make a displeased expression, as though he abhors the idea, Carol just giggled. She then paused for a bit before she said.

“In that case, how about forming a team with me? Even if you lose all your equipment and have no money to buy a new one, as long as you’re on the same team as me, it won’t be a problem, you know? And if you’re too injured to search ruins, I can get some money from my side-job for you to get your injuries treated or to buy new equipment. I’m sure you can already guess how much I’m earning from my side job, right?”

Carol lightly made that offer as a Hunter, to which Akira responded with a rather troubled expression.

“…Hmmm, honestly speaking, even if we do form a team, I don’t think it would be right to do that.”

“Once we’re in the same team, we’re together both for the good and for the bad. So, I don’t really mind. Well, I won’t ask you to give your answer now. So, just at least keep it in one corner of your mind.”

Carol stopped pursuing the subject. Akira also did not think too much about it. Although, it did leave a mark on his mind.

That was when a call from Viola reached Carol. After Carol picked it up and listened to what Viola had to say, she sent a rather doubtful look at Akira.

“Akira, I just got some strange information from Viola… It seems that Lion Steel is looking for you. Do you have any guess as to why that might be?”

“Really…? Wait, Lion Steel? Isn’t the company where Reina’s group came from?”

“Now that you mention it, yeah. So, Viola is asking if it’s okay to sell information about your location to the information brokers looking for you.”

Akira frowned.

“Wait a sec, since when did information about my location become something that needs to be paid for?”

“No idea, it’s not like I have an answer to that. Ah, Viola also said that she can investigate it and is open to talk about the price if you want.”

“…I don’t really understand what’s going on, but just tell her not to sell my information for now. And I won’t ask for that as well. I don’t have the money to spend on something like that at the moment.”

“Okay.”

Carol conveyed that to Viola and then closed the call. After that, she quickly called Viola again through her terminal, while making sure that it would not make a sound.

“It’s me, about that investigation. Is it okay if I’m the one asking you to do that?”

Carol believed that when Akira considered Viola’s offer, he refused because he thought of negotiating with her as too much trouble. Naturally, Carol’s judgment was on point. Akira weighed both information he might receive and the pain of the negotiation, easily concluding that the latter was more of a pain.

So, Carol thought she could buy that information in Akira’s place and convey it to him. Especially if it was going to be something troublesome. If the potential trouble was something that might cause Akira to stop being her escort, then it was going to be horrendous for her as well.

Viola understood at least that much and replied.

“Sure, but just because we’re friends, there won’t be any special discount, you know?”

“I know. But well, if it’s possible, it would be great if you can prioritize it considering that we’re friends.”

“In that case, I’ll give you this as a special gift. We can talk about the price later after you check the content. I’m actually in the cafeteria inside the Hunter Office branch near Mihazono ruin right now. Come here to pick it up directly.”

“Oh? You’ve done your investigation already? You’re as sly as ever, but is there any need for me to go there? You can just send it to me, no?”

In contrast to Carol’s confused voice, Viola replied with an amused tone.

“I’m sorry, but it’s not something that I can send over except through a secret line. Just think of it as fortunate that I didn’t even ask you to come to the middle of a ruin. So, this thing won’t be cheap, you know? Do you want to withdraw now?”

“Nope. I’ll buy it. I’m heading over there right now, so just wait for me.”

“Alright, I’ll be waiting then.”

After she closed the call, Carol then told Akira. She just remembered she had to go meet someone at a Hunter Office branch after this. Akira was not suspicious at all and normally went to prepare his equipment.

__*__*__*__

After Akira escorted Carol to the Hunter Office branch of Mihazono ruin, he waited for her to return back, from outside the Hunter Office. Akira was waiting outside because Carol asked him to do so. It was just to be safe in case Akira got suspicious. After all, she was purchasing information that Akira refused to buy from Viola.

Although they were in the middle of the wasteland, considering that Carol had mostly calmed down and it was inside the Hunter Office where no one would want to cause trouble, he believed that it would be fine to let Carol go alone. Though he was her bodyguard right now.

As he was chatting with Alpha to kill time, Alpha suddenly warned him.

“Akira, just to be safe, get ready for a fight.”

“What’s going on? Did you discover something that might turn into another large-scale battle?”

“It’s not that serious, but it seems that there are people forming an encirclement around this area.”

Akira then turned his attention toward where Alpha was indicating. There, while he scanned the area, he saw a group of maids and butlers. The same ones he saw back in the cafeteria.

“I bet they’re here just to make sure that this place is safe. That weird rich girl with inappropriate equipment for the wasteland back then is coming here, right?”

“That might be the case. But it’s just to be safe.”

“Understood.”

Akira just ignored that group and continued waiting for Carol. In the middle of that, more and more maids and butlers came to the area. Although the Hunters in the area, including Akira, found it weird, they did not seem to be bothered by it at all. If there was anything that bothered Akira, it was that some of them seemed awfully cautious toward him.

Of course, Akira did notice them. However, he thought that it must be because of his equipment. It was way too powerful for the standard equipment for this ruin. All the maids and the butlers were fully armed, but since Akira knew Kanae and Shiori, who were similar to those maids and butlers, it did not strike him as strange.

Eventually, Chloe came with Latis and Pamela. When Akira saw them coming from the wasteland, he thought that they would head to the Hunter Office. So as not to get in their way, Akira re-positioned himself to the side, where they would pass by him.

But even after they entered the Hunter Office branch area, instead of getting into the build, they headed toward him. Akira frowned and tilted his head.

Chloe approached Akira with her servants behind her and stopped in front of him as if they were having a stand-off.

“You are Akira, right?”

“…Yes?”

Chloe seemed to be exhausted, however, she still sent an intense glare at him. It was because she spent all night yesterday without sleeping to investigate matters related to Olivia. Although her sleepiness and exhaustion had been taken care of by expensive medicines, the fatigue from the stress remained. After all, the situation that she was in had not changed. The more she tried to compensate for that with willpower, unfortunately, the worse her stern stare got.

“I’m sure you’ve received multiple call requests from Lion Steel. Why did you ignore all of them?”

“What are you talking about?”

“Just answer me!”

Akira retracted his head back; it was obvious that he was a bit weirded out by Chloe’s sudden emotional flare. That was when Latis and Pamela quickly intervened, Pamela tried to calm Chloe down while pulling her back. Meanwhile, Latis took her place to talk to Akira.

“A pleasure to meet you, I am Latis, one of Chloe-sama’s butlers. I apologize for my master’s rude remark just now.”

“Ah, sure, okay.”

“We are from Lion Steel company. We have been trying to make an appointment with Akira-sama ever since yesterday. But, we just couldn’t reach you. Although we do think that it is rude for us to do this, since we’ve received information that you would be here, we came here to meet you. Would it be okay if we ask for some of your time right now?”

“Well, if it’s only for a bit, then sure…”

“Thank you very much!”

Latis bowed and withdrew. Chloe, who was taking a deep breath to calm herself down, once again stepped forward in front of Akira. She then showed the white card to Akira.

“Do you have any recollection of this card? Or more like, this card is originally yours, right?”

“No, that’s not mine.”

“Stop playing a fool with me!!”

Chloe once again raised her voice, and once again, Latis and Pamela quickly intervened. However, this time, it was Pamela who stepped in front of Akira.

“It is a pleasure to meet you. I am Pamela. Just like Latis, I am also working to serve Chloe-sama.”

“…Well, okay, sure.”

“According to the information that our company has received, the current owner of this card is Akira-sama. Do you have any recollection of this? If its ownership has already shifted to someone else, it would be a great help if Akira-sama could inform us who it might be.”

“If you guys are from Lion Steel, you know Shiori, right?”

“Of course.”

“It’s hers. Or more like, you got that card from Shiori, right? Why didn’t you even know about it?”

Akira started to look utterly confused. But Pamela replied casually without missing a beat.

“At the moment, the owner of this card in our company is Chloe-sama. After that, we did try to contact Olivia-sama, but then Olivia-sama told us that the legitimate owner of the card is Akira-sama. It was only lent to Shiori. Do you have any recollection of this matter?”

“Ah, right, she did say something along those lines now that you mention it… But still, I already told her. I gave that card to Shiori. So, I don’t think that card is still mine. That’s why, even if you say that you’re returning it, I can’t accept that card. If you really want to talk about returning it or whatnot, go discuss it with Shiori first.”

“Please don’t worry, we are not here to return the card.”

“Then what is it?”

Pamela stepped back, Chloe, who had calmed down with the help from Latis, once again stepped in front of Akira.

“I want you to lend this card to me just like you lent it to Shiori.”

Akira frowned, for him, it was a rather weird request to him.

“You want me to lend it? Didn’t you get that from borrowing it from Shiori?”

“…Yes, we did. But that’s as far as it goes between us. But it seems that as far as Olivia-sama is concerned, the owner of this card is still you. That’s why I’m asking you instead.”

“You just need to tell Olivia that you got that card from Shiori, no?”

Akira’s light-hearted answer only worsened Chloe’s mood. If that was enough, she would not have to go through all of this. However, she somehow managed to hold herself back from screaming in Akira’s face. Though, in order to do that, her face turned even darker. She then took a deep breath and said with an awkward smile.

“…It’s not that simple for us, you see. That’s why we want approval from its former owner. You can just say that you’re lending it to me and that will be enough. Giving it to me or selling it to me will also be fine. Of course, I will give you something in return. I’ll buy it at any price you ask. We can also give you support for your Hunter job. We can even dispatch people to help you too. They'll be as strong as those high-ranking Hunters. So, go ahead. You can make any demand in exchange for this card."

The offer was too good to be true, so Akira could not help but to get suspicious instead.

"I refuse."

Chloe finally could not hold back her emotion.

"What!? Why!?"

"As I said before, that card is no longer mine. It's not right to lend or sell something that is not mine to begin with, that's all there is to it."

"I'm here, telling you that this card is yours!!"

"And I'm telling you. That matter has already been concluded with my deal with Reina! You got that card from Reina and that is the end of it!"

Akira noticed that he was getting angry for some reason. But since he did not know the reason why, he ended up letting his emotion come out through his voice. So, Alpha gently tried to calm him down.

"Akira, calm down."

"…Ah, right, sorry."

Akira took a deep breath to help him calm down. It was something that he often did in the past. So, it was able to immediately calm him down.

If Alpha told him to just accept the card, it would have solved the issue. However, she could not afford to do so. She felt that saying that would be touching a part of Akira that he was sensitive about. Considering that he was so close to cutting ties with Elena and Sara the moment they did something like that, Alpha believed it to be a bad idea. It would be akin to walking through a minefield.

In reality, Alpha was overthinking it. If she had just told him to accept the card and give it to Chloe, he would have simply obeyed. However, Alpha, who did not know what Akira discussed with Tsubaki inside Kuzuhara ruin, believed that he would not obediently follow her advice.

The only thing that Akira was waiting for before heading off to accomplish Alpha's request was the equipment that he had ordered through the help of Sakashita Heavy Industry. It would be a bad move to worsen their relationship before he accomplished her goal. Because of that, Alpha believed that she could only tell Akira to calm down.

Chloe was forced into a difficult position. If news about her failure with Olivia spread through the main house, she would lose her place. Although she was currently able to come up with an excuse for her faction, it was only a matter of time before it hit its limit. There was a need for her to do something to gain ownership of this card. Otherwise, she would eventually get kicked out of the inner wall.

Her plan was first to negotiate with Akira. To ask him to lend her the card and from there, manage a way to actually get the ownership of this card.

However, she could not get in contact with him. Even after trying to send an overwhelmingly enticing offer through the Hunter Office, she only got refusal replies that seemed to be from a template message. It was something unthinkable when it came to dealing with a Hunter. This unexpected turn of events that she would have never imagined, eventually forced her to bring some of her men and directly head out to meet him.

Even after she was able to directly meet him, it did not help her situation at all. Instead, it only worsened her already awful mood.

"What exactly do you not like about our offer…? We are from Lion Steel, you know? Our scale is different compared to those of small-sized companies!? We're big enough to have branches in each of the financial areas of the 5 biggest corporations. When we say that we wish to support a Hunter, that Hunter would normally want to call us back, you know!? So, what exactly is it that you don't like about it? That you would even ignore our offer, huh!?"

“I don’t care about those kinds of things. It’s also none of your business.”

From the common sense of Hunters, what Chloe said was absolutely correct. Since it was sent via the Hunter Office, it was unlikely to be a fraudulent offer. It was only natural for Hunters to happily accept it. That was why Chloe was utterly frustrated.

Her mood only got worse with time. Akira himself also started to get frustrated, so Alpha once again tried to calm him down.

“Akira, calm down. Getting too emotional will only worsen her reaction.”

“…yeah, I know.”

Akira took another deep breath to calm himself down. Considering that it would be foolish to keep that up until Carol returned, he decided to make a compromise.

“…I get it already; I’ll lend it to you.”

“Really!? Ah, no, I guess that’s only to be expected. Very well then, tell me what you want in exchange for it.”

“I don’t need your money nor your support, I don’t need anything. Just make sure to never bring this kind of thing to me again. You got it?”

“Okay, you can have my words.”

Although Chloe did not fully understand what Akira was talking about, she put that aside for now and sighed in relief as her expression relaxed. But that only lasted until Akira said his next statement.

“And also, I’ll run it through Reina just to be safe. Personally speaking, I consider the card as theirs. So at least let me do that much.”

“…Eh? Wait!?”

Akira already had his terminal dialling for Shiori. He was already telling her what happened in front of the flustered Chloe. After he heard Shiori’s answer, Akira frowned and sent a sharp gaze toward Chloe.

“Shiori said that you took the card from them while threatening their lives. Care to explain?”

At that moment, Akira’s eyes had changed. He was now looking at Chloe as a con artist, someone who was trying to trick him.

Chloe did not say anything back.

“What excuse do you have? If you can’t explain it to me, then just leave.”

Even so, Chloe did not say anything. Akira slowly readied his stance for a fight. Suddenly Chloe smiled and said.

“I’m sorry for taking the roundabout way.”

Chloe understood that it was already impossible to properly negotiate with Akira. She did not have the leeway to spend her time making another secret deal. If she tried something like that, the other factions would remove her and take that card away from her before trying to contact Akira again, just like she had done. With her options and time strictly limited, she did not hesitate in taking the only option that she had left. The one thing that she did once before and succeeded without trouble.

The more she was cornered, the stronger her reaction would be, and once it was decided, there would be no longer any need to hesitate. Chloe lightly signalled with her hand. With that, all of her men readied for a fight. After that, she then ordered Akira.

“Give me the card!”

Akira finally understood the reason why he was so strangely annoyed. Glances with a shred of mockery. That attitude, as if to say that it was normal for her to get everything she wanted. Finally, her last action. It was something that he had experienced countless times before when he was still living in the back alley of the slums.

After everything he had achieved up until now, Akira had pride that he was no longer the same as he was before. However, what Chloe did, caused his pride to crack and rage was leaking out of it. Akira obeyed his emotions and promptly replied.

“No!”

Akira was leaking out immense pressure. Just like what had happened with Kanae yesterday, Latis and Pamela readied for a fight.

But Chloe, who had lost all restraint, did not wince back at all. Instead, she smiled deeply and threatened Akira.

“Do you really think that it will only end with you? Didn’t I tell you that Lion Steel is a big company? Our reach is far and wide, you know?”

Akira was about to return to his past self, but he reminded himself of everything that he had achieved since then. While reminding himself that he was no longer the same as his past self, he somehow managed to speak to Chloe.

“…That sounds like you’re threatening me with the lives of the people I know. If that’s not the case, correct me before it’s too late.”

But even so, Chloe only smiled and replied.

“I’ll leave that interpretation to you.”

“…I see.”

Akira made an expression. One which he had not shown for a while. It was an expression that only his past self showed as he replied. With those words, everyone there with rifles in hand immediately started shooting, with the objective to kill their opponent.

And so, the battle had begun.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 260, Earnest People

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The light barrier was riddled with bullets before it broke into pieces. The light barrier was produced by solidified air, using forcefield armour. It appeared to be similar to a floating shield of light that dimly glowed. Chloe's men were using non-contact forcefield armour type to create that light barrier, which was also known as forcefield shield.

Compared to the standard forcefield armour, the energy usage of the forcefield shield was highly efficient, not to mention its effective uses as well. Not only could it protect something outside its immediate vicinity, it could also set up a forcefield which weakens enemy bullets. It was effective even against anti-forcefield bullets.

A multi-layered forcefield shield that was well coordinated from their training was able to successfully protect their master against a storm of charge bullets, released from close range.

As expected, not even a single bullet from Akira was able to reach Chloe.

That exchange, which was a blink of an eye for the common man, continued on. It was prolonged because of how skilled both parties were. The might of their equipment, and their resolve to fulfill their goals.

Although that place was already filled with flying bullets, none of them hesitated to shoot back. Endless sound of gunfire echoed through the area, filling it with bullets, covering it with thick murderous intent. Akira blazed and wafted around that place filled with death.

The broken light shield did not even take a second to disintegrate into flashes of light and dissipate into the air. However, Akira stretched his time perception to the limit. To him, it seemed as though those pieces had not disintegrated yet. His gaze and his LEO multi-rifle muzzles were focused on Chloe. With all his attention focused on killing him, Chloe's escorts had to entirely focus on defending her. They did not have the leeway to focus much on Akira.

While shooting, Akira jumped to the side with all his might to get away from the bullets that were heading towards him.

With his enhanced physical strength that approached that of a super-human, if Akira tried to execute a high-speed move like running, normally, the power of his first step would cause the ground under him to crack, making him lose his footing. However, he made use of his forcefield armour, placing it under his feet the moment it made contact with the ground. With the powerful balancer in his augmented suit, he could execute extremely high-speed manoeuvres. Fast enough for him to move at maximum velocity, against the full might of the air.

Even with his high-speed manoeuvre, from his perspective, he was running slowly. During that opening, he gathered all the data about his surroundings through his advanced information-gathering device. He completely skipped the data analysis portions and simply allowed the raw data to fly straight into his brain, which he recognized as extrasensory information. Thanks to that, he was able to locate all the countless bullets around him just by using his intuition. If the trajectories were painted in red, the area around him would have been filled with nothing but red.

Even so, Akira forced his way to areas with a lot fewer bullets and forced himself to slip through that barrage of bullets. He knew that the slightest mistake would spell his doom, but even so, he placed everything on his intuition. The intuition that he had been polishing as he correctly predicted the trajectories of each bullet around him.

Of course, he was unable to evade all the bullets. Against those bullets that he could not avoid, he predicted where he would get hit and focused the forcefield armour of his augmented suit at those points. Naturally, this means that he would be vulnerable at other locations. If he made a mistake in predicting where those bullets would hit him, it would cause him to stagger and the rest of the enemy bullets would finish him off.

However, even after all of this, the firepower of his enemy was more than enough to decimate him. The maids and the butlers that had surrounded Akira started shooting at him almost simultaneously. They had already accepted the fact that they would hit each other as they released a huge barrage of powerful bullets at him.

That barrage that was forming around Akira would come at him like a thick wall, which blocked him from escaping. However, Akira would force his way out using the LEO multi-rifle on his left hand. Meanwhile, he continued shooting at Chloe with his right LEO multi-rifle.

His left LEO multi-rifle had started shooting non-stop at other targets. His aim was not to kill but to throw his opponent off balance or damage their weapons, enough to disrupt their ability to aim. Akira’s shooting with his left LEO multi-rifle was unbelievably accurate. It was not an exaggeration to describe it as otherworldly. He was able to execute such high accuracy, rapid shooting thanks to his enhanced, high information resolution world.

The maids that got hit before pulling their trigger ended up completely missing their shots. The butler who noticed it realized that Akira was also shooting at them. So, he inadvertently took a step to the side to evade the incoming bullet. This caused him to lose his already fixed aim. Although the bullet went past their rifles without even touching them, the whiplash from the wind pressure was enough to slightly shift their aims away from their target. All of these compounded together, allowing Akira to create an opening for him to survive the wall of bullets that were coming at him.

Akira of course did not stop there. He continued to shoot even more bullets. Eventually, he tore down that wall of bullets as he slipped through that barrage.

Of course, some of the bullets also hit the buildings around them. Akira was using bullets that would easily kill off even powerful monsters. Meanwhile, Chloe's men were using bullets that were powerful enough to kill Akira. Firepower-wise, they might be even stronger than tanks. The violent barrage showered the buildings in the area, creating a huge hole in their walls, and eventually, they crumbled down. Some were blown to even smaller pieces.

Ten seconds passed since the fight started. Even after exchanging that many powerful bullets, Akira and Chloe were still alive.

The moment the battle started, Latis forcefully pulled Chloe back and carried her away from the battlefield as fast as he could. Of course, it placed Chloe's body, which was normal, under a heavy burden. However, thanks to the battle-oriented powerful augmented suit that looked like a casual expensive dress which Chloe had put on, and Latis carrying her to not cause as much burden on her as possible, Chloe somehow managed to be fine.

Moreover, the butlers and the maids in the area quickly set up a forcefield shield in a straight line between Akira and Chloe. They did this to block Akira's bullets. Chloe was relieved the moment she saw those thick layers of forcefield shield in between her and Akira. However, that changed the next moment she saw Akira easily break through most of them with just his opening barrage. Some of the bullets even came inches from her. However, in the end, she was still unharmed. She was able to escape the ruin safely once she arrived at her large, armoured vehicle parked in the middle of the wasteland.

The back door of that large vehicle opened from a remote signal. Once they escorted Chloe inside, Latis and Pamela looked at each other. They were trying to decide who would stay behind to guard Chloe, but Chloe suddenly interjected.

"Both of you, go!"

Both Latis and Pamela frowned and made troubled expressions, Latis then stepped up to convey their collective feeling regarding this.

“Milady, as expected, that would be too dangerous…”

“I’ve decided to kill him. It would be meaningless if you guys were stuck in between protecting me and killing him. I can’t have you fail to kill him. So, both of you should go.”

Toward that firm and decisive order that their master gave them, Latis and Pamela looked at each other and nodded. Pamela jumped out from the back door while Latis closed the back door after her.

Chloe then said to Latis, with a shred of rage in her tone and expression.

“Latis?”

Latis frowned and made a stern look so as to avoid getting overwhelmed by the pressure that Chloe was emitting.

“In case everyone that we left behind cannot kill him or if he escapes from this battle, there’s a good chance that he’ll come here. As such, I will stay behind in order to face him while Pamela and the others can attack him from his flank. If Milady can send a request for reinforcement and extra equipment, we will have a better chance to kill him.”

“…Alright.”

Seeing Chloe convinced, Latis made a prompt bow and then turned toward the driver.

“Go!”

The vehicle immediately accelerated toward the wasteland. There was no hesitation in their action. It was as if to say that this was the best option for them.

In that empty space, blood suddenly sprayed out. It was followed by multiple pieces of raw flesh dropping. A moment later, a maid that had lost half of her body appeared out of nowhere. Parts of her were barely held together by her skin and bone. She was a maid that was trying to approach Akira while using optical camouflage, but Akira noticed her and blew her to pieces.

Not too far from him, a butler suddenly appeared out of nowhere in the same fashion, but unlike the maid, that butler had lost the upper half of his body and just dropped limply after he appeared. His lost upper half was scattered in pieces around him, dyeing the area blood red. Akira's two LEO multi rifles were even stronger than the ones he used in the inter-city transport's escort mission. This was thanks to the new modifications that he added in. The two rifles did not have any trouble against those weaker than the powered armour suits that Akira fought during the inter-city transport escort mission. Thus, Akira easily blew his enemies to pieces, one by one.

The battle continued for another 5 seconds, Akira was under constant pressure and was slowly getting cornered.

Chloe's men were weaker than Erde's men. However, there were way more opponents that Akira had to fight at the same time. Furthermore, they had already surrounded him even before they started to fight. Overall, it was a tougher battle when compared to the battle during the inter-city transport escort mission.

They already moved to plan B which they had planned beforehand in case Akira survived the first assault. Not only were they shooting bullets at him, but they also started mixing in explosive warheads as well. However, these warheads were not to directly hit Akira.

The explosive warheads released jamming smoke when they blew up. Although the smoke itself was mostly transparent, it carried the same effect as thick colourless mist, thus cutting down the effectiveness of Akira's information-gathering device. Then to top it off, it also contained speed filter particles as well.

As expected, using speed filter particles in an open space greatly reduced its effectiveness. As such, it was unable to completely stop Akira's bullets.

And since it quickly dispersed, its effect did not even last longer than one second.

Even so, it was at least enough to shave a large chunk of the bullet's momentum. Since it was mostly focused around Akira, he was affected the most by it. Since the speed filter not only lowered the firepower of bullets, it also slowed him down. Akira, who understood what the enemy was trying to do, had no other choice but to go toward the area where the smoke was the lightest. It was in the opposite direction from where Chloe had run away to.

If Akira tried to chase Chloe, the speed filter would blunt his movement and everyone would be able to hit him. In the worst-case scenario, that decision might lead to his death. However, Akira knew that getting killed here would mean that he would not be able to kill Chloe. Thus, he was barely able to hold himself back from charging forward and retreated to the opposite direction of the person that he wanted to kill.

The effect of the speed filter faded almost immediately. However, the jamming smoke still had its effect on Akira's information-gathering device. Since the enemy had basically limited the area where Akira could run, as expected, they more or less already knew his location. They activated their camouflaging cloak and tried to encircle him.

The opponents that were approaching Akira from his left and right. They would normally be impossible to detect due to the combined effect of the jamming smoke and the camouflaging cloak. However, Akira was still able to detect them. This was thanks to the higher sensitivity of his information-gathering device and his extraordinary focus. His focus raised his acuteness to its utmost limit and combined with his active reality manipulation, he could somehow tell based on pure instinct where they were.

But it was not like Akira could accurately pinpoint their exact location. In the end, it was more like a vague guess. In order to compensate for the accuracy, Akira filled the vicinity of the area where he detected someone with the sheer bullets. Akira lightly shook the aim of the LEO multi rifle, which had the same rate of fire as a minigun, and filled the area with bullets. Even the slightest possibly meant facing a hailstorm of bullets.

Because of that, the maids and the butlers who had hidden themselves immediately died before they could even disengage their optical camouflage. The rest of the incoming bullets eventually destroyed their equipment and that was when their optical camouflage had finally disengaged. The continuing storm sent mixes of the destroyed equipment and human flesh into the air, painting the whole area with blood.

Even after Akira killed a couple dozen of them, it was not like he was safe. As a matter of fact, his position was getting worse with time. Chloe's men were working as her personal bodyguard. They prioritized evacuating her from the beginning of the battle. Now, they would finally be able to turn their attention toward killing Akira. Furthermore, these people were stronger and had better equipment than the other servants. As they finished evacuating Chloe, they started to rejoin the fight bit by bit.

The maids armed with gigantic guns shot guided missiles up into the sky before they curved downward toward Akira. They left a trail of smoke in the sky which looked like claws. The guided missiles used the information from the information-gathering devices carried those close to Akira, allowing them to accurately seek his location.

Akira ran as fast as he could while using the buildings and wreckage to hide from the missiles. Although most buildings in the area had been destroyed from their first exchange, they had not touched the ground yet. Inside his extremely compressed time perception, Akira saw the falling rubble as if they were floating.

Bullets showered those falling rubble and the explosions shredded them into smaller pieces, sending them in all directions. Akira slipped through the openings while shooting at his enemies. Likewise, his enemies were also trying to shoot at him through those small openings.

The bullets broke the rubble into smaller pieces and the grenades blew them away. During the opening, Akira, as well as the maids and butlers, moved as fast as possible to kill their respective enemies.

In high-speed combat where even free-falling was painfully slow, Akira was fighting against opponents that could react with more or less the same speed as him.

It had been 11 seconds since the start of the battle. Most of the buildings in the area had already been destroyed, obliterated into mere rubble. In such a chaotic intense battleground, Akira kept shooting with both of his LEO multi rifles as long as they allowed him to. Even now, he was still actively fighting.

Inside the Hunter Office, when Carol entered, she saw Babalod standing behind Viola and had a rough guess of what was going on. She then smiled bitterly and asked.

“Good grief, is this your plan right from the start?”

Viola had her usual amused smile as she replied.

“Of course not, I just decided to do so afterwards. I wouldn’t deny it if I was asked whether I was using you, but you’re the one who left the negotiation to me after that. I’m sure you at least expected this, right?”

“I didn’t expect it, but I do think that this is so like you to do this.”

Carol and Viola smiled at each other. It was the smiles of evil girls. Babalod who saw that, heaved a huge sigh.

In order to pay the rest of the debt, Babalod was forced to work as Viola’s bodyguard. He even had some of the control of his cyborg body relinquished. It could be said that he was treated awfully. But that also meant that he was paid more than usual.

Carol was a bit curious as to why Viola even needed a high-ranking Hunter like Babalod to protect her. Though, when she thought about it, Babalod was a good replacement for her. Thus, she did not let herself get anymore worried.

After that, Carol accepted a storage device containing the information that Viola promised. She then took a look at the data inside that special storage device, which was made to not connect to the network. It was to make sure that the secret information that Viola was handing to her would not leak.

After looking through the content, Carol raised her eyebrows in surprise.

“…Viola, is this for real?”

“Have I ever handed over fake information?”

“…You have a good point. And this is indeed something that you can’t afford to send through the network.”

Carol lightly covered her forehead. Viola, who was watching, cracked out her usual smile as she said.

“If you’re happy with the content, I want to proceed next to talk about the price.”

“Wait, I’ll let Akira know first.”

Carol opened up his information terminal and tried to contact Akira, but it only ended in failure.

“…Out of range? What’s going on? Viola, I’m sorry but…”

As Carol was going to ask Viola to try to contact Akira in her place, she immediately stopped when she saw what Viola was doing. Before she could even ask Viola, Viola had already guessed what Carol wanted and was already trying to contact Akira. However, she had the same bewildered look as Carol had as she was looking at her information terminal.

“My information terminal… Is also completely out of range? But that’s impossible…”

Viola’s terminal was a special information terminal that could connect through the old-world domain. Normally, it would be impossible for it to be ever out of range.

Suddenly, the whole facility shook violently. It was then immediately followed by a blaring alarm and a facility-wide broadcast.

“We’ve detected a large-scale battle outside and that some kind of signal jamming is in effect. As such, the facility will enter self-defence mode. For the Hunters who are willing to take on this defensive mission, please accept the SOS request through the facilities’ inner network.”

All the Hunters inside the facility started to get busy, in the middle of that, Carol glanced at her own information terminal.

“Wait… Don’t tell me…!?”

The information that Carol received from Viola was that the Lion Steel Eastern District third ward branch was preparing to negotiate with Akira and was even planning to go as far as to use violence. The reason why Viola could not hand it over through the network was because it included many other secret information regarding other corporations behind it.

Many people reached their foul ends because they refused to buy information from Viola, Akira was one example of that.

However, Viola was also obviously caught by surprise. This meant that even she did not expect this to happen.

Human personality was something that could be manipulated to some extent. By changing the way how an idea was presented, it was possible to make one’s train of thoughts, principles, and way of life lean toward a particular direction. Alice, who had rebuilt the new Lion Steel company in the current era, used this approach. She had to prepare humans who were used in place of automata.

The sense of debt for saving them from a harsh lifestyle. They were then provided for in an educational institution. Shelter, food, and clothes were of a different level compared to where they originally came from. While quenching them with necessities, they were fed with information. The feeling of loyalty toward the main company was nurtured through indoctrination, educational environment, peer pressure, and repeated training. They were then evaluated based on their loyalty.

People who had gone through such education were extremely loyal to the new Lion Steel company. They were born as humans, educated to be tools for the company, and were used like expendable items. Even so, they saw it as something to be proud of.

Currently, these human tools were in the middle of a fight against Akira. As they were educated, they met their ends as expendable items.

Akira jumped upward to get away from their line of fire. If he was only simply jumping up, he would not be able to move freely in the air until he returned back to the ground. Normally, this would be a fatal move that would make them a free target. However, for Akira, this was nothing.

He created footings under his feet with his augmented suit and moved around rapidly. Up and down, left and right. It was as if the words top and bottom did not mean anything to him.

Even so, Chloe's men were still able to follow his rapid movement. They used the same technique as Akira to move freely in the air and continued their assault on him from all directions. The maids behind and in front of him, as well as the butlers on his left and right, engaged their forcefield shield. They were trying to trap him.

Akira kept shooting two LEO multi-rifles while spinning around. His extended magazine allowed him to release a close-range highly intense barrage. That attack hit the forcefield shields around him, causing flashes of light to break out.

The forcefield shield had chucks being broken off but that was not enough to destroy them. They were connected to the energy pack of the maids and butlers' augmented suit, pushed to their utmost limit.

In exchange, the augmented suit did not serve as anything more than a piece of fabric. One shot was enough to completely decimate their users. In the middle of that, the maids and the butlers were not only facing Akira's bullets from the front; they were also facing bullets from their allies behind them. There were also missiles that were falling on top of their heads. In order to hit Akira, who was moving at high speed, their teammates could not afford to be precise with their shots.

Even so, they did not hesitate to reroute all the energy output to their forcefield shields. They were willing to give up everything in order to trap Akira and stop him in his tracks. They moved exactly as they were educated, which was to prioritize the objective of the whole team even when it meant sacrificing their lives.

If he had to run away, the only escape route available for Akira was up. He kept avoiding his opponents' line of fire by making high-speed manoeuvres haphazardly. Since he moved around by creating footing under his feet, it was rather difficult for him to execute a high speed downward move. Even if he did, he would have to sacrifice some of his speed. If he slowed down, he would become an easy target for them. If he jumped up, it would be as his opponents had predicted. He would be trapped in between the forcefield shields if he continued to stay here. So, he only could go up as his only means of escape. There was a good chance that they were already lying in wait to ambush him though.

The ideal option was to defeat one of the four people surrounding him. After that, he could quickly take more of them out. However, they were closing in on him. They were resolved of their death and would do anything to trap him, so, it was impossible for Akira's 2 LEO multi rifles to eliminate them in time.

At this rate, it would be the end of him. Akira knew that and quickly released his grips on his 2 LEO multi rifles. In a high-speed battle, letting go of his rifles like that was nothing more than a suicidal move. The enemies who saw that could not comprehend what he was trying to do.

But right at the next moment, Akira quickly swung his blade with the full might of his arms.

Akira used his forcefield armour to create a temporary powerful footing under him. It was so strong that the platform became visible. Akira then used it as a pivot to make a full spin. Using the full might of his augmented suit, he swung the blade in his hands.

The blade released its maximum power for its anti-forcefield armour. But even so, it was still not enough to completely shatter the forcefield shields. If they were that fragile, his LEO rifles would have been enough to destroy them.

However, Akira compensated for the lack of power with the physical strength enhancement of his augmented suit. Instead of cutting, he swung the blade toward the four forcefield shields with everything he could muster.

The light shields were shattered to pieces. The people behind them were blown to smithereens. But that still did not mean Akira was safe. Just like the now decimated maids and the butlers that had the resolve to throw away their lives, the others also had the same resolve. After executing such an extreme move, Akira turned slightly sluggish for a moment. Naturally, his enemies took that opportunity to start simultaneously shooting at him, without caring even if they hit their allies.

Akira understood that he could not evade them on his own. So, he turned his attention to something else that might help him. The 2 LEO rifles that he had let go, released shots at the same time his enemies started shooting. Akira had turned off their recoil compensator as they released a non-stop barrage. The kickback threw rifles back and were sent flying toward him.

Akira did not try to evade them and just took the hit. The rifles threw his body away from where his enemies were targeting. Immediately after, countless bullets zoomed past where Akira was a moment ago.

Akira could not predict where he was sent flying after his rifles hit him. Likewise, his enemies also had trouble predicting where he would land.

Using that opening, Akira quickly switched to his remaining rifles and fixed his stance before continuing the high-speed battle just like before. Although the number of opponents had no doubt decreased, their killing intent had not. These people, who were willing to sacrifice everything to take him down, did not slow down at all as they kept pursuing Akira for his life.

—

Pamela was filled with shock when she arrived. In front of her, Akira was kneeling on the ground, while the rest were lying dead around him.

Akira tried to push himself up with the help of his blade. But the blade could not stand the stress and broke to pieces. Although he stumbled over, he did not fall. He then placed the blade, which was now nothing but a handle, back into his pocket and stood up straight. In the middle of all that, he had his sight fixed on Pamela.

Akira's augmented suit did not have much energy left. The medicines that he had stock inside his augmented suit had already run out. The high-speed combat had put his body under immense stress. Under normal circumstances, it would have crushed his bones and flesh into a liquid mess. He was only able to maintain his body thanks to the expensive medicines that he had been using.

The time compression and the reality manipulation left his head banging with severe pain. It was screaming at him, that he was at his limit. It would not be strange for him to faint anytime, but the dark emotion welling inside him prevented him from fainting. And that dark emotion was expressed extremely well in his tone.

"…Where is she?"

Pamela tried to hide her vigilance toward Akira as she exasperatedly looked at him, and completely ignored his question.

"I did not expect you to be still alive. To think that you've pretty much killed everyone… It was the right decision to evacuate Milady first. Though, I didn't expect it to end up like this and confirm it with my own eyes. After all that, it seems that you're close to your limit already. So, what are you planning to do next? If you change your mind here and let us have the card, I don't mind withdrawing now, you know?"

Akira also completely ignored what Pamela said.

“You still refuse, huh… You’re really stubborn.”

After that, a short silence waded in. Akira was only standing there in silence in order to have as much time to recover as possible. He had no idea why his opponent had not started the fight yet. However, if he could buy more time, he was happy to oblige.

Pamela also only stood there in silence. She was buying more time for Chloe to get away as far as possible from them. With the rest of Chloe’s men in the area essentially dead, it confirmed that Akira was way stronger than she had predicted. It hadn’t been long since Chloe evacuated. Akira might defeat her too and chase after Chloe. Thus, Pamela wanted to buy time so that Chloe could get away as far as possible from this place. So, for now, she was allowing Akira to recover.

It was Pamela who was the one to decide when she had enough.

“It seems that you will not change your mind no matter what. In that case, I will need you dead. Milady has ordered us to kill you, so we will accomplish that without fail. It would be bad to keep Milady waiting for the after-report, after all.”

Akira, who wanted to have a bit more time to recover, finally opened his mouth.

“Didn’t you say that you’ll leave if I give you the card? Was it a lie because of your master’s order?”

“No, that was out of my own volition. And, I did not lie, you know? If you say that you are willing to give it to us, we will leave. It is indeed regrettable that everyone failed in their mission. Though, that only means they are allowing me to inherit this opportunity to make up for their failure.”

“What do you mean?”

“This is what I mean.”

Pamela smiled and said.

“Wake up.”

With that order, Chloe’s men started to rise. No matter whether they were still alive or not, all of them rose up. Even those who lost their arms or even their head. So long as they had their legs, they stood up. Seeing that, even Akira could not hide his surprise.

“Everyone here is so earnest, aren’t they? I’m really proud of them.”

Chloe’s men were equipped so that they could fight to their very last. Whether it was through a remotely controllable powered suit or control device. They were made such that someone else could control their body even when they lost consciousness.

These people had given the control rights of their bodies to their superiors. Of course, it was for the best if they could control their own body, but in case they could no longer do so, their superiors would be able to control them. Be it too fatigued to move till outright death, their bodies would still be utilized.

Since Pamela was the superior of the maids, she normally would only be able to control the maids, but since Latis lent his rights to her, she could currently control the butlers as well. Therefore, there were quite a lot of bodies she was controlling.

Akira had no wish to kill any of them when they fought. In the first place, Akira’s main objective was to render them unable to fight. Killing them was his second priority. After all, he did not have the leeway to go around and finished off those who were already gravely injured. Nor did he have the chance to destroy all of their limbs to make sure that they would not be able to move.

“To be honest, I might not be able to win against you if I fight you alone. I don’t believe I am strong enough to take you on. But this is fine, everyone is here to help me."

Although she had the privilege to freely control others' bodies, it was normally a difficult feat to pull off. Such skill needed comprehensive training, after all.

But Pamela was able to control multiple bodies. It was exactly because of this that she was assigned as Chloe's right hand.

"Well then, you can die now."

The headless bodies readied their rifles. But they suddenly stopped. That was because their controller, Pamela, was confused by Akira's reaction.

Akira was smiling mockingly.

Akira had no idea why the corpses started moving again, but that did not matter to him.

"…Even that guy had his head blown off and returned back alive. When I judged him to no longer pose a threat to me, he survived. I see, so you would go that far to kill me, huh? To move again even after I killed you. I see, fine, fine then. I get it. I guess dying is no longer enough, huh?"

Akira's smile vanished. What was left, was only the dark emotion that filled his face.

"I'll tear you to pieces."

With that sentence, Akira started to make his move. Pamela also immediately responded accordingly.

Akira's dark emotion fuelled his already exhausted body, to the point he was able to fight just like before. He did not even notice that Alpha was nowhere to be found ever since the fight had started.

Silavin: My god!! This chapter is so long and it is a battle chapter…

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 261, Not Bad Luck

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Result-wise, Pamela made the wrong decision.

Her opponent was basically already a walking dead. She did not have to rush and could just take her time to kill him. That was what she thought when she was looking at Akira, who was tenaciously surviving the battle. Many of her risen allies were gravely injured. If it was only a matter of time before she could kill him, it was best to minimize the damage. With that in mind, in order to recover the gravely wounded, she ordered them to stand further back while the ones in the front were those who were already dead.

This was when she found something strange about Akira.

Akira did not seem to be discouraged at all. Normally, in this kind of situation, a person would get extremely reckless. Since they had no hope left, they would try to take as many people down as possible. It would be a suicidal rush, which was not what Akira was currently doing.

[He must be waiting for something.] She thought that it was because he was trying to buy time, but that did not seem to be the case at all. Akira did not seem to be waiting for reinforcement. As a matter of fact, he was fighting like a mad man, taking any opportunity of victory, trying to overcome this battle with only his own strength. That was what Pamela judged watching Akira, who was close to the precipice of death, fight.

Seeing that he was still alive when she had arrived, showed that Akira was far stronger than she had thought. The cautiousness that came up from that caused her to believe that he had another trump card in hand. A trump card that could turn the tide the moment she was close to victory. This possibility caused her to approach the issue even more cautiously.

In the end, Pamela decided to take a slow and careful approach to finish him off. With enough time, Pamela would have a sure-fire way to eliminate him.

The dead corpses continued their assault. Those who had lost multiple parts of their bodies, even their heads, aimed their rifles at him and started shooting. Meanwhile, some tried to cut Akira down with their blades. As expected, they were way weaker than when they were still alive. Nonetheless, with their numbers, they were still at least able to put Akira under pressure.

Although they were moving as if they did not care if they died or not while they were still alive, in the end, it was a decision that they made to prioritize their objective. Of course, if they could win without killing anyone, then they would do that. Back then, there were still some hesitations on the effectiveness of their move compared to the risk they took on. Even if they were ready to put down their lives, they still wanted it to be utilized to its utmost, which created a gap.

However, with Pamela in control, they had completely thrown away that reservation and the difference from that was big. Thanks to that, they were able to compensate for the difference in their diminished fighting strength.

Akira was doing all he could to face that assault. He swung his LEO multi-rifle to sweep across his surroundings. He kept evading the bullets while destroying his opponents. But there was no question that he was getting increasingly cornered.

Akira did not show any sign of slowing down. Even the thought of giving up had completely vanished from his mind. If his fighting power could be solely determined by his willpower, he would not have that hard a time fighting against them in the first place.

In the middle of the chaotic battle, Pamela was waiting for an opening to shoot Akira. If he avoided her shot, he would not be able to evade the others' bullets.

Suddenly, Akira's augmented suit made contact with the enemy's blade, releasing a flash of light. This marked his energy cell getting critically damaged.

Due to its low energy reserves, his augmented suit moves started to become duller. As he had to avoid the opponent's blade that was coming at him like a suicidal rampage in his dulled augmented suit, Akira had to jump away. At that moment, just as Pamela had predicted, she sniped at him, and the bullet struck him.

Akira was blown away by the bullet. He flew horizontally like a rag-doll and bounced a few times on the ground before landing hard on a collection of rubble.

But even so, he was still alive. The moment he understood that he could not avoid the bullet, he used all the remaining energy to receive that shot. Although he did not lose his life, he lost all his ability to fight. His augmented suit went inactive, due to the damage on his body, it would not even listen to his command to move.

Pamela finally let out a sigh of relief. She then aimed her rifle at Akira's head and declared.

"Finally. Don't worry, I won't even tell you to stand up first. I will also at least let Milady know how hard you fought."

The others also aimed their rifles at him. Just one shot would be enough to finish him off. If they started firing, there would not even be a trace of him left.

“Now then, good night.”

The moment Pamela was about to pull the trigger, her vision was suddenly filled with white light.

The source of that white light was the AF anti-material cannon on Akira’s bike. Since it was shot from far away and its spread was maximized, it completely filled the area in blinding light.

It enveloped both Akira and the rest of his opponents. But Pamela and her allies quickly activated their forcefield shields to defend themselves. Thanks to that, they were spared.

As for Akira, the light was blocked by the rubble and wreckage between the cannon and him. Naturally, this was not out of luck, it was a carefully calculated shoot made so that it would not injure him.

The bike kept shooting its AF anti-material rifle toward Akira while heading straight at him. The moment Pamela noticed that it was nothing but Akira trying to buy time for himself, the bike had already reached its target.

Right at that moment, Akira used all the might he could muster to get onto the bike. At the same time, the bike quickly accelerated and left the area.

Of course, they quickly started shooting at Akira, trying to hit him. With their augmented suits, if they focused on racing after Akira, they would be able to catch up to him.

However, the bike was already set to use its full power to fly off with maximum acceleration. Moreover, the LEO multi-rifles on its arms, as well as its AF anti-material cannon were used to hold them back.

The area was filled with lasers and bullets. The rubble evaporated and exploded, filling the area with pieces of debris. The destruction to the area was severe. As expected of the annihilation ray that worked even against the powered suits that attacked the inter-city transport.

However, Pamela and the others were fine. Those who were already dead, quickly stepped forward to create layers of forcefield shield, sparing Pamela and those who were still partially alive.

Even so, Pamela was knitting her eyebrows. The bike had left at max speed through the clear sky. It was already way outside her reach.

“…What a blunder! He got away!”

Pamela was somehow able to hold back her frustration by reminding herself of her duty to her master. She then immediately called Latis to let Chloe know the result.

Due to Pamela being too careful, she had failed to kill him. If she had thrown away caution and prioritized killing Akira, she would have been able to accomplish it.

Even in that hopeless situation, Akira was tenaciously scouring for an opportunity to win, even now. That abnormal tenacity caused Pamela to be careful, which in turn caused her to make such a major blunder.

Determination and willpower alone could not win a fight, but those things allowed him to turn the tide from a hopeless situation.

＿＿＿*＿

Akira was clinging to his bike as it flew through the sky. In his still hazy mind, he could hear Alpha’s voice from his bike.

“Akira! Hold on tight! I don’t have the leeway to pick you up if you fall!!”

“…Alpha? I know, but… wait, where are you…?”

“We need to get away from here as soon as possible first! Make sure to hold on!!”

It was as if Alpha could not hear him at all and Akira found that strange.

[My telepathy can’t reach her? No, this is…]

Now that he had already gotten away from the battle, and could hear Alpha again, Akira regained some of his cool. He finally noticed that his connection to Alpha had been cut off.

“Right… But my augmented suit has already run out of energy…”

“As long as you’re on the bike, it’ll charge your augmented suit through a wireless connection. We modified it so that it can do that, remember? Your augmented suit current can only utilize minimum power, and since I’m not connected to you right now, I can’t control your augmented suit! So, make sure not to faint!”

“…Roger that…”

Inside his hazed mind, close to fainting, Akira somehow managed to stay awake and kept clinging onto the bike. The augmented suit had already charged enough to function in casual mode. So, he was able to move his body, though he hardly had the strength to move his body on his own.

The bike kept going on just like that and left the ruin. Eventually, Alpha returned back to Akira’s vision.

“Alright. We’ve connected again. Just leave the rest to me.”

“…Alright.”

Akira said so in relief and finally lost consciousness.

After that, his body still continued to move.

He pulled out a huge amount of medicine and took them to accelerate the healing of his dying body. Thanks to that, the healing was pretty fast. The healing nanomachines coursed through his body and were fixing his body on the cellular level. His body, which could no longer move without his augmented suit just a moment ago, got fixed. At least, enough for him to make some light movements after a few seconds.

Once he managed to recover at a certain point, he pulled out an energy pack from his bike and reloaded it into his augmented suit. He did the same for his rifles' magazines as well.

Alpha was able to have full control of Akira's body, but it was limited to only emergency cases. Naturally, being on the verge of death was one such case.

Akira finally woke up and found himself inside one of the dilapidated buildings inside an old-world ruin. His body had already quickly recovered. He jumped up and scanned the area by pure reflex. Eventually, his eyes discovered Alpha, who was furiously looking at him.

"Akira, good morning!"

"…Uh, A-Alpha, morning!"

Akira winced back from her expression and tried to remember what happened before he lost consciousness. Once he realized that he had survived with his life intact, Akira let out a sigh of relief. And once again, he found himself under Alpha's sharp gaze.

"It seems that your body is alright now. So then, first of all, let's share information."

"A-alright."

Although he basically lost consciousness, it still gave him a chance to rest, enough for his mind to recover. Moreover, he also had completely calmed down. Which meant that he was receiving the full brunt of the pressure from Alpha.

Alpha started her explanation first.

Alpha lost contact with Akira when Chloe suddenly laughed during their negotiation. Of course, she tried to restore the connection right away. But she failed. Due to the same kind of jamming effect, she was completely shut off from the old-world domain.

So, Alpha immediately tried all kinds of things that she could think of to reconnect with Akira. She was eventually able to connect to Akira's bike, not through the old-world domain. However, by the time she did that, she found Akira inching toward death.

The bike also received some damage from stray bullets. However, thanks to its automatic forcefield armour, it was still intact. Just like how the bike could reroute its energy tank to the augmented suit, it was rerouted to strengthen its forcefield armour.

As a matter of fact, due to the modification, she had installed to fight against hacking, the security on the bike was abnormally strong. Thus, taking control through the normal connection took a lot of time. After that, due to the bad connection, although she could not control the bike well, she managed to reach Akira and rescue him.

After Akira listened to her explanation, Akira nodded and then said.

“I see, thanks for the help. But why did our connection get cut off?”

“I have no idea, though, I can make a number of guesses.”

Since Akira wanted to hear them despite being only guesses, Alpha once again reminded him that it was nothing but guesses.

First guess: it was because of Chloe. To keep the content of their negotiation secret, it was completely understandable for them to use extra potent, thick jamming smoke. After all, if negotiations broke down and it turned into a fight, as long as no one knew the details of what had happened, she could come up with all kinds of excuses.

Deadman tells no tale. If they could kill Akira and erase the information, both records of the negotiation and the issue with the ownership of the card would all be erased. The ones who survived could claim without dispute that Akira was the one who attacked them first. They had no other choice but to fight back. It was not a strange ending for those who picked a fight against a large company. That would explain why they would use jamming smoke to cover the area.

“I see. But I thought that jamming smoke does not work on old-world domain connection?”

“Those had their effect weakened. With the correct device, you could even block old-world connection. High-ranking Hunters tend to have communication devices that use the old-world domain connections. That is why they usually use jamming smoke that can even block off old-world connections, just to be safe. Well, it could also be that they are in a position where they can afford to use them. It could also be that they’re using that kind of equipment all the time to fight the monsters further to the east since those monsters are also using the old-world domain connection.”

Even after he got away from the area in the middle of the battle, it still was jammed. For that, Alpha also had a guess. The scale of the battle caused the ruin to get alerted. It identified the area the battle had taken place and jammed any form of connection to prevent any more hostile actions.

“Why did that not happen in the battle against those huge, powered suits? Why did it happen this time? Is it because we cause more destruction? Or is there another reason? Everything is still not clear…”

Although Alpha shared her thoughts, it was not like Akira was completely satisfied with them. However, at least, he understood that it was not like Alpha knew everything. So, he decided to keep that question to himself for another time.

“Well… even if we know the real reason, it is not like we can do anything about it, right? Let’s just put it up as bad luck.”

“We might have another option.”

“Eh?”

Akira tilted his head in confusion, Alpha once again looked at him with a sharp gaze.

“That was not fine for me at all. Anyways, I’ve finished telling you my situation, can you tell me yours? After we lost connection, what happened to you?”

“Well, actually…”

In reality, Akira basically blew his fuse and kicked negotiations off the table. As expected, he could not just say so to Alpha. As he was thinking about how to explain, Alpha suddenly interjected.

“Let me tell you this beforehand, I can cross-check what you say with the data from your information terminal, so don’t even try to lie.”

“Then, I don’t even need to explain anything, no…?”

“Nope, I can only gather information about what you did, not why you did it. So, explain everything to me.”

Seeing Alpha look at him with such intense eyes, Akira ended up confessing everything, including his feelings during that time.

After Akira finished his explanation, Alpha heaved a huge sigh.

“Akira, do you know what your biggest mistake was?”

Akira understood that he could safely avoid the battle if he just gave up his pride and just gave her the card. But pride was something that one would fight for even to death.

Even so, he understood that it was his fault for completely tossing aside Alpha’s request right when he was so close to finally being able to work on her request.

The conflict between the pride and the guilt inside his mind caused Akira to silence himself. Seeing that, Alpha heaved another huge sigh.

“It seems like you don’t understand, so let me tell you.”

Akira frowned, he did not want to hear it. He did not want to be told that it was a mistake to stick to his pride. His expression started to be coloured by dark emotion that was sealed long ago, deep inside him. The bigger the gap between his past self and his current self, the darker, deeper, and vaster that emotion was. It was slowly devouring him.

Alpha then continued with a serious face.

“Your first move should have been to try to recover your connection to me. To think that you got that emotional. You did not even notice that you lost your connection. As expected, that’s your biggest mistake. No matter how angry you are, you need to keep a part of you calm, no matter what.”

Akira, who thought that he would get scolded for ‘flipping the table’, was taken aback by what he had heard. In response, Alpha made a rather exaggerated frustrated gesture.

“Back in Kuzusuhara ruin, you quickly decided to desperately find a way to recover our connection, right? I thought that you would do that as well this time, but to think that you didn’t even notice we lost connection and you continued fighting alone. I know that you were completely enraged, but that’s just a big no-no. You should get a better grip on yourself, you know? Let me at least ask you this. It’s not that you did not notice but you just ignored it, right? Or don’t tell me. You thought you could handle it just fine without my support?”

Akira flusteredly shook his head.

“Eh? No no no, of course not!”

Seeing Akira respond in such a manner, Alpha’s mood slightly recovered.

“That’s good to hear. That’s why, your first move should have been to try to recover your connection. You got it?”

“O-Okay.”

Akira gave a firm nod. Seeing that, Alpha smiled, satisfied. She gently advised him, who still seemed rather troubled.

“If you want to kill that Chloe girl, I don’t really mind. I’m willing to give you my support as well. Just make sure not to try and do it on your own, okay? If you want to do it on your own, make sure to do it only when there's no other option, just like those battles back in Kuzusuhara ruin, okay?"

"Y-yeah."

"Good answer."

Alpha once again smiled with satisfaction. Akira, who still seemed confused, paused for a bit. It was as if he was trying to digest what they were talking about just now, after that, he carefully asked Alpha a question.

"…Alpha, uh, are you really okay with it?"

When he was about to save Elena and Sara in Kuzusuhara ruin, or when he was about to get off the truck alone and go alone on a bike, and when he was about to jump into Ezont Family's base to kill Alna, Alpha stopped him.

That was why he thought that Alpha would stop him this time as well. Causing unnecessary trouble would only make things more difficult for him. Furthermore, he was extremely close to being able to work on Alpha's request. He expected Alpha to give him a strict scolding this time, but her reply was completely outside the realm of his expectations.

Akira was still confused so Alpha smiled bitterly and then said to him.

"If you ask me whether it was okay or not, I will say that it was not okay. Not one bit. However, I know you won't listen to me at all. I've been with you long enough to at least know that much. That's why, it's fine. Moreover, my support is just an upfront payment. Considering how that weak Akira had worked so hard and became this strong, I guess it's fine to make a compromise as a reward."

Akira seemed surprised by how lightly Alpha was taking it. He replaced it with a light smile, which helped to make him calmer.

"…I see, well, I'm sorry but I'll be counting on your support."

“Just leave it to me. I will show you just how great it is to have my support.”

Alpha replied with her usual confidence filled voice.

Akira, who had finished his break, returned to Mihazono ruin to retrieve the rifles that he had let go during the battle. The jamming had already dissipated, so with the help of Alpha, he was quickly able to find his rifles.

Akira brought 4 LEO multi-rifles together with him before the battle. He lost two in order to avoid getting shot. There were another two, still perfectly fine, which were on the arm of his bike, which was used while he escaped. After picking up all four, only one was still okay.

Two of his rifles were completely wrecked, with no possibility to fix them. Since they were protected by forcefield armour, once it was gone, those rifles were easy to break. Pamela did very well to make sure that they were not salvageable.

Seeing the destroyed rifles on the ground, Akira let out a huge sigh.

“They were so expensive…”

“If you had prioritized recovering your connection to me, this would not have happened, you know? It did cost you quite a lot, didn’t it?”

“I know, I know.”

Alpha was stating that in a teasing manner, and Akira smiled bitterly in response. His mood had at least recovered enough to respond in such a manner.

“So then, what do you plan to do next? Even if you’re planning to look for her, I recommend you search for a hint about her location first. If she ran further to the east, I hope we won’t be chasing after her. The monsters there are too strong even for your current equipment, you know?”

“I know that, but…”

As expected, Akira also did not like the idea of going around attacking Lion Steel's facilities one by one. Moreover, it would be a huge waste of time if he did not make sure that there was a good chance Chloe was there.

As Akira was giving a long hum while looking at his options on how to find Chloe, his face suddenly perked up as if he came up with something.

"Alright, I guess I'll ask her first."

Akira hopped onto his bike and paced it toward the person that he had in mind. The information-gathering device that was continuously scanning his surroundings showed 2 blips that came out from the nearby Hunter Office, they were Carol and Viola.

__*__*__*__

Carol, Viola, and Babalod looked around and were surprised by what they saw. The Hunter Office was completely fine since it was protected by forcefield armour, but most of the buildings around it were decimated.

After the battle outside had calmed down, the Hunters inside the Hunter Office came out to search the area as a part of their emergency request. They were to make sure that the area was safe. Thanks to that, they could confirm that the battle had ended. However, they could not confirm if the reason for that battle was completely over. The reason why Carol and Viola came out rather late was because they did not take the emergency request and waited for the broadcast to announce that it was safe.

Carol looked around with a worried look. Akira, who should have been waiting for her outside, was unreachable. Either he got involved in that battle or Akira was the reason for that battle. A lot of things were going through her mind. Whether he was still alive, or already dead and much more…

"Viola, I want to ask for your help. Can you look for Akira?"

"Sure… Though, it seems that he's at least alive and kicking."

Carol looked at Viola in confusion, how exactly did Viola know without investigating first? However, when Carol looked in the direction where Viola was looking, she immediately knew the reason why. Akira was on his bike, heading toward them.

Akira then parked his bike next to them and hopped off.

“Akira, you’re alright.”

“Yeah, somehow.”

Seeing Carol smiling happily knowing that he was fine, Akira looked worriedly as he apologized.

“Carol, I’m sorry, but I need to quit the job you gave me. A few things happened and I’m rather busy right now.”

“A few? What’s going on?”

“Sorry, can we put it aside for later? I also don’t know exactly know what’s going on.”

Akira only said so and shifted his attention to Viola. He then frowned as he was thinking about how to ask his question. When he had decided, he once again looked at her. This time, with a deadpan expression, he pointed his muzzle at her.

“I’ll be straight, is this your doing?”

Viola was going to answer that question with her usual smile.

“Even if you ask, that’s just so out of the blue, what exactly are you…”

Akira’s muzzle was directed right on top of her temple to shut her up.

“Let me tell you this, right now, I’m not in the best of moods. So, give me an answer, straight, honest, clear and concise. I’ll ask you again. Is this your doing?”

If she did not give a straight answer, she would be dead. If she said yes, she would be dead. If she did not say anything, she would be dead. There was no hesitation, and no doubt this time. Viola at least already knew that much. To hide her anxiety, something that she could not hold back, she made a stern look and turned to Babalod.

Akira followed that and looked at Babalod too. As both Viola and Akira were looking at him, Babalod did not say anything and just shook his head.

Akira returned his gaze to Viola. It was a gaze warning her that she had run out of time. Viola used every cell in her brain to analyze all the information that she had and conveyed her conclusion in one word.

“No.”

Akira still did not lower his rifle and asked Alpha.

“Alpha.”

“Leaving aside whether it is really the truth or not, she is not lying.”

“Wait! So, you can tell the truth while also lying?”

“The definition would be different from one person to another depending on their principles and moral codes. That’s why there are no absolutely correct answers. I’m sure she believes that, at least, she had enough reason to convince herself that it was not her fault. Judging from that point of view, she was not lying. Even if we don’t come to the same conclusion from our point of view.”

“Ahh, I see.”

Akira hesitated, but he eventually decided to lower his rifle. Viola let out a huge sigh of relief.

“If it’s not your doing, I have something I want to ask you. I’m looking for Chloe right now. If I’m not mistaken, she’s affiliated with the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch. You’re a good info broker, right? Look for her.”

Viola tried to return back to her usual attitude. Even if it was only on her lips, she twisted out a smile.

“Oh, a request for a job then? I don’t mind looking for her, but if it’s for some kind of negotiation, you can let me take care of that part as well, you know? So, what do you plan to do after finding her?”

“I’m going to kill her.”

That short sentence was filled with determination. The others there winced back. Even Viola, who had often faced suffocating pressure of killing intent during negotiations, and even Babalod, who was a high-ranking Hunter, both inadvertently winced back in the face of Akira’s strong emotion that they knew was not directed at them.

“So then, can you find her?”

Viola automatically tried to act normal and replied.

“I already know about her. She’s from the same house as the founder of the Lion Steel company. Were you aware of this when you said you’re going to kill her?”

“So, does that mean that you’re not going to help?”

Akira’s gaze toward Viola changed ever so slightly. It was as if he was only trying to discern if she was an enemy or not. Viola, who noticed it, immediately gave her answer.

“What I am saying is that it won’t be cheap. I am an information broker. So, it’s not like I can just give away information for free, it will be pretty expensive. It’s not cheap trying to collect information. Especially when it comes to important people like her. That is why, it’ll cost at least a few dozen billion Aurum, depending on the case, it might even be more expensive. I don’t mean to offend you, but can you pay for it?”

After Viola told him that it was only a matter of money, Akira’s gaze returned back to neutral. He then titled his head and said.

“T-that’s pretty expensive… But well, that does make sense to be that expensive, I guess.”

Considering that it was a piece of information to help him kill someone, a person who had personal maids and butlers protecting her, it would not be strange for it to be that expensive. But Akira did not have the funds. So he started to hum, pondering what else he could do instead.

On the other hand, Viola sighed in relief. She did not expect Akira would react that strongly. It was true that depending on the way he interpreted it, it might sound as if she was telling him that it might be better not to try to kill Chloe.

That was why she flusteredly tried to emphasize that she was talking about the price. If it was a matter of money, she thought that Akira would not show any hostility, and thankfully, her guess was correct.

But unfortunately, it was unclear whether it completely saved her or not. Akira’s face then lit up as if he just thought of an idea.

“In that case, let’s do this. If you give me information about Chloe, depending on how valuable it is, I will consider letting you live as beneficial. Unfortunately, I can’t really say how much that would be if converted into money, so you can just give me enough information that you think is worth the same amount of money as that. So, what do you think?”

Unlike Akira, who was obviously showing the sign of willingness to negotiate, Viola knitted her eyebrows in deep worry.

During the battle in the slums of Kugamayama city, Viola had caused Akira trouble and was once killed by him. After that, based on her deal with Akira, she ended up having to help Sheryl’s gang.

That deal caused Sheryl’s gang to greatly develop with her help. Moreover, Viola had also solidified her position inside the gang. Basically, the gang would be in trouble without her around. Since then, time passed and it had become vague if she had fulfilled her part of the bargain or not.

But Akira casually brought that up. Even after helping Sheryl's gang that much, it did not seem to be enough from Akira's point of view. Viola was able to confirm it, though to her, this was not good news.

"…What if I say no to that? Are you going to kill me?"

"Not really. I just thought that I might be able to use it in place of money. If you don't accept it, you can just say no. I won't force you."

"I-I see."

Seeing Akira reply so calmly, Viola sighed. Half in relief that the negotiation proceeded as she had planned. So, she then continued to confirm the other half thing that worried her.

"By the way, since you brought this up, does that mean that you're still thinking of killing me? If I may, can you give me a precise explanation as to why?"

"Even if you ask me, well, if something bad happens? It's not like I've decided on the specifics. Basically, if something comes up and I want to kill you, then I will. If I have to mention a particular example, then if Sheryl asks me to, I guess."

"I-I see. Just to let you know though, I'm well included in the management of Sheryl's gang, the gang would basically crumble without me, you know?"

"So?"

Viola's smile distorted with anxiety. If it had been a short answer, which was akin to a threat, she had thought up ways to counter it. Such threats were a regular thing in many of the negotiations that she had faced, so she already had a list of ways to handle them.

But this time, it was a pure question from Akira. That told her that Akira basically had no idea how that had anything to do with not shooting her in the head. For him, it did not give him any reason not to kill her. It was as if that was not worth even a dime, especially when negotiating for her life.

Akira had said that he would not kill her even if she said no. That only meant that he would not kill her because she refused. However, the moment she refused, Akira could think that it was meaningless to let her live and just outright killed her right this instant. Viola had at least predicted that much. Including the fact that he was most likely unaware that he was issuing a threat.

Viola basically had no other choice but to compromise after receiving Akira's unintentional threat.

"… I basically just need to find where Chloe is, right? After that, we're even, right?"

"That depends on what information you can give me. If it's useful, then yes. That's just how people decide on the value of information, no?"

For Akira, it was a good thing that he had no need to pay with money and would be able to get highly valuable information.

But for Viola, it also doubled as a threat. To her, it was as if Akira would kill her if she gave him useless information. She could not help but frown in face of such a nasty threat and heaved a huge sigh. She then took out her information terminal and pulled out a certain information.

"There's a new Lion Steel facility inside Higaraka residence ruin. There's a good chance that she's there."

"Alright, well then, I'm in a hurry here."

Akira only said that much as he hopped back onto his bike. But before he left, Viola frowned and asked him a question.

"Are we even now?"

"Pray that I can find Chloe there."

Basically, it meant that they were not even at the moment. Viola's frown only got worse.

That was when Carol suddenly interjected.

"Wait for a sec, Akira! Are you going now!? Can you at least tell me why you no longer can't take the bodyguard request?"

"I'm going to kill Chloe right now and I want to prioritize that. And, it would be stupid for the bodyguard to get his client into more trouble, no?"

"What I'm asking is why it has suddenly turned to this?!"

"Sorry, I don't know for sure myself. If you're interested, you can try asking Viola. I don't really care about the reason. I might investigate that part after I kill Chloe and if I'm in the mood. Later then."

Akira only said as much and accelerated off.

Carol turned at Viola with an extremely bitter expression.

"Viola, can you help me find out what's going on with Akira? This one is a rush request."

Viola somehow managed to return back to her usual self and teasingly said to Carol.

"It would be at a special price, you know?"

Seeing how Viola was acting, Carol also returned to her usual foxy attitude.

"If you give me a good discount, I'll tell Akira that it was a good thing he'd spared you."

"Geez, it can't be helped then."

Babalod glanced at the two girls smiling at each other with their usual evil smile and heaved a heavy sigh. He was already expecting to be dragged into whatever problem they were brewing.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 262, Stacking Bets

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Pamela returned to the Lion Steel company's facility and went to face Chloe with a pained expression.

Chloe was only listening to Pamela's after-report without saying a word. She was not blaming Pamela for the failure nor trying to cheer her up. This caused Pamela to knit her brows.

After Chloe listened to her report without a change in expression, she then spoke, without a bit of displeasure in her tone.

"That just means we have underestimated his fighting capability. Because of that, you were not able to kill him like you stated."

The reason why Chloe did what she did back in Mihazono ruin was because she believed Pamela's words. That Pamela could kill Akira. Had Pamela said that Akira would only slaughter them, Chloe would not have even thought of meeting him. Her actions were influenced by the words of the people around her.

There was no trace of fault in Chloe's gaze toward Pamela. That was the reason why Pamela was so worried. If Chloe believes that she had lost her ability to judge, and had lost her value, then it was only a matter of time before she got laid off.

That was exactly why Pamela then spoke up with a serious expression.

“Not at all. It was because we were trying to take our time to carefully finish him. Unbeknown to us, during that time, he was thinking of escaping. He still had his bike, which was still functional. We were caught off guard because of that. Of course, this does not change the fact that we failed. But I will not take back my words that we can kill him.”

“I see…”

Chloe only said as much and returned to silence.

Pamela stood there, frozen, with a stern look on her face. Pamela was not sure whether Chloe forgave her or not. She was trying to calm the raging anxiety in her chest.

“Well, it doesn’t really matter. You should step back, whether to shoot him or to support the fight to kill him, you should get your equipment ready. I will give you your orders later.”

“Understood.”

Pamela sighed in relief, at least, she had not been abandoned. She then gracefully bowed and left the room with Latis.

Once Chloe was left alone, she then mumbled.

“So, we failed in trying to kill him, huh…”

If they successfully killed Akira, then that would be great. But, if they failed, then it only meant that she would need to throw more into the pot she bet on. As Chloe thought so, her smile deepened.

Winning this bet was not enough. Chloe needed a jackpot. She had to make it such that all her past mistakes became a bridge towards success. She had to raise the stakes as high as she could, make the odds be in her favour and bet everything she had. Finally, all she needed to do was win. She had to completely throw the word ‘caution’ out the window. What she sought was a victory that granted her everything.

Suddenly, a call reached Chloe’s information terminal. When she checked it, it was from the Lion Steel company’s security department. They detected someone was trying to pin down her location.

Chloe thought of a plan with new information at hand. She smiled bewitchingly as if she had found what she was looking for.

Latis walked through the facility’s hallway with Pamela by his side. He suddenly threw a question to her with a stern expression.

“So, how much of what you said should I take seriously?”

Pamela threw a sharp glance at Latis.

“Are you saying that I gave Milady a fake after-report?”

Pamela was oozing a prickling aura, indicating that this would not end well depending on Latis’ intention when he had asked that question. However, he was not perturbed at all.

“I didn’t say that. But the report has a variety of loose interpretations. I’m sure you were aware of at least that much, right?”

Pamela did not say anything, but her silence was an affirmation of Latis’ question.

“You said you won’t take back your statement, that you can kill that Hunter. You told Milady that there’s nothing to worry about, you can kill him. But you didn’t specify how you will do so the next time. Will you be able to do so with room to spare? Or will you be able to kill him only after a close shave from death? You didn’t give a more detailed explanation to Milady, but I think I already understand without you saying anything. Now that you’ve heard what I’m talking about, let me ask you this. If I take your words seriously, then we should be able to easily kill that Hunter next time, right?”

“W-well, about that…”

Pamela stopped midway. Such a response was already an answer. Latis sighed and spoke.

“Calm down. I also understand that the situation is not good. Based on the report, if I had come with you, we should have been able to kill him. Basically, it means that by going against Milady’s order, I have also failed to kill him. If you’re going to get kicked out, then I will, without a doubt, get kicked out too.”

Depending on how Pamela took it, it sounded as if Latis was complaining. That she was also pulling him down with her because of her failure. Though Latis was speaking with a considerate tone, Pamela understood that he was saying that purely as a reassurance since he was also in the same situation as her. Thus, she managed to calm down.

“…I’m sorry.”

“Don’t worry about it. Things like this sometimes happen. He also killed my men, it’s only natural to be angry.”

Latis smiled as if he really did not mind it that much, but his smile then turned serious.

“To make sure that the sacrifices our men made do not go to waste, we need to keep moving forward. We can’t afford to fail a second time. So, let’s get back to the main topic. It’s true that we failed this time because we underestimated him. So, just how strong is he? Judging based on the data from the Hunter Office’s site, his Hunter Rank is 55. If we put some margin in, believing that his Hunter Rank doesn’t really reflect his true strength, then, 56? Or maybe 57 at most? Considering that you would take this into account and still failed, what do you think his Hunter Rank should be? Although he ran away from you, you did fight against him, after all.”

Pamela hummed with a severe look.

“…Depending on the situation, it should be around 60.”

“60!? That high!?”

Latis was extremely surprised. He did not expect that she would rate Akira that highly.

Although Hunter Rank was not a perfect representation of Hunter’s strength, it was a good estimate. Though, the higher the rank, the better that rank indicated the Hunter’s true might. That was because as they reached a high rank, more achievements were needed. It became increasingly more difficult to go up a rank higher. Because of this, Hunters of the same rank could have widely different battle prowess.

With that in consideration, a 5-rank deviation was completely abnormal. That was why Latis was flabergasted. As Latis unconsciously looked at Pamela with doubt in his eyes, she turned at him with a serious expression and stated.

“Our men are not weak. They had fought to their very end. But he essentially killed all of them even before I arrived. Although it was due to my blunder, he still got away from me. It’s well under reason to say that he is around Rank 60.”

“…You have a good point. And, next time, we wouldn’t even have the chance to surround him first before starting a fight, huh? It was a good thing that we had asked Milady for permission to use the emergency equipment.”

As Latis and Pamela arrived in front of the warehouse’s door, it opened. That warehouse housed a powerful weapon, one enough to kill a Rank 60 Hunter.

Latis and Pamela went to put on their respective equipment, and suddenly, a notice from Chloe reached them. It contained an order from her. Latis and Pamela looked at each other, confused after they checked the content of that order.

__*__*__*__

Akira paced his bike through the roadless wasteland into Higaraka residence ruin. He was surprised to see something that was not there the last time he visited that ruin when he arrived. He stopped and looked around the ruin. As he was about to head straight to the Lion Steel facility, Alpha suddenly stopped him

“Akira, you’re going to raid a facility owned by a company this time. Since it is built in the middle of a ruin, it’s only to be expected that it’s armed. So, let’s not break-in from the front door.”

“Alright, so, what’s the plan? Shoot the AF anti-material cannon from afar? I don’t have much ammo left for that cannon, and it’s not like we can kill Chloe by randomly shooting at that building, you know?”

What he knew from Viola was only that there was a good chance Chloe was in this building. Viola did not specify where exactly she was. She might not even be there in the first place. Since it was not like he would get paid by killing her, every shot was Akira throwing away money. Now that he had substantially calmed down after reconnecting with Alpha, he was calm enough to consider the ammo expense. He did not wish to take on any more unnecessary expenses for his objective.

Normally, the moment he showed hostility toward the Lion Steel company, he would be facing trouble more worrisome than mere ammo expense. But Akira did not care about that at all.

Alpha hoped that Akira would be more worried about that part as well, but since she did not want her relationship with Akira to sour, she focused on her second-best option, which was to help him.

“Let’s leave the bike behind and sneak in using the camouflaging cloak. Then, we can find her, kill her, and escape.”

“Optical camouflage, huh? I’m pretty sure they’ll be able to find us though.”

Although Alpha's words reminded him that he had that option as well, he thought about how he saw through their camouflage. Thus, it was likely that they would be able to see through his camouflage as well. If that was indeed the case, then it was better to raid the facility on his bike.

But Alpha expressed her confidence.

"It should be no problem with my support."

"Is that so? Alright then."

Seeing Akira obediently step off his bike, Alpha released a sigh of relief. For Akira, he did not care as long as he got to kill Chloe. He did not see the whole Lion Steel company as his enemy. Even if he got discovered trying to sneak in, it would be fine as long as no one could prove that it was him. And with enough support from Alpha, there should be no problem sneaking in with Akira's current camouflaging equipment. As such, sneaking in should be a much better choice rather than barging from the front door. That was why Alpha made that suggestion to him.

But that plan turned out completely useless.

A huge armoured APC suddenly jumped out from the Lion Steel facility. It quickly went past the ruin and out to the wasteland. Akira, who had received the notification about the passing vehicle, quickly jumped right back on his bike and immediately chased after that APC.

When an APC with an important officer from a large company went out to the wasteland, it often ran while broadcasting a notice through the general communication frequency. Although it might lure monsters, they were normally well guarded and had no need to worry about monsters.

The broadcast was for the Hunters around the area. It was basically a warning. To prevent any unnecessary fights, they were advised to keep their distance from the APC. Otherwise, they would be treated as suspicious individuals. The message broadcasted included 'we will not hesitate to fire at anyone we find suspicious without warning'.

The content of that notice this time was from an officer affiliated with Lion Steel Eastern District Third Branch, Chloe. She was on the APC.

With this, Alpha's plan to sneak in and assassinate Chloe instead of breaking through the front door to avoid unnecessary battle was all in vain. Riding a high-speed bike would greatly reduce the effectiveness of the optical camouflage. There was no doubt that they would be able to notice Akira. In the first place, at this point, Akira no longer had any wish to quietly assassinate Chloe.

Alpha frowned and gave Akira the second-best option.

"Akira! Don't lose your cool this time!"

"I know!! Hm?"

Akira frowned. While his gaze was locked on the APC. The back door of the APC opened, showing Chloe standing inside. She also already noticed that Akira was chasing after her as she smiled and lightly waved at him.

Akira's expression was immediately filled with killing intent. His gaze was leaking his ominous emotion as it was locked onto his target. As if only obeying his emotion, Akira moved the AF anti-material cannon on his bike. He aimed at his target and rerouted the energy from his bike to that cannon.

"Alpha! I'll leave the finer aim and power adjustment to you!"

"Geez, didn't I tell you to keep your cool just now? Good grief, alright!"

The moment the anti-material cannon was pumped full of energy, it released a lance of light with otherworldly accuracy. Thanks to Alpha's aim and adjustment, its spread was reduced to be as narrow as possible. It turned into an intense lance of light that melted everything in its way, which raced straight toward its target.

At the same time, the APC also took a defensive stance. The forcefield shield that was installed on its highly durable armour, expanded countless layers of fs in the trajectory of that beam. They were placed to slightly deflect the beam and had a dispersing effect to reduce its power.

Thanks to that, the beam turned into waves of light which enveloped the whole area. With its spread increased, its intensity rapidly reduced.

Because Akira temporarily rerouted all the bike's energy output to the cannon, its acceleration was temporarily stopped. Since the balancer also lost its effect for a moment, Akira was almost thrown off the bike.

As his bike skidded, Akira leaned to one side and held down the brake to rebalance his bike. Once the flashes of light died down, he then looked at the APC. On the other side, he could see Chloe completely fine as she was amusedly laughing and shaking her head.

Akira's expression became even grimmer. If a stare could kill, his stare definitely would. However, Chloe, who had some screw loose just like Akira, only laughed mockingly at his scowl. She then lightly waved her hand, turned around, and went inside the APC. After that, the back door of the APC slowly closed.

With his bike frozen in place and Akira still on top of it, he just saw the APC trailing off with his chilling gaze.

"Alpha, why didn't that one go through?"

In order to calm him down, Alpha explained to him with a serious look on her face.

"You didn't do anything wrong, it's just that they have better equipment. At least, we know that now. So, just calm down and use that information for the next exchange. The more you lose your cool, the less likely you will be able to kill her."

"…Alright."

Akira sighed and started his bike again to chase after Chloe.

__*__*__*__

Inside the APC, Pamela had a worried look on her face as she said to Chloe, who was still smiling.

“Milady! That was dangerous! It’s true that the APC is very well reinforced. But that doesn’t guarantee that it’s impenetrable! So, please don’t do such a meaningless and dangerous thing again!”

But Chloe did not care about Pamela’s warning at all.

“Oh, it wasn’t meaningless though? We need to make sure that he had a good look at me to let him know that I am indeed in this APC. Otherwise, there’s a good chance that he would raid the facility instead, right? So that was just for precaution.”

If it was to kill Akira, staying in the facility was the better choice. Even if she decided to take shelter inside the wall of Kugamayama city, there was still no need to let Akira know of her position during the process. Pamela, who thought so, seemed confused. She did not understand what Chloe’s true intention was. However, since she wanted to avoid making any more mistakes, Pamela decided not to pursue that subject any further. She did not want to be abandoned because of incompetency,

“I originally thought that we had to go around the wasteland for a bit in order to lure him out. To think that he already knew where I was and was already this close. He’s pretty good. I guess I can understand why Pamela, you had a hard time killing him, huh?”

Pamela understood that confirming her statement would only lower her worth. Thus, she did not give a reply. She just made a solemn expression as she made her resolve. [I will not fail the next time.]

Chloe smiled and turned to Latis, who was waiting inside the APC.

“Latis, go.”

“Certainly.”

Latis gracefully took off his butler uniform, under it, he was already using a heavy augmented suit's inner. The machines around him started to move as they fixed multiple arms to Latis' heavy augmented suit. Parts that looked like pieces of small parts slowly gathered around Latis' heavy augmented suit.

He was also equipped with extra equipment. A flying device, missile pods, sabres, huge rifles loaded to an extremely long magazine belt, and many other things as well.

The heavy augmented suit was similar to a powered suit. Appearance-wise, it seemed closer to a powered suit rather than an augmented suit. However, Latis had to put it on instead of getting onto a machine. Also, ignoring the time needed to put it on, it was more or less a powerful powered suit.

The ceiling of the APC opened up. A loud sound was produced. It came from the flying device of the heavy powered suit that had taken off. Latis used a forcefield shield to protect the area around him before take-off. Due to the sheer amount of energy that was pumped into it, the forcefield shield created solidified air, which was like a glowing wall of glass. Beyond it, Latis bowed to Chloe.

"Well then, I shall now go. I shall bring back good news for Milady when I return."

But Chloe only lightly replied.

"Yeah, also, if you want to give me a good after-report, then I have one order regarding the fight, do it grandly."

"Grandly, huh?"

"Yep. It's important to kill him. But you must do it elegantly, prioritize more on making it grand. If you end up unable to kill him because of that, don't worry. That's fine as well."

"Milady, what do you mean by-"

Latis, who did not understand the intention behind her order, was about to ask another question. That was when Chloe's gaze suddenly stopped him. Chloe gazed deeply into Latis as if she was trying to look deep down inside him. Those pupils oozed out a level of authority, one fit for a family member of the original founder of the Lion Steel company. That stare allowed the insanity inside of her to take a peek inside Latis' soul. Meanwhile, it also allowed Latis to see the deep insanity within Chloe's eyes.

"Latis, are you not going to obey me again?"

The overwhelmed Latis decided to put any questions for later. At least for now.

"N-Not at all. Very well then. I shall fight him grandly."

"Now go."

"Of course!"

Latis took off into the sky.

"Pamela, keep your eyes on the surrounding, repel him if he gets too close."

"C-certainly."

Pamela also did not fully understand the intention behind Chloe's order. But she had no trouble following her order. Just like Latis, she put her questions aside for now and simply obeyed. The maids that were standing lined up on both sides of the APC followed Pamela's order and went to collect their equipment. They went to the rooftop of the APC, to their respective positions and kept their eyes on the surroundings.

Chloe sat on an already prepared seat and smiled. It was as if she was enjoying the show that was going exactly as she had planned.

__*__*__*__

Akira, who was chasing her on his bike, noticed Latis launching out from the top of the APC.

“Powered suit? No, that is a heavy augmented suit, huh? Looks pretty strong.”

Alpha, who saw that, warned Akira with a serious tone.

“Don’t think that augmented suit is the same as the one you fought before. Assume that it’s completely on a different level.”

“I know. After all, those maids were already that strong. Judging from its appearance alone, that thing must be extremely strong. Should we use the AF anti-material cannon?”

“We don’t have that much ammo for that one, so I want to conserve it to destroy that APC if it’s possible. So, let’s start with LEO multi-rifles.”

“Roger that!”

The six LEO multi-rifles that Akira originally had were now reduced to three. He had one on his right hand while the other two were fixed on the arms of his bike.

The energy tank of the bike was filled with energy. Its power was rerouted through Akira’s augmented suit and into his LEO multi rifle. Thanks to that, it took only a few seconds for him to fully charge his C bullet. With this, he was ready to shoot the fully charged C bullet. The arm of the bike that held the other rifles had the same capability.

“Leave the fine-tuned aiming to me, Akira. You just focus on facing that headache. Although you have my support, the drawback of using compressed time perception and reality manipulation at the same time is not meagre. If necessary, this will be a good opportunity to polish up your skill too. Let’s go!”

“Yeah!!”

Akira aimed his LEO multi rifles at Latis. The rifles were already in their ready-to-shoot state. They released fully charged C-bullets with pinpoint accuracy.

__*__*__*__

The moment Latis jumped out of the APC, he quickly confirmed Akira's location. With the help of the APC's scanners and his own information-gathering device, he was able to confirm and have his aiming system lock onto Akira, who was rapidly moving.

He thought of the next thing he needed to do. He simply needed to aim his humongous gun at him. It would be more than enough to kill him. However, before he did so, he recalled his master's order, to fight grandly. So, he decided to use another method to kill him.

"It is due to Milady's order, now, let's see you die in a grand explosion."

Multiple missiles launched from the missile pods fixed to Latis' heavy augmented suit. All the missiles took different routes before they took sharp turns and converged straight toward Akira. When they got close enough to him, the tip of their warheads broke open, releasing smaller missiles inside them.

These were cluster missiles. They were filled with smaller missiles using the same technology to create extended magazines. They housed an abnormal number of missiles; way more than they seem. Instead of breaking from the main missile and flying independently, they rained down as if to comb the area targeted by the warhead, assaulting Akira from all directions.

The next moment, mini-missiles exploded. The explosions combined into one. It created a massive blast that destroyed everything in the area. It was no doubt overkill if it was only meant to destroy a single target. A second later, the blast was accompanied by a powerful gust of wind, blowing away wreckage and rubble up into the sky.

Not even a second later, the bullets that Akira released went straight toward Latis. Their line of fire was accurate. None of them missed their target. However, they were not enough to injure him. He was protected by the powerful forcefield armour of his heavy augmented suit. The most that these bullets did was shave off a huge chunk of his energy reserves.

“A last gambit, huh? He’s a good Hunter right to the very end. As expected of a Rank 60 Hunter.”

Latis lightly complimented Akira, he had already concluded the boy to be dead. Due to the size of the explosion and the force of the shockwave, colourless mist in the area compressed temporarily, forming a thick layer. From the outside, the colourless mist looked like a translucent film that wrapped around the explosion and smoke that was raised. Those from afar would only see and feel a normal shockwave. However, that area trapped inside that condensed layer of colourless mist was burning and melting from the heat of the explosion. It was no different than an inescapable scene from hell.

Latis thought he only needed to wait for the colourless mist to disperse and for the explosion to die down before confirming and reporting back to Chloe. If he could not find anything, he could report that Akira had been blown to pieces. Either way, he was certain that he had already won.

However, his confidence was shattered, a massive light blade suddenly extended out as if to cut open through the flames and explosives. From there, Akira jumped out.

“What!?”

Latis was completely flabbergasted.

__*__*__*__*__

Alpha understood that it was impossible to evade the countless mini-missiles raining down on them. Thus, she quickly took action. She gave her order to Akira. She leaned the bike on one side and the moment its tire lifted off from the ground, she accelerated the bike.

The bike that was laying on its side, continued to create forcefield armour under its tires as it spun like a spinning top. The quick spins created layers upon layers of forcefield armour.

While the bike was spinning, Akira quickly pulled out the metallic liquid blade container fixed on his bike. He pulled the handle out of the blade container and liquid metal gushed out of it. Normally, the liquid metal would harden into a thin blade. However, with Alpha's control, it turned into a wide, extremely thin blade, still covered in liquid metal. Akira then swung it, matching its timing with his spinning bike.

The force of his swing caused the liquid blade to bend like a fabric. It was then painted around with his bike as its centre. After the liquid metal was sufficiently spread, the forcefield armour helped to temporarily harden it.

Right after that, the missiles exploded and engulfed Akira in it. He was only able to survive that thanks to the multi-layered forcefield armour plates and the hardened liquid metal that enveloped him.

Of course, this should not have been enough to fully withstand the might of the explosion. However, the protective structure was arranged with Alpha's advanced calculation. It deflected and dispersed the force from the explosion. It thus greatly weakened the explosion before it reached Akira. In that short time before the blast reached them, Alpha had made numerous complex difficult calculations. This included all the effects and changes when each individual explosion compounded into one. Only then did she come up with this move.

Even so, the explosion still engulfed and hit Akira. Thankfully, those protective layers had softened the blast to the point he did not get hurt.

He used half of the remaining liquid metal that survived the explosion to form a blade, which was used to cut open the thick layer of colourless mist. Using that opening, he accelerated his bike to jump out of it.

As he jumped out from that small opening, the explosive force contained behind him made him get pushed out even quicker. A moment later, the colourless mist layer broke and crumbled into pieces. The explosion that was compressed and held inside of it, spread out as if there was a second explosion.

After Akira escaped such a dangerous situation, he could tell that it was a close call. He then said with a frown.

“That was dangerous! Just what is with that guy!?”

Alpha looked at him with a stern expression. It was both to let Akira know how dangerous that situation was and how powerful the opponent was this time. To confirm it, she issued a warning.

“It seems that he’s using a pretty powerful heavy augmented suit. It’s strong enough to be posted in the front during the inter-city transport-escort request.”

“That strong, huh…!? Well, it indeed looks to be that strong. Though, it makes me raise the question: why didn’t he use it back then? Hmm… I guess they really just wanted to negotiate before, huh?”

To show the willingness to negotiate, it’s important to hide one’s weapons. If they were planning to kill Akira right from the start, they would have used this heavy augmented suit. Akira reflected on the situation. It was thanks to their blunder that he survived that battle. He could not help but smile with self-mockery.

“Well, thanks to that, I’m still alive right now. I guess I have at least sufficient luck needed for that, huh?”

“Akira, if you combine that small luck that you still have left with my support, you could’ve fought better, you know? Even that attack just now. You would have been dead if it was not because of my support. If you think that you have bad luck, make sure that you can compensate for it with my support. Make sure to prioritize recovering our connection.”

“I get it already, sorry about that.”

Akira smiled bitterly and apologized to Alpha, who seemed to be angry.

In the middle of their exchange, he was still moving forward with his bike. Akira then put that thought aside for a moment and focused on what was in front of him.

“So, any idea how to shoot him down?”

“First of all, let’s check if we can chase the APC while ignoring him. If it’s possible, I want to try a close-range AF anti-material cannon or zero-range slice. If we get closer to the APC, I’m sure that they will have to be careful so as to not shoot that APC as well. So, let’s go with that.”

“Roger that!”

Akira accelerated the bike toward his target. To maintain his calm, he did not use his urge for murder to fuel his anger, instead, he used it to fuel the cold calculating side of his as he blazed through the wasteland.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 263, Assault

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Even after receiving such an assault, seeing how Akira did not die and instead was closing in on the APC, Latis could not hide his astonishment.

[To tell me that he is a Rank 55 Hunter!? You gotta be kidding me. Even Rank 60 is not high enough. He might as well reach Rank 65!]

The way Akira raised his Hunter Rank caused it to not be properly reflected. Even Latis could tell that Akira's true strength was not something reflected on his Hunter Rank.

Whether by selling relics or hunting monsters, normally Hunters raised their Hunter Rank slowly over time. Even when a Rank 55 Hunter defeated a monster only a Rank 65 and above Hunter could take down, that did not immediately raise their rank to 65. Under normal circumstances, Hunter Rank would rise through selling valuable relics multiple times or defeating powerful monsters multiple times.

In short, no matter how much Akira contributed during the inter-city transport-escort mission. Even if he got posted in the front during that mission, it would not immediately greatly increase his rank. Moreover, Akira chose his reward to be mostly in the form of new equipment, not a raise in his Hunter Rank. Thus, Akira was once again, way too strong for his current Hunter Rank.

Then there was also Alpha. With her help, Akira could proficiently use equipment that required rigorous training.

Akira’s bike was one that was created in Zegelt city. Even high ranking Hunters would consider it to be an exceptional bike. Thus, even common Hunters from that city would normally have trouble using his bike. With the culmination of Alpha, his bike and his current equipment, Akira’s battle prowess skyrocketed.

Latis, who was unaware of this till now, made his conclusion based on everything he had gathered.

[That guy, he’s a bike specialist, huh!?]

In the eastern district, there were individuals who had a special affinity and proficiency toward a certain skill or equipment. Just like how some preferred the long-range gun while others preferred the close-range combat with blades. There were also those who preferred to use their fist, complemented with their superhuman strength. Such individuals might not even use guns nor an augmented suit.

Bike specialists were those who were proficient with fighting on top of a bike. Normally, instead of a bike, most would prefer a tank or a powered suit. Those offered them full-body protection and better weaponry. But for some reason, there were still some who performed better on top of a bike.

There were many narrow alleys in the old-world ruin where only a bike could pass through. So, from that point of view, it was understandable that a bike has an advantage in those kinds of situations. This was the reason why there were still manufacturers that produced expensive advanced bikes; though, a tank would be more powerful.

[That would explain how he was able to escape that battle back in Mihazono ruin! He did not have the leeway to get on his bike during the battle. The jamming smoke prevented him from remotely controlling the bike. The moment he could control his bike, he quickly got onto it and escaped.]

It would not be strange for those who specialized in bikes to have powerful equipment designed to be used on their bike. It was not strange for Akira, who was currently on his bike, to be far stronger than he was back then. Latis frowned after he drew out his conclusion. He shot another barrage of missiles at Akira.

However, this time, they were shot down way sooner than before. Before he knew it, the cluster missile warheads had already been destroyed.

The safety feature caused the mini-missiles to simply fall off. It was to make sure that they would explode too close to its user. Although not all of them were shot down, their number was greatly reduced. It was impossible for them to completely surround a speeding bike in the middle of the wasteland. Akira guided what remained to collide into rubble and wreckage around him. Once he was done, they were effectively rendered useless.

[He adapted to it so quickly! He is very good at this! Is this why Milady gave me such an order? So, it was an order to basically kill him as soon as possible, with the greatest firepower that I have right from the start, huh?]

As if to not miss even the slightest opening, as Latis was thinking, Akira's bullets flew and struck him. Although he was unharmed thanks to his forcefield armour, it still diminished some of his energy reserves. Latis frowned. He roared. Though, it seemed to be directed towards himself.

"…This is not the time for that!! I will kill him first and ask Milady afterwards!"

Latis aimed his gigantic gun at Akira. The aiming system quickly locked onto him, even though Akira was moving haphazardly at high speed. The gun, designed to be used with Latis' heavy augmented suit, started spewing large warheads. Each blast shook the ground

Akira was chasing after Chloe's APC on his bike. He was moving in an unpredictable, complicated manner. The bike's ability to project forcefield armour below its tire allowed the bike to run on air. It was a crude function, and it would have been better to install a flying device on the bike instead. However, with Alpha's advanced support, the bike was able to smoothly ride on both the air and the ground.

The bike made sharp turns, which would have been impossible with a flying device. It avoided the incoming missiles. It ran as if it was inside a tube, a tube created from the narrow openings between rubble and missiles. Such maneuvers even caused the missiles to collide into the rubble around him.

Utilizing everything second, Akira used his rifle to shoot down the missiles that were coming from above him. With his advanced skills to evade, even when missiles were raining down on him, destroying everything around him, he was still able to slip past them unharmed.

It would not be strange for Akira to get thrown off his bike, considering that it was moving around rapidly. It was only thanks to his augmented suit that he was able to stay on top of his bike.

Even so, this was still not a comfortable situation. Akira frowned from the pain.

[It's still the usual battle.] Thanks to that, Akira was able to stay calm even while his body was pumped with adrenaline. He even had room to complain, just like usual.

"Alpha!? Can you do something about this!? You said that you would show how good your support is, right?!"

Thanks to his time perception compression, Akira was barely able to keep up with how fast the scene in front of him was changing. If it was not for his extrasensory sense, he would have completely lost orientation, unable to tell where was left or right.

"I'm pretty sure I'm showing you just how good it is right now, no? The next one is from the top-right!!"

Following her instruction, Akira temporarily compressed his time perception even more and aimed his rifles in the instructed directions. Once the TPL fixed onto his targets, he pulled the trigger. He managed to hit all the large warheads that Latis shot at him. But due to the difference in firepower, Akira's bullets simply ricocheted off the warheads.

Even so, they did well to throw those warheads off their original trajectories. All of them were aiming at Akira's bike but flew past their target and landed on the ground, away from Akira. The shockwave was released when they hit the ground, causing it to tremble, and even threw the bike off.

Normally, the bike would be a sitting duck once it was off the ground. The dirt and dust that enveloped the area would even throw a bike's flying device off balance. However, with Alpha's perfect control of the bike, aerial fight was not an issue. She was able to harden the dust and the dirt to create stable footing for the bike's wheels.

Akira was able to tell just how powerful the shots were. Especially after seeing the rubble and dust that were blasted into the air. He could not help but frown as he commented.

"Whoah! That was close! One hit from that would be enough to finish me off! Just how accurate are they? I'm already moving this fast!"

"You were only able to deflect them because of me, you know? Aren't you glad?"

"Of course, thank you very much!"

Akira got a bit irritated and partially shouted out his reply unlike Alpha, who was smiling as if she was teasing him. She continued.

"Now then, I'll show you one more great thing I can do. Let's go!"

Alpha only said as much and suddenly accelerated the bike. It then turned straight down, landing hard, and accelerated even more.

“Whoah!?”

Akira’s yelp was completely buried by the sound of the bike diving into the wreckage and rubble under it.

Latis frowned. He suddenly lost Akira’s signal. Though he did not think he made a blunder and went straight under the rubble. Just to be safe, he shot several bullets toward the area where Akira’s signal had suddenly vanished. The large warheads dove straight into the mountain of rubble and wreckage. It blew the dirt and rubble up into the sky. It was akin to water sprouts, though made of concrete and sand. It had completely destroyed the contour of the area. Even so, Akira’s signal still had not returned.

[If he’s hiding with some kind of camouflage, that should have flushed him out. What’s going on?]

Just to be extra safe, he went to the location where Akira’s signal vanished and checked around the area again. He used his advanced information gathering device to check underground as well. However, he still could not find Akira’s signal. There was a chance that it was because Akira had been completely shredded into dust, but Latis could not afford to be that naive this time.

__*__*__*__

Pamela was standing guard in Chloe’s APC when a call suddenly reached her.

“Pamela, I lost his signal.”

“Just to confirm. It’s not like you’ve killed him and it’s not because he ran away, right? You simply lost him, right?”

“Unfortunately, yes. I completely lost his signal the moment he dove straight down into the ground.”

Latis then told Pamela what happened without leaving any details. This included the fact that Akira’s fighting power might as well reach Rank 65.

That there was a good chance he was a bike specialist. After listening to his report, Pamela could not help but frown.

“…He’s that good, huh? Our men really did well to corner someone that strong. Now, if only I was able to kill him back then… This is so frustrating…”

“I can say the same as well. I’ll keep trying to look for him. Whether he’s already dead or just hiding, either way, I need to confirm it. Just to be safe, you be careful too.”

“Roger that. Anything to say to Milady?”

“In case I still can’t find anything, I’ll assume that he’s hiding with a powerful camouflage. Just to be safe, I’ll demolish the area one more time. Just like Milady ordered me to before returning back and give her my after-report.”

“Alright… Hm?”

As Pamela had her eyes fixed on the 360 degrees radar scanner around the APC, she found something that she did not expect. Akira suddenly jumped out of a pile of rubble in front of the APC and went straight towards it.

__*__*__*__

Under the eastern district, there were more tunnels than what most people would have believed. Former subway lines that were not completely buried, underground passages that were once part of underground cities, tunnels made by monsters. There were numerous reasons why one could find tunnels underground. Alpha took note of them during the fight. She identified each individual route and decided on the path. The battle had made the layer of rubble and soil covering these tunnels weaker. Alpha took advantage of that to break through and enter the tunnel.

There was no light inside. Under normal circumstances, riding a bike at max speed in complete darkness would have been suicidal. But thanks to Akira’s extrasensory senses, he could do so without issue. Moreover, he was completely used to crazy situations like this. With Alpha's control of the bike, Akira had no hesitation to go try and go faster.

"Akira! We're breaking out!"

"Roger that!"

Akira had already known the details of their strategy since Alpha had already told him through telepathy. So, he once again readied himself to break through another part of the tunnel that was already weakened. Though already weakened, it did not change the fact that the layers of the rubble and soil above were still quite thick. At least, thick enough for monsters to go over them without collapsing. Thus, Akira had to prepare himself to break through it.

Akira used the momentum of the bike to jump up. He sliced the ceiling of the tunnel with his liquid metal blade. With a powerful kick from his augmented suit, the sliced ceiling burst apart. A moment later, his bike shot out of the hole and escaped from the darkness.

Chloe's APC was rushing ahead at high speed through the wasteland. It went past Akira, who had just flown out of the ground.

Akira reconnected the blade's handle to its container. Inside this compressed time perception world, where rubble and dust flew in slow motion, Akira swung his blade toward the passing APC with Alpha's support.

The blade sucked an enormous amount of energy from the bike; boosting its slicing power to its utmost limit. At least, for a short time until the blade crumbled. The forcefield armour that hardened the liquid metal shone slightly as it reached its target. It was made to only last for an instant. It just needed to cut through everyone on top of the APC and inside.

The blade finally made contact with the APC. After releasing a loud bang, and a blinding flash of light, the blade crumbled. But it did not accomplish its goal. During its clash with the APC's defences, the blade lost. The hardened liquid metal slowly reverted back to liquid as it fell and splashed over the ground.

The people on top of the APC had already started their counterattack. They barraged Akira, who had just passed by them. Even when they could no longer see him, their barrage continued.

With the help of Alpha's advanced driving skill, Akira was able to slip out of that barrage as he accelerated away from the APC. Although he got hit, the forcefield armour of the bike completely neutralized those attacks.

Akira, who had expected that slash to splice through the APC, could not hide his surprise.

"That thing is really hard! Forget the APC, the people on top of it are still fine, you know?!"

Those who were in the path of the blade, quickly raised both of their arms to block it, even before it touched them. The blade managed to slice through their arms and legs, even the weapons that they had. However, it did not slice through all of them.

Alpha frowned and told Akira the reason why they were that strong.

"Their forcefield armour has assimilated with the APC's forcefield armour to strengthen their defences. They are also remotely controlled bodies. That's why they are tougher than normal flesh and bone."

Akira raised his eyebrows and looked back at the leftover of what he had just cut. No blood was coming out from them, when he took a good look at them, their insides were pure metal. Even when their bodies were cut into two, they were still standing up straight.

The maids that came out from the APC were all remotely controlled by Pamela, just like those dolls. The reason why she did not use those automaton dolls back in Mihazono ruin was because they were originally the property of the Lion Steel facility. Moreover, the more automaton they brought out, the more shame it brought their master.

But this time, Chloe had permission to use these automatons outside. She did not care about shame at this point and she was free to use as many automatons as she wanted.

The automatons that had lost their fighting capability returned back inside the APC. Their replacements, meanwhile, marched out from the APC. Akira, who noticed their numbers not dwindling, frowned and said.

"…It seems that they still have a lot of extra automatons, huh? Alpha, what's our plan?"

"It seems that it'll take more effort to destroy the APC, so let's start by cleaning out the smaller targets first. That heavy augmented suit has less energy than the APC. If we get close enough and slice it again and again, I'm sure we'll be able to eventually cut it into pieces."

"That one can fly though. I wonder if we can get close enough that easily."

"It won't even be a problem."

Akira confusedly frowned and saw Alpha pointing in a certain direction. From that direction, Latis was closing in from afar. He extended his heavy augmented suit's blade, closing in as fast as possible.

"You bastaardd!!!!"

Since Latis was shouting on top of his lung through the general close-range communication frequency, Akira could easily hear him. However, he simply gave a firm nod toward that chilling shout.

"Ah, I see, it seems that it really won't be a problem, huh?"

Akira readied the liquid metal blade on his right hand and used the LEO multi-rifles in his left hand to shoot Latis. Although the bullets landed on their target, Latis kept charging forward, undeterred by them.

"…He is pretty tough as well. Alpha, I'm counting on you."

"Leave it to me."

Seeing Alpha smiling confidently, Akira kept on shooting, feeling reassured by that confident smile. Latis came closer while still under the barrage and eventually got within Akira's reach. Akira swung the blade in his hand and Latis reacted accordingly and swung his own blade.

The blades clashed with a loud bang and released a fiery spark followed by a blinding flash of intense light.

Akira was fighting against Latis in front of him while Chloe's APC was behind him.

Latis had powerful weapons, which meant that he could not afford to miss his shots. The advanced aiming system of his weapons could automatically lock his weapons the moment the APC got into its line of fire. He could also set the aiming to automatically lock when the trajectory line was a few millimetres away from the APC. However, there was still fear of Akira deflecting his shot. Thus, Latis could not afford to use long-range weaponry.

The only option left for Latis was to use his blade. He knew that Akira had the ability to accurately predict his shots. If he tried to shoot Akira from afar, who kept positioning himself to get the APC in the trajectory of stray bullets, there was a good chance his shots would hit the APC.

Even if he tried to mauver to Akira's side and try to shoot him, Akira could just reposition himself. Therefore, his only option was to challenge Akira in melee combat. With his blade, he could push Akira into a position where he was free to use his big guns.

Because of that, Akira and Latis kept trading blows while circling around the APC, they were locked in an intense high-speed melee combat.

The blades sparked every time they made contact. One of the blades had forcefield armour to harden its blade, while the other had anti forcefield armour to cut through the other's protection. To defend themselves while they attacked, they were both using a huge amount of energy. Because of that, the path of the blade reacted with the particle in the air and drew arcs of light. Right at the next moment, they were erased by a flash of light when they clashed with each other.

One of them was a heavy augmented suit equipped with a flying device, while the other one had the abnormal skill to fight with a blade while on top of a bike. They kept exchanging blows with uncommon sword fighting styles. To cut down the opponent, to avoid the slices, to block the incoming attack. They swung their blades in all kinds of disorienting positions. It was as if there was no meaning in the words up, down, left and right.

Akira raced atop a transparent loop-like path to get on top of Latis. When he was right on top of Latis, he swung his blade to split open the opponent's head. Even in this situation, Latis quickly thrust his large blade straight up. Instead of clashing, they both passed each other without contact and went straight toward their respective target.

The hardened metal liquid blade struck Latis' heavy augmented suit's forcefield armour, bent it inward and eventually crushed a part of it. The broken pieces turned into rays of light due to the light conversion of the forcefield armour. It was as if the blade dug through Latis' heavy augmented suit, but this was only in appearance. Latis was still completely fine.

Akira bent his body to avoid Latis' blade. But of course, it was not enough to completely evade it. His speed was compensated by the sudden acceleration of his bike. It helped remove his body and his bike away from the passing blade. Akira knew that a strike from that powerful blade would definitely be the end of him. Without a question. Thankfully, it just slashed empty air. Although the resulting shockwave alone was strong, with the combination of the bike's energy tank and Akira's augmented suit, he was able to withstand it.

Latis was more skilled in melee fighting than most of the Hunters. As a butler from Lion Steel, he was trained to fight in a room filled with speed filters where rifles were not effective. Even so, at this moment, in terms of trading slashes, he was losing his ground against Akira.

The sword fighting style that Latis had learnt was to engage with his opponents on the ground. Although it was still usable to some extent in this case, it was not the most optimal fighting style against someone who was flying around. The blade that the heavy augmented suit had was also, in the end, just a reserve weapon. The structure of the heavy augmented suit was not ideal for him to make full use of the skills that he had learnt.

More than anything, with the help of Alpha's support, Akira was not just swinging his blade around while on his bike. It was as if his ability to use blades was made specifically tailored to when he was on a bike. It was as if Akira and his bike had become one, and he had full control of his bike.

Latis thought that this was going to be easy. After all, Akira and his bike were basically one big target. Therefore, he naively thought that at the very least, he would hit the bike. This was even after considering the novelty of fighting in his current heavy augmented suit. Naturally, his expectation was completely overturned.

Even when they were exchanging blows with their blades, they were also exchanging shots. In a range where a swing of their blade would normally reach their opponent, they were also trying to shoot at each other using their rifles, powerful enough to kill any monsters in one shot.

Akira used the LEO multi-rifle on his left to shoot a fully charged C-bullet at Latis. Moreover, the rifles on the arm of his bike also used the openings in between each slash to shoot at Latis. Thus, countless bullets were exchanged in close proximity during that battle.

But even after receiving that barrage, Latis was still standing strong. His equipment was special, only to be used inside the Lion Steel facility and it was not something that he could freely use without permission from the upper echelons. There was no surprise it was an extremely strong piece of equipment. The generator he had was as powerful as those used by expensive powered suits. Such a generator was paired with a mighty forcefield armour suitable. As such, it was able to withstand a barrage of C-bullets without issue.

But, as expected, Latis could not just receive that barrage and shrug it off as nothing. Although only slightly, he was thrown off balance. Akira did not let that opening slip away and moved in to finish him off. However, Latis managed to evade it.

Just before Latis managed to aim his large gun at Akira, Akira quickly prevented it from targeting him using the LEO multi-rifle in his left hand as he leaned his bike to one side and accelerated away. He swiftly moved away from the warhead that the big gun spewed out at him.

The other arms of the heavy augmented suit were also carrying rifles, which were also trying to shoot him down. Although they were smaller compared to its main gun, they were still bigger than Akira's LEO multi-rifle. A barrage of bullets was coming at Akira each containing considerable destructive power.

Akira, who understood that it was impossible to completely evade every single bullet, kept repositioning himself in between Latis and Chloe's APC. This caused the gun's security system to lock itself, which in turn, allowed Akira to produce gaps. He then took the route where there were the least bullets and limited the bullets that hit him.

However, that meant that he took some shots. Alpha, with her advanced calculation ability, accurately predicted where those shots would land and strengthened the forcefield armour on those particular locations. She temporarily increased the suit's power consumption and output when receiving those shots.

If it was purely their equipment, Akira had zero chance of winning. But with Alpha's support, Akira was somehow able to manage to fight evenly.

But even with Alpha's help, Latis still had the upper hand. One direct hit from Latis was enough to kill Akira, but that was not the case for Akira. As a matter of fact, Latis was completely fine after all this time. Akira has been desperately evading his attacks while he had been taking on Akira's attack head-on. This was the difference between them.

However, Latis was the first to waver. He knew that he only needed one clear hit to kill Akira, but that just would not happen. He thought that if he kept attacking, it was only a matter of time before one of his attacks went through. He was also trained in patience as well. Therefore, he was not that weak as to start getting impatient in this kind of situation.

But even so, his mind still wavered. The reason being, that Akira was slowly overwhelming him. Every time Akira blocked his attack, Akira's moves became sharper. As time went by, he was becoming faster, sharper, and keener as he kept evading Latis' attack and launched counters of his own.

Against Akira's unexpected fighting capability, in order to withstand his assault, the energy of the heavy augmented suit was being rapidly shaved away. At the moment, he still had the upper hand, but at this rate, it would not take that long before things would change. That knowledge only made him even more anxious, causing panic to rise.

[[At this rate, he will be pushed into a corner. If I can maintain the current situation, I can win.]] That difference in thought was one thing that both Latis and Akira agreed on.

But the situation itself quickly changed. Pillars of light rained down from the sky followed by huge explosions.

The shockwave also reached Chloe's APC. Even with the powerful suspension in the APC, the shaking still could be felt from inside as Chloe inadvertently said.

"Whoah, that was a rather huge tremor. It seems that the fighting is getting worse outside, huh?"

Chloe did not seem startled at all. As a matter of fact, she was smiling as if it turned out exactly the way she wanted. That was why she could calmly give Pamela, who was flusteredly running to check on her, an order.

Chloe was smiling as if she was immensely enjoying the situation, Pamela who saw that, felt a shiver because of that smile.

The pillar of lights from the sky were chasing Akira and Latis. But right before they rained down, Akira suddenly sensed a disturbance and immediately drove away from the area. Alpha also accelerated the bike away as fast as she could in order to get Akira away. Thanks to that, the light pillars, which seemed like never-ending walls to Akira, did not hit him.

A moment later, somewhere far away from them was blown apart. A powerful gust of wind hit Akira, but the bike's forcefield armour quickly projected out before it truly reached him, thus neutralizing them. Even so, it still blew him and his bike away.

Akira somehow managed to regain his balance while clamping down on the brake on top of the invisible footing. He could not help but get surprised by what just happened as he exclaimed.

"Alpha! What was that!?"

"A monster. The fight must have attracted one of those flying monsters that roam the sky."

It was normal for monsters to get attracted the more they fought. Of course, normal monsters were also attracted to that area, but they were blown away by the stray bullets and explosions. That was just how intense their battle was.

Both Latis and Akira were equipped way beyond the difficulty level of the area around Kugamayama city. But even so, they did not hesitate to use them in their high-speed battle. They threw stray bullets all over the place. The shockwave from the explosions of the mini-missiles used by Latis also reached the sky. Thus, there was no surprise that their fight attracted one of those flying monsters.

Akira inadvertently looked up. He could see floating points from where the light pillars came from. He then scanned in that direction using his information terminal. The thing on his display caused him to frown. The monster above him was a 50 metres long wasp-like monster.

The wasp was partially mechanical and was equipped with powerful weapons. The flying device that extended from its body looked like a layer of wings made of light. Its body and limbs were equipped with a large-size gatling gun and missile pods. While its stinger was replaced by a large calibre laser cannon.

Akira, who was basically overtaken by the frenzy to kill Chloe, regained some of his calm after seeing such a monstrosity. Since it was an insect-like monster, it reminded him of the giant bug swarm that he had to fight against during the inter-city transport-escort mission and thought that it was futile to try and fight it.

“Alpha, what’s the plan now? Should we call a temporary retreat?”

“That sounds like a good idea, but that’s only if it will let us go. My bet is that it came here because of the explosions caused by the mini-missiles. So, its main aim should be not you. Well, it should at least let you go, but…”

Akira glanced at Latis and frowned. He was already shooting at that huge monster using his heavy augmented suit while moving closer to Akira.

Latis was also able to evade the pillar of lights that were raining down from the sky. He noticed the monster above him and quickly thought of his options.

Although it was weaker than the monsters further to the east, it was a monster that came from the upper region. There was no doubt that it was still a formidable opponent. As expected, he could not fight Akira and that monster at the same time. The best option would be to get that monster to fight Akira, but it was not strange if Akira had the same idea. It was enough of a reason to worry that they would end up trying to push the monster to each other just to get killed all the same.

Latis also thought of working with Akira to fight that monster, but he quickly canned that idea. If Akira was that composed and clever enough to accept the deal, he would not be here in the first place.

He kept analyzing his options. The worst-case scenario was that both of them tried to get the other side to fight the monster and Latis was the first one to fall. Afterwards, Akira would lure that monster to attack Chloe's APC. If that happened, he would bring more danger to Chloe, that was the one thing that he needed to avoid no matter what.

If he ignored his own safety and kept focusing on Akira, Akira would not have the leeway to deal with the monster as well. Once that monster killed them both, there was a good chance that it would have accomplished its goal and just leave. It came down most likely because it was seeking to eliminate both Akira and him, or maybe only him. Therefore, in order to keep it away from Chloe's APC, he could not afford to return back with this monster in tow.

[I guess I have no other choice. Double suicide it is. Sorry, Pamela. I won't be coming back.]

Latis quickly made the decision to throw away his life. Although he did not want to die, if it was necessary, there was no hesitation to do so. Just like how his men had died fighting Akira because of their conviction, Latis made the same decision based on the same conviction.

The difference between Latis and his men was only how bad the situation was until they were forced to make such a decision. Right now, it was what the situation demanded. If by doing so, he would be able to guarantee Chloe's safety, kill Akira, and fulfill Chloe's order, then there was no place for hesitation.

With the decision in mind, Latis went straight at Akira, but suddenly a call from Pamela reached him.

"Latis, this is an order from Milady."

"I know. I leave the rest to you."

"…No, that's not it."

Latis thought that Pamela understood him without him even needing to tell her everything. Although he was not mistaken, the reply from her surprised him. After he listened to the content of the order, he was even more confused as he asked her.

“Pamela, if I do that, there’s a good chance that monster will come over there as well…”

But Pamela replied firmly.

“Latis, I’ll say it again. This is an order from Milady.”

“…Understood.”

Since he had failed once after disregarding Chloe’s order, he was not in a position to go against her order again. Latis replied with affirmation while putting aside all of his still lingering questions and worries. He could hear Pamela sigh in relief before she closed the call. Latis was a bit bothered by that reaction, but for now, he put it for later and focused on executing his master’s order.

The heavy augmented suit opened up its back and Latis was ejected out. A moment later, the heavy augmented suit released one of the missiles from its missile pod toward Chloe’s APC. Latis quickly held onto that missile and used it to carry him back to Chloe’s APC.

The unmanned heavy augmented suit then just kept on going. The autopilot controlling the suit moved to empty its ammo toward Akira and the monster as if it was covering for Latis’ retreat.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 264, Always A Close Call

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Latis, who rode the mini-missile, returned back to Chloe's APC. He let go of the missile while in mid-air and landed inside the APC, dropping through its opened ceiling door. He then gave Chloe a bow as she stood up from her seat to welcome Latis.

"…I am really sorry for my failure, I will accept any punishment."

Chloe squinted her eyes.

"Just to confirm. That apology is for failing to kill Akira, right? Not because you ignored my order again, right?"

Latis felt a slight tinge of fear from her as he replied with a serious expression.

"My apology for failing to kill Akira. It has brought great shame to me for not being able to keep my words before returning back. Unable to deliver any good news."

"In that case, just to make it clear, did you ignore my order again? Or did you not?"

“…I did my best to follow Milady’s order.”

Latis kept getting anxious with every reply. Finally, Chloe’s expression loosened.

“In that case, there’s no need to apologize. You were not able to kill that Hunter partly because of my order too. You did well out there. I’m sure you’re tired, you can leave guarding the APC to Pamela and take a rest.”

Instead of scolding Latis, Chloe looked amusedly at him. Unfortunately, that only made Latis even more confused.

“O-of course. Thank you very much for your kind words despite my failure…”

“Hm? Sure. Don’t worry about that, I’m pretty happy with the result, after all.”

“M-Milady, how should I interpret your words…?”

Chloe did not say anything and just returned back to her seat and sunk into it. She then smiled happily as she started to think about her next plan.

Latis threw a confused look at Pamela, seeking help. But Pamela just shook her head as if to say that she was as confused as he was.

The monstrous wasp kept shooting the weapons on its legs at its target. The unmanned augmented suit shot countless missiles from its missile pods and kept shooting its guns at that monster. While they were exchanging fire, Akira kept running around, trying to not get involved.

If they were fighting each other head-on. They would be locked in a 3-way fight. But Akira understood that he was no match against the monster. Meanwhile, the unmanned augmented suit was engaging the monster while chasing after Akira. Thus, they were running around with Akira and the unmanned augmented suit orbiting around the wasp monster.

The reason why Akira did not just leave and chase after Chloe’s APC was because he wanted to avoid getting stuck between the APC, the unmanned augmented suit and the monster. At least, until the unmanned augmented suit got destroyed, he could not afford to simply chase after the APC.

The unmanned augmented suit and the wasp monster were exchanging attacks head-on.

The wasp monster did not have the dexterity to evade the heavy augmented suit's attacks. The cluster missiles coming from the unmanned augmented suit went straight and broke off into countless mini-missiles. Every single one of them managed to land on the wasp monster, enveloping its huge bodies in a fiery of explosions. Meanwhile, it kept shooting huge warheads repeatedly at the wasp's abdomen. Each warhead could obliterate Akira in one shot.

In front of such an assault, even a monster from the upper region could not get away unscathed. The armour plating covering the wasp's body crumbled along with the flesh attached to it. However, what laid under them was another layer of armour plating. Moreover, the liquid that oozed out from its open wound quickly hardened, thus rapidly closing its open wounds. Although the barrage from the unmanned augmented suit shaved off its life force, it was still far from being dead.

Of course, the unmanned augmented suit was also damaged from that intense exchange. The lasers and the beams coming from the wasp devoured the remaining energy of that augmented suit.

Compared to the wasp monster, the unmanned augmented suit was relatively small, flying around at a high speed. Moreover, the weapons that the monster was equipped with were designed to fight against an opponent of the same size. In exchange for high firepower, its accuracy was mediocre. Because of that, it was difficult for it to accurately aim at the unmanned augmented suit.

However, the wasp only needed to land a few hits with its firepower. Thus, it kept shooting. With the unmanned augmented suit running on autopilot, it was moving less dexterously compared to when Latis was in control. It could only evade half of the onslaught and took half of the attacks head-on, sustaining severe damage with each hit. The parts that could not be fully protected with its forcefield armour produced a blinding light, leaving a dent in its chassis.

Of course, the augmented suit was also trying to shoot at Akira, but since Akira kept positioning himself so that the monster would be located in between them, all its attention was on the monster wasp. With the monster being focused on attacking the unmanned augmented suit, the battle was mainly between them. Akira, who kept on running away from that battle, looked back and frowned.

“With that monster roaming the sky, it’s no wonder why people are usually not allowed to fly.”

“But with that being said, that monster is normally only in the upper region, you see. Normally, it would never come down like this.”

“I see, so why is it here?”

“No idea. One of the stray bullets might have hit it. It would not be strange for a gun like that to be able to hit a monster up that high. Especially when shot straight up.”

“Seriously… give me a break already…”

Akira could not help but frown. Alpha, who saw that, smiled and tried to cheer him up.

“But if that’s really the case, it might just return back up once it destroys that heavy augmented suit.”

It was not clear whether the monster was also aiming to eliminate Akira as well. That was exactly why Akira was only running around without attacking it. Even if it was by pure accident, if he hit the monster, there was no doubt that it would target Akira as well.

“Abandoning the option to return back, without any fear of getting that APC involved, that amour suit can now use all its firepower. It’s fighting pretty hard although it’s only on autopilot. It would be great if they kill each other.”

“Well, true. If that’s indeed the case.”

But that faint hope was immediately crushed. After the wasp finished recharging the laser cannon on its stinger, the wasp then directed it towards the unmanned suit. Right at the next moment, the suit was swallowed by a pillar of light, destroying it without even leaving a trace.

In order to make sure its target got destroyed, the laser was shot with a wide range and at a short distance. Thanks to that, it was not able to reach that far, but it was more than enough to envelop the area in front of the wasp in blinding light. The shockwave even reached Akira, who was positioned behind the wasp. Once the flash died down, a claw-like mark was left on top of the ground, greatly changing the contour of the land. Especially since the cannon evaporated a large chunk of it.

The heavy augmented suit that was completely unfettered after all those attacks from Akira was blown away to nothingness in just one simple attack. Seeing that, Akira could not help but knit his eyebrows and made a stern expression as he said.

“…Even that hard augmented suit has no traces left, huh? That thing is no joke.”

“Well, I bet that its forcefield armour has also been weakened after losing so much energy during that fight. Either way, it doesn’t change the fact that it got annihilated. Now then, it would be great if that thing would just leave, but…”

Akira was anxiously looking at the wasp, waiting for its response with a glimmer of hope. But, that puny ray of hope was completely crushed at the very next moment.

Instead of returning up, the wasp that had completely eliminated one of its targets turned around to face its remaining target. Although it had lost some of its weapons from fighting against that unmanned augmented suit, it still had enough fighting capability to continue its mission. With the weapons on its legs aimed at Akira, it was obvious that it was going to engage with Akira next.

Right after Akira accelerated his bike away, the wasp started its assault. Although its lasers and its beams were not anti-forcefield armour, they were powerful enough to be able to crush through forcefield armour as if they were non-existent. The increase in temperature caused the air in their trajectories to form plasma and explosions soared the moment they made contact with the ground.

Alpha protected Akira by executing a complex maneuver with her amazing driving skill. While at the same time, she warned Akira.

“Akira! We have no other choice! We need to shoot it down!”

“Roger! But, with that augmented suit out of the picture, we can first catch up to that APC, right?”

“No!”

“What? Why?”

With that much firepower, if he could bring that monster to the APC, even the APC would not be able to get out from an attack completely unscathed. That unmanned augmented suit stayed behind to make sure that would not happen, but now that it was gone, Akira thought that he was free to do that now. Furthermore, the APC should get desperate and try to shoot the monster down as well. But outside of his expectation, Alpha rejected his idea.

Alpha looked at Akira with a solemn expression which caused Akira’s frown to deepen.

“We’re approaching Kugamayama city. If we try to chase that APC with that monster following us, City Management would see it as us bringing that monster over to the city. If that happens, they will never allow you to return to Kugamayama city.”

Those who brought swarms of monsters back to the city were often eliminated together with the swarm. The decision to kill them with the monsters relied not on the number of monsters, but on the strength of the monster they brought with them.

If it was only a handful of weak monsters, they would not dispatch their main defence squad and just let the guards stationed in the slums to handle them. But that was only because they would cause minimal damage to the city's lower district.

This meant that if it was a powerful monster, even if it was only a single monster, they would dispatch the defence squad. After all, a powerful monster would cause considerable damage to the lower district, in the worst-case scenario, they might even damage the area close to the wall.

If Akira brought this flying monster to the city, it might even cause damage to the inner district. So, there was no doubt that the defence squad would use whatever they had to prevent the worst from happening. They would dispatch the powered suit squad equipped with powerful weapons to intercept Akira. It was not clear when they would start the dispatch with Akira already being close to the outskirts of the city.

"Moreover, they might have predicted this situation right from the start. That is why they are not trying to attack us from the APC. It is to avoid ending up as the monster's target."

"Dammit, so that's what is going on, huh!?"

Alpha explained to Akira, that in the worst-case scenario, the reason why Chloe left the Lion Steel facility near Mihazono ruin and headed to the city was to lure him to chase after her. There was a good chance that all of this was a trap for him. Since they were already trapped, it would not be strange if they prepared another trap for him.

Akira frowned. If that was indeed the case, then what Chloe said back in Mihazono ruin might as well be to lure him as well. Back then, he ended up taking that bait and almost got killed. But the fact that he was still alive now might be because they had predicted he would retaliate and had intentionally spared him back then.

With both his life and death basically in the palm of their hands. That fact hit something deep inside Akira, causing an ominous dark emotion to rise up from deep inside his heart.

But before that emotion completely devoured him, Akira was able to somehow manage to put a lid on it. To keep his own emotions from making him do something rash, which might lead to him killing himself, Akira managed to keep his cool.

“…Alpha, we can kill that thing, right? In that case, we just need to do it quickly and turn our attention to that APC, right?”

Alpha raised her eyebrows in surprise, but she quickly smiled confidently and said.

“Yup, that’s fine. It’s a simple thing to do with my support. Just leave it to me.”

“Alright, I’m counting on you, let’s go!”

Akira then aimed his rifle at the huge wasp with an exhilarated smile.

__*__*__*__

Back in the APC, Chloe was smiling while thinking about her plan. After she looked at the information from the radar that was scanning the area around the APC, she went into deep thought.

“…Hmmm, it might be a bit too fast.”

After she mumbled, she called the driver and gave her order. The driver was not sure why Chloe would give such an order, but he decided to abide by it.

Latis, who had already changed from his augmented suit to his original butler outfit, frowned with a confused look. He hesitated for a bit before finally deciding to ask Chloe.

“Milady, although it’s true that there is some distance between us, it’s no doubt safer to stay away from them. I’m sure that Milady also knows this. So, may I inquire the reason why Milady would take on such a risk and ask the driver to slow down?”

Chloe stared at Latis. There were times when Latis asked questions like this. Although he had an inkling of the answer, he still did so to lighten the mood. However, this time, Latis asked because he really had no clue. Since Chloe knew as much, she smiled and simply gave a rather vague answer.

“Hm? Well, I just thought that we were going too fast.”

“…I see.”

Although that did not resolve Latis’ confusion, he did not pursue it any further.

__*__*__*__

Akira paced his bike, circling the wasp, avoiding its attacks.

The energy bullets released by the wasp scattered around the area and exploded the moment they made contact with the ground. It left behind huge craters. Even a common tank would be blown to bits with a single hit from those bullets. Akira kept driving around while looking at the destruction that those bullets caused, as they were raining down.

Drones that came out from the wasp’s abdomen flew and sourced Akira. The flying disk that had a mirror-like surface swarmed at him. Although they did not directly harm him, They bounced the laser shot by the main body’s laser cannon toward him. Furthermore, they surrounded Akira as they envelop him inside a storm of energy bullets.

Of course, Akira did not just stay silent, he desperately tried to counter them. With the help of Alpha’s advanced driving skill, the bike slipped through the opening between the barrage of energy bullets. Meanwhile, Akira would shoot at the drones to change the direction of their reflective surfaces. He did not stop shooting even as the scene of the energy bullets rampaging around him made him knit his eyebrows.

Once Akira charged his charge bullet to its max, he quickly aimed it at the wasp and released a barrage of C bullets that engulfed it. Given how large the wasp was, none of the bullets missed their target.

However, it hardly damaged the wasp. It quickly replaced any of its armour tiles that were shot down. It could do the same for its weapons that Akira had managed to destroy. Its flying device was protected by layers of forcefield armour, which projected a layer of light all the time. Thus, Akira's bullets could not reach it.

"Alpha! That thing seems completely fine even after taking that barrage! How are we going to take it down!?"

"Well, it's a monster from the upper region, after all. No surprise that it is this resilient. But don't worry, we can defeat it. Also, it's about time it finishes charging its main cannon."

Akira was reminded of the laser cannon that evaporated Latis' heavy augmented suit. It was so powerful and covered such a wide area that it seemed impossible to evade. Because of that, Akira could not help but frown.

"Alright, I'll be careful."

"Okay then, get yourself ready."

"…Hm?"

Akira noticed from that exchange that it sounded like they were talking about something different. But since the wasp moved to aim its main cannon, Akira quickly dropped that thought and focused on what to do next. The wasp started to fly higher to open distance between them, focusing on getting Akira within its main cannon's range.

In order to get away from the main cannon's range, Akira could not afford to let it fly away. Thus, when Alpha told him to get ready, Akira thought that she meant for him to get ready to do something reckless again. Something to stay away from the main cannon's range.

But that was not the case. Instead of going up, chasing after the wasp, Alpha controlled the bike to make a sharp U-turn, as if heading straight to the centre of where the main cannon would cover.

"Alpha!? What are you doing!?"

Akira increased his time perception compression by pure reflex. Inside that extremely slow-moving world, Alpha smiled confidently at him and replied.

"I did tell you to get ready, no? The more flustered you are, the less likely we will be able to pull this off, you know? So, make sure to get your resolve ready."

"…Alright alright, I get it already!"

Akira still had a stern look and his mouth curved into a confident smile. He quickly changed gear and did as Alpha instructed. He put back his LEO multi rifle and took the AF anti-material cannon off from the bike's arm before aiming it at the wasp's main cannon.

The AF anti-material cannon took a huge chunk of energy from the bike's energy tank. Alpha completely deactivated its safety lock, as it took in as much energy as it could to its breaking limit. The only reason it did not self-destruct was because Alpha had precisely calculated its limit.

The reason why Akira took the cannon himself instead of leaving it on the bike's arm was because there was a limit on how accurate the bike's arm can be. With Akira carrying the cannon himself, Alpha could give her full support to increase the accuracy.

The wasp had mostly completed its preparation to shoot, but it still needed a few more seconds. It also needed time to remove its forcefield armour layers protecting its muzzle before shooting out the laser. Normally, it should have enough time to do so while getting away from Akira, but since Akira was rushing straight at it, the wasp did not have the chance to do so.

Because of that, even after Akira went straight in front of its cannon, it still could not shoot. Akira and the wasp had their respective cannons aimed straight at each other.

Right at the next moment, Akira's AF anti-material cannon released a lance of light which pierced through the wasp. Because it was right before the wasp shot its main cannon, it was right at the moment its forcefield armour was down. Akira's shot destroyed the fully charged main cannon, went straight through the abdomen, and pierced through the wasp's entire body.

Since it was fully charged and right before the cannon released its shot, there was a huge release of energy. Intense light rapidly leaked from the large wasp's body. It quickly spread to the wasp's weapons, flying device, and armour tiles. Although it was an unbelievably powerful monster, it could not withstand an explosion coming from the inside. Despite still mostly maintaining its original shape, it was completely dead as gravity took full control of its humongous body.

Akira flusteredly drove away the moment he saw that huge wasp free-falling right on top of him. Large chunks of wreckage fell around him, they made loud crashes the moment they landed, which were accompanied by minor explosions. Seeing that, Akira inadvertently looked at Alpha with widened eyes.

"See, it'll be fine if you just leave it to me."

Akira somehow managed to smile in response.

"You're right. By the way, how close was that from killing me?"

"Hmmm, well, if you ask me that, I guess it was a few milli-seconds from you being dead?"

Akira smiled bitterly.

“…Hm, what can I say? Why does it always come down to something so dangerous every single time?”

“Hm, I wonder about that. But I guess it’s too late to be complaining about that now, no?”

“Huh? Why?”

“Isn’t it always like that ever since you met me?”

Seeing Alpha smile as she said so, Akira’s bitter smile turned into a sweeter one.

“You’re right, it’s way too late to be complaining about that now, huh… alright then! Let’s go chase that APC!”

Akira’s face turned serious as he turned the bike around and sped toward Chloe’s APC.

During his fight with the huge wasp, the APC was quite away from the battle and was already pretty close to Kugamayama city. If the APC had kept its original speed, it would have arrived in Kugamayama city by now.

The moment Pamela noticed Akira’s signal moving toward the APC, she quickly told the driver to go at full speed toward the city.

“Milady, he started moving towards us. He has defeated the monster and is heading this way at this very moment. At this rate, he will catch up to us.”

“Let the APC go at its current speed. There’s also no need to try to engage with him. Just use the APC’s defences to withstand his attacks.”

“B-But, in that case…”

Chloe stared at Pamela, and with that, Pamela could no longer argue back.

“B-by your command!”

Chloe lightly nodded as her expression turned slightly stern. She then mumbled.

“…What’s taking them so long? They should have been here by now. Those guys in Kugamayam city are slower than I thought.”

Pamela and the others did not understand why Chloe said so. Likewise, they did not know what her mumbling meant. But even so, they still abide by her order. Though, with a stern look on their faces.

Akira quickly closed the distance to Chloe’s APC. But due to Chloe’s order, they did not make any attempts to repel him. Right when Pamela was considering ignoring Chloe’s order for the sake of her master’s safety, she suddenly noticed another blip appeared on the radar.

Chloe, who noticed that, smiled and said.

“Whatever happens, keep going toward the city at this speed. Start broadcasting that message again, saying that I’m in this APC.”

Pamela and the others looked at each other with confusion, but they quickly followed her order.

Akira, who could be seen from Chloe’s APC, was looking at the vehicle with extreme intensity to kill. Seeing that, Alpha warned him.

“Akira, keep your calm, okay?”

“…I know.”

The reason why Akira gave a small pause was because he knew he was not calm. He took deep breaths to calm his nerves and then frowned as he looked at the APC, confused.

“They’re not attacking back… Is this another trap?”

“Even if it is indeed a trap, if you’re going to kill them, it’s best to do it while we’re still in the middle of the wasteland. After all, if one of their stray bullets went and damage the city, the city defence squad would attack them as well."

"You have a point. I guess we have no time to waste then. Let's go."

Akira accelerated the bike even quicker. The APC was not even trying to repel him. So, he was free to go as fast as he could to catch up to the APC. Akira felt extremely suspicious since he was not facing any resistance. Nonetheless, he kept chasing after the APC.

At this rate, Akira would be able to get on top of the APC and would be free to start slaughtering them. He knew that it would be a matter of time before the defence squad arrived. There did not seem to be some kind of change within the APC. Thus, Akira could not help but get more cautious and suspicious.

That was when Alpha's made a stern expression and warned.

"Akira! Be careful!"

Right at the same time, suddenly, the area around him was rained down with explosive warheads. Large, countless warheads were falling like rain, wiping out everything in the area. The barrage was accompanied by a warning broadcasted through the general communication line.

"This is Kugamayama city defence squad! Lower your weapon! Any form of resistance will be seen as hostile action towards City Management! Repeat! Lower your weapon! Any form of resistance will be seen as hostile action towards City Management!"

The source of the broadcast as well as the explosive warheads were the powered suits dispatched by City Management. The barrages were to serve as a warning to Akira, as well as Chloe's group.

A large battle near Kugamayama city was enough of a reason for the City Management to dispatch its defence squad. Due to the scale of the battle just now, it had sent heavily armed powered suits to suppress the battle, instead of first scouting.

The analysis of the signal by City Management showed that there was a good chance a powerful monster was involved in that battle. Once the gigantic blip vanished, they noticed two signals moving away from that battle. The city defence squad thought that there was a good chance they were the ones responsible for bringing that powerful monster this close to the city. Thus, they went to suppress and arrest them.

However, there was an issue regarding one of the signals. To be more precise, the ones in the APC. The APC that ignored their warning to surrender was broadcasting a message saying that it was carrying an officer from the Lion Steel company. As such, they needed to be extra careful with them. If they somehow killed her by mistake, it might cause a full-blown war between Lion Steel company and Kugamayama city. Thus, they had to be careful when trying to suppress Akira and Chloe.

Even so, the APC ignored them and kept on going. They went past the powered suits, towards Kugamayama city.

The commander of the squad told some of his men to go ahead.

“Unit 7, 8, and 9, chase after that APC! Try to minimize the damage on the APC while you try to stop them!”

The 3 units that received the order, went to chase after Chloe’s APC.

“Unit 6, go check the battleground, unit 1 to unit 5, surround the guy on the bike! Don’t let him get away!”

The 5 units obeyed that order and went to surround Akira.

After facing that barrage, Akira immediately directed the bike toward the ground, landed, and parked. Although Akira understood that they were not trying to kill him, since the barrage close to him was obviously much more intense than the one close to Chloe’s group, he knew that it was impossible to force his way through all those explosives.

After he stopped, the powered suits surrounded him. Akira frowned and looked at the APC that was trailing away from him. At this distance, the APC already seemed like a blip to him.

Since his sight was zoomed in with the help of his augmented vision, he could see Chloe smiling while waving at him. Normally, they would not be able to look at each other from that distance. However, it was obvious that Chloe was looking at him and knew that he was also looking at her.

Akira went to reach his AF anti-material cannon by pure reflex. However, he reminded himself.

[Doing this while being surrounded by the city defence squad is stupid.] As he gritted his teeth and held himself back. Chloe was looking at him with her eyebrows raised. She smirked exasperatedly and shook her head before returning into the APC. The backdoor of the APC then closed.

The captain of the squad once again warned Akira.

“Lower your weapon! Any form of resistance will be seen as hostile action towards City Management!”

Akira shouted back.

“I refuse!!”

The calm part of his mind reminded Akira that putting down his guns and letting them arrest him would not fix the situation at all. Meanwhile, the emotional part inside him was telling him that anyone who got in his way was an enemy. Akira tried his best to calm down while he obeyed the logical voice inside of him and refused to lower his gun.

The powered suits aimed their weapons at Akira this time.

“Lower your weapon! Any form of resistance will be seen as hostile action towards City Management!”

“Absolutely not!!”

Akira’s voice was harsher this time and he still had his AF anti-material cannon in hand.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 265, 50 Billion Bounty

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The leader of the powered suit squad from the Kugamayama city, Guutol, was pressed with a difficult decision.

Normally, they would just kill Akira since he had rejected their demand. But they could not do so, easily, this time. As the outside camera was directed at Akira, it quickly identified him. Hunter by the name of Akira, who had added a system note – a dangerous Hunter.

The commander of the defence squad was given high-level privilege so that he would have no trouble doing his duty. Furthermore, at the moment, a high ranking officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry was in the upper district of the city. As a form of cooperation between Sakashita Heavy Industry and City Management, they were sharing information between them.

That was where Akira's information came in. It included records from when he escorted the inter-city transport to the Zegelt city. This job took place in the eastern side of the eastern district. He fought against multiple powerful monsters as well as powered suits, and to top it off, repelled a group of Nationalists that had originally come to kidnap an important officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry and won.

After Guutol skimmed through Akira's information, he understood that attacking him would be a terrible idea. There was a good chance that the whole squad would get wiped out.

It was a given that an important officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry would be guarded by a powerful bodyguard. The Nationalists would have known about it. Therefore, they would have sent powerful combatants to kidnap the officer. The fact that Akira had won against them, meant that he might be as powerful as that bodyguard. Although they had no idea how powerful such a person would be, Guutol at least knew how powerful a certain bodyguard from Sakashita Heavy Industry by the name of Hammerz was. After all, he was there during a recent battle near Mihazono ruin.

Of course, Guutol did not think that Akira was as strong as Hammerz. However, it does not change the fact that he repelled the Nationalists, who attacked the inter-city transport vehicles. Therefore, he was obviously at least that strong. Moreover, the record from that inter-city transport-escort mission also stated that, at the very least, Akira was able to fight powered suits without using one.

To put the cherry on top, one of his men then reported to Guutol.

"This is Unit 6. Commander, we've confirmed that the monster, which might be the source of that large battle signal just a moment ago, is dead."

"Got it. Does it still retain some of its original shape? Can you at least tell what kind of monster it is?"

"This is just my guess, but… It seems to be a type of giant insect, a cyborg soldier wasp. Its length must have been around 50 metres."

"What!? Even a common inter-city transport vehicle would be destroyed in no time against that thing, you know? Why the heck is it doing here!? They should be only way further to the east or way up … Dammit! What the heck is going on here!?"

Personally speaking, Guutol wished that it was a mistake. However, that monster matched the predictive size from its signal during that battle. Since it was already dead, it meant that someone must have killed it. Adding to the information that he had received about Akira, it was impossible not to suspect Akira of killing it.

He made sure to keep that in mind as he made his resolve and once again returned to his main duty.

“This is my last warning! Drop your weapon!”

“I refuse!”

Guutol ended up having Akira’s muzzle pointed in his direction. That simple move showed zero hesitation, which caused Guutol’s worry to get closer to reality.

Guutol knew that Akira did that not due to a spur of emotions. Akira pointed his weapon at Guutol because he knew full well he could win. He thought the only reason why Akira did not shoot right away was because, as expected, he was hesitating to pick a fight with the whole of Kugamayama city. In the case where they really ended up fighting, there was a good chance Akira would get swayed by his emotion and go a step further to actually attack Kugamayama city.

Of course, Guutol had the resolve to forfeit his life in order to protect Kugamyama city. But given the option, he would still pick a better situation to fight. He could not afford to endanger the city. However, that did not mean he could just back off. Akira was not in a calm state of mind. He could not allow Akira to go back to the city in his current state.

Guutol was really stuck in between two hard choices.

Akira was also close to pulling the trigger. He wanted to avoid any unnecessary fights. But it was not like he could simply back off either. He already believes that lowering his rifle now would only lead to nothing good. Moreover, even if he decided to escape, those surrounding him did not seem to be willing to just let him go.

As his thoughts gradually moved towards fighting being the only choice, then it was better to make the first strike. Although Akira's logical mind was still functional, deep inside him, he could hear a voice screaming at him to kill everything in his way. While listening to that voice, even Akira's calm side was looking for a good reason to start a fight. He frowned and was close to finally making his resolve.

But suddenly, Guutol said to Akira.

"Alright, I get it! You don't need to disarm!"

Akira did not expect that at all. However, Guutol did not stop there as he continued with a stern tone.

"But! You'll have to tell me exactly what went on! And you have to do it here! Until we understand what's going on, we can't let you get any closer to Kugamayama city! If you can't accept this, we will have no other choice but to arrest you with force! So, what say you!?"

Right after that, Alpha immediately interjected.

"Akira, let's stop here for now. You need to rest and resupply, and also, calm down so as not to make any more unnecessary enemies. We can ask Viola to investigate her whereabouts again later and properly prepare to kill her. They've basically withdrawn, so you should withdraw as well."

Alpha then smiled gently at Akira to help him to calm down.

"Fine…"

Akira lowered his AF anti-material cannon and sighed.

"…Sorry, it seems that I'm not as calm as I thought I was."

As Akira obviously showed no wish to engage in battle anymore, the powered suits surrounding him also lowered their weapons. But none of them move from where they stood.

__*__*__*__

Chloe's APC eventually reached Kugamayama city, the APC just went through the slums and headed straight toward the inner wall in the lower district.

However, the powered suits from the city defence squad quickly interfered. Although they could not use their weapons, they had the power to stop the APC with force.

Although it was a heavily armoured APC made to protect an important officer of the Lion Steel company, as expected, it did not have the horsepower to go against three powered suits. It did try to force its way through as it recklessly went through buildings, but it eventually came to a halt. The reinforcement from the city defence squad that the powered suit had called beforehand quickly surrounded the APC.

The doors of the APC opened, and the moment Chloe and her servants stepped out, the city defence squad aimed their rifles at them. Latis quickly took a fighting stance, but Chloe stopped him with a waft of her hand.

The leader of the squad saw that and immediately decided what to do.

"I hope that you will cooperate. Be thankful that we are not arresting you."

Chloe was not perturbed at all as she simply smiled and said.

"Thank you. So then, can you lead the way?"

"…This way then."

The man speaking was a bit surprised by how calm Chloe was. However, he still led Chloe into the inner wall. At the same time, he sent a glance to his men. His men understood what they had to do as they immediately proceeded to arrest Latis and the others. At first, Latis and the rest were uncertain whether to just let themselves get arrested or to fight back. Chloe then lightly shook her head, so they decided to stand down.

"…If you could have instructed your men to calm down with just that, couldn't you have done it sooner?"

“My apologies. It’s a complicated matter related to the main company, you see. Also, it’s different here and there. Here, we are in the city while over there is the wasteland.”

“…I see.”

He could not tell if Chloe purposely allowed her subordinates to act out because her safety as an officer from the Lion Steel was only guaranteed when she was within the lower district of the city. It could be because of something else. However, it was not like he could figure it out now, so he proceeded to take Chloe inside without saying anything.

__*__*__*__

On the other hand, Akira was basically just standing by in the middle of the wasteland with the city defence squad’s powered suits surrounding him. Since it started getting rather boring without anything to do, he eventually sighed and asked.

“Hey, just how long do I need to wait here?”

The leader of the powered suits squad answered through the short-range communication line.

“You still need to stay here. We’re still awaiting decisions from those back at base. So, just wait here and don’t try anything funny. If you don’t want to wait, feel free to go to another city. As a matter of fact, we can escort you there.”

“My house is over here, you know?”

“No. We can’t let you get any closer to Kugamayama city.”

Akira heaved another huge sigh. Guutol, who heard that, also sighed and exasperatedly said.

“Seriously though, do you really understand what you are doing? You’re basically picking a fight with the Lion Steel company. Normally, no one would do that, you know?”

Akira’s bored face turned sour.

“Hell if I care! They attacked me first so I’m just paying back the favour.”

“That’s not the point…”

Akira already told Guutol what he knew. After listening to his explanation, Guutol believed that this matter was something he could not handle. This issue far exceeded his authority to deal with. Therefore, he bounced what he had learnt to his superior and now was awaiting a reply. After all, no normal person could handle a Hunter that broke down negotiations with the Lion Steel company and survived a full-blown fight with them. More so, attract a monster from the upper region to come down, and kill said monster.

“Either way, I bet they can’t really decide before listening to the other party’s side of things. It seems that at this very moment, they’re talking about this with someone by the name of Chloe. We can do nothing but wait until they compile all the information and make their decision regarding this matter.”

Hearing that, Akira raised his eyebrows.

“So, Chloe is basically under arrest?”

“Of course, there’s no way we will let them get away.”

“…I see.”

Since it seemed like City Management would not simply let Chloe go scot-free, Akira relaxed a bit and decided to wait a little longer.

Back in Kugamayama city, Chloe was arrested and brought to a city defence squad’s facility for further investigation and questioning. Even so, she was given a room meant for visitors and was treated like a city officer. The reason being that she was a part of the founder family of the Lion Steel company and was cooperative. Therefore, they believe there was no need to take her to the interrogation room.

Considering the status of her family, she was someone with high standing in Kugamayama city. They might even have to send an officer from the city to deal with her. After a short discussion with the company, the officer who was responsible for questioning Chloe, Udajima, went to check with those who arrested her. As he went into the room, he was relieved to hear that she was not just another brat with too much power.

But that relief was immediately crushed. The moment Udajima started questioning her, she started screaming back, exactly like a spoiled brat with too much power.

“Who do you think I am!? I’m from Lorentz house, you know!? The founder family of the Lion Steel company! Do you really understand who you are talking to!?”

A bad spoiled rich brat just barked out her privileged lineage. It showed exactly how spoiled she was. Although she was adorned with an expensive dress, she had no shred of grace. She acted just like any foolish spoiled brat, who thought that raising their voices would get them anything they wanted.

Udajima’s face twitched as he tried to calm her down.

“Please calm down. We just want to know what exactly happened.”

“Didn’t I tell you before!? Were you not listening!?”

“When you said a monster who would not listen to reason, were you referring to the Hunter named Akira? Or is it that cyborg soldier wasp?”

“Were you even listening!? He was trying to kill me! So, he’s no different to a monster, you know!?”

It was important for the city defence squad to make sure whether Chloe was running toward the city because she was being attacked by a Hunter or by a monster. They needed to make that one thing clear. However, Chloe kept referring to that wasp monster and Akira as the same, making it difficult to differentiate them. Furthermore, she kept blaming it on the listener’s lack of ability to understand.

The way Chloe kept bringing up the Lion Steel company and looking down on Kugamayama city made it immensely annoying to Udajima. He no longer had that much patience left. Seeing how she kept calling Akira a monster, Udajima had a good idea.

“It sounds like you’re running to the city since you’re being chased by this monster, Akira. Did I get that right?”

Chloe immediately raised her voice and got angry as if to hide the fact that Udajima’s hit the bull’s eye.

“R-running away!? W-we’re just keeping our distance from him! A-and also, w-what’s so bad about running away, anyway!? It’s the city defence squad’s job to kill any monsters that approach the city, right?!”

“Of course. In fact, we did dispatch our men to deal with the situation.”

“Then there’s no problem with it, right!? Or are you telling me to just face that monster and not to run away!? That is not my job, you know!? Your job!”

As Chloe started to smile haughtily again, Udajima then said with a solemn, straight face.

“That is indeed our job, as such, you are arrested for trying to attack the city.”

“Haah!?”

In front of a shocked Chloe, Udajima called out two guards and ordered them to arrest her.

“She’s guilty of trying to endanger the city. Arrest her.”

The guards looked at each other with a troubled expression. Since it was an order from their superior, they grabbed Chloe’s arm and arrested her.

Chloe flusteredly tried to fight back.

“What the-!? Are you for real!? Do you really understand what you’re doing!?”

Udajimia looked at Chloe with a straight stare.

“People who bring monsters to the city are guilty of endangering the city. You didn’t even know that, huh? Or did you think we would never accuse you just because you’re from the Lion Steel company? Get off your high horse already.”

“Are you really fine with doing something like this? I will see it as a decision made by Kugamayama city, you know!? I hope you know that when you ordered your men to arrest me! If you want to stop, this is your last chance!”

“If you seriously thought that we won’t arrest you just because you are from the Lion Steel company, you will regret it. Take her away!”

Chloe was dragged out of the room by the guards.

“I hope you understand what you are doing here! You do know what will happen to Kugamayam city if you do this to someone from the Lion Steel company, right!? This is your last chance, you know!?”

“Yeah yeah, you’re the only one who will regret this.”

Chloe kept screaming as she was dragged out, but her voice vanished as the door to the room closed.

Udajima was finally able to calm down a bit as he sighed.

“Good grief, and here I thought that it would go at least half-decently considering that it was someone from the main founder family of the Lion Steel company. I guess I was too naive, huh…”

Although Udajima had lost his conflict for influence against Inabe, he was still an officer from City Management. Thus, naturally, he had the skill to support his position. Despite his influence being less than before, he still maintained his seat as an officer. The gap between him and Inabe had widened and this gap in influence was already well-established. However, given a chance, he still hoped to change the situation.

The officer responsible for the area under Tsubaki was Yanagisawa, but it was also part of the region under Inabe's control. As such, Inabe had a good influence in that area as well. Moreover, at the moment, Yanagisawa was busy with Sakashita Heavy Industry. He was busy in search of Shirou, so he had delegated most of his administrative duties in that area. As such, most of Yanagisawa's duties went to Inabe and those who wanted to make some kind of connection with Tsubaki would, in turn, approach Inabe. This caused Inabe's position to strengthen even further.

Since Udajima was regarded as a part of the opposition faction, he was not given any chance to have anything to do with the area under Tsubaki. He might get a chance if he pleaded with Inabe, but Udajima had his pride. Therefore, there was no way he would ask Inabe.

That was when that matter regarding Chloe reached him. If he could solve this issue and establish a connection with the Lion Steel company, he might have the chance to change the current power balance. Udajima thought so as he decided to face Chloe. However, after watching how she reacted, he realized that it was a huge failure.

"…Well, although she is like that, she is still someone from the founder family of the Lion Steel company. There's no way they would just abandon her. She'll at least serve as a bridge to connect to someone else from her family."

If he could bring more profits to Kugamayama city in exchange for releasing Chloe under better terms, Udajima might be able to regain some of his influence. Furthermore, he would also gain a connection to the Lion Steel company. As Udajima thought so and looked at the door where Chloe got dragged out, he felt envious. He was pondering how, in this world, such a girl held such influence just by being born in the right family.

The moment Chloe was dragged out of the room, her attitude completely changed. She immediately stopped shouting and fixed her posture with her arms still restrained. She even gracefully smiled.

She then glanced at the guards and gracefully said to them.

“I am really sorry for causing trouble to both of you. I don’t really mind whether it is a cell in the basement or just house arrest. Though, can you please let me have access to the web? Of course, a general line would be fine as well. I don’t mind recording it as well.”

“Eh? Well…”

They were not only surprised by her sudden change in attitude but they were also shocked by her sudden graceful aura. With her both arms still restrained, Chloe lowered her head with a serious expression.

“If I can’t contact the Lion Steel company, they might think that I am already dead. I’m sure it will trouble Kugamayama city if that happens. So, for the sake of both parties, please let this one thing slide.”

Both guards believed that roughly treating someone from the Lion Steel company was a bad idea. Also, with how Chloe was bowing, they could not bring themselves to refuse her request.

“W-well, if it’s only that much…”

“Thank you very much for your leniency!”

Chloe smiled and bowed deeply toward the guards, but she could not give a perfect bow since her arms were still restrained.

The guards who noticed that let Chloe’s arms go by pure reflex. The moment they did that, they realised that they made a grave mistake. However, even after she was free, Chloe did not try to run away nor fight back. She simply perfected her bow. Therefore, the guards thought that it was not that big of an issue.

Even so, the guards were confused by her sudden change of attitude. They thought it might be a good idea to let Udajima, who was still in the room, know about this. However, before they did, Chloe smiled and asked.

“Now then, shall we go? Where to?”

She then offered her arms to be restrained again. It was an indicative gesture. Though it was only in appearance, it was better to have her properly restrained. It was also her way to covertly indicate, as someone in a higher position, she did not mind getting detained. It demonstrated the clear difference in their position. Chloe, was someone who stood to rule over others.

“Ah, right, this way then.”

The guards were carried away by the mood and restrained her arms again before they continued to take her away, completely forgetting to report back to Udajima.

__*__*__*__

Back in the wasteland, as Akira was still waiting. Suddenly, a message from the Hunter Office reached him. He took out his information terminal to check but Alpha stopped him and warned him with a solemn expression.

“Akira, before you open and read the content, make sure to keep calm.”

“That was out of the blue.”

“Anyway, make sure to maintain your cool no matter what happens. After you read it, no matter what, don’t panic. Don’t go flying off the handle. Just keep calm, okay? Surrendering yourself to anger would only get you killed like back then in Mihazono ruin, remember? You get what I’m saying, right?”

“A-alright.”

Alpha already knew the content of the message since she was connected to Akira’s information terminal. Akira, who was still confused, remembered that fact and wondered what it might have been. Judging from Alpha’s reaction, it must be something big. Therefore, he readied himself and opened the message.

The moment he read it, he furrowed his brows and frowned. If Alpha had not warned him beforehand, he would have flown off the handle.

It was a bounty notice. The name, Akira. Reward, 50 billion Aurum. Requester, Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch. Target was identified as a monster by Kugamayama city.

Right now, Akira was designated as a bounty target.

“Akira, Calm down! You’re okay, right?!”

“…Yeah, I’m okay.”

Akira told himself to stay calm. To not repeat his past mistake. But, his rage started to leak from his expression. His stance slowly slid to a fighting one and it was obvious that he was livid.

Guutol, who noticed, quickly warned him.

“Hey! What are you doing!?”

Akira sent a death stare at Guutol. He unconsciously sent that intense stare filled with rage as if to spite Guutol. After all, he had been obediently following their demand, and yet, he now had a bounty on him.

The powered suits around Akira inadvertently reacted by also taking a fighting stance. They aimed their rifles at him. However, since Akira still had his rifles pointing down, they managed to not shoot. Instead, Guutol once again warned him.

“What is it now? Did you change your mind and decided to fight us now?”

“…Didn’t you get any message?”

“Message? What do you mean? Wait… I just got a short message from Kibayashi… It’s telling me to refrain from engaging you. Well, he’s not my superior so I have no reason to obey him, but… Does it have anything to do with this?”

Since Guutol sounded confused, it only made Akira doubly confused. Right at that very instant, a call suddenly reached him. It was from Kibayashi. Akira seemed bewildered and glanced at Alpha, she lightly nodded and accepted the call.

The moment Akira accepted the call, Kibayashi's happy voice echoed through Alpha's telepathy. As a matter of fact, Akira never heard Kibayashi this happy before.

"Yo, Akira! You've done it now, a bounty target, huh!? I've always thought that this would happen sooner or later. But as expected, I never thought you would entertain me this much, you know!?"

Akira replied with a cold voice that sent a shiver.

"…So, it was you, huh?"

But his ice-cold voice did not affect Kibayashi's good mood at all. Instead, he replied with an upbeat tone.

"Nope, not me. Ahh, so you've checked the notice, huh? Then, I'm sure you've read the content, right? The one putting a bounty on your head is the Lion Steel company! Not me!"

"…Is that so? Then, why are you calling me?"

"I just want to make sure that you don't do anything stupid, you see!"

"Anything stupid…? Do you mean like completely ignoring their demand…?"

"If I'm talking about not being reckless, then yeah, that one! But you're more than welcome if you want to do it, you know!? To think that you would even consider doing something like that. Seriously though. Just how splendid can you be? Man, you're just the best!"

Akira thought that Kiabayshi was trying to say that rejecting Chloe's demand was a stupid move. As he was about to erupt in anger, once he heard Kibayashi's compliment filled with honest pure bliss, it took him by surprise, barely enough to regain some of his calm.

"…Wait for a sec, what are you talking about?"

"About you! I'm sure you don't understand what it means to be a bounty target, right!? So, I'm just worried you'll misunderstand, get too emotional, and do something reckless, you know!? You've been doing great being super reckless up until now. So, it would be such a waste if you die in such a stupid fashion, you know!? If you're going to die, make sure you die in glorious battle!"

"I-I see…"

Akira was weirded out by how excited Kibayashi was.

"Listen. I'm heading there right now to explain to you what's going on. So, just wait there for me, okay!? I'll tell you how to wage a full-blown war against the Lion Steel company! You got it!?"

"A-alright."

"Nice! And also, about the powered suits that are already over there, you can think of them as your bodyguard until I'm there!"

"My bodyguard? Why? I'm a bounty target, you know?"

"I'll tell you everything later! I'm heading there right now! So just wait and don't do anything crazy, yeah!? You heard me loud and clear, yeah?"

Kibayashi then closed the call.

Akira's rage had already vanished. It was replaced by the same level of bewilderment. He then glanced at Alpha and she had the same confused look as him.

"…Well, one thing for sure, I think he was not lying."

"…That one was pretty obvious without you telling me."

“Should we just wait then?”

“Yeah, let’s just do that.”

Akira then waited for Kibayashi with a continuous confused look plastered on his face.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 266, On Who's Intention

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was waiting for Kibayashi while still surrounded by the city defence squad's powered suits in the middle of the wasteland.

He had a 50 billion bounty price tag on his head. The powered suits already knew that while they were watching the surroundings. As a matter of fact, it was rather peaceful.

While waiting for Kibayashi, Akira tried to open his page on the Hunter Office website just to kill time. He found a warning written in small red letters. When he squinted his eyes to read it, it said that he had a bounty on his head.

Akira was once again reminded that he had indeed become a bounty target and tilted his head.

"Hey Alpha, It seems that I've really become a bounty target, right?"

Akira had mostly calmed down, so Alpha had also returned to her usual self as she smiled and replied.

"Well, that is indeed true if you believe what is written there."

“Yeah…”

His Hunter Office account had not been frozen. He was still recognized as a Hunter.

“So… they don’t erase my Hunter data even after I’ve become a bounty target, huh?”

“That seems to be the case.”

“Is that really okay? I mean, like, I am a bounty target, you know?”

“Well, it’s not like I have an answer to that, let’s leave that question to Kibayashi later. He did say that he will explain everything.”

“…Good idea.”

Akira put it aside since it seems like no one here had an answer and it was faster to just ask Kibayashi later.

After a short wait, another vehicle appeared, heading straight toward them. It had a Hunter Office mark printed on it and was broadcasting its presence – it was carrying Kibayashi.

Once they saw the vehicle approach, the powered suits surrounding Akira disbanded and returned back to the city. Guutol, who was the last to leave, spoke to Akira through external speakers.

“We’re heading back now… It seems like you now have a huge bounty on your head. Don’t try to approach the city. I rather not fight against you. As long as you don’t approach the city, there’s no need for us to fight.”

Akira replied curtly.

“Leave that hope of yours to the one who placed that bounty. In the end, I’m basically being dragged into her issues against my will.”

“I see…”

Guutol smiled bitterly and let out a sigh before leaving in his powered suit.

The vehicle stopped next to Akira and Kibayashi stepped off. Although he was considerably calm compared to when he called Akira, he still seemed extremely excited.

“Alright then! It seems like you waited for me! I was worried you were fighting against the city defence squad while waiting for me, you know?”

Akira sighed exasperatedly.

“…It’s not like I fight because I want to.”

Kibayashi laughed heartily at his reply.

“Normally, the moment you pick a fight with someone from the founder family of the Lion Steel company, it’s already well within what only a battle maniac would do, you know?”

Even Akira’s curt attitude did not affect Kibayashi’s excited laughter. He then took out a 20 centimetres-long ring and then threw it on the ground. The moment it touched the ground, it unveiled its legs and expanded out to form a table complete with seats.

“Well, explaining everything will take some time. So, let’s do that while we eat.”

Kibayashi once again took something out of his vehicle and placed it on top of the table. This time, it was instant meals.

“To be honest, we should have this conversation in Steriana, but you’re not allowed to get into the city at the moment. Although these are only instant meals, they’re pretty high-class, you know? After all, this is a conversation with a bounty target worth 50 billion. Normal food just won’t cut it. Though, for me, it’s more of an occupational perk.”

Kibayashi took a seat and urged Akira to also do the same. Akira still looked confused as he took one of the seats. He then looked at Kibayashi with a face full of questions and asked.

“Is it really alright to be having a meal in the middle of the wasteland like this? Or so I want to say, but, more than that, are you sure you want to have a peaceful meal with a bounty target like this?

“Don’t worry. Any monsters in the area are already dead after that fight. Also, no one would dare to attack us while I am here. I will tell you why I can give you that guarantee later. Although, it’s not like I can do anything if you don’t believe me. We can instead just go around the wasteland if you want.”

Akira did not say anything as he opened the lid of the instant meal. The package was made to maintain the warmth of its contents, which made the warm meat dish seem freshly cooked, just moments ago. Akira then took a fork that came with the packaging and took a bite. The glamorous outlook of the meat really matches its taste.

“…Whoah, this tastes really good!”

“Well, that’s an expensive instant meal for you.”

Seeing Akira making himself comfortable and ready to continue the talk, Kibayashi smiled and also opened up his meal.

“Now then. There are a lot of things to talk about, but first of all, let’s start with your current situation. I’m sure you have a lot of questions, but listen to the whole story first before asking.”

Akira knew that it was not the time to be focusing on his food as he gave a firm nod.

Kibayashi smiled. Kibayashi judged Akira to be very relaxed considering the situation he was in right now.

Bounty targets were normally monsters. One such case was when a monster way too powerful for the area suddenly appeared.

Another case could be when a monster caused trouble to the transportation routes. Someone from the transportation business would offer a huge amount for the bounty reward. After all, they would want to eliminate that monster as soon as possible.

However, this meant that bounty missions were nothing more than normal requests. A request that Hunters did not have to enlist first to take. Therefore, in the end, there was no rule saying that bounty targets had to be monsters, it could be an individual or even an organization.

In the case of monsters, the goal would be to eliminate them. Therefore, the bounty would be paid to the one who killed the target monster. Sometimes, there were cases where it was not a target for elimination. For example, a capture bounty for research, which would warrant the target to be captured alive.

Thus, it was also possible for the target to be a person. Likewise, it was important whether the request wanted the target dead or alive. There might be clauses stating something along the lines of ‘elimination of the target is deemed appropriate if escape from capture’. Naturally, in such cases, it was preferred to capture the target alive for interrogation. However, the death of the target would still yield rewards. On the flip side, for bounty target requests like ‘capture a runaway’, it was necessary to capture the target alive.

In Akira’s case, the bounty did not care whether he was dead or alive. Though it was written that the reward was smaller if he got killed instead of captured alive. However, Akira knew it was intentionally set in order to attract those who had some kind of aversion to killing another human.

Moreover, although Akira had become a bounty target, he would not lose any rights or privileges just because he had become a bounty target.

Even if someone actually managed to kill him. Although they would receive the reward from the bounty, they would still be sanctioned for the crime of homicide. As a matter of fact, they would be hired murderers. There was no doubt they would be fined for disrupting public order and causing fear in the inner wall. Even if they were from the outer wall, the private security corporations in the outer wall will treat them in a similar manner.

They could avoid such issues by asking for permission from the administrators of the area. However, that would mean extra administrative steps to take. Moreover, just because it was a bounty target, there was no guarantee that the administrators would grant permission without any strings attached. After all, just being a bounty target did not give enough of a reason for them to permit the killing of another human.

This was also the same if the bounty target was an organization. Even if their identity and data as Hunters got erased, that would be because they picked a fight against the Corporate Government. Being a bounty target alone did not result in such a thing. Even if that bounty came from one of the Corporate Government entities like the Sakashita Heavy Industry, they would still be able to use their Hunter Office account. This was because the Hunter Office was under the Corporate Government as a whole – not a single entity.

Which meant, that the 50 billion bounty from Lion Steel only meant that Akira had picked a fight with the Lion Steel company, nothing more, nothing less.

After hearing that, Akira seemed so relieved, to the point that it might be misunderstood as disappointment.

“Uhh, what can I say? It seems that being a bounty target is not as bad as I thought, huh?”

Hearing his reaction, Kibayashi tried to hold back his laugh.

“Well, in the end, it is nothing more than having a company place a bounty on your head. I bet you thought that you would be hunted anywhere you go in the eastern district since you are a bounty target now. You might have thought that running away to the central district would be a good idea. But no, you don’t have to do that. The only difference is that there will be more Hunters coming at you for money. Though, I bet most of them would still prefer not to fight you even with the bounty.”

“If it’s about those trying to kill me for money, I’ve had more than enough of them back in the slums. Well, at this point, the only difference would be the amount that they would receive. Other than that, it's not that much of a difference."

Kibayashi placed his hand on his mouth so as to make sure that he did not accidentally spit out his food.

"So, you're saying that those Hunters who want to kill you for 50 billion Aurum are not that different from those robbers in the slums, huh? That's great! Really great! As expected of you! You really never cease to amaze me!"

Relative to the common sense of those in the eastern district, this way of thinking was no doubt crazy. Kibayashi was immensely amused when Akira said something this crazy with a straight face.

With this, Kibayashi had finished explaining the matter regarding Akira being a bounty target. The next matter would be about Akira being recognized as a monster.

In truth, that matter was much more troubling for him. Thanks to that, the city defence squad and the other security organizations of Kugamayama city would have to treat him as if he was a monster.

Thus, this not only affected the city defence squad, but also the security companies under contract with Kugamayama city. When someone recognized as a monster entered an area under their watch, they would have to remove that person. Of course, killing someone recognized as a monster would not cause trouble from the city's point of view. After all, they were still humans recognized as monsters.

Originally, recognizing someone as a monster was only allowed to be done by the eastern district's Corporate Government. It was a passive method to treat their enemies. It was used to exile someone from the area where such recognition was made. Therefore, if Akira left the area around Kugamayama city, it would not affect him anymore. Even if it came from the five biggest corporations, he could just leave the area under their administration and that would be the end of it.

Akira frowned after listening to Kibayashi's explanation. Although his house and Shizuka's shop were in Kugamayama city, he would be repelled by the defence squad if he approached the city. If he decided to come to the city anyway and fought against the defence squad, there was no doubt they would deal with him proactively instead of passively. Although he did not like it, he had to make his decision. After thinking about his options for a bit, Akira then tried to confirm something with Kibayashi.

"Basically, I can think of Kugamayama city and I no longer being on a friendly term, right?"

"Don't be too hasty. It's true that Kugamayama city has recognized you as a monster, but that's not impossible to erase. Moreover, if you read the notice in detail, you'll find that it's not like the whole city is actively hunting you. As a matter of fact, the city actually has no desire to fight against you."

"What do you mean?"

"It is possible to declare someone as a monster by the jurisdiction of the Corporate Government. But this time, it is just an extra description added beside the bounty designation. The source of it is the Lion Steel company. If I'm not mistaken, you get along pretty well with a city officer called Inabe, no? If it's made through City Management, I bet that guy will stop it. If he gets in trouble with you, he will also get in trouble with Sheryl. This will make a mess with his relic shop in the slums, which he's technically receiving illegal funds from. Those relics were smuggled from the area under his administration after all. There's no way he would let his own scheme be the end of him."

To be more precise, Akira has left this matter entirely to Sheryl. However, it was true that getting on unfriendly terms with Akira would also affect Inabe's dealings with Sheryl. Akira kept that to himself since there was no reason why he should tell Kibayashi.

"But I am still recognized as a monster. Doesn't that mean that even the city could not go against the pressure from a large company?"

“That’s not true. Well, although, it’s not entirely out of the question if that pressure came from the main HQ of the Lion Steel company. However, the one who submitted this request is the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch. Although they have a bigger sphere of influence than Kugamayama city, the city would never break under the pressure of a mere branch of a company. Although Kugamayam city is only considered to be a mid-sized region in the eastern district, it has its own thoughts and intentions. Moreover, its position is on a rise due to the relic deal made with that AI in Kuzusuhara ruin. There’s no way it would bow down to a mere single Lion Steel branch.”

“Then, why am I still recognized as a monster?”

“This is just my guess, but I bet Lion Steel did something when they placed that bounty designation. The one that you’re chasing, Chloe. She’s from Lion Steel, right? Although she’s in Kugamayama city right now, she’s not treated as a visitor. Instead, she’s being detained for endangering the city. I bet it has something to do with that.”

Akira seemed confused as if he did not understand how things ended up this way. However, Kibayashi simply ignored that and continued to speak of his hypothesis.

———*—

Inside an executive room in the inner wall of Kugamayama city, Inabe was furious when he received information about what happened to Akira. The target of his fury was Udajima.

In the notice that Akira had received, it only stated Akira to be recognized as a monster, nothing more. However, that notice contained more detailed information for the city officials. A small, extra description under that bounty designation notice declared Akira as a monster under Udajima’s name as a proxy of Kugamayama city. An extra paragraph also stated that a post-application had been submitted to the Hunter Office from Lion Steel Third Ward Branch and the Hunter Office had approved it.

“Call Udajima here! Right now!!”

“We’ve already summoned him, but he’s not responding.”

“Then go and take him. No, arrest him, and bring him here!”

Inabe’s men were startled.

“He is a city officer. It might cause some trouble if we arrest him just because he won’t answer our summons…”

“It doesn’t matter! Do it! I will take full responsibility! If you can’t find him, you can even go ahead and add him to the wanted list! Just do everything you can do using my authority!”

“R-right away, sir!”

Inabe’s men flusteredly scrambled out to follow his order. Inabe tried to calm himself down while looking at the notice with squinted eyes.

“That bastard Udajima! What the heck is he doing!? Is he trying to start a full-blown war with me? Isn’t it way too late for that now? Just what is that bastard thinking…”

Inabe frowned. He could not conceive of a reason as to why Udajima did this.

⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯⎯*⎯⎯

Chloe was detained inside a room in the inner wall. She was not allowed to go out of the room and not allowed to meet her servants. She was pretty much free otherwise. Furthermore, in that room, she still had a connection to the web.

She made her own tea, but since it was so long since she did that herself, she could not help but frown after taking a sip.

“Yep, this is really bad. Though it’s an added benefit besides this room, they should’ve prepared something better considering I am from the Lorentz family.”

She then looked at the teacup. Although it was considered a luxurious teacup in the eastern district, it was still not good enough for her.

“The cup and the saucer are both cheap too. They should treat me better.”

After she mumbled her complaints, she then smiled, amused.

“Well, it’s not like I can do anything about it, I guess. Let’s just take this as proof that they’re seriously treating me as a criminal who endangered the city.”

The tea inside the cup was from a relatively expensive tea in the eastern district. But after taking a sip, Chloe had no plan to take another sip. Thus, she placed the teacup back on top of the table. The moment she did that, the door suddenly swung open with force. Looking at the man she expected to storm into the room, Chloe smiled and asked.

“I know that I’m basically in your place, but you can at least knock first?”

Seeing Chloe, Udajima tried his best to hold back his rage. He already realized that she was just acting back during her questioning. The moment he saw her smile, his anger started to surface again, which was not easy for him to hold down.

“You’ve done it this time! What’s the meaning of this!? What are you trying to accomplish!?”

Chloe understood what Udajima was referring to, but she still played coy.

“What do you mean?”

“Just cut the crap! I know you know what I am talking about!”

“Even if you say so, even if this is some kind of second questioning, it would be great if you can give me more specifics. I don’t want to answer questions after such vague leading questions, after all.”

Udajima grabbed Chloe’s collar and hung her up. Although her feet had left the ground, her smile did not crumble.

“This is within the wall. It would be best for you to not use any violence. Well, that is, unless you are fine with being kicked out of the wall.”

A Kugamayama city officer grabbed an officer of a large company by the collar inside the inner wall of Kugamayama city. It would create a huge scandal, which could be seen both as a city officer picking a fight inside the city. Furthermore, it was a rude action toward someone from a large company which held greater influence than the city. Udajima knew that but he could not hold himself back.

If he hit Chloe, it would only worsen his already horrendous situation. He might get himself exiled from Kugamayama city. That thought managed to help him hold himself back. He then released her and took a deep breath to help him calm down.

In contrast to Udajima, Chloe straightened up her dress with her usual smile plastered on her face.

“So then, what do you want to ask of me, again?”

“The one who made that monster designation for Akira was you, wasn’t it?!”

“Yes, that’s me. To be more precise, I submitted that together with the bounty designation through the Lion Steel company. That’s why, in the end, the Hunter Office approved it.”

“I already know that! What I want to know is why did you use my name without my permission!? Why did you do that!?”

“Well, that is not exactly false. After all, you said it during that questioning, right? It’s not like we did that without your confirmation first, you know?”

“What are you…!?”

“Is it okay to take your decision as Kugamayama city’s decision? Are you sure about making me a criminal, charged with the crime of endangering the city? Are you sure you do not want to take that back? I believe I did ask you all of this back then, right? And I'm sure that the Hunter Office gave its approval after checking the application. They assumed that you understood the contents when that application was sent. That's why the monster designation was approved together with the bounty designation. Though, to be honest, I think there was no need to check that part."

Udajima gritted his teeth in rage, in contrast to that, Chloe was casually smiling.

"If you have anything you don't like about the Hunter Office's decision, I prefer you to convey it to the Hunter Office. I'm sorry. It's not like I can do anything about it even if you ask that of me. Unfortunately, I don't have the influence to veto the Hunter Office's decision."

Udajima glared at Chloe. However, he understood that it was impossible for him to get out of this situation on his own. His expression turned stern and desperate.

"…What do you want then? What exactly can you get from driving me to the corner like this? With the power of the Lion Steel company, you can just put a huge bounty on his head. I bet that would be enough to push that Akira to the edge. And now that he is recognized as a monster, you can just ask for formal assistance from City Management. There's no need to drag me into this mess. It is unnecessary to pick a fight with the City Management like this."

"I'll just answer that statement by saying that I decided to do so after considering many things. Moreover, personally, I don't hold a grudge against you. As matter of fact, I'm hoping we can work together."

"What do you mean?"

Udajima was taken aback. He did not expect that at all. Chloe slightly bent forward and smiled.

"You lost most of your influence after losing to Inabe, right?"

"W-what are you talking about…?"

“I know you’re looking for a chance to turn your situation around. If you help me, I will also help you regain your influence, you know?”

Udajima did not expect Chloe to have investigated him to that extent. He was shocked at how she was smiling at him, as if he was already her accomplice. He could not help but inadvertently flinch back. That was when a sudden message reached him. It was from the public safety department of the city and its content was a summon from Inabe. There was also a warning, if he kept ignoring the summon, the public safety department would arrest him.

Udajima turned pale. Even if he gave himself up, Inabe would just demand him to take responsibility. He might try to plead, stating that he got tricked. However, even if Inabe believed him, it would not change his situation. On the other hand, if he ignored the summon without a good reason, he would be arrested. In the worst-case scenario, he might even be identified as the enemy of Kugmayama city. Udajima was at the end of his rope. Seeing that, Chloe smiled and said to him.

“To be honest, I’ve been summoned from those in the upper echelons. But since I’m detained, we will have to end up holding a remote VR meeting. We will start soon, so you can join if you want, you know? Starting from the head of the Lion Steel Third Ward’s branch, there will be other important figures attending this meeting. This is a good chance for you to get acquainted with these important people from my company, you know? This will also give you an excuse to not answer that summons, no?”

Udajima’s expression was a combination of shock, confusion, doubt, and desperation.

“…How do you know all of that?”

Udajima was referring to the fact that he had just received a forced summon from Inabe and needed a reason to not answer it. Putting aside how Chloe knew about the summon, Udajima’s question was more directed towards how much she knew about him, and how she acquired this much information.

Chloe simply smiled as if she already knew everything.

“It’s just a guess. Don’t worry, it’s not like I know everything about you.”

Udajima could not believe those words since she knew of his conflict with Inabe. He ended up making a stern expression without being able to say anything back.

“So then, what do you want to do? Do you want to join the meeting?”

Udajima hesitated. Declining her offer now would not change his current predicament. Therefore, though he knew he was being manipulated by her, he made his resolve and made the difficult decision.

“…I’ll take you up on that offer.”

“Thank you very much. In that case, let’s start the preparation right away. I’m actually already past the meeting time. So, my information terminal is flooded with messages right now.”

Toward Udajima, who seemed extremely troubled, Chloe simply smiled, amused.

———*—

Inabe, who received a report from the city’s public safety department, frowned.

Although the summon had been properly conveyed, at the moment, Udajima was inside the room where Chloe was detained. Furthermore, he was attending a Lion Steel meeting together with her. Because of that, the room he was in had a higher information security level. Thus, no ordinary city officer may enter without a good reason.

The area lent to Sakashita Heavy Industry was also treated the same way. Though, it was under a different administration. Even for Kugamayama city public safety department, entering such a room without permission meant picking a fight with the Lion Steel company. Thus, it came as no surprise when they picked to withdraw.

Inabe quickly started investigating what exactly was going on. Since the room was now protected with a special information protection system for the Lion Steel company meeting, Inabe could not uncover any further. He knew nothing more than Udajima was attending a Lion Steel meeting with Chloe.

"…What's going on? Why is Udajima attending a Lion Steel meeting? Don't tell me that Lion Steel is working with Udajima!? Impossible! He should not have such a connection…"

Inabe decided to wait patiently while planning his next move. After all, it was not like the meeting would last forever. He could just post his men from the public safety department in front of the room to take or even arrest Udajima the moment he left the room.

Although he had bad feelings about said plan, it was the most he could do with his current level of authority.

__*__*__*__

A large circle table was placed in the middle of an infinitely wide room. There were 10 seats in that meeting space, hosted inside a virtual space. Other than Chloe and the head of the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch, Beltram, there were also those from the faction where Chloe belonged. There were initially a few empty seats but they were quickly filled.

Udajima had no seats in that meeting. He was standing next to Chloe, anxious. The other participants in the meeting were looking in his direction as he was barely able to withstand their reproachful gazes. After all, although they were from a branch office, they were still officers from a large corporation. Since the meeting was held in a virtual space, which was close to reality, it helped when he looked away from the virtual world and back into reality.

Meanwhile, Chloe was completely calm. Although the other participants were looking at her with scrutiny, there was even a faint smile on her face.

As everyone was a bit confused about how to react to her audacity, eventually, the rest of the empty seats were filled and Beltram started the meeting.

“Well then, shall we start? There’s no need to point out why we’re having this meeting. Chloe Lebelant Lorents, we’ll hear your excuse.”

Although Chloe understood what Beltram was talking about, she apologetically replied.

“My deepest apologies for being late in reporting this matter and ending up delaying this meeting. At the moment, I’m being detained under the charge of endangering Kugamayama city. As such, I hope you understand my situation. Now, regarding that charge, it originated from Udajima-sama over here. Udajima-sama is an officer from Kugamayama city, thus, regarding this matter, I hope that everyone can understand-”

However, one of the officers harshly interjected.

“We’re not talking about that! Do you think this is a joke or something!?”

Chloe shook her head.

“Not at all, I don’t think so at all. I understand that it’s my fault for delaying the meeting and wasting your precious time.”

“Your response is exactly what I refer to as a joke! Are you seriously going with that in this meeting?”

As others were clearly getting agitated. With the eyes directed at her getting harsher. Chloe tilted her head and seemed confused. Seeing that, Beltram then spoke up.

“I don’t know what your intentions are, but if you insist on keeping that up, I don’t see any reason to continue this meeting. There will be no need to meet you ever again. You can just rot and die out there in the wasteland. So, this is your last chance. You may deliver your explanation.”

Given her last warning, the meeting immediately returned to total silence. Depending on her next words, Chloe might get exiled. Everyone in the meeting, including Chloe herself, understood that. Even so, Chloe then spoke up.

“My apologies, but I don’t see a need to give an explanation for anything. If it is about the incident regarding Olivia-sama’s card and what happened with a Hunter by the name of Akira, along with the related matter including his bounty and the monster designation, I do believe that there’s no need for me to explain anything.”

As the meeting returned to total silence, Beltram sent a gaze at her. It was as if he was looking at a death row convict.

“I see. Let me remind you that you will not be able to take those words back.”

Even under such a gaze, Chloe just smiled and ignored it.

“Of course, I have no plans to take that back. After all, it’s the will from representative Alice.”

With that sentence, the meeting once again went astir.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 267, Chloe’s interpretation

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Chloe’s statement sent ripples through the meeting. Beltrame stared at her with ferocious intensity.

“What do you mean by that? If that statement is false, exiling you out from the inner wall will not be enough, you know?”

As someone from the Lion Steel company, crime done using the name of its highest authority was severe. Those who did not believe her words already looked at her with hostile eyes.

However, Chloe did not waver at all, instead, she smiled and explained.

“I believe that it’s already pretty clear. It is exactly as I said. I am just doing my best to obey representative Alice’s order. As such, I don’t see any need to explain my actions.”

Chloe’s straightforward declaration, stating that she was completely innocent, caused them to be confused. Beltram’s gaze changed from a hostile one to a questioning one.

“I see. In that case, instead of an excuse, we demand an explanation. Why do you think it is the will of representative Alice? I bet you did not receive such an order straight from her, right?”

“Of course, that is indeed the case. After all, I am in no position to receive such a thing. I simply received the same order as everyone here has received. As a matter of fact, I don’t understand why no one here has taken any action regarding said order. Well, I guess it’s because of my lack of competence. I do not understand everyone’s stance.”

“What do you mean?”

“If that question is nothing more than your main question and not a leading question, for the sake of the Lion Steel’s future, I recommend you relinquish your seat, Branch Manager.”

The mood in the room suddenly turned cold. It was obvious, rude intimidation from Chloe to someone of a higher position. The other officers started to doubt her sanity. Otherwise, she might have really done everything under Alice’s order, which would explain her courage.

The silence continued. Chloe and Beltram were looking straight at each other without looking away. The mood started to get tense. As the other officers started to get anxious, Beltram suddenly loosened up and said.

“Very well. In that case, as the representative of everyone here, I shall ask for your guidance. After all, that’s just how important representative Alice’s will is. If there’s a chance that the situation is due to our ignorance, even if slim, there’s still a need to completely eliminate such a possibility. As such, I ask for you to explain it in detail, for someone as clueless as me… I won’t let you wiggle your way out of this one.”

Beltram said the last part, dead-serious. As the others were waiting anxiously, Chloe smiled and replied.

“Of course!”

Chloe then told the participants of the meeting her thoughts. As the meeting progressed, the participants had troubled and shocked expressions on their faces. It seems like half of them believed her while the other half did not. In other words, Chloe's explanation did make sense. It was something they could not laugh off. One of the officers then interjected.

"Isn't this nothing more than your personal wish? You have made so many blunders. It wouldn't be an exaggeration to state that due to your desire, you're currently trying to find a way to make up for your mistakes."

"I don't deny that some of it are my subjective interpretation. After all, I do want to find enough leverage to raise my rank in this company. But that's the same for all of us. Either way, you are denying my explanation by stating it to be out of my personal interest. You have no other reason nor evidence to state that my opinion is incorrect, right?"

"W-well, but still…"

"If I might add something else, I'm sure that everyone already knows that representative Alice told us to take care of this matter until she arrives."

Chloe then continued to explain her interpretation of Alice's order. The officers who heard her interpretation started to get agitated.

"After that, I managed to contact Olivia-sama. I'm sure that everyone has been well informed about this. And at that time, Olivia-sama said that there won't be a next time."

From there, Chloe explained how she interpreted that warning. This time, it caused confusion between the officers. Thus, one of them questioned Chloe with a stern expression.

"…I understand your reasoning. But in the end, it's nothing more than your interpretation, no? You can't just say that it is the representative Alice's will."

Chloe looked pitifully and slightly mockingly at the officer.

“Even if you say so, in the end, I am not representative Alice. So, I can’t really say that it’s indeed her will. But if you need confirmation no matter what, you might as well ask the branch manager for help to contact representative Alice. It is impossible to ask for an audience with representative Alice with my position. But it might be possible if it’s with the branch manager’s authority.”

Everyone turned toward Beltram. After that, Chloe continued.

“Well, even if I could, I still won’t do it though. After all, I don’t want representative Alice to think that I’m incompetent. Asking her for such a simple thing.”

Hesitation and confusion caused the officers to lose words. They frowned with a stern expression without saying anything.

Alice was going to come to Kugamayama city soon to deal with the matter regarding Olivia. Because of that, this meeting, which was originally meant to question Chloe’s action, was now in an uproar. It had already lost sight of its original goal and leaned toward whether to believe Chloe’s words or not.

Whether it was to go against Alice’s will or to obey it. This affected not only the fate of the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch, but it might also affect the other branches as well. For the better or for the worse. Whether to proceed carefully or boldly. Either way, they would have to make a decision, one that they would never be able to take back.

Beltram eventually made the decision.

“I will end this meeting here today. Let’s resume this tomorrow. I will contact the rest of you later.”

With that closing remark, everyone seemed to calm down. They were delaying making the conclusive decision. It was true that they did not have all the necessary information to make such a crucial decision. It was obvious that everyone would do their best to gather as much information as they could after this. Therefore, delaying it was preferred for the rest of the officers.

Beltram’s gaze then shifted to Udajima.

“Udajima-san, was it?”

Udajima flinched back from that gaze, one cast by someone of a high position from a large corporation.

“Y-yes!”

“I’m sorry that you didn’t get to say anything during this meeting. Although you’ve managed to join in for a while. But if I may, I hope you will also join the next meeting. If it’s about how you treat her, I’m thinking of leaving that to you for the time being. It’s not like I’m doing this to compensate for your efforts. I will give you my contact number and contact line. If there’s anything you want to report to me, you can do so straight through that line. You will not need to go through her.”

After Beltram said so, the other officers also proceeded to give their contact to Udajima. It was their covert way of hinting Udajima to send them information without going through Chloe. Nonetheless, it did not change the fact that it gave Udajima a direct connection to Lion Steel’s officers, which would strengthen his position as a city officer.

“Now then, please let me excuse myself.”

Beltram turned off the connection and disappeared from the meeting. The other officers also followed suit, leaving Chloe and Udajima alone.

Chloe smiled at Udajima and said.

“Once we leave, City Management would take notice that the meeting has ended. At that time, I bet there will be men stationed outside the room waiting to get in. So, let’s talk for a bit first. With this, I hope that you will believe me when I declared I would help you if you help me.”

“…Alright, I’ll believe you for now. So then, what do you want?”

“Well, there are a lot of things that I want. But first of all, I want to be able to contact Latis and my other servants. I actually tried to make tea by myself, but it just won't come out right. I'm just not used to it."

Seeing her smile, as if it was a joke, Udajima replied with a stern expression.

"…Very well."

"Thank you very much. Now then, do you need anything from me? Let's discuss about everything we need to keep confidential while we're still here."

"You have a point… Well, first thing first…"

Chloe and Udajima continued their meeting inside that virtual space for some time after that.

Outside the room, where Chloe was detained, those from the city public safety department were waiting for the meeting to end. They were preparing themselves. The moment they received the notice that it had ended, they would first send another warning. If Udajima continues to not comply, they would arrest him.

The door opened and Udajima stepped out. He then lightly smiled at the surprised city public safety department and said to them.

"Well, sorry to make you wait. The meeting took longer than I expected."

One of the shocked men replied.

"Well, that is… completely fine. Udajima-sama, we hope you will cooperate and let us take you to Inabe-sama. We apologize but we're allowed to arrest you if necessary."

"Yeah, I know. Don't worry, I won't run away. I will come with you. Or if you prefer, you can arrest me, just to be safe."

Udajima smiled and offered both of his arms, but the guy just shook his head and said.

“N-no, that won’t be necessary if you obediently come with us.”

“I see. Let’s go then.”

Udajima then went with them while showing no remorse. Although those from the public safety department were confused, they still followed through with their duty.

＿＿＿*＿

After listening to the explanation about his monster designation from Kibayashi, Akira pouted and said.

“What do you mean? Infighting within City Management has disallowed the decision to be revoked?”

Unlike Akira, who was even showing slight exasperation, Kibayashi laughed and replied.

“It’s not like City Management is ruled by a single person after all. There are times when a conflict of interest prevents them from taking quick action. Though, I bet it’s a huge inconvenience for you.”

Kugamayama city itself had no wish to be hostile to him. Moreover, Inabe was something akin to his ally. However, from that point of view, it is not completely unthinkable that the anti-Inabe faction would retaliate. They would preserve the decision in order to sabotage Inabe.

Furthermore, considering the power relationship between Kugamayama city and the Lion Steel company, it was not easy for the Hunter Office to revoke an application it had already approved. At the very least, that was what Kibayashi had guessed.

Somewhere away from him, where he had nothing to do with, there was trouble brewing. Trouble, which directly impedes him. However, Akira understood that he could not do anything about it. Thus, he could only sigh as he said.

“Either way, I can’t return back to the city for the time being and things will get even more troublesome if I force my way in, right?”

“Yep, exactly. I bet you’re displeased about this, But let’s just leave that matter for now. Now, we should get to the main topic. Let’s start talking about how you can fight against the Lion Steel company with the best firepower that you can get.”

Since it was an important subject for Akira, he changed gears and became solemn. However, seeing how Kibayashi was grinning like a Cheshire cat, he could not help but frown.

“Even if I say the best firepower, in the end, it depends on whether you would do this alone or in a team. Either way, it’s important to increase your own firepower. That’s why I recommend you hold back from attacking Lion Steel for the time being. Wait for the equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry.”

“…Is that route still viable? I have become a bounty target, you know?”

Akira was already half-certain that was out of the question. Thus, he did not expect to still receive his equipment. However, Kibayashi replied with such firmness that it completely eliminated his worries.

“Of course. There’s no way Sakashita Heavy Industry would retract their reward. Not just because the Hunter had received a monster designation in one particular place. Furthermore, that bounty designation only came from the Lion Steel company’s branch. If they did that, it would affect their reputation. In the worst-case scenario, some of the Hunters who are contracted with Sakashita Heavy Industry might even cancel their contract. They might instead form a contract with the other 5 biggest companies. This would endanger Sakashita Heavy Industry’s position as one of the big 5.”

“I-I see.”

“That’s just how powerful the binding power of a contract is. Well, although, it wouldn’t go that well had you picked a fight against the Corporate Government. Just because you got into a fight against a company because of a single relic, that won't make Sakashita waver. That's why there's nothing for you to worry about. Especially if it is related to Sakashita."

"But if I'm not mistaken, they still don't know when that powerful equipment will arrive, right?"

"You don't need to worry about that as well. Although it's just my prediction, at most, it will take about a month. If you're really lucky, they'll be here in about a week. In the worst-case scenario, 3 months."

Akira raised his eyebrows in shock.

"I'm pretty sure you said that it might even come next year though? Are you sure they can even arrive in a week?"

"The reason for the delayed transport was because of the limited transport routes that Sakashita had decided on. Recently, they've been lifting up most of those limitations. Without those limitations, I can give you a good approximation as to when they would arrive. And as expected, even I don't have enough information about Sakashita Heavy Industry's transportation routes to be able to make a more precise prediction. So, my guess is between 1 week to 3 months. If they are already somewhere nearby, it'll only take about a week to transfer ownership to you. If they have to withdraw enroute before trying another route, at most, it will take 3 months to get here."

Akira lightly nodded to his explanation, so Kibayashi smiled and leaned forward.

"That's why just wait and don't do anything stupid. Chloe is inside Kugamayama at the moment. So, I recommend you force your way into the city once you have your front-line equipment. You just need to wait for a bit before receiving equipment far better than what you had before. So, until then, although it sounds awful, I hope you can just keep avoiding trouble for now."

Kibayashi then leaned further. He was so close that Akira pulled himself away from him.

“Well, it’s you that we’re talking about here. I bet you don’t like the idea of just running away, but deal with it for now. If you can hold back, you can vent your rage later. Using your new front-line equipment, you can blow open a hole into the inner wall, and get even the middle and the upper district involved in your quest for vengeance. At that point, you would be able to make those who look down on you regret their actions. That’s why, for now, just wait patiently, okay? You understand, right?”

“O-okay.”

Kibayashi, who kept leaning forward while whispering his devilish plan to Akira, made the latter feel weirded out by it. Therefore, Akira tried to change the subject.

“By the way, Kibayashi, you are a Kugamayama city officer, no? Is it really okay for someone in your position to suggest a bounty target use front-line weapon to blow the city’s wall open?”

Kibayashi, who already had both of his hands on the table, supporting most of his weight while he leaned toward Akira, returned back to his seat and calmed down for a bit.

“Well, if you ask me whether it’s okay or not, I bet it’s not. It’s something that a city officer definitely can’t do. I bet the punishment would be more than just a written formal warning.”

Seeing Akira looking at him with confused eyes, Kibayashi then pointed at the Hunter Office mark on his vehicle.

“But right now, I am here as a Hunter Office’s staff member. That’s why it won’t be trouble at all.”

Although Kibayashi was a Kugamayama city officer, at the same time, he was also a Hunter Office staff member. He was well accustomed to partitioning his two positions, as well as using them when necessary.

Thanks to that, he was able to avoid having to face repercussions, which might have led to his bad reputation.

“I know you are a bounty target, but there are many types of people who become bounty targets. If it’s just a 1 million bounty, the Hunter Office would not even bother to deal with it. But if it’s for 50 billion Aurum, not to mention it also includes monster designation from a medium-sized corporation… the Hunter Office would have to at least do something to prevent damage from spreading. Things like trying to calm the situation and get both sides to peacefully find a solution to whatever the problem they have between them. At the moment, I’m actually using that as an excuse to meet up with you. That’s why you’re safe while you’re in the middle of a conversation with me. Well, at least, those who want your bounty would not attack you in this situation. Even if there is someone nearby waiting to kill you, they can only observe from a distance right now. They will not dare snipe you. So, there’s no need to worry about that.”

Akira was a bit surprised by Kibayashi’s explanation.

“Is that so? Are you sure? It’s 50 billion Aurum, you know?”

“It has nothing to do with the amount. Trying to attack someone who is in the middle of negotiations with the Hunter Office is the same as picking a fight with the Hunter Office. This also means picking a fight with the Corporate Government too. Even if they manage to kill you, they won’t be able to claim the bounty. To top it off, their Hunter data will get expunged. Their account would be frozen and the whole eastern district will recognize them as monsters.”

Akira lightly nodded again, Kibayashi then continued.

Attacking someone in the middle of negotiating means antagonizing everyone included in that negotiation. The reason why Kibayashi told Akira to just think of Goutol and the others as escorts while they were surrounding him was because it signified Akira being in the middle of negotiations with Kugamayama city. To be more precise, they were recognised to be negotiating regarding Akira, who had been designated as a monster, to not approach Kugamayama city.

Naturally, there was no guarantee that no one would attack them considering that the bounty was 50 billion Aurum. Furthermore, they could gain a connection with the Lion Steel company. That was why Goutol and his men were vigilantly watching the surroundings.

Kibayashi told Akira to think of Goutol and his men as his bodyguards since, in reality, they were indeed protecting him.

The city defence squad's duty was to protect the city, not to hunt a bounty target. So, as long as Akira kept away from the city, even if he was a bounty target recognized as a monster, they would not attack him. Moreover, Kibayashi had already informed Goutol, using his position as staff from the Hunter Office.

Akira was closely listening to Kibayashi's explanation, full of interest. However, he also started to worry about the time as he said.

"Now then, let's get back to the main subject. It's not like I can keep this up for long as well. I guess I'll convey the things that I need to convey to you here. Although you will be just running around until your new equipment arrives, if possible, don't go too far from Kugamayama city. We will hand over your equipment once they arrive in Kugamayama city. However, there will certainly be information leaks somewhere. That's why, if it's possible, I want to give them to you as soon as possible once they arrive. It would be easier and faster if you were nearby. It's also safer since it'll reduce the chance of you getting attacked on your way back to collect it."

"Even if you say so, I'm sure there will be more people coming after me if I roam around Kugamayama city. As long as I can't get into Kugamayama city, I would have to find another city to get my food and ammo…"

"If you're staying somewhere close, I will help you with that as well."

"Hah? Are you sure you're okay doing that?"

Toward Akira, who was obviously surprised by his offer, Kibayashi's smile widened as he explained.

“Well, about that, I can put up an excuse. I can state having no other choice but to supply you with food and ammo. Otherwise, you would be cornered and have no other choice but to raid the city. So, I will be doing that per my duty as a city officer. After all, as a staff member from the Hunter Office, it might be best for me to take a neutral stance.”

It was a good excuse for Kibayashi. Even if it meant making Akira stronger in exchange for buying more time for peaceful negotiations. Even if negotiations fail and Akira ends up attacking the city with his greater firepower, Kibayashi could simply claim that he did all he could. Though, in reality, Kibayashi was hoping that would happen. Akira understood that very well as he looked at Kibayashi’s wide unsettling smile.

Afterwards, Kibayashi told Akira all kinds of things until their time was up. He then returned back to his vehicle and lightly warned Akira, who was already back on his bike.

“The moment I turn on this vehicle, you will lose safety insurance from the Hunter Office. Well, you are a bounty target with 50 billion Aurum on your head. There will no doubt be Hunters who will come after you. They will do so with proper preparation first. So, I bet no one will attack you for the time being. But still, be careful out there.”

“Sure. I’ll be counting on you for the ammo.”

“Yeah. Don’t worry about that. You can count on me. Do tell me if something happens. I will contact you if something comes up. Make sure to answer calls coming from the secret line that I just told you about. Well then, until next time, Akira. Good luck!”

Kibayashi smiled as he said so and headed back to Kugamayama city.

Meanwhile, Akira accelerated his bike in the opposite direction. It was his first day being a bounty target, one who could not return back to his home in Kugamayama city.

__*__*__*__

Inside a personal room located in the inner wall of Kugamayama city, Reina seemed calm. Though, she hardly appeared to be friendly. In front of her was a large display with Beltram in it.

That image of Beltram heaved a sigh.

“That’s not how you address a branch head, you know?”

But Reina still offered her apology after she was told.

“My apology. I’ve been living outside the wall for so long that it seems like I’ve forgotten some of my manners without realizing it. For that, I am really sorry.”

Beltram’s gaze shifted toward Kanae and Shiori, who were standing behind her. Reina was at least showing a respectful attitude toward him, someone who held a higher position. However, Shiori was not even trying to hide her stern gaze and Kanae was even displaying hostility in her smile.

“Those maids too. That’s not how you address an officer from the same company, you know? Where is your loyalty toward the company you belong to?”

“My master is Milady after all. Milady is already showing her loyalty to the company. Of course, that includes Milady’s attitude toward you, you know?”

“Beltram-sama is taking a neutral stance as the head manager of Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch, regarding the infighting between the factions. Moreover, Beltram-sama is also taking a neutral stance regarding the attack on Milady, which might also be interpreted as abandoning Milady. As such, the barest of respect would be enough.”

After Beltram confirmed the maids’ stance, his gaze returned back to Reina. There was a slight change in his expression. It was indicating how impressed he was with Reina. Not only was she able to hold onto Shiori’s loyalty, but she could also tame a problematic maid like Kanae.

[So, both Reina and Chloe changed this much outside the wall, huh? I once heard the reason why they drive out family members deemed incompetent outside the wall. It is because the conditions out there are much harsher than inside the wall. It was done in hopes of fostering their growth. I guess that's not all nonsense…]

Although they were driven outside the wall for different reasons, both Chloe and Reina were the source of the ongoing incident. Beltram could not help but feel impressed as well as cautious toward these two, who were both, from his point of view, still lacking.

"I'm glad to see that both you and Lady Chloe had grown so much outside the wall."

Beltram then looked at Shiori.

"By the way, it seems like you are blaming me. Despite the fact that you have received an order directly from the representative. It does not change the fact that your actions have aided or even caused this incident to spread. I don't see your handling as something wise for a maid affiliated with the Lion Steel company."

"Representative Alice's order was for those at the scene to handle the situation until she arrives. And the one who manages those people should be you, no?"

Shiori replied with obvious sarcasm. It was clear that she was indicating that the source of this incident, including Reina and Chloe's actions, was all due to the incompetent control the head of the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward branch had over his people. Shiori understood that it was a rude remark toward Beltram, who was her superior. However, Beltram's decision to not punish Chloe, even after robbing that card from Reina, could be interpreted as approval of her actions. Therefore, Shiori could not possibly hide her anger.

As Shiori prepared herself, expecting reproach from Beltram, he replied with something unexpected. Beltram made a troubled expression as he mumbled.

“…As I thought, that’s what it means, huh?”

Reina and the others frowned. They did not understand the meaning behind those words. However, the fact that Beltram did not reproach Shiori, caused Reina to feel like something bad was going on. Thus, her expression turned stern as she asked.

“Branch manager. I believe that you are busy as well, so can we please get onto the main subject?”

“…You’re right, let’s get into the main subject. But before that, let me inform you of this. As the branch manager, I’m taking a neutral stance regarding the factions. With that in mind, there might be times when it seems like I’m siding with a certain faction. However, I will only do so for the sake of the company in mind. I am not doing so because I’m siding with any particular faction. That’s why it’s not like I’m abandoning your side or siding on Lady Chloe’s side. I’m just dealing with matters with my position and ability in mind.”

“Are you saying that the fact Chloe took Olivia-sama’s card from me by force is all for the sake of the company? And you, as the branch manager, don’t see any problem with it?”

This time it was not from Shiori but from Reina. After all, it was safer for her to speak up instead of a maid from the company. She did not want Shiori to worsen her standing. Furthermore, it was her covert way of hinting Shiori to keep her mouth shut.

Shiori, who understood Reina’s intentions, relaxed her stern expression. In turn, Kanae, who noticed, smiled bitterly.

Although Reina noticed the two’s reaction behind her, she was being careful so as to not smile. Up until now, Reina had been leaving the negotiations to Shiori. However, from now on, she made her resolve to act as Shiori’s master and waited for Beltram’s reply.

However, Beltram once again reacted with something that they did not expect. He knitted his eyebrows, which made him look like someone with a lot of power and responsibility. Someone fitting for his position as the branch manager.

“That is exactly the crucial part. We, officers from the third ward branch, are debating whether to see Lady Chloe’s action as problematic or not.”

“…What do you mean?”

“Actually, we originally saw Lady Chloe’s action as problematic. We had a meeting just now to discuss how to deal with the aftermath. Although I can’t really say what went on during the meeting, I will at least inform you of Lady Chloe’s current situation.”

Chloe attacked Akira and failed. She then placed a 50 billion bounty on his head. Furthermore, she had Kugamayama city designate Akira as a monster. And for the crime of endangering the city, she got detained. After hearing all of that, Reina could not hold back her surprise as to how the situation had greatly escalated in just one day.

“Lady Chloe’s action had caused tremendous problems. As officers of the third ward branch, we can’t ignore her actions. We only have two options: approve or reproach her action. However, we don’t have enough information to decide at the moment. Because of that, I would hope you will share your side of the story with us, including the matter of Olivia-sama’s card as well. This is an order from the branch manager of Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward branch. You will tell me everything in detail.”

When Beltram said so, he was exuding an extraordinary amount of pressure. This allowed Reina and the others to grasp just how important this matter was.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 268, Carol’s decision.

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira rode his bike in the opposite direction of Kibayashi. After some time, he stopped behind a crumbled building and sighed.

“Well, it seems like no one is coming after me yet… right?”

Alpha smiled and nodded.

“Most Hunters still don’t know that you’re a bounty target now. So, it should be fine for the time being. Let’s use this chance to calmly think of a plan.”

“Yeah, you’re right.”

When a bounty for a monster was up, a notice would be sent out from the Hunter Office to all Hunters in the area. This was how Hunters would receive this information. However, this was not the case for bounty targets that were human. It was to grant an opportunity for the parties involved to talk it out. Perhaps, they might be able to take back the bounty designation.

Although it did not take a lot of work to figure out when someone became a bounty target, it required someone to actively look for such information. As such, it took some time before it spread among the Hunters. This period of time was a form of an extension for the involved parties to negotiate.

In Akira's case, since he had also been recognized as a monster, all private security firms contracted with City Management had already received a notice. It was only a matter of time before his bounty spread around, among the Hunters who were acquainted with him. Moreover, Akira had no wish to peacefully resolve this matter.

Since he could not return back to the city, his only choice was to spend his night in the middle of the wasteland. It was unclear how long he had to live out in the wasteland. He now had to be careful of both monsters and Hunters.

Akira was talking to Alpha about how to face this issue. Mid-conversation, he suddenly received a message from Carol through his Hunter code. The content was another code to access a certain secret line. Akira and Alpha looked at each other, after briefly hesitating, he decided to access that secret line.

"Akira, it seems like you're alright. Thank goodness!"

"Carol, what is it?"

"Geez. Don't give me that when you just left your bodyguard job without any explanation, right?"

Carol sounded a bit angry. Akira frowned and apologetically said.

"Ah, right. Sorry about that. I was in a hurry due to certain business, you see."

"Well, I guess it can't be helped then. But it seems like you've calmed down now. At least enough to have the time to call me back, right? So, let's meet up and talk."

Akira frowned. He paused for a bit before giving his reply.

“…Well, actually, a lot of things happened afterwards. So, it’s kind of hard to meet up right now, you see…”

Akira was trying to refuse while still being vague. However, Carol suddenly brought out the main point with a serious tone.

“If it’s about Lion Steel putting 50 billion Aurum on your head and Kugamayama city recognizing you as a monster, I already know.”

Akira was caught by surprise. He did not say anything. He did not even try to make an excuse. As he started putting his guard up toward her, Carol who already guessed his response, quickly added.

“Just to let you know, I have no wish to fight you. If you don’t believe me, then I guess meeting up will be impossible. And if you won’t change your mind no matter what, then, there’s no point in continuing this call. So, I’ll hang up.”

After that, Carol went silent. The anxious heavy mood continued. After a minute of silence, Akira lightly sighed and said.

“Alright, let’s meet up then.”

The mood immediately cleared up after that. Carol sounded extremely relieved as she replied.

“Thank you. Well then. How should we meet up? It’s not a good idea to just meet up somewhere randomly in the wasteland, right? If you have a good idea, feel free to tell me. I will abide by your decision. But, if you don’t have any good idea, I will try to think of something.”

“Let’s see then, in that case…”

Akira and Alpha discussed through telepathy, how and where to meet up with Carol.

“Alright. Let’s talk about the rest later then… Akira.”

“Yes?”

“Thank you for trusting me. I’m really happy that you did.”

Carol jovially said before closing the call.

Akira raised his eyebrows. He seemed rather taken aback by her remark. Meanwhile, Alpha looked worriedly at him and asked.

“Akira, are you sure you’re okay with this? It’s 50 billion Aurum, you know? It won’t be strange if she changes her mind later because of the bounty.”

Akira bitterly smiled.

“Well, I bet that would be the case for most people, but Carol can get 10 billion Aurum in a single night. So, I guess five times of that would not be that much of a difference from her point of view, no?”

Although it was not like Akira completely trust Carol, he had at least one reason to not be unnecessarily suspicious of her.

“Well, I won’t deny that, but there’s no guarantee she won’t betray us either, you know?”

“A guarantee never existed anywhere in the first place. Moreover, Kibayashi also advised me not to simply abandon any negotiations that come my way.”

Akira had become a bounty target with a 50 billion Aurum prize on his head. However, due to the power struggle inside Kugamayama city and between branches of the Lion Steel company, not to mention negotiator firms, there was a good chance all kinds of people were trying to get in contact with him for various reasons. If he could handle them well, it could buy him a good amount of time. That was why Kibayashi advised him to not just toss aside opportunities to negotiate. Kibayashi even went as far as to offer to take over negotiations in his stead if he found it too cumbersome.

“To be honest, I didn’t expect someone to contact me this soon. But it’s not like we’re strangers and I did work for her up until just now. Also, with you around, I bet that it'll be fine."

Although Akira's argument was not foolproof, since he brought up Alpha as one of his reasons, she could no longer say no. Alpha then bitterly smiled. There was a tinge of joy in her smile. It was a smile indicative of her allowing Akira to do as he wishes.

"Well, it can't be helped then. But make sure to not completely lower your guard, okay?"

Watching her warn him with a smile, Akira also smiled back at her.

"I know. Let's go."

Akira started his bike and went to the meeting location.

Carol took her camping vehicle and headed west from Mihazono ruin. As the dusk settled in, she deliberately chose the route that her camping vehicle could easily go through.

The scanner installed in the camping vehicle showed signals cropping up here and there. Those signals must be from monsters, considering that she was in the middle of the wasteland. Thanks to the noisy engine of her large sized-vehicle, none of the signals tried to approach it. Seeing that, Carol thought there should be no issues as she kept on driving. However, suddenly, a signal appeared nearby.

Carol, who immediately noticed this signal, raised her guard. However, she suddenly heard Akira's voice through the close-range communication line.

"It's me, Akira."

Not only had Akira predicted Carol's route, but he had also cloaked himself with Alpha's support. He used the camouflaging function of his augmented suit and used a thin layer of forcefield armour around his bike to reduce his presence. With the help of Alpha's detection capability, he first confirmed that no one was tailing Carol before approaching her camping vehicle.

"Just keep going and open the back door."

“Okay.”

Carol turned the autopilot function on and went to the back of the vehicle. She then opened the back door, which was connected to the back room, used for storage.

The moment it had sufficiently opened up, Akira released the accelerator and jumped in. The door immediately closed shut right away to prevent any information from leaking out.

“Akira, welcome back. You can go and take a break… Or so I want to say, but first, let’s do maintenance on your equipment. I’ll help out.”

The camping vehicle was filled with Akira’s reserve ammo and supplies. Originally, he was planning to be Carol’s bodyguard for an indefinite amount of time. Thus, he had prepared a lot of supplies.

“Thanks and sorry.”

Akira checked and refilled his equipment with her help. Reloading all magazines for his rifles. He reloaded the ammo in his bike, replacing energy packs for his rifles and augmented suit. He also recharged the bike’s energy tank, replaced the blade, and refilled the liquid metal inside the bike’s container tank. Once they were done, he took some more medicine and quenched his dry throat with a drink that Carol had brought in. He finally let out a huge sigh. With this, he had somewhat recovered after that battle back in Mihazono ruin.

“Akira, before we talk, do you want to take a bath first?”

“Bath?”

“Yep. A bath. I’m sure you’re exhausted, right? I bet our conversation will take a while, so I’ll feel bad to make you talk while you haven’t freshened up.”

“I’m fine if it’s only this much…”

“Furthermore, it’s not like you can return back to the city, right? In the worst-case scenario, this might be our last meeting.”

Akira suddenly turned silent, seeing that, Carol then casually added as if it was normal.

“Ah, just to let you know, if you think that it should be fine as long as you don’t get too close to the city, that would be a mistake, okay? Most cities normally contract private security firms to watch over the area around them. Since Kugamayama city has recognized you as a monster, I bet it will not be easy to approach Kugamayama city.”

That sentence hit Akira right where it was hurt. He could not help but frown. For Akira, who was already used to taking a bath at least once per day, it was extremely important for him. After a few seconds of hesitation, he finally made an extremely difficult decision.

“U-uh, thanks. But let’s finish our discussion first. We don’t know what might happen later, so let’s first deal with my purpose for coming here.”

“Is that so? Well, in that case, let’s talk over there.”

Carol went to the living room. Akira followed behind her, wondering if he had made the wrong decision.

They both sat face to face in the living room. First, they exchanged information on what was going on. Carol showed information she had received from Viola to him, information that had no alterations. Since Viola was also interested in information pertaining to Akira, she gathered much about him in a short span of time.

It included his battle against Chloe. The reason was due to a breakdown in negotiations regarding a certain relic between him and the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward branch. It was not rare for the situation to unfold in such a manner. Especially when a certain Hunter did not want to let go of a particular relic no matter what, while on the other hand, a large company was doing whatever it could to obtain said relic regardless of the cost. Therefore, when presented to third parties, who would normally be suspicious of any information alterations, they did not doubt the authenticity of this record. Thus, everyone outside of the parties involved believed this to be the case.

After digesting how others viewed the situation, it was Akira's turn. He explained in chronological order what had happened between him and Chloe. He did so without hiding anything. After hearing the story, Chloe raised her eyebrows.

"…So, it was all about lending that card? And that card is no longer even in your possession? At that point, no matter who had possession of that card, it should have been dealt with within the Lion Steel company. An inner conflict which you have nothing to do with? You did that, even though you could make the Lion Steel company deeply indebted to you if you just said that you would lend them the card?"

"…Yep. Pretty much."

Akira said while looking a bit offended. Seeing how he reacted, Carol smiled and tried to lighten his mood.

"I'm sorry if I offended you. I don't mean to blame you. That part of you that is so unyielding, is also the reason why you're so adamant about contracts and agreements. To be honest, I like that part of you, you know? That's why I know I can trust you."

"I-is that so?"

Akira was a bit weirded out, seeing how Carol was happily gazing at him. Although he did not regret his decision, he knew that common sense would dictate his actions as foolish. Something done solely out of his vain pride. But even so, he could tell that Carol was evaluating him highly. At least, for that quality of his – just like Kibayashi. Thanks to that, Akira felt a bit irritated.

"Now then, since we're done with sharing what we know, let's get onto the main topic. Well, it's actually quite simple, really. I want you to continue working as my bodyguard."

Akira frowned. Although he understood what she had said, he could not understand why. He re-evaluated what he had just heard to make sure that he had not mistakenly heard her. However, even after reconfirming, it still sounded as though Carol still wanted him to continue working as her bodyguard. Thus, he could not help but look at her in bewilderment.

“…Wait for a sec, I’m a bounty target right now. A 50 billion bounty target. Many Hunters will come after me.”

“I know.”

“If I’m around you in this state, you will definitely get involved too, you know?”

“Yep.”

“And I can’t get into Kugamayama city since I am recognized as a monster. Meanwhile, the Lion Steel company sees me as an enemy.”

“I know that too. Listen, Akira. We both know already. Very well in fact, from the information exchange that we did just now, right? I understand all the risks and still want you to be my bodyguard.”

Akira frowned and pulled his head back. The reason ‘why’ could still not be figured out. Unable to answer that question, he eventually mumbled a short question.

“…Why?”

He could not understand why someone would still ask him to be their bodyguard. Unlike Akira, who was obviously confused, Carol was completely calm.

“Well, I wonder what exactly you are asking. That question could consist of the reason I want you as my bodyguard. It could also be asking for the details of how I decided after considering all the risks involved. Since there are all kinds of reasons and more questions associated with them, there will be no end to it… So, I’ll just state the overview. I understand all the benefits and the drawbacks. In the end, I still believe that having you as my bodyguard brings me more benefits than drawbacks. That's why I decided that I still want you to protect me."

Carol said so with a serious expression as she leaned forward.

"So, what's your answer? Are you going to accept my bodyguard request?"

Akira knew his heart was beating hard. As he tried to calm his chaotic thoughts, he wanted to voice out a question. However, before he could ask, Carol stopped him and warned.

"Let me state this first. If you are going to reject my request because you're a bounty target, worried about getting me involved in your troubles, I will clearly state, once again, that I accept that risk. As I said before, I already know the risks when I request you to once again be my bodyguard."

Now that his question had been answered before he could ask, Akira became silent. Thus, Carol continued.

"If you can't accept because it will bring you too much trouble, I will do my best to compensate. So, what's the problem? Do tell me if you still have any issues. This is how negotiations work, after all."

Akira tried to think of the drawbacks if he accepted the job. Other than getting Carol involved in his problems, there were no other issues. Thinking about it, it was Carol who would be more likely to be negatively affected by this deal.

"It's true that I might slow you down if you have to protect me. But on the other hand, I can also help you, right? Since I brought pretty good equipment myself, I'm sure I won't cause you that much trouble. Or at least, it should be enough to compensate for the trouble that I might cause you."

Carol smiled and started talking about the benefits that Akira could receive.

Since he would be working together with her, naturally, he would have access to her camping vehicle. Even if he had to live out in the middle of the wasteland, he would still have access to a fluffy bed and a warm bath. He could also stock up a lot of ammo and food inside her vehicle. Even if he wandered the wasteland for months, his standard of living would be vastly different compared to if he was to live on top of his bike.

In terms of safety. It was also much safer. After all, he could use the camping vehicle's powerful scanner. The vehicle's armour was also much tougher than his bike. In terms of fighting capability, it was no doubt better to have Carol's assistance rather than having to fight alone. There was nothing but benefits.

The deal hardly had any drawbacks to him, which Carol explained. Even so, he could not simply bring himself to nod and agree. Instead, he started looking a bit troubled, with a tinge of suspicion.

As expected, Carol could not keep smiling when faced with suspicion.

"To be honest, I believe that it's a good offer. That's why I had the confidence to ask you to meet up. Is there something that you don't like?"

Akira showed an expression indicating that he understood why she found his reaction to be dissatisfying. Nonetheless, he frowned and stated.

"Well, to be honest, I do think that it's an amazing offer."

"Then, what's the problem?"

Carol asked and stared at him, solemnly. There was a slight tinge of anxiety and desperation in her eyes.

The reason why Akira could not simply agree was because that offer was just too good to be true. Instead of taking this great offer as a good opportunity, he could not help but to get suspicious, believing it to be some kind of trap.

Akira did think of asking Alpha, but eventually decided not to. He told himself to at least decide this matter on his own. If it was indeed a trap, then that just meant he was a fool. Furthermore, he did accept a bodyguard request from Carol before. At that time, he also had his suspicions. Thus, this time, he once again decided to deal with this matter on his own.

The less he relied on Alpha, the more time he needed to evaluate his options. As he thought in silence, Carol started to tense up. She was obviously getting desperate. After a little bit more silence, Akira, who noticed her expression, thought, [maybe I'm just overthinking things?]

"Carol."

"Y-Yes?"

"Just answer this question for me. I'm someone who did what others deem unthinkable. I've tossed negotiations with a huge company like Lion Steel aside. To top it off, I got into a fight with them and ended up with a bounty on my head worth 50 billion Aurum. Are you sure you want someone like me to be your bodyguard? If I take this job and get involved in some kind of incident, I don't mind. So long as it's not because of me. I know you've considered the possibility before asking me. You've said it yourself. But there's a limit on how far you are willing to compromise, right? So, are you really sure?"

From other's point of view, those with common sense, Akira definitely had a few screws loose. Akira knew that and was aware of it to some extent. However, surface awareness did not mean that he could stop himself from thinking and acting in such a manner.

That was why Akira could not help but get suspicious when someone asked a person like him to be their bodyguard. By thinking so, it meant that he did not trust Carol. However, it was a fact that he at least trusted her to be there in the first place. Minimally, he saw Carol as not an enemy and that she had no wish to cause harm to him.

Akira knew that it was pointless to ask her to tell him all the details – why she wanted him to be her bodyguard. Carol had already told him that it was not something that would make them enemies.

Nonetheless, Akira could not simply unconditionally trust her. On the flip side, that also meant that he could trust her conditionally. As if seeking to fulfil that condition, he curiously questioned her.

Meanwhile, Carol was a bit taken back by Akira's suspicion. She continued to lightly smile and said.

"Are you that worried about it? Don't worry. As I said before, I'm fine with it as long as it's not your fault. And from what I've heard from you, Lion Steel's bounty is not your fault."

Carol casually stated, as if to indicate that she truly did not mind.

However, in contrast to her casual attitude, Akira's reaction was by no means small. His eyes widened. This news has come as a huge surprise to him. Even Carol was surprised by his reaction.

"Akira, what's wrong?"

"Ah, no, it's nothing… So, about me getting into a fight with them, you think that it is not my fault?"

Seeing how he questioned her rather timidly, Carol noticed that it seems like she had won some points from him. Thus, she stated her real thoughts.

"Yeah. I mean, although the scale of the incident was by no means small, in the end, the main reason why that happened was because they tried to use force to get something from you. You simply fought back, right? That would mean you were not the one at fault. They were."

"…I see."

"Well, if I am being honest, I do think that this is one of your character flaws. You have no hesitation in accepting a fight against a huge company like Lion Steel. But I guess it's way too late to be complaining about that at this point. Since it had something to do with your pride as well, it's not like anyone has a say in it, right?"

After Carol said as much, she smiled rather confidently at him.

“Moreover, as the one being protected, I think that part of you works well for me. After all, it means you will not simply abandon your job as my bodyguard even in the face of a tremendously strong opponent, right? After all, you rejected an offer from a company as large as Lion Steel, regardless of how good their offer was. So, I can expect you to properly protect me no matter what.”

Akira bitterly chuckled.

“Hmm… I guess it really depends on what point of view you look at, huh?”

“Yep, exactly.”

Carol smiled back, a moment later, her expression turned serious.

“…So then, what’s your answer? If you’re okay with it, I wish you will continue being my bodyguard.”

“Alright. I’ll do it.”

In contrast to Carol, who asked with a serious and desperate expression, as though it was her last chance, Akira replied with ease. Although she was happy to hear his answer, it also made her feel a bit troubled.

“Thank you, that’s a big help… But if you’re going to accept it that casually, you could have just accepted it right from the start, right? Are you having fun teasing me or something? I don’t really think highly of someone who would play with a girl’s heart like that, you know?”

As Carol asked, half-jokingly, she started moving her body as if to seduce him. Akira simply gave a soft smile and replied.

“That’s not it. Well, ever since I got recognized as a monster and got a bounty on my head, I may have become a little bit more paranoid than usual. Sorry about it. I will properly do my job. So, I hope you can take my commitment as an apology.”

“Does that mean I can expect you to properly protect me?”

“Though I look like this, I take my job seriously. So, well, you can at least expect me to do my job.”

“Oh? Would that include accepting payment on top of the bed?”

“That would be a no.”

“That’s just too bad.”

Akira and Carol smiled at each other after exchanging banter. However, with this, Akira once again became her bodyguard.

Seeing that, Alpha smiled while staring at them, deeply.

As the camping vehicle ran through the wasteland wrapped in the darkness of the night, Akira was recuperating his body, enjoying the bath. It had been a very long, exhausting day for him. So, he allowed his body to be lulled by the warm water, satisfying his desire for a bath.

Alpha was sitting in the bathtub, naked, as usual. Her skin and hair were as graceful and lustrous as always. However, non-existent water droplets were running down her skin, hair, and bosom, before dropping into the warm water. This greatly boosted her sex appeal. As always, it was in clear view for him. Nonetheless, as always, he completely ignored it.

Up until now, everything was as usual. However, Alpha’s expression was a little bit off than her usual expression. She seemed a bit more worried than usual.

“Akira, it might be a little bit too late to ask this now. But are you sure you’re fine with retaking this job?”

Akira shifted his gaze to her. He thought that she was wearing a rather unusual expression as he replied.

“Hm? It’s fine, isn’t it? Thanks to that, I can get to bathe like this, after all.”

“Honestly speaking, I don’t think your safety can be easily exchanged for a bathing time, you know?”

“I don’t think I’m exchanging anything for this time to bathe though, or did I?”

“It’s the risk of protecting her. This is while we are still uncertain what exactly she is so scared of.”

“Well, I can understand that argument. But, it’s the same situation as the first time I accepted this job. So, why would I worry about it now?”

“Our situation back then is not the same as it is now. It is now clear that Carol is so frightened by something that she believes it’s better to have someone in a conflict with the Lion Steel company, who is recognized as a monster by Kugamayama city and has a 50 billion Aurum bounty, to protect her. I know that she has her reasons, but now that it has come to this, it’s impossible to ignore the potential risk. A danger she perceives as great than the danger you are involved in.”

Akira gave a slight nod. It showed that he agreed with her argument. However, that still did not change his decision.

“Well, I bet she has her reasons. But Carol still decided to do so knowing that she might get involved in my issues too. So, it’s more like we’re roping onto each other’s problem, no? As for me, personally speaking, I completely expect that level of risk considering she brought up such a good offer to me.”

Akira released a small sigh caused by the nice warm bath. He touched the warm water with a pleasant smile.

“Moreover, had I not accepted this job, I would be spending the night in the middle of the wasteland right now, correct? And that won’t be only for one or two days… In the worst-case scenario, I might have to be out there for 3 whole months… That would be no fun at all… I might have been able to do it back then when it was normal for me to sleep in a random back alleyway.

But that’s not possible for the current me. So, I’ll at least do this much if I can avoid having to sleep in some random alley inside the wasteland.”

Akira smiled bitterly and shook his head. Alpha sighed with exasperation and asked.

“Good grief. You really have gotten used to this lifestyle, huh? If you accept Carol’s request just because of this, what would you do if she betrays you?”

“I bet it will be fine. And even if that happens, I will think of something when the time comes.”

After Akira casually proclaimed, he frowned and tilted his head. He just noticed that for some reason, Alpha was being abnormally cautious of Carol. While he took notice, Alpha smiled confidently and stated.

“Just leave it to me when that happens.”

Seeing her expression, Akira believed Alpha was only acting out of caution, which also emphasized how valuable her support was. Thus, he smiled wryly.

“Yeah yeah, I’ll be counting on you when the time comes.”

Akira then allowed his consciousness to melt into the warm water while he looked at her smile.

On the other hand, Alpha reminded herself to be more careful of him while smiling at the boy who was lulled by the warm bath.

The question of what he would do if Carol betrayed him was only a check. If it was the Akira of the past, Alpha was certain he would have firmly responded with ‘I’ll just kill her when that happens’.

However, Akira’s answer was different this time. He only said that it should be fine. This demonstrated his belief that such a possibility was small. Even if that happened, he would simply react casually. This showed how unlikely it was for him to quickly jump to murder to deal with the aftermath.

Everyone needed some form of recognition. Akira was not an exception. Therefore, Akira thought highly of Carol, who recognized and justified his actions during his quarrel with Chloe back in Mihazono ruin – where he was not at fault. Alpha believed that was the reason why he treated her differently now.

While Alpha concluded what had happened, she continued to ponder. [It’s a fact that I was the first one to affirm his actions. As the one who did it first, I believe the effect is bigger.]

Alpha told herself that she got lucky in affirming his actions. As she was looking at Akira, who was focused on enjoying the bath, she thought that it might be better to warn him not to sleep on the same bed with Carol. After all, it would be horrendous if an accident occurred.

In front of the only person who could see her right now, Alpha continued to smile. She gave a suggestion just as usual. Though, her judgment regarding this individual had changed.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 269, Negotiation Within The Wall

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After she had completed the inter-city transport escort request, Hikaru was staying out of trouble and led a rather peaceful life. Although she had the ambition and the arrogance of a gifted youth, after she had numerous near-death experiences working with a Hunter by the name of Akira, she had calmed down considerably. She continued to do her administrative tasks without flaw. Overall, she was doing extremely well in her job.

Even after that incident, she did not stop and kept working hard. Her reputation improved with time. It was to the point where no one questioned her future success. However, at most, she would only become a city officer after a few years. This was slow in terms of the progression goal she had in the past when she was still very ambitious.

Even so, Hikaru was content with her current situation. After all, she was afraid that she would have to handle more people like Akira. Which was necessary if she wanted to climb the ladder even quicker than what she was currently doing. She could not do what was normal for Kibayashi. In the first place, it was not right to compare her to someone who preferred to deal with battle maniacs or other similar demented individuals. Convinced, Hikaru decided to build up her achievement slowly and securely. This was a much better path for someone like her, a peaceful life.

In the midst of her job, Hikaru was summoned by Inabe. It stated that he had a job for her. If it was the past Hikaru, it would have been wonderful news. After all, it signified that a city officer with considerable standing had taken notice of her. However, now, instead of jumping in joy, she seemed rather anxious. Anxious as to what kind of job Inabe had for her.

Hikaru carefully entered Inabe's office room. Looking at her enter, Inabe, who was on the sofa, immediately stopped his ongoing discussion with his men and signalled her to take a seat with his hand.

"Come in and take a seat."

Hikaru slowly and anxiously sat on the sofa in front of him. Inabe then glanced at his men, indirectly telling them to leave. Therefore, his men gave a silent bow and left the room.

Hikaru looked rather tense. Although Inabe told her with his gestures and words, he gave an order to his men with only a glance. That difference in treatment showed that currently, she had the highest priority and position here. Naturally, it was except for Inabe himself. She could feel that recognition, however, her instinctive talent was warning her not to feel happy just yet.

"…Director Inabe. Uhm, I heard that you have a job for me. So, what might it be…? To be honest, I'm in the middle of handling a few tasks from the general affair, you see… I'm afraid taking more tasks right now would affect my other tasks, so…"

Hikaru was trying to be as polite as possible. She wanted to convey that without knowing what this task was, she had no wish to accept it.

Inabe's expression did not change at all, he understood what Hikaru was hinting at but simply continued.

“It’s not a problem. You can forget any other tasks you have at the moment. I will have others do them. Of course, I will take care of that using my men, so there’s no need to worry.”

“I-I see…”

“Before we get onto the main topic, go ahead and read these documents. You have 30 minutes.”

“R-right away.”

Hikaru took the documents on top of the table. Normally, they would have been sent as digital files, but this time, Inabe made printed copies instead.

“Do you need me to explain why I printed these documents instead of forwarding them to you?”

“N-not at all.”

“Is that so? In that case, let me ask you this, why do you think I went out of my way to print them?”

Inabe asked with a serious expression as he stared at her. His gaze was indicating that the consequence would be severe if Hikaru tried to come up with a non-honest answer. Although it was not an interrogation, it was something similar.

Hikaru could feel cold sweat running down her face as she replied.

“…Considering that the documents are printed, it would mean that they contained information outside of Kugamayama city’s jurisdiction. I believe that this document contains something that I normally should not know of.”

“I see, any other guess?”

“Printed documents don’t leave digital records in the shared database. So, the accuracy of the content of the documents can’t be checked through the city’s system. The only record it will leave is the documents here, which I have received from director Inabe.”

“Alright, and then?”

Inabe’s gaze seemed to bore into her. It was as if he was warning her that he knew she had other guesses and was trying to make her confess everything.

“…Even if I share this information with the other officers, there are no guarantees that it has not been tampered with. Therefore, it can’t be used for supplementary information during meetings. Moreover, there’s a good chance that some parts of these documents have already been tampered with. It is a safeguard just in case these documents land into the hands of a hostile faction…”

Inabe nodded with a solemn expression.

“It should be fine if you already understand that much. I should at least compliment you. You are as talented as rumour has it. Now then, go ahead and read it. The lies written in these documents are easy to spot if you understand the contents. You can go ahead and ask them if you find anything questionable in it. After all, there are things that even I don’t want to be on paper.”

Now that Hikaru had nowhere to run, she made her resolve and started reading it.

The documents had information about Akira and Chloe. There were details of what was going on between the Lion Steel company and Kugamayama city. Akira’s 50 billion Aurum bounty and recognition as a monster by Kugamayama city. Chloe being detained for endangering the city. And finally, when the city manager wanted to call an official meeting, Udajima was using his connection with the Lion Steel company to delay it. Thus, they were not able to immediately deal with the situation.

Hikaru took 10 minutes to skim through the documents. She then used the remaining 20 minutes to ask Inabe questions. With that, she was able to understand the current situation.

After Inabe finished confirming everything, he nodded with satisfaction and complimented her.

“Very good. Now then, let’s get onto the main subject. I have a special order for you.”

Hikaru prayed that it was not what she thought it was. However, Inabe gave her the order which she had expected based on what she had just read.

“I want you to negotiate with Akira. Give it your best to resolve this situation peacefully. Tell me if you need anything. Authority, money. Anything. I will give you as much as I can afford to give.”

“W-wait for a second!”

“No, there will be no waiting.”

Inabe quickly crushed the moment Hikaru was just about to make a plea. He continued as if to completely decimate her prayers.

In order to have an opportunity to negotiate with a highly-on-guard bounty target, they would at least need an acquaintance to serve as the bridge. To increase the odds of success, it was better if it was from someone who was likely to give Akira a good deal. Furthermore, considering Akira’s personality, it was also for the best if they brought someone who knew Akira well, so as to not accidentally worsen the situation.

For Inabe, he only knew three such people who satisfied these conditions. Inabe himself, Kibayashi, and Hikaru. As the city manager, Inabe had to focus on revoking Akira’s monster designation in the officer meeting. He had no time to directly negotiate with Akira since he had to invest all his time to counter the damage that Udajima had done. As for Kibayashi, he was working as an officer from the Hunter Office at the moment. Therefore, Inabe had no authority to order him around. Even if he could, given the horrendous reputation Kibayashi had, there was a good chance he would somehow find a way to twist the outcome to his liking. Therefore, Kibayashi was the last person to rely on if they wanted to solve this incident peacefully.

By the process of elimination, Hikaru was his last choice. After Inabe explained this to Hikaru, her original argument was annihilated. She wanted to bring up there being someone higher, like Inabe or Kibayashi, who was more suitable to handle Akira.

“That is the reason why I picked you. Tell me if you have any objections.”

Hikaru tried her best to think of a reason. Any reason to counter Inabe’s arguments and shift this duty to someone else. However, even with her talent, she could not come up with any good counterargument as she completely fell silent.

Inabe then continued.

“I know that you don’t want to do this. To give you more motivation, let me tell you that this is our last hope. We have no plan B.”

“…We?”

Hikaru inadvertently frowned. If Inabe had used ‘you’ instead of ‘we’, she could still understand if the outcome of refusing was her getting fired. However, Inabe clearly used ‘we’, which meant that Inabe might also have to resign. Unfortunately, Hikaru did not even consider such a possibility.

If Akira got a bit too irritated and ended up attacking the city, the city defence squad would just eliminate him. Although it might still cause some damage to the city, Hikaru calculated that it would not cause that much damage. At least, not enough to shake Inabe’s position as the one assigned to manage the area under Tsubaki. Therefore, Hikaru ended up bewildered when she heard him say ‘we’.

“That’s right, we will be in deep trouble. When a Hunter caused damage to the city, repercussions would always go down to the source, which would lead to our unfortunate ending. Unfortunately, this would include those who have helped that Hunter to grow to be that strong. In other words, we will have to take responsibility.”

“I understand that, but…”

“I’m sure you’ve read Akira’s track record in the documents. However, there’s a mistake in those records. To be more precise, the prediction for his power growth in the future has been severely downplayed. I’m sure that you had a guess already. Think of his strength based on his performance during the inter-city transport escort mission. The discrepancy is just that awful.”

“What… exactly do you mean?”

“Soon, he will obtain equipment from the frontline. Equipment that those Hunters of above Rank 100 would normally use.”

Hikaru’s face was filled with shock and fear. Inabe knitted his eyebrows.

“He’s already that strong with equipment for Rank 50 and above. I’m sure you can imagine just how powerful he will get once he lays his hands on that equipment.”

“W-wouldn’t it be possible to prevent that?”

“It would be extremely difficult. After all, that equipment is a reward for him from Sakashita Heavy Industry. If we try to sabotage the delivery, we would be picking a fight with Sakashita Heavy Industry. Moreover, the ones responsible for this are you and me.”

Hikaru was greatly taken aback. Not only had the scale of the trouble just grown exponentially well outside her expectation but for some reason; a reason she could not understand one bit, she somehow found herself directly involved in this mess. Hikaru could not help but screech at Inabe.

“W-what do you mean!?”

“I can tell you, but since it has something to do with Sakashita Heavy Industry, it can’t be recorded. So, I can only verbally inform you here. Furthermore, you need to be extremely careful with this information.”

Akira had always been trying to get equipment way above the limit of his Hunter Rank. He somehow managed to get Kibayashi and Inabe to agree to help him. This was in exchange for doing a request from them. By completing his inter-city transport escort mission with Hikaru, half of that deal was completed. As such, Akira was currently only waiting for his new equipment to arrive. However, due to the transport route limitation imposed by Sakashita Heavy Industry, it got delayed for quite some time.

However, Sakashita Heavy Industry has been lifting its transport route limitation bit by bit. Transports started to run again and it was only a matter of time before Akira got his equipment.

Originally, they only procured such powerful equipment for law-abiding Hunters. If such a Hunter had become hostile towards the city, the damage to Inabe's name would be minimal. It would not be enough to shake up his position.

However, that would not be the case if the Hunter had some kind of personality problem. The officers who helped him obtain such equipment would be held responsible. Especially Hikaru, who had forced her way to get Akira into that inter-city transport escort mission. Since she was not even a city officer and just a staff member, she would be easily blown away by the after-effects of this incident. It would not be strange for her to be kicked out of the city.

Hikaru trembled. Inabe, who saw that, thought that it was a good sign. It was now clear that she understood the gravity of the situation.

"Let me say this again. This is our last chance. We have to solve this situation peacefully no matter what. I won't give you any specific orders. I hope you would make the best use of your talent, which even Kibayashi thinks highly of, to find a solution to this matter. I'll give you the code to contact me through a secret line. Feel free to call me if you need anything. That's all. Get on it this instant."

Even after Inabe had ordered her, Hikaru simply sat there, without responding.

"…Well, I'm sure that you are greatly shaken by this. You can stay here until you've calmed down."

Inabe then stood up and returned back to his own office chair. He then called his men to come back in. His men, who walked in, looked at Hikaru with confused eyes. She was still sitting there. However, after they saw Inabe softly shake his head, indicating they should just ignore her, they returned to their respective duties and did as advised.

Not too long after, Hikaru stood up. She was still in a daze, wobbling left and right as she dragged herself out of the room.

Even after she closed the door, she simply stood there for a while. But eventually, she regained her calm. Finally, she felt livid toward the situation she was dragged into. However, she came to accept that rage and used it as fuel to light the flame of her spirit. She clenched her fist and looked up as she shouted.

"…I get it already! I just need to do it! Right!?"

If there was no route to retreat, then the only way left was forward. It was pathetic to push forward while looking down. It was much better to charge forward with a burning spirit! Hikaru told herself this as she confidently smiled, which also served to inspire herself.

[High-risk! High return! A huge gamble! It is not like I can escape on my own now!] Hikaru resolved herself to face what was in front of her.

———*—

Ever since Akira had become a bounty target, he spent his days hiding around Kugamayama city. Thanks to Carol's camping vehicle, he had a place to sleep and enough ammo to fight a few battles. He also has enough food to last a few weeks. He was trying to keep a low profile until the situation changed.

One day, he suddenly received a call from Kibayashi through the secret line. Kibayashi managed to get the giant insect that Akira had defeated the other day to be counted as a general-purpose monster-hunting request. Of course, in reality, he worked 'together' with Latis to defeat that monster. However, since Chloe was the one who lured the monster this close to the city, she was denied the reward. Thus Akira was recorded to be the only one who defeated that monster.

The reward was 50 million Aurum. Although it was a huge sum, Akira felt that it was not that much, considering the trouble that he had to go through to kill that thing.

Kibayashi was somehow able to notice Akira's reaction and said.

"Oh, is it too little? As expected of someone with a 50 billion bounty on his head. That much is just way too small of a sum for you, isn't it?"

"No. That's not it. It's just that there was a time when I defeated a tank tarantula bounty monster, right? That one was 8 billion Aurum. It's weird how I only got 50 million Aurum considering that wasp was much stronger than that tarantula."

"Well, that's given. The bounty of a monster is not decided by how strong it is. It is based on how much people want that monster dead. So, it is unlikely for them to pay a lot if that monster usually only roams way up in the sky. Which means it hardly causes any issues for those living on the ground, you know?"

"Hmmm, is that so? But still… it was really strong though…"

Toward Akira, who did not seem to be able to accept this, Kibayashi continued to explain.

"Just give it up. In the first place, no one around here would be able to pay you enough money to make it worth hunting that kind of monster, you know?"

Even if someone had enough money to make it worth the risk, there were worries as well. Hunters who had enough skill to defeat such a monster might lure them down just to be able to claim that sum. If they kept doing so, eventually, these monsters would start roaming near the ground. It would increase the difficulty level of the area by manyfold. The defence squad responsible for the safety of the area deliberately set a much lower rate to avoid such a situation.

As such, when Hunters wanted to get paid a commensurate amount for defeating a monster as powerful as that wasp, they had to go further to the east. Similarly, if they hunted the same monster, they would be paid more if they were further to the east. That was how Hunters were encouraged to go to the east and eventually to the frontline of the eastern district.

When Hunters defeated a powerful monster such as that wasp, normally, its carcass would also be appraised as a highly valuable relic. Since Akira was the one who defeated that wasp, he had ownership of its carcass. However, since he had left the carcass behind, other Hunters who were unaware of what was going on, dismantled it and took it for themselves.

After Kibayashi explained, Akira finally accepted the reason for the low reward. Kibayashi then continued.

“Look. Even if you have a 50 billion bounty on you, that doesn’t mean you are that strong. Don’t get me wrong. I do think that you’re a strong Hunter. But the issue is not my thoughts but others. It will greatly affect how many come after you. After all, there are many factors that affect others’ perception of you besides your fighting ability. For example, restrictions or grudges that they have for you. How well you are hiding, which would make it difficult for them to find you. Since they’re facing a human and not a monster, I’m sure many believe that they just need to find a small opening to catch you off guard. So, be careful.”

“I know.”

“Alright. Call me if something comes up. Later then.”

Kibayashi then ended the call. Carol looked at Akira, worriedly.

“You might not want to hear this from me, but, are you sure we can trust that guy?”

“Maybe. Though, I can only say that since we have the same goal. That guy doesn’t want me to die and would prefer I go down in a blaze of glory. So, he’s doing everything he can not because of money or power. It is all merely for his own interest. So, I guess, from that perspective, it’s okay to trust that guy.”

“I see. Well, if you say so. It’s not like I’m in a place to say anything.”

Carol thought that it was so like him to think that way. Thus, she wryly smiled at him.

“But still, although you have a 50 billion Aurum bounty on you, you’re pretty calm. Why is that the case?”

“Well, to me, it’s not like I can do anything about it at this point. Even if I’m going to get strung up because of it, it’s not like that would help my situation at all. Right?”

“Hmmm.”

Carol thought that this line of thinking was far from the norm. However, she did not pursue the matter any further. Meanwhile, Akira simply gave a light smile.

“Moreover, thanks to you, I don’t need to spend my nights in the middle of the wasteland. With your camping vehicle, I even have a bed to sleep on. I also get to bathe. Also, the bath and the bed are even better than the ones back at home. I have a place to sleep and food to eat. There’s no reason for me to be that worried, right?”

Hearing that, Carol smiled bewitchingly and asked.

“Is that so? Now that you have food to eat and a place to sleep, won’t that leave only one thing? I don’t mind helping you out with that, you know?”

“Sorry. I still prefer food over women.”

“We’re in a dangerous situation and all alone with each other. There’s nothing wrong with trying to change it up, you know?”

“We’re not exactly in a dangerous situation, and I don’t have any plans to make it more dangerous than necessary. So, I guess this is the same as always, no?”

“Geez, you’re as cold as ever”

Carol was only teasing him, knowing that he would say no right from the start. She could only smile wryly and appear exaggeratedly disappointed toward his rejection.

For Akira, it was nothing more than his usual banter with Carol.

The only one who was taking a deep precaution toward that exchange was Alpha.

__*__*__*__

Along the border between the inner district and the middle district of Kugamayama city, Chloe, who was temporarily detained, was heading toward the area under Sakashita Heavy Industry. She was accompanied by Udajima, and had her servants, Latis and Pamela, following behind her.

Udajima, who arranged for the upcoming meeting at Chloe’s request, anxiously advised her.

“Make sure to not do anything to offend Sakashita Heavy Industry. Although you are heading there as the negotiator for the Lion Steel company, if something were to happen, I, who arranged this meeting, will not be excluded from the fallout.”

Chloe smiled gracefully.

“Unfortunately, if we don’t get anything out of the negotiation, it might be the end for the both of us. If doing nothing will lead to our demise, isn’t it better to take this chance and try?”

“That is not what I meant!”

Udajima raised his voice. Chloe lightly shook her head and reminded him.

“Calm down. We’re entering their area soon. Your position in Kugayamama city will not help us here. So, make sure not to do anything rude.”

Udajima frowned and closed his mouth shut.

When they entered the area under Sakashita Heavy Industry, the first thing the guards did was ascertain their identities. Udajima could only go this far as he only accompanied Chloe as a guide from Kugamayama city. Meanwhile, Chloe’s detainment basically got transferred from the city to Sakashita.

Even Chloe started to feel anxious. The area in front of her was under the jurisdiction of Sakashita Heavy Industry. Her opponent this time was one of the 5 largest corporations. Even if she was from the Lion Steel company, if she got killed here, that would be the end of it. Lion Steel would make no attempts to retaliate against Sakashita. That was just how powerful Sakashita was. Although she knew there was no reason for Sakashita to kill her, she still could not help but feel anxious.

As she reminded herself not to do anything rude in place of Udajima, a guide from Sakashita Heavy Industry appeared.

“Chloe-sama, I presume? Please allow me to be your guide. This way, please.”

Chloe and her servants went inside, following the guide. All the guards in the area were from Sakashita Heavy Industry. It gave a feeling of entering an archaeological site, which was in the midst of excavation. They were then led to a certain room.

“This is the room.”

The guide said so and politely bowed. Chloe and her servants then entered the room, leaving the guide in the hallway. Inside, the person who was going to negotiate with her was already waiting with his bodyguard.

Chloe once again ascertained her resolve. She stepped in front of him, who was waiting for her while still sitting in his seat. She smiled politely, worthy of someone from the founder family of the Lion Steel company.

“I am Chloe Leverant Lorentz, it is a pleasure to meet you.”

“Name’s Sugadome. I’m busy right now, so I hope you brought something worthy of my time.”

“Of course!”

The negotiator and his bodyguard from Sakashita Heavy Industry were Sugadome and Hammerz. Toward the two, who had political power and fighting capability that Chloe could not hope to match, she had to gather all the courage she could and face them. Else, she might have shrunk back.

__*__*__*__

In the middle of the wasteland, Shirou, who was in his hideout, looked rather disgruntled as he mumbled.

“…Good grief, waiting like this feels so awful…”

Shirou was told by Sugadome to make sure that his communication line was open around certain periods of time. However, because of that, Shirou could not use that time to do anything else. The feeling of wasting time was making him feel uneasy.

__*__*__*__

The reason Chloe asked to have a meeting with Sugadome, was to apologize for the recent incident near Mihazono ruin. Although it was right in front of a Hunter Office, how serious it was seen as a problem was another matter. Chloe used this as an excuse. She wanted to offer an explanation and apology to Sugadome. She used Udajima to convey this.

And now, she was explaining the situation to Sugadome. First, she conveyed the value, necessity, and danger of Olivia’s card. To wrap it up, she mentioned how she did not have any other options, which led to that incident.

A certain Hunter came into the ownership of the card by accident. Chloe, who thought that it was dangerous, went to the Hunter and requested him to hand over ownership to her. Even with everything she had prepared, the Hunter refused. In order to make sure that this dangerous relic would not cause any trouble, she had no other choice but to use force. That was how their negotiation had turned into a battle. Although the Hunter understood that he was in front of a Hunter Office, it was obvious that he had no plans of holding back. In order to protect herself, Chloe had no other choice but to fight back.

Chloe spoke apologetically, pleading innocence. Highlighting the fact that she had no other choice.

“I’m sure I don’t need to say what kind of problems a dangerous relic might bring to the eastern district. As I understand, even Sakashita Heavy Industry is actively negotiating with various Hunters for similar reasons. I am sure there are many occasions when negotiation fails and the company is forced to take the relic by force. Although the scale is not the same, I was forced into the same situation. I hope that Sakashita Heavy Industry understands.”

“Very well. But if it’s only for this, I see no reason to request a physical meeting with me. You could just send your apology through our respective companies. I don’t see how this is worthy of both of our time.”

Sugadome was basically saying this was a waste of time. Chloe tensed up and continued.

“I feel responsible for this situation. I feel that it would be wrong of me not to directly convey my apology. Moreover, the Hunter Office is an organization under the Corporate Government. As such, it obeys the will of the 5 largest corporations. So, I thought that it was only to be expected for me to apologize directly to Sakashita Heavy industry. Also, although I look like this, I’m still a part of the Lorentz family. So, I can’t just lower my head toward anyone. If I lower my head, it will hurt the pride of our company. With that in mind, although I know it would be a small inconvenience for you, I asked for your time to have a direct face to face meeting.”

That was when Chloe pulled out the white card.

“And this will be the real reason. This is the card that I have mentioned. As a form of apology, I wish to give this card to you.”

Latis and Pamela, who were standing behind Chloe, seem to have completely been blindsided. They never expected Chloe to give Olivia’s card away. However, before they could plead their master to reconsider, they reminded themselves. They were in front of Sugadome. Therefore, they could not afford to embarrass their master.

“However, as expected, considering the worth of this card, I can’t just give it away for free. The reason why I thought that this would be worth your time, is because of the negotiation to handover this card.”

Chloe showed the white card to Sugadome. Although she was nervous, she somehow still managed to smile.

The silence continued. Chloe was doing her best to maintain her smile. She waited for Sugadome’s answer as cold sweat trailed down her back. Even Latis and Pamela could feel how tense she was. They looked worried even when they were trying to maintain their expression.

Eventually, Sugadome replied without a change in his expression.

“I see. I understand how you see that as a good enough reason to take my time.”

Chloe’s expression relaxed from relief.

“Thank you very much. In that case, please let me state what I expect in return for this card.”

“No. That won’t be necessary.”

Chloe frowned. Olivia’s card was not something that she could simply give away without anything in return. She was certain Sugadome also understood that. Therefore, she spoke up. Though she knew that it was a little rude.

“…I’m sorry, although I did say that I will give away this card as an apology., As expected, I can’t just give it away without anything in return. Considering the value of this card, I hope that my willingness to trade it is enough as an apology.”

“I already understand that.”

“Then, why?”

Chloe obviously seemed troubled. Therefore, Sugadome stated with his unchanging expression.

“Your willingness to trade that card is indeed enough as an apology. But there is no need to give it to me. You may leave with that card.”

Chloe, Pamela, and Latis could not hide their shock. With this card, they could negotiate with an old-world AI. Negotiate to a certain level. There was no way those from Sakashita Heavy Industry did not know of this. However, with that knowledge, Sugadome still unexpectedly refused the opportunity.

After hearing his unexpected reply, Chloe tried to think of a reason why. She searched through her memories and experience. She then guessed that it was some kind of gambit. To get the card at a better price. With that assumption, she challenged Sugadome.

“Is that so? I’m sure you understand how much this card is worth. All that trouble from the battle in Mihazono ruin, which included several powered suits from the city defence squad. It’s just that valuable of a relic. Just think of what might happen if this card falls to the hand of the Nationalist instead of an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry?”

Chloe thought that Sugadome would not want that to happen. Thus, he would not refuse this chance to get the card. That was why she said as much.

However, Sugadome then lightly replied. Still, with his unchanging expression and neutral tone of voice.

“Very well then. I shall have you die.”

Chloe froze in shock.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 270, An Unexpected Request

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Latis and Pamela immediately understood that Sugadome was not joking. He was serious when he said that Chloe needed to die. Thus, both quickly readied their stance to protect their master. But they were too late. The moment they felt the compulsion to protect, Hammerz who was just standing next to Sugadome a moment ago, already had his hand on their faces.

Hammerz was holding back. It was to warn them. He would kill them if they tried to make any suspicious moves. If he had any desire to kill, they would already be dead by now. Thus, Pamela and Latis knew better than to try anything in this situation.

Chloe exasperatedly sighed. Not only was it to help her calm down, but it was also to fake bravado in front of Sugadome.

“Sugadome-sama, I don’t think it’s wise for an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry to spill blood inside the inner wall.”

Those who were living inside the inner wall, even the worse out of the bunch, all had at least some level of decency. Something common sense to all of them was the matter of taking lives. It was an action only meant for outside the inner wall. Even if those within the inner wall had no worries when it came to monsters, killing each other would mean that there was no difference between inside and outside the inner wall. Thus, if such acts were committed inside, there was no meaning for them to live inside the inner wall. This common sense was one of the main pillars that maintained civil order within the inner wall.

Chloe was implying that this was not something that an officer from the 5 biggest corporations should do. They serve as an example. Thus, she was trying to use that to stop Sugadome.

However, Sugadome did not show any reaction to her words.

“I can understand why you would say that.”

“T-then, in that case…”

“But personally speaking, as a part of Sakashita Heavy Industry, I also take pride in actively contributing to the safety of the eastern district as a whole. I understand the danger of that card in your possession. Unfortunately, I’m not that irresponsible. I can’t allow someone who would dare say something as preposterous as giving such a dangerous object to the Nationalists to go. Even with my contract with City Management. Even considering the fact that you’re someone from the Lorentz house. It’s not enough of a reason not to dispose of you.”

Even after he said that, Sugadome was still as expressionless as usual. It was as if disposing of her was just one of his common duties. He was only executing his duty. Nothing more. Chloe understood that much.

“After I dispose of you, I will report to Lion Steel. I had just cleaned up a Nationalist supporter inside the Lion Steel company. I have no plans to hide it. If you have any last words, you can go ahead and make your calls. I’m lenient enough to at least wait for you to finish delivering your will.”

Chloe’s smile already vanished from her face. Behind her stern expression, she was desperately trying to find a way out. She understood that pleading for her life was useless. She had to make a good logical argument to change

Sugadome's mind. She was using everything her brain could conjure up. It was to the point where she could feel the time slow down.

However, she could not come up with anything decent. After a short pause, Sugadome then spoke. It was as if to tell Chloe that she had run out of time.

"I see. So, you have no last will to leave behind, huh? Now then…"

Chloe scowled in fear, Latis and Pamela also thought that this was their end.

"…I will allow you to retract your statement and correct this misunderstanding. If you do so, I will regard that statement as nothing but an atrocious bluff, which stemmed from your foolishness. That you were not trying to support the Nationalists."

Chloe did not expect things to end like this. She quickly recovered and took his offer.

"I only meant it as the worst-case scenario. It was a possibility, which only meant to emphasize the value of the card. I have no wish to let it fall into Nationalists' hands. I take what I said back and apologize for making such a remark."

Once again, silence filled the room. Chloe knitted her eyebrows, thinking her statement was not good enough.

After that short silence, Sugadome spoke up without the slightest change in his tone.

"Very well."

Chloe inadvertently sighed with relief. She was panting, caused by the lingering anxiety after that whole ordeal. Hammerz also let Latis and Pamela go. They straightened their posture but seemed rather lethargic. Hammerz then casually returned to Sugadome's side.

"Both you and I are as strong as common people. But at the same time, we both have the authority to command those with powerful fighting capabilities. It only takes one word for us to kill someone. That is exactly why we must be careful with what we say."

"…Thank you for the advice."

Chloe, who managed to calm her breathing, replied.

"Now then. I guess I should let you know this to avoid any misunderstanding. It seems like you actually believe that I don't understand the full worth of that card. But, let me tell you this. That is not true at all. I understand the value of that card extremely well. It's just that I don't see any need to get a second card by making a deal with Lion Steel."

After he said so, Sugadome pulled out a white card. It was identical to the one that Chloe had. Chloe, Pamela, and Latis were shocked speechless. While still in a state of shock, there was a tint of doubt in Chloe's expression. It was slowly filled with confusion and bewilderment.

[…Is that real? If it is, how did he get that card? Then, is it fake? But if it is, why would he prepare one? No. Even if it's real, there should be no drawback in having one more. So, why would he refuse my offer…?]

"I can understand you doubting the authenticity of this card. After all, it's not something that can be easily obtained."

"O-of course, I don't doubt its authenticity…"

"I will show you proof then… But before that, there's someone that I want you to meet. Wait here for a bit."

As Chloe was wondering who this person was that Sugadome wanted her to meet. Sugadome picked up his information terminal and made a call. A moment later, someone who she had met in the augmented reality room suddenly appeared. It was Shirou.

"Good grief! Calling me out of the blue after making me wait. I'm busy, you know? So, what is it now… Gehk!?"

The moment Shirou noticed Hammerz, he could not hide his shock. Meanwhile, Hammerz was smiling ominously at him. Shirou let out a dry chuckle as if he was trying to let the matter with Hammerz slide. Sugadome then spoke to Shirou.

“Shirou. I bet you’re already acquainted with her. I know that you caused her trouble a few days ago. So, go ahead and give her your apology.”

“You seriously called me just for that? Ah, no, I am sorry.”

Shirou was obviously displeased with this. However, since Sugadome was staring sharply at him, he flusteredly apologized.

“…Eh? Ah, please don’t worry about it…”

Chloe was equally flustered as she accepted his apology. Both Shirou and Chloe looked at each other. It was obvious that both of them did not understand why Sugadome was making them do this. Afterwards, Sugadome put his card on the table and said.

“Let’s get back to the main topic. I will show you proof that this card is not fake.”

Right at the next moment, Olivia appeared next to Shirou. Sugadome used the device on the table to access the card and contacted Olivia.

“Olivia of Lion Steel, at your service. Thank you for contacting us and choosing our service.”

Olivia bowed politely at Sugadome and glanced at Chloe. Chloe, who was given a final warning the previous time they had met, flinched back. She obeyed Olivia’s warning and decided to not contact her again. However, she was not certain if this was considered a violation of Olivia’s warning. There were no clues at all.

But Sugadome then stated.

“She is my guest, please don’t mind her.”

Olivia stared at Chloe's group for a few seconds before turning back to Sugadome. Chloe sighed in relief, believing they were saved.

Sugadome smiled at Olivia, who was smiling back at him. He then passed the card over to Hammerz.

"Nice to meet you. I am Sugadome. I'm hoping to discuss a certain job if I may."

Olivia's gaze shifted to Hammerz. Hammerz nodded, which signalled her to proceed. However, Olivia's gaze then shifted to Shirou. Shirou shook his head as if to say that it was not him who called her this time. Only after she checked did her gaze return to Sugadome. She smiled politely at him.

"Of course!"

"Thank you. That's great to hear. Let's get into the details then. Ah, but before that…"

Sugadome looked at Chloe.

"I'm sorry but this is where you leave."

Chloe's face stiffened for a split second. It was obvious that she did not appreciate being shooed away right after Sugadome called Shirou. She was finally about to get into the meaty details of her negotiation with Sugadome, but alas, it was not like she could refuse.

"…Of course. Please do excuse us then."

She politely bowed to Sugadome and left the room with Latis and Pamela in tow.

The guide, who accompanied Chloe's group to Sugadome's room, once again guided them out of the territory under Sakashita Heavy Industry. While travelling, Chloe kept thinking back on what just happened in Sugadome's room.

[…There must be some kind of motive behind calling Olivia in front of us. I just can't figure out what it is… Is it simply a means of informing Lion Steel? That Sakashita Heavy Industry already has the means to contact Olivia-sama? Is that really it? Is that really something that important? I feel like there is something more to it…]

Even after placing assumptions on top of assumptions. Guesses on top of guesses, she still could not figure out an answer. It was obvious from her face that she was being tormented by it. There was even a tint of desperation as well.

[In the end, I could not give the card away to Sakashita Heavy Industry. It didn't go well at all… This will not help my situation at all…]

As she was deep in thought while walking, the guide suddenly said to her.

"Chloe-sama, this is as far as I can go."

"Eh? Ah, right. Thank you very much!"

The meeting place with Udajima was still a bit further ahead. Although it was not that far and she could go by herself, normally, the guide would have accompanied her all the way. The fact that they were being left in the middle of the road was rather weird for her. However, since the guide was a staff member of Sakashita Heavy Industry, Chloe still had to make sure she did not say anything rude. Thus, she gave a smile and thanked the guide.

But the guide then did not immediately leave and left a message to her.

"I have a message from Sugadome-sama."

Chloe gave a nod. She was curious since they met just a moment ago.

"What might this message be?"

"It's up to Chloe-sama. If Chloe-sama wishes to make this incident bigger, it would be best for Chloe-sama's sake that she does not rope Sakashita Heavy Industry into this. It is also not recommended to cause trouble in Kuzusuhara ruin as well. We're sure that Chloe-sama will clean up after this incident comes to an end. However, in the case where it becomes too much to handle alone, please do contact us. That is all."

Chloe, who picked up Sugadome's intention behind the message, was frozen from shock. Latis and Pamela flusteredly tried to call for her but she did not react.

"Chloe-sama. Do tell me if you have a message for Sugadome-sama."

"……. Please tell him. Thank you for your warning."

"Certainly. Well then, please allow me to excuse myself."

The guide then bowed and left calmly.

The shock was unbelievable. Watching the guide leave, being left with those she trusted, she suddenly felt a tinge of relief. This minor difference caused her to stumble back. Of course, Pamela and Latis quickly caught her before she collapsed.

"Milady!?"

"…He knew… He knew everything… The reason why he called Olivia-sama in front of me is just to prove it… But that's just…"

The reason why Sugadome did not accept the card was because he did not want to get Sakashita Heavy Industry involved in her issues. The reason why he called Olivia in front of her was to confirm whether Olivia was still going to tolerate the trouble that Chloe was causing. The moment she noticed his intentions, her shock intensified, which slowly turned into fear.

Afterwards, Chloe wobbled left and right as she walked to the meeting place, where Udajima was going to regroup with her. Seeing her utterly exhausted, Udajima worriedly asked.

"You don't seem well, what happened?"

"…We just had a negotiation with an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry. It's to be expected that I would be tired afterwards."

“I see. In that case, you should head back to your room and rest. I can ask you what happened later.”

“Sorry but I’ll do just that.”

Afterwards, Chloe looked at Udajima. Her eyebrows rose as if she had just come up with something. As expected, Udajima noticed something was up.

“What’s wrong?”

“No… Nothing. My apologies, but I will return to my detention room. If there are no emergencies, I want to take my time resting.”

Chloe then went ahead of Udajima and returned back to her detention room. On her way to her room, Chloe’s face turned sterner.

[I should have been suspicious the moment a mere desperate City Management staff member was able to arrange a meeting with an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry. What a blunder. I thought the request would get rejected but it unexpectedly got accepted without much resistance. I got blinded by happiness since it got through. And I thought too highly of myself and my connections. Even with the branch manager of Lion Steel Company Eastern District Third Ward branch. I really still have a long way to go, huh…]

Initially, Chloe thought that negotiations with Sugadome ended up as a huge failure due to severe blunders on her part. But it was not like she had any other choice in that situation. This means that she had to find another way. She used this experience and sought another solution. Using what she had learnt, she noticed something.

[Sugadome was able to accurately see through my intentions. He still left me a message. It basically states that he’s fine so long as I do not drag Sakashita Heavy Industry in this mess. This can even be interpreted as approval from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Olivia-sama also did not kill me back then. It could be interpreted as Olivia-sama still tolerating the current situation. This should be good enough proof to say that I’m just following Alice-sama’s order… Considering that I was able to receive this confirmation, I think it is fine to say that it was not a complete failure. The branch manager should listen to me now…]

Withdrawing from the ongoing gambit and losing her bet, only led to her demise. Therefore, the only choice available was to win. Chloe reminded herself. [I have not lost yet. This is not the end.]

“That’s right… I’ll win this! Whatever it takes!”

Chloe smiled. She removed the shackle that held her back and reinterpreted the current situation. What could be exchanged for more chips in her wager?

＿＿＿*＿

After Chloe’s group left Sugadome’s room, Shirou confusedly looked at Sugadome and asked.

“So, did you call me here just to make me apologise to that girl? If so, can I leave now? I’m busy, you know.”

“No. If you leave now, I will declare that you have run away from Sakashita.”

“What is it then? Can we just get to it, already?”

“Let’s get onto the main subject then.”

Sugadome smiled at Olivia.

“Olivia-san, is it possible to ask you to be his bodyguard?”

“Eh?”

Shirou was caught by surprise. Sugadome then explained with a serious gaze.

“Last time, you said you don’t want to have someone guard you. But it should be fine if it’s her, no? As a matter of fact, you even paid her to be your bodyguard before. So, I won’t take no as an answer.”

Shirou obviously started to panic.

“Uh, well, that is… Like, you know, I don’t have the money to pay for her.”

“Don’t worry about that. I will pay for her. So then, Olivia-san, may I trouble you with such a request?”

“If the escort target approves, I shall take care of it right away.”

“That sounds reassuring. So there you have it, Shirou-kun. Give Olivia-san your approval.”

Shirou’s face turned pale as he firmly shut his mouth.

“Just to let you know, regardless of the status of your task, if you don’t return back in one month, I will assume that you plan to seek refuge in another company. We will dispatch men to arrest you. However, if you’re accompanied by an escort at that point, I will let it slide.”

After Sugadome clearly stated the deadline, Shirou’s face became even paler.

“If you have an escort with you, you don’t have to do your regular reports anymore. You can just give me your full report after one month. I will also stop Hammerz from looking for you. There should be no problem as long as Olivia-san is your bodyguard. I will even consider extending the deadline as well. You can go sightseeing to your heart’s content before returning back to your main mission. At least for the remaining month.”

Hammerz’s face twitched. It was obvious that he did not find this to be pleasant. But seeing Shirou still tense, even after receiving such a good offer, he found it to be strange.

Shirou did not say anything in return. After a short silence, Sugadome’s gaze turned sharp.

“This is a warning. If you don’t give me your answer, I will see it as betrayal toward Sakashita Heavy Industry. So, what is your answer?”

Shirou was cornered. However, he then made his resolve and slowly opened his mouth, squeezing out words from his throat.

“I…”

Shirou’s pale face, distorted from his trembling, had the corner of his lips faintly go up.

“…Refuse.”

Hammerz’s shocked expression showed just how unthinkable Shirou’s answer was.

Sugdome stared at him. Shirou was frozen as if he was awaiting his death sentence. His eyes still locked onto Sugadome.

“…I see.”

That short sentence from Sugadome sent a shiver to Shirou’s spine and made Hammerz take a step back.

Sugadome then lowered his shoulders. It was to expel the tense mood. He apologetically bowed to Olivia.

“Olivia-san, my deepest apologies. Since the escort target has refused, I know it is very rude of me being the one who asked for you, please allow me to save this for another time.”

“Certainly. Feel free to contact us next time. We, from Lion Steel, will wait for your next request.”

Olivia smiled and spoke. It was as if she did not mind this at all. She then gracefully bowed before vanishing.

After Olivia vanished, the friendly smile also vanished from Sugadome’s face. He spoke up.

“You can leave now, and don’t forget your regular report.”

Shirou awkwardly bowed and ended the call.

Hammerz still looked confused. He was not sure if he should ask Sugadome what that was all about. After hesitating, he finally decided to at least try asking. However, before he could say anything, Sugadome suddenly ordered him.

“Let me change your mission. You are to still look for Shirou-kun, but before you move in to arrest him, when you find him, make sure to contact me first. If you can’t reach me, be extra careful to not kill him by accident. That’s all. You can now leave.”

Judging from Sugadome’s mood, Hammerz knew that it was not a good idea to ask him right now, Therefore, Hammerz simply gave a slight bow and left the room without saying anything.

Sugadome, who was left alone in his room, stayed there for a while thinking of his future plan.

__*__*__*__

After he closed the call, Shirou, who was in his hideout, began breathing roughly. His face was white as a sheet of paper.

“…Ah crap. This is bad. This is really bad!”

He was pressed for time after Sugadome declared a clear deadline for him. However, there was also something else that made him panic.

“Don’t tell me that he found out…?”

Shirou intensely shook his head left and right. It was as if he was forcefully trying to shake away his worries.

“…No. If he had known, he would have sent someone to arrest me right away. I’m sure that offer was nothing more than for the sake of my safety. His reaction was simply one towards a brat with too much pride. I’m sure he’s simply thinking of some kind of punishment for me. One fit for a stupid brat who had just wasted the kindness of his superior. I’m sure he has not found out yet…”

Shirou knew that his guess was mixed with his own prayers. However, it was the only conclusion he could draw. Anything else would cause him to lose hope.

“…Let’s hurry up. I can’t afford to do it the safe way anymore.”

In the worst-case scenario, he might end up having to fight against Sakashita Heavy Industry. However, he was not in a situation where he could afford to be careful with his choices. Thus, he made his resolve and decided to take the barely safe route.

__*__*__*__-

Sugadome, who was left alone in his room, finally made his decision.

“He even refused such a good offer. I think we can be certain that it is indeed that case. Or at least, the possibility should be enough as a reason to prepare ourselves.”

After he made his decision, he reviewed the situation again. He made sure that he still reached the same conclusion before giving a nod.

Sightseeing. Sightseeing location. Ruins. Ruin exploration. Since it did not come up in the ruin data on the web, there was a good chance that it was an unexplored ruin. A ruin that could not be discovered through normal means. The reason why he refused to have anyone accompany him, was to prevent information leaks. It must be something that Shirou did not want Sakashita Heavy Industry to know about no matter what. Even if it meant he had to refuse having such a reassuring bodyguard like Olivia-san escorting him. There must be something that caused Shirou to go that far.

After Sugadome made his conclusion and finished re-examining it, he then called the main HQ of Sakashita Heavy Industry.

“Yes… Yes, that is correct. Just to be safe, I guess… This is just insurance. There’s no need to prioritize it, but it would be great to have it ready as soon as possible… Indeed. Depending on how this develops, I might have to request reinforcements… No, it depends on how the situation develops. I hope we can have someone sent to do an investigation. If the result shows that what we are doing is nothing but unnecessary, then we can just divert the soldiers to Kuzusuhara ruin.”

After discussing the finer details with the HQ staff, Sugadome then stated with a dire tone.

“Yes, I formally request for anti-rebuild personnel. That is all from me.”

He then closed the call and heaved a huge sigh.

“I hope that it’s nothing more than just a bad guess.”

His serious expression reflected the severity of the situation. It was something that he could not show to his men.

__*__*__*__

As Akira was spending his days as a bounty target, he suddenly got a call. It was reaching him via an encrypted line using his Hunter code. Akira was surprised when he checked the identity of the caller. Since Kibayashi warned him to not just toss aside any negotiation opportunities that came his way, he picked up the call. Well, he was also curious about receiving a call from such an unexpected caller.

The call concluded with both participants deciding on somewhere to meet up.

Akira was originally planning to go alone on his bike, but when he told Carol about that call, she wanted to tag along too.

“It might be a trap, so it would be safer for you to stay here though?”

“Nope. As a bodyguard, you should not leave your escort target, you know? Moreover, I can help you if something bad happens.”

Seeing Carol smile as she casually spoke, it felt as if her proclamation was the natural thing to do. Akira gave a soft smile and replied.

“Is that so? Well, in that case, we’ll be going as soon as we’re done with the preparations.”

Akira seemed to be in a good mood as he and Carol made their preparation.

At a certain place, in the middle of the wasteland, a man in a formal suit stepped off of a vehicle. He was waiting for Akira to arrive. Next to him was a girl in a maid uniform and a man in a butler suit. They stood, ready for anything.

The man in the formal suit frowned and checked his wristwatch.

“He should be here soon though…”

It was unacceptable to be late. Considering that Akira was the one who proposed the meeting to be held in the middle of the dangerous wasteland. It would not be strange if either party left and abandoned the meeting.

However, Akira was a bounty target. There was a good chance that he was fighting Hunters, who were after him. It was also only natural for him to be suspicious if it was some kind of trap. Therefore, leaving now would be a rather rash decision.

As the guy in a formal suit started pondering over how long he should wait past the meeting time, he noticed a bike heading in his direction. He sighed in relief, believing it to be Akira. However, he immediately noticed that the person on that bike was female and there was no one else on the bike.

The bike stopped next to that guy and Carol stepped off.

“Are you the one asking for Akira?”

“Yes, where is he? Are you here to lead the way to another meeting place? If that’s indeed the case, it would be great if you had come a little sooner.”

It was not rare to actively change the meeting place in order to avoid ambushes. The guy in the suit knew that. However, considering the time required to travel to a new location, it made him feel disgruntled.

But that was when Akira suddenly spoke up.

“No. Here is fine.”

Akira suddenly appeared behind Carol. He was using his camouflaging defensive coat to hide his presence.

Depending on the capability of the camouflaging device, a decent enough information-gathering device would be able to see through it. Naturally, the man’s group were using powerful information-gathering devices to continuously watch their surroundings. Normally, they should have no problems detecting Akira.

Even so, depending on the camouflaging device, it was still quite a difficult task to completely erase one’s presence. Comparatively, it was much easier to fake the presence of others. Thanks to Alpha’s support, Akira managed to hide his presence by blending it in with Carol.

Because of that, the other party were caught with their pants down when Akira suddenly appeared. Especially the maid and the butler. Since they were acting as bodyguards, they were obviously more shocked. Compared to them, the guy in the formal suit was just minutely shocked.

“I’m glad that you reached this place on time. As I have informed you in the previous call. I am the head of Lion Steel Eastern District Fourth Ward Branch, Fulip Kobet Lorentz. I’m looking forward to today’s discussion.”

“I’m Akira.”

Leaving aside the stark contrast in the length of their introductions, they immediately went onto the main topic.

“Now then. Please allow me to explain our stance on the current situation. We of Lion Steel Eastern District Fourth Ward have no wish to antagonize you. So, I hope you can keep this in mind as we continue this discussion."

Akira frowned and retraced his head sideways.

"I'm pretty sure Lion Steel is the one that placed a bounty on my head though?"

"First of all, let me straighten up this misunderstanding. The one who placed that bounty on you is the third ward branch, not us of the fourth ward branch. Your enemy is only Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch. Not the whole Lion Steel company. This is a very important point."

Lion Steel is formed of individual branches working together under the main HQ. However, each branch dealt with the area under them as if they were from different companies. Some of them worked peacefully with each other, while others got along like water and oil. There were even cases where they got embroiled in conflict over the territory borders between different branches.

Of course, it was a whole different case if Akira was picking a fight with the Lion Steel Eastern District as a whole. As long as that was not the case, his fight was only limited to a regional conflict. In order not to unnecessarily cause more conflict, it was important to understand this point well. Akira seemed rather surprised. Nonetheless, he showed deep interest in the topic as he listened to their explanation.

"If I may add, you might think that you're already in a hostile relationship with the third branch, but that might not necessarily be the case, at least, not yet. It's a fact that they placed a bounty on you. But the one who did that was Chloe. She just used the name of the third branch. So, the third branch itself did not act under the direct order from the branch manager. This is just something that I've gathered. It also seems that even the third branch sees Chloe's actions as problematic. They are considering her punishment."

This time, Akira was completely flabbergasted.

"Is that so?"

“Yes. But, based on my investigation, it doesn’t seem like punishment has been delivered yet. So, I bet they’re still discussing punishing her or not.

As Fulip confirmed, Akira had lowered his initial wariness, which stemmed from the fact that they were from the Lion Steel company. Fulip noticed this and decided that it was a good time to move on to the next subject.

“Now that I hope you fully understand our position, that we are not your enemies, I wish to move on to the main subject. Will that be okay with you?”

“Sure, go ahead.”

It was not like Akira believed everything that Fulip had said. However, it was not like he had reasons to completely distrust him either. Fulip understood Akira’s stance from his reaction and continued.

“Very well then. There is one thing that I want to ask of you. Is it possible to request you to kill Chloe Levelant Lorentz? Of course, we will reward you for this job.”

Ever since Akira was told during the call through the vehicle’s secret line that they wanted to meet up directly to discuss a highly important subject, he already had some guesses of what it might be. However, as expected, this request was something completely out of the left field.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 271, Carol's Past

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira was surprised when someone from Lion Steel, which had placed the bounty on him, asked to have a meeting with him. Even so, the surprise he felt now was incomparable to that. Kill Chloe – that was the task Fulip, a man from the Lion Steel Fourth Branch, requested of him.

"Wait a second. Are you being serious? Are you seriously offering me this job?"

"Indeed, we are. That is also if you are fine with accepting it. I want to know if you are someone who would accept such a request. After all, there are many Hunters who refuse to commit assassinations. Though, with that being said, it is not rare to find them show no hesitation when it comes to hunting a bounty target. Personally speaking, I believe the only difference here is how the reward is handed out. The core of what they do is exactly the same. But what can I say? Different people have different principles? So, I have no plans to force my opinion on anyone. Anyway, what is your answer?"

"Well, even if you say so…"

“Let me be clear. It’s not like we are formally offering you this job now. We are still assessing whether you are someone who would take such a job. If the answer is a yes, we will take your answer back to our company, and deliberate on it with the others. Only after that, might we send you a formal offer for this job. If things develop in that direction, we will still need to sit down and talk about the reward some other time. There is still a good chance we might not reach an agreement. This is where we are right now. If you plan to refuse because of the risk, we can discuss the conditions and the reward later to make it worthwhile for you. So, I believe the lack of reward is not a good enough reason to reject this offer at this point.”

Akira thought that Fulip was not wrong, but he was still hesitating. The moment he realized why he was hesitating; Akira immediately firmly shook his head.

“Sorry, but I will have to refuse.”

“May I ask why? You’ve tried several times to kill Chloe and I bet you’re not done trying yet. So, that part should not change whether you take our offer or not. If you accept our offer, we can help craft a good reason for you murdering one of our people. It would be just a job. A request for a reward. Others will think that you simply got yourself roped into a conflict between Lion Steel branches. Instead of you, alone, picking a fight against the whole Lion Steel company. From that point of view, this is an excellent offer for you. You only stand to gain by accepting our offer.”

“Yeah, I bet it is. But my answer is still the same.”

“Why? Do you think this offer is too good to be true? That’s why you are refusing? We are offering a reward for accepting this job, in consideration of the problems that will arise from you picking a fight with Chloe. It is nothing more than compensation from the demerit of having a 50 billion Aurum bounty and monster designation from Kugamayama city. Considering all the troubles you have faced so far, we are willing to be generous with our reward and support.”

But even so, Akira once again shook his head. Fulip lightly sighed.

“…Well, although it is not a normal request, it is still assassination. I won’t force you. But, if I may ask, can you at least tell me why you can’t accept it? I’m sure it’s not like you’re hesitating to take her life after all that has happened, right?”

“Well, yeah. It would be way too late to be hesitating at this point. It’s just that…”

“Yes?”

“I want to kill her purely because of my own will. I don’t want to get someone else’s intention mixed into it. That is all.”

Akira said firmly, without any hesitation. For him, it was vital. Thus, it alone was enough of a reason.

However, Fulip did not seem to be satisfied with his answer. So, Akira added another reason.

“And also, if I accept your request, it means that I will no longer be able to make decisions on my own. In case the situation changes where I no longer want her dead, it would turn into a huge problem. That’s why I won’t accept your request.”

“Oh. So you are saying even after all the battles that you have gone through, there’s still a possibility of you changing your mind, huh? Is that even possible?”

“Well, it’s not that simple for me too, you know? I’m already used to having to encounter unexpected turns of events. That’s why I can’t say with certainty that it is impossible.”

Fulip smiled. He seemed to be hiding something behind that smile.

“I see. Well, I will leave it as that for now.”

“Just to let you know, I’m not lying.”

“As the branch manager of the fourth ward, there are a lot of things going on that I have to deal with too, you see. So don’t mind the remark I left.”

Fulip smiled lightly and evaded giving a straight answer.

Now that the negotiation had concluded, Akira and Carol hopped back onto Akira’s bike. Just before they left, Fulip, who saw them off with a smile, said to them.

“Although we were not able to reach an agreement, we were able to get acquainted with each other. I believe it is not completely in vain. Let me say this again before you leave. We have no wish to be hostile with you. So, if you ever wish, we can offer some of our services to you. Although, considering your relationship with the third ward branch, we can’t charge you the usual price.”

Akira smiled bitterly. He was once again reminded of how Fulip was a business-oriented person.

“Sure, thanks for the offer. I’ll contact you again if I want to ask you something.”

Akira only said as much before he left the area and vanished into the dark wasteland.

After Akira left, the business smile on Fulip’s face vanished. It was replaced by a firm resolute look of a branch manager.

“What do you think of his fighting capability?”

The butler next to Fulip had a stern look on his face as he stated.

“It is enough of a reason for us to be careful with him. However, I don’t believe he is strong enough to defeat that wasp monster on his own as the report had stated.”

The maid, who was also standing next to Fulip, had the same expression as she added.

“I concur. But that stealthiness of his was impressive. Leaving aside his ability as a Hunter, as Fulip-sama’s bodyguard, I am rather reluctant to let someone like him near Fulip-sama.”

“I see. Then it was as I thought. It is worth all the trouble to at least let him know that we don’t wish to get into a fight with him.”

When they returned back to the vehicle, another of Fulip’s men was curious about how the negotiation went. Thus, Fulip sat on the back seat and gave him a quick rundown of what just happened.

Now that Akira had become a bounty target, Lion Steel was worried if he had a deep grudge toward the company as a whole. That he would show no mercy and give no quarter toward anyone whom he had a deep grudge against. They were afraid that if Akira somehow escaped to the fourth ward, he would launch an assault on one of their Lion Steel’s facilities. Therefore, in order to avoid such a scenario from developing, it was important to let him know that they were not hostile towards him. The offer to kill Chloe was originally meant to support their neutral stance. It was to help get that point through to Akira.

If Akira managed to kill Chloe, it would throw the third ward into disarray. They were already aware that the incident regarding Chloe had something to do with representative Alice’s plan to visit the third ward. If Chloe died, the third ward branch’s recent rapid development might get put on hold, which in turn, would reduce the possibility of having the fourth ward roped into danger.

The man in a butler suit showed his concern after he heard everything.

“But, branch manager. Would it not be dangerous for us to be messing with the third ward right now? Considering that the representative is coming to visit the third ward.”

“It’s not a problem. If that was the case, representative Alice would have sent a warning. Telling us not to mess with the third ward. But since we never received such a warning, this means that representative Alice is fine with us sabotaging the third ward… Well, though, I must state that I don't know if representative Alice is approving or merely tolerating our actions."

After that, Fulip let out a huge sigh.

"…But still, it seems that the reason why representative Alice is coming to the third ward is being kept secret. The other branches seem to be confused as well. I bet this incident will only grow larger with time…"

The woman in a maid uniform, who was not knowledgeable about administrative work since she was Fulip's bodyguard, interjected without much thought.

"Would it not be wise to confirm it with HQ?"

"I did. But they did not deliver a clear answer. They did not even tell me that we have no need to know the reason why. The whole thing is still a mystery. If only Akira agreed to accept our offer, we could have used support and reward as an excuse to send some of our people to gather some information. But… It didn't go well…"

Fulip's confusion only grew larger as Alice's visit to the third ward was approaching.

__*__*__*__

The reason why Akira and Carol went to meet up with Fulip on a bike was to keep the camping vehicle safe in case a battle ensued. For Akira, who could not return back to the city, the camping vehicle was an important resting place. It was also an ammunition warehouse for him. Thus, they kept it away from Fulip to keep it safe.

But even so, it did not take the bike that much time to reach the camping vehicle. Though, they stuck close to the ground while they travelled, which was slower. Akira even allowed Carol to steer on their way back while he sat behind her.

"Carol, what do you think of what just happened there?"

“Hmmm, let’s see. Well, I’m glad that your opponent is not as big as I had thought.”

They were able to confirm that the whole Lion Steel company was not hostile to him. Even when Akira was trying to kill a member of the Lorentz family. Therefore, if he escaped from the territory under the third ward branch, the 50 billion Aurum bounty would effectively lose its value. After all, killing a bounty target set by the third ward branch might be interpreted as picking a fight with the faction that opposes the third ward branch.

After listening to Carol’s explanation, Akira gave a firm nod while a trace of surprise on his face.

“I see. Now that you mention it, I also have that choice, huh?”

Carol smiled bitterly when she heard his tone of voice.

“Akira, you didn’t even consider that when you went to meet them, huh?”

Although Akira was behind her, unable to lock eyes, he still looked away. It was as if he was avoiding giving a straight answer. But by pure coincidence, his eyes met Alpha’s instead, who was smiling teasingly. Therefore, Akira quickly turned to the opposite direction.

“Also, this is only my personal impression, but I’m glad that I get to understand how you think.”

“Hm? Did I do something?”

“You refused their assassination request, remember? Even with no desire to kill, there are those who can indifferently become a robber or an assassin. But you’re not like that. Rather, you’re the kind that feels nothing when murdering them. No matter what the reason, once someone accepts an assassination request, they would turn into a cold-blood murderer. Since you can choose to be one anytime you want, the reason you have not is extremely important.”

“Is that so?”

“Yep, that’s why I hope you would properly protect me and kill anyone who tries to harm me if something bad were to happen.”

Carol said so while smiling bewitchingly.

“Of course!”

Akira replied with a smile. But then, something else came to mind.

“Who are these people trying to get you?”

Carol replied rather awkwardly.

“…Do I absolutely have to answer that question?”

“I won’t force you. But, well, since our fate is basically intertwined to some extent at the moment, I will let you know something. I’m actually scheduled to receive a rather powerful set of equipment. So, it would be great if those coming after you attack after I get my new equipment. I just thought I might be able to predict when they might attack if I know who they are.”

“When will you get your equipment?”

“In a week if I get lucky, or in 3 months in the worst-case scenario.”

“That’s a rather wide schedule.”

“Yeah, it’s complicated.”

Carol could not help but smile since it seemed like Akira really had no wish to force her to answer. It seems that he trusted her enough to inform her of his new equipment. Also, it would be bad if her enemies were to attack before he received his new equipment.

“I’m sorry. Just as I said before, I’m asking you to escort me just as insurance. It might actually be unnecessary. That’s why I don’t even know when we might get attacked nor who. After all, there’s a good chance nothing bad is going to happen.”

“I see. Well, if that’s really the case, it would be great. This means that I can just take it easy.”

Since it was not really that important of a subject for Akira, he did not pursue it any further.

As they eventually reached the camping vehicle, they stopped the bike near it. Normally, they would simply open the back door and put the bike in, but Akira stopped Carol from doing so.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“Something’s not right.”

After Akira stepped off the bike, he grabbed his rifle and slowly approached the camping vehicle. He moved forward while positioning himself to shield Carol. Naturally, Carol noticed this and became wary. She held a gun in hand as she trailed behind him.

Akira then opened the back door and moved the bike in. Afterwards, he used the bike as a shield to peek into the camping vehicle. After a while, nothing happened. He confirmed that the back of the vehicle was safe and he carefully proceeded forward. The moment they stepped inside the living room, they saw a familiar face waiting for them.

“Long time no see. Sorry for barging in like this.”

Shirou smiled and welcomed Akira and Carol.

Shirou had no weapon in hand and he showed no animosity. Moreover, he was someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Thus, Akira and Carol lowered their weapons. However, they were still cautious of him.

Carol was glaring at Shirou.

“…How did you get in?”

“I just opened the door and came in. Geez, stop glaring like that, will you? I’m sorry for barging in, but I’m sure you know it’s better than just waiting outside and attracting attention, right?”

Shirou acted extremely unceremoniously as if the security of the camping vehicle was nonexistent to him. That was when Akira suddenly interjected.

“You can at least contact us beforehand if you’re going to visit, you know? Those guys wanting to talk to me at least did that much.”

“Sorry about that, I was worried that others will be able to trace my location if I contact you. I was even planning to leave a letter if I did not get to meet you today.”

Yanagisawa was able to find him once back in Mihazono ruin, that was why Shirou was being extremely careful.

“Well, I apologize for coming without telling you first and breaking into your vehicle. As someone who is also in a precarious situation, I hope you can understand my actions. I’m here because there’s something I want to discuss with you.”

Carol started to look anxious.

“Discuss? What is it?”

Shirou glanced at Akira and Carol while smiling confidently. It was as if gloating he had the upper hand.

“Well, there’s something I want to discuss as a fellow old-world connector.”

Akira inadvertently furrowed his eyebrows. The moment he noticed that he had reacted, he thought that his cover had been blown. This caused him to show an even more obvious reaction. However, someone else in the room reacted even more vigorously.

“I’m not!”

Carol raised her voice. She was obviously shaken. Her pale face and her constant trembling from the fear caused her words to lose credibility. As a matter of fact, it was as if she was confessing that she was indeed an old-world connector.

As Akira was trying to conceal his surprise behind Carol's reaction, Shirou was looking at them in confusion. However, Akira and Carol were not in a situation where they could notice it.

"There's no need to be that surprised. Since I'm already here, I'm pretty sure you at least expected this, no?"

Akira saw the completely calm Shirou on one hand and an extremely distraught and scared Carol on the other hand. He decided to push aside his worries for now and stood in between Carol and Shirou. He then once again pointed his rifle at Shirou.

"Carol, is it okay to treat him as hostile?"

Although he did not know what exactly was going on, it did not change the fact that his escort target was frightened. Therefore, even if faced with someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry, it was enough of a reason for Akira to point his rifle at Shirou. If Carol made any signal to show affirmation, Akira would not hesitate to pull the trigger.

The moment Shirou realized this, his expression immediately turned solemn. Judging from her mental state, it seemed to be useless to try to say anything to Carol right now. So, he slowly withdrew from the place, thinking that it was an unfortunate failure.

"Alright. It doesn't seem like we can have a proper chat here. So I will leave for now. Until next time."

Shirou then slowly exited the living room without turning his back to Akira. He then proceeded to the door and finally left the camping vehicle. Akira was not sure if he should stop Shirou or not. However, seeing the state Carol was in, he prioritized her safety first and allowed Shirou to leave.

"Alpha."

“It’s alright. He really left.”

Akira heaved a big sigh and lowered his rifle. He then glanced at Carol, who was cowering in fear.

Inside the camping vehicle’s living room, Carol and Akira were sitting in silence. It has been a few minutes since Shirou left. The drink that Akira placed in front of Carol had gone lukewarm. Even so, she did not touch it, not even once.

Akira was sitting on the opposite side of the table from her. He only sat there in silence without doing anything else. He only occasionally threw a glance to check on her, nothing more. He was simply sitting there without saying anything.

Time passed, no one broke the suffocating silence and it only continued indefinitely. Carol, distraught from the shock, slowly calmed down. It was as if the shock she felt was dissipating into the silence.

When she had regained some of her senses, enough to say something, she mumbled a question to Akira.

“…You won’t ask, huh?”

“I’m not going to force the issue.”

“…Why?”

“You were the one who said that you don’t want to talk about it, right? I already knew that when I agreed to be your bodyguard. So, I won’t ask. That was one of the conditions when I accepted this job, after all.”

“…I see.”

Silence once again pervaded the room. Seeing Carol once again fall silent, Akira thought that he gave the wrong answer. Thus, he tried to make up for his mistake.

“Well, it’s not like I’m not interested. So, I do want to know if you are willing to tell me.”

“…I see.”

Carol only said as much and once again fell silent. Akira could not help but think that he made another mistake again. After a short pause, she straightened up her hunching back and declared.

“I’ll tell you.”

She never wanted anyone to find out. But now that the cat was out of the bag, she wanted Akira to know.

“I really meant it when I said that I’m not an old-world connector. Or at least, that’s what I believe. I was an old-world connector but that should no longer be the case now… Probably…”

Up until now, she had been keeping it a closing guarded secret. Believing her life would be endangered if it ever got out. However, a portion of her heart wished she could share it with someone. The desire to be free from her shackles pushed her to continue her story.

A long time ago, when her name was not Carol yet. She was just one among the thousands of the common eastern district Hunters. One day, she got assaulted by a crippling headache while exploring Mihazono ruin. Right after, her vision was littered with images. Images which seemed to be from augmented reality. It was to the point where she could not even look at what was in front of her. She eventually fainted and lost consciousness.

She woke a few days later and found herself right where she lost consciousness. She wondered how she had survived, unconscious for a few days in the middle of a dangerous ruin. Her first thought was to return while enduring the incessant headache. The moment she stepped outside the building, she was flabbergasted. Although it was in the middle of the night, her vision was filled with light.

Buildings were adorned with signboards and roads were decorated with road markers. They were in all directions and even extended up to the sky. Names of each building and street were floating around. Images of the original buildings were overlapping with already crumbled dilapidated remnants. There were even images of walls with warnings, stating that it was a restricted area. She could even see patrol routes for the security drones as well. All of these were floating in her vision.

The moment Carol could see all this, her head was once again assaulted by crippling pain. Although it was excruciating, she managed to stay awake. But, she still thought that it was dangerous to stay there. Thus, she decided to head back home. However, the pain quickly became unbearable the moment she hurriedly returned back inside the building. It was only after she got inside a room, with few augmented reality images, that her headache slowly subsided, allowing her an opportunity to take a short break.

Afterwards, Carol spent a few more days inside the buildings. She did try to find a way to go back home. She did so by looking for areas where the pain was relatively weaker. However, the moment she stepped outside, the pain quickly returned, which forced her to cut the attempt short. The pain was simply too much no matter which exit she tried.

One day, while she explored the inside of the building, believing she had no means to leave, she suddenly found a room with a human-like image inside of it. The pain immediately flooded back, which knocked her unconscious again. While her mind was still muddled, she was asked something. She even managed to give a reply. However, due to the pain filling her senses, she hardly had any recollection of what took place.

The next time she woke up, her headache had disappeared. Even when she stepped outside, she could no longer see floating images. Carol was relieved but also confused. Nonetheless, she managed to drag herself out of the ruin.

Afterwards, she did some research to investigate what just happened to her. Eventually, she concluded that she had temporarily turned into an old-world connector. The things she saw back in the ruin were an augmented reality that old-world connectors could see. Since she could no longer see them, she thought that she was no longer an old-world connector.

Just to be safe, she tried visiting ruins that were known to still have active augmented reality systems. It was to check if she could see anything. She used certain information-gathering devices and confirmed the presence of active augmented reality entities. She was glad that she could no longer see them with her naked eyes. She was afraid of going back to Mihazono ruin to make absolutely sure she was no longer an old-world connector. However, that was fine.

She had heard numerous rumours involving people getting investigated and even kidnapped for being misunderstood as an old-world connector. But since she was no longer an old-world connector, she thought that everything would be fine. Nonetheless, she still felt worried that she might return back to being an old-world connector.

One day, Carol accompanied a Hunter party to go to Mihazono ruin, which she had avoided up until that point. The outcome surprised her. Although she was still able to see everything, she did not have any headaches. And unlike last time, rather than having her vision filled with signs, she was only able to see a portion of it.

Carol was shocked, and the other Hunters looked at her with worry. She came up with vague excuses and finished her job there just as planned.

After that, Carol took more time to carefully investigate her situation. She found out that she only became a temporarily functioning old-world connector when she was around Mihazono ruin. Although it was limited to such a scenario, she was able to access information panels and gather all kinds of information.

It was enough of a reason for those seeking old-world connectors to look for her. At the very least, if she got found out, she would be placed in the same situation as those rumours. Since she could not be accurately classified as an old-world connector, there was a good chance that she would go through even more terrible experiments. Carol was so scared that she decided to throw away her past in order to keep it a secret. In fear that even the slightest mistake might connect to her secret, she completely cut her past off from her.

She changed her name, her face, and even enhanced her body to change her body figure. She threw away her past Hunter record and registered as a new Hunter, with a new name. Without any relation to her past, it was easy for her to blend in with the low lives. Since she registered her name from the Hunter Office in the slums, no one was suspicious of her.

Living in secrecy was not cheap. She needed to prepare money in the case something was to happen. In order to earn more, she took on another job besides being a Hunter, which was creating maps.

There were cases where proficient map makers were suspected to be old-world connectors. However, that also meant those non-old-world connectors had special means to gather information. Thus, with her great skills as one of those highly capable map makers, she was able to further disguise herself.

As a side job, she also started selling her body. As she started charging more and more for her services, she also started accepting information in place of money. When others got suspicious of her knowing things she could not have known unless she was an old-world connector, she could claim that she heard it from the other Hunters.

Eventually, she started to befriend Viola despite knowing of her bad reputation. After all, those associated with Viola knew of things others did not. Thus, she decided to associate with her. Afterwards, it turned out that they got along pretty well and with them influencing one another, it was only a matter of time before Carol got recognised as a bad woman as well.

Those days greatly changed her. She eventually started trying various means to keep her secret hidden.

While at the same time, the fear of her secret leaking out one day caused side effects. Her inner desire to be released from her burden caused her to start seeking thrilling and risky things. She wanted someone suitable to be roped into her trouble. Thus, she started to entice people. To risk their lives.

Seeing them ruined made her feel as though they took her place. It made her feel safe and she even took joy in it.

The more one gets paranoid, the more it pushes them to self-destruct. In Carol's case, the wish to share her secret slowly grew bigger.

In the beginning, she only sold her body for a small price. She would then slowly make her customers addicted to her body, meanwhile, increasing the price exponentially. It would result in them one day no longer being able to pay with money. At that point, she would accept information instead. The distortions in her caused her to act in such a manner.

She wished for someone she could confide in. That wish caused her to prefer men who would not share secrets even when seduced. Thus, she went around seducing men, seeking that particular type of person.

However, due to her superb skill in seducing men, she was not able to find the right one. She only ended up repeating the cycle. Getting her hopes up, seducing the guy, making him spill out his secret, and getting herself disappointed in the end. Naturally, it also led to the ruin of the man, which also led to her infamy for ruining others' lives.

Then one day, as she was going about her usual life, Carol met someone unique. A boy who showed completely no interest in her. It was Akira. No matter how hard she tried to seduce him, Akira always showed no reaction. Furthermore, Akira was extremely particular. He always stuck close to his principles no matter what. He also occasionally made insane decisions, which went against any semblance of common sense. He was a young boy who was strangely extremely dutiful to requests that he accepted.

Carol started unconsciously getting interested in him. Hoping that if it was such a strange boy, then he might be the person she was hoping for.

But before she was able to do anything to confirm her feelings, she received some info. It stated that a huge organization was looking for an old-world connector near Kugamayama city. Although she knew that they were not looking for her, she was worried that she would get investigated.

It was then that Carol asked Akira to be her bodyguard. If it was him, she believed he would not abandon the job that he had taken; even if he faced those people. Indeed, her guess was on the nose. Even after Akira encountered those chasing Shirou back in Mihazono ruin, he did not show any signs of withdrawing from his duties as her bodyguard.

Though, later, Akira did withdraw from the job once. However, it was to make sure she would not be roped into his problems. Basically, he did not wish to put his escort target in any form of danger. It was after a series of events that Carol managed to convince Akira to re-accept the bodyguard request again.

Akira’s unbending obsession to kill Chloe was a good thing from her point of view. If it was someone who would not back down even when faced against a huge company like Lion Steel, there was a good chance that they would also not back down when faced against Sakashita Heavy Industry.

The 50 billion Aurum bounty was another positive for Carol. In such a scenario, if her position leaked out, there was a high probability Akira would escape with her. The camping car was also prepared for the scenario they had to run around the eastern district. Thus, it was beneficial for her.

Carol did not trick Akira, she did not lie to him, but she certainly intended to use him.

She confessed everything to him. But, as expected, she could not say anything about the things she was uncertain about herself. Such as her preference in men. However, she did confess everything. The reasons behind her request to have Akira as her bodyguard.

There was no more trickery, no more secrets, nothing.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 272, Shirou's Guess

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira listened closely to Carol's story.

"Alpha. She mentioned something about turning into an old-world connector only in Mihazono ruin, is that even possible?"

"It is. After all, there are many types of people who can connect to the old-world domain."

There were individual differences in how far each person could connect to the old-world domain. There were those who could only imperfectly connect to the old-world domain. However, once they stepped into a certain ruin, the augmented reality system stimulated their connection and turned them into complete old-world connectors. Of course, the other cases also exist.

In Carol's case, her augmented reality filter might have been completely opened the moment she was able to make a complete connection to the old-world domain. However, the information processed must have fatigued her brain and in turn, caused her ability to connect to mostly be turned off.

She could still connect to the old-world domain in Mihazono ruin. This might be because of the damage to her brain. It prevented her from making any general-type connection to the old-world domain, limiting it to Mihazono ruin. There was another possible scenario. During the time when she was still able to connect to the old-world domain, she might have registered her identity somewhere in Mihazono ruin's system. This might have allowed her to be able to catch weak data signals when in the ruin. Nonetheless, these were nothing more than guesses. The true reason might lie somewhere else.

Alpha explained to Akira a lot of new information regarding the types of people who could connect to the old-world domain.

"In the end, unlike you, Carol cannot connect to the old-world domain through the general-type connection. She could not see me even when she was in Kuzusuhara ruin. So, it is not exactly a lie when she said she is no longer an old-world connector. Well, of course, that part varies from a person's point of view."

From another point of view, everyone in the eastern district was an old-world connector. Alpha also conveyed such information to Akira.

"I see. Then that means she is telling the truth, huh? That is a rather rare and interesting experience she had to go through."

Akira's reaction to Carol's story ended there. In other words, even after hearing Carol's story, Akira's impression only extended as far as 'it was an interesting story'. Nothing more.

Alpha made a mental note of how he reacted.

"So then, Akira, what's your plan?"

"Plan? About what exactly?"

"You now know of Carol's situation now, right? So, what do you plan to do with the bodyguard request?"

“Plan for what?”

Akira already knew that he was not good at reading between the lines. However, in this case, he truly did not understand the question. That was when he noticed Carol’s expression.

Carol was furrowing her brows. She looked anxious and desperate. Like someone who just confessed her sins, waiting for Akira’s response. The feeling of relief from finally letting it out and the anxiety from finally confessing her secret were mixed inside of her as she stared at him.

That was when Akira finally understood. Sakashita Heavy Industry now knew that Carol was an old-world connector. Akira finally understood why Alpha asked him that question. Once he realized Carol was waiting for his response, he hummed for a bit before opening his mouth.

“Uhhh, about my bodyguard job… As you know, I’m also pursuing another goal and I’m in this particular situation right now, so I’m sorry but…”

Carol had guessed what Akira’s next word would be. She looked crestfallen. However, that changed in the next moment when Akira continued.

“…Once I get my new equipment, let me withdraw from this job for a bit. I will finish what I need to do first before returning. Whether I will continue the job or not will depend on the situation at that time. And also…”

In front of the wide-eyed Carol, Akira started talking about other things, in the order in which they came to his mind.

“…Since that guy is from Sakashita Heavy Industry, that would mean if we’re going to run away, we will have to get out of the Aurum Economic Zone, right? I’m sorry but I can’t accompany you in that case. As I said before. Including the equipment that I’m waiting for right now, I don’t want to get too far away from Kugamayama city. If it’s after I get my new equipment and finish my business here… Well, I can at least escort you out. Hmm… But then again, that would depend on the situation when the time comes. Other than that…”

Akira hummed again. As he was making sure that he did not miss anything that he needed to make clear regarding his bodyguard job. But nothing else came to mind.

“Carol, is there anything else you want to make certain of?”

Akira said so with a rather serious expression. He thought that even if there was something complicated, they should make it clear beforehand. Regarding what the job entails. If it was something that neither he nor Carol had thought of, then there should be no problems.

Carol burst into laughter and smiled joyously at him.

“Nothing in particular. We can discuss it afterwards if something comes up later.”

“…? Alright.”

Akira did find her change in attitude to be strange. Though, thinking that his own common sense was distorted, he ignored it.

“I guess I was way too scared, huh?”

“Is that so? But since that guy appeared, wasn’t it a good thing that you’re being extra careful? Ah, but then again, he did say that he came to negotiate. He also didn’t seem to be planning to take you by force. So, I guess it was unnecessary to get a bodyguard, huh?”

“Well, that is difficult to say. He might have changed his plan to peacefully negotiate since I have a great bodyguard with me. Either way, I will be counting on you as my bodyguard if something comes up.”

“Sure. Of course.”

Carol softly chucked and smiled amusedly. Akira tilted his head in confusion at her reaction.

Now that Sakashita Heavy Industry knew that she was an old-world connector, Carol thought that Akira would leave her. After all, such a huge company might now be hunting for her. However, Akira did not terminate his job. He did not even consider it as an option. Rather, it did not even pass his mind. Naturally, Alpha hoped that he would leave while Carol wished for him to stay.

“Alpha, did I miss anything?”

Alpha, as one of Akira’s requestors, could not afford to recommend him to leave his request mid-way. Although she did try to encourage him to think of a reason to withdraw from Carol’s request, in the end, it was futile.

“Nope, not at all. Since you have agreed on the ending line for this job, let’s give it our best until the very end.”

Akira agreed with every word though he tried to probe the hidden meaning behind those words as he replied.

“I know. Once I get my new equipment, I will prioritize your request.”

“I’ll be looking forward to it.”

In order to not worsen Akira’s mood, Alpha smiled happily as she spoke.

__*__*__*__

Day turned to night. Akira was shallow sleeping next to Carol, just like usual.

Carol was in deep sleep. She entrusted the full weight of her naked body to her soft, fluffy bed. Snug under a semi-transparent blanket. Her chest heaved up and down with every breath as she slept. Carol’s appearance did not change. However, she was more enchanting than before. This difference was caused by how relaxed she now was, compared to how desperate she was before. It was obvious that she had no intentions to seduce Akira at the moment. Strange enough, it made her natural side more prominent, making her sexier than before.

Akira, who was sitting next to Carol as he slept, showed no reaction to her body. Suddenly, he stood up. With his rifle in hand, he planned to head out.

As he put on his defensive coat, Carol, who noticed, woke up.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“It might be just my imagination, but I feel a strange presence nearby, so I will be going out to check it for a bit”

“I will go too.”

“No. It’s easier to camouflage myself when I’m alone. It might also be nothing. You can just continue to sleep.”

Akira said and left the camping vehicle.

Carol inadvertently turned toward the back of the camping vehicle, where Akira’s bike was resting.

[If the bike got taken, Akira might be trying to sneak away, leaving me behind, under the guise of patrolling the camping vehicle….] She reflected on herself, and the fact that she did not trust Akira, made her give a bitter smile.

Although Akira was completely relaxed when he was still inside the camping vehicle, he immediately turned serious the moment he stepped out.

“Alpha.”

“Over there.”

Akira walked toward the direction Alpha pointed to, without activating his camouflaging coat. He then stopped next to a mountain of rubble and sighed.

“What is it?”

Someone appeared from behind the rubble, it was Shirou. Although he was armed, he had already turned off his camouflage.

“I’ve been waiting for you, and here I was wondering what to do if you didn’t notice me even when I’m this close.”

“I have no problems ignoring you. But if you’re just going to aimlessly sneak around the camping vehicle, I thought it would be bad if I don’t at least try to get rid of you.”

“Geez, don’t say that. We’re fellow old-world connectors, you know?”

As expected. This time, Akira did not show any reaction even when Shirou bluntly stated it.

“Though you did say you want to talk, are you here to try and scare me? Although I have no plans to pick a fight with Sakashita Heavy Industry, don’t expect me to let you keep this up forever.”

Akira even thought that it was rare for him to pick a peaceful solution. Nonetheless, he was not lying, and it could be seen from his squinted eyes. He honestly had no desire to pick a fight with Sakashita Heavy Industry. Especially when he was about to get his new equipment soon. Naturally, he still had his line. Else, he would not have tried to kill Chloe and got himself a bounty.

However, Shirou just ignored the pressure and exaggeratedly shook his head.

“Of course not. I just want to offer you a job. After all, it doesn’t seem like you will hesitate to pick a fight against Sakashita Heavy Industry if you have a good enough reason.”

Akira tilted his head and squinted his eyes., In contrast, Shirou’s smile widened.

“I will pay you the same amount as your current bounty. 50 billion Aurum.”

Even Akira did not expect such an offer

“Are you being serious?”

“I am. It takes them 50 billion Aurum to get someone to kill you. So, it’s only a given that I pay that much if I want to ask you to do a job for me, no? Though, as you would have expected, I can’t pay the full sum upfront. But we can talk about the details for that part later…”

“That’s not what I mean. Well, that part does bother me a bit. But no normal person would offer a job to a bounty target, you know?”

“It’s not like it was Sakashita that placed that bounty on you. So, I don’t really mind.”

Even so, Shirou’s reasoning sounded way too naive for Akira as he knitted his brows.

“If you won’t say anything, I’ll assume that you’re okay with it. So, I’ll tell you the details…”

The job would last for 1 month. In that one month, Shirou wanted Akira to do some stuff, which included fighting. However, Shirou did not tell Akira in detail what he needed from him. Such detail depended on how the situation unfolded or changed. Thus, Shirou could not make that part of the job clear. Basically, he needed someone with enough firepower to explore an undiscovered ruin. 50 billion Aurum would include the expenses. Furthermore, since it was a request for a Hunter, it was to be expected that there would be fighting. As Shirou explained, it sounded more absurd, which made Akira even more confused.

“And also, although I know that you can fight with fewer worries if I pay for the expenses beforehand. But I still have my limits. I can’t pay you 20 or 30 billion Aurum as a deposit, just for taking the job. So, I will give 5 billion Aurum first and see where it goes from there…”

As Shirou explained, Akira eventually returned back to his usual self.

“Wait a second. I haven’t said anything about accepting that job.”

“But you don’t have any reason to refuse, right?”

“I do.”

“Oh? What is it?”

“You’re running away from Sakashita Heavy Industry, right? If I accept, wouldn’t that mean going up against Sakashita Heavy Industry?”

Akira asked as if it was already obvious to him. Although he did not have any proof to support his claim, considering the huge incident back in Mihazono ruin, where he met Shirou, he had a hunch that Shirou must be running from Sakashita Heavy Industry. He asked to check Shirou’s reaction and instantiate his hunch.

Shirou’s face turned stern. Under normal circumstances, he would have noticed what Akira was trying to do. At least, he would have thrown a counter-question to Akira. However, what had happened with Sugadome made him desperate. This caused him to react toward Akira’s statement.

“…I’m offering you this job as an individual. I thought you knew this and wouldn’t say anything about that topic. But since you asked, I will have no other choice but to answer that question.”

“What exactly are you trying to say?”

“Just like how I have Sakashita Heavy Industry behind me, I know that you have a patron behind you!”

Akira was taken aback and immediately raised his guard. He quickly picked up his rifle and aimed it at Shirou.

Shirou was not able to react. But even after having the muzzle touch his forehead, he did not falter. Although his eyes were cold, he was still smiling flippantly at Akira.

“I hit the bullseye… Didn’t I?”

Akira immediately realized that he overreacted when Shirou asked him that question and squinted his eyes.

“Alpha, what should I do with him? Should I just kill him?“

Alpha stood in front of Akira. She made her usual smile and spoke to him, trying to calm him.

“Akira, calm down. There’s no proof that he knows about me.”

“I-Is that so?”

“I will decide whether to let him live or to kill him here. You should just calm down for now. Be careful not to say anything unnecessary, okay?”

“…Alright.”

Akira took a deep breath to help himself calm down. He breathed in deeply and let out a long ‘fuuh’ to help him maintain his calm. He then continued his telepathic conversation with Alpha, while restarting his conversation with Shirou.

“…Let’s say that you are correct. In that case, my next move would be to make sure that you won’t be able to tell anyone. In other words, to kill you here. If you have any reason why I shouldn’t do that, this is your chance to tell me. I’m sure you have some since you decided to say that to me, right? Or is it that you believe I won’t kill you if your guess is correct?”

Akira tried his best to make a grin.

“Just to make sure we’re on the same page, you don’t think that I won’t kill you just because you’re from Sakashita Heavy Industry, right? After all, as you said, I will fight Sakashita Heavy Industry too if I have to. That is, if I have a good reason for it.”

Shirou could feel cold sweat running down his back, but he somehow managed to maintain his flippant smile.

“Of course!”

“So, what is it? If you won’t say anything, I will just kill you here and now, you know?”

“If you kill me, not only Sakashita but Tatsumori, Tsukisada…”

The moment Shirou said so, Alpha suddenly erased all her clothes. Akira, who inadvertently saw that, could not help but get bothered. Unfortunately, he could not hide his emotions and surprise was shown on his face.

“…And even Senba too. Not only that, you will be picking fights against all the five biggest corporations, which means the whole Corporate Government.”

“Alpha, why did you do that?”

“Don’t mind me.”

“That’s just impossible when you do that out of the blue, you know?”

“Just focus on Shirou.”

Akira could not help but question why Alpha was doing this. She was distracting him. Nonetheless, he switched his focus back to Shirou while making a stern expression.

“That’s a bluff. Like hell the whole Corporate Government would move just because I killed you.”

“Well, I wonder about that. Though, it might not be an exaggeration to say that the Corporate Government will react to my death. I’m sure Tsukisada will find it to be very displeasing.”

Shirou stared at Akira with a confident smile. At the same time, Alpha approached Akira’s face, as if she was going to kiss him. Akira inadvertently pulled his head back and frowned.

“Alpha!? What’s wrong with you!?”

“I’ll tell you later, just don’t mind me.”

“Don’t ask me the impossible.”

Although he was not sure what was going on, since it was an order from Alpha, he tried his best to not react to him. However, because of that, his expression became even sterner.

Seeing his reaction, Shirou thought that his guess was right. Thus, he asked as if he knew his hypothesis was right from the start.

“You are an agent from Tsukisada Construction. I bet you’ve been sent here disguised as a Hunter to investigate Kuzusuhra ruin, right?”

Akira did not say anything back. Thus, Shirou interpreted it as confirmation.

“Picking a fight with the Lion Steel company is nothing but a folly if you’re just a regular Hunter. But if it’s some kind of strategy by Tsukisada, it all makes sense. I heard that the Lion Steel’s representative is planning to visit this place. So, your actions might be some form of sabotage or warning to Lion Steel. Well, in the end, it’s just my guess. It’s not like I had investigated it or anything.”

Shirou picked his words carefully, to emphasise the matter with Lion Steel. He stated that he had guessed that Akira was Tsukisada Construction’s agent. However, it was a lie, something he made up. He was trying to trick Akira. He wanted Akira to assume he had investigated him beforehand.

Akira still did not speak. His expression remained stern. He was worried he might say something he should not. Which might result in Shirou realizing it to be a misunderstanding. However, Shirou simply presumed that Akira was too shocked for words since his guess was correct.

“I have investigated your past too. You caused a lot of commotion, which made people suspect you of faking your Hunter Rank, right? It might be fine if it’s only once or twice, but you overdid it. You even tried to fake your track record by selling it. If you want to hide your true strength, I can’t say that was a good move, you know?”

Akira frowned and clicked his tongue. Although he only did that because Alpha told him to do so, remembering his past bad luck still made him feel unpleasant.

Seeing that, Shirou's smile deepened.

"Oh. Don't tell me that becoming a bounty target was also a mistake? Or is it some kind of strategy?"

"…I have no reason to continue this pointless chatter. So, why would someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry seek help from someone from Tsukisada Construction? If you just need help, you can go ask someone else. If you need a lot of manpower, you can just ask Sakashita. So why come to me?"

Shirou was not sure how he should answer. However, he believed that lying would only come back to bite him later. Thus, he decided to tell the truth.

"Right now, I'm working for my own personal goal. In order to do that, I might need to go against Sakashita. I'm also in need of help to reach that goal. That's why I've come to you."

What Shirou needed was someone powerful. Someone who was not afraid of fighting against Sakashita Heavy Industry. Naturally, those who satisfied his conditions were few. It had to be powerful Hunters that even Sakashita Heavy Industry could not just ignore. But they would be working near the frontline and would only accept Chrome as payment.

Unfortunately, Shirou had exhausted his Chrome reserve. Even if he had Chrome, he did not have the leeway to wait for frontline Hunters to come all the way here.

As such, Shirou had no other choice but to make a compromise. He had to look for someone strong, someone nearby and someone who would accept Aurum as a payment. It had to be someone who took their job seriously, someone who would face any danger if the reward was large enough. He was searching for someone who satisfied all these conditions.

Eventually, he found a Hunter by the name of Akira. Akira picked a fight with the Lion Steel company and even became a bounty target. He even got designated as a monster by Kugamayama city. There was no question. He was a Hunter with multiple screws loose. However, that made him likely to accept an illegal job that might turn the 5 largest corporations against him. When Shirou investigated Akira's past, leaving aside his morality, he was unquestionably someone who took his job extremely seriously.

After weighing his options, Shirou finally decided to hire Akira.

It was obvious that Shirou was being careful with his words. After hearing his explanation, Akira turned to Alpha.

"Alpha, do you think he's telling the truth?"

"Well, he's being extra careful with his words. But it doesn't seem like he's lying. And I don't see any reason why he would lie about choosing you. It's likely that he really has no other choices."

"So, it's just because he's making a compromise, huh? Well, it's better than having malicious intentions behind that his request."

Akira heaved a big sigh.

"Alright. I get why you want to hire me. So, why should I just not kill you here and now?"

"…My goal includes exploring a certain ruin. It is a special ruin that is very important to the eastern district. If you accept my offer and can complete the job, I will tell you about that ruin. It's highly valuable information that you wouldn't normally get from a single job. That is even if you're an old-world connector. If you return back with that information, they will definitely think highly of you. I'm sure you'll receive a good position inside Tsukisada Construction. Now that you know, I'm sure you can't just ignore this, right? I'm sure you want this information, and if you kill me, you won't be able to get it."

Akira was uncertain of what to do next. Personally speaking, he could not care less about the information. However, in order to hide Alpha's involvement with him, he had to act as if he was an agent from Tsukisada.

Though. he had no clue how an agent from Tsukisada would react. What they would go through to obtain such information. Therefore, instead of answering, he asked a question to probe into the matter.

“Why are you so sure that I want a higher position?”

Shirou looked at Akira in pure bewilderment.

“…I don’t mind saying it out loud, but promise me not to get angry, okay?”

“…just shut up then.”

Akira thought that it must be a very sensitive subject for these agents. Therefore, he curtly told Shirou to just shut up. As he was getting worried if it was the correct reaction, he made a pose. Acting as if he was hesitating before he finally agreed.

“Very well, I accept that job, but I have conditions.”

“What is it?”

As Shirou started to tense up, waiting for Akira’s answer, he could not help but frown after hearing his reply.

__*__*__*__

Back in the camping vehicle, Carol did not go back to sleep and instead waited for Akira. She was hugging her legs on top of the bed, still without a piece of cloth on her body, as she waited for Akira to return.

“Welcome back, was it alright?”

“Yeah. Carol, there’s something we need to talk about. Can you put something on?”

“Hm? Sure.”

Judging from Akira’s tone of voice, it did not seem like she was going to be in any danger and did not have to put on her augmented suit. Therefore, she judged it to be something minor, that he simply did not want to talk while she was naked. She thus reached for her indoor robe. Although it was not transparent, it was made for comfort, so her breasts were still in full view.

“So, what is it?”

“Sorry, but can you put on something more proper? Even an augmented suit would do.”

Carol’s augmented suit had an old-world design, in other words, it had a rather sexy design. Therefore, even if she put her augmented suit on, she would still not exactly look proper. Carol already knew that much and could tell Akira was basically asking her to at least cover herself. Thus, she left the living room to put on more proper wear before returning back.

“Will this be good enough?”

“Yeah, sorry about that. Wait here for a bit.”

Akira then left the room and opened the vehicle door.

Carol did not expect Shirou to be the one entering the vehicle.

“Excuse me for intruding.”

“…Akira, what’s going on here?”

The confused Carol looked at Akira, and he frowned before briefly explaining.

“It seems like this guy wants to hire me for 50 billion Aurum. So, he’s basically going to discuss it here.”

Shirou looked at Carol and smiled.

“Yep, it’s exactly just as he said. Well, just take a seat for now.”

Shirou did not wait for an answer nor ask for permission. He simply went and sat on the sofa in the living room. He even signalled Carol to take a seat as well. Although Carol was still confused, since Akira was the one who invited Shirou in, she thought that he should be friendly and took a seat.

Akira sat next to Carol as he thought about what he should say next.

“Carol, can you at least listen to what he has to say for now and decide whether to take his offer or not after that? He basically made this offer with my current job as your bodyguard in mind. So, this is about accepting his offer along with my current job. He said he’s fine with me accepting his offer while still focusing on my current job.”

Akira placed multiple conditions for Shirou. Though, they mostly stemmed from just one main condition. That he would continue to work as Carol’s bodyguard. While the attached conditions were for Shiro to not say anything unnecessary to her. Also, he would only accept the job if Carol was fine with it. There were also additional conditions. However, Akira mentioned that if Shiro could not satisfy these conditions first, then he would refuse.

“Priority-wise, my bodyguard job comes first. If you are afraid that it will hinder my job to protect you, then you can just say so. After all, I accepted your request first. So, you can decide for me. If you can’t decide, I will take it.”

Carol was extremely confused by the sudden turn of events. However, she at least understood, to an extent, what was going on. She replayed Akira’s explanation inside her mind to analyse her current situation.

“Akira, what if I say no.”

“First, I will kick him out of the camping vehicle. Then, we’ll need to move away from this place. We can decide later whether to leave him alive or not.”

“It would be great if you can just leave me alive.”

“I’m not talking to you.”

“I don’t think it’s a good idea to kill someone from Sakashita Heavy Industry, you know?”

In contrast to the serious Akira, Shirou was still as playful as ever. Both then looked at Carol.

“Uhh, so, Akira, basically, if I say no, you will refuse that 50 Billion Aurum job offer, right? Are you sure you are okay with that?”

“You don’t need to worry about it.”

“W-well, even if you say so…”

If it was only for a small amount that did not reach the billions, although she would feel bad for Akira, she would definitely refuse. After all, she did not want to have anything to do with the source of the incident back in Mihazono ruin. But 50 billion Aurum was not a small amount. It could not be simply ignored.

That was when Shirou interjected.

“Just to let you know. I’m here to offer a job to Akira. But if he’s going to refuse because he is in the middle of another job, I don’t mind changing the offer to both you and Akira. So do at least keep that in mind.”

Carol’s eyes widened as she looked at Akira, who frowned and warned.

“I’m sure I already warned you to not say anything unnecessary.”

“No no no, that one was not unnecessary, right?”

“Then just keep your mouth shut except for the bare minimum.”

Even with Akira’s warning, Shirou just exasperatedly shook his head.

“Geez, alright. In that case, I guess I should just keep the details and get straight to the point, huh?”

Shirou, who was acting playful up until now, suddenly turned serious.

“If you accept his job, as your reward, I will tell you how Sakashita Heavy Industry and the other corporations treat old-world connectors.”

Carol’s jaws dropped. She had been using all kinds of means to investigate this exact thing. But in the end, she was unable to gather anything more than rumours.

“As an old-world connector from Sakashita Heavy Industry, I can tell you why they are looking for the other old-world connectors and all kinds of secrets regarding the other companies. If you want to use it to hide from them or to manipulate them, the information I’m going to share will be extremely valuable.”

In exchange for the payment for her side job, she did try numerous times to seek this information. However, she was unable to find anyone knowledgeable about this subject.

“Of course, normally, I would never tell anyone about it. After all, it’s considered a corporate secret. But I don’t have that leeway right now. So, I’m willing to make it an exception this time.”

With a nod, Carol would be able to obtain it. Highly valuable information that she would not be able to receive unless she was a part of the 5 biggest corporations. Standing in front of that very opportunity right now made her shiver.

“So, what do you think? I bet it intrigues you, right?”

Seeing Carol clearly react to his offer, Shirou thought that he had won.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 273, A Small Display

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shirou was waiting with a smile on his face, believing that Carol would immediately say yes to his offer.

But strangely enough, no reply came back. Shirou's expression gradually turned to bewilderment, and eventually, desperation.

"…Uhhh, it would be great if you can give me an answer…"

Even after Shirou spoke, Carol still did not give a response. Her shocked expression showed how confused she was.

"…Is there anything you don't like about my offer? Or do you think it's too risky? Either way, I can't do anything unless you say something, you know?"

Even so, Carol still did not respond.

"…Hello, are you there?"

Carol's silent anxiety slowly infected Shirou as well. As both of them sat there, anxiously, the mood slowly grew tenser and stiffer with time.

Carol went silent because she realized that Akira was an old-world connector. She always had her suspicion, but this time, it had more or less been confirmed.

When Shirou said that he wanted to talk with a fellow old-world connector, he was referring to Akira, not her. Carol was too shocked to notice, but now that she had calmed down, it all made sense.

Carol finally realized why Akira's reaction was so minute. Even after she told him of her past, to Akira, who was already an old-world connector, it just meant meeting someone like him; another old-world connector.

Carol understood why an old-world connector would not want anyone else to know of their identity. Thus, she started to worry. She questioned if Akira would have told her of this, willingly. That worry started to fester in her mind and she asked herself.

[Wait, don't tell me that this is a test?]

Akira did leave Carol alone in the camping vehicle and went out alone. Although he said that he would be using camouflage, he did not activate it when he was still inside the camping vehicle. If he was being cautious, he would have done so while he was still inside.

[Was that only an excuse so that I won't follow him out? Or am I just overthinking?]

Akira then casually allowed Shirou in. It was obvious that they already had a discussion without her. At the very least, they must have already agreed on the reward for that job offer beforehand.

[For Akira, 50 billion Aurum is a huge amount of money. Even so, he told me not to worry about it. Was it so that I don't use it as an excuse to refuse the offer? In the first place, did Shirou really offer 50 billion Aurum? Or is this a fake setting that they had agreed on beforehand?]

If it was indeed a fake setting, then Shirou might be lying about Akira.

[If I ask ‘how to find an old-world connector’, right next to him, will he think of me as an enemy? He is hiding it after all. Is that what he’s trying to confirm? That I know? Is that why Shirou is including that kind of information as payment?]

Carol understood that there was no end to her questions. Neither could she come up with sound arguments that could disprove her guesses. Thus, it mostly depended on what she believed in. She did not want Akira to turn hostile. She did not want to lose someone to whom she had opened up. But unfortunately, she did not know which choice would turn him hostile – to accept or to refuse.

Carol was pushed into a corner, not really sure what she should do.

Shirou tensed up, similarly, unsure of what he should do next.

When Akira told Shirou of his conditions, the latter was confused. He expected everything could be done through negotiating. However, Akira’s conditions were a wedge in his plans. Though he did not show it, he felt extremely disgruntled.

In order to accomplish his goal, Shirou needed extra firepower. At the moment, his only option was Akira. If Akira refuses, the situation might take a turn for the worse. They might capture him and gift him to Sakashita. In order to prevent that, he was willing to pay 50 billion Aurum. Failure was not an option for him.

[Why is she hesitating? Is there any reason for her to refuse? Wait. In the first place, it is impossible to hire someone with a 50 billion Aurum bounty on their head… Is she conspiring together with him? Is she working to provide Akira with support? No, she was really caught by surprise. There’s no way that’s true… But wait, is she a different person? Like a body double…?]

As Shirou was gradually losing his cool, which also meant losing his rationality. This caused him to imagine all kinds of absurd possibilities. In the end, his skills laid in collecting information, not negotiation. Thus, Shirou found himself at an impasse.

While Shirou and Carol sat there, diving deeper into their own anxieties, the mood grew tense. Akira suddenly interjected.

“Say, Shirou. About that information regarding old-world connectors. Although it’s payment for Carol, is it okay for me to listen in too? As an old-world connector, I’m also interested.”

Shirou frowned and looked at Akira. He thought that Akira should already know everything since he worked as an agent from Tsukisada Construction.

“…Sure, but you’re interested too? You don’t know all the details?”

“I don’t know how the other companies treat old-world connectors.”

“Although there might be differences, I think they’re more or less the same. Ah, I don’t mind telling you, but Carol-san’s approval comes first.”

Akira and Shirou looked at Carol.

Carol’s eyes widened and she smiled.

“Sure, we’ll accept. So, Akira, let’s hear about it, together.”

Shirou sighed in relief and mumbled.

“…Good grief, what took you so long…”

He then raised his voice a bit to change the mood.

“Alright then. We have a deal… If you want me to explain everything to you now, can you at least give me something to drink? My throat is all dried up.”

“Sure. I’ll be back in a moment.”

Akira said and quickly left to bring drinks. Carol stood up and said that she would help too. However, since Akira refused her offer, he left the living room alone.

With Shirou and Carol left alone in the living room. With the tense mood getting dispelled just a moment ago, they sighed in relief. They reflected and concluded that they were just overthinking things earlier.

Carol’s worries were erased after Akira declared he was an old-world connector and Shirou’s worries were erased after seeing Carol’s reaction. After they had confirmed that there was actually nothing to worry about, they wryly smiled.

As Akira was preparing drinks from the refrigerator, he gave a curt glance at Alpha.

“Alpha, do I need to be that suspicious of them?”

Alpha replied with a solemn expression.

“You have to be extra careful. Although you admitted to being an old-world connector, we can’t afford to let them know about me. Judging from their reaction, I’m sure Carol won’t investigate you any further and Shirou would stick with his misunderstanding as well. We had to do that to make sure that our secret is safe.”

“…I see.”

Akira thought that it was overkill. But considering Alpha’s situation, he thought that it was acceptable and did not pursue the subject any further.

__*__*__*__

The next day, Carol woke up. Still lacking sleep, she yawned a few times as she had breakfast. Seeing that, Shirou, who was also there, also eating breakfast, smiled and comforted.

“You don’t have to be that depressed, you know? It’s not like all you’ve done up until now is unless. Even if your worries proved to not be true, there’s nothing wrong with preparing for the worst. Even if it is unlikely, you know?”

Even if Carol knew that Shirou was not teasing her, it still annoyed her. She glared at him but he simply continued his meal, unfazed by it.

“Although this is pretty good, it is still a bit disappointing to me. As I thought. I have gotten too used to living in luxury. It might be weird for me to say this since I ran away from them, but if you want them to capture you, I can help you with that, you know? Though, that would only be after I finish my business.”

Carol heaved another deep sigh.

The information from Shirou about how companies treated old-world connectors could not be any further from what Carol had expected. One of them being how large corporations no longer used force to capture old-world connectors.

It was true that they did that in the past. That was just how valuable the old-world connectors were. But as knowledge grew and technology advanced, that worth slowly diminished.

In the past, using the old-world line was extremely expensive. People only used them for connection lines between cities. But now, although it was still not that cheap, anyone could access the old-world domain using top-class, still highly expensive, information-gathering devices. With the advent of information-gathering devices coupled with augmented reality, they were able to access the augmented reality system of old-world ruins.

Once the option to use expensive equipment opened up, large corporations preferred to use them over old-world connectors. After all, the connection qualities differed from one old-world connector to another. Devices which helped to connect people to the old-world domain had made enough progress to turn those who were considered to be ordinary into mid-level old-world connectors.

With the advancement of these technologies and the funds that the large corporations funnelled into it, they had stopped hunting mid-level old-world connectors. After all, the expense did not justify the benefit; not anymore.

Of course, this option was only open to large corporations. Some middle-sized corporations still sought old-world connectors and still resorted to force to capture them.

But given that they were only small to medium-sized corporations, they were not that threatening. Even if they were able to somehow capture a Rank 50 old-world connector Hunter using force, it might still not be worth it. After all, that Hunter might turn out to just be a mid-level old-world connector. As such, rather than capturing with force, they preferred to cajole them with benefits. Therefore, Carol's worries were mostly unnecessary.

Naturally, Carol did not just believe everything Shirou said. Considering the commotion caused when Hunters found a device that could connect to the old-world domain back in Higaraka residence ruin. There was also that colossal battle that took place in Mihazono ruin, caused by Sakashita Heavy Industry's attempt to capture Shirou. It was rather obvious that corporations were still willing to use force.

However, Shirou casually refuted her points.

The commotion regarding that connection device originated from the Lion Steel company. It was the huge sum of money they put up for it that caused the commotion. If the device only helped to connect to the old-world domain, the commotion would not have been that big.

Meanwhile, in regards to the matter in Mihazono ruin, it was mainly caused by Yanagisawa. He held great influence in Kugamayama city. He used all the resources that he had to retrieve him, a highly skilled staff member from Sakashita Heavy Industry. It was incomparable to a medium-sized company's hunt for old-world connectors.

As such, those two incidents could not serve as counter-arguments.

Shirou explained with such confidence that even Carol nodded and got convinced by it.

They did not let this information get out of the inner wall because keeping this illusion up was more profitable for the large corporations. When small to medium-sized companies attempted to use force to capture old-world connectors, large corporations could swoop in and capture them instead. In the guise of capturing for the sake of their protection, these old-world connectors would feel thankful towards their captors. With such rumors floating around, they would be more likely to accept being taken under the wing of these large corporations.

That was why such rumors were kept rampant, and why Carol was mistaken.

It was only a matter of time before small and medium-sized companies got an affordable means to connect to the old-world domain. By that time, the worth of old-world connectors would plummet. When even normal people could connect to the old-world domain, the only benefit of being an old-world connector would be that they did not need any support device to connect. At the moment, they were in the middle of that transition. Shirou explained, ending the topic.

As Carol recalled their conversation yesterday, it was obvious that she got a bit depressed. Of course, in the end, it was nothing more than Shirou's words. There was a chance that lies, misinterpretations, and exaggerations were mixed into it.

But even so, Carol could not help but believe Shirou's words. Thus, she occasionally let out depressed sighs.

That was when Akira suddenly interjected.

"Carol, do you want to stop your bodyguard request? Considering what we've heard yesterday, I feel that coming with me would put you in more danger. So, feel free to put a stop to it any time you want, okay?"

Carol frowned. She understood his true intentions and was even happy that Akira worried for her. But at the same time, she also felt a bit offended.

“No. I want you to keep working as my bodyguard until we find a good time to call it quits. Just like we’ve agreed on beforehand.”

“Are you sure? Well, it’s nothing but beneficial for me though.”

Akira frowned and looked at Carol. She then smiled back, as if she had already completely placed this matter behind her.

“Of course. As an apology for making you do a job without telling you anything, and as gratitude for accepting it, I will at least do this much.”

“…I see. Thanks.”

Akira smiled back. Seeing them act in such a manner, Shirou once again got suspicious. And questioned if Akira and Carol were actually conspiring together. Meanwhile, Alpha looked over that exchange with caution.

Although Akira and Carol were basically working for Shirou right now, they had nothing to do at the moment. To be more precise, Shirou was the one who stated they had nothing to do and Carol believed him.

But in reality, it was simply because Shirou had still not satisfied all the conditions that Akira had placed. Therefore, he could not tell them to start working on his goal just yet. Akira had asked Shirou for one thing as advance payment.

Akira made it a requirement for Shirou to explain his goal and the ruin that he wanted them to go to. Naturally, Shirou adamantly refused to do so. However, from Akira’s point of view, a ruin exploration request without any details was just too dangerous.

Shirou’s strong refusal seemed to prove Akira’s point and made the former seem suspicious. In the first place, there was no guarantee that the information Shirou had about the ruin was accurate. That was why he ultimately refused the job. Akira then pointed out an alternative. Which was to get him to be indebted to Shirou. Indebted to the point he could not refuse Shirou’s request.

Akira only gave an alternative so as to open up space for discussion. However, even after knowing of his intention, Shirou quickly accepted his conditions. Shirou was afraid that with the slightest information shared, Akira might realize what he was trying to do.

Therefore, with that deal in place, Shirou stayed in the camping vehicle instead of returning back to his hideout. He was looking for an opportunity to get Akira indebted to him. After all, it was easier to find that opportunity if the target was nearby.

As to not allow Carol to eavesdrop on their conversation, Shirou asked Akria through telepathy.

“Akira, can’t I just pay you more money instead? 10 billion Aurum, no, make it 15 billion! I’m willing to pay you that much in advance, you know?”

“No.”

“In that case, you can go do some investigations as an agent from Tsukisada. I will help you out. You do need to add something to your achievement list, right? You won’t get any if you don’t do any work, you know? This is a great opportunity for you. I’m willing to help you right now.”

“With my 50 billion Aurum bounty and monster designation, I can’t return back to Kugamayama city. Like hell I can do any investigation in this situation. Or more like, you should work with Sakashita to get rid of my bounty and monster designation. I will think of that as huge debt, you know?”

“Sure sure, except, since I’m currently on the run from Sakashita, I’m also not in a situation where I can do that right now.”

Shirou let out a sigh in secret.

[Ahhh… I thought that any old-world connector agents around this area would jump at the smallest opportunity to get extra achievements…]

The 5 largest corporations had more old-world connectors than they needed. Each old-world connector had differences in relation to their skills and capabilities. A genius old-world connector like Shirou would be assigned to a special facility, received special training to hone their skill, and get assigned a powerful bodyguard like Hammerz. However, common old-world connectors did not receive such privileges. If their connection to the old-world domain did not reach a certain threshold, they would be assigned to do clerical jobs.

Those whose connections were even worse than that, could not even do any job related to the old-world domain. Thus, some of them got assigned to do jobs outside the inner wall, while some were sent as agents to various places or companies.

Even if they could not do any task related to the old-world domain, if they could still communicate through the old-world domain, they could work in remote areas without any communication equipment. Furthermore, there was no need to worry about communication failures or hijacking etc. For reconnaissance, where connection failure could be fatal, they were highly valuable manpower.

Shirou thought that Akira belonged to that category. He thought that Akira was ordered by his superior to disguise himself as a Hunter. Fortunately, Akira had a knack for being a Hunter. He also presumed that Akira had lived inside the inner wall before and wished to return.

There were agents from Sakashita Heavy Industry who were in the same situation as Akira. They were familiar with the lifestyle inside the inner wall and had a strong desire to return. These types of agents could only do so once they piled enough achievements. Shirou knew many agents who acted in such a manner. That was why he was so certain Akira could not afford to kill him.

But, strangely enough, Akira’s reaction was rather mild. Shirou was even unconsciously trying to justify Akira’s unexpected reaction.

[No, is he actually excited for the opportunity but just cannot trust me? Tsukisada could win some favours from Sakashita if he just handed me over to Sakashita. That should be a huge achievement for him. Or is he just holding back? If that is the case, this is a rather dangerous situation for me. I only have one month to do this…]

Although he did not have any other choice, Shirou felt Akira's conditions only served to make him waste what precious time he had left. Thus, his face turned grim.

Suddenly, another notification reached Akira through his Hunter code. Just like last time, it was a code to connect through an encrypted line. However, he was visibly flustered when he checked the sender. He took a deep breath to calm himself down. He checked with Shirou and Carol if it was fine for him to go out for a bit. Once he gained their approval, he left the camping vehicle. Carol and Shirou both wondered what was going on with Akira.

Outside the camping vehicle, Akira stared at his information terminal. He then made his resolve and opened the connection.

"…It's Akira."

"…Elena over here."

Akira and Elena only stated their names, and the conversation came to halt.

Elena already knew that he had turned into a bounty target. Akira noticed this from the fact that she had contacted him through an encrypted line. He endured the silence longer than he had imagined. He was quick to realize how much he cared about her perception of him. However, at the same time, he also realized that there were people who did not care about the labels imposed on him. This made his lips curve into a wry smile.

As he was wondering why Elena called him and what should he say, the silence continued. It was Elena who broke the silence.

"Well, as much as I want to ask 'how are you' and 'what are you up to lately', I know that you're not in the situation for small talk. So, I'll leave that for some other time. So then? I actually have something I need to discuss, but before that, there are a few things that I need to tell you."

“Alright, what is it?”

“We are your allies, or at least, we want to stay as your ally. Will you believe me if I say so?”

Akira did not reply. The reason was simply because if he said yes, he might rope Elena and Sara into his problems, and he was afraid of that.

As Elena interpreted that silence as a no, her tone turned forlorn as she continued.

“…At the very least, we are not your enemy. We don’t want to be your enemy. Will that work? If not, then it’ll be pointless for me to continue. In that case, you can end the call…”

Hearing her voice leave traces of insecurity, Akira finally opened his mouth.

“Yes, that will be fine.”

Akira evaded having to make a clear statement. Whether he was fine with them being allies or not being enemies. He did not mean to make it vague. He simply could not make up his mind.

“Thank you. So then, actually, there are people who hired us in order to speak with you. Although I do want to talk to you about smaller and simpler topics, I will pass the call.”

“It’s Hikaru, long time no see.”

Hikaru was trying to act friendly to sour Akira’s mood. Although the plan was by no means wrong, it was obvious that Akira was displeased with hearing her talk.

“You can go ahead and tell me your excuse for roping Elena-san and Sara-san into this.”

Hikaru immediately tensed up. However, she had already prepared an answer to this question beforehand.

“It is to convince you that we are your allies. We told them everything before they accepted my request to escort me. I’m sure you don’t know what is going on inside the city. I believe you see all city officers as hostile. So, unless I do this much, I’m sure you’ll just end the call before I can say anything. I am sorry if you find it unpleasant.”

Akira understood her reasoning, but that was not enough to completely overturn his soured mood.

“Wouldn’t it be fine if you just ask for Kibayashi? If it’s from him, I will at least listen to what you have to say, you know?”

“Kibayashi is working as a staff member of the Hunter Office at the moment. So, it would be improper for a city officer to ask him to do something. I’m sure that you can understand that too, right? If not, I don’t mind explaining it to you.”

“No, that is fine.”

Kibayashi did advise Akira to blow the city open. Therefore, Akira concluded that for Hikaru, who was an officer from the City Management, it would be a bad move to contact such a person. As he was reminded of Kibayashi, he started to compare them. He believed that, at the very least, this conversation would not be as absurd as the conversation he had with Kibayashi. That thought alone helped him to calm down.

“Alright, so, what is it?”

“If it’s possible, I want to solve the current situation peacefully. Would it be alright if we meet up somewhere and talk face to face?”

“Peacefully, huh? If you really want to do so, go and annul my monster designation first before calling me.”

“That’s exactly why I want to talk with you. If they can see that you’re willing to sit down and converse peacefully with us even in this situation, it would be easier for Inabe-san to convince City Management that this is a matter solely between you and Lion Steel; the city has nothing to do with it.

As I said, we are your allies. That’s why, we’re also working hard over here to help you, you know?”

Since Akira was told that it was in order to remove his monster designation, it was not like he could refuse. Furthermore, it was suggested by someone claiming to be his ally. However, if they met up, there was a good chance that Sara and Elena would be there too. That was why Akira was hesitating.

“…Fine then, let’s meet up.”

“Thank you. So then, how are we going to meet… Ah, I’ll pass the call for a bit.”

“Hello, it’s Sara. Long time no see, Akira.”

“Ah, yes, long time no see.”

Sara was obviously trying to act like usual. So, Akira was trying his best to do the same. But in the end, he still sounded stiff. Sara noticed it but just ignored it.

“Although it might sound weird, are you doing okay?”

“Yeah, I’m doing okay.”

“Do you have somewhere to sleep? Are you sleeping in an abandoned building somewhere?”

“No, I’m living in a camping vehicle.”

“Oh? I don’t remember you have one, is it an abandoned camping vehicle?”

“Well, about that, it’s a long story…”

Sara was casually chatting with Akira about how he was doing. Judging from his tone of voice, it did not seem like his mental state had been gravely affected, which she had been worried about. Although she did not know all the details, she was relieved to hear Akira was still able to live in a relatively good condition considering his situation. It was to the point that he could maintain his calm.

Being a bounty target on top of getting a monster designation. No normal person would be able to stay sane having to stay vigilant of Hunters and monsters out in the wasteland for an extended period of time. But judging from his reply, Akira seemed to have adapted well to his situation. He did not sound panicked or desperate. Although he sounded stiff and nervous, even a little guilty, it was proof that he at least had the leeway to afford to be so.

“But still, it must be rough. Well, it seems like Hikaru is working hard so that you can return back to the city. So, I hope it goes well. If you need any help from us, feel free to ask. Don’t hold back. We are also Hunters. Depending on the reward, we would at least consider it.”

“Thank you for the offer. But unfortunately, I just bought new equipment, so I don’t have much money left to offer.”

“Oh my, that’s just too bad.”

Sara jokingly said so and Akira replied with another joke. At the very least, he understood that Sara wanted him to ask them for help when he needed them.

After that, the call returned back to Hikaru. They quickly decided on the time and the place before closing the call.

Akira heaved a deep sigh. Seeing that, Alpha smiled and spoke to him, as if to console him.

“It’s not your fault. Being designated as a bounty target is not your fault. Although, your decision did play a part in it. Regardless of whether you would do the same thing or not in the future, just give up and accept it.”

“Yeah, I know.”

“Don’t worry, I don’t think they were lying to you. Elena and Sara were being honest when they said that they want to stay as your allies.”

“…I see, thanks.”

As expected, Akira could not simply change how he perceived his situation at the drop of a hat. Even so, he still smiled and thanked Alpha.

“You are welcome.”

Alpha smiled back at him.

__*__*__*__

After they closed the call, Sara seemed forlorn as she said.

“…It seems like we’re no longer senior Hunters that he can rely on anymore… It’s rather disheartening…”

They thought that they could still do something to help Akira out. They wanted him to rely on them. That was why she stated ‘If you need any help from us, feel free to ask. Don’t hold back’.

But today, that was no longer the case. Akira no longer relied on them. He was even worried about causing them trouble. The realization hit Sara pretty hard.

In contrast, Hikaru, who did not notice Sara’s feelings, was excited. After all, her first contact with Akira regarding this matter went well.

“Elena-san, Sara-san. I know that this won’t be easy, but as I said before, if things go well, we should be able to help him. So, I’ll be counting on you again.”

Hikaru politely bowed. Sara was surprised by this. Elena, who had been together with Sara for such a long time, noticed her feelings and tried to cheer her up with a smile.

“Of course. We’re planning on helping him from here on out. Right, Sara?”

Sara seemed to have been taken aback, but she quickly bloomed a smile.

“…Yeah, you’re right, let’s do our best for the next step!”

It reminded Sara that they were not trying to help him so that he would rely on them. She brightened up and smiled happily at her best friend, Elena.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 274, The End of the Grace Period

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

It had been one full week since Akira had a bounty on his head. He still had not received his front-line equipment yet. Furthermore, at the moment, no one was trying to try to hunt him. He was talking with Alpha while waiting to meet Hikaru. At one point, Akira seemed rather confused as he shook his head.

“What can I say? I feel a bit disappointed. With 50 billion Aurum on my head, I thought someone would already try to attack me. Is it because I’m hiding pretty well? But they did find Shirou though.”

Discovering that it was currently peaceful when it wouldn’t be strange if all hell broke loose, was not good luck. Rather, it was borderline ominous. Such thought had been grafted deep into Akira’s mind. Even so, Alpha was smiling as per usual at him and replied.

“Well, he’s a special agent from Sakashita Heavy Industry, so they might have some kind of special means to track him. The reason why they can’t find you is probably because it’s impossible to do that to normal Hunters.”

“It would be great if that really is the case though.”

Akira did try to ask Shirou once. How did he find him? However, Shirou simply stated that it was through secret means that no normal person could access. Telling Akira would mean owing him a huge favour. Therefore, in the end, Akira refused. Since Shirou was being hunted by Sakashita Heavy Industry and was travelling together with Akira, Akira believed that Shirou would tell him about it if he were to get discovered. In addition, there might be no effective way to deal with it.

Akira's lack of interest in the matter made Shirou glad.

Meanwhile, Alpha was telepathically conversing with Akira.

"He could have just told you and made you deeply indebted to him. I wonder if he is just being stubborn and not telling you. Or maybe, he has another plan in mind."

"Hmmm… It is possible that he suspects such favours, no matter how many, even when piled together, would be judged by me as insufficient. So, he might just be waiting for an opportunity, one huge favour with which I can no longer refuse his request. That's why he is avoiding having me owe him smaller favours. Until he can get that one big opportunity."

"That does sound like a good strategy. But I don't think that's a good gambit against someone like you."

While in the middle of their conversation, Akira noticed a vehicle heading in their direction from the wasteland. Akira quickly stopped conversing and picked up his rifle.

Hikaru's group was heading to the meeting place on a vehicle with Kugamayama city's mark on it.

It was a vehicle with a collapsible top. At the moment, it was completely open. Even so, thanks to a thin forcefield layer, they were protected from the wind and sand. Since it was completely transparent, Hikaru, Elena, and Sara had good visibility of the surroundings.

After what she experienced during the inter-city transport escort mission, Hikaru preferred to stay within the inner wall. That incident took place somewhere as secured as the inner wall. Just thinking of it made her not want to step out of the inner wall. Therefore, since Inabe gave her a high-level authority pass, she hoped she could at least bring the city defence squad to escort her.

However, considering that bringing unnecessary people could cause Akira to not trust her, she decided to not do so. In exchange, she gave Elena and Sara, her escorts, expensive equipment, which was too much even as advanced payment. They were powerful equipment not suitable to be used around Kugamayama city and only sold to Hunters above certain Hunter Ranks. Since she was in the middle of a special mission regarding the safety of the city, she managed to somehow get them for Sara and Elena. She also roped in Kiryou and Toson, to get the best equipment that she could get for Elena and Sara.

Thanks to that, Elena and Sara received powerful equipment, which had an old-world-like design. It would not be strange for others to mistake them for Hunters from further east. Since Elena and Sara were Hunters, normally, they would be delighted to find themselves having such equipment. However, since they were going to meet a bounty target, they did not have the leeway to be delighted. Instead, they were distressed, and it was obvious from their expression.

While they were driving through the wasteland, the vehicle lightly wobbled. Elena thought that it was unnatural, but the sensor did not show anything in particular. Thus, she presumed they must have rode over pieces of rubble. She then glanced at Hikaru to confirm if she was fine, before making sure that they were heading in the right direction.

“Hikaru-san. The meeting place is just ahead. Just to confirm, I need to leave the general communication frequency open, right?”

The vehicle was broadcasting a message. It was stating that it was containing a staff member of Kugayama city to everyone in the area. Of course, the other Hunters hunting for Akira would also receive it, which might lead them to Akira.

“Yes. Though, I’m still unsure… Elena-san, do you think it’s safer if we turn it off?”

“I’m sorry. Although I’m the one who threw that question, I’m also not sure.”

If they went to meet Akira without broadcasting that message, Hunters hunting for him might attack them in the middle of their negotiation. They could simply state that they did not know Hikaru was from Kugamayama City Management. The broadcast was to ward off such an excuse.

Should they ensure Akira’s safety by concealing themselves and do the negotiations or should they keep broadcasting and protect him by using the influence of the city even if his location was made known? After Hikaru considered her two options, from the point of view of a City Management staff member, she decided on the latter.

As the negotiator of the team, Elena also thought about it. However, she concluded that her experience would not be of any use in this situation.

“Sara, what do you think?”

“Me? Not sure. If possible, I would rather have Akira choose what to do.”

“I would prefer if you can just keep driving straight like this.”

“Is that so? Well, in that case… Hm?”

Elena and Sara frowned, Akira’s voice then continued.

“Elena-san, please just keep on driving like this. There’s no need to stop the vehicle. Just keep on driving as if we’re heading to our agreed upon meeting place.”

Elena smiled bitterly.

“…Sure. So, just when did you get on the vehicle?”

“Just a moment ago.”

Akira disengaged his camouflaging coat and showed himself. Hikaru, oblivious that he was sitting next to her, was thunderstruck that she could not hold back her voice.

“Eh? Whoah!? What!?”

“Hikaru, keep your voice down. I’m trying to meet with you in secret, so stop making a commotion.”

After Akira gave his warning, Hikaru quickly shut her mouth. However, her whole face still could not contain the surprise she felt.

Sara smiled wryly.

“Elena, you didn’t get him in the sensor?”

“Nope, I didn’t. Akira, how did you get in?”

Elena was also smiling wryly. But in contrast, Akira smiled amusedly and explained.

“I was waiting along the route to the meeting place with my camouflage coat on. Once you got close enough, I jumped in, while trying to make the least impact possible. After that, I sneaked into the back seat.”

“I’m pretty sure we have the forcefield armour up though.”

“If you sneak in slow enough, a weak forcefield armour meant for protection against the elements wouldn’t give any trouble. If they’re enhanced to detect trespassers, I would have been discovered though. But it doesn’t seem that this vehicle has that type equipped. I’m sorry for surprising you. I need to be extra careful as well, so I hope you can understand.”

Akira said so with nonchalance. Elena’s smile deepened, but it was a teasing one.

“I don’t mind at all, but I can’t say for my employer.”

Akira then turned to Hikaru. His casual attitude showed that he was reacting positively toward this meeting. It also indicated that he was not there to fight. Or at least, that was what Hikaru told herself to help her calm down. She then heaved a huge sigh, which was used to release all her pent-up complaints.

“I’m glad to see that you’re doing pretty well even with that 50 billion bounty Aurum on you.”

“Thanks for the compliment.”

Hikaru said sarcastically. However, Akira simply shrugged it off and replied with a nonchalant smile. When Elena and Sara saw their exchange, they found it to be amusing.

The mood inside the vehicle had quickly relaxed. However, they could not afford to enjoy such a mood forever, Akira pulled himself together and went straight to the main subject.

“So then, Hikaru, I heard that you want to solve this problem peacefully…”

Hikaru also turned serious. She reminded herself that failure was not an option. Thus, her serious attitude became severe.

“That’s right. First of all, can you tell me your side of the story? I want to understand what is going on, after all. In the end, we are a third party in this matter. So, it would be great if you can tell me from your point of view, what is going on. To be honest, it would be troublesome if you hide anything. So, please.”

“Sure.”

Akira then honestly told his point of view of the current incident just like he had said before. But the more he spoke, the paler Hikaru became. She had an awkward smile on her face as she cursed.

[Just… Just how in the world are we going to solve this matter peacefully!?]

Considering that Lion Steel was a huge company, even if Akira was innocent, she wished that they could find some way to compromise. Although Akira might not find it to be pleasant, she still planned on convincing him. That picking a fight with Lion Steel was simply too reckless. She would push him to negotiate for peace as the best choice.

But after listening to his story though, that thought was just an impossibility; a mere dream. Akira showed no desire to compromise. He was resolute about killing Chloe. The only reason why he did not do so right away and instead hid was simply because he was waiting for the front-line equipment from Kibayashi. There was no doubt he would do anything to eliminate her after he got those equipment. If she tried to stop him, he might see her as an enemy and there was a high chance Akira would eliminate her as well.

Elena and Sara, who were also listening in to his side of the story, smiled bitterly. However, at the same time, they thought that it was so like him to act in such a manner. They easily concluded that it was futile to try to convince him otherwise. After all, Akira once raided the headquarters of a large slum gang just to kill a single pickpocket. Although his opponent was on a different scale, his strength was already on a whole other level. He was basically doing the same thing as before. So, this came as no surprise to Elena and Sara.

Hikaru frowned, she was extremely perplexed. Even after wringing out everything she could from her brain, she could not think of any words to convince him.

In the first place, Akira was not someone who would simply withdraw because he was facing a large company. If he was someone who would do that, or if he was someone who understood the idea of self-preservation, back in the inter-city transport-escort mission when Hikaru was mistaken as an old-world connector, he would have abandoned her. As she recalled that incident, she smiled bitterly. She thought to herself.

[Well, I was saved only because he is like this.]

Akira silently waited for Hikaru's reply. However, after some time passed, with no reply, he started to think that it was as he had expected. There was no way they could solve this matter peacefully. Thus, he believed that it was about time he left.

But that was when Hikaru suddenly showed a reaction.

"Akira, wait for a bit."

Hikaru then pulled out her information terminal and called Inabe. After she gave a quick rundown of the situation, she then turned the information terminal toward Akira. Inabe's voice could be heard from the information terminal.

"Long time no see, Akira."

Hikaru's conclusion of what she had to do was to call her superior. She knew that trying to solve this situation herself was futile. She would be just wasting time. Therefore, she thought of consulting someone else that might find a way out of this predicament.

"Normally, I would go to meet you myself, but I'm a bit busy over here, you see. So, I sent Hikaru in my stead. I hope you can understand. Well, putting that aside, I've heard the gist of what is going on from Hikaru. I have a suggestion on how to solve this incident peacefully."

"Oh, what is it?"

Inabe's words gave hope to Hikaru. But his next words completely caught her off guard.

"What are the chances of you accepting a job to kill Chloe?"

"D-director Inabe?!"

It was an outrageous suggestion that completely left Hikaru at a loss for words. But since it was the second time for Akira, he was not that surprised.

"Why would you ask me to do something like that?"

“It’s simply because I think we can reach a more peaceful resolution by doing so. I will be honest here, this time, I can’t be your ally. In all honesty, you’ve really done something stupid.”

As Hikaru was still flusteredly reacting to what Inabe just said, he simply ignored her and continued.

“Being your ally means there will be a full-blown war between the Kugamayama City Management and the Lion Steel company. I’m not talking about an economic war, but a real war with ammunition. So, I’m sorry, but I can’t do that.”

“Well, I already expected as much.”

Akira lightly nodded. It was obvious that he did not find it to be surprising at all. However, Hikaru was flabbergasted for some reason.

“And so, we need to take the next best option. I can’t be your friend, but I won’t be your enemy. But if I just leave this situation alone, it’s only a matter of time before you go for Chloe’s throat with front-line weapons. So, we need to interfere.”

Elena, Sara and Hikaru were listening anxiously to their conversation. A high-ranking city officer was offering an assassination job. This was not a matter that could simply be brushed aside.

For Elena and Sara, although they were employed by the City Management through Hikaru, in the end, they were outsiders. They were uncertain if it was fine for them to listen to this conversation. However, it was way too late to back out now. So, they continued listening in.

But as the conversation continued, the weight of it only became heavier and heavier.

“That is exactly where the problem lies. As I thought about how to solve this peacefully, the answer is simple. It’s for either you to die, or for Chloe to die. Considering our relationship, I think having Chloe die is the better choice.”

“Well, thank you.”

“Nah, don’t mention it. But our next problem here is how to kill her. I can help you if it’s only for a tiny bit. Either you need to sneak inside the inner wall or bait her out of the city. Personally speaking, to suppress the damage, I would rather choose the latter. In the first place, it’s between you and Chloe. So, it would be great if you keep Kugamayama city out of this. I bet Kibayashi is encouraging you to make this problem as big as possible. But that only serves to amuse him, so don’t.”

“Well, I wouldn’t need to deal with the city defence squad outside the city and I don’t think I can sneak into the city anyway.”

“That’s great to hear.”

Akira and Inabe were talking casually. However, the contents were enough to send a shiver through Hikaru’s whole body. Her superior was asking Akira to assassinate someone from a large company. He was even offering to help as well. If this plan went through and this conversation got leaked to Lion Steel, a war would no doubt break out. A mere low-level city officer like her would be blown to bits if she got involved.

But she was no longer able to say that she was not involved in this. Hikaru was panicking, having to face a situation that was already more than what she could handle. However, that was not the end of it. Akira’s next words brought on even more surprise to her.

“Ahh, just to let you know though, I won’t accept that job.”

“Why?”

“Actually, someone offered me the same job before. But I will kill Chloe purely by my own will. Even if the job only acts as a cover, I don’t want anyone else’s will to taint it. And since I refused their offer, it would be stupid of me to accept this one. Ah, but it would be of great help if you can help me sneak into the inner wall or to lure Chloe out of the city. I just won’t accept the job. But I will still kill Chloe though.”

“I see. Although, offering it to you means that I’m willing to share the crime with you. Well, if you’re going to take full responsibility for killing her, it actually saves me a lot of trouble. So, I’m completely fine with that. But can you tell me the details of…”

The fact that Akira refused and openly stated that someone else already requested him to do the same exact job had Hikaru in utter shock. As if to hammer the nail into the coffin, there was a sudden change of event.

Akira suddenly received a telepathic message from Shirou.

“Akira!! Get away from there!! Right now! You’ll get surrounded!

Akira immediately scanned his surroundings. But he did not catch anything suspicious.

“Alpha?

“There’s nothing inside my detection range… So, it should be from outside my detection range! Be careful, Akira!”

The very next moment, warheads suddenly rained down a little bit further from where they were. More warheads followed afterwards, creating explosions around the moving vehicle. Smokes and dust spread through the area, accompanied by echoes of fiery explosions.

The accuracy of the barrage was low. It was as if they were shot randomly. However, the quality of explosives was by no means small. As if to compensate for their lack of accuracy. Furthermore, they came from all directions.

“Sara!”

“I know!”

Elena scanned the surroundings and accurately calculated the trajectories of the incoming warheads. Sara then shot them down one by one with terrifying accuracy based on the data from Elena.

In her right hand, Sara held a gun, which was fitted with a lens on its muzzle. The concentrated energy projected from that lens reacted with the colourless mist to draw a straight line. It pierced through the incoming warheads and made them explode. Meanwhile, the gun on her left hand spewed out bullets, destroying the rest of the warheads.

Akira also quickly started shooting as well. He worked flawlessly with Sara to make sure that the area around the vehicle was completely safe. As the warheads kept raining down, explosions echoed all around. Flames devoured the surrounding areas with a veil of dirt and smoke. This finally broke Hikaru.

“Geez! What is going on here!? Give me a break, already!!”

“Shirou? Where are they? Send me their positions!”

“There, done! Just get away from there for now! They’ll completely surround you if you stay there!”

Akira glanced at the image of the enemy locations that were sent by Shirou through telepathy and frowned. The enemies were forming an encirclement 3 kilometres in radius, with him in the middle.

[…Well, I’m a bounty target, after all, it’s no surprise they’d come at me in teams.]

Back when they were hunting the Tank Tarantula, Shikarabe did gather Hunters and formed a team before challenging it. Akira joined their team during that time. He smiled bitterly as he finally noticed the reason why no one came at him after some time. It was simply because they needed time to organize a hunting party.

During the hunt for the Tank Tarantula, they also did the same. For the sake of safety, they bombarded their target from afar. And this time, that target was him. They sacrificed accuracy for the sake of keeping their distance. They would not get too close nor too far. They would just keep bombarding him.

According to the image sent by Shirou, Akira could see the enemies were actively moving in order to keep him in the middle of the encirclement. However, because of the scale of the operation, it was difficult to keep the formation perfectly circular. Very quickly, some clumps started to form in the encirclement.

Alpha then pointed out that part of the encirclement was relatively thin and told him to go in that direction.

“Elena-san! Please go in that direction!”

Elena quickly turned the vehicle toward the direction Akira pointed to. The high-speed sharp turn caused Hikaru to yelp.

The sound of the explosions was of course transmitted to Inabe through the information terminal.

“An ambush, huh? Akira. Let’s continue this talk some other time. Hikaru-kun, head back to the city as soon as possible.”

“B-back to the city?! But Akira is also with us here…”

Hikaru inadvertently asked. After all, they could not afford to bring someone designated as a monster back to the city. However, Inabe quickly replied with no hesitation.

“Leave him behind.”

“What-!?”

That heartless suggestion shocked Hikaru. Elena and Sara were obviously unhappy with it as well.

However, Akira then nonchalantly said to them.

“Elena-san. Just keep driving like this and don’t stop.”

“Of course! Let’s get out of here together…!?”

Elena had no plans to leave Akira behind. She smiled confidently and looked back at him. However, she was shocked to find that he had already jumped off the vehicle.

“Akira!? What are you-!?”

If not for Akira telling her not to stop beforehand, Elena would have stomped on the brakes right there and then.

She could not decide whether to turn back and pick him up. After all, Akira jumped off the vehicle himself. It was doubtful that he would jump back in even if she turned back. Before she could make her decision, Akira’s voice could be heard through Hikaru’s information terminal.

“Elena-san. Once again, keep heading in that direction and don’t stop.”

Elena frowned and bitterly asked.

“…Akira, are you sure you’re fine with it?”

“Elena-san and Sara-san are here to make sure that Hikaru is safe, right? In that case, it’s only right for you to prioritise it. As Hunters, it’s important to do our job perfectly.”

Akira’s voice was calm and somehow sounded happy. Elena, who was always presented with difficult decisions as the team leader, smiled bitterly. A smile directed at herself. So, in her place, her best friend, Sara smiled confidently and gave a firm reply.

“Alright, Akira. Just leave Hikaru to us.”

“Sorry, and thank you. If Hikaru dies, I would lose one of my negotiation routes with City Management after all. That would be really troublesome. The encirclement should be weakest in that direction. But, considering I am a 50 billion Aurum bounty target, I bet it still won’t be easy, so, be careful.”

Hearing Akira’s apologetic tone of voice, Sara replied with an upbeat one.

“Don’t worry. We are really exceptionally well equipped for taking this job. So, we should be able to handle it just fine.”

In reaction to that attempt to cheer him up, Akira also replied with a more upbeat tone.

“Is that so? I’m actually scheduled to get new equipment too.”

“Really? Then we should show our equipment to one another soon. We can have a good, relaxed talk next time.”

“Yeah. Well then, until next time.”

After making a promise to meet up again, they closed the call. While at the same time, Elena trembled in sorrow and stepped on the gas.

“…Elena, we should do our job. If we don’t, I’m sure Akira would be disappointed in us.”

“…You’re right, Sara.”

Thanks to her best friend’s cheer, Elena somehow managed to regain her cool. She smiled confidently to convey that to Sara.

Sara smiled back softly.

“So yeah, Elena. Anyway, rather than hold back, how about we bring out our trump card?”

Without even waiting for a reply, Sara pulled out a seemingly ordinary gun from the back. When she activated it, it automatically unfolded and expanded itself. Its barrel got longer and thicker, and its overall shape changed. The total length of the gun was now even longer than that of the vehicle.

In its folded state, it was using the same technology for the extended magazine. Thus, it greatly expanded when it was undone. Although it had the shape of a gun, once it was fully unfolded, it was impossible to fold it back to its original form. They would need to pay a specialist to do that for them. However, all the trouble was worth it for its firepower.

Elena expanded her scanning range to its maximum. Due to the distance, she was still unaware of the enemy's formation. Naturally, it was difficult to ascertain their position with such limited information. Nonetheless, she was able to infer their general position from the incoming barrage.

Although it was still far from accurate, after she did more calculations and narrowed down as much as she could, she smiled amusedly and ordered Sara.

"Fire away!"

The large-sized gun, suitable to be used by a powered suit instead of a human, immediately started spewing out bullets. It was only thanks to Sara's enhanced body and augmented suit that she was able to use such a weapon. It sucked the energy packs attached to it dry in an instant. All the energy was compressed into energy bullets and shot out of its muzzle.

The barrage of the energy bullets rampaged through like a storm, leaving trails of light while they headed to their targets. The gun spewed out bullets as if the expense was non-existent. The powerful bullet storm lashed out as if Elena and Sara were venting out their emotions. It completely devoured everything in its way, leaving destruction and annihilation in its wake.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 275, Tamed Monsters

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira jumped off the vehicle, he immediately started running toward the direction where the encirclement was the thickest. As expected, the enemies were still far from his reach. Furthermore, with obstacles in between them, it was impossible for Akira to directly aim his shot. He kept running while calling for his bike.

Meanwhile, he shot down some of the incoming warheads. He even used the LEO multi-rifle on his right hand to shoot down some of the warheads that were not heading towards him. It created a furry of firework-like explosions up in the air. Those explosions alerted his attackers. Informing them that he was heading in a different direction, away from the vehicle. While he was doing all of this, he was about to end his call with Elena and Sara, which was hosted through Alpha.

“Of course, until next time then… Alpha! The bike is heading this way, right?”

“I’m driving it right now, so don’t worry. But before that, let’s clean those up first.”

Alpha then pointed at the signals that were heading toward him. With his vision augmented to see as far as it could, Akira could not help but frown.

“Monsters? What’s going on?”

These signals were coming from large-sized carnivorous monsters. Their bodies were half-mechanical, as if they got turned into cyborgs. They were covered in blueish armour plates as if they were born with metallic hard skin. In between their armour plates, four limbs were extending out. They were moving nimbly, as if their 6-meter long body did not impede them at all. The wreckage and the rubble were helplessly crushed under their large legs.

It was obvious that the monsters were not from around Kugamayama city. It would not be strange to find such monsters way out to the east, maybe around Zegelt city. That was the first thing that shocked Akira, the next thing was that they were heading toward him.

It could only be described as unfortunate for monsters if they were escaping from a hail of warheads. However, the current situation was far too strange. These monsters were running straight to where those warheads were landing. If they wanted to destroy the source of bombardment, they would head in the same direction Akira was heading, not towards him. As Akira was still uncertain as to what to do with those monsters, they suddenly stopped midway. It was as if they thought it was a bad idea to get too close to him and started to move around him.

Akira was even more confused. However, his confusion got completely annihilated as suddenly, the bombardment got even more intense.

“That was rather sudden.”

Up until this point, the bombardment was aimed at the general area around Akira. Therefore, some of the warheads landed a bit far away from him. However, suddenly, the target area narrowed down. The intense bombardment was not due to the increase in total number but because the targeting area got narrowed down. This showed that they got a better grasp of his location.

Monsters that were behaving strangely and the sudden increase in accuracy. Alpha immediately noticed their connection.

“Akira, those monsters are working as reconnaissance for the enemy. Shoot them down immediately.”

Akira raised his eyebrows. He did not expect that at all.

“Reconnaissance? But they are monsters, no? Why are monsters helping the Hunters who are after me?”

“I bet they captured and modified them. Modifying a mechanical monster is relatively easy after all.”

It was not rare to capture a powerful monster and tame it to help Hunters. Biological monsters had the embedded instinct to attack people so it was extremely difficult to tame a biological monster. However, for mechanical monsters, depending on its biological and mechanical structure, Hunters might be able to interfere with its programming. For example, rewriting the control device or even replacing it altogether.

Especially for mechanical monsters that imitate biological creatures. Sometimes, it was easier to manipulate their programmed instinct compared to complete drones. After all, most of the time, their brain was connected to a nervous system. Even if it was impossible to manipulate the control device, they could simply replace it with another control device. Most of the time, control devices for powered suits were used as the replacement. Afterwards, they could let it run some machine learning program to study how to control the monster’s body and over time, if lucky, take full control of it.

There were cases where the new control device caused the biological portion of the monster to go berserk. Naturally, this happened because the new control device was made with the current era’s technology. It was easier than having to analyze the monster’s control device, which was made of an unknown substance and unknown technology. Moreover, this process, using familiar technology, made it easier to analyse and control the captured monster.

If they were able to do well manipulating the captured monster, they might be able to use the old-world mechanical monster's parts. Although these parts were made of metallic materials, they were able to be repaired as if they were biological parts. Some even had the weird capability to fix themselves in an instant if induced with certain medicine. Some could work even without an energy pack or a generator. In order to study those parts, many mechanical monsters were captured.

The monsters that Akira was facing were called Blue Saber, the Hunters hunting him tamed them. The reason why the bombardment accuracy suddenly increased was because their blue monsters were conveying all kinds of information to them. Like the contours of the region and the general coordinate of where Akira was.

"Akira, you already did very well as a decoy, can we get serious now?"

"…Alright."

The reason why Akira was deliberately shooting down more warheads than needed, was simply to act as a decoy. This was so that they were more focused on him instead of Elena and Sara. Akira knew that shooting randomly upwards would expose his location, they just needed to retrace the bullets' trajectory, but he still did so.

However, now, he could stop. He quickly hid his presence using his camouflaging coat and stopped shooting down the warheads. He then quickly turned toward one of the blue monsters.

This blue monster was constantly keeping a distance. It was as far away as it could be, while keeping Akira barely within its sensor's range. However, once he activated his camouflaging coat, the monster was no longer able to detect where he was.

Because of that, the bombardment had lost its target. They started shooting randomly around the area, prioritizing coverage over accuracy. After all, they concluded that Akira should be around the area. Since Alpha could accurately predict the trajectories of the warheads, this random bombardment did not cause any trouble for Akira. Meanwhile, the boy was calmly running toward that one blue monster, closing the distance between them.

The monster immediately went to the area where Akira suddenly vanished. It was trying to once again ascertain his location. However, with the constant explosions from the warheads, dust and smoke veiled the area. This caused it to be even more difficult to find Akira, who had his camouflaging coat on along with Alpha's support.

Even so, the blue monster increased its scanner power. Therefore, it eventually detected Akira's signal again. However, that was only after he had decided to move quickly. Although he knew that he was jeopardizing his position, it was worth the risk.

Akira knew that he did not have to get that close if he used his rifle. However, he still chose to use a blade. It was to avoid having the enemies locking down on his position from the sound of the gunshot. If he could take down this monster, it would greatly reduce the accuracy of the bombardment. He was prioritizing hiding his presence. At least, until his bike came so that he could quickly close the distance to those surrounding him.

The blade handle was connected to an energy tank on his back through a tube. That way, he could transfer energy to the blade. Increasing the sharpness of the blade through the strengthened forcefield armour, increased the risk of it crumbling to dust. It was thanks to Alpha keeping a very subtle balance that the blade's sharpness could be pushed to its limit without destroying the blade. She was even able to control the minute detail of the blade's output as it was swung toward the blue monster's head.

The time between the monster detecting Akira and the blade reaching its head was minuscule. If it was a biological monster, that opening was only barely enough to make a surprised expression.

However, a mechanical monster was not subjected to such pointless emotions. It did not even waste its time. It immediately obeyed its programming to attack Akira. It opened its jaw wide, which was filled with electric needles instead of teeth. The electric needles created a bluish flame that gathered in the middle of its mouth. It was creating a ball of energy. It aimed that energy ball at Akira, which fired to transform into a burning blue ray of light.

At the next moment, Akira sliced through the beam and even past the blue beast.

He swung the blade from a low stance, releasing a sharp wave of light that split the blue beam into two. It scorched the terrain to his left and right, leaving two clear charred lines on the ground. Akira increased the speed of his body using his suit, which added to his initial inertia to quicken his swing. With masterful execution, the blade cut through the heavily armoured head and pierced through the torso of the monster.

As the blue light died out and the monster was split cleanly into two, Akira stood in the middle of its carcass. He then looked back at the scorch marks on the ground and frowned.

“Ah! That was dangerous! That is not something that I can just take on and walk off fine, right?”

“Yep. It would have killed you if you had taken it head-on.”

“They even have these kinds of monsters, huh? Just who the heck is hunting me right now?”

“Whoever they are, I bet their Hunter Rank is high enough to hunt a 50 billion Aurum bounty target.”

“I already know that, but still…”

Even in the eastern district, where guns reigned supreme, there were still those who forwent blades and fought with their fists. Those who had survived for so long, even after making such a foolish decision, were powerful Hunters.

It was the same for taming monsters. Doing such a thing with the goal to increase one’s fighting power was considered foolish. If it was only for the sake of increasing firepower, it was safer and cheaper to get a tank or better equipment. Therefore, those who tamed monsters not for the sake of research or business, mostly did so for the sake of their hobby.

This meant that those hunting him right now were the people with enough money or power to indulge in such an ineffective activity. It could even be both. With such people attacking him, it reaffirmed his identity as a 50 billion Aurum bounty target. Thus, Akira let out a sigh.

He then changed gear. He once again slipped into the noise created by the raging battle and moved away from this place. Since he had killed a recon unit, he believed it would be easier for him to hide his presence now. He jumped off the dead monster and continued heading forward.

However, the next surprise caused him to frown. There were two more Blue Sabers heading in his direction.

“There are still more this close, huh?”

“It seems like they’re heading here from another location. Since they approximately know where you are, they no longer have to search the other areas.”

From his last encounter, he knew that these monsters had the ability to shoot from afar. Therefore, this time, he chose to use his LEO multi-rifles and aimed each of them toward a different blue monster. The rifles released a barrage of C-bullets toward their targets with pinpoint accuracy.

But before they hit their targets, they suddenly got deflected. Instead, a bluish spark was left in their stead. Once the sparks cleared up, there was a translucent bluish-white glass-like layer, cracked and almost close to shattering. It was now clear that the monsters had used a forcefield shield to deflect his barrage.

Akira knitted his brows and then raised them the very next moment. From behind the forcefield shield, the monsters had already opened their jaws. They were about to release their laser attacks. Akira quickly jumped behind the dead monster that he just killed. A few milliseconds later, the area was completely devoured by blue.

Since the ray attack was focused more on area coverage instead of firepower, it did not inflict that much damage on Akira. Even so, with two of them shooting at the same time, it had enough power to blast the carcass of their dead friend away, leaving Akira exposed. Although he was also blown away, since he had focused on his defence, he was able to avoid any injury.

Akira quickly reaffirmed his footing right away once he landed.

Now that he was once again exposed, he thought that he should at least shoot down one of them. Thus, he was aiming both of his rifles at one target.

“Alpha! Which one should I take out first?”

“We need to kill them both. Even if you manage to get one, the other one would still be able to relay your location.”

“You know that I can’t do it. That’s why I’m thinking of taking one of them out first. I’m asking which one I should take out first! If you’re not going to answer, I will decide on my own.”

“Don’t worry, it’ll be fine.”

“What do you mean?”

It was a telepathic conversation through his compressed time perception. Therefore, even a long conversation would only take a short time. Even so, Akira did not have the leeway to have a long conversation. Even in that situation, Alpha was smiling like usual. She was returning replies that did not mesh well with the situation, causing him to be even more bewildered.

Right at the next moment, the two monsters had their heads pierced through by a single laser each. The first monster had its control device on its head accurately pierced by a concentrated beam, while the second monster had a hole drilled through its head.

Seeing that, Akira was completely flabbergasted and glanced at Alpha. Seeing that, Alpha just smiled back with her usual smile.

“See, it’s fine, isn’t it?”

“Y-yeah.”

Akira agreed and gave a nod. He then frowned and looked toward the source of the lasers. He could see a bike heading in his direction with an AF anti-material cannon perched on its back. He quickly realized that it was his bike and Alpha was controlling it. However, he did not know where the other laser came from.

As the bike came to view through the smoke, Akira finally realized where the other laser came from. At the same time, he was caught by surprise. Carol was on his bike with a large cannon in her hand. Even with that huge thing, the bike did not even seem to slow down as it approached him. As the bike passed him, Akira grabbed Carol’s hand and jumped on board.

As Akira took the back seat, Carol glanced and smiled at him.

“Sorry for the wait, was I late? Though, from my point of view, it seems like I just came right on time.”

“Yeah, thanks. But why are you here? Even without you on it, the bike should be able to get here just fine.”

“Oh my. I didn’t expect you to say that when I came all the way here to rescue you. Just like you saw earlier. I’m not going to slow you down, you know?”

Toward Carol, who was voicing her honest complaint, Akira frowned and replied.

“It’s safer for you to remain inside the camping vehicle. Just so you know, I’m still in the middle of my bodyguard job duty as well. As your bodyguard, I wish to protect my target. I don’t want you endangering yourself just to help me out. Just like earlier, I do not have a lot of leeway to protect another person, you know?”

“Then, it was the right decision for me to come here. I will fight together with you and help you as much as I can. Isn’t that what we agreed on when you accepted my bodyguard request? If you’re that cornered right now, then let me help you. That was the deal and that is just how deals work, no?”

“You’re not wrong, but…”

Seeing Akira sheepishly try to deny her, Carol became a little obstinate as she firmly stated.

“Just so you know, even if you say you want to cancel your bodyguard job because of this, I will still come to help you, okay? This is also partly instruction from Shirou, after all. Since I’m also basically working for him, this is also part of my job, so I won’t back down. Alright?”

Although Carol made such a claim, they were actually not formally working under Shirou. As he had thought, Shirou intentionally manipulated Carol using her misunderstanding. He quickly connected to Shirou through telepathy and asked him.

“Shirou, what do you think you’re doing?”

“It would be bad for me if you die, you see. So, I asked Carol to rescue you. Although you’re not working for me at the moment, I can still employ Carol as an individual and separate her employment from you. So, I don’t see why I should be criticized by you for that.”

“Just so you know, I don’t owe you anything for this.”

“Sure. Your condition doesn’t really matter if you die, after all. But well, if this is enough to kill you, it’s meaningless to hire you in the first place. So, make sure to get back here alive.”

They then went silent, but behind that silence, their wills were clashing against each other. Thanks to telepathy, their emotions were being conveyed to one another even without any words spoken. After a short moment, Shirou was the first one to break the silence.

“But still, how did you manage to tame someone like her?”

“What are you trying to say?”

“Though it might be weird coming from me since I’m the one who sent her to help you. But, when I did so, she did not utter a single complaint and just went to you, you know? No matter how you look at it, between leaving the safety of the camping vehicle or going out straight to where it rained warheads and having to fight against Hunters who were strong enough to hunt a 50 billion bounty target, normally, I would expect her to say one or two complaints. I can understand it if she’s a veteran soldier, but that doesn’t seem to be the case. Are you guys dating or something?”

Shirou casually threw that question, believing if that was indeed the case, he might be able to use it for his goal. However, Akira did not answer except for a telepathic sigh.

“Shirou, make sure to protect the camping vehicle. All my reserve ammo is over there. If I lose it now, it would be really bad. So, make sure to protect it, I will owe you one if you do that.”

“Sure. Good luck out there.”

“Yeah.”

Akira then closed the telepathic connection, heaved a long sigh, and became solemn.

“Carol, like I said before, I can’t guarantee your safety in this situation. So, you might get killed if you stay with me. To be honest, I would prefer to have you head back to the camping vehicle. You know this already and still want to help me here, right?”

“Yep, isn’t that what I said back then?”

“Are you really sure? This is your last chance to withdraw.”

“Geez, you’re so stubborn, you know?”

Carol pouted. As expected, with Akira’s numerous warnings, she started to wonder if Akira saw her as nothing but a burden. Someone who would only serve to slow him down.

“… I see.”

But after hearing her confirmation once again, Akira lightly smiled which quickly escalated into laughter.

“Alright! Help me out then!”

Carol was taken aback by Akira’s sudden change in mood. However, he ignored how surprised she was and continued.

“First of all, we need to swap places, so get to the back seat.”

“W-wait!”

As the bike was moving haphazardly to avoid the pouring warheads, Akira forcefully swapped places with Carol. He did not hold back and grabbed her chest and legs as he casually took the front seat. Although it was slightly rough, Carol was frozen in disbelief since Akira never treated her like that before.

“Alright then. Let’s get serious. Carol. As I said, I don’t have the leeway to protect you. So, I will be making pretty extreme moves. Hold on tight and make sure not to get thrown overboard.”

“Okay.”

Carol coiled one of her arms around his chest, sticking close to his back.

“Compared to the first time we met, you’ve grown quite a lot. Wouldn’t it be fine to graduate from being a boy soon?”

“I’ll think about it. Now we are going!”

Although it was just for a split second, Akira responded back positively, which he had never done before. Even Carol did not expect that. However, the one surprise after another event was not over. The bike suddenly made a sharp turn. However, it was neither to the right nor to the left. The bike suddenly went up with the help of invisible platforms under its wheels.

“Whoa!? Wha-!? Akira!?”

Carol yelped. Akira heard her, but he simply smiled in amusement and ignored it.

After they got to about 300 metres above the ground, although they were still facing a storm of warheads, Akira saw it as positive. They no longer had to worry about the shock wave when the warheads hit the ground. Even the explosions could no longer reach them. Compared to the ground, the sky was a relatively calm place. Though, Carol looked a bit frightened, being at that height with no visible footing. She tried to calm herself down as she asked.

“Akira, I don’t think our situation changed that much though. So, what’s next?”

“Well, although they have a better view of us from down there, that is also true for us from up here. It would be difficult to shoot when on the ground with everything in our way. So, this is much better. Carol, I’ll send data of their location to you, feel free to shoot them the moment they get in your range.”

Carol added the information she received to her display. She could see several enemy signals coming from the front. Due to the contour of the terrain, it was impossible to snipe them from afar. However, from up here, it was no longer a problem. Moreover, Akira was moving toward them, thus closing the distance. Although the enemies were trying to move away and keep their distance, thanks to the clear sky with no obstacles, Akira and Carol were moving much faster.

“Alright. Let’s get started. First one.”

Carol fixed her aim and Akira also did the same. Even the bike took aim as well.

Akira and Carol lightly smiled and zeroed in on their targets. Without even exchanging a signal, they pulled the trigger at the same time. Akira, Carol, and the weapons on the bike’s arm all shot at the same time.

The 3 LEO multi-rifles released a barrage of fully charged C bullets. Meanwhile, the AF anti-material cannon released a high-intensity laser beam. It was focused more on firepower than spread. Carol’s cannon released a stream of condensed energy in the direction it was aiming. All shots pierced through the air, drawing long lines in the sky. They headed straight toward their respective targets.

The nearest tank took the full brunt of that attack. Its forcefield armour was torn down from such an assault. There was no doubt that everyone inside the tank got either turned to ash or were full of holes.

Akira did not waste a single second as he quickly turned his bike toward the next target. It was a scene of him laying waste to everything in his wake. The cries and screams from the battlefield seem to say that 50 billion Aurum was far too low for someone like him.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 276, The Hunters' Motive

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The Hunters that gathered to hunt the 50 billion Aurum bounty target were centered around the team led by a Hunter by the name of Gelgus. They brought their own vehicles, tanks, and powered suits to form a powerful hunting party.

Among the vehicles, there was a single gigantic vehicle. It was as tall as a 2-storey building. It was large enough to house powered suit weaponry, serve as lodging and could easily be used as a mobile HQ. This vehicle had the Lion Steel's logo adorned on it.

A large meeting room inside it was used as a command centre. A table-type display was placed in the middle of that room. At the moment, it was mostly used to oversee the situation of the ongoing battle. All information sent by the information-gathering devices of the powered suits and vehicles on the battlefield were collated and displayed here.

Gelgus looked anxiously at the display as he saw friendly signals vanishing from the map one by one.

"Dammit! One more gone!"

Their original plan was to keep their distance from Akira. They were one-sidedly bombarding from a distance. However, Akira slipped through in-between the explosions and closed the distance. He even managed to break through the encirclement. At this point, the hunting team had already lost half of its firepower.

“Tell those on the opposite side to hurry up! Order them to open fire right away! He’s a bounty target. So why are they hesitating?”

As Gelgus was filled with frustration, Takt, who was a Hunter from the same team, frowned and explained.

“They said that they can’t allow any more friendly fire.”

“When that guy got close, the information accuracy for his position should have got better too; to think they would miss even with such accurate data. Are they stupid or something?”

“I bet the target is also moving to increase the chance of friendly fire. To top it off, the ones suffering friendly fire are not from the same team. If it only ends with broken equipment, they can solve it with money. But, that’s not the case if someone gets killed.”

Gelgus knitted his eyebrows and clicked his tongue. That argument was proof of his lack of skill.

The Hunters hunting for a 50 billion Aurum bounty target were all veterans. Their resolve when they decided to join the hunting party was not the same as those of common Hunters. To some extent, they were ready to lose lives during the operation. However, Gelgus’ team prowess was way above those Hunters. This allowed his team to completely suppress the infighting between the Hunters. Even when they formed the encirclement, they could release the bombardment without the worry of friendly fire. After all, they believe Gelgus’ team could remedy any infighting if they struck their ally.

The fact that one team refused to shoot because of the worry of friendly fire showed how uneasy they were. They now believed Gelgus’ team no longer had the capability to suppress infighting. On top of that, stating it was a clear indication of their thoughts.

“Gelgus-san, what next? Should I take some of our men and surround the target?”

If Gelgus’ men went out to restrain Akira’s movement instead of shooting him down. They could then leave the bombardment to the other team. That should resolve the friendly fire problem. Even if there were sacrifices, the ones they would lose would be from their own team. Therefore, the responsibility could be directly handled by him, and there should no longer be any worry of friendly fire for the other teams.

Naturally, that in turn would increase the possibility of friendly fire for their own team. Takt already knew of the outcome when he offered to take the lead.

However, Gelgus could not send his team out for such a thing. He had a grim expression on his face as he shook his head and ordered.

“No. Order them to restart the bombardment.”

“…Alright, if you change your mind, tell me.”

“Yeah.”

Gelgus shifted his gaze once again to the display, and another blimp signal vanished. Another friendly unit was annihilated.

__*__*__*__

Akira raced his bike through the wasteland with Carol in the back. He was moving at a disorientingly high speed, where up and down no longer had any meaning.

Under the wheels was a projected forcefield armour, which formed its platform. When accelerating, making sharp turns or braking, the translucent platform would create minute glows of light. It was energy conversion from the impact. Akira turned the bike following Alpha’s instruction, blocking the enemy's line of fire using another enemy, causing stray bullets to be more likely to hit their own team. He actively evaded and slipped in between the storm of bullets as if playing with his enemies.

The enemy tanks were proactively aiming at him. Given that they were tanks used to hunt a 50 billion Hunter, they were powerful.

Their caterpillar tracks made easy work of the uneven terrain. They even had enough horsepower to overcome obstacles like rubble and wreckage in their way. Moreover, they had a similar function to Akira's bike. They could create a platform under their caterpillar tracks and elevate the whole tank. It could be used to angle the tanks up, to aim at the sky.

They had thick forcefield armour powered by a powerful generator installed inside their chassis, protected by armour tiles. Furthermore, they could use forcefield shields as well. Thus, protecting their weapons and ammunition like missile pods, which were prone to exploding.

The main cannon was supported by a powerful scanner, which was extremely accurate. They shared information among themselves to further increase their accuracy. The cannon itself had enough firepower to easily blow apart monsters found around Zegelt city.

Those tanks were working together to shoot Akira down. If Akira got too far, they would use their main cannons. However, if Akira got too close, he would have to face the countless mini-missiles.

Akira was fending off their assault, evading some that he could while shooting or cutting down those that he could not.

The warhead flew straight and went for his bike. It caused powerful turbulence in the air. The laser cannon released pillars of light that heated the sky. In the face of such an intense assault, Akira moved with precision, as if he could predict their trajectories while slowly closing in.

The bullets released from their machine guns spread out to create a wall of bullets instead of focusing on one point. Meanwhile, each mini-missiles launched from their missile pods drew a long parabolic arc. Each angle was unique to each missile, as they went after Akira.

Akira shot some of them down to drill a way out from that assault. As bullets clashed with another from their barrage, due to how dense the bullet wall was, they ricocheted and triggered chain reactions. It threw them off-target. Missiles were shot and detonated before they made contact, creating clouds of dust and smoke. This reduced the accuracy of the information-gathering devices, which in turn caused the other missiles to veer off their original trajectories. Akira used these clouds to hide his presence as he further closed the distance.

That was when the main cannons once again shot at him. Warheads, shells, and lasers were released at a distance, making it impossible to evade.

Akira then used his silvery blade to cut open a way forward. Using the high-capacity energy tank of the bike, the liquid metal that formed the blade part was hardened and sharpened using forcefield armour, increasing its range, and cutting power temporarily as he swung it with all his might.

As the warhead hit the silvery blade, it was cut into two and veered off its original trajectory. At the same time, laser beams also got deflected, causing all of them to miss their target. Using that opening made from that slash, Akira charged forward, toward the enemy tanks.

He kept shooting at the enemy tanks while closing in. As he passed beside one tank, he swung his blade again. The blade, made of an extreme concentration of energy, slowly disintegrated as it glowed with anti-forcefield effect applied to it. The blade pierced into the tank’s forcefield armour and sliced its body cleanly into two. It was a powerful attack designed to be only used once.

Even so, normally, it did not have enough power to cleanly slice through the tank Akira was facing. After all, it was a tank that was normally used to hunt monsters further to the east. It was a given that it was abnormally robust. Its control device even automatically adjusted the energy distribution of its forcefield armour. It was able to reactively focus its defensive forcefield to certain locations depending on the incoming attacks. This ability boosted the tank's overall defence even further.

However, Alpha utilized that function to execute that attack. Right before Akira swung his blade, he released a barrage of bullets to different locations. This caused the forcefield armour to focus on those locations. Akira then aimed his swing precisely at the locations where its forcefield armour was weakened.

The area of weakened forcefield armour was invisible to the naked eyes. Additionally, it was only there for a split second. Furthermore, there were armoured tiles underneath which also had their own layer of forcefield armour. Even so, with an opening as small as a bullet, Akira managed to jam in his blade and swing.

With that masterful slash, the tank was sliced cleanly into two. The energy conversion of the forcefield armour released a flash of light. Even the armour tiles were not spared. A moment later, the upper portion of the tank slid off and fell over. What was left from the lower half of the tank was the remains of its passengers, with their upper half missing.

Akira did not stop there. He quickly aimed his rifle at another tank together with Carol. Akira with his LEO multi-rifles while Carol, with her mobile laser cannon. Meanwhile, the bike's AF anti-material cannon released its shots at the same time as the other two.

To be more precise, Akira pulled the trigger a split second faster than the rest of the group. Akira's bullets reached its target first, causing the forcefield armour of the tank to once again focus on those impact locations. This caused another part of the tank to get weakened. With Alpha's help, the barrage was adjusted so that the weakened part was right where Carol was aiming at.

A moment later, Carol's laser and AF anti-material cannon's laser hit the tank. They pierced through the armour tile and forcefield armour, sending in a huge amount of raw energy into the tank, causing it to blow up.

Although they just shot down 2 tanks, they did not have the leeway to take a break. Akira immediately accelerated the bike toward their next target.

That was when Carol pushed her chest to Akira's back and placed her face close to his face.

"Akira, if it's only to escape the encirclement, shouldn't this be enough? Or are we going to continue?"

In the middle of battle, Akira did not have the leeway to be bothered either by the sensation on his back or by Carol's face. The only thing that was registered in his mind was that question.

Although they had already broken through one side of the encirclement, it still did not change the fact that they were highly outnumbered. It was not a bad decision to use this chance to escape while they still could. However, they were fighting pretty well. It could be said that they were on a roll. Thus, there was an option for them to continue this momentum and push to gain the upper hand.

As Akira was uncertain of which to choose, he then thought of something and asked Carol a question.

"Carol, do you want me to get away now while we still have the chance?"

Akira was the reason why Carol got involved in this battle. Therefore, if she wanted to escape, he was fine with it.

However, she replied with a bright smile and jovial tone.

"Hm? Nope. I was just suggesting. If you're forcing yourself to fight because you got a bit too emotional, it might be a good idea to withdraw. But if that is not the case and you decide to fight with a calm mind, then I don't mind continuing. I will help you go all the way until the end."

Akira's lips curved. He seemed happy at how Carol answered easily. Her answer implied that she did not mind staying on this deadly battlefield, where she could be killed anytime, for him. Therefore, he cheerfully replied.

“I see. In that case, help me out a bit more. I have no plans to go as far as to kill everyone here. But at the very least, I want to force them to withdraw. I’m sure some of them would conclude that this isn’t worth the danger. If we run away now, they might get motivated instead.”

“Roger that. Let’s get them to regret ever choosing to go after you.”

As they were smiling confidently at each other, Alpha suddenly interjected.

“Akira, before we do that, let’s resupply first. Your ammo and energy reserve are running low.”

“Already? Ah, but I did use them quite aggressively back there. Alright then.”

Before they approached any tanks, they always released a barrage to weaken its forcefield armour as much as possible. At the same time, the bike was continuously consuming its energy to maintain its balance while it was racing at such a high speed. It was also constantly expanding its forcefield armour with maximum hardness. Furthermore, the energy that was used to sharpen the blade as well.

It was no surprise that he was quickly going through his extended magazines and energy reserve. However, that was also only because he could not afford to be frugal in front of the opponents he was facing. If he could not get a chance to resupply, it was only a matter of time before he lost the fight.

“Carol, we’ll head back to the camping vehicle to resupply. Hold on.”

“It’s not like you’re planning to leave me behind there, right?”

Carol pouted as she said so. In reaction to that, Akira lightly smiled and joked.

“Well, if you are scared, I’m okay if you want to stay behind, though.”

“That’s not even funny.”

Once he heard her reply, Akira smiled bitterly as he exasperatedly said.

“It might be weird to hear this from me, but you’re having it rough too, huh?”

“Well, it’s not easy on me too, you know?”

While in the middle of that deadly battlefield, Akira and Carol raced through the wasteland on his bike in a good mood.

Shirou, who was driving the camping vehicle, was already outside the encirclement. He managed to do so not only because Akira attracted all their attention. It was also due to his own skills.

Although he was already outside the encirclement, it was not like he could simply run away from the premise. However, if he got too close, he would only get involved in that battle. Therefore, he was only driving around while keeping his distance from the encirclement. That was when Akira suddenly contacted him through telepathy.

“Shirou, we’re heading there to resupply, can you meet up with us?”

“Sure, but make sure to be careful. I’m not good at fighting. Incapable even. Although this camping vehicle is designed to be used out in the wasteland, it’s not well equipped enough to fight those guys. I will send the route to get here. Make sure to follow it. Also, you’re only coming here to resupply right? We are not running away? Are you sure about that?”

Personally speaking, Shirou did not want Akira to get killed. However, if he was allowed to be greedy, he hoped Akira would repel the Hunters that came after him, a 50 billion bounty target. It would show Akira’s fighting capability, which would help to accomplish his goal. Though, as someone who wants to employ Akira, if he decides to withdraw, Shirou was completely fine with that decision.

Akira replied with a rather jovial tone.

“If we run away now, they will get too confident, which will only turn into more trouble later, you know?”

“I see. Well, good luck.”

Shirou then sent Akira the route through telepathy and lightly smiled.

“So, although he’s not that good of an agent from Tsukisada Construction, he’s exceptional at fighting, huh? I guess this means I can place my hopes on him later.”

Even in this situation, judging from Akira’s reaction, it sounded like he was still not that hard-pressed. As Shirou thought as much, it seems like he still had a bit of good luck left. He cracked up a soft smile from his expectation of Akira.

While Akira was heading to meet up with the camping vehicle, the bombardment intensified. Since he was now moving away from the group, there was no fear of friendly fire anymore. Therefore, they stopped holding back and the bombardment grew even more intense.

However, Akira found something weird.

The explosive warheads from the bombardment threw dust and rubbles up into the air. The lasers coming from behind him blew wreckage and rubble that were in their way high up into the sky. As they were thrown above Akira and Carol, they started to obey gravity and fell back down. It was intense. To the point that it would be impossible for him to force his way through if it was not for the bike’s forcefield armour, that could be projected outside. That was just how intense the bombardment had become.

But unlike before, Akira did not make zig-zag movements or bother to shoot or slash the warheads. He found this rather worrying.

“Alpha. We’re not even trying to evade now, right? Did you do something?”

“I’m not doing anything, it was Shirou who picked this route, so he might be doing something.”

Akira turned his telepathy back to Shirou.

“Shirou. Is there any reason why you picked this route?”

“Yep. It’s dangerous, so make sure to keep strictly on the route I specified. I’m doing my best adjusting it.”

Gelgus’ team was using information from the whole squad to adjust the aiming of their tanks and powered suits. However, Shirou managed to hack into their information stream to send in fake information. This caused the aiming devices to register Akira’s position a bit away from his real position. Thanks to that, even in the middle of that intense bombardment, Akira did not get hit. This allowed him to just keep driving forward without any issues.

Naturally, if Shirou shifted the location data a bit more, there was no need for Akira to slip in between the explosions. However, Gelgus’ team would definitely notice that they were being hacked. By keeping the fake information feed to a bare minimum, they would simply believe that Akira was exceptional at evading their shots.

“Other than that, I’m also sending data that might cause friendly fire as well. I’m working quite hard to support you from here, you know? You better be thankful for it, yeah?”

“Sure, I owe you one.”

Akira only said so and approached the camping vehicle before jumping into it from the back door. At the same time, he pushed his time perception compression to its maximum as he finished resupplying as fast as he could.

Akira stopped his bike and reloaded new magazines and energy packs into his LEO multi-rifles. He ejected the bike’s energy tank and loaded a new one. After that, he quickly reloaded a new magazine and energy pack for his AF anti-material cannon. He did all of this at high speed. It was to the point where Carol, who was also doing the same, felt slow.

Shirou, who came to check up on them, did say something. However, due to the huge difference in their time perception, even telepathy did not work. Akira only asked Shirou to save it for later as he exchanged the liquid metal tank for his blade.

Although they were only resupplying, they were moving so fast inside the camping vehicle that it caused gusts of wind. Once they were done, they quickly jumped back on the bike and went out to continue the fight. The bike's wheel moved in reverse as it jumped out of the back door. It made a 180-degree turn and shot into the sky. Akira then reached for his rifle and immediately started shooting at the closest enemy.

With the invigorated firepower fresh from their resupply, it was enough to blow another tank, which had been prepared to hunt a 50 billion Aurum bounty target.

That was when Shirou's telepathy message finally reached Akira.

"Is it okay now? I found something when I was hacking through their information network. It seems like amongst them, there's one vehicle owned by the Lion Steel company. If this hunting party is led by someone from Lion Steel, then the rest might just disband and run away if you destroy that one vehicle. I'll leave it to you on how you want to do that. Just in case you're interested, I'll send you the data."

"Okay, thanks."

"And also, just one more thing. Did you do something to annoy those Hunters?"

"Well, I've been killing their friends during battle. So, it's only to be expected that they hold a grudge against me, no?"

"So basically, you have no particular guess, huh?"

"Yes, but why are you asking me that?"

“If it’s really just to hunt a 50 billion bounty target, they should have already retreated after suffering this many losses. But since they haven’t, I simply thought that they must have some other reason other than money. If I were to guess, it should be some kind of personal grudge.”

Akira frowned after hearing that. It seems like they had another reason for gathering this many people to attack him. Although it was nothing but Shirou’s guess, Akira still could not help but find it pretty annoying.

__*__*__*__

Gelgus was extremely frustrated by the situation, which was only getting worse with time.

If they were talking about the success or failure of the hunting party, even if they managed to take Akira down later, from their current losses, they had no choice but to recognize this hunting expedition as a failure. It was even doubtful whether the bounty prize was enough to recoup the loss of the destroyed tanks and power suits. The loss of men was already irreparable.

Normally, Gelgus had the choice of retreating before the situation got this bad. If his goal was purely the bounty, he would have ordered a retreat by now. After all, the ability to decide when to retreat in order to cut off losses was an important skill for Hunters, and Gelgus did not lack such a skill.

Even so, while he understood that he had gotten too obsessed with this operation. He turned to one of the reasons why he did not call for a retreat yet.

“Hey! Didn’t you say that his 50 billion Aurum bounty was only to make an example out of him!? Just what is this!?”

Those words were directed at Pamela and Latis, who were standing not too far from Gelgus. Even in the face of the pressure from an enraged high-ranking Hunter, they were still unfazed. Pamela calmly answered his question.

“It’s not only the 50 billion Aurum bounty. We also had him recognized as a monster. As we said before, it is enough to make a lesson out of him. Or am I mistaken?”

Gelgus annoyedly grunted and asked.

“Is Lion Steel in trouble with money? Or is it that your master only has that much for her allowance?”

This time, it was Latis who answered with the same calm demeanor as Pamela.

“If there’s anything else to add, it would be because Milady is rather obsessed in this conflict with that Hunter.”

“…Yeah yeah.”

Gelgus looked obviously irritated as he clicked his tongue.

The price and the strength of a bounty target did not always match up. If it was a bounty monster, there was still a level of correlation between the bounty reward and the strength of the bounty monster. After all, the size of the reward was proportional to how fast they wanted that monster to be taken down. It became a bounty monster since it was too powerful to be defeated through normal means.

However, that was not the same when the bounty target was a human. Things like grudge and intention caused the bounty prize to vary.

Because of that, Gelgus thought that Akira’s original bounty was about 30 billion Aurum. Or at most, 35 billion Aurum. He has estimated this difference because of those human factors. After all, Akira did try to kill someone from the founder family of the Lion Steel company. Therefore, it was to be given that a huge bounty was to be placed on his head.

However, Akira’s true strength was way above what Gelgus had expected. Though, that disparity was not bad enough to drive Gelgus into a corner. Thus, he still believed that Akira was fairly stronger than a simple 30 billion Aurum human bounty target. It was not impossible to kill him if Gelgus put in some more effort. That was the reason why he did not call for a retreat.

Thus, Gelgus decided to ask that question. To confirm if Akira actually had that much bounty on him because of his true strength. It was also his way of sarcastically asking if their master was not that important to the Lion Steel company. How come she did not increase the bounty prize for that Hunter. As a result, they did not fully deny that Akira had that price tag because of his skill.

Even so, Gelgus still decided not to withdraw. He estimated that even after all the losses. Even if he was risking more to lose by continuing, there was a good chance it would be worth the trouble.

Gelgus was not only offered the bounty prize. He was also offered a connection to the Lion Steel company. It was not a simple connection to a branch office. It was a connection to the main HQ. With Lion Steel representative, Alice, scheduled to come there soon, Gelgus hypothesized that this bounty hunt had something to do with it.

As a veteran Hunter, Gelgus had at least checked what was going on behind the scenes. Since information about Alice coming to Kugamayama city was kept a secret, only known to the inner circle of Lion Steel. Gelgus managed to at least find out that someone important from Lion Steel was scheduled to visit the area. Though, he did not know who it was.

A connection to someone important to a company slightly beneath the 5 biggest companies. There was no question that it was a priceless opportunity. Therefore, Gelgus could not afford to let this opportunity slip past him.

“…Hey. Let me ask you again. Your master, Chloe, was it again? She’ll really provide me with a connection to Lion Steel HQ if this operation goes well, right?”

Pamela smiled confidently and replied.

“There’s a good chance that is indeed the case. Or at least, that’s all I can tell you. Milady has the third ward branch under her. Even this vehicle is originally from the Lion Steel Third Ward Branch. So, you at least know how much we’re invested in this.”

“…I see, alright then.”

For Gelgus’ party, it was essential to form a connection with Alice even if they had to sacrifice something. It would definitely profit the team as a whole. However, only Gelgus’ team knew about it. Which meant, that the other teams might decide to retreat from battle if the situation got worse.

With that in mind, Gelgus made his decision.

“Takt, let’s change our approach. We’ll try to stop him even if we get some of our men under friendly fire. And then, we’ll kill him with long-range bombardment. Tell the other teams to keep firing and don’t worry about hitting allies.”

“Of course. Right away.”

“No, you take your men with the bombardment team.”

Takt frowned. He thought that his team would be responsible for stopping Akira’s movement.

“Gelgus-san, then who will try to stop him? The other team would not do that fearing they’d get shot by their own allies, you know?”

“I’ll do that alone.”

Takt could not hide his surprise. After all, Gelgus was saying that he would stop them alone. The two have been doing exceptionally well fighting against their whole team.

Near the large-sized wasteland vehicle, a large red powered suit with its equally large cannon was running on autopilot. It was continuously shooting at Akira.

That powered suit then stopped shooting and approached the vehicle. It was sprinting towards the back door. Just as it was running, Gelgus exited from the top of the vehicle and jumped down without any hesitation. Without any devices to aid him, Gelgus managed to land on the powered suit and got inside. This showed just how skilled he was as a veteran Hunter.

The power suit entered the vehicle. There, Gelgus placed its large cannon back inside the vehicle and picked up a blade as its replacement. He then finished charging its energy before jumping out of the vehicle.

Inside that powered suit, Gelgus had a rather solemn expression as he spoke to himself.

“I made the decision. If we can win this, then the decision is a correct one. Zelos, just you watch.”

Zelos was the captain of Gelgus’ team. Meanwhile, Gelgus was actually the vice-captain. The current leader was still Zelos, but due to the information leak by Babalod, he had temporarily lost his influence inside the team. Therefore, if Gelgus could show worthwhile achievement, he might be able to take over Zelos’ leadership position.

Of course, at first, Gelgus had no plan to take over the leader position. However, for some reason, they ended up having opposite opinions regarding the operation to hunt Akira. It was so serious that the team was split into two – the Gelgus faction and the Zelos faction.

The 50 billion Aurum bounty prize and a connection to Lion Steel HQ were definitely extremely beneficial for the team. It was the perfect opportunity to get both money and connection. Although they both agreed on the benefits, their conversation always broke down to the risks. No matter how hard Gelgus tried to convince Zelos, the latter always shook his head. Zelos gave his evaluation of Akira when he met him as his counterargument. This caused the team to completely break into two factions.

“Zelos, we are Hunters, you know? If we don’t have the guts to bet on this, then what’s left for us is to just rot and die. It’s stupid to get scared at this point.”

He locked on Akira’s position from his radar.

“I’ll kill you and prove to Zelos that I’m right!!”

The red powered suit flew. It had a gun that could decimate monsters near Kugamayama city in just one shot. Its muzzle spewed out a huge shell that tore through the air and straight toward its target.

“Die!”

In order not to let him or his friends fall out of grace as Hunters, Gelgus decided to take a step forward. A step toward death.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 277, Danger

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

During the battle, Akira noticed the sudden change in the enemy movement. He was a bit bewildered by it. The bombardment momentarily stopped and the enemies around him rapidly retreated.

After he broke through their encirclement, they now shifted to a fan formation, which was actively adapting to his moves. This also increased the effectiveness of their long-range bombardment.

Therefore, Akira was confused as to why they suddenly stopped their bombardment.

“Alpha. It’s not like they’re retreating, right?”

“Probably not. But if they’re changing to form a defensive formation, it might be a good idea for us to leave. There’s no need to continue fighting them when they have the advantages.”

“Hmmm, well, I think we’ve already done some damage to them anyway. Huh?”

In the first place, Akira was not planning to fight them until the last man. Even if the survivors regrouped and once again went after him, they would need some time before they could do so. If Akira could get his new equipment from Sakashita during that time, he could fight the next battle in a much better state. Therefore, he thought that it was a good idea to call it a day.

However, someone prevented Akira from doing so. A red powered suit suddenly came chasing after him.

“Unfortunately, it doesn’t seem like they’re planning to let you get away just yet.”

“Yeah. That does seem to be the case. Though, it seems like it’s coming alone.”

Akira found that to be strange. However, it did not stop him from shooting at the powered suit. Carol and Akira were both shooting back at it while evading its shots. Even with most of their shots hitting their marks, the powered suit did not seem to slow down at all. It kept closing in on them.

“…This guy is just too tough! Well, since it’s charging at me, alone, I guess that’s just how much faith it has in its defences, huh?”

“Akira, it seems like the others are going to resume the bombardment. So, be careful.”

“Sure… Wait… If they do that, won’t they hit that unit too…?”

From Akira’s position, the red powered suit’s position, and the shooting angle of the fan-shaped formation. It was impossible to hit him without hitting the red powered suit. That was why Akira did not expect them to continue their bombardment. He could not help but frown

Even after receiving Alpha’s warning, he still showed surprise once the bombardment did resume.

The warheads were shot in parabolic trajectories; travelling high up before falling down. Meanwhile, laser beams that could only go in a straight line were shot from the sides. Instead of aiming properly at him, they were targeting the general area around him.

Akira shot, evaded, and sliced at them to defend himself.

“They really opened fire! Alpha! What about that red powered suit?”

The red powered suit was covered in smoke. However, the smoke was not produced by it. They came from the shells and warheads that hit it. The powered suit was unscathed as it still charged toward Akira. It was as if it wanted to show how the bombardment had no effect on it.

“It did get hit but it is still up and running. It seems like it temporarily raised its forcefield armour to the limit before the bombardment hit it.”

“I see. So, it’s exchanging information with the rest of the group, huh!?”

“Yup. So, be careful. This means that the powered suit has resolved itself to take some shots if it is to kill you. Judging from how it is moving, I bet it’s trying to keep you in place. Pin you down with a close-range fight and then take you down using the bombardment from the rest of the team.”

The red powered suit that kept Akira inside its effective shooting range started shooting more accurately at him. As if to confirm Alpha’s guess, those shots were obviously meant to stop him from maneuvering around instead of killing him.

“I see! So, he’s prepared to take some damage himself, huh!? Alpha! Give me your full support!”

“Leave it to me! But, this will place your body under immense stress. So, make sure that you’re ready.”

Against Alpha’s smile of challenge, Akira smiled in excitement, firing up his spirit.

“But of course! That part is my responsibility, after all!”

At the same time he gave his reply, the bikes suddenly made a sharp turn. It charged right toward the red powered suit. The closer they got, the more hits the red powered suit would have to take. It was between Akira and Carol evading the bombardment and the red powered suit taking it with its superb defence. It was a battle of attrition between them. Just which one of them would be crushed under the storm of warhead first?

Carol was watching closely from his back. It was an abnormal scene where a full-sized powered suit was duking out intensely with someone on a bike. They were exchanging bullets and slashes, pushing and pulling. But instead of feeling fear, all she felt was exhilaration.

[I always thought that he was extremely strong… But I never thought he was this strong…!!]

The area that was enveloped in smoke was muddled further with the dust particles that were thrown around during their intense exchange. The red powered suit kept shooting as the continuous explosions that enveloped the area kept even the rocks and rubbles from reaching the ground. The powered suit's gun was spewing out large bullets that tore the air as they sought after their target.

Akira dexterously controlled his bike to evade the bullets. With its ability to ride freely in the air, he made erratic moves. Sharp turns, sudden stops, quick acceleration, and vertical climb. All these to prevent the red powered suit from getting a good hit. On top of that, Akira also kept its rifle in check by shooting at it from time to time to throw off its aim. He would also shoot at the unavoidable bullets and redirect them away from him.

To nullify Akira's technique, the red powered suit used its blade to attack. Its powerful generator fed the blade, encasing it in a layer of energy that could release sharp energy waves. Once swung, the blade released a wave of energy that dissipated in all directions. It seemed able to cut everything in its way. Even smoke and dust from their surroundings got separated into two from its slash.

In the face of this strike, Akira extended out his liquid metal blade. He then swung at the energy wave. It was impossible to slice nor redirect the energy wave as it did not have substance. However, by pumping a huge amount of energy into his blade and increasing the might of its forcefield armour to its limit, it could make contact with the energy wave. Dampening it, causing it to break down and safely disperse into the air.

Moreover, with Alpha's help, the liquid metal was adjusted to turn into the most effective shape. They managed to almost completely neutralize the energy wave, which could have sliced Akira and his bike cleanly into two. The remaining energy that did not get dispersed, hit a few of the bike's armour tiles and sliced them into two.

While Akira was busy defending from the attacks, Carol was focused on the offensive. She kept using her laser cannon. While trying to not get thrown off by the erratic moves of the bike, she somehow found an opening. The moment she fired; the AF anti-material rifle also released a shot aimed at the exact same place. The anti-material bullet was siphoning energy from its surroundings, increasing its firepower. When it found itself surrounded by high-energy laser beams, it increased the bullet's firepower manyfold.

The shots travelled towards the powered suit, which was also moving around as fast as the bike. However, before they struck the red powered suit, they got blocked by its forcefield armour. The red powered suit had temporarily hardened its forcefield armour to its utmost limit. It spared no expense, using the energy that it had charged up from the mobile HQ. Moreover, it had used information from its scanner to predict the trajectory of the attacks and only focused its defence on the impact areas.

As the battle continued, locked in an impasse, they still managed to throw attacks at one another even when under the intense bombardment. This demonstrated their skill as a 50 billion bounty Hunter and a Hunter who was after him.

Gelgus once again found himself surprised by how powerful Akira was. He quickly felt that something was not right.

[To think that he's this powerful! That 50 billion Aurum bounty from Lion Steel is really based on his real strength, huh!? No, this is already way past the 50 billion bounty mark. What the heck is with those moves? I'm fighting this guy with information support sent from the other units around here, you know? I should be able to hit him with my weapons easily. How the heck is he managing to avoid everything I throw at him?]

Having been locked in a melee fight with him while avoiding the non-ceasing bombardment. It seemed impossible to survive no matter how much Gelgus thought about it. He could not help but get suspicious that there was something more going on behind the scene.

“Wait… don’t tell me…”

As he was thinking of the impossible, he tried to clear his doubt. He compared the data that his information-gathering device acquired with the information that he was receiving from the other units. His fear was proven to be true, there was a small difference in the data used to refine his aim.

Gelgus was frozen for a split second. However, he quickly returned to himself and opened a line toward the whole hunting party.

“Everyone! Cut off the information sharing system! We’re being hacked! The data has been tampered!”

The information that Babalod leaked, also included the security code to connect to the information-sharing system. Naturally, once they knew of the leak, they had changed the access code to a new one. However, the fact that it had leaked once, meant that other things might have been leaked too. Gelgus was shocked that his suspicion was right.

He did not want to think further. There might be someone who was betraying the group from the inside. Otherwise, it might have leaked from another route. Nonetheless, they could not afford to do a witch hunt right now. With his mind muddled with many thoughts, Gelgus decided to cleanse everything up and focus on one thing for now.

With the information-sharing system hacked, he could no longer use the data from the sharing system. Without it, his accuracy would greatly fall. It was not like the data got completely forged. It was only slightly changed to throw off his aim. Enough not to hit Akira. Gelgus then placed another assumption on top of his train of thought.

[It is not like the information-sharing system has been fully rewritten. There was only a slight information tampering. There's a good chance that it's being done in real-time. Although the tampered information is in regards to our target, it cannot be done by him. After all, the target shouldn't be able to do that while fighting me. If it is being sent from a far-off location, it should not be fast enough to throw off my aim. So, whoever is helping him should be somewhere nearby…]

Gelgus kept his optimistic guesses and assumptions. That no one leaked the access code from the inside. As he kept searching the area, he eventually found one place. There was a nearby camping vehicle where Shirou was. Considering the amount of information being tampered, it should have required a large computing device. It would make sense if such a machine was housed inside that camping vehicle.

Gelgus immediately moved away from Akira and raced toward the camping vehicle at full speed.

Shirou, who was tapping into Gelgus information sharing system, panicked.

"Yikes! They noticed me!"

The red powered suit and the team now had their sights on a new target. Cannons were now pointed towards the camping vehicle. Meanwhile, the red powered suit was racing towards it. Shirou's panic increased twofold. The bombardment now continued towards him but was no longer using the information-sharing system. Therefore, it was not that accurate. However, if he could feed them false information to throw off their aim, he could guarantee none would hit him. Now, even if the chance was small due to their low accuracy, some of their warheads could hit him.

To prepare in case Akira needed to return back again to resupply, Shirou kept rather close. But, now that he got discovered, he quickly turned the camping vehicle the other way and raced away from this place as fast as he could.

“Akira! They noticed the hacking and they’re aiming for me right now! Do something!”

“Just try to get away! I will take care of the red powered suit!”

“How about the bombardment?!”

“Run like your life depends on it.”

“Dammit! Alright!”

Shirou spat out and put his full weight on the gas pedal. He had a grave expression as explosives and warheads rained down around him.

With Gelgus prioritizing the destruction of the camping vehicle, his situation with Akira had been reversed.

The red powered suit was trying to get to the camping vehicle while Akira and Carol were trying to stop him. Although they were now on the offensive, they were also the ones pushed into a corner. This time, they had to destroy the red powered suit before it could destroy the camping vehicle.

“Dammit! Alpha! This is bad! That powered suit just won’t go down!”

“Stop complaining and keep shooting. It must strain its forcefield armour to withstand our assault, which is quickly depleting its energy reserve. For now, we can only pin our hopes on exhausting its energy.”

“I know!”

While escaping, Shirou was also firing at the red powered suit using the camping vehicle’s machine gun. Unfortunately, it barely had any effect. Or at least, it was not able to push the red powered suit back. The red powered suit kept charging forward, taking all the incoming bullets. It did not even make an effort to evade. It was closing its distance to the camping vehicle with the shortest route possible.

Eventually, the camping vehicle entered the red powered suit shooting range. The red powered suit started spewing out bullets, which were abnormally large when compared to normal bullets. Some managed to hit the camping vehicle, peeling off some of its armour tiles and shaking it violently. Shirou's desperate voice reached Akria through telepathy.

"Akira! It's coming closer! Closer! It has even started shooting at me! I'm also being bombarded! Weren't you going to take care of that!? If they manage to get the camping vehicle, you'll have no place to sleep in the middle of the wasteland, you know!? Are you sure you're fine with that?!"

"I'm working on it right now! Just wait for a bit!"

In reality, Akira was indeed working on it. However, if he focused too much on trying to shoot the red powered suit down, it would create an opening where he might get killed instead. Compared to the red powered suit, Akira's bike defences were negligible. A single clean hit at the bike would immediately spell his death. Meanwhile, even if he used his most potent shot, it would not be able to immediately take down the red powered suit.

Fortunately, the camping vehicle was prepared by Carol. It was fitted to be proficient at escaping. It was protected by resilient armour tiles. Thus, was still able to withstand the assault. It was still fine even after getting hit by the bombardment and a few of the red powered suit's shots. Basically, it could maintain this situation for some time. However, the closer the red powered suit was, the more damaging its hit would be. The melee weapon that it had was way stronger than its gun. One hit was enough to destroy the camping vehicle.

As the pursuing red powered suit got close enough to the camping vehicle. It also started taking hits from the bombardment. It reached for its blade instead of its gun and attacked the camping vehicle. It was a clear indication that Akira was running out of time. It swung and the released energy wave sliced the ground apart, all the way past the camping vehicle. However, it did not manage to hit its target.

That miss was not intentional. The moment the red powered suit swung its blade, Akira and Carol shot its arm. This slightly shifted the direction of its swing.

Nonetheless, even after being spared, Akira was still getting more anxious. The powered suit was already close enough to release such a powerful attack at the camping vehicle.

“Alpha! This is getting really bad! Can you do something about it?”

Alpha frowned.

“It can’t be helped then. This will get a bit dangerous but let’s take that powered suit down right away.”

Akira was surprised by her reply, he then pouted and asked.

“If you knew of a way to take it down, couldn’t we have done it sooner?”

However, Alpha replied with a grave expression.

“That’s just how dangerous it is, are you sure you want to do this?”

All the intense exchange of close-range blows under continuous bombardment up until now was still on the safe side according to Alpha. By that standard, the next move would certainly be extremely dangerous. Akira understood this. Thus, he pulled himself together and firmly replied.

“Let’s do this.”

Now that he had decided on it, Alpha had no reason to refuse. She smugly smiled and said.

“I see. In that case, let’s get this over with.”

Alpha then shared her plan with Akira, who then informed Shirou through telepathy about what he needed to do. However, Shirou could not begin to comprehend what Akira was trying to do.

“Is there any reason why I should do something like that?”

“Just do it. If you don’t, that camping vehicle will be sliced into two by the next attack. I somehow managed to make it miss the last time. But, I have no guarantee I can do it again for the next one.”

As Shirou glanced at the energy blade through the camera, he decided to shut up and do as he was told to.

“Alright, when should I do it?”

“I can go anytime, just hurry up.”

“You owe me one for this, you hear me?”

“Just do it already.”

Akira shut off the telepathic connection and was honestly impressed by how Shirou still had the guts to bring that up in his current situation. Though, that thought deviated from the main task at hand so Akira quickly shook it off his mind. He informed Carol of what she should do next. In contrast to Shirou, Carol lightly smiled and asked.

“Are you sure you want to do that? Well, I guess it’s pointless to ask you that question, huh? But do we really have no other choice? If you’re worried about destroying the camping vehicle, I can buy a new one later. So, you don’t have to worry about that, you know?”

“No. I’m worried about it, I don’t want to sleep out in the open wasteland.”

Carol lightly giggled. It seemed that for Akira, that was what most mattered to him. For the sake of it, he was willing to do something extremely dangerous.

“Okay. Good luck then.”

“You too.”

Akira made his resolve and readied himself.

While chasing the camping vehicle, Gelgus noticed a change in Akria’s movement. He was certain that his guess was correct. Although some parts of his guess were not wrong, it did not change the fact that the hacking would stop if he killed Shirou, who was inside that camping vehicle. In other words, Akira was in a hard-pressed situation.

Although the bombardment continued to hit the red powered suit, he continued to solely focus on catching up to the camping vehicle. He could opt for his rifle. However, the camping vehicle was well armoured, and his rifle would not be enough to destroy it. Thus, his choice was to come close. Enough to use his blade to cut it apart. Since his first swing got interrupted and was made to miss, he swore that the next one would land. He quickly gathered energy into his blade to prepare for the next strike.

Suddenly, the back door of the camping vehicle opened up and an enormous amount of explosives rolled out from it. Each one of them blew up, making a trail of black smog.

Gelgus quickly realized that it was jamming smoke. However, what bothered him the most was why his opponent did that.

[Raising that much smoke out in the open like this is pointless. It will get dispersed in no time. In this high-speed pursuit, we will pass through the jamming area in no time. What exactly are they planning?]

It puzzled him, this was something that someone helping a 50 billion bounty target did. Therefore, there must be some kind of meaning behind it. He judged Shirou's action as something planned; not an action taken out of desperation. Naturally, his thoughts led him to suspect they were staging an attack. [It must be the moment I enter the jamming smoke.]

The powered suit's forcefield armour was an adaptive type, which adjusted its strength automatically depending on the incoming attack. Naturally, it would be meaningless if the adjustment came late and only activated once the attack had already hit it. Thus, it was essential for its information-gathering device to predict where the incoming attack would land, to adjust in time.

Gelgus was certain that they were planning to nullify his adaptive forcefield armour. They were trying to weaken his information-gathering device using the jamming smoke and break through the powered suit's defences.

Therefore, he prepared the powered suit. Before entering the jamming smoke, he manually set the forcefield armour to output its maximum.

By doing so, it would consume a huge amount of energy. However, it would also strengthen the forcefield armour to the point where it would prevent its information-gathering device from scanning its surroundings. This further worsened his accuracy. Gelgus understood the risks but still decided on doing so. After all, he believed it to only be temporary and could set it back once he got out of the jamming smoke.

Right before the powered suit entered the jamming smoke, Akira swung his blade with one hand. He did so while still on top of his flying bike. Gelgus had already anticipated this attack. Though, he was slightly surprised by the fact that Akira did not use his rifle. Nonetheless, it was still a reasonable move and was still within his expectations. After all, there was an anti-forcefield armour function on the blade. Therefore, Gelgus was still able to react calmly to Akira's attack.

Both Akira's bike and the red powered suit plunged into the jamming smoke. The powered suit reacted against Akira's slash with a slash of its own. Two blades, extremely different in size, passed each other.

The large blade just went and sliced through the air. While on the other hand, the small blade got deflected by a powerful forcefield armour. The bike was the first one to get out of the jamming smoke, while the red powered suit followed behind it a moment later.

With the effect of the jamming smoke gone, the information-gathering devices were back in action. This allowed the powered suit's adaptive forcefield armour to once again be able to function.

Believing that his powered suit was able to withstand Akira's attack, Gelgus aimed his rifle at the bike. But for some reason, there was only Carol on top of it, aiming back at the powered suit.

Gelgus raised his eyebrows. Akira was nowhere to be found.

[He's gone! Where is he!? Did he fall off?! The sensor!]

Gelgus quickly used his information-gathering device to scan the surrounding area. However, he could not find Akira. The unexpected turn of events shocked and greatly confused him.

Right at the next moment, a barrage struck the powered suit. The forcefield armour automatically adjusted its power to the area where the barrage landed. This caused the power output towards the remaining locations to wane. It created a weak spot in the forcefield armour right opposite of where the barrage hit. Unfortunately, that was the exact position where Carol was aiming her energy cannon.

[Dammit!]

Gelgus quickly tried to reroute the energy to the weakened side of the forcefield armour. Unfortunately, it was already too late. Carol's laser combined with AF anti-material cannon pierced the weakened forcefield armour. It went past and obliterated the front portion of the powered suit.

When Akira and the red powered suit exchanged slashes, Akira jumped off the bike and activated his camouflaging defensive coat. The main goal of the jamming smoke was to hide him when he did that. Even with Alpha's help, there was a high chance the red powered suit would still be able to notice him when he got that close. Thus, Akira only dared to do this under the veil of the jamming smoke.

After Akira jumped off, he used the soles of his augmented suit to stick onto the red powered suit. Alpha then adjusted the output and control of the camouflaging coat masking it to the powered suit's forcefield amour. This completely erased his presence.

Akira then crawled to the back of the powered suit and emptied the magazine in his rifle. It was to reduce the defence on the front as much as possible. Even with a barrage of fully charged C bullets, released point-blank, it was not enough to leave a scratch on its armour tiles. Rather, it did not even manage to break through its forcefield armour. Though, Akira's barrage at least managed to force all its energy to focus on its back.

That was exactly when Carol made the best use of that opening.

“Akira! Hurry up!”

“I know!”

If Akira missed this opportunity, he would have to pay it with his life. Therefore, in order to take full advantage of this small opening, he compressed his time perception to the limit.

The powered suit was actively moving at a high speed. Therefore, clinging on to it was like bracing against a storm. Running across its surface was equivalent to trying to run up a mountain while enduring a natural disaster.

That was why Akira relied heavily on the might of his augmented suit. Although he felt like he was walking slowly, in reality, he was running extremely quickly. Every single move was impeded by the wind, preventing him from moving forward. But even so, he still forced his way through.

Thanks to that, he was able to get to the opposite side of the powered suit in less than a second. He then shoved his LEO multi-rifle into the opening that was created from Carol’s attack and held down the trigger.

The number of bullets that he released was enough to create a wall of them. Although there was a bit of space between the muzzle and the powered suit, he had basically shoved everything that was left in his gun inside the powered suit.

In the midst of his attack, the forcefield armour had returned back. However, due to the damage to the forcefield device, the power output got greatly reduced. Furthermore, Akira’s point-blank barrage damaged the forcefield device even more. The randomly flashing light from the barrage showed just how badly damaged it was.

The bullets drilled through the inner part of the powered suit. But even so, it was still not enough to kill Gelgus. The red powered suit swung its hand, trying to get Akira off of it.

Akira dexterously evaded its hand and the only way to do that was to get away from the powered suit. Thus, he leapt into the air. This meant that he would not be able to evade its next attack. Although he could create a forcefield platform under his sole to do another jump, it would not be fast enough to get away if the powered suit tried to attack him again.

But the next attack did not come. Carol, with the help of the AF anti-material cannon, shot again. It was at the same spot as before. After Akira's point-blank barrage, that location was no longer protected by forcefield armour. With that much energy focused at that one point, it pierced, fried, melted, and wrecked the red powered suit.

Before the unit broke down, Gelgus smiled wryly, accepting his defeat. As a high-ranking Hunter, he was able to keep up with everything that just happened. He knew well what Akira did that led to this conclusion.

[So… he was sticking on me when we were in the jamming smoke, huh!? What a crazy bastard…!]

With the generator completely destroyed, Gelgus was no longer able to control the powered suit. He was at the mercy of inertia as he flew straight and crashed. Without the forcefield armour to protect the suit, impact crushed the powered suit.

[To think that he's this powerful… Zelos was right, huh…]

Gelgus accepted his mistake and mocked himself. He realised that it was too foolish to disagree with Zelos' decision. In actuality, it was a hard decision for Zelos as well. In terms of the ability to make decisions, both of them were almost on the same level.

The only thing that caused them to end up making different decisions, was the fact that one of them had met Akira beforehand and witnessed his might.

[Good grief… Those damn bastards from Lion Steel… They should have put more money on that bounty… 50 billion Aurum is far from… good… enough…]

The explosion from the inside of the powered suit had already burnt half of his body. The crash quickened the half-dying Gelgus to reach his end. At the end of his life, he smiled and uttered a complaint before taking his final breath.

Carol accelerated the bike upwards to catch the falling Akira. She grabbed Akira from the front and tightly held him, making sure that he would not fall off.

“Akira! That was amazing! We did it!”

“Yeah, somehow.”

“You don’t look that excited after defeating a powered suit without using one ourselves!”

“This is not my first time after all.”

“Just how many times have you done this then!? Are you sure you’re alright in the head?!”

“…I will take that as a compliment.”

“I did mean it as a compliment!”

Unlike Carol, who was thrilled after defeating such a big and strong opponent, all that Akira gave was a bitter smile. That was when Shirou’s sudden telepathic message reached him.

“Akira! Give me a break already! We’re retreating this instant, right!?”

“Yeah, we’re leaving now.”

“Alright! Let’s go! Full speed away from here!”

Akira and Carol caught up with the camping vehicle on the bike and parked it on the rooftop. They then quickly shifted their focus to shooting down the ongoing bombardment. After some time, the bombardment finally stopped.

Akira sighed.

“…They’ve stopped. I guess they have given up on us, huh? Man, that was tiring…”

“Let’s take a good rest inside. We protected the camping vehicle for that, right?”

“Yeah.”

Akira smiled at her and turned around to head into the camping vehicle.

But Alpha suddenly shouted at him.

“Akira! Watch out!”

Akira, who had already relaxed, quickly tensed up. Everything around him immediately came to a halt due to his time perception compression. He directed all his senses, including the extrasensory sense that he had obtained for being an old-world connector, to all directions, steeling himself for an attack.

“Alpha! What’s wrong?!”

“To your right!”

Akira quickly reached for the LEO multi-rifle that he did not fix on the bike’s arm and looked to the right. He scanned around but there was nothing at all. It was either that the enemy was too far away to be seen with the naked eye or someone who was hiding using an extremely advanced camouflaging device.

Suddenly, someone appeared out of nowhere from where Akira felt a slight disturbance from. Alpha quickly focused Akira’s information-gathering device to check that particular location and displayed the result in Akira’s enhanced vision.

However, everything was already too late. Right before Akira was able to align the muzzle towards his target, the opponent quickly closed the distance between them. The enemy released a powerful punch, launching Akira off from the top of the vehicle like a rag doll. He landed hard on the ground, enough to create a crater. It was so powerful that Akira's augmented suit was not able to neutralize the impact.

It all happened in a blink of an eye. Akira was not able to react at all. Of course, Alpha did try to control his augmented suit, but neither attempts to block nor evade made it on time.

Right after Akira crashed, the opponent did not grant him any opportunity to act as a rifle was immediately pointed at his head.

"Nice to meet you. I am Yanagisawa from Kugamayama City Management. Can I have a bit of your time?"

Akira was on the ground with a rifle pointed toward his forehead. His stern gaze was directed at the person in front of him, Yanagisawa, a man who was smiling with his usual flippant attitude at Akira.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 278, Humane Treatment

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Right after Yanagisawa knocked Akira overboard, Hammerz suddenly appeared in front of the running camping vehicle. He simply put his hand forward and lifted it up, forcing it to a complete halt. With his superhuman strength, he slowly placed it back on the ground, but sideways.

When he had suddenly stopped the camping vehicle, Carol was thrown off due to the inertia. Fortunately, she was able to land safely and quickly fired her laser cannon at Hammerz.

Hammerz immediately deflected it with his arm. Carol froze from shock and did not have time to react. Hammerz then suddenly appeared in front of her and grabbed her by her face.

“You’ll die the next time you do that.”

She was glaring at him, even when her eyes were filled with amazement and fear.

“…What do you mean? You’re not here for our lives?”

“No, I am from Sakashita Heavy Industry. And the other one is from Kugamayama city. We are here for something different. Not for the bounty. So, I’ll warn you not to do anything unnecessary. You don’t want to die, right? And you don’t want to get others killed, right?”

Hammerz then released Carol. He turned and walked toward the camping vehicle.

Carol lowered her rifle. She could do nothing but stand and watch. Although Hammerz was showing his back to her, she knew that he could kill her anytime he wanted.

Meanwhile, on the other side, Yanagisawa was smiling politely at Akira with his rifle still pointed at that youth.

“Shirou-kun, you know this name, right? I’m actually looking for this guy, can you tell me where he is?”

“No.”

Akira replied instantly, rejecting him. Beside Akira, was Alpha, who was completely flustered. However, Yanagisawa could not see her.

Yanagisawa put more force on his rifle. He started to smile intimidatingly at Akira. If he had been just another normal Hunter, Akira would have been scared to death by now. He would have already leaked Shirou’s location.

However, Akira was completely unfrazzled. As a matter of fact, he was glaring straight at Yanagisawa. His death stare was desperately looking for an opportunity to turn the table. To find a chance to retaliate against Yanagisawa.

Seeing that, Yanagisawa clicked his tongue and thought.

[What a pain. Well, I guess that’s just the kind of person who would pick a fight with Lion Steel. He even became a bounty target, huh…]

If he was planning to throw away his life, there would have been a trace of resignation in Akira’s glare. If he was looking for an opening, he would have not made a flat-out rejection. Instead, he would have tried to buy some time. However, Akira did not do anything like that. Basically, Akira did not try to compromise. He showed no concern for his own life. There was not even a single shred of regret. Yanagisawa could tell just how difficult it was to extract information from such a person.

Yanagisawa could just easily kill him but that would mean not getting any information. This was the only reason Akira was still alive.

Yanagisawa lightly chuckled and spoke, as if to scold a selfish kid.

"…Let's do this instead then. If you promise not to try anything after I lower my rifle, I will lower my rifle. So?"

Akira did not reply. He simply glared at Yanagisawa in silence.

Yanagisawa immediately stopped smiling. He was gazing coldly at Akira. It was as if he was not looking at a human but an animal.

"If you can't do that, then I will just kill you this instant. Discussion, understanding each other, and negotiations. These are all important aspects of being a human since they connect people. If you can't at least do that, I have no other choice but to treat you as a monster. After all, there's no understanding between humans and monsters."

It was not a threat to murder him if he did not reply. Instead, it was a threat to kill him if he was not willing to behave like a human. It was not so much the threat by the meaning behind it that finally moved Akira. If he asked himself, 'do I want to be treated like a human', then, as expected, Akira had only one answer.

"…Fine."

Yanagisawa's smile returned and he finally lowered his rifle. He then offered Akira a hand.

Akira did not even bother to reach for that hand. He pushed himself back up. He took out his medicine and gulped down a huge dose of it.

Yanagisawa was only watching him with a wry smile. Akira then sighed and asked.

“…So then, what is it with you? You’re not here to kill me, huh?”

Yanagisawa awkwardly laughed.

“No no no, it’s not at all. Like I said before, I just want to ask you some questions. So, Shirou-kun, you know him, right?”

“Yeah.”

“It would be great if you can tell me where he is…”

“No.”

Yanagisawa laughed. Akira sulked. Meanwhile, Alpha was still as flustered as before.

“There’s no need to be that annoyed, you know? I’m sorry for being a bit violent there. But like, you know, you’re a bounty target now. If I don’t do that, I don’t think you would even listen to what I have to say, right?”

“Not my problem. And also, just because I know him, that doesn’t mean I also know where he is.”

“But you did meet him recently, right?”

“Yeah, back then during the intercity escort mission.”

“Not that one, you must have met him on another occasion, no?”

“Yeah, back in Mihazono ruin. That incident was really troublesome.”

“…No no no, there must be more, no?”

“This isn’t a negotiation if I’m just answering all your questions. I’ve answered 3 of your questions, I’ve repaid what I owe since you lowered your rifle. Now leave.”

“Eeeehhh!?”

Yanagisawa pouted with his usual flippant attitude. Akira looked at him with contempt.

“Don’t give me that. In the first place, it is Kugamayama city that declared me to be a monster. If you’re working for them, I have no reason to help you. Like hell with treating me like a monster. You guys already recognize me formally as a monster. It’s all your fault that I have to spend my days out here in the middle of the wasteland like this.”

“Whoah, you really hit where it hurts. But in reality, I have nothing to do with that though.”

“Again, not my problem. So, just leave.”

Seeing that Akira did not show any willingness to negotiate, Yanagisawa playfully shook his head and came up with a suggestion.

“Alright. In that case, I will take back your monster designation. How about that?”

Akira could not hide his surprise. He raised his eyebrows and looked straight at Yanagisawa.

Yanagisawa realized he finally found something that interested Akira once he saw his reaction. However, Akira’s eyes were quickly filled with doubt.

“Can you even do that?”

“Of course. As a matter of fact, although I look like this, I’m a high-ranking officer in City Management. Though, it should be a given that Hunters of your calibre already know of me. I am Yanagisawa, the Yanagisawa, you know!?”

Yanagisawa said so and made some boisterous poses while pointing at himself.

Akira felt like he had heard that name before as he hummed and searched through his memory. Finally, that name came up.

“Yanagisawa, huh… Ah! So, you’re the guy that Kibayashi was talking about! He said something like no one in Kugamayama city can go against you or something like that…”

“Yep! That’s me! Do you believe me now? That I can cancel your monster designation?”

Akira was convinced that Yanagisawa was indeed able to do something like that. But for some reason, he still did not want to say anything.

“In that case, you can come back to me once you have done that.”

“What? Now is not ok?”

“Yeah.”

Yanagisawa secretly sighed inside his heart while silently scolding Akira, who was as troublesome as he had expected. Although he was certain that he could convince Akira if he had enough time, unfortunately, he did not have the luxury of time at the moment. He needed information about Shirou’s whereabouts, and he needed it, fast.

The more time he wasted, the further Shirou would get away from him. Fortunately, he still had a good chance to find Shirou right now. It was true that he only knew of the general location where Shirou might be, fortunately, he had the power to completely search the area.

Therefore, Yanagisawa showed an attitude as if he was backing down.

“How about this then? You basically don’t like to live out here in the wasteland. That’s because you can’t go back to the city, right? Although I can’t cancel your monster designation right away, I can at least let you get into the slums of the city right now. You have a gang down in the slums that you’re supporting, right? You can sleep there for now. So, what do you think?”

“…Wait a second.”

Akira evaluated his options before finally pulling out his information terminal and calling Inabe.

“Akira, huh? I’m glad to see you’re okay. But if you call me from a public line like this, people will be able to track your location. It might even leak the contents of this conversation. Call me again through the encrypted line.”

“Nah, that is not necessary. I just have a small question that I want to ask you.”

Inabe’s interest was piqued, Akira then explained what was going on to Inabe. As expected, even Inabe could not hide his surprise.

“…I don’t really fully understand what is going on over there. Especially if you only explain this little. But it’s true that Yanagisawa can do that. Personally speaking, I hope you would accept his offer, I will tell you why.”

Even if it was someone as powerful as Akira, if someone with monster designation entered the city, the defence squad would have no other choice but to remove them from the premise. This was one thing that even Yanagisawa could not stop. However, if it was only until somewhere close to the city, he could do that. Technically speaking, the slums were located outside of the inner wall and City Management also treated it the same as the wasteland.

Kugamayama city only considered a limited area under the inner wall as a part of the city. As for the lower district, City Management worked together and formed contracts with various security contractors to maintain the security in this area. Therefore, for the sake of convenience, the city treated this area as a part of the city. The reason why City Management would do something as cruel as periodically pruning the slums, was exactly because the city treated it as a part of the wasteland.

Of course, even in the slums, Hunters who want to get his bounty would still attack him. Though, they could not simply bombard a part of the slums. Doing something like that so close to the city would only invite retaliation from the city defence squad. At the very least, his enemies would lower the intensity of their attacks to hand rifles. Which would grant Akira the upper hand.

Moreover, due to the connection between Inabe and Sheryl, there was a continuous stream of relics from the area under Tsubaki to Sheryl's base. To ensure that no one would rob those relics, a considerable level of security was put in place. Although it was far from enough to face an assault from those after a 50 billion bounty target, it would at least provide some level of support to Akira. At the very least, it would be safer compared to the camping vehicle.

Inabe quickly completed his explanation and then advised Akira with a serious tone.

"Honestly speaking, I don't want you to die. For the sake of your safety, I want you to accept Yanagisawa's offer. Also, I can at least guarantee that guy has no interest in your bounty. After all, if a city officer takes down a 50 billion Aurum bounty target that those high-rank Hunters are after, it would only cause a fight to break out between us and them. Moreover, he's not someone a mere 50 billion Aurum would move. That's why I can guarantee that he won't kill you solely because of the money."

"…I see."

"But, I didn't expect he would go that far for you. To be honest, I didn't see this coming at all. I wonder what he asked of you."

"Sorry, but I can't tell you anything."

"Of course. Or more like, don't tell me anything. It has something to do with Sakashita Heavy Industry, right? Unfortunately, I have no desire to get involved with them."

The reason why the Hunters, who were attacking Akira suddenly stopped, was not because they had given up. It was because Yanagisawa stopped them. As he came here accompanied by Hammerz, he broadcasted through the general frequency that Akira was in the middle of negotiations with Sakashita Heavy Industry.

Although those Hunters ambushed Akira while he was in the middle of negotiating with Kugamayama City Management, they did not dare do so with Sakashita Heavy Industry. If they did that, Sakashita would perceive them as hostile. For the Hunter in that area, it was nothing short of suicide.

This meant that once they were done with their negotiation, there was a good chance that the bombardment would recommence. Therefore, it was better if Akira accepted that offer and had Yanagisawa escort him back to the slums.

After Inabe made his suggestion, he then concluded.

“This is all. I will end the call here. For my own sake, I hope that you will continue to survive. So, make sure you make the right choice.”

Inabe then closed the call. Akira glanced back at Yanagisawa, who was smiling at him.

“I hope you believe me now. That I can do that much. So, let me ask you again, where is Shirou-kun?”

“…I can’t tell you.”

That answer caused Yanagisawa’s smile to vanish. But, at the very least, the answer changed from a simple ‘no’ to ‘can’t say’. This showed that there was some room for negotiations.

“Why can’t you tell me?”

“I’m a Hunter. So, I can’t just freely give information to everyone who asks me. That’s why, instead of that…”

Akira then operated his information terminal and turned it to face Yanagisawa.

“Go ahead and ask him yourself.”

In Akira’s information terminal, Shirou’s frightened face was on full display.

Shirou flusteredly connected to Akira through telepathy and screamed.

“What do you think you’re doing!?”

“It’s originally your problem, so at least try to do something about it yourself.”

Even Yanagisawa was surprised by Akira’s action. However, it did not change the fact that it was still beneficial for him. He extended his hand and took that information terminal from Akira and smiled at Shirou.

“Nice to meet you. I am Yanagisawa. I was hoping to meet you inside that inter-city transport vehicle. Still, I’m glad that we can finally meet each other albeit not directly.”

“Ahh, yeah, right, sorry about that. I suddenly wanted to get some fresh air; you see.”

As Shirou was laughing awkwardly, he could not help but to make a stern expression. Seeing that, Yanagisawa was certain that the on the call was really Shirou. Although the background was set to complete white, which prevented Yanagisawa from guessing where Shirou might be, he believed that would not pose an issue. He quickly tried to retrace the call.

“Is that so? I can totally understand that! I sometimes feel like that too, you know? But wouldn’t it be fine for you to return back already? I’m sorry to trouble you, but I actually have something that requires your help. It would be great if you return back sometime soon.”

“Uhh, sorry. But I’m rather busy as well over here, you see…”

Yanagisawa’s tracing had already narrowed down from the whole Aurum economical area, to around Kugamayama city, to the wasteland around where he was right now. He smiled, as he thought [As expected, he’s close by].

“I see. If you need extra help, I can send someone, you know? Though I don’t know what you’re working on, it seems like you can’t ask Sakashita for help. In that case, how about I help you instead?”

“Well, I don’t think I would be able to accept that offer of yours either…”

Yanagisawa thought that he could go further and continued tracing Shirou’s location.

“How about money then? I’m sorry if I sound rushed here, but I’m in a bit of a hurry, you see. That’s why I hope you can help me out soon. I can give you up to 20 billion Chrome, you know?”

Shirou could not hide his surprise.

“So, what do you think?”

Shirou seemed to hesitate, but he still did not accept the offer.

“…Thank you but I have to refuse. I don’t think we’re that close that you would just lend me that much money.”

“There’s no need to be modest, you know?”

At that point, Yanagisawa already deduced Shirou was around 200 meters from where he was standing. He inadvertently smiled and nonchalantly scanned his surroundings. Naturally, his eyes went to the camping vehicle. Since he suspected Shirou to be there, he quickly narrowed his search area to that location before Shirou noticed his backtracking.

As it finally narrowed down to the millimeters, Yanagisawa frowned and looked a bit confused. The location of the backtracking pointed right to where Akira was standing.

“…Shirou-kun, where might you be right now?”

“Where, you ask? I’m over there, no?”

Shirou smiled smugly, signalling that he was playing some kind of trick.

“You’re the one who found me in Mihazono ruin, right? Like hell I would fall for the same trick again.”

Yanagisawa finally understood that Shirou was well aware he was currently backtracking the call. Furthermore, Shirou deliberately allowed the conversation to continue.

“I bet Hammerz is over there too, right? Tell him that I apologize for wasting his time.”

This indicated he was guessing. Therefore, Shirou was not in a position where he could confirm if Hammerz was really there or not.

“And also, I don’t recommend picking a fight with that Hunter, Akira. You might have Sakashita Heavy Industry behind you, but it is still a bad idea to pick a fight with Tsukisada Construction, right?”

Seeing Shirou stated with such a level of smugness, Yanagisawa believed his words. With this, both Yanagisawa and Shirou misunderstood Akira as an agent from Tsukisada Construction. Yanagisawa inadvertently turned toward Akira.

[And here I thought he is an old-world connector. So, he is an agent from Tsukisada Construction, huh? No wonder his story doesn’t make sense. That is unless he had their support. And right now, Shirou is using him as a proxy. Is Shirou using him to intervene with the Hunters…?]

In the past, Yanagisawa did something similar for the same exact reason too. Thus, it all made sense to him. He then glanced at Hammerz, who was close to the camping vehicle. Hammerz, who noticed his gaze, lightly shook his head.

[So, he’s really not around, huh… Even if he is, searching the inside of that vehicle is meaningless at this point.]

If Shirou was inside the vehicle, then it meant Hammerz was lying. That would mean Sakashita Heavy Industry had no wish to let Yanagisawa have Shirou. At least, not here and not now.

Back when they failed to capture Shirou in the Mihazono ruin, Yanagisawa was curious and did ask Hammerz about that. However, judging from Hammerz's answer, it seemed like Hammerz was entirely serious when trying to capture Shirou.

Everything led to one conclusion. Shirou was unlikely to be around here. Even if Yanagisawa bet on that small possibility, went to search the vehicle, and found Shirou there, he might have to fight Hammerz afterwards. Even if he survives, he might need to take on the whole Sakashita Heavy Industry later. It was not worth the trouble. Therefore, Yanagisawa had no other choice but to stop his search. He then turned back to Shirou.

"I see. Well, it's not like I have that much time to chat with you. I guess I will end the call here. Feel free to call me if you change your mind. Ah, you have my number, right?"

"Yeah."

After that, Shirou closed the call. Yanagisawa returned the information terminal back to Akira and asked him a question just to be safe.

"But still, if you don't know where Shirou-kun is, you could have answered with 'I don't know' instead of a 'no', right?"

Akira looked at Yanagisawa with contempt and mocked.

"There's nothing I have to say to someone using the threat of force just to ask me something."

Yanagisawa smiled bitterly with a mix of exasperation.

[He wouldn't even tell me that he doesn't know, huh? To think that he would go that far for his pride. Though, I'm not in the position to criticize someone else. That part of him is really troublesome though…]

But on the other side, it explained why Akira did not falter against Lion Steel's threat and still dared to murder a member of its founding family. He even managed to get a 50 billion Aurum bounty on him and got designated as a monster. Judging from how Akira did not falter in the slightest, Yanagisawa believed Akira's words. He really did not know. Thus, he smiled in amusement.

"Is that so? If that's really the case, I guess I will just leave then. Ah, as thanks for giving me a chance to talk with Shirou-kun, I'll arrange for you to be able to enter the slums of the city. Though, I won't cancel the monster designation. After all, you basically told me nothing about Shirou-kun whereabouts."

"Yeah yeah."

"Also, if you know where he is, do call me. If possible, please turn him over to me. If you do that for me, not only will I cancel your monster designation, but I will also do something about your bounty as well. Later then. I will be waiting for your call."

Yanagisawa smiled at him and left.

Akira heaved a huge sigh and frowned.

"Alpha, sorry."

Alpha smiled wryly.

"You're safe now and that is all that matters. Moreover, it is way too late to be complaining about that side of your personality. Let's just change gears and get ready before those Hunters start their bombardment again."

Seeing Alpha's smile, as if she really did not mind, Akira lowered his tense shoulders.

"You're right, let's get moving."

Akira pulled up his bike, which was lying nearby and rode it toward the camping vehicle.

Hammerz, who received a long-range message from Yanagisawa, lightly sighed and mumbled.

“So, it ends up with nothing, huh?”

He then turned the camping vehicle, which he had laid on its side, back on its wheels. He casually apologized to Carol.

“We’re leaving now, sorry for the trouble.”

“…If you really feel bad about it, how about leaving something behind as compensation?”

Watching her ask so daringly while looking straight at him, Hammerz was a little taken aback. He then changed his attitude to show some respect for her courage.

“I’m sorry, I came here empty-handed. But well, I will try to arrange something for you later.”

Hammerz smiled cheerfully and left with those parting words.

After Hammerz was too far to be seen with the naked eye, Carol sighed in relief.

“Good grief… Just what is the deal with that guy?”

Hammerz was a powerful opponent. It was for the best if he would just leave without causing anymore trouble. Once she calmed down, she smiled wryly. [I should not have said that… I gave him a reason to come back to look for me….]

That was when Akira returned.

“Carol, are you alright?”

“Yeah, somehow. I’m glad to see that you’re also okay. Now then, let’s immediately leave this place.”

Akira and Carol returned to the camping vehicle. Since it was lying on its side just now. The insides were a huge mess. Shiro, who was there, also looked like a mess.

“Akira, how was it?”

“They left.”

Shirou sighed in relief.

“Thank goodness that worked… It was dangerous, but that aside…”

Akira suddenly interjected through telepathy.

“Carol is here, so don’t say anything unnecessary.”

“I know I know. I didn’t expect you would even be able to fool someone like Yanagisawa. Was that some kind of secret technique from Tsukisada Construction?”

“Just shut up.”

“Yeah yeah.”

Shirou lightly joked and decided not to say anything more.

Shirou was not the one who changed his location to where Akira was. That was Alpha’s doing. Alpha only did that because Akira asked her to do so. He also asked Shirou to collaborate with his story.

Akira and Carol then hurried off from that location. They were rushing to leave before the Hunters started shooting at them again. However, even after some time, no bombardment came. Akira found that to be very strange.

“Hmm, this is strange. Have they really given up on us?”

Shirou sulked for some reason.

“What are you talking about? You just made some kind of deal with Yanagisawa, you know? The Yanagisawa.”

“Eh? He said he won’t help retract the bounty though?”

“That’s not it. Even right now, the broadcast is still saying that you are negotiating. That’s why they haven’t started firing again. Didn’t you ask them to do that?”

While Akira and Shirou were looking at each other confused, Carol, who was standing next to them, guessed that it must be Hammerz’s compensation. She smiled bitterly, now thinking that it was worth it – saying those words that she thought she should not have to Hammerz.

Their difference in power was simply overwhelming. If they had fought, the ending was obvious. Akira and Carol somehow managed to get through that situation with their pride, hard work and a pinch of good luck.

However, the reason why those Hunters stopped attacking Akira was not because of Hammerz.

__*__*__*__

Takt, who took over the leadership position after Gelgus’ death, was furious. He wished he had offered himself to take over such a dangerous task in place of Gelgus. His motivation had already changed. He no longer wanted to kill Akira for the sake of money. He wanted to do it for the sake of revenge. He was about to proceed forward despite the losses due to his rage.

But suddenly, he received a message from Sakashita Heavy Industry. If he was only after money, he would have stopped. However, since vengeance filled his mind, he could not. His face was emotionless as he turned at Latis and Pamela, seeming to bottle up the inferno churning inside of him.

“I have a question. If we keep attacking Akira in this situation, can you use the influence of Lion Steel to evacuate us out of the territory under Sakashita Heavy Industry? If yes, can you add that as an extra reward on top of the bounty?”

That request was not solely for Takt’s sake. It was also to acquire help from the other Hunters. Latis could understand that from Takt’s gaze as he lightly nodded.

“…I will make the arrangements.”

“Alright then!”

But when Takt was about to give the command to restart the bombardment, the alarm suddenly blared. It was followed by a voice that echoed through the vehicle.

“Takt! We are being attacked! They’re already inside the vehicle!”

“What!? Who are they and where are they from!?”

Takt immediately suspected it to be another team who were also after Akira’s bounty. After Gelgus’ death, they found an opportunity to take down their competitor. However, the scream took him by surprise. His enemy was not the one he had imagined it to be.

“They’re from the Lion Steel company!”

Takt immediately turned toward Latis and Pamela, but seeing that they were equally surprised, Takt understood that they had nothing to do with this attack.

Suddenly, a canister exploded that filled the room with nanoparticles. These particles had a powerful speed filter effect. Now, rifles were useless inside that room. From another point of view, it also protected the people inside the room from bullets.

At the same time, it forced anyone inside that room to only resort to close combat. Two women who specialized in close-range combat quickly jumped inside the room.

One of them swung her blade at Latis while the other one launched a powerful punch at Pamela. They rapidly closed the distance between them in a blink of an eye. The face of the one with the blade was filled with killing intent and a sense of loyalty. Meanwhile, the other one had a similar face. One filled with the same killing intent but with insanity in her smile.

Latis evaded that slash and frowned.

“…You-!!”

“Long time no see!”

Pamela blocked the punch, deflecting it to the side and frowned.

“…You!”

“We meet again!”

It was Shiori and Kanae.

Latis deflected Shiori’s next attack with a knife. Sparks flew from the contact point between the blade and the knife. They were glaring at each other as they forced their weapon forward, toward their opponent.

“What is the meaning of this!? What are you scheming this time!?”

“Scheming? You endangered my master’s life. Isn’t that enough of a reason?”

“…I see. Then, it was indeed stupid of me to ask!”

Latis extended the blade of his knife, negating the advantage of Shiori’s reach. As they jumped backwards, opening space between them, they swung at each other. They released a flurry of strikes before they even landed. The floor and wall in between them were filled with countless slash marks.

Although Latis and Shiori were mostly even, Kanae was pushing Pamela back. Since her speciality was commanding a group of maids using long-range control, she was unable to match Kanae’s ferocity.

“It was a mistake not to take your beloved long-range control terminal with you here.”

“Oh shut up!”

“Well, I have no plans on wasting my time with pointless chatter too. So…”

Kanae’s presence suddenly changed. She pushed aside the part of her that wanted to savour the fight, even in this situation.

“Just die.”

As her usual smile vanished, Kanae’s single strike broke through Pamela’s defence and blew her body away like a rag doll.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 279, Revenge Target

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Takt was shocked by the sudden attack. Nonetheless, even amid the chaos, he was able to quickly identify those that were hostile and his allies. Although both Shiori's side and Latis' side were from the Lion Steel company, he quickly recognized that the aggressor was the enemy. He quickly provided support to Latis and Pamela. After all, Latis and Pamela were the ones who offered his group the extra reward on top of the bounty. Therefore, if they got killed, he might not be able to claim that extra reward.

But soon, more people entered the fight. They were Reina and Togami. Both were wearing maid and butler uniforms, which were augmented powered suits. They were equipped with rifles, specifically adjusted for close combat, able to function in the speed filter. Those two approached Takt.

[More enemies…! And they're only children…!? What's going on!?]

Takt quickly jumped away to evade the bullets by pure reflex. He tried to shoot back. However, Togame quickly closed the distance between them, as if acting as Reina's shield. While Togami was acting as the decoy, Reina jumped to the side and fired at Takt.

Although the speed filter greatly reduced the speed of the bullets, it was still impossible to follow them with the naked eye. However, with the combination of great effort and the effects of accelerator drugs, they were able to track the trajectory of each bullet. They were artificially compressing their time perception as they exchanged shots mere meters apart.

Even when it was two against one, skill-wise, Takt had the upper hand. However, the situation that they were in closed their gap in skill.

Since they had prepared tanks, powered suits and large weapons to hunt Akira down, Takt was not that well equipped for a man-to-man fight. Moreover, he was safely staying inside the mobile HQ borrowed from Lion Steel. Thus, was currently not well equipped to fight outside the vehicle.

In contrast to Takt, Reina and Togami were fully equipped with Lion Steel equipment, specialized for man-to-man fights. Furthermore, they were using equipment that was normally not allowed, unless approved by a branch head.

This difference allowed the bullets to hit Takt, stopping him in his tracks. Although it was still far from being lethal, Takt was skilled enough to understand that a temporary pause could be the deciding factor between the loser and the victor.

The speed filter greatly reduced the range of the bullets. Reina and Togame dealt with that by shooting at Takt from close range. Takt’s wealth of experience in battle told him that he would not be able to avoid the bullets. Likewise, he did not have enough protection to block the bullets.

[I can’t die here…! Not when I haven’t avenged Gelgus-san!]

As his mind had abandoned the thought of survival, he changed his goal to take down the attackers together with him, Takt immediately aimed his rifle back at Reina and Togami. However, due to his regret taking over his train of thoughts, he completely missed his opportunity.

Reina and Togami simultaneously shot at Takt right when it was impossible to evade. Takt got riddled with bullets. He was not killed immediately but even until his last breath, he failed to do anything.

Kanae sent Pamela flying with a kick. Pamela glanced at Reina and Togami and quickly understood their goal. It was to separate Takt from Pamela and Latis. However, it was already too late for her to change anything. Takt was already dead.

Without the head to lead the hunting team, they would not be able to restart their assault on Akira. Especially when no one else had the authority to lead the hunting team.

This meant that there was no longer any reason for Latis and Pamela to stay there. Without even needing to communicate, they both knew it was time to leave. But since their hands were tied with Shiori and Kanae, they were unable to immediately leave this place.

Pamela had been trying to call the maid-type automaton from the other room. However, the automaton was still nowhere to be seen. When she tried to peek through their visual sharing, she could see a group of maids and butlers attacking the automaton unit. She immediately understood who was behind this attack.

Latis also quickly noticed the presence of Togami and Reina. He immediately frowned and sent a glare of reproach toward Shiori.

“You! You changed sides to the fourth ward, huh!? You even leaked the security code of the third ward to them!”

The attackers were from the Lion Steel Company Eastern District Fourth Ward branch. The reason why they were able to slip into the vehicles under the third branch, was because Shiori leaked the security code to them.

Shiori, of course, did not stop her attacks as she calmly stated.

“Yeah. That took you some time to notice.”

For Latis, it was unethical no matter what the reason was. With rage welling up inside him, his gaze naturally turned solemn.

“Where has your loyalty toward the company run off to!? In the end, this is what a faulty fourth-rank maid does, huh!?”

“The third branch has decided to give its utmost support to Chloe-sama, who is trying to hurt Reina-sama. As such, this doesn’t count as a betrayal toward the third branch!”

“Empty arguments! Leaking secret information is against the rules! It is treason against the company!”

Even in the middle of their conversation, they had exchanged countless shots, which left their marks on their surroundings.

“You’re only using your loyalty as a reason to justify your betrayal! Both you and your master should just die as traitors!”

Latis had always admired Shiori’s loyalty. Even if their loyalties were directed at different people. That act sullied that admiration he had and enraged him.

However, Shiori stayed calm even in the face of his threats.

“Don’t worry. Though it is true that I have betrayed the third branch, I still have not betrayed the company.”

“What do you mean?”

“The fact that the fourth branch is helping us is the proof. Although they are from a different branch, there is no way they would help me if I betrayed the company. Flip-sama, the head of the fourth branch, also agreed that this is not against the will of representative Alice-sama.”

Latis was too surprised for words. He inadvertently jumped back to open up space between them. Although they were still in the midst of battle, his attention was no longer there. He immediately decided to put the fight on-halt. Nonetheless, he was still probing for an opening to strike at any time.

“…Just how far have you noticed?”

Shiori also did the same. She was also carefully looking for an opening to strike.

“I have no reason to answer your question. You were reproaching me for my betrayal toward the company just a moment ago. I will at least say this right now. Killing Chloe-sama, even causing some damage to the third branch, these are all a display of my loyalty toward the company.”

She basically hinted to Latis that she already knew about everything. Because of that, the rage that was bottled up, immediately simmered down. It was gone from his gaze, which was not filled with anxiety.

Unlike Latis, who was fighting evenly against Shiori. Pamela was completely overwhelmed by Kanae. There was no chance for Pamela to win. As a matter of fact, Pamela would do really well if she could survive for another minute. Once Pamela got killed, it would be two against one. In that scenario, Latis would not have any chance of surviving. Knowing how things would play out, Shiori was not in a rush to fight. She was even willing to calmly chat with Latis.

Aware of the dire situation that he was in, Latis made his decision. Reina and Togami were receiving support from the fourth branch. There was a good chance that they had noticed representative Alice’s true will. He had to let Chloe know about it. However, in this situation with no chance of winning, it was only a matter of time before both he and Pamela got killed. Therefore, he had only one choice. It required him to throw his life away.

He injected his body with all the battle stimulants he had. Although he would be dead in 10 seconds, it allowed him to temporarily attain superhuman strength.

Shiori noticed the slight change in her opponent. She took a step back and made a defensive stance. Kanae also did not miss this change. She quickly kicked Pamela in Latis’ direction and jumped back to Shiori to provide support.

Kanae intentionally kicked Pamela toward Latis simply because Pamela was an inch away from death. Her aim was to disturb Latis, by tossing his dying teammate in his direction. Therefore, instead of finishing Pamela off, Kanae decided that it was more important to provide support to Shiori. If both of them could stop Latis' upcoming rampage, they would win the fight.

Shiori and Kanae focused their all to prepare themselves to nullify Latis' final strike

As they wished, in the end, Latis died while Shiori's team sustained no injuries. However, it did not end the way Shiori had planned. Instead of attacking them, Latis turned back and tore a hole through the vehicle. He kicked the flying Pamela out of the vehicle, giving her an opportunity to get away.

As he was standing on the death door, Latis' perception of time slowed down. He saw Pamela's look at him with eyes full of disbelief. Latis gave her a soft smile, wishing for her safety. In the next moment, Shiori's blade sliced off his head. The energy blade scorched his brain, killing him instantly with no hope of recovery.

After she swung her blade, Shiori jumped back without lowering her guard. She did not vertically split Latis in two since she had a close call before due to trying to do something unnecessary. Thus, Latis was completely unharmed except for his head. There was still some lingering fear that he might still manage to attack them even in that state.

Latis' body simply fell limp and rolled into the wasteland.

Seeing that, Shiori was a bit confused, Kanae also did not expect that.

"Ane-san, did he just trick us?"

"Maybe. Though, if I was given the choice to save someone in that situation, I would have picked Latis. But it seems like he didn't share that sentiment."

“Ahh, I see. In that case, it was a mistake. Kicking Pamela back to him. Sorry about that.”

It was unlike Kanae to honestly apologize like this. Nonetheless, Shiori simply lightly shook her head and told her.

“It’s fine. No one saw that coming. We were still able to kill one of them. The result is decent.”

Reina and Togami moved to group up with Shiori and Kanae. After killing Takt, they left the room so as not to get in the way of their fight.

“Shiori, is it done yet? Are you alright?”

“I am alright. No problems. Thank you for your concern, Milady.”

Reina smiled in relief, beside her, Togami sighed in relief. Shiori then slightly bowed to him.

“Togami-sama, thank you for cooperating. I’m grateful you protected Milady.”

“Don’t mention it, I’m also grateful to you. Inviting me to such a big job. This will add one more notch to my achievements. There is also this powerful equipment that you allowed me to borrow.”

Hearing his reply, Reina made a rather troubled expression.

“It might be weird to hear this from me since I’m the one who invited you. But, are you really fine taking this job? You must fight against a Lion Steel branch. In the worst-case scenario, you might have to fight against the whole Lion Steel company, you know?”

Toward those words which showed worry toward his well-being, Togami just lightly chuckled and reassured.

“It’s fine. We don’t really get to work together that much lately. So, at least let me do this much.”

“Listen … You might get killed, you know?”

“What are you even talking about? Isn’t that what it means to be a Hunter? There’s not that much of a difference. Moreover…”

“Moreover?”

“If I don’t want to do it or if I think it wasn’t worth the trouble, I would have refused right from the start. I accepted this job knowing fully well what I’m getting myself into. It would be great if you can stop asking me that question.”

Togami smiled and spoke while looking straight at Reina.

Reina blushed a little. Togami’s words could be interpreted as being willing to die for her sake.

“…I see, well, you have my thanks.”

Shiori was seriously contemplating whether it was a good idea to disturb the mood between them. Kanae, who was standing beside her, was grinning as she casually teased.

“Milady, it seems like you even have the leeway to flirt in this situation, huh? Togami-boy too, we’re in the middle of a mission, you know?”

“W-we’re not flirting!”

“Sorry! I’ll get back to my task.”

One replied with a rebuttal while the other did not deny it. Either way, since they had already calmed down, Shiori explained the situation to Reina and Togami. A moment later, a report reached Shiori. It stated the fourth branch had successfully taken control of the vehicle.

The head of the fourth branch, Flip, contacted Reina.

“It’s me. How is the situation over there?”

“Everyone is safe. But Chloe is not here.”

“I see. Considering that those two were here, I was certain that Chloe-sama would also be here. But it seems like that is not the case. This means she must be either in the Higaraka facility or still inside the city. What do you think?

“I don’t have any good guesses. If she’s still inside the city, we won’t be able to kill her just yet.”

“In that case, let’s pin our hopes on Akira-kun.”

Reina lightly sighed.

“It is him after all. I don’t think he’s dead yet, but I wonder if he’s really going to attack Kugamayama city.”

“It is just my guess, but I think he’s serious about attacking the city. Well, you can do anything as you see fit. Let’s work hard to answer representative Alice’s will.”

“Yeah, let’s just do that.”

Reina was talking with Flip, acting as a proper master for Shiori and Kanae. Watching her, Shiori got deeply moved. Meanwhile, Kanae was smiling like usual. Togami, on the other hand, felt conflicted. He felt like Reina was living in a completely different world from him.

After she was forcibly evacuated from the moving vehicle, Pamela hid in the middle of the wasteland. She wore a shaken and pained expression.

That was when Latis appeared. To be more precise, it was Latis’ corpse. Just like the maids under Pamela, it was set so that in the case of death, Pamela would be able to control their bodies. Therefore, Pamela managed to take control of Latis’ body and moved it here.

The authority to control his body could be transferred under certain conditions. It was possible for her to control his body if he was unconscious and in danger. Because of that, she still had hope. Pamela prayed for the slim chance Latis was still alive.

But after she saw him up close, she knew that Latis was already dead. Pamela sobbed as she hugged his corpse. She then put medicinal balm on his outer wound. The expensive medicine quickly closed the wounds, but that was all. It could not bring back the dead.

Afterwards, Pamela kept hugging Latis for some time. It was as if she was trying to suppress the anger welling up inside her. Once she recovered some of her composure, all her rage was concentrated on a single goal.

“I’ll definitely kill you…”

Those words were proof that Pamela’s hatred toward Shiori had exceeded her loyalty toward Chloe and the Lion Steel company.

＿＿＿*＿

As Akira was driving the camping vehicle toward Kugamayama city, a team from the city defence led by Guutol approached him. Naturally, it was not to repel him. Inabe had contacted them beforehand. Thus, Akira did not panic when Guutol’s team appeared on the sensor.

“It’s Guutol. We’re here to escort you to the slums. Follow us.”

“Roger that. But are you sure you want to escort someone recognized as a monster?”

“Well, I wonder about that. Either way, I’m just following what my boss told me. If someone tries to attack you, just leave it to us… By the way, there were Hunters who attacked you when you were in the middle of negotiations with City Management, right? As a part of City Management, that really hurt our pride, you know? So, I’ll make sure to show them if they try to do that again.”

Seeing the fully armed powered suit squad, Akira thought that it was reassuring to have them on his side. He also analyzed what Guutol had said.

He was relieved that he did not have to fight them nor did he have to turn around and leave.

While on the other hand, Guutol was relieved that his squad did not have to fight against Akira. He already heard that using only his bike, Akira managed to repel an assault group equipped with tanks and powered suits—a team of Hunters fully prepared to hunt him, a 50 billion bounty target. He shuddered at the thought. [What if we had fought back when we first met?]

"…Let me warn you again, your monster designation is still active. So, watch yourself. Be careful once you enter the slums. I'll also send you a map."

Akira looked at the map of Kugamayama city's lower district that was sent to his information terminal.

"The locations coloured in red are treated as part of the city. So, if you enter those locations, we will have no other choice but to remove you. Make sure not to go there. As for the orange areas, you'll at least get a warning shot if you enter those areas. If you enter those areas by mistake, make sure to get out as soon as possible."

"Alright, I'll be careful."

"I'm really counting on you, alright? We are giving you special treatment already. Normally, we would attack you the moment you approach the city."

"Is that so? Even Inabe can't change that?"

"Impossible. Making this much of an exception already caused some dissent from inside the inner wall. I really have no idea why the guys at the top are allowing you to get so close to the city."

"I see…"

Akira thought back on his encounter with Yanagisawa. It was a dangerous encounter, but it was not a fruitless one.

While they were heading to the city, Akira thought of something and contacted Shirou through telepathy.

“By the way, Shirou, are you sure you want to come with us to Kugamayama city?”

Shirou sighed in exasperation.

“…If you ask me personally, it would be a straight no. But it’s not like I can just leave right now.”

With a 50 billion Aurum bounty target in the camping vehicle, it would be placed under close watch. Not only from Guutol’s squad, but also from others, using long-range surveillance devices. There was a good chance that he would be discovered if he tried to leave. He might be able to elude those who were watching him from the network, but that was a herculean task to do when there were people directly watching him. Although his camouflage coat was excellent, there was no guarantee that he would not be discovered.

“Only two individuals are supposed to be inside the camping vehicle right now. You and Carol. I have no desire to make them want to question the real number of people inside. To let me leave, you would have to stop the vehicle and open the door. They would definitely question why you would do that. I’m sorry but make sure to be careful.”

“Alright… Wait, does that mean it was a bad decision to use all our jamming smoke back then?”

“Yeah, it was. Still, the powered suit which knew of my presence already got destroyed. It also managed to cut off its information-sharing system, so the others after you most likely didn’t notice my presence. If someone had noticed, Hammerz and Yanagisawa would not have asked you about my whereabouts back then. They would have quickly gone straight for the camping vehicle.”

In reality, it was nothing more than Shirou’s hopeful guess. Each sentence he worded out also served to convince him of it. He was unaware that Hammerz got ordered by Sugadome to let him off the hook for some time.

“Though I’m sure I don’t even have to tell you this, but once you enter the slums, I’m sure watchful eyes would shift from the vehicle to you alone. At that point, I can slip into the slums. Depending on the situation, I might choose to return to my hideout.”

“I see. Well, feel free to do whichever you think is best.”

Since it was now safe, they took the opportunity to tidy up the place. After Hammerz placed the vehicle on its side, almost everything inside got displaced. It was a mess. While they were cleaning, Guutol suddenly contacted Akira.

“This is as far as we will escort you. We will be standing guard here to make sure that you don’t try to enter the city. Just to remind you, make sure to never enter the red areas, understand?”

“…If Chloe gets out of the city, I won’t do something like that.”

[As expected…] Guutol sighed and said.

“…I see, I hope that is indeed the case.”

Guutol’s call ended. His parting words made Akira imagine him adorning a bitter smile. The powered suits then left the vehicle alone.

That was when Alpha smiled at Akira. He only responded back with a bitter smile.

“I also hope that I won’t have to do that. I will put in more effort so that we won’t have to attack the city.”

“I really hope that you will keep those words, alright?”

Alpha smiled like usual at Akira.

After they entered the slums of Kugamayama city, they once stopped the vehicle. As Akira stepped out, someone came to welcome him.

“Welcome back, I’ve been waiting for you.”

It was Sheryl.

In a part of the slums that seemed to be devoid of people, Akira strolled with Sheryl next to him. Behind them were Erio and the other children, who came as Sheryl's bodyguards. Further back was the camping vehicle.

Akira was a bit surprised at how silent the slums were. Especially when he compared it to how rowdy it used to be.

"It's so quiet here. It's the first time I see the slums this quiet."

"When they heard that you're coming back, everyone left. The only ones remaining are us."

Sheryl was the one who disseminated this piece of information. Thanks to that, except for those living close to Sheryl's HQ, everyone evacuated the area. Any area with Akira inside was considered to be dangerous. After all, they might get involved in a battle between a 50 billion Aurum bounty target and the Hunters after him.

"So, you're staying behind? Although everyone left?"

"Of course. Though, to be more precise, not everyone left. But only about 10 per cent remained. I didn't expect there to be this many willing to stay behind."

The ones who stayed were those who did not have anywhere else to go. After all, most could not survive alone in the slums without a gang. They also did not want to transfer to another gang. Ultimately, those that remained had enough of living under the shadows. Fearful for their lives all the time. For such sentiments to sprout, it showed just how healthy and prosperous Sheryl's gang had become.

Moreover, many of those that remained were veteran members. Most were those who were already in the gang right from the start and had become officers. They saw Akira survive time and time again. Despite acting recklessly and doing so many absurd stunts. He survived after going to Shijima's gang, dragging a member's corpse with him. He survived after he raided the Ezont family's HQ. Even now, he was still alive.

Those who were wise. Those who did not have anywhere else to go. Those who placed their bets on Akira. Finally, the girl who made Akira her world. They all stayed behind and decided to pick him up. They did so, knowing they might get involved in a battle that could easily destroy the slums.

Akira glanced at Erio and the other children behind him before turning his gaze back to Sheryl.

"I heard that Inabe has contacted you beforehand. Just how much has Inabe told you?"

"We heard that you've picked a fight with the Lion Steel company. You got a 50 billion Aurum bounty on you. Furthermore, you got designation as a monster. You've also just got attacked by a large group of Hunters and there's a good chance that this won't be the last time."

"Well, I think that is good enough. Just to let you know, I don't have the leeway to help your gang right now. Wouldn't it be better if you also leave the area? I was planning to borrow your HQ, believing everyone would have left by now. I was expecting it to be completely empty, you know?"

"It's alright. We will watch over ourselves. If we can't, then it just means our time has come."

"But still…"

Akira understood that he was basically causing them trouble. That this was all due to his own selfishness. As such, he could not help but make a troubled expression. As a matter of fact, if Sheryl had refused after Inabe contacted her, he was planning on staying in a random abandoned building.

However, Sheryl simply smiled and accepted Akira back into the base.

"We are greatly indebted to you. Though it might be weird to say this, I see this as our chance to repay you. We are weak. If a fight breaks out, we know we cannot hope to aid you. So, please. At least let us help you with the other things like providing a place for you to rest.”

Whatever their reason was, they had made their resolve and stayed behind. Akira thought that it would be rude if he kept asking them to leave. Thus, he gave a gentle smile and said.

“…I see. Well, I will be in your care for the time being.”

“Of course!”

Sheryl presented him with her best smile. It was a smile, worthy enough to leave her with no regret, even if it was her last smile. As the shroud of twilight slowly crept in, her smile was shining beautifully under the dusk.

When they arrived at Sheryl’s HQ, they parked the camping vehicle inside the garage. They then closed the shutter, which was as robust as a portable wall. It was installed to protect the relics gathered from the area managed by Tsubaki. Thus, they could even withstand tank shells.

Sheryl was explaining the defensive capabilities of the HQ. She made sure to end her speech with a recommendation for Akira to stay, and rest here. However, Akira simply replied ‘I would do that later’.

He promptly returned to the camping vehicle. He then gathered Carol and Shirou to talk about their plans from here on out.

Akira was planning to stay here until his new equipment arrived. Carol was planning to stay with him. The only issue was Shirou.

“Shirou, what will you do? It would be terrible if someone from Sheryl’s gang found you, right? That means you could either continue to hide inside the camping vehicle in secret or sneak out…”

“I will be staying here for the time being. Even if I sneak out later, I must first ensure that the outside is safe. If it’s possible, I want to be able to access the security inside this building. I don’t mind hacking into the security but, if possible, I'd rather gain access the proper way. After all, it will be less likely for me to be found if I don't hack."

"Alright. I will ask Sheryl for access. Well then, I'll be going upstairs. Just call me if you need anything."

Akira only said as much and left the vehicle with Carol next to him. Sheryl was already standing there, waiting for them. It seemed like she was the only one left, while the others had already gone upstairs.

"Sheryl, I'm sorry to ask you this right away, but…"

"If it's about a bath, you can go in anytime. You want to go in now?"

Although the camping vehicle was also equipped with a bath, it was a relatively small one. When Akira heard her offer his desire simply burst out. He had been living out in the wasteland for a few days. Though he could bathe, it was greatly limited in size. He could not fully relax and stretch out all his limbs. The desire to do so had piled up and it finally erupted. Thus, there was no stopping him any longer. Even Shirou's request had taken a back seat as something that was to be dealt with later.

"Yeah."

"Okay, let's go then. This way."

Without even stating that she would go in as well, Sheryl led Akira to the bath, as if it was the natural thing to do. Strangely enough, Carol was silently following behind them.

"…Hm? Wait. Carol, are you going in as well?"

"It's fine, isn't it? I can at least help you wash your body, you know?"

"…Well, that's fine by me I guess."

Akira nonchalantly approved her suggestion. This made Carol smile rather smugly. But in contrast to her, Sheryl, who was witnessing their exchange, was utterly stupefied. In the end, the three of them went to enjoy the bath together.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 280, Growing Out Of The Poor Shell

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After spending days out in the wasteland, Akira was finally in the slums of Kugamayama City. More specifically, he was in Sheryl's HQ, completely revelling in his time in their wide, spacious bath.

After the huge fight in the afternoon, he was physically and psychically drained. He could tell if he let his guard down, his consciousness would melt into the warm water. Nonetheless, his body gradually sunk into the water. Watching him, Alpha, who was also in the bath albeit only as a hologram, warned him.

"Akira, if you fall asleep, you will drown."

"Whoops…"

Akira pushed his body back up. He fixed his posture. Unfortunately, his drowsiness continued to pervade him. As he was bobbing his head, having a hard time holding it up, Carol, who was physically present, prompted him.

"Akira, if you're too sleepy, you can just sleep here. I'll hold your body up."

Akira had his eyelids already half-closed as he turned toward Carol. Seeing his exhausted face, Carol gave a soft smile.

“If it’s too much to handle, I’ll be there to help you. I did say something like that, remember?”

“Ah, that’s right.. I’ll leave… The rest… To you… Then…”

While in his hazy conscious state, Akira believed that it should be fine. Thus, he left everything else to Carol. As his consciousness turned dark, his eyelids slowly closed. He gradually lost control of his body as the exhaustion crept in. Eventually, he laid his body on her.

Carol received him and hugged him. Since Carol now had full control of Akira’s body, she moved Akira in front of her and hugged him from behind. Thanks to Carol’s plentiful chest, which she nurtured to seduce men, Akira was lulled to sleep until he finally closed his eyes. Carol was looking at him with a gentle smile on her face. It was obvious she was enjoying this.

Sheryl stared at Carol and Akira as it happened.

“You two are pretty close.”

“Hmm? Well, we did entrust our lives to each other back in the wasteland, after all. So, this much is nothing.”

“I see…”

Sheryl pouted. That was not something that she could do. Even if she made her resolve and went out to the wasteland together with Akira, she would be nothing but a burden. She would basically be an amateur Hunter after all. Thus, she was doing her best to support and help Akira. She wanted to help him with everything but knew her own limitations when it came to fighting.

[As I thought… Everything else is not as meaningful as being able to fight side by side with him…] Sheryl sighed inside her heart and said.

“…Carol-san, I’m sure that you’re exhausted as well. So, I can take your place if you want.”

“It’s fine. I have a nanomachine-enhanced body, after all.”

“I see…”

They both stayed close, next to the sleeping Akira. They both wished to stay beside him in the future as well. One was smiling brightly while the other was smiling wryly.

After the bath, due to Sheryl’s suggestion, Akira decided to sleep in Sheryl’s room. Carol simply smiled and did not say anything.

__*__*__*__

Back in the wasteland. In the Lion Steel facility in Higaraka residence ruin, Pamela gave a full report to Chloe, who was still inside the inner wall.

Chloe was reflected on a display. Although she seemed calm after hearing Pamela’s report, there was no smile on her face.

“…I see, so, Latis is gone.”

“Yes, but he still can move. I’m controlling his body right now.”

Behind Pamela was Latis’ corpse. It had gone through a simple medical procedure and was standing. Unfortunately, it was impossible to control his expression. Thus, Latis was simply staring blankly, expressionless. His corpse had been turned into a remote biological automaton.

“Chloe-sama. To continue my duty, I wish to be granted permission to use Rank 9 equipment.”

Chloe looked at Pamela in confusion.

“I don’t have the authority to grant you that. I’m sure you are aware, no?”

“I am aware. My hope is for Chloe-sama to convey this request to the branch head, Beltram-sama.”

“…What are you planning to do with this equipment?”

“Of course, I will hunt Akira and Reina down with it. Unfortunately, the Hunters could not take Akira down even when they prepared equipment and tools worthy of a 50 billion Aurum bounty hunt. We could increase Akira’s bounty. But at this point, it would be more efficient to hunt him down ourselves. We’ve also confirmed intervention from the fourth ward. So, I am sure that Beltram-sama would understand this as a necessity.”

“I’m sure he doesn’t want you to kill Reina’s group though. What’s more, if a battle between wards breaks out, I’m sure that the branch heads would have to make their moves as well. I think we can deal with Reina’s group when that happens.”

“Considering that they attacked us with such precise timing, it is likely they are already working with Akira. We’ve also received a report that the head of the fourth ward, Flip-sama, had made contact with Akira as well. I’m certain Beltram-sama will not keep quiet for long. Thus, I believe this is a good opportunity to take care of Reina’s group, along with Akira.”

Chloe frowned. She noticed how Pamela kept coming up with counterarguments. This was no longer a matter of a servant presenting her master with options. Instead, she was pushing Chloe to make a specific decision. The authority to make a decision laid on the master, not the servant. Chloe glared at Pamela through the display. She placed a unique pressure on her, as a member of the founding family of Lion Steel.

Even so, Pamela did not step back. Her eyes were filled with emotions as she stared back at Chloe.

Chloe gave a light sigh and disengaged from the staring contest.

“…Fine. I will ask the branch head. Well then, it’s already pretty late. I will end the call here. Pamela, take a good rest and prepare for your next task.”

“Thank you very much.”

Pamela gave a deep bow and closed the call. After Chloe disappeared from the display, Latis walked and stood beside her. Pamela smiled at him.

Although this was still his real body, he was already dead and got turned into an automaton.

“Latis, let’s do our best.”

Pamela’s smile was tainted by the insanity stirring inside her.

＊＊＊＊

After Pamela closed the call, Chloe sighed once again and looked up at the ceiling.

“So… Latis is gone… huh…”

Chloe was still quite young. It would still feel natural to call her a little girl. For such a young girl, it was natural for her to hold feelings toward him, a loyal servant, who had served and supported her for years.

As a member of the founder family of Lion Steel, she never revealed her longing for him. Even if she had to hide how she felt, it did not mean such emotions went away. She had always thought that one day, when she had enough influence and power, she would convey her feelings to Latis. A day when someone she loved got taken as hostage would be trivial to resolve with her power and influence.

But that day would never come.

Beads of tears formed and ran down her cheek. Chloe kept wiping them off with her finger and flicking them away.

It was indeed depressing to lose someone important to her. However, she could not allow it to affect her. As a member of the Lorentz family, it was something that she was not allowed to do. That was just how she was brought up, and that was what she had decided to do. Being unable to express her sorrow except with tears, only showed her immaturity. She shed her last tear and wiped it away. It was as if she had declared that final teardrop to suffice as a representation of her sorrow and that she had overcome Latis’ death.

She then sighed once more. But this time, she had a sorrowful look on her face.

“…But still, losing two servants really hurts.”

Chloe already knew that Pamela’s goal had shifted to taking revenge. However, she was completely fine with it. The only thing that bothered her was Pamela’s overwhelming desire for revenge, which had taken priority over her loyalty toward the company. A servant who prioritized their own desires over their master was no servant at all.

With Latis gone and Pamela’s change in attitude, Chloe had effectively lost two of her retinues.

“Up until now, I’ve been using both of them as my extension outside the inner wall. I must now think of another way…”

Since Chloe no longer recognized Pamela as her servant, she had no other choice but to abandon her.

__*__*__*__

The next day, Akira woke up in Sheryl’s room. As he was about to push his body up from the bed, he felt something obstruct him. He turned his head and noticed Sheryl was using him as a pillow. Therefore, he carefully moved her aside, so as not to wake her up, and left the bed.

That was when Alpha greeted him.

“Morning, Akira! How was your sleep?”

“Alpha, morning! I think I slept pretty well. Carol’s camping vehicle is comfortable but it’s just that as I thought, I can sleep much better on a proper bed.”

Akira stated. Alpha smiled wryly and said to him.

“Well, from what you said, it seems like you really did have an amazing sleep.”

“Why are you emphasising that?”

“Unlike when you slept in the middle of the wasteland, everyone basically now knows where you are. Don’t you feel anxious at all?”

“Ahhh, you have a point.”

Akira broke out a smile. It did make sense now that Alpha mentioned it.

“…Well, it should be fine. If something happens, I’m sure you’ll wake me up, right? I will at least have enough time to put on my augmented suit… Right?”

“Of course! You can leave that to me.”

Alpha smiled confidently and proclaimed. Akira also smiled back at her with confidence.

Sheryl suddenly woke up and looked around, confused.

“…Akira, good morning. Who are you talking to?”

“Nah, I was just talking to myself.”

“…? Is that so?”

Akira replied so nonchalantly that Sheryl did not find it suspicious at all. Thus, she dropped the subject.

Noticing that he escaped from scrutiny, Akira exhaled in relief. He still maintained his expression as he telepathically spoke to Alpha.

“…That was dangerous, I should be more careful.”

“Well, I guess that just means that you were really able to relax here.”

Seeing Alpha smiling teasingly at him, Akira made a bitter smile. He reminded himself to be extra careful.

Around the same time, Katsuragi was driving his trailer through the slums, which were not normally empty. As usual, Darris was sitting on the seat beside him. However, for some reason, he was frowning. He was looking at Katsuragi with a stern gaze.

“Say, Katsuragi… Are you sure we will be okay? Don’t you think this is a little too dangerous?”

Even Katsuragi seemed to be as equally worried as Darris. However, since he had made his decision, there was no hesitation in his voice.

“I know. But if this goes well, it will be massively profitable. This is a golden opportunity. You know that, right?”

“Of course, I know. But… If it doesn’t go well, they will hunt us like fugitives, you know?”

Katsuragi laughed heartily as if to push aside his doubts and worries.

“Don’t worry! Compared to that time when we went to the frontline like a couple of madmen, this is basically nothing!”

“Is that so? I honestly think this time is more or less as dangerous as that time, though. We almost got killed back then too, remember? If we hadn’t met Akira, we would have been dead by now, you know?”

“But that doesn’t change the fact that we’re still alive and kicking now! Also, what Akira did back then was basically hold off a whole monster swarm. He did it with just a single AAH assault rifle, right? So, if all of us have better equipment, he’ll do just fine. That’s where I’ll place my bets!”

The trailer was filled to the brim. It was filled with powerful equipment that no normal Hunters around Kugamayama city would be able to afford. Naturally, Katsuragi would normally not deal with these kinds of equipment. However, he did this only for one person. He was betting everything on Akira.

“And if we can sell everything to him, it can be chalked up as a single favour from us! We can also get even more money! We can’t afford to let this chance slip by! Darris, you should get yourself fired up too!!”

Darris had been together with Katsuragi for a long time. As he recalled all the crazy things that they did together out in the wasteland, Darris smiled and agreed.

“Geez, it can’t be helped then! Good grief! Here we are, running through the slums but it feels as tense as the front-line wasteland!”

At the moment, a 50 billion bounty target was hiding inside the slums. Thus, there was a high chance high-ranking Hunters after Akira would attack the slums. Darris was aware of this and was keeping his eyes on the scanner, which kept close watch of his surroundings.

“Katsuragi! I’m basically helping you go through this dangerous place. So, make sure to pay me handsomely if this goes well, yeah?”

“Of course! So, make sure that you do your job properly, okay!?”

Katsuragi and Darris were laughing. Everything out of their mouth was spoken at the top of their lungs as they were heading toward Sheryl’s HQ, where Akira was.

As Akira was checking his equipment inside the camping vehicle, he received a message from Katsuragi. Thus, he decided to go out of HQ to greet him. He opened up the robust shutter to allow Katsuragi in. Once Katsuragi moved the trailer inside, the shutter closed once again. Akira stared at Katsuragi, who was in the driver’s seat with a solemn expression.

“Katsuragi, let me confirm this first. It’s only you and Darris in that trailer, right?”

“Yeah, I came here with powerful equipment specifically for you. After all, you got a 50 billion bounty on your head. Feel free to thank me.”

As Katsuragi spoke in a good mood, Akira’s gaze turned cold.

“Alright then. In that case, you don’t mind if I kill anyone else inside that trailer, right?”

“…What?”

Katsuragi was obviously confused. Darris, on the other hand, quickly understood what was going on and reached for his rifle. He quickly aimed it inside the trailer. Meanwhile, he used his information-gathering device to check for anyone else inside. However, he did not find anyone else. He still had his rifle aimed inside the trailer as he glanced at Akira and asked.

“Akira… There should be no one else other than us here. Is there someone else?”

Akira lowered his shoulders and shook his head.

“Nope, sorry. It was just to be safe.”

Katsuragi and Darris sighed in relief at the exact same time.

“Good grief, don’t scare me like that!”

“Sorry, I had to at least be this cautious. I’m sure you can understand that too, right?”

“Well, yeah. But if you would go this far, I’m sure you know just how dangerous it is for us to do this, right?”

“Yeah, and I’m thankful for it.”

“That’s good to hear. Come in then.”

Katsuragi changed gear and invited Akira in from the back door of the trailer. He and Darris also moved to the back of the trailer. He had the weapons he was so proud of behind him. Katsuragi looked at Akira with a serious expression of a merchant.

“Let me tell you this beforehand. I will give you a tour of my goods, but the price would be the wasteland price. You might accuse me of greatly jacking up the price. However, from my perspective, I'm basically selling weapons, ammo, and medicine to a 50 billion bounty target set by Lion Steel. This price reflects the risk we are taking. So I won't accept any complaints, alright?"

"I know. Don't worry. Kibayashi also warned me about that before."

"Alright then. Let's start. Ah, by the way, I'm fine if you want to bargain, so feel free to do so."

Katsuragi's smile was one typical of a merchant. He wore it as he started giving Akira a tour inside his trailer.

Akira was listening to Katsuragi while looking around together with Carol and Sheryl.

Sheryl's eyes popped out when she found out that most of the goods here could easily cost above 100 million Aurum. However, watching how Carol and Akira were so calm about it, she felt this huge gap between them. She could not help but feel a bit discouraged by it.

Carol thought that they were indeed rather expensive, but considering the situation that Akira was in, it was understandable to some extent. Thus, she bitterly smiled. She then casually asked Akira about his budget.

"Akira, do you think you can buy some? If it's too expensive, I don't mind helping you with the bargaining if you want me to."

Akira pondered over it for a moment. He believed Carol would include her side job into the bargain, so he shook his head and said.

"No, it's fine."

"You don't need to hold back, you know?"

"You can do whatever you want with the ones that you're going to buy. As for me, I'll just buy mine normally."

Hearing that, Carol's smile turned rather stiff.

“…Akira, are you… bothered by that kind of thing?”

“10 billion Aurum per night, right? Even I have no desire to owe you that big of a debt. So, I’ll thank you for your offer but still refuse. Thank you for the offer.”

Carol was relieved after Akira expressed himself. She then continued browsing the other items available.

“I see. In that case, I guess I will also just buy them normally…”

Akira also continued browsing the items. But since all of them were extremely expensive, he was having a hard time adjusting his budget. As he was pondering over his choices, no good idea came up. Suddenly, a telepathic call from Shirou reached him.

“Akira, you need money, right?”

“Yep.”

“I have some here, you know? Of course, you have to pay it back later.”

“So, you’re planning to make me take on your request as repayment, huh?”

“Exactly. I helped you back then during that fight against those Hunters as well. Adding that into the equation, you should owe me enough to take my request, no?”

In order to encourage Akira to take his request, Shirou had to help Akira first. That was the reason why he was travelling with Akira in the first place. Though, because he was so close, he got involved in the hunt for Akira. Nonetheless, that was an opportunity to provide support to Akira. With his previous support and the sum he was going to lend Akira, he thought that it should be sufficient to make Akira accept his request.

However, Akira rejected his offer.

“I see. But unfortunately, it is not enough.”

“What?! You might have gotten killed back there if it wasn’t for my help, you know? That’s just how valuable my help is, no?”

“Yeah, I do think so.”

“Then why? Wouldn’t it be enough already?”

“Because I evened it out when I didn’t tell Yanagisawa of your location. As a matter of fact, considering how strong those two were, I would even say you owe me one. After all, those two were even more powerful than those Hunters, and you know it. Furthermore, Yanagisawa said that he would kill me if I don’t tell them your location. Even so, I still refused to tell them. That one is a huge favour from me, don’t you think?”

Shirou went silent. Since he knew just how powerful Hammerz was, he could not refute Akira’s words. He only thought that Akira refused to leak his location because of pride. However, it does not change the fact that it would have been the end of him if Akira had told them his location. As he thought it over and really could not bring himself to say, ‘that it was not counted since he never asked him to do so’.

Akira then continued.

“And also, if you’re seriously thinking of employing me for firepower, you should pay for all my equipment instead of just a part of it. That way, I will get better equipment, which is also a good thing for you, right?”

“That’s true, but still…”

“I can promise you that I will use all the money you give me for equipment. Well, I won’t tell you to believe me or anything. And I won’t force you either. It’s completely up to you.”

Shirou hesitated. It was a promise offered by someone who would not confess even when faced with Yanagisawa. Therefore, Akira’s promise was something he could rely on. Judging from Akira’s battle against the Hunters, there was no denying Akira was indeed a powerful Hunter.

Furthermore, it would be awful for him as well if Akira died. Overall, it was not a bad idea to increase Akira's upfront payment.

Even so, with no Chrome left, if Shirou also lost all his Aurum, it would really be the end if Akira died or betrayed him. Thus, he could not make his decision. He could not decide whether to place all his bets on Akira or not.

As such, he chose to make a compromise.

"…How about this instead? As a form of upfront payment, I will pay for everything this time. How much will you owe me if I do that? I know that your situation is not that good right now, but I can say the same for me as well."

"Depending on my situation after I got my new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry, I at least will be willing to prioritize your request."

"And when will that equipment arrive?"

"In about a week if I'm lucky, a month if nothing bad happens, and three months if I'm really unlucky. Or so I was told about a week ago."

"What the heck, it's already been a week since then?"

The time window that Sugadome gave to Shirou was only 1 month, of which he had already used 1 week. It was a bit doubtful if he could wait until Akira's new equipment arrived.

"Akira, do you need that equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry no matter what?"

"Like I said. It would depend on the situation. If Chloe dies before it arrives, I have no reason to break through the inner wall. Depending on how much I owe you, I don't mind doing your request first while waiting for my new equipment. Though, I can get much stronger if you are willing to wait. Unless there's something important. To be honest, I would rather wait for my new equipment."

Shirou was in a pickle. Though it depended on his luck, waiting was not completely out of the question. Thus, he decided to try to increase that possibility as much as possible with his own effort.

“Alright then. That’s good enough for me.”

“I know I’m the one who suggested it but are you really fine with that?”

“Yeah. I don’t want you to die after all. I will handle the account transfer from here. Later then.”

Shirou then closed the call. That was right when Katsuragi finished the tour.

“Akira, that would be all the items that I have today… I know that your budget is not unlimited. It would all be in vain if you are too frugal now and end up getting yourself killed, yeah? I think it’s better if you spend as much as you can here.”

Katsuragi believed that Akira’s budget this time was tighter than usual. Thus, he said that in an attempt to push him to spend more. Katsuragi was greatly amazed when he heard the news that Akira managed to repel the Hunters who came after him. Unfortunately, that event would not yield Akira any funding. As a matter of fact, Akira would have had to spend a lot to repel them.

Even when he was aware of this, Katsuragi still stuffed his trailer with expensive equipment and came to Akira. This was all based on nothing but his intuition. That was why he made an offer to Akira.

“But well, if you don’t have enough to purchase what you want, here is the thing. About the bargaining I mentioned earlier…”

“Ahh, don’t worry about that. I will just buy them normally.”

“Eh?”

Katsuragi was obviously taken aback.

However, Akira simply ignored him as he casually picked some equipment off the shelves. An augmented suit, ammo, medicines, bike parts. He carried all kinds of things off from the trailer and unloaded them into the garage.

“I guess this should be enough. Katsuragi, how much is the total?”

“…Come again?”

Katsuragi managed to return to reality as he awkwardly calculated the total.

“A-ah, r-right! Rounding it up, it is 16 billion Aurum.”

Akira took out his Hunter ID and casually handed it over to Katsuragi. Katsuragi clumsily received the ID with a stiff smile. He processed the payment, and as expected, it went through without an issue.

The moment Katsuragi saw the payment notice, he was so shocked that he nearly fainted. Thankfully, Darris flusteredly held Katsuragi up.

“Katsuragi!? Get a hold of yourself!”

Seeing how Katsuragi was laughing awkwardly due to the shock, Akira was reminded of the amount of money that he used in that transaction.

“…I heard that even 10 billion Aurum is only spare change. But… Yeah… As I thought… It is not really something that can be considered as a small sum….”

Alpha smiled wryly when she heard him say that.

“It seems like you’ve grown to the point where your equipment can no longer be bought using spare change anymore. But front-line equipment is even stronger than this. Make sure you don’t let your guard down. Let’s continue to wait for them to arrive, okay?”

“Of course… But still, it makes me wonder just how crazy the eastern front-line is.”

Akira began to imagine a perilous place. A place which even his new 16 billion Aurum equipment would not suffice. A place where he had to get even stronger equipment just to have a chance to survive. As his thoughts wandered off, his body continued to move as he proceeded to prepare his new equipment.

Meanwhile, Katsuragi continued to laugh awkwardly. It took some time before he could finally calm down.

Seeing Akira preparing his new equipment, Sheryl lightly sighed and thought.

[16 billion Aurum, huh? The gap between us is only getting wider again…]

The relics from Tsubaki's area, which were coming to her shop with the help of Inabe, were a huge boon to her relic shop business. Unfortunately, Sheryl could only support Akira for about 100 million Aurum.

She thought that at this rate, she should be able to repay all her debt to Akira soon. However, upon seeing how Akira just paid 16 billion Aurum like it was nothing. She felt disheartened. After all, her perceived worth of 100 million Aurum crashed right into the ground.

Furthermore, the relic shop was temporarily put on hold because of the current situation. The size of the gang had also greatly diminished as well. It had become exceedingly difficult for her to repay Akira.

Sheryl could not hide her sorrow. She had thought that she was slowly but surely getting closer to Akira. But now, reality has hit her. She found out that was not the case at all.

Eventually, Katsuragi returned to his senses. He heaved a huge sigh wearing an equally huge smile. He glanced at Sheryl with a frown.

"Sheryl, just when exactly did Akira become able to casually pay that much? I heard that he received quite a lot from the inter-city transport escort mission. However, I thought that he had already spent it all on his own equipment."

“…It’s Akira, after all. I’m sure he’s earning from other sources as well.”

“You have a point…”

Judging from Sheryl’s reaction, Katsuragi was certain that Sheryl was equally clueless about how Akira had earned so much. Thus, he began to be suspicious of Akira’s relationship with Sheryl. After all, Akira did not even share his monetary sources with her. Since he thought that it was better to keep it to himself, Katsuragi did not voice it out.

Sheryl naturally noticed. However, she was pretending not to notice. Thus, she asked Katsuragi in a manner which seemed as if she was venting.

“Katsuragi-san, if you really had thought that Akira did not have that much, then why did you come here with all this expensive equipment? I don’t see how that would be useful to you at all. After all, even if you brought them here, Akira would not have been able to purchase them.”

“Ahh, well, about that, I just thought that if it’s Akira, then it should be okay. Well, it turns out that my hunch was right, no? That just means my intuition as a merchant is as good as ever. Though I might sound haughty, feel free to admire my merchant skill. After all, I did not let this chance slip by.”

Katsuragi really thought that Akira would not be able to afford anything but a handful of ammo. The reason why he brought expensive equipment, knowing Akira would most likely not be able to purchase them, was to lure Akira to negotiate with him.

As a 50 billion bounty target, many Hunters were closely observing Akira’s moves. When Akira managed to repel the groups of Hunters that attacked him, it was only natural for other Hunters to get interested in his equipment. It was an extremely effective method of advertising.

Katsuragi had brought the expensive equipment from Kiryou and TOSON, using Kibayashi as an intermediary to procure them. He was planning on renting them to Akira, which would bind him under a contract. If everything went as he had envisioned it, he would be able to get powerful connections to these large companies and force Akira to only purchase equipment from him. The profits from this were huge. Naturally, at that point, his relationship with Akira would change to that of a lender and a borrower. However, since it was not a sale but instead, a rental, it was a plan made for long-term profits.

Unfortunately, Akira did not borrow from him but managed to purchase new equipment from Katsuragi. Thus, the rental contract of equipment worth 16 billion Aurum had turned to dust. Instead, it had become a pure sale of 16 billion Aurum. The transaction of 16 billion Aurum had shocked Katsuragi so much that he nearly fainted.

Sheryl had an inkling of what Katsuragi was trying to do. Thus, she hatched a plan and then lightly reminded Katsuragi, that it was all possible because the person in question was Akira.

Sheryl then reminded Katsuragi.

“Well, your sale went so well that you nearly fainted. Please continue to support us with that amazing business skill of yours.”

“Of course, that is, as long as you and Akira are together.”

“…Naturally.”

This meant that their relationship would end the moment Akira died. They both had all kinds of thoughts in their minds as they were staring silently at Akira, who was busy with his new equipment.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 281, The Aftermath of A Trouble

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After finishing their businesses with Akira and the others, Katsuragi and Darris started their preparation to leave Sheryl's base. Before he left, Katsuragi, who was already sitting in the driver's seat, left a few words to Akira.

"I'm glad that I don't have to go looking for you out in the middle of the wasteland… Good luck… And don't die, Akira."

"…You too. I heard that the area around here is regarded as a part of the wasteland. So, be careful out there."

"You can definitely say that again."

Both of them smiled at each other. Akira, with his usual smile and Katsuragi, with a wry one. Katsuragi then started the trailer and left.

Akira closed the shutter down and heaved a sigh.

[I got new equipment and replenished my ammo stock. I guess what's left is to wait, huh?]

He would attack back when attacked. If there were no problems, he would raid the inner wall once he got his new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Either way, there was no rush to do either. The only thing he could do right now was to wait. With that in mind, Akira reminded himself to calm down. Not to get ahead of himself.

Alpha, who saw him act in such a manner, found it to be rather strange.

“Akira. What’s with that troubled face? You got new equipment and were able to replenish your reserve ammo, right?”

“…Well, it’s 16 billion Aurum, you know? Although it’s an upfront payment, it’s basically a form of debt. I don’t have the money to pay it back.”

Akira was thinking of repaying any of his debt as soon as possible. Naturally, paying the debt back was his priority and he assumed that the other party did think of it as a debt. Even so, 16 billion Aurum was not a small sum for Akira.

“We can just do his request sometime soon. I’m sure it will be fine.”

“Well, that might be true. But we don’t know for sure when we will actually be able to do his request. A debt which I don’t know when I can pay back… I still really can’t mentally set it aside.”

At the moment, Akira could not achieve anything without making some sacrifices. Nonetheless, he still feels like he might have made a mistake. His thoughts were still stuck with the sum that he had received from Shirou as upfront payment.

Alpha smiled and tried to cheer him up.

“Let’s just hope that you will find a time after we’re done with the current issues. Your worries are meaningless if you die after all, right?”

“…You’re right.”

Akira finally relaxed. He might not be able to pay back the 16 billion Aurum debt. However, to at least begin repaying, he needed to survive. Thus, he decided to look at his situation with optimism.

“Akira, putting that aside, you have received a message from Drankam and Reina. Both are requesting to meet you in person.”

After Akira heard the details of both messages from Alpha, he was a little bit caught off guard. He asked Alpha to tell them to come here if they really wanted to meet him. It did not take long for both to reply: ‘I am coming right away’.

A vehicle with Drankam’s logo was racing through the slums. There were only two people in that vehicle: Arabe, who was a negotiator from Drankam and Shikarabe. Arabe was the one who had to explain the situation to Akira, and was there to speak with him. Meanwhile, Shikarabe was there as Arabe’s escort.

With the looming trouble just right around the corner, Arabe, who was sitting on the driver’s assistant seat, sighed.

“Negotiate with a 50 billion Aurum bounty target, huh… This is not something a normal Hunter gang would do. Even if we’re from the same city, you know?”

Shikarabe smiled wryly.

“But we have no other choice but to do it, right? To prevent further conflict with Akira after the Katsuya incident, we even went as far as to prepare a peace treaty through the Hunter Office. If we are going to scrap that peace treaty, in the worst-case scenario, the whole gang might get eradicated, you know?”

“And that’s by the Hunter Office? Or by Akira?”

“Is there a difference?”

Hearing that, Arabe once again sighed and could not refute. Nonetheless, he commented.

“To think that incident would cause problems till this point… Katsuya was a huge pain when he was still alive, and he is still causing trouble even after his death. What a really troublesome guy.”

“That’s just the way it is, but it is also thanks to him that Drankam can grow this big. So, let’s just think of it as us finally needing to pay our dues.”

Arabe raised his eyebrows since it sounded like Shikarabe giving Katsuya recognition.

“I didn’t expect you of all people would say something like that. I thought you hate him.”

“And I did tell you this so many times before. I’m not that stupid as to let my personal feeling affect my evaluation.”

“Really now…?”

Seeing how Shikarabe was talking about Katsuya with a smile, Arable cracked out a soft smile. He concluded that his friend had already gotten over Katsuya.

“But still, what can I say… It’s as you had warned me before. I’m glad that I didn’t invite Akira to join Drankam. No one in their right mind would pick a fight with Lion Steel. In the worst-case scenario, he might even drag Drankam into his fight with Lion Steel. Thank goodness I didn’t invite him.”

“Told you. My intuition is as sharp as ever.”

“So, what is your intuition saying this time?”

“Hmm, let’s see. Well, we should manage somehow, I guess?”

“I see. I guess I will pin my hope on that intuition of yours.”

Arabe smiled as he was partially serious about what he said. Seeing his friend like this, Shikarabe cracked out a bitter smile. He seemed to be genuinely happy that his friend had so much faith in him. After all, it was not an exaggeration to say that Shikarabe and Arabe had the fate of Drankam on their shoulders. The weight continued to press on them as they proceeded through the slums and into where Akira was.

Around the same time, a vehicle with a Lion Steel Eastern District Fourth Ward Branch's logo on it was racing through the slums. It was a vehicle that Reina's group had borrowed. There was a large Lion Steel logo painted on it, which bothered Reina.

"Say, Shiori, is it really going to be fine meeting Akira in this vehicle?"

"I have contacted Akira-sama beforehand and I have sent the ID code of this vehicle. As long as Akira-sama doesn't see us as hostile, I am sure that he will not attack this vehicle. Moreover, I cannot recommend going through the wasteland on foot. Meanwhile, if we try to hide with camouflage, it would make us look suspicious."

"Wasteland, huh…"

"Yes, please think of this area as a part of the wasteland. I'm not being hyperbolic. It really is being treated as part of the wasteland."

With a 50 billion bounty target hiding in the slums, the border to the lower district was now being guarded by the city defence squad. Basically, it was recognised as a dangerous area. There would be no surprise if a large-scale battle suddenly broke out. Thus, it was to be expected that the area got recognized as a part of the wasteland.

Kanae smiled amusedly and asked.

"Well, Ane-san. There's no need to worry about the small things at this point, no?"

"Small things…? It's for Milady's safety, you know?"

“Ane-san, are you being serious? The moment Milady agreed to come with us to kill Chloe-sama, there’s no need to mention this kind of small things anymore.”

Shiori frowned. She could not refute Kanae’s point.

They had basically abandoned the third ward and joined the fourth ward. They could have asked the fourth ward to ensure Reina’s safety. However, it would be meaningless if the fourth ward used this as an opportunity to take Reina hostage. Reina also adamantly insisted on joining them. Thus, Shiori made the decision to take Reina along and protect Reina by herself.

Togami suddenly interjected.

“Shiori-san, Akira will believe you when you state we are not hostile towards him, right? Wouldn’t that already be good enough?”

“Well, that’s true, but…”

“I don’t see any other options. The third ward will see us as enemies. Especially after we allied with the fourth ward to kill Chloe and the others. To prevent any possibility of the fourth ward handing Reina over to the third ward, it is better to bring her along with us. I believe you already considered this, and it is the main reason why you agreed to take her with us. It’s also why we are working together.”

“That’s true, but still…”

Shiori sounded defeated as bit her lips. Watching her smile, Reina finally joined into the conversation.

“I do feel bad for dragging all of you here for my selfishness. But please help me out here.”

“Please don’t worry about it Milady. As long as I am alive, I will always be by your side to serve you.”

Shiori was so happy that her master was worried for her. That joy made her inadvertently pledge her loyalty. However, she soon realised that her words, ‘please don’t worry about it Milady’, had basically approved of their current situation. Furthermore, Reina intentionally spoke to induce her to say what she had said.

“Milady… You’ve really become strong.”

“Is that so? I will take as a compliment.”

Reina smiled happily with dignity suitable for a master.

When they arrived at Sheryl’s base, they also saw Shikarabe and Arabe. As both parties stated that they were there to meet Akira, they both went inside the base together.

Akira was a bit surprised to see Drankam’s group come in together with Reina’s group. However, he decided to talk with Drankam’s group first.

Facing a 50 billion bounty target, Arabe nervously and cautiously stated why he was here.

“I’m sure you have read my message, but allow me to convey it one more time. First, Drankam has no desire to be hostile with you. So please, keep this in mind as you listen to what I need to say next.”

It was basically about what was left of the Katsuya faction. What they might do, how to handle them, and a formal apology from Drankam.

The Katsuya faction was a huge faction inside Drankam. However, with Katsuya’s death, its influence quickly waned. Nonetheless, they had infallible loyalty towards Katsuya. Many of them still held a strong grudge against Akira. Some of them signed the peace treaty with a heavy heart. Some even outright refused to sign the peace treaty.

In the end, Drankam decided not to kick all of them out of the gang. Instead, they chose to keep them under close observation. After all, it would be troublesome for Drankam if they sneaked out of the gang to attack Akira on the same day they left. The peace treaty between Drankam and Akira was made through the Hunter Office. If they left Drankam and immediately attacked Akira, Drankam could not simply relinquish their responsibility by claiming that those who attacked Akira had already left the gang. Moreover, many of the Katsuya faction were youngsters. In order not to prolong the feud between the young and the veteran members of the gang, the gang decided not to deliver any harsh punishment onto them. They originally planned to let time naturally chip away their grudge.

Their decision was partially right. Unfortunately, it had also partially backfired. Just the other day, several members who were under close watch suddenly vanished. Since they were not kicked out of the gang and were put under close watch, Drankam was able to track their movements. There was fear that they would use Akira's situation as an opportunity to attack him. Since they stayed with Drankam after the incident, Drankam could not simply claim that they had nothing to do with the gang. No matter what they come up with, their association could not be dropped. Thus, the gang had no other choice but to do something to resolve this situation internally.

"In this situation, I want you to understand something. Even if they attack you sometime soon, it's not Drankam's will. They are acting independently. We will take this as an internal issue and deal with them ourselves. Considering the situation, you might want to ask for some escorts from Drankam. However, this is an internal problem. So, I'm sorry to say this. Although we will not be hostile with you, we cannot join your side. We will stay neutral, so I hope you can understand."

Arabe explained and lowered his head to perform a deep bow.

On the other hand, Akira did not understand why he would come all the way here just to say this. For all that he cared, they could just handle it themselves without telling him. Thus, Alpha warned Akira.

This was just how badly Drankam did not want to get into a fight with him. However, Drankam was also afraid of being seen as Akira's ally by Lion Steel. That was why they came all the way here. It was to cement their neutral position. Thus, although with a slight delay, Akira was finally able to understand why Arabe came all the way here just to explain.

“I see. Fine then. It’s also a positive for me that you have no wish to fight me. It’s also helpful if you are going to eliminate those who are trying to attack me. So, feel free to do whatever you want.”

“Thank you very much.”

Arabe raised his head and sighed in relief. Watching him, Shikarabe smiled wryly.

The next order of business was with Reina’s group. Reina stepped to the front as the representative.

“Uhhh, let’s see… where should I start… I guess I should start with our situation, huh?”

Reina then gave a short explanation to Akira. It was basically about Reina’s group accepting a mission to kill Chloe from Lion Steel Eastern District Fourth Ward Branch. The fact that they were already opposing Chloe. They even tried to attack Chloe’s group. Although they did not manage to kill her, they were able to kill Latis. They also managed to kill off some Hunters that were attacking Akira in the process. Finally, in the worst-case scenario, a war between branches might break out.

Akira was astonished. In the previous message, Reina only mentioned someone about their discussion being related to Lion Steel and Chloe. He never thought that it would be this big of a bombshell.

“So, there’s something I need to confirm with you about the matter with Chloe. It’s not like you will tell us to keep our hands off her since she’s your prey, right?”

“Nah. Just because I want to kill her, doesn’t mean I wish others will not try to do so. You can go ahead and kill her if you want. As a matter of fact, I don’t really care even if it’s due to a disease or an accident. As long as she’s dead, I don’t really care.”

“I knew you would say that.”

Reina casually exclaimed, but deep inside, she was extremely relieved.

Logically, antagonizing the Lion Steel company would yield no benefits. Nonetheless, Akira had done it. Thus, there was a good chance that Akira tends to decide based on his emotions. Even if he did it purely out of his own interest, it only proves just how abnormal his thought process was.

Thus, Reina was worried that Akira might insist on killing Chloe with his own hands. That he might see anyone in his way as enemies. Reina was relieved after she was given confirmation, everything was just her own concerns.

“Just one more thing. We are both aiming to kill Chloe. So, do you want to work together? That way, the Fourth Ward will be able to provide you with support. I don’t think it’s a bad idea.”

“I’m sorry, but I have to refuse. I want to have the freedom to decide my actions. If I work together with someone else and something goes wrong, it might turn really troublesome.”

“That’s true… If you’re going to say yes here, then you would have already accepted branch manager Flip’s offer.”

Reina expected Akira to turn down her offer. Since he did as she had expected, she moved on to the next subject.

“In that case, would it be okay if we stay close to you? With Chloe after you, it’s better for us if we stay near you. If possible, we want to use this HQ as well.”

That was when Shikarabe suddenly interjected.

“It would be great if you can grant us permission as well. Though we won’t stay as your bodyguard, this is a good opportunity for us to hunt those from Drankam who want to kill you. You’re planning to stay around here for the time being, right?”

“As long as you don’t get in my way, you can do whatever you want. If you want to stay here, you should talk to Sheryl. After all, it’s not like I own this place. I’m just borrowing this place from Sheryl as well. If she tells me to get out, I will have no other choice but to leave.”

Akira said it as a matter of fact. There were no signs he was joking. The others there were flummoxed and inadvertently turned towards Sheryl.

“I won’t say such a thing.”

There were thorns in her words. It was rare for her to express annoyance toward Akira like this. Akira found it to be a bit weird. Meanwhile, seeing their exchange, Carol smiled bitterly.

Shikarabe and the others were even more discombobulated. It seems like Akira would really obediently leave if Sheryl told him to get out. That was the atmosphere of the room at the moment.

Shikarabe glanced at Arabe and Reina glanced at Shiori. Both Shiori and Arabe immediately stepped forward to negotiate. They treated Sheryl not as a leader of a slum gang, but as someone with the power to have a say on Akira’s actions. As such, they had no other choice but to take their negotiations extremely seriously.

The result was, Reina’s group being allowed to take one of the rooms inside HQ. Since it was a room that was prepared for guests who were looking for relics from Tsubaki’s territory, the room was well decorated and of considerably good quality. Togami was amazed when he stepped into the room.

“Whoah! I didn’t know something like this existed inside the slums. And here I thought they would assign us into a warehouse or something, but this is amazing.”

Erio, who guided Reina’s group to the room, smiled wryly when he heard Togami’s remark.

“Well, there’s a good chance this whole place will be turned into a pile of rocks tomorrow.”

Akira was also inside the building. It would not be strange if the Hunters after him attacked this place. The building’s defences have been bolstered by several modifications to the point it was as strong as a fort. Nonetheless, Erio, who had known Akira for a long time, knew once a building got involved in a fight with Akira in it, there was a good chance that it would collapse.

“This room is also equipped with a bath. Though, you can use the large bath that everyone usually uses if you want. For that one, you need to book a slot first before you can use it. You can book your time through the terminal installed in this room. Ah, but you need to know this first. If Akira-san or Boss wants to use it, we will prioritize them. I’m sorry but that’s just how it is.”

Although the room was luxurious for Togami, it was nothing special for Reina. She casually stepped into the room and looked around.

“I see. Well, it’s only to be expected. It’s Akira and the boss of this place after all. We’re basically here because they allowed us to be here.”

“Yeah, it can’t be helped. It’s Akira-san and the boss. It might be possible to make a compromise if it’s only one of them, but with the two of them together, we can’t really refuse them.”

“Yeah, that’s… Wait? What?”

Reina stopped midway. Erio just said something that caught her completely off guard. She frowned and tilted her head before asking for confirmation.

“Two of them together? Do you mean like…they go in the bath together?”

“Yup, they’re in a relationship, after all.”

“Ohh, that’s a bit unexpected. I always thought that Akira had no interest in that kind of thing. Is that why there’s no separate bath for girls and boys registered in the reservation system?”

“…Yeah. Anyway, that will be all from me, I will take my leave now.”

Erio was able to notice that Reina had already guessed how their relationship worked. Sheryl was the aggressive one while Akira did not really care that much about it. He did not even care about Sheryl going into the bath with him. He immediately reflected on his words and regretted them. He should not have said anything. Looking for a quick retreat, he left the room.

Unlike Reina, Shiori, and Kanae, who were all female, Togami seemed rather jealous. Reina took notice and smiled as she asked him.

“Togami, want to go?”

Reina did not say ‘together’ but her words already implied it. Reina did it intentionally as her smile deepened.

Togami froze. He then slowly and carefully glanced at Shiori and Kanae.

“If Milady wants to form a serious relationship with Togami-sama, it’s not my place to say anything.”

“As long as I don’t think you’re a bad guy, I won’t do anything.”

Which meant, if it was not a serious relationship, or if he was thought to be a bad guy, it would be his end. He would either be sliced into small pieces or beaten into a pulp. Togami had no courage to affirm that right now.

“I-I will have to go out for a bit. I need to check how Drankam plans to treat us…”

Seeing how Togami basically refused to give a straight answer. Kanae and Shiori commented on him as he awkwardly laughed and left the room.

“What a wimp.”

“Let’s just say that he’s being extra cautious.”

Kanae was smiling amusedly while Shiori heaved a sigh. Reina was laughing since it turned out exactly as she had planned. However, there was a little bit of sorrow in it.

As for Drankam, Sheryl was willing to let Drankam use one of the halls. Drankam also rented out some small rooms for resting. When Togami asked Arabe if he could use one of those small rooms, Arabe refused with no sign of compromise.

“No. I won’t let you make any connections to us. As I said, Drankam is taking a neutral stance. So, we won’t give you any assistance.”

Reina had already formally left the gang. Meanwhile, Togami had formally taken the request from Reina as an individual. Thus, Reina’s group no longer had anything to do with Drankam. The reason why Drankam forced Reina to leave the gang was to prevent the Lion Steel Third Ward branch from seeing the gang as hostile. By maintaining separate relations, Drankam was able to ascertain its neutral stance.

“A neutral stance can also be interpreted as taking the opposite side against all parties, you know? To ensure that wouldn’t happen, we’re being extra careful. Make sure that you don’t get involved with us too. If you want to borrow another room, you should do so without us. If you understand, keep your distance from us.”

“Alright, alright, I’ll do as you suggest.”

Togami sighed and left. After that, Shikarabe asked Arabe.

“What do you think? We can go help Reina’s group and form a connection with the Fourth Ward branch. Togami got pretty powerful weapons from them, right? It would be great if we can get equipment of the same level as him, you know?”

“No. In exchange, I’m sure they’ll want us to help them fight the third ward branch. If Drankam gets involved in a fight between two branches of Lion Steel, we will get wiped out in no time.”

“Then, what if a portion of the Katsuya faction that left the gang went and allied with Chloe? I’m sure they’ll not just throw their lives away. Isn’t that exactly why they’re keeping quiet up until now. There must be some kind of reason they are suddenly making their move now.”

“That’s plausible, but it’s nothing but unfounded worry at the moment. If we ally with the fourth ward due to it, we would be picking a fight with the third ward. Considering the current known facts, we can’t afford to do that.”

Even if a portion of the Katsuya faction suddenly vanished because of Chloe, it was highly likely that they could only muster up till 100 million Aurum of supportive funding. Since Drankam should be able to deal with this internal issue by themselves, there was no need to rely on equipment from Lion Steel. Arabe then added that it was not easy to decide on what course of action they should take.

Shikarabe finally backed off.

“Well, it’s your job. Officers are the ones calculating the profit and losses… So yeah, I get it. It’s just that… I’m a bit interested in equipment from Lion Steel.”

“At the very least, it was not something that I can decide by ourselves here. I will at least bring up the idea to the other officers when we return.”

Arabe continued and this time, laughed amusedly.

“Well, let’s say that we somehow ended up borrowing equipment from Lion Steel. Even if they send in maid outfits, I will have you use them, you know?”

“…Uhh, if that happens, wouldn’t it be butler uniforms? Like the one that Togami is wearing?”

“It’s not like we can tell them what to send. But if we really end up doing that, I bet it will be exceptionally powerful equipment. It might even be worth considering Drankam to break its neutral stance. Well, no matter what the design is, if we really end up borrowing from them, I'll have you use them, okay?"

"…Uhh, I'm good, I have my own augmented suit, you know…"

"No, no, no. You're basically seen as the leader of the team when you're working outside. I will have you use them to act as an example. I will also do that for Kurosawa. Well, he's interested in that kind of thing if I'm not mistaken. I guess he would be the perfect person for this."

"But if I remember it correctly, he has no hobby cross-dressing though…"

Shikarabe smiled wryly as he thought that he should not have said what he had said back then.

Akira was on the rooftop. He was looking around the surrounding area. A scene of the deserted slums was laid in front of him. Thanks to Alpha's support, he was able to detect anyone in the area.

First was Erio and the others. They were using augmented suits with coordination support as they patrolled the area around HQ. Thanks to their equipment and training, they were able to work effectively as a team. They were already strong enough to fight evenly against common Hunters. However, the Hunters attacking should all be high-ranking Hunters. After all, they were after a target worth 50 billion bounty. Even with everything they had, Erio and the others had zero chance of winning against them. Akira, aware of this, did not expect any meaningful support from them.

At the moment, they were checking the surroundings with the help of the information-gathering devices spread around the area. They even had them installed outside of Sheryl's gang's area. Normally, that would provoke the other gangs into a fight. However, since the area around them basically got abandoned, no one around would complain.

With the help of those information-gathering devices, they were able to check the situation inside the slums from afar. When they spotted Akira on the rooftop, some of them looked unhappy. They quickly looked away and scurried off when Akira looked back at them.

Although there were not many, there were those that shot at Akira. They used their sniper rifles and shot barely within its effective range. That was just how tempting the 50 billion Aurum bounty was. However, even when they managed to shoot Akira from his blind side, Akira would simply evade it. He would make minimal movements and shoot back at them. His powerful bullet did not face anything it could consider a hindrance as it tore through flesh and blew their head off. It was the obvious end to those who mistook Akira's ability to shoot back. They got lured by his bounty and mistook the distance from him for safety.

Alpha smiled and praised Akira.

"Nicely done. It's pretty impressive that you can already do this much all on your own."

"Is that so?… Well, I guess it is if you say so."

However, Akira still had a troubled look on his face. As expected, Alpha got a bit bothered by it.

"Is there anything that you find dissatisfying about that shot?"

"That's not it, It's just… I didn't buy this equipment from Shizuka-san, right? I'm just a bit worried if it's going to be okay…"

One of the reasons why Akira always bought his equipment from Shizuka was because he admired her. Another reason was because of 'superstition'. It was thanks to the equipment that he bought from Shizuka that he was able to survive for this long.

At the moment, he was using equipment that he bought from Katsuragi. Akira knew that he was overthinking, but he could not shake off his worries. Thus, it kept bothering him. Even after he intentionally climbed up to the rooftop, exposed himself, tested his new equipment and had confirmed that it was fine, he still could not help but worry.

Watching him act like this, Alpha smiled and tried to reassure him.

“Don’t worry. It’s perfectly fine. Even that bike that you bought in Zegelt is working well, right? The equipment that will be arriving from Sakashita Heavy Industry is also not from Shizuka’s shop, you know? If you keep getting bothered by this, you won’t be able to fight with a focused mind.”

“…You have a point.”

Akira gave a deep nod. It was as if he was convincing himself of what he had just said.

That was when Togami came up to him, asking for an extra room. When he asked what Akira was doing up there, Akira just said that he was checking his new equipment. As expected, even Togami winced back when he was told this.

Akira did not even need to say that he was using people who were attacking as target practice. Togami already figured it out without the need for Akira to tell him. Strangely enough, he was convinced Akira became a bounty target because of such actions.

Silavin: Honestly, my boy just sees so little worth in human life that it even makes killers shiver.

Other madmen might kill for joy. He literally kills because he wants to test how sharp his knife is.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 282, The Direction Of The Killing Intent

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

It had been a week since Akria started living in Sheryl's base. Even so, there were no huge changes to his surroundings. There were no attacks and his new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry also had not arrived yet. The only unfortunate change was that he no longer could find any targets to practice on, to test his new equipment.

It was not like Akira could do anything about the situation as well. As the situation continued, one day, he heard something from Shirou from inside the camping vehicle.

"Akira, as far as I have investigated, it won't be strange for the next attack to come anytime soon. It'll be even bigger than before."

Their conversation started with good news for Akira. After all, it seemed like it was only a matter of time before Chloe got kicked out of the inner wall.

On paper, Chloe was officially put under house arrest inside Kugamayama city. However, Inabe somehow managed to lift the house arrest. Inabe gave the reason for it being a bad idea to place someone from the Lion Steel Founder Family under house arrest for so long.

Udajima thought it was Inabe's plan to use that as a pretext to remove Akira's monster designation. Thus, he made a counter suggestion during the officer's meeting to not retract Akira's monster designation. In the end, Inabe was forced to back down and was only able to get Chloe's house arrest lifted.

However, it went as Inabe had planned. The reason why Inabe was acting as if he was about to remove Akira's monster designation was simply to shift Udajima's focus to that matter. Now that Chloe was no longer under house arrest, the city had no reason to shelter her. Thus, Inabe could demand protection money from Chloe.

It was already known that someone with a 50 billion Aurum bounty was aiming for her life. Furthermore, Akira was scheduled to get front-line equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry. With the ongoing battle between Lion Steel's Third and Fourth ward, there was a good chance that the city would be engulfed in it if Chloe stayed in the city. Thus, for all these reasons, Inabe was charging as much as possible for Chloe's protection fees.

On the first day, it was only 100 million Aurum. Soon, after multiple negotiations, it was jacked up to 1 billion Aurum per day. He planned on increasing it until he could push Chloe out of the city. It might even reach trillions of Aurum a day.

As for Kugamayama city, the higher the protection fee, the better it was for them. Once Chloe decided to leave the city, there was no need for Akira to try to force his way into it with his front-line weapon anymore. Those who wanted the city to stay neutral and those who preferred to stay out of the fight, supported Inabe's idea because of this reason.

As expected, even the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward branch could not continue to pay if the protection fees kept going up. It was only a matter of time before Chloe had to leave the city.

"Because of this, the third branch had gathered their military forces in the facility near Higaraka to escort Chloe to another city. To be more precise, they are using this as an excuse to gather soldiers there. Judging from the scale, it would not be strange for them to suddenly attack Kugamayama city. Though, they continue to claim it as a necessity to fight back against a 50 billion bounty target who has the support of the Fourth branch. Well, City Management keeps pushing the protection fee up using the threat from you as an excuse. So, the third branch can't really complain about the fees."

Akira nodded and asked Shirou a question.

"By the way, how did you get all this information?"

"Well, through a lot of means. The details are confidential."

"I see. Putting that aside, it's quite impressive for you to gather that much information. You're pretty amazing."

"Yup, that's right, I'm indeed amazing, yeah?"

Shirou had pride in his own skill. However, the fact that Akira was not amazed by it up until now was a thorn that continued to bother him. Now that Akira complimented him, Shirou replied back with bolstered smugness.

"Though it might be weird for me to say this myself, information is the key to ruling the world. I was specially trained in the Sakashita facilities to be victorious in any information warfare. I was even receiving special treatment. I'm just that great, you know? That information that I told you just now was something that no normal person could get a hold of. Just to remind you, you owe me one for this."

Akira questioned if he had somehow provoked Shirou in a strange way. He decided to simply continue the conversation in a more soothing manner.

"I know, I know. I owe you one for that. So, when will they make their move? I bet something will happen soon. To be exact, just how soon would that be? A few days? Tomorrow? An hour from now?"

Akira lightly joked as he asked, but Shirou unexpectedly replied with a serious expression.

"…Exactly this instant."

“Hah?”

“They just made their move. They just dispatched a squad from their facility in Higaraka. It’s about 20 large-sized armed vehicles… No, thirty… Wait, there’s more?”

“Armed vehicles? Like tanks?”

“Hmmm, they look more like mobile missile pods. Ooh, they’re stuffed full with missile launchers.”

“Either way, it’s not something that would be normally used near a city.”

“I don’t care about such flimsy rules. The only thing that I care about is the fact that they are bringing out all these weapons from Higaraka to Kugamayama city. This includes powered suits and APCs. So far, that’s all I know.”

Akira pondered with a severe expression. It was completely dependent on their side, whether they would use force to assault the city. Even if it meant antagonizing the city, Akira fully expected them to continue their pursuit.

Lion Steel was a huge company. There was no telling how far it was willing to go against Kugamayama city. The Hunters did try to attack Akira when he was in the midst of negotiations with City Management. However, it was still understandable considering that he had a huge bounty set by Lion Steel. Additionally, although it was located right next to the city, the slums were treated as a part of the wasteland. Thus, there was no reason for them to hesitate in blowing up the whole place if it meant taking him down. Akira’s thoughts narrowed down to – ‘they will definitely attack’. He started to ponder over methods to deal with the upcoming large assault.

“Alpha, what do you think? If they attack the slums, it might be better for me to go out and face them out in the wasteland instead, no?”

“No. Let’s prepare to face them in the slums. They might hesitate if we’re in the slums. After all, their attacks might damage the city. City Management would have to send out the city defence squad as well. So, it would be better if you can stay within the slum on your bike but not be in this base.”

“Alright, let’s get ready then.”

Although he said that, Akira had already prepared his bike to be refitted with weapons. In other words, he was already fully prepared. The only thing he had to do was warn the others about the upcoming assault.

However, the only one that he could inform was Carol. After all, no one else knew about Shirou’s existence. He could not afford to tell the others. As he was pondering over a way to inform the others, Carol casually came up with a solution.

“Alright. I will slowly let the other people know.”

“Eh? Would that be alright?”

Seeing Akira’s worried expression, she smiled with optimism and said.

“Didn’t I tell you before? Why I’m close to Viola? It is exactly for times like this. It won’t be strange for me to know things that normal people wouldn’t know.”

Akira tilted his head and smiled.

“Ah, you’re right. Alright then. I’ll leave it to you”

“I’ll get it done right away, so just wait for a bit.”

“No, I’m heading out alone. Carol, you stay in the base.”

Carol immediately pouted.

“You’re leaving me behind? Are you saying you don’t need my help anymore?”

“That’s not it. I want you to stay in the camping vehicle together with Shirou. If things go wrong, I will have to return back to living in the wasteland. Sorry, but I'll leave the camping vehicle and safety of the base to you."

Even after he explained, Carol still seemed displeased with his decision.

"…So, it's not like you don't want to rely on me anymore, right?"

"I'm relying on you. Otherwise, I won't be leaving the camping vehicle, filled with ammunition to you, right? That is my lifeline in the case I have to live out in the wasteland again, you know? I have no plans to spend the night out in the wasteland with an empty rifle."

Carol's usual confident smile returned.

"Of course, you can leave that to me!"

She then stared at Akira.

"Akira."

"Yes?"

"Don't die."

"Of course! You too."

Akira and Carol said in a joking manner, but it was all their honest feelings.

Afterwards, Carol went to let Sheryl's group, Reina's group, as well as Shikarabe's group know. As for Akira, he returned to the garage and hopped on his bike, and left the base. Once he was distant enough from the base, so that it would not get involved, Akira picked one of the nearby buildings. He went to the rooftop and gazed toward the open wasteland.

The wasteland still looked the same as usual. It was as decrepit and lonely as ever. However, for Akira who knew about the force that was dispatched from the Higaraka ruin, it felt like the silence before the storm.

That was when suddenly Alpha confidently smiled and assured him.

“Don’t worry. I’m right here with you. I’ll be alright.”

“You’re right. I’ll be counting on you this time as well.”

“Just leave it to me.”

Alpha was smiling as confidently as usual. Akira was affected by her and smiled back. Just like always. Just like what he did every time. It was as if this was an essential ritual to achieve victory. Once again, he renewed his resolve.

***

Among the forces dispatched, Pamela too was present. She looked happily at Latis as she declared.

“Latis, it’s finally time. Let’s do our best together.”

As expected, a dead man could not respond. Even so, Pamela was ecstatic.

A maid who was also from the Lion Steel Eastern District Third Ward Branch, Totra, saw Pamela and frowned with a rather ominous expression.

“…Say, Begg, is it really okay to leave her like this?”

Begg was a butler who was working together with Totra, he whispered back without any change in his expression.

“Let’s not comment on it… You should already know what is expected of us when the branch manager sends us out like this. We just need to do our job. If things go well, our evaluation will go up. That’s already good enough, right?”

“That might be true. They were even willing to open the Rank 9 warehouse. But… it doesn’t feel right to have her as the commander, you know…”

“If you have any complaints, go and tell the branch manager. Don’t go venting it out on me.”

Totra hesitated for a bit before eventually deciding to call Beltram. Once the communication device connected through, Beltram's image appeared inside her augmented vision.

"What is it? Are there any problems?"

"Well, what can I say… I am actually worried about the psychological state of Pamela as the leader of the whole force…"

Totra was using a communication device that would prevent her voice from leaking out while she was speaking with Beltram. Moreover, she also mentioned that if it was possible, she wanted to take over the leadership position in place of Pamela.

Beltram simply listened to her without any change in his expression. Once Totra was done, he then casually said.

"I'm sure you already know by now. This is exactly why your loyalty toward the company is a very important aspect. If you make it the basis of your existence, you would be able to stay calm even after the one closest to you is killed."

"Of course. But, if I may, I don't think it is wise to leave the command of this force to her. We are well armed with weapons from the Rank 9 warehouse. Weapons capable of assaulting a city. I don't believe it is a good idea to leave the command to her."

"…If it's about that, use your skills and loyalty to deal with it. Your duty is to support her. It includes taking command in the case she is deemed no longer able to fulfill her duty as a leader. It is best for you to find a way to improve the situation as much as possible. That also includes making the decision you are proposing."

"I understand."

After she closed the call, Totra smiled. She now had Beltram's word that she could take command when she deemed there was no other choice. Thus, her mind shifted toward what to do in order to remove Pamela. After coming up with a few ideas, she believed that she should just isolate Pamela using her weakened psychological state as an excuse. Thus, she immediately started to make her move.

But right at the next moment, Totra's head got suddenly smashed into the wall behind her. Although she was immediately knocked unconscious, she did not fall from the wall. After all, her head was still held up by an invisible hand.

When the person holding back Totra's head removed their camouflage. A maid appeared out of nowhere. It was the maid who was working under Pamela. She got killed back during the fight against Akira. Currently, she was being controlled remotely by Pamela, just like Latis.

Begg was shaken up by what just happened. He inadvertently looked toward Totra. The moment Begg noticed that there was someone else nearby, he already found Pamela right next to him. She was close enough for Begg to feel her breath. She peered expressionlessly at him, as if looking deep inside his soul.

"Don't get in my way, okay?"

"…But of course. The branch manager also ordered us to give you support. We were not ordered to get in your way."

Pamela was staring emotionless at Begg, who was getting anxious. She paused for a moment before smiling and muttered.

"…I see."

She then returned back to Latis and started talking to the corpse, which did not respond. The automaton under her control started walking again. It still had Totra in its hand, dragging her along as the group moved. The blood dripping from Totra's head slid down to her leg and painted a long red line on the floor.

Begg stood frozen and heaved a huge sigh.

[The ability to control automatons. We didn’t notice its presence at all… and the way she suddenly appeared in front of me out of the blue. Even in that psychological state… she is still a servant serving under someone from the founding family, huh…]

Begg then reminded himself: Put aside everything and just focus on the duty.

Latis sacrificed himself since he thought that leaving Pamela alive would be more beneficial to Chloe. Excluding her psychological state, Latis’ decision was definitely correct.

***

Akira saw a cloud of dust at the very end of what he could see. The source of it was Pamela’s team. He could clearly see tanks equipped with large missiles, as well as multiple powered suits and APCs.

Akira directed his information-gathering device to scan that direction and frowned.

“So, they’re finally here, huh… That aside, if they seriously use those things here, the city will definitely not let it slide? Are they really going to go through with this?”

Alpha smiled, it made her look relaxed even in this situation.

“Well, the very person who made a similar irrational decision is over here after all. So, it should not be surprising to find someone else making similar decisions, no?”

“U-uhh, well, about that, hmmm, you got a good point.”

Akira laughed awkwardly, trying to wiggle out of that topic. Thanks to that momentary distraction, he did not seem anxious anymore.

“I bet they will claim they need such a force to escort Chloe. She is on the brink of getting kicked out of the city, after all. It can be seen as being precautious, considering how dangerous the wasteland is and the fact that someone with a 50 billion bounty on him is after her, it's understandable for them to prepare such powerful escorts."

"If that's really the case, I would be thankful though."

With everything that happened recently, Akira had calmed down considerably. Enough for him to consider going after Chloe only after receiving his new front-line equipment from Sakashita and completing Alpha's request.

However, that plan quickly got abandoned. The missile launchers inclined up and released their payload into the sky, above Kugamayama city.

"Whoah! They've actually started shooting!"

Akira inadvertently gazed up, following the trajectories of the missiles.

Goutol's team was assigned to watch the border between the slums and the lower district. They were able to clearly see the missiles as well.

"Captain, they really started shooting in this direction…"

"Maintain formation. Shoot down any missiles that veered off from the region that they have designated beforehand. Otherwise, don't do anything about them."

"Roger that. But are you sure this will be enough? If we are late in intervening and it ends up damaging the city, it will be horrendous, no?"

"Those in the upper echelons have made the decision. It's not like I can do anything about it, so just stop worrying and do as we are told."

Although it might hit the city, it would still be outside the inner wall. Thus, it was still tolerable, or so Goutol believed as he knitted his eyebrows.

Even after seeing more missiles fill the sky, Goutol's team still only stood guard, not doing anything.

The missiles that were shot up above the city's sky reached the sky directly above the slums. They suddenly changed direction and dove straight down. The initial missiles then exploded, releasing multiple smaller missiles which scattered all over. They covered the whole area from the wasteland to the slums.

Akira thought that the explosions would raise hell on earth. However, that did not happen. The missiles that fell close to the slums were all mini-missiles. None of them exploded.

Akira found it to be strange. He then noticed a change in his vision and tilted his head.

"What was that…?"

The view of the wasteland suddenly blurred to the point where it was difficult to see its buildings from where Akira stood.

Alpha immediately noticed the reason for it.

"Those missiles are discharging jamming smoke. The jamming causes the same effect as thick colourless mist. There's a good chance they also have speed filter effect as well."

"Wait, isn't the use of such smoke pointless in an open space? Since it would disperse right away?"

"If you're using the usual amount, then yes. But with the amount they're using, the effect would retain for a while. Well, it's not like they need it to be thick enough to stop bullets like back in the inter-city transport mission. I bet they're only using enough to ensure no stray bullets would reach the lower district."

Akira finally understood the role of those missiles. If the blast from a huge-scale battle in the slums damaged the city, the city defence squad would be dispatched to remove the threat. That would end their assault. In the first place, that was the reason why he was staying in the slums. By adjusting the reach of their weapons with speed filters, Pamela's force would be able to avoid that problem.

As more and more missiles anchored onto the ground and released jamming smoke, eventually, the area around Akira got enveloped by it.

At that moment, Alpha's expression suddenly turned solemn.

"Akira! Keep calm and quickly go to the next building!"

The bike was already racing. Akira headed to the rooftop so that he could jump to the next building just like what Alpha had advised. However, a moment later, Alpha suddenly vanished. Akira's connection with Alpha got cut off.

"Alpha!?"

Although it caught him off guard, Akira kept his cool. He headed to the other building. After he jumped and landed on the nearby building, he hid deep inside it. He quickly went inside one of the rooms and closed the door.

[…this is only a temporary solution, what next?]

If the jamming smoke hindered Akira's connection to Alpha, then he should be able to regain connection by preventing the smoke from surrounding him. Thus, he thought that closing the door in an enclosed room should at least allow him to reconnect.

"Alpha…?"

Akira anxiously called for Alpha. After a short pause, Alpha reappeared in his vision.

"Akira, are you okay? Keep calm, alright?"

"Yeah, that made me nervous for a bit."

Akira softly smiled and confessed. Watching him act like this made Alpha smile in satisfaction. She continued to elaborate on their current situation.

“Alright, let me explain the situation once again.”

At the moment, Alpha had to focus her resources to maintain their connection through the jamming smoke. Thus, she might not be able to give Akira her full support during the battle. Hearing that his support would be handicapped, Akira frowned and asked.

“What a pain. In that case, wouldn’t it be better if I go above the effective range of the jamming smoke?”

“Unfortunately, that would not be possible. Look up.”

Akira looked up just like he was told to. Normally, he would not be able to see anything except for the ceiling he was facing. However, his augmented vision allowed him to see past the ceiling and right to the sky above the slums. For some reason, that sky was dyed red.

“Hm? That red colour. It’s an area that I’m not allowed to enter, right? I didn’t know they consider the sky above the slums as a part of the lower district.”

“To be more precise, it’s an area where it’s feared it would bring damage to the city if you entered it.”

If Akira went high enough outside the effect of the jamming smoke and the speed filter, there was a good chance that the bombardment would reach the lower district. Thus, Alpha explained if he used that to his advantage, he would basically be using the city as his shield. City Management would definitely see that as a hostile act toward the city.

“Argh! What a pain! Then, I have no other choice but to meet them in the wasteland, right?”

“I don’t recommend you do that. If you head out, they will have no need to worry about the risk of damaging the city anymore. Overall, it will only worsen your situation.”

“Then… in that case…”

“Yeah, we have no other choice but to fight from here. I will try my best to maintain connection even when we’re outside, so be careful.”

“Yeah. I’m counting on you.”

Akira heaved a huge sigh and smiled wryly as he jokingly muttered.

“Or is it that? Are we in this situation because I did not buy equipment from Shizuka-san’s shop this time?”

Akira was partially serious. After all, the things he bought from Shizuka had always proven to be useful to him during all the incidents he had gone through.

Alpha lightly giggled and jokingly replied.

“You might be right. Maybe we should buy a good luck charm the next time we visit her shop.”

“Yeah. You’re right. Let’s do that.”

In order to survive and get that chance, Akira declared in excitement.

“…Alright!! Let’s go then!”

Akira then accelerated his bike away and resolved himself to jump into the battlefield. He was headed towards a place where he might lose his connection to Alpha at any point in time.

The slums regained its silence, it seemed like the missiles stopped. However, that was not the reason why it was silent. It was simply because the jamming smoke had dulled sound propagation, a mimicked effect from the thick colourless mist.

Akira stopped his bike in the middle of an alley.

“Alpha, any enemy?”

“I detect nothing within my scanning range. But don’t drop your guard. The jamming smoke might be preventing me from detecting enemies. After all, it also reduces the support that I can give you. If you feel something is up, trust your intuition.”

“Roger that!”

Akira gathered his focus and sharpened his senses. He probed for information impossible for the five senses. With the help of his information-gathering device under the effect of the jamming smoke, he processed it as his sixth sense, searching for the presence of enemies.

In the next moment, he could feel something coming toward him, and he was facing it.

“Alpha… There’s something ahead…”

“Yeah, I noticed it too. Be careful.”

After noticing someone ahead, Akira carefully moved forward. Based on his scanner, it seemed to be of a humanoid shape. The signal seemed to be approaching him at normal walking speed. However, judging from how it was moving, it did not seem like it was an enemy. Akira was watching carefully as it was approaching him. Since it did not show any sign of hostility, he did not attack.

As the shadow started to get clearer, the figure of a maid showed itself. She was someone Akira had met before. It was Pamela. Even under the effect of the jamming smoke, she was walking casually toward him. Even after they were close enough to recognize each other, she still showed no sign of hostility.

“Stop!”

Akira promptly ordered, Pamela came to an immediate halt, just like she was told to. Akira was wondering if she had come to negotiate. Thus, he ordered her to stop. Pamela smiled and greeted him.

“Long time no see!”

“What is it now?”

“Oh, Shiori and the others are not with you? I thought they would be somewhere close to you, but… well, I guess you should do just fine.”

Akira felt an odd fear after being exposed to hardly any killing intent exuding from Pamela when she worded out her intention to kill him. He was uncertain how he should react to her statement, which lacked the will to kill him.

Either way, it did not change the fact that it was an enemy. As Akira quickly aimed his rifle at Pamela, she reacted accordingly by quickly closing in on him.

Suddenly, a blade appeared and hewed down on Pamela’s neck, cleanly cutting it off from her body. As the head rolled on the ground, the headless body fell limply to embrace the earth.

Akira was taken aback but noticed something strange in front of him. The blood flowing out from Pamela’s beheaded body was green.

Shiori glanced at the decapitated head. But when their eyes met, Pamela’s lips slowly curled up into a smile. Unlike when she was talking with Akira, her gaze showed a clear desire to kill.

“There you are… Found you… I knew you were nearby.”

The mood tensed up. It was a suffocating level of killing intent. However, in contrast to the surprised Akira, Shiori was completely calm.

“Thought so.”

The headless body quickly returned back on its feet and went straight for Shiori. However, before it could reach Shiori, it was suddenly sent flying. It got struck by something invisible on its abdomen.

Kanae stood right where Pamela's body was a moment ago. She had turned off her camouflage and revealed herself. The body-less head turned towards Kanae and smiled ominously.

"You're here too… Don't worry, I'll kill you too."

Shiori sliced the headless body into 4 pieces while Kanae crushed the head under her feet. A gory mix of flesh, blood, and machinery got scattered all over the place.

Akira, who was still a bit confused at what just happened, asked Shiori and Kanae.

"So, can anyone tell me what is going on?"

"That was a remote-controlled automaton controlled by Pamela. As you can see, it can still move even after severing its head. Though it will make it more difficult to control the body, so cutting off its head is not pointless."

"I-I see."

"Also, that must be a declaration of war. I bet she won't feel satisfied with assassinating us. That's why she went out of her way to make a declaration of war. So, her goal isn't merely our death. She wants to kill us with her own hands. That must be the main reason why she didn't use explosive missiles. After this, I'm sure that she will send in swarms of remote automata to kill us."

"O-okay… Uhhh, is Reina and the others somewhere nearby as well?"

"Milady is staying back in the base."

"She was raring to go though. But since we don't think we can protect her during the fight this time, we asked Milady to stay behind."

After briefly explaining, Shiori and Kanae turn towards the wasteland. Akira also followed suit. He knew that there was a huge force coming from that direction.

“That maid seems more motivated to kill you instead of me though. Did you do something that offended her?”

“That seems to be the case indeed.”

“Though, we didn’t expect her to act like this.”

From the wasteland, they could see dozens of remote automata on air bikes storming the slums. Their goal was to get Shiori and Kanae. All these automata had Pamela’s face on them. They also wore the same expression, a grim smile which showed their anticipation, delight, and excitement for the opportunity to kill Kanae and Shiori.

A moment later, Akira and the others were attacked from all directions. Some of the automata jumped off the air bikes and assaulted Akira’s group with their rifles. Those who stayed on their air bikes used machine guns installed on the bikes to do the same. They quickly went to their respective positions and worked together like a well-oiled team.

Akira, Shiori, and Kanae fought back with their respective weapons and equipment. Sounds of explosives and gunfire signalled the start of war within the slums.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 283, Annihilator Warhead

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira's new HC31R augmented suit, code name Los Carden, was a huge upgrade compared to his previous augmented suit. One suit cost as much as 5 billion Aurum. Although he bought it at wasteland price from Katsuragi, it was still worth its price. It was stronger than a powered suit. It was also normally used by high-ranking Hunters who worked further to the east of Zegelt city.

When it came to such powerful equipment, it did not simply augment the physical prowess of its user. It was more correct to say that it transformed its user into a super-human.

It had an advanced support-adjustment system, which corrected the gap in the user's will and their bodily movements. It would enable a complete beginner to run full speed on a 10 centimetres width beam. It also worked in tandem with the user's reaction and unconscious movements, correcting them and making them more precise. It would enhance the skills of its wearer to a level comparable to an expert. It could output enough power to be able to kick a large vehicle up into the air like a pebble. Naturally, with such power, it was fitted with precise output control.

It could also work together with information-gathering devices to sharpen its users' senses. It could help users with extrasensory abilities to extend their senses to cover all 360 degrees. This would not improve one's vision, but instead, the ability to feel presence in all directions. It would remove blind spots and any possibility of getting caught in an ambush. Its user would even be able to feel disturbances in wind pressure.

It was further equipped with extremely powerful forcefield armour, which could project outside. Combined with the data from the information-gathering device, it could project precise forcefield armour to block incoming attacks.

As for the rifles, Akira changed his rifles to RL2 multi-rifles. It was compatible with various types of ammunition. It could change its barrel depending on the calibre of the bullet. It could even use special bullets that no normal multi-rifle could use. It cost 1 billion Aurum per rifle and Akira bought 4 of them. One was fixed to his bike while he carried the other three.

The medicine that he was already using was of the expensive type which cost 50 million Aurum per box. The medicine doubled as battle stimulants. Its healing effect was stronger and lasted longer. It would close major wounds and maintain the body of its consumer in its best state. It allowed extended time for high-speed maneuvers and prolonged the duration its user could fight at their full potential.

Akira's bike got upgraded with various modifications as well. He took off the AF anti-material cannon and replaced it with the newly bought TGP laser cannon. It was unusable unless it was connected to the bike's large-sized energy tank but was extremely powerful. Furthermore, it was easier to use than the AF anti-material cannon.

Including the medicines and the ammunition, all in all, Akira spent 16 billion Aurum in total. It could be said that after the upgrade, he had finally gained suitable firepower for a 50 billion bounty target. Though, it was a bit late into the game.

With all his new equipment, Akira was still hard-pressed against the onslaught from Pamela.

Akira was shooting C-bullets continuously through the small opening between buildings. He accomplished such precise shots while he was flying around with his bike, when up and down held no meaning. The C-bullets, charged with more energy, were faster and stronger than before. They formed a wall which flew toward their targets.

As expected, the remote automata that Pamela controlled could not fully avoid his bullets. However, it was possible to defend against them. They used their forcefield armour and forcefield shield on their air bikes. Even using their maid uniforms to defend against the bullets.

Even when that forcefield armour and shield got shattered by a single shot from the TGP laser cannon, those remote automata did not get completely obliterated. They could still move without their heads. Similarly, even if a part of their bodies got blown off, their remaining limbs would still continue to fight. They needed to be ripped to pieces, to the point it was no longer physically possible to fight. Otherwise, these remote automata would continue to fight under Pamela's will.

All of the automata moved like skilled fighters. They were all very well-equipped. Furthermore, they were fighting together with impeccable teamwork, pressing forward with no fear of death. It was as if their lives were to be sacrificed for a singular goal. That was just how terrifying the group attacking Akira was.

"Woah! They're really strong! Were they always this powerful!?"

Akira was unconsciously comparing them to the maids he had fought previously. Their individual strength, teamwork, equipment, and scale were on another level compared to before. He was feeling the pressure from their exchange. He had thought that he would have no problems facing his enemies with his new equipment. However, that naive belief was immediately swept away.

Even when his bike was moving haphazardly under Alpha's control, the enemy's air bikes were able to keep up without an issue. In the middle of their high-speed chase, both parties were shooting at each other while blocking and evading shots. The buildings engulfed in the battle were falling apart, unable to withstand the intensity of the battle. The crumbled pieces got blown apart even before they were able to fall to the ground.

“Stop complaining and just keep shooting! Next! On your right!”

“I know, I know!!”

Due to the jamming smoke, Alpha could not provide her usual full support to Akira. Thus, he had to compensate through hard work.

Akira compressed his time perception even further. Inside the slowed-down world, falling rubble hardly moved. It would take hours before they reached the ground. Akira’s senses were sharpened to the point he could basically feel the presence of every slow piece of falling rubble.

Even with his compressed time perception, the remote automata were still moving relatively fast. He fixed his aim against those automata and shot at them with the rifle in his right hand. At the same time, he identified the bullets coming for him and actively shifted his position away from where they would travel. Rather than recognizing the incoming shots as a wall of bullets, he accurately identified each individual bullet and predicted their trajectories. He squeezed his body through the small openings between the bullets. At the same time, Akira released a barrage to completely destroy the human-shaped automata, creating mashes of green blood and a mix of metal and flesh.

“Next! Below you!”

“Geez! There’s just no end to them!”

Akira aimed his left RL2 multi-rifle below and released a swarm of mini-missiles. The mini-missiles flew straight toward the maids that were trying to attack Shiori and Kanae. However, the mini-missiles flew way slower than the C-bullets. It exchanged speed for its guiding system. Thus, it did not have enough firepower to break through the automata maids’ forcefield armour and shield.

However, the action of blocking his missiles created a fatal opening for Shiori and Kanae to exploit. Shiori quickly seized the opening and sliced the maids to pieces while Kanae crushed them with her powerful punches. They used effective means to completely destroy the remote automata; which only those with a high degree of knowledge over automata could perform.

Although Akira was fighting at a disadvantage, it was not like he had no chance of winning. He could emerge victorious because Pamela was more focused on killing Shiori and Kanae instead of him. Thus, Akira's priority was to support Kanae and Shiori instead of destroying the remote automata. He would shoot whenever he saw an opening, which happened quite often as the automata were constantly trying to land a fatal blow on Shiori and Kanae. In the end, Akira was able to destroy more automata than the other two.

Pamela's narrow focus was beneficial to Akira, which caused him to be curious about it.

"Say, Alpha. Why is that maid so fixated on Shiori and Kanae? Wasn't it me who tried to kill Chloe from the start? As a matter of fact, I'm still aiming to kill her right now. Wouldn't it be better to prioritize me instead?"

"She must have her own reason for doing something like this. It's not our place to be worried over her reasons. Look. If Shiori and Kanae get killed, you would be next on her list, you know? You should be more worried about that."

If Kanae and Shiori got killed, all the remote automata would go after him, all at the same time. Thus, although it was strange, ensuring Shiori and Kanae survived meant his survival.

"You're right, I'll focus on that."

The TGP laser cannon swept through his enemies. Although the laser was relatively small, it was able to cleanly vaporize the maid automata together with the buildings behind them.

However, some of them managed to put up their forcefield shield to block the laser. They pushed its power output, concentrated the area covered by the shield, and managed to protect themselves.

Unfortunately for them, that was not the end. Akira quickly followed the laser sweep with a barrage of bullets. The forcefield shields got greatly weakened from receiving the laser and could not withstand the barrage. They were broken to pieces when faced against a barrage of C-bullets. A moment later, mini-missiles came in and struck their targets almost at the same time. This resulted in a spectacular explosion, which blew his enemies into chunks.

Akira quickly shifted his attention to his next target. He reminded himself that he did not have the leeway to be thinking about unnecessary things. In order to preserve his life, he needed to desperately provide support for Shiori and Kanae.

Down on the ground, Shiori brought down her blade. It was towards a remote automaton coming at her from the front. Powerful forcefield armour extended from the contact point of the blade, and broke through the enemy’s forcefield armour, splitting its head cleanly into two.

But even after cleaved it into two, the automaton still stared at Shiori. It moved as if it was going to throw a counterattack. It somehow maintained its balance with only one leg as it aimed its rifle at Shiori.

Shiori, who had already anticipated this, quickly jumped to the side. She moved away from where it was aiming and swung her blade horizontally. The body, which was already cut into two, got horizontally sliced apart together with its rifles. Only now did it get rendered completely harmless.

Meanwhile, Kanae drove a powerful kick into one of the remote automata. Her maid augmented suit was provided by the Lion Steel Eastern District Fourth Branch. Her equipment required permission from the branch manager to be borrowed. Thus, she was able to easily break through the forcefield armour and obliterate the upper body of the remote automaton.

As if they were waiting for that opening, two other remote automata released a strike to the left and to the right of Kanae. They were aiming for Kanae's head. However, Kanae quickly swung her arms and countered them, blowing them away. Although the automata were clearly out of her reach, she used the speed filter to send shockwaves from her punches.

As expected, the power was weaker than a direct hit. It only managed to blow them back. It was not enough to destroy their bodies. Nonetheless, it was an opening for Akira. He did not let that chance slip and shot them to pieces.

To prevent damage to the city from bombardment and gunfire, the jamming smoke was mixed with particles that created a speed filter effect. Although it was able to fulfill its original goal, it also provided Kanae and Shiori, who specialized in melee combat, with some level of support.

"Ane-san! Are you going to be okay?"

Shiori was using a powerful accelerator drug, which had minimal side effects. Kanae's bright voice could be heard through the communication device, which made it possible for them to communicate in a similar manner to telepathy.

Shiori replied with a rather curt voice.

"If you have the time to worry about me, you should stop with that smile of yours and take this fight seriously!"

"Well, I can't just remove this side of me, you know!? It would also be the end of me if you get killed here! I'm sure that Akira-boy also knows it. That's exactly why he's providing us support!"

"If you understand that, put more effort into it so as to not cause him unnecessary worry!"

"Yeah yeah! I'm doing my best over here! Though, this is basically the opposite of what we originally planned!"

Shiori’s group had offered Akira to fight against Chloe together, but he rejected it. They would be in trouble if Akira got killed. Thus, they donned their camouflage and hid around him. They originally planned to provide him support if he got into trouble, which would make him more likely to agree to their offer. In the end, a maid automaton appeared. To eliminate it, they had to expose themselves. Afterwards, everything went completely opposite of what they had in mind. Akira was the one providing support.

Though it did not change the fact that they were fighting together, albeit, their current situation being that Shiori and Kanae acted as the decoys.

“But still, those things they are using are meant for attacking a city, right? I didn’t expect them to bring that out, you know!? No matter how much the third ward branch is siding with Chloe, I never thought that Beltram-sama would give the permission to use those weapons just to kill a bounty target, you know?”

“Mention of the bounty target is just an excuse. The request from branch manager Flip to assassinate Chloe too. Half of it is probably an excuse. Fear of a war between branches is also an excuse.”

“Do you mean… that there’s a good chance branch manager Beltram and Flip are actually working together behind the scenes?”

“If that is indeed the case, it would explain why branch manager Beltram allowed the use of the Rank 9 warehouse. That way, they can make this incident bigger. Of course, this is nothing but just my guess.”

Kanae thought Shiori’s guess sounded a bit too far-fetched. She smiled wryly and replied.

“If that’s true, they really threw Milady and Akira-boy into a massive mire of trouble.”

“I’ll have Chloe-sama take responsibility. After all, she started all of this.”

“Well, I will do my best to make her take responsibility as well!”

During the battle, Shiori was obviously livid while Kanae was smiling wryly.

Both worked together, offence and defence, destroying the remote automata one by one. Although the size of the enemy was massive and each automation was strong, their number was dwindling. If they could keep it up, it was only a matter of time before they got the upper hand. Just when Shiori and Kanae started to see the light at the end of the tunnel, the situation suddenly changed.

Akira, who was fighting somewhere not too far away from them, suddenly landed his bike on the ground. He accelerated it toward Shiori and Kanae. He was in such a rush that he was willing to toss away his advantage of mobility. He chose to race on the ground, instead of up in the sky, where he could freely evade.

Shiori and Kanae, who noticed his action, were taken by surprise. They understood that he was subtly warning them to get out of this place as soon as possible. They unhesitatingly jumped on board Akira’s bike.

A moment later, after Akira and the rest left the area, a sudden full-scale bombardment rained down. It obliterated everything in that area. No buildings were left standing.

A large multi-legged vehicle was slowly approaching the border between the slums and the wasteland. A hundred-meter-long cannon was perched on top of its chassis. It would not be strange for a cannon of that size to be installed on an inter-city transport vehicle. Its gargantuan body was supported by thick powerful legs that could easily crush everything in its way as it moved forward.

There was a straight line of destruction drawn from its large muzzle till deep into the slums. Normally, this line would have extended into the lower district. Thanks to the effects of the jamming smoke, that line stopped in the middle of the slums.

Akira was desperately racing out of the area exactly because of that cannon shot.

As he drove to the other side of a dilapidated building, using it as a shield. He could not help but frown when he caught sight of the multi-legged vehicle, through the gaps between the buildings.

“What the heck is that thing!? Are they planning to attack the city or something!?”

Shiori also frowned when she saw the multi-legged vehicle.

“I heard that they opened the Rank 9 warehouse, but to bring that out here… it’s overkill…”

“Rank 9 warehouse?”

“It’s a particular term used within Lion Steel. It refers to a facility that houses weapons capable of assaulting a city.”

“So, they’re planning on attacking Kugamayama city?”

“I heard that they’re originally dispatched as escorts or as a deterrent force. Lion Steel has many enemies as it is one of many large companies in the eastern district. Thus, it is necessary for it to have such a mighty force.”

Kanae smiled and joined in on the conversation.

“Akira-boy, that’s not important right now. Whatever their reason is, it doesn’t change the fact that they brought that thing out to this battlefield. Now, the important thing is how to bring it down.”

Akira frowned. Although it was indeed exactly as Kanae said, he could not help but still be bothered by its presence.

“…You’re right, so, how to destroy that thing? Do you know its weakness?”

“Nope. I don’t!”

Akira still had his eyebrows knit as he shifted his gaze to Shiori.

“I’m not much knowledgeable about that unit. But I will at least tell you what I know about it.”

Forcefield armour protected its large frame at any given moment. It used a huge amount of energy with each large-sized laser cannon fire. Furthermore, its constant forcefield armour took a lot of energy to maintain as well. However, it could replenish its energy wirelessly from the other vehicles around it. Thus, there was close to zero chance of depleting its energy reserves. Although the cannon could not angle to shoot the area high above and under it, there were smaller cannons installed to cover those areas. Therefore, trying to attack from those angles would be equivalent to suicide. With Shiori’s explanation, Akira understood just how powerful the opponent was. He was stuck, unsure of how to deal with it.

Alpha, who was controlling the bike, suddenly made a sharp turn and accelerated. Everyone on the bike, including Akira, was flusteredly trying to maintain their balance. They were trying their best to not get thrown off the bike. None of them offered a single word of complaint. They all already knew why they had to be extra cautious in their current situation.

The multi-legged vehicle once again released a shot. The laser cannon consumed a colossal amount of energy. It released a pillar of light, which evaporated everything that got caught inside it. It drew a clear straight line through the slums. The buildings that made the slightest bit of contact around the circumference of the laser got blown up high into the sky. It took some time before they fell back down like rain, back into the slums.

To evade the falling rubble, Akira had to drive the bike erratically. Thus the trio’s expressions were grave.

The buildings in the slums served as excellent covers for Akira, enabling him to slip away from the laser cannon. However, if it kept shooting like that, it was only a matter of time before he ran out of cover. As the vehicle was slowly but surely moving forward, Sheryl’s headquarters would eventually get within its range.

“Wait. Didn’t you say they won’t use missiles to crush us earlier?”

“About that… well, in the end, it’s nothing but my own guess. If Pamela can do something that flashy to eliminate us, she would be satisfied with that, right?”

Watching how Kanae speak with a wide smile on her face, with no sign of malice, Akira, for some reason, got convinced. He lightly sighed, glanced back at Shiori and asked.

“Honestly. I don’t think that huge thing would only aim at us while ignoring Sheryl’s base though. Any good ideas?”

Shiori knitted her eyebrows.

“Akira-sama. My apologies, but I can’t think of anything else other than to get close enough to infiltrate the vehicle. We can only destroy it from the inside.”

The reason why Shiori apologized was because it was the same as asking Akira to take a suicidal approach.

Although Shiori’s blade and Kanae’s fist were equipped with powerful anti-forcefield armour, it was still not enough to break through the multi-legged vehicle’s forcefield armour. In the first place, it was not easy to slip past the bombardment to get close enough to use their blade and fist. After all, they had to deal with its cannon and the bombardment from the other surrounding tanks in the area. The closer they got to the wasteland, the more intense the bombardment would be since the enemy would not need to worry about damaging the city by accident. There was a good chance they would die before they managed to reach the multi-legged vehicle.

However, at this rate, the encroaching force would get close enough to hit Sheryl’s base. That was where Reina and the others were at. To prevent that from happening, Akira had no other choice.

He could not afford to let Sheryl’s base get blown away. Thus, he was stuck in between Shiori’s suggestion and one other alternative.

“…Alpha, how many should I use? Just one shot would be enough, right?”

“I will do the calculations until the time it takes to shoot. In the meantime, get closer while I’m gathering information through the scanner.”

“…Alright.”

Akira heaved a huge sigh. He had no other choice but to use his trump card. Thus, he pushed his two RL2 multi-rifles to Shiori, as if he was handing them over to her.

“We will charge right into that thing after we avoid its next shot. Try to shoot at it once we get close enough.”

“Sure, I don’t mind. But in all honesty, I’m terrible with rifles, you see.”

“I know. That’s why I’m giving you the one equipped with mini-missiles.”

“Oh, thank you Akira-boy.”

Kanae smiled brightly and thanked him. Even if Akira agreed to go with them after listening to their explanation and suggestion, that did not change the fact they were going to suicidally charge toward the enemy. Even so, Kanae was still smiling amusedly.

Although Shiori was thankful as well, she was still confused as to why Akira passed her two of his rifles.

“What about you, Akira-sama?”

Akira did not reply. He simply switched to his third RL2 multi-rifle. It was obvious from his expression that he was going to do something that he absolutely did not want to do. However, he had no other choice given the situation he was in.

It was not difficult for Shiori to guess that rifle was Akira’s trump card. Something he did not want to use if it could be helped. She was grateful he was willing to go as far as to use his trump card.

“Very well then. Leave the counterfire to us.”

“Yeah. I leave it to you.”

To get away from the enemies’ attacks, the bike was racing haphazardly through the slums. The three were extremely anxious, just as much as they were focused.

Then, the time finally came. The multi-legged vehicle released a shot from its large laser cannon. This time, it was sacrificing some of its firepower by sweeping it sideways. Instead of drawing a straight line of total destruction, it left a mark which looked like a fan.

However, Alpha had taken that into account and calculated a method to avoid it. The bike went up to the sky, escaping from the gigantic beam. The bike kept going higher, only stopping right before they entered the red area, where Akira was not allowed to enter. The bike then made a sharp turn and ran while being upside down. It was as if the bike’s tires were running on the border of the red area.

Although the multi-legged vehicle had an immensely powerful laser cannon, it could not shoot in consecutive succession. Akira used that opening between the shots to get as close as possible. He accelerated the bike at full speed, which also reduced its ability to evade.

However, the multi-legged vehicle was not exactly vulnerable between each shot. Its smaller cannons and missile pods were actively firing during that time. Although the smaller cannons were easier to avoid, the missiles were equipped with homing devices. Since they were slower, the speed filter did not affect them. Akira, who was prioritizing speed over dexterity, had to come up with a way to deal with them.

“Here they come! I’m relying on both of you!!”

As Akira stated with a solemn expression, Shiori gathered all her focus. She was serious as usual while Kanae was still smiling as usual.

“Understood!”

“Roger that!”

While the bike was travelling at top speed, Shiori swung her blade, which glowed dimly with light particles. It released a wave of light that flew from the blade, which sliced through the speed filter particles.

The guidance system of the incoming missiles was thrown off due to that gap. It pushed their trajectories away from the bike. After the bike flew past those missiles, the jamming smoke caused the missiles to detonate a moment later. The bike extended out its forcefield armour behind, to protect it from the explosion. Meanwhile, it used the shockwave to accelerate even faster.

Shiori quickly switched to the rifle and started shooting the missiles in front of her. The C-bullets flew towards their target.

Naturally, the speed filter greatly reduced the C-bullet's range. However, it only prevented them from sniping from afar. It still retained enough firepower to deal substantial damage in mid-range. Even if the speed filter reduced its speed, the C-bullets still contained energy, enough to cause damage. As such, it was sufficient enough to shoot down the incoming missiles.

The missiles veered off their original trajectories before exploding. To avoid these explosions, the bike expanded out forcefield armour under its wheels to pave its path forward.

Just like Shiori, Kanae was using a mix of her fist as well as Akira's rifle to shoot down the missiles. She used the shockwave from her punches to deflect and throw the missiles off target. Meanwhile, using the rifle, shoot down the other missiles.

The bike's TGP laser cannon and RL2 multi rifle swept sideways. The laser and barrage of C-bullets shot down missiles, protecting the bike as it approached the multi-legged vehicle.

With heavy fire flying in all directions, Akira held his RL2 multi-rifle firmly with both hands as he carefully aimed it.

Currently, Alpha could not provide her full support to Akira. Thus, he requested her to focus on shooting down and evading the incoming missiles. Basically, he would handle this shot all by himself. After all, currently, even his augmented suit did not have Alpha's support. This meant there was no aim correction support.

In this situation where he could not afford to miss, Akira sharpened his focus to its utmost limit.

"Akira, it's about time, I'll start the countdown."

"Alright!"

Akira pushed to gather his focus even more. He rerouted most of his processing capabilities to sharpen his senses. As all unnecessary information for the sniping was omitted from his mind, the world started to turn colourless. Eventually, the world blurred out from his vision. Only the multi-legged vehicle he was focused on looked more vivid. Its whole structure became clearer in his eyes. As this artificial world he had created in his mind became even more accurate, the differences between the real world and the artificial world shrank to zero.

"Five… Four… Three…"

The bike was intensely swaying left and right as it evaded the incoming attacks. Akira gathered his focus and compressed his time perception. The swaying slowed down until it suddenly came to a complete stop.

"Two… One…"

The time came to a complete halt. The contour of the multi-legged vehicle was starting to blur. Now, the only thing that looked crystal clear in Akira's view, was the trajectory line between the muzzle of his rifle and its target. Akira stared at his target as if giving it a death verdict.

"Zero!!"

At the same time Alpha gave the signal, Akira pulled down the trigger. It was perfectly timed.

The released shots went straight, destroying everything in its way. It was as if the warheads were boring a hole through space and time. In total, Akira released five shots. All 5 shots did not slow down at all. It was as if they eradicated the particles that caused the speed filter effect. They mowed down everything in their way and eventually reached their target.

Right at that moment, the warheads struck, and a spectacular explosion occurred. It was as if the warheads themselves, and everything they stuck had been converted into pure energy. Although all five warheads landed at different locations at different times, the explosions compounded into one colossal ball of fire. It further enhanced their overall destructiveness as the explosion devoured the multi-legged vehicle.

The shockwave was so powerful that it compressed the surrounding jamming smoke. It triggered a phenomenon that only happened from a highly dense pressurized colourless mist. The pressurized jamming smoke formed a dome, which contained the energy of the explosion. Thanks to that, the explosion had nowhere to go but inside, multiplying its destructive power manifolds.

In a state where the dome partitioned out the rest of the world for a few seconds, the explosion continued to rage within it. The explosion eventually condensed so much energy that it leaked through the weakening dome.

The explosion, which originally was a large fireball, got concentrated and confined within a small space. The moment a crack appeared, the energy burst out, creating a powerful gust of wind that blew everything around it away.

When the dome finally dissipated, nothing was left inside it. It was as if that area had been ripped off from space and time.

Akira used 5 annihilator warheads at the same time. It brought about the result he had anticipated,

Akira sighed as he gazed at the destruction that he just caused.

“I did it… annihilator warheads… 5 of them…”

Seeing Akira’s reaction and the aftermath that it left, Shiori could understand why he did not want to use all his annihilator warheads. However, his next words made her realize that she was misunderstanding things.

“Dammit, one shot cost me 100 million Aurum…! And I had to use 5 of them…!”

Akira was lamenting the cost. When Shiori noticed, she could not hide her stupefaction.

“Uhhh, Akira-sama. Putting aside how you got that ammunition; annihilator warheads are something that you can only use if you receive special permission. In the worst-case scenario, you might get arrested for carrying one…”

However, Akira replied back too nonchalantly.

“Hm? Well, Kugamayama city had already declared me to be a monster. They are also treating me as one. So, I don’t see any reason to be worried about that now.”

“I-I see…”

Shiori was slightly taken aback by Akira’s unthinkable response. While on the other hand, Kanae was laughing her ass off.

Silavin: Ahh Kanae, never change. Same to you, Akira. Well, if you are carrying a few annihilator warheads, I doubt they would even try to arrest you. They would probably just try to keep you out of the city again rather than risk an engagement.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 284, Checking Firepower

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

As Akira, Shiori, and Kanae were busy fighting somewhere close to the border between the slums and the wasteland, another battle was taking place. Back in Sheryl's HQ, an intense battle was raging.

Erio was running through a partially destroyed alleyway when roars of chaos reached his communication device.

"Hurry!! Do you want to get blown to bits!?"

"I know!! I know!!"

Erio replied, shouting. He was already pushing himself to run in an augmented suit that he was not that familiar with. Yet, the moment he reached his destination, he was told to hurry up and go somewhere else.

"Keep moving people!! Just because you're under jamming smoke doesn't mean you're hidden. You'll still get discovered if you keep still!!"

"I said, I got it already!!"

As Erio screamed, he extended both of his hands forward. The AF anti-material cannon behind him immediately slid forward. Erio firmly held onto it and somehow managed to hold it up with the help of the CA31R augmented suit. He then carefully took aim.

“Aim correction, done!! Fire!!”

As soon as Erio received the signal, he pulled the trigger. A pillar of light got released. At the same time, Erio got blown back from the recoil.

Even so, the AF anti-material cannon still hit its target. The pillar of light drilled a hole through the body of a large augmented suit. A moment later, it fell to the ground. The missiles that it just launched lost their guiding system and hit the nearby buildings, turning them into a pile of rubble. Meanwhile, the other heavy augmented suit nearby flusteredly tried to get away from the area as fast as they could.

Seeing the aftermath, Erio thought that it was a huge success. He yelped in excitement.

“I-I did it!! I shot it down!!”

“Get on your feet! Do you have a death wish!?”

Erio could not help but pout. That harsh reply was basically a scolding. It completely ignored what Erio had just accomplished. Though, his facial expression quickly changed. His lips returned back as his expression turned to one of anxiety. He noticed that someone was aiming their rifle at him.

Erio pushed his body back up in a panic. He followed the indicator guidance shown inside his helmet’s display and leapt into a nearby building. A barrage of bullets struck the location right where Erio was a moment ago. Fortunately, he was no longer there. Thus, that area was only left with ricocheting bullets flying all over.

“Whoah. That was dangerous.”

“Don’t give me that! Shoot back at them immediately!”

The display on his helmet showed enemy locations behind the wall. That display was also accompanied by two orders: ‘shoot at them, use LEO multi-rifle’.

Erio grabbed his LEO multi-rifle with both hands and released fire toward his targets. It seemed more like haphazard fire instead of precise fire. Although the walls were relatively thick, they were like a sheet of paper when faced against the C-bullets. They had no problems piercing through and successfully hit their targets.

“A-alright…! With this… I can finally… Get… A break…”

“Next! Get moving! Quickly!!”

The display on Erio’s helmet indicated that it was administering medicine continuously. Thanks to that, he was able to maintain his physical condition. Even so, the non-stop action and the consecutive orders exhausted him, psychologically.

“Just let me take a small break, will you!?”

“The others would die if you take a break now! If you’re fine with that, then be my guest!!”

“…Goddammit!!”

Erio cursed and immediately started running again.

“I know that Carol-san was the one who introduced you! But can’t you do something about the enemies!?”

“I’m doing my best here to provide you support. It’s your job to handle the fighting, right!?”

Erio’s face twitched. In truth, it was only thanks to the other person’s support that he was able to fight this well. Therefore, he could not find a counter to his stated point.

The person providing support to Erio was Shirou. Other than being someone Carol brought in as support, Erio knew next to nothing about him. Erio guessed Shirou was a skilled Hunter, who unfortunately got trapped in Carol's grasp. That he was being blackmailed by her to help out.

Nonetheless, Erio still recognized his skills. Currently, the jamming smoke prevented the coordination support system of the augmented suit from providing any support. Without that support, they were basically close to useless. However, after Shirou started providing them support, Erio and the other children were able to recover their connection.

Moreover, even with the jamming smoke, which prevented information-gathering, they were able to accurately pinpoint enemy locations, past walls and other obstructions. The support was even better than their original coordination support system.

In order to provide support, Shirou had been ordering Erio and the other children to install a copious number of information-gathering devices all around. He issued so many orders that it seemed like harassment. Under normal circumstances, those devices should have been rendered useless under the jamming smoke. However, with Shirou's technique, he was able to create and adjust his own communication network. The reason why Erio and the others were still able to communicate with each other was because of his communication network. Furthermore, he hijacked the enemy's communication network to accurately ascertain their exact position.

In the first place, for the past few days, Erio and the others had already been installing information-gathering devices around the area. They were placed in a manner to be used in tandem with the base's security system and the coordination support system. It was fortunate that they were also located in excellent places for Shirou's use. Thus, he managed to be able to provide Erio and the others with great support.

It was exactly because of their prior setup, that even in the face of an overwhelming number of enemies, Erio and the others were able to control the flow of the battle. They turned the jamming smoke to their advantage.

Furthermore, Erio was using the equipment that Akira had used before. Thus, he was technically stronger than any normal Hunter in the area. The heavy augmented suit that he just shot down could easily crush any normal monsters around Kugamayama city. Even so, he was able to defeat it with only one shot.

Since he had overwhelming firepower, he was assigned to take down any powerful enemies; enemies that the others could not handle. Naturally, that meant Erio had to work the hardest among his peers.

“Good grief! You guys are on Akira’s team, right? You should put more effort into this, you know?”

Erio was already exhausted, though it was not physical fatigue. Even so, Shirou continued to berate him, asking him to move like Akira. Because of that, Erio inadvertently replied.

“…No, we’re not on Akira-san’s team!”

“Oh? Is that so?”

Shirou was honestly taken aback. Due to the stress, Erio could not help but harshly explain.

“Yeah, we’re not on his team! I don’t know what Carol-san has told you, but Akira-san is only helping our boss as an individual. We’re only receiving benefits from him through our boss. Akira-san is not even a member of our gang. He already stated he has no plans to join us. So, in the end, we’re just working under our boss, Sheryl. We’re not working under Akira-san… We are not part of his team. But I guess it’s no surprise that others often misunderstand.”

“Ahhh, I see.”

After hearing Erio’s explanation, Shirou now understood why their movements were this horrendous. Up until now, he had thought that Erio and the others were a squad from Tsukisada Construction. That they were disguising themselves as a slum gang, working under Akira. He hypothesized that Akira was so proactive in helping the gang because it was part of the plan. To build up Tsukisada Construction's forces here.

If his hypothesis held true, their origins did not matter. Be it sent here from another place or recruited from the slum, as long as they were a military squad from Tsukisada Construction, they should be able to fight to some extent.

With such an expectation in mind, Shirou kept berating Erio and the others for obvious mistakes. When he discovered his hypothesis was far from the truth, that they were really just amateurs, he felt guilty. He had been too harsh on them.

"I see. Sorry, I expected you guys to be able to fight better if you were directly under Akira. I'll change my approach then. For now, just keep following my orders."

"…? Alright."

Erio found Shirou's sudden change in attitude to be a bit strange. Nonetheless, he hurriedly followed Shirou's instructions. After he changed location, his next order was to hide. From behind cover, a half-destroyed building, he could see tanks and powered suits slowly marching into the slums.

Erio frowned. He suspected Shirou would tell him to defeat that whole squad. Although he was currently wearing Akira's equipment, he still saw this as a suicidal attack.

Unexpectedly, the next order was for him to stand by. Erio felt that something was off. It was a completely different order compared to the rest that he has been receiving up till now. However, the jamming smoke suddenly got incinerated. A laser swept through, taking out the tanks and powered suits in one strike.

Erio was astonished. He turned toward the source of that laser. It was from atop of a building, far away from where he was. It was from a huge laser cannon; held by someone he knew. It was Carol. She glanced at Erio and waved at him before moving to another building.

Erio was still recovering from the shock when Shirou contacted him again.

“See? I thought that you would at least be able to do that if you’re part of Akira’s team.”

“Like I said… don’t compare me to Akira-san… In the first place, I don’t have the equipment for that…”

“Oh? That should not be a problem though? Akira did shoot down a powered suit with the equipment you’re wearing.”

“Again! Don’t compare me and Akira-san!”

Erio had no wish to deny that one could do amazing things with amazing equipment. However, he was reminded there was a limit to that. There were things that could not be compensated with exceptional equipment.

The group attacking Sheryl’s base was large. However, they were not well organized. Their individual strength varied from ex-Hunters to high-ranking Hunters working further to the east. In other words, it was nothing more than a motley group of Hunters. Even so, with that many, they completely overwhelmed Sheryl’s force. Thus, there were many in the assaulting group who were certain of victory.

What’s more, the majority in the assaulting group had casually decided to join the group. They heard a vague rumour and accepted an assault request. For some reason, before anyone noticed, a strange rumour with no clear source had spread. It stated that they just had to act as a diversion. Alternatively, they just had to lightly attack Sheryl’s base. Do any of these, and they could gain a connection to the Lion Steel company, receive monetary support, or get paid for this task. Though it was hopeless to pick a fight against Akira, if it was only this much, to them, it seemed completely doable. Thus, many joined to launch an assault.

Some joined, seeing it as the perfect chance to kill Sheryl and completely decimate her gang. Even if Akira survived this battle, if they could get Sheryl, her gang would not be able to survive. Many struggling for influence in the slums were not able to mess with her, fearing retribution from Akira. However, with this many involved in this assault, it would be difficult to pinpoint the blame if Sheryl got killed. Thus, they sent manpower and funding to support the assault.

However, it did not end there. Some remnants from the Ezont and Haurias families had gathered together. They were hoping for their gang to rise from the ashes. They also received monetary support secretly from Udajima. This allowed them to purchase tanks and powered suits. If they were able to destroy Sheryl's gang, it would throw a wrench in Inabe's plan to amass his fortune. Furthermore, many survivors of the Ezont family had a grudge against Akira since he was the one who destroyed their gang. Meanwhile, the Haurias family was doing this in return for Udajima's support, which they would use to recover their gang. For all sorts of reasons, they formed a coalition — one normally impossible to be formed in the slums.

Carol was going around Sheryl's base. She was facing the ongoing onslaught while carrying her large cannon. She prioritized destroying tanks and powered suits, which were completely out of Erio and the children's league.

"Well, as I thought. Even if they bring out tanks and powered suits, their skills only amount to this much."

Carol gazed at the leftover destroyed tanks and powered suits. She mumbled so with a smile plastered on her face. She realized that her standard had substantially increased after she said that. Her smile quickly turned bitter. Although they were way weaker than the opponent that she and Akira had fought against, it did not change the fact they were tanks and powered suits. If it was the past, she would not have looked down on them this much.

Suddenly she noticed the presence of an enemy and jumped to the side. She avoided its bullets as she aimed and fired her laser cannon. However, this opponent was particularly strong, and could quickly evade her laser beam.

Normally, they would immediately continue the fight. However, when both recognized the others' faces, their battle came to an awkward halt. Both were equally surprised while facing each other.

"Oh, so you're also participating in the attack, huh?"

"You too, what are you doing here? And here I thought you went somewhere far away after buying that camping vehicle."

It was someone that Carol knew from her side job. She knew that he was a high-ranking Hunter, who earnt a good amount. Thanks to that, he was well equipped and pretty skilled. He was stronger than the powered suits that Carol had just destroyed.

"Well, I have my reasons, you see. Ah, now that you mention it, how about switching sides? Since we're in this situation, I will not charge you that much money."

Carol said so and smiled bewitchingly. However, the man frowned and seemed apologetic as he replied.

"Sorry. I would be more than happy to accept that offer if it was before I accepted this job. But I can't do that now. So, it would be great if you can just leave. I won't chase after you if you do so, yeah?"

Toward that guy who still looked apologetic, Carol lightly shook her head.

"Sorry, I'm also doing this because it's my job, you see. So, I can't do that."

"I see."

Carol could not withdraw because it was something that Akira had asked her to do. The Hunter could not withdraw because he was faithful to his job. As such, there was only one choice.

"I won't be holding back. Be careful not to get killed, alright?"

"You too. Just so you know, I'm pretty strong right now."

Seeing Carol speak with an amused smile, the guy raised his eyebrows in surprise. However, his lips quickly curled up.

“I see. Here I go then!”

“Take this!”

Carol quickly jumped and aimed her laser cannon. The man reacted accordingly and aimed his rifle. Two people, skilled enough to kill the other, exchanged shots in the middle of the slums.

Tanks, heavy augmented suits, powered suits, and even high-ranking Hunters were among the attackers. To deal with them, Babalod and Levin were working as a team. Both were sold to Viola because of their debt. They were ordered to kill the other if the other guy attempted to escape. Since both had no plans to escape, they were diligently working their butts off.

Putting Babalod aside, fighting such a strong force was practically suicide for Levin. The reason why he was able to keep up so far was because Kiryou had partially sponsored him.

In exchange for their sponsorship, Levin’s debt went past 1 billion Aurum. He was pressed between getting killed because of a lack of suitable equipment or getting better equipment by borrowing more money. Naturally, he ended up choosing the latter.

Levin was amazed at how Babalod fought. Unlike him, who was compensating for his lack of power with equipment, Babalod was originally a member of Zelos’ team, a high-ranking Hunter team.

“You’re pretty good, I guess your Rank 50 is not just for show, huh?”

“Hm? Well, I can at least do this much.”

“If you’re that strong, there’s no need to get into debt in the first place, right? Just how much exactly do you owe?”

Babalod frowned and went silent. Thus, Levin lightly prodded a bit further.

“Well, I won’t force you to tell me. Ah, by the way, in my case, it’s about 1 billion Aurum. Just when exactly would I be able to pay it all back…”

“…10 billion Aurum.”

“Haah!?”

Levin could not hide his shock, which only worsened Babalod’s mood.

“It’s complicated.”

“I-I see…”

Although Levin was interested in what was complicated, he did not have the courage to ask.

Right at the next moment, Babalod suddenly grabbed Levin and jumped away. A moment later, the building next to them was sliced. It crumbled down to something unrecognizable. Levin was taken aback by this sudden attack.

“An enemy!? But there’s nothing on the radar!?”

“If you’re talking about the information sent through the coordination support system, it’s based on the information-gathering device on our side. With a fight this big, it would not be surprising that some of them got destroyed. It would create holes in the radar. You should also do the scanning yourself.”

“B-but I also don’t see any signals from my own information-gathering device…”

“That’s why I’m telling you. Do the scanning yourself. This is what will happen if you leave the setting on auto.”

While Babalod was lecturing Levin, he was also showing him the real skill of a high-ranking Hunter. Suddenly, the two who just tried to ambush them revealed themselves.

The two people who thought that anyone other than Akira was nothing to be worried about, were impressed to find that their ambush had failed.

“Oh, you got yourself out of that, huh? Not bad.”

But the other guy was surprised to see Babalod there.

“…Hm? Wasn’t that guy from Zelos’ team?”

“Really? That’s strange. I’m sure they said that they’ll not get involved this time. I heard they’re still trying to rebuild the team after one of their members betrayed them and wrecked the team.”

“I bet he just joined their side to get some pocket change. Well, it doesn’t matter. Either way, keep your wits. If he’s really from Zelos’ team, even if he’s a new blood, he must be pretty strong.”

“Roger that!”

Babalod, who quickly noticed the change in aura coming from his opponent, knitted his eyebrows and warned Levin.

“Hey, give me support like your life depends on it. Those two are not like the rest. If we’re unlucky, just one of them might be as strong as me.”

“D-do we have any chance of winning?”

“Stop thinking about unnecessary things and focus on giving me your full support. If you get killed, then that’s it. Even if we die here, we will still die fighting. It’s a far better way to die for Hunters drowning in debt, don’t you think?”

Babalod smiled wryly there as if he just discovered a newfound resolve. Watching him get motivated, Levin frowned and pulled himself together.

“L-let’s do this then!”

Levin knew how awful it was to be drowning in debt. However, he also knew how much worse it would be if he selfishly ran away from the front-line. It would be the same as resigning his worth as a human. As he stepped into the arena, where he could either choose to die valiantly or give his all and hope to survive the day, Levin made his resolve.

As both sides showed signs of now taking it seriously, they started exchanging bullets. Although they were aware of the speed filter, they had bullets with enough firepower to lay waste to the area around them.

__*__*__*__

Meanwhile, somewhere near Kugamayama city's inner wall. Inside a restaurant on the first floor of the Kugama building, which was basically integrated as a part of the wall. Elena was gazing outside with worried eyes.

She then glanced at her information panel and heaved a huge sigh.

"…Sara, it has started."

"…I see."

Sara had the same look as Elena. Seeing the same expression on her best friend, Elena looked down.

"Sara, are you angry?"

Similarly, when Sara saw Elena's expression, she gave a slight smile and shook her head.

"I'm not angry. Though, I don't think I can just get over it. In the first place, I did leave the decision to you, the team leader. There's no need for you to feel responsible for everything."

"…Thanks."

Elena was finally able to smile back, though it was a faint one. However, that did not change their situation. She then gave another sigh and wondered.

"I wonder if Akira is doing alright…"

“…He’ll be fine… Probably…”

Elena and Sara already knew what Akira’s situation was when they decided not to help him. There were many reasons why Elena decided to do so.

First, they were still in the middle of a job, which was to be Hikaru’s bodyguards. Since Hikaru was traumatized, she found it difficult to go outside of the inner wall. She stayed within the inner wall, never stepping out ever since she returned. Even so, their job had not ended yet. Thus, Elena and Sara were on stand-by in case Hikaru wanted to go outside.

Elana and Sara were still Hunters. They could not afford to disregard their current job and go help Akira. Moreover, Akira did stress to them, to do their job properly as Hunters.

Furthermore, Hikaru ordered Sara and Elena not to help Akira. Judging from Akira’s reaction back in the wasteland when they got ambushed, he did not want to get Elena and Sara involved. Thus, using that as an excuse, Hikaru convinced Elena and Sara not to go. Otherwise, it would cause Akira to get anxious.

Even if Akira somehow managed to overcome the battle with Elena and Sara’s help, and either of them got killed, there was no telling how far Akira would go for revenge. In the worst-case scenario, Akira might take on the whole Lion Steel company.

If it had come to that point, that would spell the end of him as well. If his target was only Chloe, and he was able to successfully eliminate her, everything could be brought to a close. That was why Hikaru ordered Elena and Sara to not go to Akira’s side this time.

There was also the issue of equipment. Although they received powerful equipment from Hikaru as the upfront payment for the bodyguard mission, those would only become their personal belongings once the mission came to an end. This meant, at the moment, if they went to help Akira and abandon their current job, they had no right to use their current equipment. From the ethical and professional point of view, it was not something that they could do.

If they went to help Akira with their previous equipment, they knew they would only be a burden to him. They might forgive themselves if they went, risking their lives to help him. However, they could not forgive themselves if they went there just to slow him down.

With that in mind, after a lot of thought, Elena eventually decided not to go. Sara was fine with it since Elena had made the decision. However, neither was completely fine with that decision.

That was when Shizuka called them. She called with the simple intention of inviting them to go have a meal together. However, Elena, who was crushed under the feeling of hopelessness, ended up telling Shizuka everything. It was as if she was trying to find a way to forgive herself. She finally threw a question that she had no answer to.

“…Say, Shizuka, what do you think we should do?”

“Hmm, I think you just need to do what you want to do; don’t you think so?”

Although Shizuka’s reply was merely her opinion, Elena seemed a bit taken aback by it. She broke out a smile as if she had found her answer.

“I should do what I want to, huh… That’s right! That’s just what it means to be a Hunter!”

Hunters do their job, charging into the wasteland filled with death on their own volition. Be it for fame, money, or glory. Even if their goal was something else, they could achieve anything by being bold. They had to understand the danger and press on in order to achieve their desires. That was what it meant to be a Hunter. Elena was once again reminded that she was one of those Hunters.

Shizuka’s intuition told her that it was best for Elena to follow her heart.

Elena thought of what she had to do. One thing for certain, sitting there, depressed with her friend, was not what she desired. Neither was it the best course of action. Now that she had found her answer, Elena quickly decided on what to do next.

“Alright then. Shizuka, sorry, but we suddenly have a business to take care of.”

“Is that so? Okay, be careful.”

“Of course, and thank you!”

Elena ended their conversation and then contacted Inabe. After she conveyed her situation to Inabe, he replied with a rather excited tone of voice.

“So, you want to abandon your current bodyguard job for Hikaru and go help Akira. The issue now is that you can’t get permission to use the equipment you have on you?”

Elena was fully expecting Inabe to refuse her request. She did not expect Inabe to react in such a manner.

“Very well then, go. You can make full use of your current equipment. I will also pay for the ammo and medicine as well. Feel free to go as hard as you desire.”

“…Are you sure you’re fine with it?”

As Elena inadvertently raised her voice, Inabe calmly replied.

“You’re still planning to go even if I say no, right? In that case, it’s better to send someone well-equipped to help, you know? Moreover, if I took away your equipment knowing that you’ll still go, what do you think Akira would do later? Well, I will just add it to be part of the documented request. I will take care of the paperwork and corrections, so you don’t have to worry about it.”

It also served as an excuse to give to Akira later. Even if Elena and Sara got killed, they went there on their own volition. Therefore, Inabe could not be held responsible. Though, it was a fact that as a city officer, Inabe could not openly declare that he was helping a bounty target, one that might even attack the city. Thus, this was the limit in terms of aid Inabe could give.

Despite his position, Inabe was entirely on Akira's side. Elena, who realized this, thanked him.

"Thank you very much!"

"Don't mention it. Be careful out there."

Elena then closed the call and looked at Sara. Her best friend smiled at her as she spoke.

"Sorry, Sara, I've changed my mind. As I thought, we should go."

"Right. If the team leader has decided, it's not like I have any other choice."

"Geez, don't say it like that. If I may add something, this is also our last chance to show up as Akira's senior Hunters, okay?"

"I see. Well, if I'm being honest, I do feel a bit irritated. We keep being on the receiving end like this. This is a good opportunity to show what we can do as his senior Hunters."

Elena and Sara looked and smiled at each other. They knew where they were heading. It was a battlefield where a 50 billion bounty target was being hunted. Death was just a mistake away. Nonetheless, to achieve what they desired, they decided to go.

__*__*__*__

Inside a rest area in the Kugama building, Shizuka was nibbling on a portable meal for Hunters. High-quality portable meals were not cheap, they were delicious and designed to reduce digestion waste products. It was designed to support Hunter's life out in the wasteland. Though, many wealthy individuals inside the inner wall often opted to buy these instead of having a light meal.

"This is actually pretty good. I wonder if I should stock some in my shop."

Though, even if Shizuka stocked some in her shop, the only Hunters that would be able to purchase them would be Akira, Sara, and Elena. That was just how expensive it was. Even so, she still thought that it might be a good idea to have them in her shop.

Furthermore, her muttering indicated she was not there to sample goods for her shop. Hikaru had used the meal as an excuse to have Shizuka placed inside a safe area within the Kugama building, which was treated as part of the area within the inner wall.

Previously, Hunters who were after Akria did try to attack him while he was negotiating with City Management. If they were even willing to go that far, it would come as no surprise they would go as far as to kidnap someone important to him. Hikaru, who suspected that might be the case, did some research. She concluded there were four possible targets: Elena, Sara, Shizuka, and Sheryl.

Since Elena and Sara were Hunters while Sheryl was the boss of a slum gang, which was actively receiving support from Inabe, they should be able to defend themselves.

However, Shizuka was only a normal civilian. The most that she could do was pay for some bodyguards from the private security company in the lower district. Hikaru believed it to be too dangerous. Thus, she decided to evacuate Shizuka to the safety of the Kugama building. At least until things settled down.

However, by doing so, it meant that she was helping out a 50 billion bounty target. A monster recognised by the city, which feared he might attack it. This was not something that Hikaru could do as a staff member of the city. Thus, to circumvent this issue, she came up with many excuses. All just to invite/lure Shizuka to the Kugama building.

After Shizuka received Hikaru’s invitation, she closed her shop and started to temporarily live in the Kugama building.

Once Elena and Sara left, Shizuka received a call from Hikaru.

“Shizuka-san, I just have a small question. What did you say to Elena-san and Sara-san? Just now, I received a message saying that Elean-san and Sara-san are going to help Akira…”

“Hm? Nothing important, they just asked for my opinion.”

“I’m sorry but could you please not do that.”

Hikaru was only barely able to convince Elena and Sara to stay after expending so much effort. Thus, she was disgruntled that they suddenly changed their minds.

However, Shizuka just made a small smile and replied.

“They made their decision on their own. I did not encourage them.”

“That does not change the fact that they changed their minds.”

“I was also trying to be considerate of you too though.”

“What do you mean by that?”

“I don’t know what exactly is going on, but one thing I know for certain. You’re in a rather difficult situation, right? If things somehow manage to calm down, to the point negotiations could be held, I’m pretty sure you will be chosen to represent City Management. After all, you are a staff member from City Management. You’re also acquainted with Akira. You even spent quite a lot on bodyguards. Now that you don’t have any escorts, it might be difficult to…”

Hikaru went silent. However, from her silence, it could be felt that she was simply too astounded to speak.

“But if you insist, I can still call them and ask them to stop and rethink it again…”

“Ah, no, that won’t be necessary… Ah! Sorry! Something came up so I have to end the call here! Bye!”

Hikaru ended the call with a blatant lie. Shizuka smiled bitterly and mumbled.

“I’m sorry but I believe this is for the best.”

Though she muttered that to herself, Shizuka was not sure what was ‘for the best’. She knew that she might have done something that she should not. However, even so, instead of just sitting there and doing nothing, she thought that it would still be better for her to do something to push the conclusion in a better direction.

Shizuka wished that her intuition today was still as accurate as ever as she prayed for Akira and the others’ safety.

__*__*__*__

Inside a large armoured wasteland vehicle, Pamela was looking over how the battle was going on. She watched how Akira’s group was faring against the automata that she had dispatched and smiled. Although she had lost the multi-legged tank, which was her greatest firepower, Pamela did not seem anxious at all.

“I guess that should do it…”

She had finished checking out the opponent group’s fighting capability through long-range remote automata – the large-sized multi-legged tank, and the reinforcement automata. She had identified the people on the opponent’s side, their equipment, as well as their trump cards. Once Pamela had decided that she had sufficient information, she grabbed Latis’ hand.

“Latis, it’s time. Let’s go and kill them altogether.”

Pamela then left the large room which also doubled as the command centre. She wore a huge smile on her face as she had her hand tangled together with the emotionless Latis. They both left with the goal of killing Shiori and Kanae. Joy and hatred were all mixed into one. It was to a point it was difficult to differentiate them as Pamela directed all her killing intent toward Shiori and Kanae.

For Pamela, this was where things got serious.

Silavin: Dude. Meals that make me poop less? Sign me up. Those wealthy merchants sure know how to live. Have you seen public toilets? I smell the foulness of the underworld whenever I enter a cubical.

Also, My god this chapter is long. It’s nearly 1.5x the length of the chapters in the hundreds.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 285, The Green Liquid

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Shikarabe and his squad from Drankam were repelling the attackers around Sheryl's base. Frustration could be seen on all their faces, and it was not because of the enemies.

"…Those guys' from the Katsuya's faction are still nowhere to be seen… I guess I am getting a bit too paranoid, huh?"

If they were going to attack Akira, this would be the perfect chance for them. That was why Shikarabe and the others were there. Kurosawa, the group's leader, had thought that the opposing faction would take this opportunity to act. They originally planned on slipping into the battle, quickly identifying those in the Katsuya's faction and eliminating them. Afterwards, quickly slip away from the battle.

However, they could not see anyone from the Katsuya's faction. Meanwhile, the attackers would not go out of their way to differentiate Shikarabe's squad and ignore them. Thanks to that, they were forced to fight against them.

That was when Kurosawa suddenly called Shikarabe. At the moment, those from Drankam were borrowing the communication line from Erio and the others. Thus, they were still able to receive calls even under the jamming smoke. Shikarabe could not help but frown after receiving Kurosawa's order.

"…Return to the base? What do you mean?"

Even though Shikarabe did question the order to withdraw back to Sheryl's base, he understood the intention behind the order. Regardless, they had concluded that the Katsuya's faction was not currently present. There was also a possibility that they had fought enough for the Hunter Office to recognize their effort to honour the peace treaty. Either way, Shikarabe also saw no worth in staying there any longer.

However, withdrawing from the fight would mean escaping from the slums to a more contentious area. There were bound to be more enemies back at the base compared to here. It was the main target of the attackers after all. Thus, it was paradoxical to return back to the base if it was for safety. This caused Shikarabe to look rather bewildered by Kurosawa's order.

However, Kurosawa's vague answer was, strangely enough, enough to convince Shikarabe.

"I have a bad feeling."

The moment he heard that, Shikarabe knitted his eyebrows.

For a Hunter, Kurosawa was someone who tended to go with the safer approach. Unfortunately, many Hunters thought of him as a coward because of that. However, thanks to his cautious nature, Kurosawa was often able to notice things that others would normally miss. Of course, many of his guesses ended up as mere speculation. But even so, he always trusted his guts when he led his team, and many Hunters were saved by that.

It was the same this time again. If his gut was right, that would mean Kurosawa felt that it was too late to try to break through the slums. Which meant, their only option was to hunker down in Sheryl's base.

"…I understand, we're returning right now."

As a fellow Hunter who risked his life trusting his gut, and also the man who requested Kurosawa to take the command, Shikarabe made the fastidious decision to abide by the order without uttering a single word of complaint.

__*__*__*__

After Akira spent 5 annihilator warheads on the multi-legged tank, he hoped that finally, the enemy would withdraw. Though, that possibility did not help his tremendous lament – the massive amount he had just spent.

Akira believed the multi-legged tank to be his enemy's strongest weapon. Now that it was gone, it would be enough of a reason for them to call a retreat. However, his guess was way off the mark. Enemies that were surrounding the slums, located around the wasteland, dispatched automata in his direction. Moreover, they started shooting missiles filled with jamming smoke once again. The destruction of the multi-legged vehicle only served to help the jamming smoke spread across the slums.

As Akira drove his bike up into the sky, he threw a question to Kanae and Shiori.

"I don't know all the details, but aren't they supposed to be in the same company as the both of you? Do you know how much damage they will need to take until they kindly withdraw?"

"I'm really sorry, but I can't really tell."

"Well, I guess there's no other choice but to wipe them down to the last person, no?"

Shiori replied seriously, but in contrast to that, Kanae only replied jokingly with a smile. Akira heaved a sigh. The response was more or less what he had expected.

"I see. It seems that a large number of those in Lion Steel are diligent. As expected of a large conglomerate."

Akira tilted his head and smiled bitterly. However, lines could be seen on his forehead. Enemies were coming at him without any regard for their lives. They would continue fighting unless he devastated their bodies till they could no longer move.

Shiori and Kanae understood Akira's feelings and also smiled bitterly. They then saw automata spreading out down below.

"Akira-sama, we will be taking those on the ground. Please provide us with support if you happen to have extra firepower to spare."

"I'm leaving the sky to you."

Shiori and Kanae returned his rifles, which they had borrowed. They quickly jumped off the bike. On their way down, Shiori lightly lowered her head to thank Akira. Meanwhile, Kanae was waving at him with her signature smile. After they safely landed, they quickly moved between the rubbles, using it as cover while slowly chipping away the enemy force.

The automata on the ground and in the sky started shooting at Akira. However, he was able to skilfully evade with high-speed dexterous driving.

"Alpha, we don't need to use annihilator bullets on them, right?"

Akira asked with the hope that the answer was 'yes'. However, Alpha simply gave a teasing smile before replying.

"Let's check if it's needed or not first."

"Good idea."

Akira aimed the two RL2 multi-rifles he just received back with his TGP laser cannon. The C-bullets, the mini-missiles, and the laser cannon landed on their respective targets. They broke through the enemies' forcefield armour and pierced their bodies before causing a spectacular explosion.

"Alright!"

Akira inadvertently exclaimed in joy knowing that cheap bullets would do just fine. So, he quickly resumed the fight in a good mood.

Shiori and Kanae quickly continued to take down automata one by one after they landed. They blazed through the thick jamming smoke on the battlefield littered with wreckage and rubble, closed the distance to their target, and attacked. Their might managed to close the gap between mere humans and giant human-shaped automata.

Shiori jumped and heaved her blade on top of the 5 metres tall automaton. One swing was enough to break through its forcefield armour. The horizontal slash separated its body into lower and upper halves, which slid in the opposite direction and collapsed to the ground.

Kanae's fists were her main weapon. It was powered with her augmented suit and her enhanced body, equipped with powerful anti-forcefield armour. Each time she delivered a straight punch into an automaton's body, it creates a deep dent, driving a shockwave inside. The internal damage caused it to explode a moment later.

Both Shiori and Kanae had no issue fending off the automata. However, that was the exact reason why they were worried.

"…Ane-san. What do you think?"

"…No idea, at least not for now."

All the newly dispatched automata were strangely weak. Although they were not that cheap, they were not something that one would use to hunt a 50 billion bounty target.

It was understandable if they sent every single automaton they got in one go but for some reason, they were sent in waves. They might have been sent to buy time while the controllers were withdrawing. However, there was no sign of the other groups leaving the battlefield.

"For now, let's take down as many of them as possible."

“Roger that!”

Shiori and Kanae continued fighting with solemn looks on their faces. They took down as many enemies as possible, still not knowing what the enemy was planning.

Right around that time, Akira, who had already destroyed many of the automata, was still riding on his bike in the sky, and had the same worried expression.

“Alpha, do you think this is a trap?”

Akira wished he did not have to fight against any strong enemies. He was glad he did not need to use annihilator warheads to destroy the automata. However, considering that he had to fight a colossal multi-legged tank and take on a swarm of Pamela’s remote automata after, it felt strange. He could not help but feel weird now that his enemies were weaker.

Alpha also did not wear her usual smile. She replied with a severe expression.

“I’m sure it’s some kind of scheme. Either way, they now know that you can’t shoot annihilator warheads as you wish.”

Akira had shown his trump card, the annihilator warhead, to the enemy. The automata that were sent to pursue him in the sky were spread out. They were in a formation where the use of an annihilator warhead would significantly reduce its effectiveness. Since he decided not to use the annihilator warhead, it meant two things. Either he did not have many reserves of it, or he was not able to freely use it.

After listening to Alpha’s explanation, Akira replied.

“Hmmm… So basically, at the very least, I no longer can bluff my way out and act like I have that many left, huh? These automata are just expendable pawns to confirm that…? Hmm, but still…”

Although it made sense, Akira was not fully content with Alpha's conclusion and frowned.

"Akira, don't drop your guard down just yet. We have no other choice but to continue to fight right now."

"You're right. Let's do this."

Overthinking was counter-effective. Akira told himself so and quickly changed gear, refocusing back on the battlefield.

Even in the midst of everything that was going on, missiles were still spreading out jamming smoke. Since it was even thicker than before, it completely shrouded the whole battlefield.

Shiori and Kanae started to get worried about how thick the jamming smoke was. That was when Kanae suddenly noticed an enemy presence from beyond the jamming smoke. She quickly turned in that direction. Shiori also did the same albeit a little bit late.

Not too far away from the two maids, right at the border of their perceptive range, their incoming opponents also felt their presence and went straight at them.

The moment they recognized who it was, Shiori's and Kanae's eyes narrowed as they knitted their eyebrows. They immediately went after the new hostile force.

Their opponents were Pamela and Latis. Although Shiori and Kanae knew they were being lured, they could not afford to stand still while Pamela and Latis were there. Especially since the other two were heading straight to where Reina and the others were.

While in the midst of fighting, Akira's targets suddenly came to a sudden halt. They fell one by one, crashing straight to the hard ground.

"W-what was that? What just happened?"

Akira was dumbfounded and Alpha was visibly concerned.

“It’s difficult to ascertain what is going on under this jamming smoke. All of them crashed instead of safely landing on the ground. They didn’t even use forcefield armour to reduce the impact. The crash, at this height, with their mass, would mean all of them got disabled.”

“I see…”

Although they did know what just happened, one thing was certain. The number of enemies got reduced and there were no reinforcements. In the end, things ended well, Akira told himself as much and shook his worries away.

“Alpha, how are Shiori and Kanae doing? Can you tell from here?”

“I can’t really say with utmost certainty. However, I don’t detect any incoming signals that suggest they are still in battle. I believe they are in the same situation as we are.”

“In that case, I guess I’ll go visit them after returning back to the base for now. I want to replenish my ammo…”

Akira said so and turned his bike toward Sheryl’s base. However, suddenly, he frowned. The moment he directed his focus towards the direction of the base, he unconsciously used his information-gathering device in the same direction. The result was extremely worrying.

Alpha was not able to provide Akira full support due to the thick jamming smoke. Nonetheless, the moment he realized the position of the enemies, she quickly shifted her focus to searching for them as well. She immediately understood what was going on. Pamela and the others had broken through the defences of the base and were heading there. Meanwhile, Shiori and Kanae were pursuing them.

“…What? Since when?”

“Alpha! We’re going!!”

Akira quickly accelerated his bike. The thick jamming smoke was much denser on the surface than in the air. It caused the slums to be separated into two areas, the upper and the lower regions. Akira accelerated his bike and rode above the border. The condensed jamming smoke made it seem as if he was driving on top of clouds. Due to the speed filter effect of the jamming smoke, the bike's forcefield armour was enhanced. It managed to create a path under the tires from frozen and hardened jamming smoke. The tires spun intensely on top of those platforms, pushing the bike forward even faster, managing to leave a large trail of smoke behind it.

"So those automata were only a diversion, huh?"

"That might have been the case. But let's focus first and save that for later."

"You're right. Alpha, can you help with the aiming?"

"If it's possible, you should rely on your own skills. The jamming smoke effect is getting stronger. If I divide up my resources to assist your aiming, my ability to evade attacks would be greatly reduced."

"Alright then, I'll leave the evading to you."

"Yep, you can leave that part to me."

Akira aimed his TGP laser cannon carefully at Pamela and the others. Although he was sniping on top of an extremely fast-moving bike, it should not be a problem for him. The cannon muzzle released a powerful stream of energy. The jamming smoke did reduce its firepower, but it still travelled straight towards its target. Drilling its way toward Pamela and the others.

Pamela noticed that laser shot but she simply laughed it off. The automaton created off Latis' corpse made a 180-degree turn and lightly jumped, putting both of his arms in the way of the laser beam. He created a forcefield board of equivalent power. It managed to deflect the laser, bouncing it back towards Akira.

Akira flusteredly swerved to get out of the way. The laser had already lost most of its firepower and got further halved as it returned back to him.

Moreover, Alpha had placed all her resources into evading, thus, he had no reason to be worried at all. However, that incoming laser still caught him off guard.

“Whoah! That was dangerous!”

“Well, aren’t you glad that you chose to assign my resources to evading?”

Alpha was smiling confidently while Akira chuckled bitterly.

“Yeah, you’re right. But still, what the heck was that? How did he bounce the laser cannon back!?”

“Albeit difficult to put into practice, it is completely possible in theory.”

“I see, I see! Then how about this!?”

Akira directed all three of his RL2 multi-rifles, two on his hands and one on his bike, at Pamela. Countless C-bullets and mini-missiles cut through jamming smoke toward their targets.

However, Pamela casually received his barrages with only one arm. She hopped, turned around, and projected a forcefield shield with one arm to receive the barrages. The forcefield shield’s hardness was enhanced by the jamming smoke, managing to perfectly block the bullets and the mini-missiles.

Afterwards, Pamela kicked the shield. The hardened forcefield shield, which looked like a solidified smoked glass, deflected the incoming bullets as it flew toward Akira.

Akira was caught off guard again and pulled the bike up into the sky. The translucent forcefield shield passed by him, slowly dissipated energy as it continued to zoom behind him.

“…That doesn’t work as well! Dammit!!”

Akira spat out curses in reaction to the horrendous situation he was in. Not only did his shots get blocked, but he was even forced to take evasive maneuvers. Pamela used that opening to get further away from him. The further the target, the lower the might of his bullets. Worst, the stronger the forcefield armour his opponents had, the harder it would be to detect them.

The jamming smoke enveloping the area was beneficial for those who were trying to get away from the battlefield. Shiori and Kanae were also being obstructed by Pamela's forcefield shield. It prevented them from catching up with Pamela, even as they tried their hardest to chase after her.

"The annihilator warhead… I guess that is a bad idea, huh?"

"Yep, Akira, you can't use it right now."

"Thought so."

Not only would he get caught up in the explosion, but Shiori and Kanae would also get caught. Furthermore, annihilator warheads were not something to be used against another human. Thus, Akira held himself back from using it.

Alpha also agreed with his decision, but she had a different reason.

"Last time you shot it in the direction of the wasteland, that was why the city defence squad decided to let it slide. If you shoot it toward the direction of the city while already this close, Kugamayama city will definitely respond. Let's wait until you get your new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry first before assaulting the city."

"Y-yeah."

Although Akira agreed with her hypothesis, he was a bit taken aback that Alpha had a completely different reason. A reason completely different from his own.

Either way, it did not change the fact that they could not use that warhead this time. Now, Akira understood why Pamela used those weak automata as a diversion.

“So, we fell right into her trap. We have no other choice. Alpha, for now, let’s meet up with Shiori and Kanae before heading back to the base.”

“Don’t forget that I might lose connection to you due to the thickness of the jamming smoke close to the surface.”

“Yeah. I’ll be careful.”

Akira accelerated the bike and headed down. As Akira plunged into the thick smoke, Alpha suddenly vanished from his view. Even so, he still went deeper into the dense jamming smoke. The moment he saw Shiori and Kanae, he quickly turned the bike in their direction.

“I’m heading back to the base and will just ignore them for now. Do you want a ride?”

That would mean if Pamela was not heading towards Sheryl’s base, they would lose her. Due to the jamming smoke, it would be difficult to find her again. Furthermore, since they did not know what Pamela was trying to do, this might be a fatal mistake.

Shiori and Kanae understood as much. However, they still decided to follow Akira. As long as Pamela was not trying to directly attack them, they already knew their priorities. It was more important to return back to Reina instead of chasing after Pamela. This was regardless of the danger Pamela might cause. Thus, Reina and Shiori took a glance at one another and quickly jumped on board Akira’s bike.

“Thank you very much!”

“Thanks, I’ll take up on that offer.”

Right after Shiori and Kanae got on the bike, Akira quickly pulled up, flying up once again. He only stopped when he was on the border of entering the red area, which he was barred from entering. Once at the highest point, he turned the bike and drove straight towards Sheryl’s base. His terminal velocity was greatly limited when he was close to the surface, but now he was far above, the effect of the speed filter was greatly weakened, allowing him to move much faster.

Even so, the speed filter effect was not completely gone. Akira still had to push his bike, to force his way against the speed filter effect.

The remote automata with Pamela's face as well as the weak automata that Akira and the others had destroyed were all in large pools of green blood. Some of them got evaporated by the laser cannon from the multi-legged tank. Those that still had any remains, were all gory pieces scattered around.

They were all already biologically dead. If they were machines, they would be considered broken. The green liquid they were in, was medicinal drugs. The remains were absorbing it, causing the pools to gradually shrink.

Over time, the lump of flesh inside the green pool became chunks. Some even managed to grow out a mouth.

Those that managed to develop mandibles went around consuming flesh and metal alike – anything leftover from the automata. With every piece it consumed, it grew larger.

Eventually, those chunks grew limbs.

They started to walk on their legs. Meanwhile, their hands went around reaching for items that their mouths could not directly reach. They kept munching and devouring everything they took in. The more they ate, the bigger they grew. Eventually, both their size and the number of limbs increased.

The same exact thing was happening all over the slums. After all, Akira and the others were fighting the automata while moving around the slums. Thus, leftovers were scattered all over the place. Eventually, these chunks became clumps, large enough to start devouring larger leftover pieces of automata.

Some automata even had their bodies eaten from the inside. The green liquid broke out from inside and formed a mouth that devoured everything in its reach. As if it was infected by a parasite, its generator and forcefield armour projector were slowly consumed from the inside.

The jamming smoke was of no help to onlookers as no one was able to notice what was happening.

The jamming was originally meant to weaken the firepower of the powerful weapons used in battle. Thus, it was not easy for those, aware of the purpose of the thick jamming smoke, to notice something unusual was happening.

****

Reina was sniping from the top of Sheryl's base. Shiori had stopped her from joining them, who were going to hide in close proximity to Akira. She managed to convince Reina by stressing how dangerous it was. However, it would also be unacceptable for Reina to stay holed up at the base, alone. Thus, compromises were made.

A large-sized rifle spewed out a bullet that pierced through the jamming smoke and hit its target. It drilled a large hole through the torso of a heavy augmented suit, instantly killing its user.

Togami could not help but be amazed by Reina's sniping.

"You can still hit your target even under this situation, huh? That's impressive."

Even with his compliment, Reina just smiled bitterly. She lightly changed the subject.

"Well, I'm getting information of their precise location, after all. There's no way I can do something like this completely on my own."

If she was all on her own, Reina would not be able to ascertain the enemy's position. However, by connecting to the coordination support system that Shirou had assimilated with, Reina could see the enemy's exact location through her enhanced vision.

“To think that there’s someone who can get such accurate information in this situation…”

Reina and the others knew nothing about Shirou. They only knew him as someone brought in by Carol, to help in the fight. Even so, they still recognized Shirou to be an extremely skilled person.

However, knowing the enemies’ position did not mean that it was easy to hit them. Furthermore, with the speed filter, the trajectory of a speeding bullet would often meander slightly away from the straight line of fire. It was thanks to Reina’s skill that she was able to hit her targets. Togami was praising Reina for that feat. Nonetheless, after hearing her response, he simply smiled wryly and tried to match the conversation.

“…Ahh, you’re right. This world is filled with so many amazing people.”

Reina pouted, but it quickly changed to a small smile.

“Well, I’m planning to join their ranks sometime in the future though. How about you, Togami?”

Seeing Reina’s smile of challenge, Togami chuckled.

“…Yeah, that’s the plan for me too. Though, in my case, that’s something in the near future. Or more like, something real soon.”

“Oh? Is that so? Well, it’s a race then.”

Reina declared with a smile on her face. There was a wish mixed in her words, to be able to stay close enough to Togami for it to be a race.

They suddenly noticed someone else’s presence nearby and quickly turned in that direction. Togami stood in front of Reina, to shield her. He pointed his rifle in the direction of the presence.

The source of it was Pamela and the others. They were running toward Reina, trying to get onto the base’s rooftop.

Togami opened fire at once. However, Pamela immediately deployed her forcefield shield, which easily blocked the bullets. Without any time to bark out orders, Togami simply pointed at the rooftop's door. It was an indication to Reina, immediately retreat.

Reina understood what Togami meant and immediately headed for the door. Since this base was where relics from Tsubaki's area were housed, it was designed and built to be especially robust. Its whole structure was not something that should be found in the slums. The walls were protected by forcefield shields and once the door was shut, it would be extremely difficult to break through. This was the reason Shiori allowed Reina to provide support from the rooftop of the base.

Naturally, Pamela noticed and quickly threw the forcefield shield toward the door, blocking Reina from reaching it. Although the forcefield shield would dissipate after a few seconds, it was more than enough time. Pamela could reach Reina and Togami.

Reina knew that the situation was grave. Even the slightest bit of delay could spell her end. With her escape route being completely blocked. Reina froze for a second. However, that was when another signal suddenly came from above, causing her to look up reflexively. Her train of thoughts immediately returned after she saw what was above.

Akira and the others were coming. They were all on Akira's bike, heading in her direction. Shiori and Kanae quickly jumped off the bike and created a forcefield platform, accelerating themselves faster toward where Reina was.

Naturally, Pamela intercepted their attempts to group up. Pamela's group suddenly changed where they were headed. Now, they moved to intercept Shiori and Kanae. Pamela and Kanae made contact with their fists while Latis and Shiori made contact with their swords.

When Reina saw this, she immediately knew what she had to do. She quickly ran toward the end of the rooftop and jumped off. The best thing she could do to help Kanae and Shiori, was to get away from this place. To ensure that she was safe so that they could fully focus on the fight. To create an environment, they did not have to worry about her.

Togami immediately understood what Reina was planning and followed after her. He also jumped off the rooftop. Meanwhile, the automata that were behind Pamela's group, went to chase after them.

Akira was not sure where to go as the situation had quickly changed right in front of his eyes. That was when Shiori sent a glance, to signal him to go to Reina. Thus, Akira made the decision and drove in Reina's direction.

Shiori and Kanae as well as Pamela's group touched the rooftop. Unlike Pamela, who was smiling like a maniac filled with killing intent, Shiori was solemn. This was despite the fact they managed to protect Reina from Pamela.

"I guess I should say I made it in time… or rather, I got invited just at the right time, huh?"

Pamela casually confirmed Shiori's question with a smile.

"Oh? So, you do understand, huh? It's two on two, just like last time. But this time, I won't be pulling Latis down."

Due to her failure last time, Latis got killed. Which had led to this situation. Pamela's smile was filled with the insanity deep inside her.

However, even when faced with her insanity, Kanae chuckled and mockingly asked.

"Two on two? It's one on two, no?"

Pamela's smile immediately vanished.

"…It is two on two."

As she glared at Kanae, Pamela's expression started to get dyed with hatred.

However, that did not affect Kanae at all.

"Well, it doesn't matter. It was all because of my mistake last time that you managed to get away. So, this time, I'll get serious."

Kanae’s smile vanished. Her glowing eyes of excitement whenever she looked forward to an upcoming fight disappeared. Her expression turned cold. There was no semblance of respect for her opponent. She looked at Pamela with a freezing cold glare, as if she was looking at a mere obstacle to her job.

“Now die!”

“I’ll kill you this time!”

Both uttered words to express their respective desire. Both sentences were similar but vaguely different as they sprang into action. To turn what they said into reality. Shiori and Latis matched them and stepped forward as well.

Four people, or three people to be more precise, started their deathmatch. It was fuelled by their respective emotions: loyalty, hatred, and desire to kill. With the help of their augmented suits, they swung their fists and blades with all their might. It was as if the speed filter of the jamming smoke did not affect them at all.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 286, Curse From The Dead

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

As Reina was falling, she looked up and saw an automaton behind Togami, chasing after them. She immediately grabbed her rifle and aimed at the automaton's head. The bullet travelled straight towards its target and blew its head off.

However, she was caught by surprise when she saw the headless automaton continue to move. It took a stance in mid-air and aimed its rifle back at her.

Togami also turned around and shot at the automaton. Even after being riddled with bullets, it was not enough to destroy it. However, it was barely enough to temporarily stop it from moving. Reina used this opening to fire more shots. She went for the limbs first, breaking them apart using her powerful bullet. Afterwards, she took shots at the body, smashing it apart.

The destroyed automaton splattered its parts all over the place. Green liquid, mixed with flesh and metal was everywhere. While everything was falling, Reina created a slanted platform to ride down on using her forcefield armour, which also serves to reduce their velocity. When she saw Akira's bike coming close, she jumped onboard.

"Akira! What's going on? What happened!?"

“I don’t know the whole situation myself. But since we have no time right now, I will just tell you this. You have two choices: evacuate to somewhere safe, or get away from this place and provide support for Shiori and Kanae from afar.”

Reina hesitated for a second but she quickly made up her mind and glanced at Togami, who would be dragged in by her decision. Thankfully, Togami gave a firm nod.

“I’ll provide support.”

“Alright then.”

Akira made a sharp vertical U-turn, barely touching the ground, bouncing quickly back up.

After regrouping back with Togami and Reina, Akira then thought.

“Alpha, that automaton that they just shot down, it’s pretty weak, don’t you think? Or is it just my imagination?”

The automata that Akira and the others had desperately fought back were much stronger than the one Reina had just taken down. A part of Akira was questioning if he had misjudged Reina and Togami’s strength. If that was really the case, he wondered if his judgment had been clouded.

Thankfully, Alpha denied his worries.

“No. They’re indeed of pretty bad quality. My guess is that they’re moving horrendously because the one controlling them is busy fighting.”

“I see. Then as I thought, the one on the top is the real Pamela, right?”

“I can’t confirm it, but there’s a good chance that the assault will let up if we manage to kill her. So, let’s hurry back up.”

“Yeah, let’s get this done.”

Since it was a conversation through telepathy, it did not take much time and the rooftop was still a bit further ahead. Even so, it would not take that much time for Akira to reach a location where they could provide Shiori and Kanae support.

That was of course if everything went well. As usual, there were obstacles. Akira quickly noticed that something was approaching. He immediately suspected it to be just another automaton on an air bike. Thus, he opened fire.

However, when the source of the signal showed itself, it appeared from behind the jamming smoke. Its whole appearance alarmed him.

It turned out that his first suspicion was partially correct. The one riding the bike was not an automaton, but a mass of flesh which had assimilated with machines. It had multiple hands growing out of its body, equipped with multiple rifles.

Akira's group and the strange mass of flesh exchanged bullets between them.

Although their bullets packed enough power to kill each other, the deciding factor was the ability to evade and shoot. In this regard, Akira's group had the upper hand. The first barrage stripped the mass of flesh its parts as blood was sprayed into the air. However, even after taking all that damage, it was still pulsating and alive. It took a second barrage for its form to completely collapse to pieces and fall to the ground.

Akira, Reina, and Togami were able to easily grasp victory. However, they were not pleased at all. Instead, their expression displayed clear unsettlement. Reina inadvertently yelped.

"Akira! What was that!? Did you bring them here!? What exactly were you fighting against back there!?"

"I didn't see anything like that before though. Just what in the world is going on?"

Akira seems really confused. That was when Alpha suddenly warned him with a grave expression.

“Akira, more of them are coming. Get ready to engage.”

Akira could see more strange-looking similar masses of flesh heading in his direction from afar. They were of many different variations. Some of them had a portion of the flying bike assimilated into their bodies. Some with more limbs than the others. Some with headless upper bodies sticking out. All of them were of a distorted spherical shape, and all of them looked horrific. Although they seemed to be trying to imitate a humanoid shape, it was clear that they were failing spectacularly. Furthermore, they were obviously targeting them.

“Reina. Togami. We’ll take them down before they can reach Shiori and Kanae. Assume that I have no leeway to help you out and try to do your best on your own.”

Reina smiled confidently. Meanwhile, Togami made a faint smile. Both were fired up.

“Of course!”

“Well, I’m Reina’s bodyguard, after all. So, I have no wish to push that duty onto you.”

“Alright then, let’s go.”

Akira suddenly accelerated the bike and went straight up. Afterwards, they went past the roofs of most of the buildings there and raced around the base at high speed. Due to the speed, any normal person would have been thrown off by the centripetal force. However, Akira and the others were able to easily hold on, and continue using their respective rifles to shoot down the new wave of strange enemies swarming the place.

The green blood splattered around as those monstrosities were shot down. However, many managed to quickly recover after they got shot down.

Those that crash down would fly up again. With more of them coming, none really defeated, shooting them only seemed to be a waste of bullets.

At the moment, Akira's group seems to hold the upper hand in that right. However, it was clearly only a matter of time before the table got turned.

__*__*__*__

By Shirou's command, Erio and the other gang children retreated back into the base. At first, many were displeased since it meant they had to leave the defence line that they had been maintaining. A defence line that had come at the cost of some of their friends. However, after seeing that the team from Drankam had also returned, they were able to accept Shirou's retreat order. Now, they were confused as to what was going on outside.

Closing all entry meant strengthening the building's defences. However, they would be simply taking hits without being able to shoot back. It would only be a matter of time before their defences got broken through. Furthermore, the forcefield installed in the base would not be able to buy that much time. To prevent the worst, they have been outside, striking surprise attacks – that was until Shirou issued his retreat order.

Now, the entrance and exits were closed and barricaded. Each person got posted to their respective positions, all ordered to point their rifles outside. Erio and the others tensed up, believing that they would have no other choice but to take hits fired by tanks and powered suits.

However, their anxiety was quickly replaced by shock and confusion. There did not seem to be any attackers coming.

"Erio, what is going on?"

"…Well, if I may make an optimistic guess, I would say that Akira-san has won and the enemies are retreating… Or something like that?"

"Oooh! I see!"

Erio had nothing to support his claim. However, it did help to raise the morale of the other children. Thus, even Erio started to believe his baseless guess. That was right when he saw something falling from the sky. It had completely betrayed his hopeful wish.

“W-what is that thing!?”

Erio flusteredly aimed his rifle. Horrifying-looking masses of flesh with multiple limbs were raining down from the sky around the base.

“M-Monster!? W-why are monsters here…!?”

“They’re still moving!!”

Erio and the children’s bewilderment got shaken off when they heard that. The monsters were still trying to clump up and return back to its original form even after being sprayed with bullets. However, at a certain point, it could not move anymore. It took on too much damage and its regenerative capability was not able to keep. In other words, it had used up all the green liquid in its veins and finally stopped moving.

However, that was not the end. Since Akira and the others were still shooting more down from the sky, these monstrosities were basically raining down to the ground for Erio and the others to fight.

Erio shouted to the other children, who were in a state of disarray and chaos.

“Calm down and shoot at them! They’re not unkillable!”

The other children finally calmed down and returned back to shooting. With the help of the coordination support system, they were able to perform very well and hold the upper hand. This helped raise their morale.

That was when suddenly, another strange thing happened. The attackers that were hiding suddenly showed themselves. As expected, it was at the worst possible time. However, the children’s fright was quickly replaced by bewilderment. After all, the incoming enemies were also attacked by the monsters.

“Seriously… What the heck is going on…?”

Although the strange situation continued on, Erio and the others had no other choice but to keep fighting back.

——-—*—

As Akira was racing about above Sheryl’s base on his bike at high speed, he looked around his surroundings.

“Alpha, those things… Basically, the ones with greater speed are reaching us first and there are actually even more of them coming, right?”

“Most probably, yes.”

They were similar to monsters like the greedy crocodile, which assimilated things that they ate. Thus, the ones Akira was facing right now were those that managed to consume and assimilate with air bikes. They were more mobile and were able to get here sooner than the others. This meant that there were still others out there, headed here. Worst, there were most likely even stronger variants. After all, some must have devoured the automata.

Akira could not help but frown at the thought.

That was when Reina suddenly asked with a grave expression.

“Akira, those things are monsters, right?”

“Eh? Well… I think so…”

Akira was a little bit confused as to why Reina asked that question. After all, the answer was obvious. However, Reina took Akira’s words extremely seriously.

“You think so too, right? Then let’s tell the city defence squad. Although they’re taking a neutral stance in the conflict between you and Lion Steel, I’m sure they would dispatch their men if it’s against a swarm of monsters this close to the city. Togami and I will go and inform them.”

Akira took some time to figure out what to do. Although it was a fact that they were fighting against monsters, it was hard for him to simply accept that monsters came here in the middle of the fight with such timing by pure coincidence. These monsters definitely had something to do with the Lion Steel company. Or at the very least, something to do with Pamela. Asking for help from City Management would mean getting them involved in his problem due to his selfishness. It was not something that he would like to do.

But in the end, this was something Togami or Reina volunteered to do. Although it was something he would never do, it was also not his place to force them not to involve City Management. It took a moment, but Akira finally realized something. That Reina knew exactly what she was doing, that her question and future actions were self-serving ones.

Even if it meant using monsters as an excuse, even if it meant getting City Management involved, as long as it might help Shiori and Kanae, Reina would not hesitate to do it. Akira finally understood and he gave his permission.

“…Alright, I’ll let you borrow my bike. Good luck.”

Reina, who was originally planning to go on foot, was shocked by Akira’s proposal. Since they had to directly go make contact with City Management due to the jamming smoke, the area that they had to go to was well within the red area where Akira was not permitted to enter. Thus, Reina thought that there was no other choice but to go on their own. Reina knew that they would have to split here but she did not expect Akira would offer to lend them his bike.

“Are you sure?”

“Well, they did help me out back then. So, I’ll have to somehow pay that favour back, right?”

Akira knew that Shiori and Kanae expected him to protect Reina when they sent him to chase after her. Now that they had to move separately from here, Akira believed that he should at least do something to help Reina. Thus, he thought of lending her his precious bike.

“Thank you. I’ll be borrowing it for a while.”

Of course, it was safer for Akira to have the bike around. Even so, Akira allowed Reina to borrow it. She could imagine just how grateful Akira was to Shiori and Kanae, for him to go this far. Thus, as Shiori and Kanae’s master, Reina decided to take full responsibility and gratefully accepted his offer.

“By the way, don’t break it, okay?”

“I’ll be careful.”

Akira and Reina faintly smiled at each other before Akira jumped off the bike.

Now that Reina was on the steer, she immediately accelerated forward.

“Togami! Now that Akira is not here, make sure to protect me, okay?”

“I know it already! Geez! Give me a break!”

Although most of those strange monsters that could fly got shot down, there were still those that were walking on the ground. Some had deformed arms, without skin, exposing its broken bones held together by enhanced muscles. Large-sized rifles seemed to sprout out from their bodies, while some were held, all of which aimed at Reina.

Reina and Togami slipped in between the warheads as they quickly left the battlefield.

After jumping off the bike, Akira was falling while shooting at the monsters around the base. Alpha, who was floating next to him, seemed obviously concerned.

“Akira, I think lending your bike to them in this situation is overkill.”

“Well, I will manage somehow. I’m also almost out of ammo, by the way.”

Akira smiled bitterly while he jokingly said, to which Alpha responded with a huge sigh.

Finally, Akira did deplete his reserve ammo. Even when both his rifles suddenly stopped shooting, he calmly kicked the air and accelerated down.

On the ground, the camping vehicle leapt out of the base through remote driving. Once Akira landed, he quickly entered the already opened back door and finished replenishing his ammunition before jumping out through the opened skylight window. Without missing a beat, he started shooting as if to empty the extended magazine, which surprisingly held numerous bullets for its small size.

The weird monsters got overwhelmed by the storm of bullets and basically got obliterated in an instant. Hundreds of mini-missiles, the size of a bullet but with the homing capability, filled the area like a tsunami. They sought their respective targets and blew up. This was just the stark difference between how many bullets one could carry on a bike compared to a camping vehicle. Akira used that to his advantage as much as he could.

“I bet they don’t have anything like that huge tank. For something like that, I require a bike to avoid getting shot. So, let’s just keep things up like this. Eliminate them before they can shoot at me. That way, I won’t really need my bike.”

Akira said and smiled, Alpha turned towards him and made a deep smile.

“Akira, do you know what ammo expense is?”

“…I used 5 annihilator warheads back then, the rest would not change my total expenses by that much.”

“Is that so? Well, if you say so, then it’s not my place to say anything”

Akira chuckled as if to push that away from his mind. Meanwhile Alpha just smiled amusedly at him.

Akira went around the base on the camping vehicle, obliterating any hostile entities that he encountered. In the middle of that, he glanced at the rooftop of Sheryl's base. The homing bullets went in that direction, but those strange monsters jumped and sacrificed themselves to block the homing bullets.

[…As I thought, they are deliberately throwing themselves in its way.]

The masses of flesh in the area were obviously focusing on him. However. it was not like they were targeting him because of who he was. They were targeting him because he was trying to help Shiori and Kanae. In the first place, these strange monsters were not being controlled by Pamela. They were simply attacking anyone who was trying to get involved with the battle on the rooftop of Sheryl's base.

[So, basically, they're telling me not to get in the way, huh? Just what is going on with them?]

Akira thought that this was indeed strange. However, he simply continued to focus on the enemies around the base without trying to go to the rooftop. There was a good chance that those strange creatures would swarm him if he tried to force his way up to the rooftop. That might only cause more chaos, which could distract Shiori and Kanae. With that in mind, Akira prioritised cleaning up the monsters in the area first.

__*__*__*__

Kanae's punch split the air. Her fist was filled with killing intent. It was not the usual killing intent since she had decided to stop playing around. Her killing intent right now was more apathetic. It was as if she was just doing her job, to crush an insect. It focused more on efficiency instead of emotions.

That high-speed punch created a thick solid wall of air resistance between her and her target, which was not even one meter away from her fist.

However, that did not stop her. She broke through that wall with her skill, scattering shockwaves in all directions.

Pamela managed to nimbly evade. She was smiling while being devoid of emotion, just like Kanae except for her smile. Their role between attack and defence got reversed.

Pamela threw a punch at Kanae. Just like what Kanae did. It was also filled with killing intent. However, unlike Kanae, it was steeped in hatred, hoping to cause her target to die a horrible death. She used the technology to manipulate bodies along with her skills of controlling dozens of automata at the same time. Her attack unleashed a blow which deformed her body to increase its power without any concern for her own life.

Unfortunately for Pamela, Kanae somehow managed to avoid her punch. Pamela's face twitched when Kanae managed to avoid her punch. Nonetheless, it was a close call for Kanae as well. It was obvious from her grave expression that she could not dodge such an attack every single time it was thrown.

"…She's strong! As I thought. I should have killed her back then…!!"

As Kanae lamented her past mistake. She used that regret to fuel her attacks.

Meanwhile, on the other side, Shiori swung her blade. The combination of her powerful augmented suit and the skill that she had polished over the years gave birth to a masterful slash that demonstrated her unyielding loyalty to her master and her duty to eliminate her enemies.

However, it was blocked. She was equipped with items which warranted permission from a branch manager to use and that was also the case for her opponent as well. It was a fact that the empty husk of what was once Latis no longer had any concept of a will or loyalty. What was left of him only functioned by Pamela's hatred. Pamela used all her processing power, which was normally divided among multiple automata just for one body. Because of that, Shiori was having a hard time against Latis, and his counter was already coming for her.

Shiori somehow managed to block it. As their blades made contact, the energy that was dispersed into the air created sparks.

[He’s even stronger than before…! To think that she could do this while fighting Kanae…! No wonder he decided to save Pamela back then…!!]

Shiori thought back, that this would not have happened if she had focused on killing Pamela last time. She was impressed by Latis’ calm and rational decision. To spare Pamela even if it meant sacrificing his own life. Meanwhile, it also showed Shiori’s inadequacy since she made such a huge mistake.

However, Shiori had no desire to give up. She could not do so. If they were defeated here, Pamela and Latis would then go for Reina. That was something that Shiori could never permit. She had no other choice but to win for Reina’s sake. Thus, Shiori made her resolve and shook off thoughts of her inadequacy. She stepped forward to face her opponent.

Shiori and Kanae were already using battle stimulants with side effects. They were already accelerating their information processing and sharpening their senses. They could even see flying bullets and were able to evade them by pure instinct. However, even so, they were not able to fight evenly against Pamela and Latis. They were barely clinging on to their lives while they fought back.

Similarly, Pamela and Latis were hard pressed against Shiori and Kanae. Just like them, Shiori and Kanae were taking huge risks in order to win. However, the difference in what they would refer to as a ‘win’ started to affect Pamela in a bad way.

Shiori and Kanae were fighting in order to protect Reina. Thus, as long as they could defeat their enemies, even if it meant that they had to sacrifice their lives, it would still count as a win for them.

Meanwhile, Pamela was fighting in order to clear her regrets. Deep regret of getting Latis killed because she was slowing him down in their previous fight. This meant that it would be pointless to kill their opponents if they also got killed. That would count as a loss for her.

In order to create the same two-on-two fight like back then, Pamela had to sacrifice almost all of the equipment that she brought from the Lion Steel company. Moreover, she had ordered the strange-looking remote automata, which originally had a humanoid shape, not to intervene in this battle. Due to her hatred, she went as far as to recreate the same situation. Therefore, it was unlikely for her to change her mind now that she had come this far.

However, the fewer advantages she had, the harder she had to push herself. This meant that she was getting more fatigued, which would eventually affect Latis' movements. Thus, they were hard-pressed and unable to win.

Finally, the flow of battle changed. Shiori and Kanae knew that the effect of their battle stimulant was running out of time. They knew that now was their only chance to win. Thus, they decided to put everything into their next strike. They made their resolve, gathered all their strength, and stepped out. They renounced any defence and went all out in their attack. They stepped into an area where life and death were separated by a single thread. With the loyalty to throw their lives away, they paved their way forward. Even if it might be a mistake, Shiori and Kanae glanced at each other and put everything they had into their next strike, both at the same time.

Pamela tried to receive their attack, but unfortunately, she did not have the same resolve as Kanae and Shiori. Although she was not afraid of death, she could not throw away her life just for the sake of her own goal. That difference caused Pamela to be at a disadvantage. She took a punch from Kanae as Latis took a strike from Shiori.

Since she believed that Latis got killed because of her, Pamela unconsciously invested more of her attention into Latis.

Thanks to that, Latis was able to perfectly receive Shiori's strike. Shiori knitted her eyebrows and gritted her teeth, believing that even the attack that she had staked her life on, was not enough to finish off Latis. At this point, Shiori had no power left to react to the next attack. A counter would come, and it would definitely end her life. With that in mind, Shiori's last thought was an apology. She wanted to apologize to Reina for not being able to fulfill her duty.

But for some reason, that counterattack did not come.

Kanae's attack reached Pamela. Pamela did try to fend off the attack, but since she was more focused on Latis, she was not able to react perfectly to Kanae's attack. Naturally, Kanae did not let this opportunity slip. Her punch broke through Pamela's forcefield shield, even the armour plating on her arms. It managed to bend her arms backwards as the punch went through and reached Pamela's head. The punch had lost most of its power, so it could not smash Pamela's head to pieces. However, the shockwave was more than sufficient to fatally injure her brain.

Pamela was dead in an instant. She staggered backwards and finally fell. Kanae, who had hit her limit, fell to her knees a moment later.

Seeing how things played out, Shiori also fell to her knees. Meanwhile, Latis stood there, frozen.

"K-Kanae… D-did you… Get her…?"

"Y-yeah, somehow… H-how about you?"

"W-well… Latis is… already dead… Right from the start… though…"

"Ahh… That's right…"

Shiori and Kanae were panting. They slowly calmed down their breathing and after a short break, Shiori eventually managed to barely stand. Although she still had to use the sheath of her blade to help her up, she continued to move forward. She then raised her blade and spoke.

"Well… It's better to be safe than sorry."

Shiori thought that it might be better to render Latis harmless before he could move again. Thus, she swung her blade down.

Even in her exhausted state, Shiori had enough power to cut down a non-moving target. However, her blade could not cut Latis down.

"Wha-!?"

Latis blocked Shiori's blade.

Kanae immediately threw a punch to help Shiori. However, since she was also exhausted, her movement was greatly dulled. Shiori's face turned grave seeing Latis start to move as if he was about to strike back.

If Latis attacked them now, Shiori and Kanae would definitely meet their end here.

"…What?"

But instead of striking back, Latis jumped back and left the area. He then started running away from the place.

Shiori and Kanae were shocked. It was Shiori, who first to returned to her senses as she turned her gaze to Pamela with suspicion. A moment later, she glanced at Kanae.

Kanae, who understood what Shiori was about to ask, shook her head.

"I'm sure that this is her real body. Otherwise, we would have been killed by now."

"…You have a point."

Shiori was suspicious if Pamela had swapped Latis' brain with hers. That she was using Latis' body. However, if that was really the case, Latis would have killed them instead of running away. Pamela was already dead. It was thanks to her death that Latis stopped moving. That was the reason why Shiori was still alive.

"But Latis is running away though, what do you think, Ane-san?"

"Now that Pamela is dead, Latis can't move through external control. The emergency measure of his augmented suit might have recognized that its user had lost consciousness and evacuated its user to preserve his life… Maybe something like that?"

“Ahhh. That would explain why it suddenly started moving and ran away instead of trying to attack us.”

“We don’t know for sure if that is really the case though. But let’s just leave it be for now. It’s not like we have any strength to chase after him. It’s more important to return back to Milady. Kanae, can you still move?”

“Geez, give me a break. I can barely even stand, you know?”

“It’s nothing compared to Milady’s safety.”

Kanae could not help but smile bitterly. It was not like Shiori could not understand how bad Kanae’s condition was. As a matter of fact, Shiori was also barely able to stand. Thus, Shiori understood that she was basically asking Kanae for the impossible.

“If only Akira-boy would do that for us… We did leave that to him, after all… Hm?”

Right when Kanae said that, Akira suddenly jumped onto the rooftop. It seemed like he had scaled the wall to get there.

“Hmmm, not sure if I should say you came at the right time or I wished you had arrived a bit sooner.”

Kanae mumbled with a bitter smile as she saw Akira walk toward her.

Akira eliminated numerous strange-looking monsters thanks to the large amount of ammunition he had. He was focused on reducing their number to a manageable level. That way, if he went up to where Shiori and Kanae were, he would be able to take care of those that pursued him up to the rooftop.

But due to the unending reinforcements, it took more time than he thought. Since he was worried for Shiori and Kanae, he eventually started to think of forcing his way to the rooftop.

That was when the enemies suddenly stopped coming at him. Every single one that was still alive suddenly started to retreat from Sheryl’s base.

Naturally, Akira thought that this situation was abnormal. However, it was a good opportunity for him, so he took off to the rooftop. He was glad to see Shiori and Kanae were still alive. Judging from what he saw, he believed that Shiori and Kanae had already won and slowly approached them.

“It’s good to see you two are fine… Well, at least, still alive. I have medicine, want some?”

“Oh, thank you!”

Akira handed over a still-sealed medicine box. Kanae took it, tore it open, and pour half of the contents into her mouth. She then passed the other half to Shiori, who also downed it the same way.

Akira frowned. He did not expect them to do something like this.

“Oh! It’s working! Akira-boy! This must be pretty expensive medicine.”

“Y-yeah.”

“No wonder it’s working right away. I feel better already. Ahh, but at this rate, the overdose effect will kick in once its effect runs out.”

Since the battle stimulant’s effect had run out, they would normally not be able to stand due to the side-effects. However, thanks to Akira’s medicine, they were now able to fight again to some extent.

However, Akira’s medicine did not neutralize the side-effects of the battle stimulant. It only allowed them to not temporarily feel it. Kanae had noticed that she would faint if she lowered her guard. Thus, she was certain she would stay down for the next few days from the fatigue if she relaxed.

“Akira-sama. Thank you very much for the medicine. I will reimburse the cost on another day. So then… Where is Milady?”

“She went to the city to let them know about the monsters’ attack. I let them borrow my bike, so they should be fine. They should be able to run away if things go south.”

Shiori understood the situation just from his short explanation. She wanted Akira to stay with Reina to protect her. However, Akira was barred from entering the city. Thus, he could not do so. She judged that under such circumstances, it was commendable that he loaned Reina his means of transportation.

“Thank you very much for loaning Milady your bike.”

“Don’t mention it. So then, what happened over here? You won… Right?”

“Pamela is dead. I believe that the commander from the third ward branch’s side was Pamela. But I can’t say for certain they will pull their force back with this…”

“Ahhh, I see. It would be great if they would pull back though.”

Akira believed that although the situation got better, it was still too early to let his guard down. A voice suddenly echoed, which confirmed Akira’s belief.

“I lost, huh…”

That voice came from Pamela. Akira and the others immediately looked in her direction.

“Kanae!?”

“No, I made sure that she’s dead, you know!?”

“Alpha!?”

“She’s dead. It seems like that voice has been pre-recorded and set to be played if she dies.”

Pamela was definitely dead. Akira and the others had reconfirmed it. However, the voice did not stop.

“So, in the end… I’m still nothing but a burden… I had hoped to kill you together with Latis… It is indeed unfortunate…”

Even after her descent to insanity, Pamela still thought of a scenario where she got killed. She had set Latis to escape if that happened. The reason why Latis's body quickly left the area after Pamela was killed was because she had set him up to do so right from the start.

"I guess there's no other choice then…"

She had thought of a way to continue her revenge in case they got defeated again. A scenario where she was still a burden to Latis.

"Then, you shall die by Latis' hands."

That was her final curse after her death. That faint mumble was filled with hatred. It was recorded imagining her defeat. Thanks to that, her ominous last words were extremely clear.

Akira and the others frowned and looked at each other.

"…Say, isn't that Latis guy the one that you've already killed?"

"We did. But his body was maintained in a state where Pamela could freely control him. We just fought against him a moment ago while Pamela was controlling him. Although, in the end, he managed to get away from us."

It was obvious from their expression that they had a bad feeling about what was about to happen.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 287, Allies

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Reina and Togami were able to safely make contact with the city defence squad. They were able to inform them of the monster attack. However, things did not go as they had expected.

“What do you mean the defence squad will not send anyone?”

She was talking with Goutol through a display. It was clear that he was frowning.

“We can only wait until it causes direct damage to the city. Or at least we believe it will cause damage to the city. This is something that those at the top have decided upon. As long as they don’t approach us or attack us, we cannot do anything about it.”

“But they’re just right there, you know? Wouldn’t that be enough of a threat? Normally, you would have sent you men at this point.”

“If you’re talking about threats, we’ve allowed a 50 billion bounty target recognized as a monster to get this close. So, there’s not that much of a difference with those monsters around.”

Reina went silent. It was an excellent point. However, she could not simply give up here and tried to come up with something else.

“In that case, can you connect me to your boss? We fought against those monsters, so we will try to convince them that it’s a real threat.”

“…I’m sorry, but I can’t do that. They won’t easily accept a call if the source is someone from the Lion Steel Company. In the first place, I don’t have the authority to do that.”

The battle near the city was recognized as a conflict between branches of Lion Steel. There was a struggle for influence between the city officers, Yanagisawa, and the third and fourth ward branches of Lion Steel. However, externally, City Management wanted to present themselves as a neutral third party, maintaining their position as observer, to not be involved in the battle.

Goutol added that if the city defence squad sent its men due to information from someone affiliated with the fourth branch, it would endanger its neutral position. Thus, they could not make any moves based on information from Reina.

Reina knitted her eyebrows. She did not push any further since it was obvious that Goutol was also not happy about the order he had received. Even when the men on the field were displeased, it was still not enough to change the higher-ups’ decision. It would be meaningless no matter what she said. Thus, she decided to try to think of another way.

Unfortunately, she could not come up with any good ideas.

[Not good…! We didn’t come here to evacuate…!]

She did consider returning back to Shiori. However, that would be nothing but her own selfish wish. After all, they did flee from the battle against Pamela. That sole action was more than enough to ascertain their position as protection targets instead of extra reinforcements. It was only natural for the protection target to stay somewhere safe. Going to a dangerous location of their own volition would only cause Shiori and Kanae more trouble.

[If we’re going to return, we should at least bring something to help them. Otherwise, it would be meaningless to return back…]

Originally, she planned on getting an extra hand from the city defence squad. However, that plan did not go well. Thus, she had to find aid from another source. Reina started to get impatient, trying to think of who and how to convince them to help her. That was when someone suddenly called out to her.

“Oh, Reina, long time no see.”

Reina inadvertently turned toward the source of that voice and was taken aback. It was Chloe and she was smiling triumphantly at her.

Reina was surprised to find Chloe there since she should have been inside the inner wall. However, the thing that surprised her more was the maid and the butler next to Chloe. They were not people she knew. Though, one thing for certain, they were wearing first-class maid and butler uniforms. These outfits could only be used by high-class servants. They must either be directly affiliated with the Lion Steel main branch or were serving under a member of the Lorentz Family of high position.

Chloe had those servants next to her as she smiled triumphantly. It was a huge shock to Reina.

Seeing how shocked Reina was, Chloe laughed and said.

“Well, I will at least let you know this. As you can see, I have bodyguards dispatched from the main branch. I know you want to kill me, but I don’t recommend you to do anything foolish.”

Reina frowned and glanced at the maid. The maid then confirmed what Chloe said.

“It is the truth. We are here to protect Chloe-sama. So please be careful. Trying to pick a fight here means picking a fight against the main branch as well.”

“M-my apologies.”

Judging from the maid’s reaction, Reina understood that they were indeed highly likely to be from the main branch. She flusteredly bowed and apologized as she started panicking inside.

[…No way… That can’t be… So, not only the third ward branch, but the main branch is also taking Chloe’s side…!? This is bad… really bad…]

As Reina turned around and thought that she should at least let Shiori and Kanae know about this, someone from the main branch suddenly coldly spoke to her.

“Reina Rilard Lorentz. The representative is calling for you. Please come with us. Since the jamming smoke is preventing communication, we understand that you could not reply to the message from the main branch. Nonetheless, do be careful of what you choose your next action to be.”

“C-certainly, of course…”

That was just how high of an authority someone from the main branch had. It now was definitive, that they were moving under representative Alice’s will. Thus, Reina could not refuse their demand. Seeing Reina’s bitter smile, Chloe chuckled mockingly at her.

Reina of course noticed Chloe’s chuckle. However, she could not do anything. She gritted her teeth and held herself back from saying anything. Worse, she still could not find a way to better her situation.

Right at that time, Togami, who had been silently walking behind Reina, suddenly casually asked.

“Anyway, it seems like Reina doesn’t need a bodyguard anymore, right? In that case, Reina, I will go return Akira’s bike.”

Reina did not expect Togami to suggest that. She turned around to see Togami lightly smile at her, with a wink.

Thanks to his support, Reina managed to regain her calm. She then glanced in Chloe's direction and lightly stated.

"…You're right. Please give him this too."

Reina then handed over her ammunition and rifle to Togami. She then took a glance in Chloe's direction again.

The person from the main branch did not express any reaction at all. However, Chloe's smile immediately vanished as her expression turned stern.

Seeing that, Reina was able to show her usual smile.

"Thanks, Togami. I'll leave it to you."

"Sure. I'll get going now."

Togami smiled back at her, turned on the bike, and went off.

After Reina saw Togami off, she turned to Chloe and smiled triumphantly at her. Chloe was obviously displeased by how things developed and pouted.

Even when Reina told Togami to return the bike, to take her ammo and rifle, as well as the information of Chloe's whereabouts to Akira, those from the main branch did not show any reaction at all. That showed the main branch was not exactly on Chloe's side. If they were, they would never allow such detrimental information to reach someone who was obviously after Chloe's life. This meant that Chloe almost succeeded in fooling Reina, acting like those servants from the main branch were her own.

[That was dangerous. I was so surprised that I almost got fooled. Togami, thanks!]

As Reina had calmed down, she once again tried to analyze the current situation. She immediately noticed something strange.

"Chloe, by the way, why are you here?"

“I have no obligation to answer that question.”

Reina frowned and tilted her head. She interpreted her answer as Chloe not knowing why she was here. One thing that she knew for certain, was that Chloe was trying to meet Alice. If it was a meeting with Alice, it was only a given for them to go to where Alice was. It was impossible for it to be the other way around.

However, it should not be here. It should be somewhere inside the inner wall. Otherwise, it would be at a place suitable to host a meeting with a higher-up from a large company like Lion Steel. At the very least, both Reina and Chloe agreed that it was strange and had doubtful looks on their faces.

Unfortunately, those from the main branch refused to give any information.

—-—-—-*—-

Elena and Sara, who had decided to help Akira, quickly completed their preparations and went straight into the slums. However, right now, they were in a rather difficult situation.

In order to help Akira out, they had to first meet up with him. Unfortunately, they did not know where Akira currently was. They did try to call him, but the thick jamming smoke prevented their call from reaching him.

Therefore, they decided to head to where Akira might be. Sheryl’s base. However, due to the thick jamming smoke, they were not able to detect enemies that well and were forced to drive slowly and with caution.

Naturally, with Elena’s skill in detecting enemies and Sara’s firepower, they were able to detect and eliminate any enemies that came their way. Even so, they still had solemn looks on their faces.

“Say, Elena… Akira is fighting against the Lion Steel company, right?”

“Yeah. He should be fighting against Lion Steel and those that they’ve hired.”

“So then, just what is this thing?”

“…No idea.”

The enemy that Elena and Sara had just shot down was a strange-looking monster. Its outer appearance was akin to that of a multi-legged monster. However, its legs were made of thick flesh, which supported its large body. Its cannon looked like it came from a powered suit, which was growing out from its body, it was as if it was forcefully installed there. For some reason, even with its size, it was still able to nimbly move and jump around. Its quick movements also did not hinder its aim by that much, evident when it fired shots at Elena and Sara. It was clearly not the type of monster they would normally find around Kugamayama city.

Naturally, it still did not pose much of a threat to Elena and Sara with their new equipment. Their equipment was an upfront payment from Hikaru, for escorting her to meet Akira in the wasteland. At that time, Hikaru had considered the risk of fighting against Akira. Thus, in fear, she got extremely powerful equipment for Elena and Sara to use. It was powerful to the point no monsters around Kugamayama city could stand up against it.

Just like the monsters that Akira fought against, the monsters that Elena and Sara fought were originally Lion Steel remote automata. Although they were no longer able to follow detailed orders, they were still able to follow simple instructions.

Pamela had ordered these monsters to surround Sheryl’s base. Thus, they slowly converged there. It was to prevent anyone from leaking information about what was going on inside the jamming smoke. Which would grant the monsters more time to devour more objects and grow stronger. They consumed the deceased, abandoned equipment, tanks, powered suits, and even those trying to get out from their encirclement. As time passed, they kept growing in number and size.

However, not all of them grew in strength at the same rate. Their growth in power depended on what they ate. Moreover, it was not like the more they ate would necessitate them being stronger. If they devoured only weak equipment, the combination of such items hardly increased their strength. As a matter of fact, it might actually weaken them as a whole. Assimilating with items meant using up their green liquid, which would reduce their vigor. If the outcome of assimilation was not beneficial enough to outweigh this, they would become weaker.

Because of these factors, Elena and Sara did not face any trouble when dealing with them. Their only issue was the number of monsters, with some being exceptionally strong. At least, strong enough to slow Elena and Sara down.

Naturally, Sara and Elena could not just charge through the swarm. They did not know the exact location of all the enemies. Furthermore, they would have to use their ammo to cut a path through the swarm. They feared they would run out of ammo the moment they found Akira. Though Inabe was paying for their ammo expense, they still had a limited supply. However, that was mainly due to Elena and Sara rushing out, not spending any time on getting extra ammo as they immediately headed out to the slums.

Although they were in a rush, Elena and Sara were still moving carefully. To remain calm, they kept reminding themselves, [We are going there to help him. it would be meaningless if we only serve to cause him more trouble.]

“Sara, more signals ahead. It’s coming this way. Be careful.”

“Roger that!”

Elena and Sara aimed their rifles forward. A moment later, they saw a huge humanoid monster, which was in the middle of fighting against Carol.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

The high-ranking Hunter who fought against Carol had known her through her side job. His name was Dores and he got defeated after that intense bout. Dores found himself lying face up, on the ground with his whole arm blown to pieces. In front of him was the muzzle of a rifle.

“This would be my victory, right?”

“Yeah… It’s my loss.”

Carol smiled and lowered her rifles. Dores sighed and pushed his body up.

“You sure you don’t want to finish me off?”

“I can say the same to you.”

Killing their opponent was not their main goal. Although they were fighting as if trying to kill each other, it was merely to win. If someone got killed, both parties would accept the outcome. However, if possible, they did not want to kill unnecessarily. This line was how Dores and Carol prevented themselves from going insane after having so much blood on their hands.

Dores, who got completely defeated, smiled bitterly and questioned.

“If you’re that strong, there’s no need for you to take on that other job of yours anymore, right? Or are you still planning to continue?”

Dores knew that his question was not something someone who just got defeated would normally ask. Thus, he expected Carol to randomly answer. However, Carol replied with something that he did not expect.

“Hmm, well, I’m still thinking about it.”

Carol only answered as much and smiled in an amused fashion.

“I see…”

Dores raised his eyebrows. He couldn’t guess what had happened to Carol such that she would respond with such an answer. Thus, Doros simply accepted it and pursued that subject no further.

Carol then turned around and walked away, slightly wobbly.

[…I need to at least resupply before I head out again.]

Carol had an enhanced body that continuously consumed nanomachines. If she ignored her nanomachine consumption, she could achieve super-human strength albeit only temporarily. However, she would quickly run out of nanomachines if she did that. Thus, she had to carefully adjust her power output and nanomachine consumption. Since Dores was strong, she could only win by sacrificing a large portion of her nanomachines.

For now, she was trying her best to keep up her appearance with her remaining nanomachines. She was planning to return back to base to refill her nanomachines. She took out her nanomachine reserve when suddenly, a swarm of monsters appeared. They were strange looking, a mesh of flesh and metal, seemingly machines with fleshy legs and arms growing out of their distorted bodies.

Normally, they would not pose any threat to her. However, their appearance at this very moment was horrendous. If they had appeared a bit sooner, she would have temporarily stopped fighting with Dores and dealt with them first. If they had appeared a bit later, she would have had the chance to refill the nanomachines in her body and regain some of her fighting capabilities. However, she got ambushed right as she had depleted her nanomachines, without an opportunity to refill yet.

Even so, Carol still immediately reacted and started firing. Dores saw the swarm and quickly reached for his extra rifle and started shooting as well. Although he lost the fight, he still had enough strength to hold and fire a gun. Unfortunately, both were exhausted and were unable to make any difficult moves. Thus, the swarm was slowly pushing them back.

That was when Carol was caught off guard, one of the weird-looking monsters got close enough to leapt toward her, jaws agape.

“Oh crap…!!”

Carol could not evade the incoming attack due to her exhaustion. She could only grit her teeth, and prepare for the incoming pain.

However, Dores suddenly jumped in between them. The monster's fangs were able to easily pierce through his augmented suit, and into his organs. Dores, still fully conscious, shoved his rifle at the monster and held down the trigger. A portion of his body got chomped off, trading it in for a few shots.

Eventually, he was able to kill the weird monster. Unfortunately, since its fangs had dug deep into Dores' body, he was not able to free himself from it. This was when he turned to Carol and casually said.

"Go on. I'll buy you some time. You've won after all. This is the least that I can do for you."

Carol understood that staying behind would only get both of them killed. Right now, she could not allow herself to die together with Dores. Thus, the only thing she could do was convey her feelings to him.

"I am sorry…"

"Don't be. This is normal for Hunters like us. If it's for the sake of sparing the life of a girl I fancy, this is actually not that bad."

Dores smiled before returning his gaze back to the enemies.

Carol immediately left the area. Some monsters tried to attack her, but Dores prioritized shooting them down first. That meant he allowed other monsters to get close to him. However, that did not matter. He was not planning to survive after this. He managed to continue for some time as his impending death approached. He did not hold back and used everything that he had to hold them off.

As expected, his end was near. Before he ran out of ammo, his arm got chomped off. He had lost any means to fight back and was only able to allow the monsters to take bites out of him one at a time.

"Haaah, I should've tried to hit on her sooner…"

Dores smiled bitterly and muttered before he met his end.

Thanks to Dores, Carol was able to hide in one of the abandoned buildings. She used that opportunity to quickly take out her medicine and extra nanomachine to heal her wounds. It was not enough to return her back to 100%, but she, at the very least, would be able to put up a good fight.

“But still… Why are there monsters in this area…?”

Carol inadvertently mumbled, to then quickly shake her head.

“Let’s put that aside for later. First, I need to think of how to get out of this mess…”

She wanted to return back to Sheryl’s base and fully refill her nanomachine reserve. However, fighting against Dores forced her to move around a lot. Thus, the base was quite far for her right now. Although the distance itself was not much of an issue, it was highly likely that she would have to fight monsters on her way back.

However, she could not afford to simply wait here, hiding. It would mean there was no meaning to her coming with Akira to the slums. She reminded herself of the reason and made her resolve. She stormed out of the abandoned building.

Outside the building, there were battles scattered all around, especially in the alleys. The whole place was veiled in thick jamming smoke, but Carol could still tell none of the battles involved those on her side or those that were neutral. Erio and the others from the gang nor Shikarabe and his team were involved. Her enemies were the ones facing the monster swarm. Screams of terror and confusion echoed through the area, which indicated that even her enemies did not expect the monster swarm.

Carol was taken aback when she sighted one particular strange-looking monster. It was enveloped in a heavy augmented suit, as if a bundle of flesh in a distorted humanoid form had been stuffed into an augmented suit. However, its figure was not the thing that caught her eye. It was the familiar laser cannon that the monster carried.

“…That cannon… Isn’t that mine…!?”

During her fight against Dores, she had lost her laser cannon. Since it was hard to use it in a high-speed melee fight, Carol had no other choice but to let it go. After all, it was not designed to be used against human targets.

That laser cannon was secured. Thus, only its registered user can use it. However, once the monster noticed her, it suddenly released a shot using that laser cannon.

Carol leapt aside by pure reflex. A moment later, the laser cannon swept sideways in an arc. Buildings in its way were sliced open as if sliced by a huge blade. They crumble on their own weight and collapse.

Carol, who was able to get out of its way just in time, frowned and thought.

[It just took a shot…! So, these monsters assimilate with everything it consumes just like a greedy crocodile! I bet they're multiplying by devouring everything they can find in this area! This is bad. Really bad!]

The monster realized that it was not able to hit its target. Thus, it grew missile pods out of its shoulder. Mini missiles flew out and scattered all over the area.

Under relentless countless explosions, Carol was only able to keep running away.

That was when Elena and Sara saw her. They quickly aimed their rifles at the huge monster behind Carol. Their powerful bullets drilled holes into the monster and blew up. It was blown to pieces, obliterated so that no semblance of it was left behind. The small pieces were scattered all over the buildings around the area by the shockwave.

Carol thanked them, while still heavily panting.

"T-thanks, you really saved me there."

"You're welcome, but what exactly is- Sara, up!"

"Alright. They just won't give us a break. Now wha-… Hm? Isn't that Akira's bike…?"

The rest immediately looked up and saw Akira's flying bike. Though it was ridden by Togami at the moment. However, some strange monsters were latching on to it as the bike was slowly descending.

Elena and Sara immediately shot down the monsters. Once the monsters were taken out, the bike was able to regain its balance. Unfortunately, it was not able to brake on time and crashed rather spectacularly not too far away from Elena and Sara.

"T-that was close! I don't know who you are, but you really saved me there… Hm?"

"Akira! Are you okay!?… Hm?"

Togami was surprised since he was a little familiar with the two who just saved him. Meanwhile Elena was taken aback to see that it was actually Togami and not Akira.

Afterwards, Elena, Sara, Togami, and Carol quickly exchanged what they knew.

Since Togami was in a hurry to return to Sheryl's base, he ignored the monsters and flew a bit too close to the ground. Although these monsters could not fly, they could still jump. Some managed to latch onto the bike. When that happened, Togami managed to keep moving while he fought against those on the bike.

But unlike when he was together with Reina, it was difficult for him to simultaneously drive while he fought. Thus, he was about to get thrown off the bike.

Since Togami was also headed to where Akira was, he asked Elena and the others if they could move together.

Carol pondered it over for a bit and eventually decided not to join. She believed that she was more likely to be a dead weight. Or at the very least, she would not be able to give any meaningful support until she could return back to the base. There was also no guarantee that they would be able to reach Sheryl's base.

The nanomachine reserves she had left might not last if she faced another attack. Thus, she decided she would support Akira indirectly and chose to leave the slums.

Carol then earnestly requested Elena and Sara, who were already on Akira's bike.

"I'll leave Akira to you."

"Of course!"

Elena smiled reassuringly at Carol before accelerating the bike. After seeing Elena off, Carol then headed out of the slums. She moved through the path Elena and Sara had made.

__*__*__*__

Considering what Pamela had said as her parting gift, Shiori, Kanae, and Akira decided to stay on the roof of Sheryl's base to watch over the surroundings. However, there was nothing worth noting. The strange-looking monsters were already retreating from the area. Meanwhile, voices of Erio and the others starting a counterattack could be heard coming from below.

"Alpha, did you find anything?"

"I do not see any signals that suggest enemies are approaching. If there's anything to be worried about, it would be how the jamming smoke is dispersing faster than it should."

"Faster than it should? What part of it is not normal?"

"Even if we were to consider the fact that we're out in the wasteland, the rate of dispersion is abnormally higher than the natural rate of dispersion."

Akira gazed out into the wasteland and squinted. He could see further, although only slightly.

“…It would be great if it’s because they no longer wish to continue and stop pumping out jamming smoke but…”

Akira said his wish, though he knew it was unlikely to come true.

That was when Togami finally entered his sight. Akira, who saw Togami, was surprised to see some others on his bike. Two individuals he would never have expected to come.

As Togami moved to park the bike on the rooftop, Akira was a bit nervous that Shiori and Kanae were looking at him with scrutinizing gazes.

[…This is not my fault, right?]

Due to their division of roles on their way to Sheryl’s base, Togami was sandwiched between two beauties on top of Akira’s bike. Togami knew Elena and Sara were close to Akira. Furthermore, he considered his relationship with Reina. With all these factors, he could not help but feel horrified when Akira and the others’ gazes were sent in his direction.

Akira thought that Togami was acting a bit strange as he threw out a question.

“Togami. Where is Reina? And also, why are you with Elena-san and Sara-san…?”

“Ahhh, about that… you should ask them yourselves. As for Reina, there’s something important I need to tell Shiori-san, so…”

Togami spoke, rather flusteredly. He had also used Reina as an excuse to get away from Akira.

Akira got even more weirded out by how Togami was acting. However, he decided to just leave matters be since he did not have the time to be asking irrelevant questions.

“Elena-san, why are you here?”

“Well, we’re here to help you out… Or more like, we want to keep up our appearance as your seniors.”

“Hah?”

Akira was flabbergasted after hearing what Elena said with a wide smile on her face. The situation did not stop there as Sara also spoke up with a smile.

“We’re a bit angry that you left us on the side when you’re in this kind of situation. That’s why we’re barging in to help.”

“Haaah!?”

Akira flinched back. Although both women were staring at him with smiles, there were traces of anger in their eyes.

“I admit that you’ve become even stronger than us. Still, I don’t like how you don’t even see us as people who can help.”

“That’s why we came here to help. Though you didn’t ask for it. Well, sorry about that.”

Each word they said gradually cornered him. Elena and Sara were basically stating that they were here to help him due to their own volition and pride.

Although they were exposing their true feelings, they never mentioned the biggest reason. They came here because they were worried about him.

No one would help him even if he asked. Akira had experienced this for far too long. It had become a habit that had not changed. He never asked since asking for help from others would only mean causing trouble for someone else who was not even involved in his problems. Aware of his flaw, Elena and Sara spoke using such words, that they came because they wanted to.

Akira had grown enough to notice that it was their way of being considerate. Although he was grateful, he believed the situation was too dire to accept their goodwill.

“But, Elena-san. Even if you say so I…”

“Ah, by the way, we rescued Carol on our way here too. She was too exhausted to continue. Other than that, she’s not in any immediate danger.”

“I see… Thank you very much.”

Akira smiled and lowered his head to them. His expression also displayed his gratitude toward Carol, who had pushed herself this far for his sake. It also contained his relief, hearing that she was alright.

Immediately, Sara and Elena sighed and pouted.

“Akira, you asked for Carol’s help, but you didn’t ask for our help. Why? Since when did you get this close to Carol?”

“Eh? Well, a lot of things happened, you see…”

“A lot of things? A lot of things, huh? What exactly happened? Though it’s embarrassing to say this myself, I believe we’re also rather close to you. Did something happen between you two that made you close enough to her? To be able to ask for her help but not from us?”

“Well, uhh, actually, it’s not what you think. I do think both Elena-san and Sara-san as friends. Also, it’s not like I’m treating Carol differently, you see…”

Akira was not sure why he was making excuses to answer Sara’s question. That was when Elena intervened as she wryly smiled and stated.

“Akira, in that case, you should just accept our help, alright?”

“Ahhh… Okay.”

Akira gave a firm nod. Although it might be something for him to worry about later, he decided to accept their offer. This would make him more indebted to Elena and Sara, to who he already felt indebted. At the same time, he finally noticed, with albeit of surprise, that he had already gotten this close to the two of them. When he discovered how he felt, he was jovial about it.

Elena and Sara also smiled happily now that Akira had agreed to accept them.

To properly help him, Elena tried to confirm the current situation with him.

“So then, Akira. Can you tell me what’s the situation right now?”

“Of course, well…”

[Akira, look at the wasteland.]

Alpha suddenly interjected and warned with a grave expression. Akira noticed and quickly turned toward where Alpha was pointing. Elena and Sara followed suit, and a moment later, Kanae, Shiori, and Togami gazed toward the wasteland as well.

They could see something gigantic and humanoid coming in their direction. Due to the jamming smoke, they were only able to see the blurry contour of the giant, but it was enough for them to confirm that its knee was even higher than most of the buildings in the slums.

“Just what is that thing!?”

The moment Akira mumbled; the giant’s mouth suddenly flared. Elena, Sara, Shiori and Kanae quickly stepped forward and deployed their forcefield shield. A moment later, the light ray released by the giant reached Akira and the others, devouring them. It even took in the whole base.

Once the light died down. Akira and the others were fine. Mostly thanks to the powerful forcefield shield and the jamming smoke that weakened the attack. The base also survived due to its forcefield armour along its outer walls. However, the other buildings in the area got completely obliterated.

Akira and the others could not help but frown. [To think its attack could reach us even from that distance!]

“Akira, I have another question… What exactly are you fighting against?”

“It should be those from Lion Steel… though… I’m not sure anymore at this point.”

Akira also did not know what or who exactly was that giant. However, Pamela’s last words somehow suddenly came to mind.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 288, This Is Where Things Get Serious

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Thanks to the emergency defences they set up, Akira and the others somehow managed to survive the giant's sudden long-range laser beam.

However, their situation remained dire. The giant was too far for them to attack. On the other hand, it was able to freely shoot its powerful attack toward them. Akira was once again reminded of the curse that Pamela had left behind after her death.

"…Shiori-san. I have a question. That thing… it's not Latis, right?"

Shiori knitted her eyebrows and seemed troubled. She seriously considered that possibility before answering his question.

"If that's the case, that would mean she somehow turned Latis' corpse into that giant. Though, I don't really know why and how she did such a thing. Akira-sama, why do you suspect that giant to be Latis?"

"Well, I've fought against someone I was certain I've killed. When I got attacked by humanoid monsters sometime back, I fought against a giant monster, which resembled a human. There was even a time I fought against someone I thought was human. He suddenly grew multiple hands out of his body. Well, what I'm trying to say is that I've gone through all those almost strange and seemingly unthinkable scenarios, you see… So, I just thought that this might just be another one of those."

The strange-looking monster, automata with Pamela's face on them. The giant that Akira fought back in Kuzusuhara ruin and Tiol, who grew out multiple arms from his body. All of them had green liquid in their blood. Akira noticed this similarity and had an ominous feeling about it.

However, it was not like he could just run away. Thus, he gave a sigh and composed himself. He stepped back onto his bike and jumped off from the top of Sheryl's base. He managed to land inside the camping vehicle, where he quickly grabbed his supplies, and returned back to the rooftop. The moment he returned, Akira presented Elena and the others with a smile. He simply spoke to them while still floating in the sky.

"Elena-san, Sara-san. One thing I know for certain is that thing is hostile, so I'll go off for a bit to take it down. Elena-san and Sara-san, for now, please provide me with… I guess that would be rude of me, huh? Please help me while I attack it. I don't exactly know what the both of you should do so I'll leave that to you. Please use your experience as my senior to help me."

Although he spoke in a more casual tone than usual, Elena and Sara could feel that he was earnestly asking them for help.

Thus, Elena bitterly smiled and half-jokingly stated.

"Alright, but well, you know, we don't have any experience fighting something like that."

"Is that so? Actually, I fought one before. This would be my second time."

Akira mentioned it with a prideful smile. This signified his leap over the wall he had erected between him and the two. It was a wall created unconsciously due to his belief that they had once saved his life. That feeling of debt created a barrier which made him not want to trouble them in any way. His statement indicated how their relationship had changed. It was meant not only to Elena and Sara, but also to himself.

Elena was a bit surprised by that, but she understood why Akira did that as both of them smiled confidently at each other.

“Good grief, you’ve grown pretty cheeky, right, Sara?”

“Yep, you really have.”

“Is that so? Well, I guess that just shows how much I’ve grown. Now then, I’ll head off.”

“Good luck!”

“Make sure to speak up when things get difficult, okay? We’ll be there to help.”

Akira and Elena smiled jokingly at each other. Just like that, in a situation where the giant could eliminate all of them in one perfectly executed attack, Akira travelled all the way back up to the roof to state what he felt was necessary.

Their conversation would eventually come to an end as Akira quickly accelerated his bike away. Freshly charged, the bike flew like a bullet through the sky.

After both women saw him off with a smile, Elena then frowned and questioned.

“Shiori-san, what are you planning to do? If you‘re available, it would be great if you could help Akira as well, but…”

“We will provide support as well.”

“Is that so? Reina is not here though?”

“Milady is safer over there, so there should be no problem.”

Elena was a bit surprised by Shiori’s response, but since it was beneficial to her, she did not say anything back.

Although Shiori's response was an honest one, she hid a few things from Elena. She did not mention anything Togami told them. This included the fact that they failed to receive help from the city defence squad. The fact that Chloe was in close proximity to Reina and those from the main branch had apprehended the two of them. If she brought it up, Akira might somehow get wind of it. Fearful of the consequences of Akira attacking those from the main branch, she refrained from sharing.

Shiori had to also remind herself that the main branch was maintaining a neutral position. That they were not taking sides with either the third ward branch or the fourth ward branch. That her decision would be more beneficial to Reina once Akira ended everything with his victory.

"Since we are not in our best condition, we might not be able to help much."

"I don't plan to be dead weight. Though I have to admit, I'm pretty fatigued. The last fight was against a rather strong opponent, so yeah, sorry if I end up being a burden."

Kanae smiled and spoke nonchalantly. Even if she tried to stay strong, Elena and Sara could easily notice her exhaustion.

Sara smiled at the two maids as if to reassure them. She gave a firm nod and stated.

"It's fine. We came fully prepared, so we'll take on most of the load. Well then, Elena, I will leave the command to you."

Elena smiled.

"…Sara, it's true that taking command is a part of my job, but you're basically just throwing it at me, you know?"

"That's just how much I trust your leadership."

"Yeah yeah, well then, let's get going."

They did not know just how powerful that giant was. Judging by its size alone, it was out of the ordinary. Even so, Elena and Sara were smiling confidently. They were more fired up than usual as they went out to provide Akira support.

After Akira flew off from the rooftop, he did not go straight toward the giant. Instead, he took a long detour.

“Alpha, why are we circling the giant?”

“It’s to confirm something. Though it shot at us before, I want to check if it’s acting based on its will or some other trigger.”

Since Akira’s expression showed overt bewilderment, Alpha then further elaborated.

When the giant shot at them, it did not seem like it acted by coincidence. Basically, it knew where Akira was and intentionally fired at him.

If it was a properly aimed shot, that meant the giant had an extremely powerful detection ability. This was considering the existence of thick jamming smoke in the area.

If it achieved that without being able to detect where Akira was, that would mean it had prior knowledge of where he was.

It was unlikely that the giant was scanning for information under the influence of such thick jamming smoke. Thus, there might be something else there that informed it of Akira and the others’ whereabouts at that time.

“If that’s the case, the next step would be to identify what’s helping it…”

Akira was able to understand what Alpha meant thanks to her explanation. He frowned and questioned.

“They are from Lion Steel. Latis’ corpse had run away. The monster swarm had suddenly stopped coming and that giant might be one of them… Or maybe it’s all of them!?”

“Yep, exactly.”

The giant’s mouth flickered again. A moment later, it released another beam of light. It burnt everything in its way as it spread out in all directions. Although it was weakened as it travelled further, it was still able to reach Sheryl’s base. Even so, the base was fine. At least for now. However, it would only be a matter of time after taking a few more hits that it collapses.

“Since it’s still firing in that direction, I guess that means it’s the latter, huh?”

Akira took a long detour. He was still approaching the giant. If it was originally able to detect Akira when he was back in Sheryl’s base, it should still be able to detect him by now. There was no way the giant would ignore him when he was quickly approaching it. This meant that the giant was unaware of his location. That it was only attacking the base, believing its enemies were still over there.

“…In that case, let’s ambush it and kill it right away! Alpha! We’ll be using it!”

“Roger that. Since the jamming smoke has thinned out, I can give you better support now. So, leave it to me!”

Akira aimed his RL2 multi-rifles. It was loaded with his trump card, the annihilator warhead. He did not have that many left, and each one cost 100 million Aurum per shot. Thus, he felt reluctant to use it. However, in this situation, he did not hesitate. He knew when he needed to use it, and would do so even if his heart bled from the cost.

The enemy was in the direction of the wasteland. There was no need to worry about hitting the city by mistake. If the giant was Pamela’s trump card, Akira believed that he should shoot it down before it could do anything else.

Thanks to Alpha’s support, Akira could see a zoomed-in image of the giant through his enhanced vision. Even from Sheryl’s base, he could only tell that the giant had a humanoid figure. However, after he got closer and the jamming smoke got more dispersed, he was able to clearly see its true form.

Its limbs were distorted amalgamations of machines and flesh. It resembled a cyborg made from random metal it scrapped from around. The flesh underneath the metal seemed to protrude out from its body as if its rampaging cells forcefully broke through the armour plating covering its body.

To prioritize power, it completely forgo aesthetics. Either that or it was intentionally designed to be grotesque to terrorize its enemies. It was possible that its appearance could be the result of both.

Akira looked straight at the giant. Even so, he did not feel anything. His gaze was locked onto it without any hint of fear. Together with Alpha's signal, he pulled the trigger.

The bullet left the muzzle at high speed. It was further bolstered by his momentum as he sped through the air on top of his bike. Thus, once it left the barrel, it immediately broke through the sound barrier and flew straight to hit its target.

When Akira shot the multi-legged tank with his annihilator warheads, he had to fire under the bombardment of weaponry made to assault a city. Thus, he released 5 shots at roughly around the same time to guarantee his attack had enough firepower to destroy the multi-legged tank.

Furthermore, within the family of annihilator warheads, the ones that he bought were relatively cheap and had relatively low firepower. It took 5 annihilator warheads exploding at the same time, precisely calculated by Alpha to explode at points that would increase their effectiveness to destroy that multi-legged tank.

Since Akira only used one bullet this time, it did not produce the same level of explosiveness. Even so, the explosion was strong enough to blow everything around it away. The shockwave it released launched the upper half of the giant into the sky. Meanwhile its lower half made a loud boom when it crashed onto the ground, drowning under the sea of flesh, machine parts and green liquid.

The shockwave was quickly preceded by a powerful gust of wind. Akira squinted his eyes as he made a rather conflicted expression.

“That was rather anti-climatic… Or so I want to say, but each shot cost 100 million Aurum…”

Akira knew that he was forced to spend a huge amount of money just to defeat an opponent that would not cover his cost. He heaved a sigh; his regret only grew bigger. It showed how he felt more exasperated than delighted from his victory.

That was when Alpha came with bad news.

“Akira, we’re not done yet.”

“…What? But we killed that giant, right?”

“That one, yes, but look over there.”

In front of a confused Akira, Alpha pointed towards where the giant was before it blew up. The whole area was drowned under a disgusting mesh such that Akira was not able to see the dirt beneath. That was when he noticed something that looked like a human rising from it. That human-like figure gradually turned to look more human-like and grew. It seems like it was creating another giant.

It did not stop with just a single body. As Akira watched on in shock, another body raised up, creating another giant.

“What in the world is going on…?”

“It is nothing more than just my guess and it won’t change the situation, but if you still want to know, I can tell you if you want.”

“…Yes, please.”

Even if he might not be able to understand anything, Akira chose to attempt to know. At least he might have a chance to get out of this situation, where he was getting repeatedly surprised as events unfolded. Alpha nodded and conveyed her hypothesis.

Among old-world medicines, some could recover lost limbs. That was so powerful it could no longer be regarded as something like healing. It was more so in the region of regeneration and reconstruction treatment. Instead of increasing the natural ability of the body to heal itself, these medicines gathered information and determined the normal state of the body. It would then reconstruct the body to approach that ‘normal’ state. Using such a medicine, even if the user was a cyborg, it would forcefully return their body to normal flesh and bones.

By modifying the information the medicine contained, one could set the giant to be its normal state. It was possible to force the body to continuously reconstruct by obeying said information. Moreover, those strange-looking monsters devoured all kinds of things in the slums, which added more different materials into its body. When combined with the green liquid, the monsters managed to grow to an enormous size but were fragile.

“Hold on, Alpha. Let’s just say you’re right and those giants were originally those strange monsters. It’s weird that it managed to shoot that huge laser beam though. Did it grow that laser cannon with the regenerative ability of the drug? That the drug was instructed to consider it as normal?”

“It’s true that it’s difficult to create that laser cannon from scratch, but it is manageable using materials that they can find in the area, no?”

“Someone brought such a thing here? That huge laser cannon?”

As Akira pondered, he somehow got reminded of the 5 annihilator warheads he shot, which destroyed the multi-legged tank. When he considered the possibility, he shook his head. The thought of those strange monsters consuming what remained of the multi-legged tank and turning it into a laser cannon was way too far-fetched.

“But we basically obliterated that multi-legged tank, at most, it would only leave unusable wreckage, no?”

“That thing, huh? They might still have more of it, you know?”

Alpha then pointed toward the direction of the wasteland. The Lion Steel tanks stationed there were gone.

Alpha further elaborated that it would have taken a huge amount of medicine to be able to create three giants. It would be impossible even if they gathered all those strange-looking monsters in one place and amalgamated them. In the first place, those strange-looking monsters were also using a green liquid, which was only able to create their demented shape. Thus, they would not be enough to create these giants.

That was where the Lion Steel tanks became important, Alpha believed that those tanks were filled with medicine. When Akira blew up the multi-legged tank, the other tanks plunged themselves into whatever remained. They released the medicine stored up and created a pond filled with material, ready to be used. If the construction of those giants needed more energy, they could gather more by absorbing the jamming smoke in the air and transforming them into pure energy. This would be the reason why the jamming smoke suddenly thinned out.

After hearing her explanation, Akira could not help but frown.

“Wait for a second… They used jamming smoke to reduce their reach, right? After all, it would be bad if they somehow hit the city by mistake. So, if they thinned out the jamming smoke…”

“That was probably just an excuse.”

“What?”

Alpha then continued to explain.

Information greatly affected the development of any battle. Spreading out jamming smoke that would prevent information gathering right next to the city would normally be considered a hostile act. They made use of an excuse, stating that the jamming smoke was meant to protect the city. It was a battle against a bounty target this close to the city after all. So City Management allowed the matter to slide.

Thus, reducing the effective range was nothing but an excuse. Their real goal was to hide the strange-looking monsters and the giants. Now, there was no longer any need to keep hiding them.

As Akira was listening to her explanation, he suddenly recalled what Shiori had said. It was something about a Rank 9 warehouse, used to house equipment designed to assault a city. This sudden recollection made Akira's expression turn grave.

"So, all the fighting before was just preparation? And now, they have completed all their preparations?"

"Most likely. It might be nothing but my hypothesis, but if that really is the case, then this is where they will get serious."

Akira's ominous feeling was right. He took a deep breath and gave a long sigh.

"Akira, let's change the ammo in your rifles. Conserve your annihilator warheads. If your opponents are those giants, we don't need to use them."

Akira changed the ammunition and aimed both of his RL2 multi-rifles at the giants. While in the midst of reloading, the bike was already approaching those giants.

"It would be disadvantageous to fight those giants from a distance. Let's use the difference in size to our advantage and fight them up close. Just leave the bike to me and focus on shooting."

"…Roger that!"

His enemies were still alive and kicking. That was all he needed to know and focus on. He made his resolve to bring death onto them.

The closest giant suddenly grew a huge blade out of its palm. The blade seemed to be a forceful amalgamation of tanks, vehicles, and powered suits, which was rooted onto its palm.

That metallic blade started to glow and melted down, changing its shape closer into an actual blade. It then glowed even brighter as the forcefield armour used to solidify its shape started to break apart. The blade, still glowing, was suddenly swung down.

Due to its size, it seemed as if the giant's movements were slow. However, the tip of the blade was in fact moving so fast that it released sonic booms. It seems as if the giant was trying to slice the whole world apart as its blade raced towards Akira. He only somehow managed to evade it thanks to Alpha's dextrous control over his bike.

Rather than just getting out of the blade's way, the bike passed by, right next to the huge blade. The forcefield armour did protect it from the shockwave, but it still managed to push the bike to the side. Thus, the bike had to use its brake extensively, which left trails of brake marks on the forcefield armour projected under its wheel.

Once Akira evaded the blade, zoomed right towards the giant. He managed to land on it and continue to grind the wheel against the giant's skin, racing up. At the same time, he aimed his rifles at another giant and released a barrage of bullets in its direction.

Although it did not pack as much power as compared to the annihilator warhead, a single shot was powerful enough to obliterate any normal monster. Moreover, Akira released the barrage at an astonishing rate. He managed to strip the giant off its flesh and mechanical parts, sending shockwaves into the giant's body.

However, the green liquid that leaked out from where he struck quickly healed its wounds. The gigantic hole he created from his barrage also swelled up for a moment and got quickly filled up. With how horrendous its body looked; Akira could not tell if he had left any damage on the giant.

As he was racing on top of the surface of a giant, it tried to crush him by flailing around its large arms. Akira simply made short bursts of speed and sharp turns to avoid getting crushed. However, its attempts still managed to release powerful shockwaves. Whenever its palm landed on its body, it transmitted a strong wave, which eventually managed to throw Akira's bike off.

Thankfully, it was only temporary as the bike did not need a solid platform. With its ability to fly in the sky, he managed to quickly return back to the giant. However, another hand was already prepared for him, which came at him the moment he landed.

"Akira, we'll launch a counterattack."

"Alright!"

Akira reached for his blade, which was installed on the bike. Once he pulled the handle out, a huge amount of liquid metal spilt over from the bike's tank. It quickly solidified into a blade with the help of forcefield armour. The blade then started to glow and formed an enormous, long sword.

Akira swung his blade, toward the incoming palm. Up close, the palm seemed like a wall of flesh that got randomly mixed with metal. Before he struck, the TGP laser cannon fixed on his bike released a shot. It was fired exactly where the blade would make contact. The two combined attacks sliced open its palm, and went through way past the arm, slicing its limb off.

"Whoah! So the blade is good enough to cut through its body! Then it might be better to use a blade instead of a rifle… What!?"

As the amputated arm fell to the ground, suddenly a large swarm of drones came out. They were all racing off from the sliced surface. They seemed to be made from powered armoured suits that had flying devices installed. They moved in sync and pushed the arm up, helping it float in the air and turn. The fingers of the amputated arm transformed into ginormous muzzles that were all aimed at Akira.

“It can even transform an amputated arm into a weapon if I don’t completely destroy it!? Give me a break already!”

“Stop getting impressed and start shooting.”

“I know, I know!!”

Akira flew in between the barrage of bullets released by the floating arms. He took aim, ready to fire, but before he could, a large shining round struck it. It came from the ground. After that one shot, the gigantic arm broke into pieces and burnt to a crisp, falling to the ground.

A call reached an astonished Akira a moment later.

“Akira, can you hear me?”

“Elena-san!?”

“Oh! It’s connected! Akira! We’re here to help!”

The source of that shot was Elena and the others. It came from a large portable cannon that once unpacked, it could not be packed back without help from a specialist.

“It seems like I can contact you from this distance. We should be able to maintain a decent enough communication line if the jamming smoke has already weakened by this much.”

Although Akira was talking through telepathy via Alpha, the communication line was still established using his information-gathering device. It showed just how much the jamming smoke had dispersed. Akira connected his information-gathering device with Elena’s to share information between them and increased their overall information-gathering capability.

“We’ll provide you support, so go all out.”

Akira broke out a natural smile in reaction to her reassuring line.

“Thank you very much!”

“Akira, just a question. What happened on our way here? Why are there multiple giants now?”

“…Uhhh, I’m not really sure myself. While I was fighting that giant, they multiplied before I realize it.”

The only thing he knew was what Alpha had conveyed to him. Otherwise, he would have no clue as to why it happened. If he were to share her hypothesis, it might seem a little misplaced. Thus, he acted none the wiser.

Akira was a bit overwhelmed when he challenged two giants all by himself. Now, with help from the others, he was able to gain the upper hand.

Elena’s team was moving like a mobile turret, attacking the giants. Their main attackers were Elena and Sara, who were shooting out those bullets that shone.

They exhausted a huge amount of energy with each shot, prioritizing power. Using some energy, the bullets maintained their round shape using forcefield armour. Once they landed, the forcefield armour immediately collapsed, exposing all the concentrated energy inside. The explosion sent shockwaves which devoured huge chunks off the giants.

Naturally, the giants could not simply ignore them. They swung their huge blades at Elena’s team and released beams from their jaws.

However, Akira prevented their attacks from hitting. With the help of Alpha’s calculations, he regularly fired at the giants’ mouths and arms, throwing their aim off. This greatly aided Elena’s group’s attempts to evade. Meanwhile, Elena’s team worked together with him in sync to pre-emptively move to evade the attacks.

Elena’s group was able to avoid a direct hit from the blades. As for the laser beams, they dealt essentially no damage to them. The laser beams prioritized covering a wide area, which greatly weakened them. Though that made it unavoidable, it was weak enough to be fended off with the combination of their forcefield armour along with Shiori's forcefield shield.

Akira and Elena's groups were repelling the giants' attacks in such a manner. However, other monsters in the area were also trying to attack Elena's group. These monsters came from those pieces that were blown off the main gigantic main body. They grew out of the sea of green liquid and slowly grew in numbers to form a swarm which went after Elena's team.

The cannons used by Elena and Sara were not the appropriate weapon to be used against these monsters. Despite their smaller stature, these monsters were much too strong for common Hunters to contend against. Thus, Elena's team was having a hard time against them.

However, with Shiori and Kanae aboard, they managed to repel them. Shiori used her blade, while Kanae used her fists. They were slicing and crushing those smaller monsters coming at them. Since these monsters were not as strong as Latis and Pamela, Shiori and Kanae had no problems fending them off.

Elena and Sara worked perfectly in sync with Kanae and Shiori. They executed their respective roles perfectly and increased the overall effectiveness of the team. On top of that, with Elena's superior ability to gather information and ability to maintain constant contact with Akira, she could deliver effective orders. Thus, the team was extremely effective.

Together, they were overwhelming, even against the two giants. This was even despite the difference in sizes. The giants on the receiving end of the assault eventually lost their limbs and crumbled into the pool made of their own flesh and blood.

"We did it!"

Elena inadvertently yelped in victory. Sara also had a huge grin on her face. Meanwhile, Shiori and Kanae managed to relax as they gave a soft sigh.

However, Akira's tense voice immediately reached them.

“Elena-san! Don’t drop your guard! They might still be alive!”

“What!?”

Elena quickly checked her information-gathering device and scowled. A new giant was rising. And now, there were four of them.

“Akira… What’s going on?”

“I would love to know the answer to that question as well…”

Everyone was equally surprised. It was only when the new giants took on their new form that they managed to snap back to reality and returned to attacking.

To help with the morale, Akira lightly asked.

“Elena-san, is it okay for me to rely on my seniors a bit more?”

“Of course, just leave it to us.”

Even after the increase in the number of enemies, Elena and Sara still smiled, filled with confidence.

That was when the situation took another turn. From behind them, a huge swarm of mini-missiles appeared and flew straight toward the giants.

A moment later they saw a squad led by Goutol flying above. This greatly shocked Akira and Elena’s team.

“The city defence squad…? But I thought they were not going to send anyone…”

Akira, still reeling from the surprise, suddenly had someone connect to him through the general connection line.

“Akira, thank goodness you’re alright.”

“Carol?”

“Sorry, I couldn’t protect the base although you’ve asked me to. I had to go against someone pretty strong, so I had no leeway to protect the base. However, I got the defence squad to act in place of me. I hope you’re fine with this.”

After Carol left the slums, just like Reina, she asked the city defence squad for help and was turned down the same way. However, something changed after that.

To prepare herself in case information about her being an old-world connector one day leaked out, she greatly enhanced the physical capability of her body. She had even gone against her usual principle and took in non-Hunter clients for her side job to earn more. Among such clients, some were high-ranking city officers.

Thus, Carol called those men and requested them to dispatch the city defence squad. She even contacted Viola to add extra pressure.

With reward and threat, they had no other choice but to do as Carol had requested. Although, as expected, they could not simply dispatch men from the city defence squad because an outsider requested it of them. Thus, they chose to send out Goutol’s team, who were already posted nearby as observers.

Goutol, who had been grinding his teeth, holding himself back from going out, was more than happy to follow an order to dispatch. He immediately took the squad under him to the slums. It did not take long for him to grasp the situation that was hidden under the jamming smoke. This made him switch the mission from reconnaissance to extermination.

Akira smiled and thanked her.

“It’s good enough, Carol. Thank you!”

“You are welcome. I will head there as well once I’m done with my preparations, so please hold on for a bit.”

“I know it has not been easy for you, so there’s no need to push yourself too hard, okay?”

“No, you just wait over there, alright?”

Carol then ended the call. The last line that she said had a rather uppity tone in it.

That was when Alpha, who was in front of Akira, suddenly turned around and showed a wide smile.

“Alpha, what’s wrong?”

“Akira, isn’t it great that we have more allies now, aren’t you happy?”

“Yeah, isn’t that obvious?”

Akira casually smiled back without knowing Alpha’s smile was an ominous one.

“I see. Well, let’s not leave everything to them and get back to work as well.”

“Yeah, let’s go!”

Seeing Goutol’s team already joined in to assault the giants, Akira got fired up and resumed his attack.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 289, The Super Giant and Spectators

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Thanks to Carol, Goutol's squad got dispatched to the battlefield. The difficult fight against four giants had shifted, giving Akria the upper hand.

Goutol's squad was posted on standby close to the wall. Their placement had taken Akira, a 50 billion Aurum bounty target, into account. With the risk of Akira being so close by, attacking the city, they were well equipped to handle him.

Therefore, their intense assault quickly reduced the giants to pieces. With the extra support from Akira and the others, they were able to overwhelm the enemies.

In other words, they were only able to get the upper hand because of the additional force. The moment the giants multiplied to eight, that was the end of it.

Akira inadvertently shouted.

"Stop multiplying already!"

Every time they destroyed one giant, two more came out to take its place. However, none could be left alive.

“Alpha! There’s no end to them!“

“Don’t worry. They will no longer regenerate once they run out of material, medicine or jamming smoke.”

“And when would be exactly?”

“No idea. But it’s not like we’re doing something pointless. That is one thing that I can say for certain.”

“…Well, it’s not like I have any other choice.”

Although the situation seemed to only get worse, they were undoubtedly inching closer to victory. Even when everyone was getting worn down, Akira still believed that they could win and desperately continued to fight back.

＿＿＿*＿

Far away from the battle, on top of a certain abandoned building, a group of people were observing the fight.

One of them was a girl clad in an old-world dress. She was called Haruka. Haruka smiled politely at the others present and asked.

“So, what do you think?”

However, the others reacted pretty duly to her question. Olivia was the first to convey her opinion with her business smile.

“Even if you ask. My deepest apologies, but please refrain from trying to make any unrelated offer to the company while I am in the middle of an escort mission.”

The next one was Tsubaki, who had left Kuzusuhara ruin to come there.

“I was the one who made the decision to come here. But from the contents proposed, all I can say is that it was a mistake to grant myself permission to move outside my managed region, even if this is just a spare body.”

Finally, Alicia, who was accompanied by her servants, who doubled as her escorts, smiled bitterly and spoke up.

“Well, I guess we will put this matter on hold then. Though, if you want me to judge you based on the outcome, I can only say that it would be unlikely for me to continue to support you.”

“I-I see.”

The harsh reaction from her supporter, and other potential supporters, made Haruka try her best to force her stiff smile into a more amicable one. However, her attempt only made her smile look more awkward. She then glanced at the guy next to her, Yatsubayashi. But Yatsubayashi then curtly asked.

“…What?”

“Uhh, don’t you have anything to say as its creator?”

“No, I don’t remember ever creating something like that nor ever publicly presenting the method to make such a thing. Hah… using someone else’s data without permission… how rude…”

Seeing Yatsubayashi mumbling curses, Haruka decided not to ask him to try and convince the others.

(Silavin: Just in case you don’t remember and was wondering:

Yatsubayashi – mad scientist, Tiol incident

Haruka – new character)

__*__*__*__

While back in Sheryl's base, Shirou was watching Akira's battle from afar. He was amazed at how they were managing themselves despite the huge difference in size compared to their enemies. However, his expression was grave.

[…Are they really winning?]

There was no doubt that they were performing really well. Even so, it did not seem like they were winning. The giants had already multiplied to twelve. From Shirou's point of view, it seemed like the giants were mercilessly overwhelming Akira and the others.

He could even overhear their conversation from the intercepted communication line used by the city defence squad.

"Where are the reinforcements!?"

"We've already sent reinforcement requests numerous times!"

"Are those guys at the top seriously going to just ignore this situation!? You gotta be kidding me! I'll freaking kill them once we get back!"

Even in this situation, City Management was still turning a blind eye. However, Shirou did not see that as something unexpected.

There was pressure from the Lion Steel company. On top of that, some within the inner wall believe that for the sake of guaranteeing safety, there was a need to regularly destroy the slums outside the inner wall.

Naturally, there were some who believed that there was still time even if they sent out the city defence squad only after Akira got killed. After all, City Management recognised Akira as a monster. There were also those who would benefit from Akira's death, especially those who were in the faction opposing Inabe.

Shirou understood all of this and thought the situation was getting worse by the minute.

[This is bad… Is there anything we can do…?]

When one did not have enough information to find a good solution, what they needed was to gather more information.

With the jamming smoke thinning out, Shirou thought that he might be able to get his hands on some new information. Thus, as he closely scanned the slums, he found a particular signal.

[…Hm? This place… There's something there. Did someone send them to gather information about this battle?]

However, Shirou was shocked when he found that signal came from the representative of the Lion Steel Company.

[Wait… Isn't this the representative from Lion Steel?! And … The AI… It's from Kuzusuhara ruin..!? Why are they in such a place…!? There are others too, but this dress, it is an old-world dress…]

Shirou tried to hack into one of their equipment. However, his location was suddenly traced back, and he quickly cut the connection by pure reflex.

[…Whoah! That was dangerous!]

His pale and anxious expression, and heavy breathing demonstrated just how abnormal this situation was.

＊＊＊＊

Yatsubayashi, who still had a sour look on his face, tilted his head.

[…Oh? Someone tried to hack into my equipment. Not bad. Considering that no one would normally even be able to detect my position…]

Hearing that, Haruka pouted.

"Chief, what's wrong?"

"Nope, nothing… Ah, also, don't call me chief. If you want to keep calling me that, then give me back my authority."

“Even if you say as much…”

Haruka seemed a bit troubled as Yatsubyashi just shot a displeased face at her.

__*__*__*__

Those on Akira’s side and the giants were still locked in a heated battle. Carol, who had returned back to join the fight, provided support from the camping vehicle. While driving around the battleground she would throw ammo at Akira from time to time. He would replenish his ammo by doing so multiple times. Thanks to that, he did not have to worry about running out and was able to continue fighting.

However, their fighting continued, and the giants multiplied to 16. Naturally, Akira had enough of it already.

“Alpha, they’re not slowing down at all! The situation doesn’t seem to be improving!

“That’s true. Though to be more precise, each giant is getting weaker and weaker.”

“So, quantity over quality, huh? Which means the first giant was the strongest one then. I guess it was a good thing that we took it down.”

Akira believed that the situation was not that dire, but his expression remained solemn.

His trump card, the annihilator warhead, was perfect for destroying a single powerful monster. However, it was not the right weapon to take down a swarm of moderately strong monsters. Furthermore, he did not have that many left.

As for the other weapons, they were not that effective on the giants. However, it might change once the giants weakened a bit more, which would mean more of them.

Akira preferred if the giants stayed powerful and did not multiply. For him, it was much easier to deal with a single strong one than a swarm of weak ones.

However, that was exactly why the giants multiplied and slowly formed a swarm every time one of them got killed.

The giants swung their blades and released laser beams. Akira slipped past through the openings and fought back. Every time he shot one of them down, the number of attacks kept increasing. Although the giants' firepower was reduced, Akira still could not ignore them. With more of them on the battlefield, it was getting harder to keep evading them. Thus, he was slowly getting pushed back.

That was when Shirou's telepathically reached him.

"Akira, are you still alive?"

"I'm busy right now, what is it?"

"I got a piece of information that may have something to do with those monsters you're fighting. I can send it your way if you want."

"Does it say anything about their weakness? Wait, what do you mean 'may have'?"

"I can't say for certain until I fully analyze the data. You might be able to find their weakness. However, that's a big 'might'. It might have nothing to do with those giants at all."

"Then analyze it first before sending it to me! Seriously… do you really understand my current situation!? Or are you telling me to analyze it while I fight!?"

It was a natural response considering Akira's current predicament. However, in response, Shirou also raised his voice.

"It's not like I can analyze something like this with my current equipment. I could if I used one of Sakashita's facilities, but they'll find out where I am!

So, you should do something about it yourself by using Tsukisada's facilities!"

Shirou's explanation highlighted his deep misunderstanding, which helped Akira calm down.

Both of them were old-world connectors. If it was to transfer data, they could do so without any issue. This was regardless of the data format. If Akira was really someone from Tsukisada Construction, then he should be able to connect to one of the Tsukisada facilities to analyze the data. Although it was a little late, Akira finally understood what Shirou wanted from him due to the latter's misunderstanding.

However, Akira was not from Tsukisada Construction. Thus, it was not like he could do anything about this piece of data if analysis required a facility from one of five big companies. Meanwhile, if he was really from Tsukisada, he should really want this data. Thus, he was not sure how he should respond.

That was when Alpha smiled and stated to him.

"Akira, I will do the analysis, so just get him to send it to you."

Akira did think that this came out of the left field, but seeing Alpha's confident smile, he gave a simple smile and nodded. He then reconnected to Shirou.

"Sorry, I'll do it then. Just send the data to me."

"Alright, I'm sending it now."

A stream of data came from Shirou. Akira did not have the slightest clue what it contained. However, he did feel the sensation of receiving a stream of information.

Akira could actually read the content if he wished. However, that was different to understanding it. He would have to decode its encryption first.

However, that was something only a specialist could do, something impossible for him.

However, it did not pose any challenge to Alpha. Not only did she decode the encrypted data, but she was also even able to fill in and fix the corrupted data, created when Yatsubayashi noticed Shirou trying to hack his equipment.

More importantly, the data contained information that would turn the table around. Thus, Alpha immediately made a smile of victory. Her confidence-filled smile was showcased to Akira, as if to let him know of her findings.

“Akira, we’ll do something reckless again, get ready.”

Strangely enough, her statement had completely calmed him down. Akira then confidently smiled back at her.

“Roger that! Let’s go!”

Akira’s bike suddenly accelerated right toward the giants. It was as if he was declaring that this next exchange would be the end of everything.

Even in the midst of the chaotic fight, Akira’s group and Goutol’s group were able to work together perfectly. They were spread around, surrounding the giants. Thus, when Akira broke through the encirclement and went alone toward the giants, they would naturally focus their attention on him.

The giants swung their blades and released their laser beams at him. Their high-speed blades created powerful gales, superheated by the lasers as the air particles moved. Akira barely avoided the scorching heat as he pushed forward.

Elena and the others were surprised by Akira’s sudden change in movement. They knew that he would not do something pointless when he was being this reckless. Thus, they knew that he must be doing something that might turn the tide of the battle and end it. They quickly followed suit and provided him support. Meanwhile, Goutol’s squad reacted, believing it to be some kind of strategy, they also went to help Akira.

Akira followed Alpha's instructions and aimed both his RL2 multi-rifles. Although he had no idea why and what he was aiming at, he did not hesitate to pull down the trigger. A wall of charged bullets were released, which were accompanied by mini-missiles and a laser beam. However, instead of aimed at a giant, they were aimed at the sea of green liquid that all giants were in.

The moment the mini-missiles landed, they exploded and blew the sea of gore and metal in all directions. Flesh and mechanical parts were blown up into the air. It was quickly followed by a laser that swept and completely evaporated everything in its path.

However, from Akira's point of view, there was no noticeable change. Even after that attack, it seemed to only create a wave in the sea of green liquid, which travelled to the edge. Eventually, it would return back to its original state as if nothing had happened.

In the first place, they've already shot numerous bullets and missiles into that green fleshy sea while the battle took place. It did not seem to slow down the giants. Thus, those there perceived it to be a meaningless attack.

Even so, Akira was certain that Alpha had some kind of objective. He slipped in between the giants and kept shooting at it.

"Alpha! I don't think it's working; just how much longer should I keep shooting?"

"Just keep on shooting for now. According to my calculation, it should be around here… Akira! Over there!"

Akira could see something forming under the green fleshy sea thanks to his enhanced vision, which enabled him to see under it. Although it was just a blurry contour, it was more than enough for him to fire at it. Up until now, he was shooting around haphazardly with his two RL2 multi-rifles. This time, he had a target and released a barrage at it.

The bullets had enough firepower to easily pierce through the flesh, metal and green liquid. They would even manage to hit the ground beneath. That was normally the case but for some reason, this time, the bullets could not even reach his target. The fleshy mixture around it quickly gathered up and released a forcefield armour, one strong enough to stop his bullets.

“It got blocked…!?”

While Akira had his eyes widened in disbelief, the target suddenly broke into smaller pieces and went in different directions.

“Alpha! Which one should I go for?!”

“Wait for a second… That one!!”

All the smaller, split-up signals in Akira’s enhanced vision vanished except for one. He quickly accelerated his bike to chase after it. As the bike ran on top of the uneven fleshy greenish sea, in a straight line toward his target, he kept shooting at it. It was an attempt to try and thin out the thick fleshy wall around it, while also trying to hit the target. The barrage struck the forcefield created by the fleshy wall, which was absorbed and transformed into energy. It converted whatever Akira threw at it into flashes of light that enveloped the area.

Akira was completely consumed by that blinding light. Even so, he did not stop shooting until his extended magazines ran out. In exchange for all that he had released, Akira was able to see some form of a reaction from his target. Once he stopped shooting, the blinding light died down. It allowed him to see his target, which was visibly exposed, protruding out of the fleshy sea. Unfortunately, it still seemed to be completely healthy.

“That didn’t work as well! Whoah!?”

A couple of giant blades smashed toward him. Some were even thrown by the giants that were far away from him. Even if the large metal blades did not hit him, they crashed into the ground, creating shockwaves that were strong enough to throw him off course. Even the grotesque sea was not spared as the metal blades pierced through and hit the ground beneath.

Thanks to Alpha's assistance, Akira was able to nimbly avoid a direct hit. The blades sliced through the sky at a high speed, even when he compressed his time perception. He could see beads of water falling in slow motion, while those blades zoomed past him. He managed to avoid them with the slightest of margins, squeezing past where the blades travelled. He could not help but frown at how the enemy suddenly attacked him so aggressively.

"Alpha! What's going on!?"

"All the giants are prioritizing on attacking you right now! I will do my best to avoid them so hold on tight. Make sure you don't get thrown off the bike!"

"So basically, they don't want us to attack that thing no matter what, huh! Alright! I'll leave that part to you!"

The giants had focused their attacks on him. The ones nearby swung their blades while those that were far from him threw their blades. Without a weapon in hand, they started to run towards him, releasing lasers from their japing jaws while they were at it.

Elena and the others were trying their best to stop the giants. Seeing how frenzied the giants were acting, they knew whatever Akira was trying to do was critical. Therefore, they quickly prioritized helping him.

Elena's group focused all their firepower on the giants that still held onto their blades, targeting their arms to disable them.

Some powered suits flew and stood on top of the giants' shoulders but were completely ignored. This allowed the powered suits to be able to release a point-blank barrage, which threw off the giant's aim.

With all the assistance he was receiving, the attacks on Akira abated.

Even so, it did not change how dire the situation was. Due to the overwhelming difference in the numbers, Akira still had to charge through the attacks as if he was planning to sacrifice himself to end the fight.

As blades collided with each other, sparks of fire were scattered into the air. Countless arms tried to grab onto him. Another giant from a different direction charged in between the rest of the giants, straight toward Akira. Even when the other giants got sliced by a frenzied giant flailing its blade, they were still trying to reach Akira with their arms.

Even in that situation, Akira was still fixed on his target. The bike was moving nimbly at a high speed thanks to Alpha's control, but he still fired. Akira once again emptied his rifles at his target. However, the target was still vigorously moving around.

"…Alpha!! Don't you think it might be better if we call a temporary retreat?!"

"No! It's still too soon! Just keep shooting!"

"How about we retreat and snipe it with an annihilator warhead?!"

"We can't do that yet! Save the bullet for now!"

"…Alright alright!!"

Akira got a little bit frustrated but kept on shooting. The faster he shot, the faster he emptied his magazines. At this rate, he would run out of ammo in no time. That anxiety caused him to frown.

That was when something changed. The grotesque sea suddenly gathered around his target. At the same time, the giants in the area suddenly threw themselves at him. When he looked up, it was full of darkness. The sky got completely blocked off by the giants.

As expected, Akira thought that this was his end. But a sudden sharp pain snapped him back to reality. The bike suddenly accelerated away at full speed, completely ignoring the burden it placed on its rider and its generator.

Due to his compressed time perception, the giants' fall was exceptionally slow. If they were just the size of normal rubble or debris, Akira would have been able to easily avoid them with his bike. However, any one of them was large enough to completely block out the sky. Thus, even if his bike would break down, he had to push through to escape.

“Alpha! Are we going to make it!?”

“Just hold tight!!

The ceiling above eventually crashed down. The shockwave created a miniature earthquake, which released a cloud of dust high into the sky. A moment later, Akira jumped out of the dust storm. He got out on time, but not his bike.

Right before the giants landed, Akira and Alpha knew that they would not make it. They immediately chose to forgo the bike. Akira stepped on top of the handle. Using the full power of his augmented suit, he leapt off the bike. A moment later, an explosion occurred behind him. That combination of both forces propelled him forward, barely getting him out of the falling ceiling.

Akira eventually slowed down and landed on top of a nearby abandoned building.

“W-whoah…! That was close! Alpha! Did it go well?”

“Yup, take a look!”

Alpha smiled and pointed at the giants lying below. Akira, believing that he finally won, also looked down. However, he was surprised by the spectacle.

The giants piled on top of each other were melting, slowly becoming one with the rest of the grotesque fleshy sea. They then gathered and formed into a single giant.

“Alpha… I thought you said it went well?”

“Quality over quantity this time, so it prioritizes power now.”

Alpha explained nonchalantly. She then proceeded to tell Akira the rest of her plan.

After Alpha analyzed the information from Shirou, she quickly concluded that the whole fleshy sea was some kind of monster. It was neither a swarm nor an individual. Rather, it was made of two monsters. These two monsters were the cores that controlled the rest of the giants. The one Akira chased after was one of these two cores.

The first one got killed by Akira's annihilator warhead. Thus, the second one decided to opt for more giants instead of better giants. After all, it was too costly to keep producing giants that required a huge amount of materials and medicines, which would just get shot down with a single annihilator warhead. Thus, it decided to produce many weaker giants as it stayed hidden under the fleshy sea.

However, Alpha was able to detect and ascertain its position. After it received a direct hit, it decided that numbers would not be able to protect it. Thus, it decided to form a better, more powerful body. However, creating the same giant as the last one would only get shot down the same way. Thus, it improved the quality of its body to its very limit.

After hearing Alpha's explanation, Akira looked at the new giant and exclaimed.

"So… That is the strongest body that it can create, huh…"

The current giant was smaller, as if it was the child version of the other giants. However, there was no longer a fleshy sea under it. It had used all its materials to create this body.

"Alpha… Shouldn't we target the core, use an annihilator warhead before it completes its body?"

"Before its body is fully formed, I am not able to confirm if the signal is real or just a decoy. Moreover, we do not know for sure how tough the new body is, so we shouldn't spend annihilator warheads when we might actually not need to. Now that its body has fully formed, we know for certain that the core is really there. Since it has hardened its body, that should prevent the core from moving around."

Although its body was tough, Akira could obliterate it with an annihilator warhead. It was an easier opponent when compared to fighting a swarm of giants. That was why Alpha made it return to prioritizing quality over quantity. This was the worst choice the monster could make, even so, it could not fight against its settings, instinct, and programming. Alpha knew that the monster would try to protect its core even if it meant it had to sacrifice all the other bodies.

Akira thought that did make sense.

"I see. By the way, Alpha, I feel like I've seen that thing before somewhere…"

"Now that it prioritized on quality, I bet its outer appearance now reflects its core better than before."

"I see… Then, as I thought, that must be Latis, huh?"

This special giant's appearance was no longer distorted. It had completely reconstructed Latis' face, and it even had Latis' hair as well. Its body, which was an amalgamation of flesh and metal, now seems like an augmented suit. It no longer had the twisted gory outlook the other giants had.

Akira then remembered Pamela's last words.

"So, this is what she meant…"

Although they were horribly reconstructed, all the giants that they fought against up until now had the same reference point. Akira finally understood that they were all supposed to look like Latis.

The new giant Latis grew a blade out of its palm. The blade was basically a lump of metal forged into a blade, with enhanced sharpness using forcefield armour. It faintly glowed when energy flowed into it and was long enough to slice apart a tall building. Latis then took a stance with that blade and released a slash.

Its first target was Goutol's squad. They temporarily stopped when the new giant was forming. However, once it started moving, they immediately reacted. They threw everything that they had at the new giant. Since they attacked it first, it prioritized its attack on them. Although Goutol's squad tried their best to get away from its attack, some still got caught.

That single slash sliced the slums apart. It even reached Kugamayama city's inner walls. This was accomplished by a single powerful energy wave that the slash released.

Thankfully, the city's inner walls were unharmed due to its powerful forcefield armour. Unfortunately, that was not the case for the tall buildings in the lower district, which were taller than the city wall.

Akira was flabbergasted.

"What insane power and range…"

But in contrast to his reaction, Alpha was smiling as per usual.

"Well, that is indeed powerful. However, it will run out of energy in no time if it keeps that up. After that, only death awaits."

"At the very least, it should have enough energy to completely destroy everything around here though."

"That's true. So, let's take it down before it destroys everything. Judging from the attack just now, it seems like it doesn't know our location. So, you can calmly take your time to aim."

At that very instant, Akira was able to receive Alpha's full support. Thus, his augmented suit's camouflaging capability was fully maximized. As long as he did not make any mistakes, he would stay hidden. Even though the possibility of getting detected was not zero, it was enough to assure him that Latis would not aim for him. If he got discovered, Latis would definitely prioritize eliminating him first.

Akira finally understood why Alpha waited until Latis made the first move. At the same time, used Goutol's men as distractions.

"I bet you will get discovered after you use the annihilator warhead, so let's end this with one shot."

"…Yeah, I know."

Akira felt bad about using Goutol's men. However, he knew that he did not have the leeway to be complacent and suppressed those feelings. He swapped the ammunition in his RL2 multi-rifles and loaded it with the annihilator warheads. He took aim and mumbled his honest thoughts which suddenly popped up.

"It's pretty amazing for you to work this hard even after death, but let's end this. I'll use the rest of my ammo in exchange."

With that opening, Akira pulled the trigger.

"…Farewell."

Akira shot out four annihilator warheads. They split the air and flew straight. They landed on points which would maximize their combined firepower according to Alpha's calculation.

The fireball created by all four devoured the giant. However, it was still alive. Due to its size, everything under its knee remained intact. Everything inside the fiery sphere got annihilated, with nothing left behind. Meanwhile, everything around it was blown away by the shockwave.

Akira lowered his rifle while still standing on top of the abandoned building. The shockwave even managed to reach him before eventually dying down. Finally, the view of the slums from where he stood returned. It was back to how it looked. Seeing such a scene, Akira heaved a sigh.

“And that was 400 million Aurum… Well, I guess that’s cheap considering that it allowed me to destroy that thing.”

That was Akira’s honest feelings.

“Alpha, just to make sure, it’s dead, right?”

“Yep, you defeated it. Though, there are pieces of it scattered around. Its core has fully stopped functioning so it should be alright.”

“Alright then, that’s it I guess… Though, it’s not the end of everything.”

This battle had come to an end. However, his real goal had not progressed at all. His relationship with Lion Steel was still hostile and Chloe was still alive. Akira knew that it was too soon to state this to be the end.

Even so, he expected nothing would happen for the rest of the day. Thus, he heaved a sigh filled with fatigue.

“Well, I guess we are back to waiting for my new equipment from Sakashita then. But if this will happen as long as I stay in the slums, it might be better for me to hide in the wasteland while I wait for my new equipment.”

“You’re right. Let’s think about that while you take a break… Hold on, Akira! Keep your guard up!!”

Alpha, who was smiling a moment ago, suddenly turned solemn as she warned Akira to put his guard up. Akira immediately got into a fight-or-flight state.

Akira’s information-gathering device detected multiple signals around him. All of them were obviously approaching him and they eventually formed an encirclement around him.

All of them were wearing maid and butler uniforms. It was obvious that they were from the Lion Steel Company. Akira scowled, but the main reason for that was not because of their attire.

After all the fighting that he had to go through, he was able to make a good estimate of how strong someone was. Although his judgment was polished in an unconventional manner, according to it, he knew that those surrounding him were at least as strong or maybe even stronger than Hammerz.

This current situation was far more dire than when he was surrounded by giants. Then one of the maids stepped up and smiled politely at him.

“Please don’t worry, we are not here to fight you.”

“…And you are?”

“I am the representative from Lion Steel company eastern district main branch, Alice. Pleased to meet you.”

“Eastern district… Main branch…?”

“Yes, I am here as the head of the Lion Steel company. I’ve come to negotiate with you.”

Alice smiled politely at him, who was obviously troubled by her while also being extra cautious of her.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 290, Negotiation with Alice

Index

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Even after they saw Latis' defeat after taking four annihilator warheads, Tsubaki and the others did not show any reaction. They knew that the battle had come to an end and went on their respective business.

"They took it down. That would mark the end of this presentation, I presume. Now then, please allow me to excuse myself."

Tsubaki declared to Haruka and vanished without even waiting for Haruka's reply.

Next, Alice smiled at Olivia and asked.

"I believe this showcase is more than enough to make your decision, or do you still need more?"

"…We have gathered enough information from this ordeal, the rest would depend on how the aftermath is handled. If there are no problems with the aftermath, I can promise that we will consider your offer in a positive light."

“Thank you very much. Well then, we can talk about the details another day.”

Alice gave a light bow to Olivia before turning to Haruka.

“I have another thing to attend to, so please excuse me. Ahh, also, although it ended in defeat, you need not worry. We will still continue to support you. Until next time then.”

Similar to Tsubaki, Alice immediately left together with her servants without even waiting for Haruka to reply.

Haruka then sighed exasperatedly.

“…I guess we should go back home as well….”

“Yeah yeah, just leave already, go home.”

Yatsubayashi said so while lightly waving his hand as if to shoo Haruka away. Haruka sighed again, this time, it was heavier than before.

“You, come with me too.”

Yatsubayashi clicked his tongue and left the area together with Haruka.

__*__*__*__

Akira was locking eyes with Alice, who had suddenly appeared. It was as if they were glaring at each other. It was because this was the only thing Akira could do. He knew that he would be killed the moment he tried to reach for his rifle.

Akira did not question Alice’s intentions after she had stated she had no wish to fight him. After all, he was still alive.

He knew Alice could easily kill him if she wanted to. It was also the reason why he knew she was not lying. At the same time, he knew that she could change her mind at any point in time.

Thus, he tried to approach this problem peacefully this time.

“…So, what do you want to talk about?”

Seeing that he was willing to negotiate, Alice smiled and pulled out a white card.

“I want you to relinquish all your rights regarding this white card.”

“That card again!”

Akira inadvertently frowned the moment he saw the white card, which had given him so much trouble.

“As I’ve said so many times before. I’ve given that card to Shiori. So that is not mine. If you have something you want from that card, go talk to Shiori.”

“You just need to say that you’ve relinquished all your rights regarding this card. That would be good enough. If it is no longer yours, it would mean nothing more than ascertaining the fact that you have given it away. I believe there should be no problems with you just stating this fact.”

Akira thought her argument was sound. It also informed him that she had no intention to cause him any problems. Judging from this situation, it was clearly in his best interest to do as she said.

However, if he was someone obedient, who would accept others’ demands, he would not have found himself to be in this situation.

“There is no reason for me to do that just because you asked me to.”

At the very least he was able to calm down and manage not to straightforwardly refuse. Even so, that was enough for Alpha to facepalm.

“Just so you know, it is Lion Steel’s fault that I have a 50 billion Aurum bounty on my head and got recognized as a monster by Kugamayama city. Do you really understand what you put me through when you are requesting something of me?”

“To be more precise, it was something that the third branch did under its own discretion. It does not have any connection to me as the representative of the eastern district main branch.”

In his current situation, Akira’s attitude was akin to suicide – even from the point of view of those in the eastern district. There was a huge gulf between Akira’s and Alices’ power, whereby the other party held full control over his life and death. This was the gap between a single Hunter and Lion Steel, a large company well renowned even in the eastern district.

However, even after Akira showed an attitude against her, Alice did not show any noticeable reaction.

“I see. How about this then? We will erase that bounty as well as that monster designation. Moreover, we will also reimburse all the expenses caused by this incident. What do you think?”

Akira was completely taken aback. He was obviously confused as he questioned.

“…It’s not like you will kill me if I say no, right?”

“If you want me to, then certainly.”

“Ah, no thanks, I’m fine without that.”

“Then, will you take my offer?”

“Eh? Ah, well, uhh…”

Akira could not understand why someone who could easily overwhelm him with power was offering such a good offer. That confusion only caused him to become suspicious. He felt that things might get worse if he accepted Alice’s offer. Thus, he pondered hard over it and finally thought of something before asking.

“That is actually a great offer for me, but… Is that because you want me to give up on Chloe?”

He had put off dealing with Chloe only after his new equipment from Sakashita arrived. Naturally, it did not change the fact that he would still kill her if he got the chance. Thus, his suspicions made him question if Alice offered such a deal to peacefully resolve the situation relatively cheaply. This was after considering the damage he could cause when he assaulted anything that housed Chloe after he got his front-line weapons.

Although he was the one who came up with this possibility, for some reason, he was not that fully convinced of it. After all, he understood if Alice had planned on protecting Chloe, it would have been better for her to just kill him. He had no clue as to why Alice did not take that option.

After she heard what Akira said, Alice tilted her head as if she was pondering over something. It took a short while before she immediately made her decision.

“Chloe, huh? Very well, please wait here for a bit.”

After she made her request, her group moved away, leaving Akira there, waiting. Meanwhile, the one waiting seemed more perplexed than wary.

“Alpha… What’s going on?”

“No idea. But it seems like they seriously have no desire to fight against you. That’s why, don’t get too emotional and stay calm alright, Akira?”

“Y-yeah.”

Not too long after, one of Alice’s servants returned with Shiori and Kanae in tow. Both were obviously as perplexed as Akira.

Then, another group of maids came from the direction of Kugamayama city. They stopped beside Alice, bringing with them two particular people, Chloe and Reina. Both were perplexed, but unlike Reina who seemed troubled, Chloe was smiling victoriously.

Unfortunately, both their reaction did not give him any clues as to what was happening; thus, he was even more confused than before.

__*__*__*__

After Akira killed Latis, Elena's team immediately tried to contact him. However, for some reason, they could not reach him. Although it seemed strange, they believed the annihilator warhead might have caused disruption to the communication line. Therefore, they decided to go to where Akira was instead.

But before they could reach him, two maids suddenly appeared in front of them and signaled with their hands to stop Elena's group.

"My deepest apologies. Negotiation with our company is going on. Please refrain from coming any closer."

The maids then politely bowed to Elena and Sara.

Elena tensed up. She knew just how powerful the maids were judging from their current attitude and equipment. She glanced at Sara, signaling her not to make any sudden movements.

"Just a question, you are from Lion Steel company, right?"

"Indeed, we are."

"A Hunter and a friend of ours by the name of Akira should be over there. When you said 'negotiation', is your company negotiating with him?"

"We're really sorry, but we can't answer that question."

Elena frowned and sighed. She then glanced at Shiori and Kanae, who should be also from Lion Steel, like those maids. She wanted to ask if they knew anything about this. But she quickly noticed that both looked even more worried than Elena, herself.

"Shiori-san?"

Shiori was snapped to reality when Elena called her name. However, her stern expression did not change.

“…My apologies. But I also don’t understand what is going on. As such, I can only give you my rough hypothesis.”

Shiori explained to Sara and Elena that those maids were affiliated with Lion Steel company’s eastern district main branch. They were strong enough to kill everyone here in a blink of an eye. With those maids out here, it meant that the negotiator would be someone of a high position. Thus, she warned Elena and Sara with a grave expression.

“So, please be extra careful with your actions. In the worst-case scenario, it might be interpreted as a hostile action against the main branch.”

“…Okay.”

Naturally, Elena had no desire to pick a fight with the Lion Steel company as she gave a firm nod.

Shiori then hesitated for a second before stepping forward.

“I am Suzuhara Shiori affiliated to Lion Steel company eastern district fourth ward branch. I heard that my master, Reina Rylard Lorentz-sama, is under the main branch’s custody. If I may, would you please tell me-”

“Silence!”

One of the maids snapped at her. There was no amiability in her expression. Not even if it was directed to someone from inside the company.

“Don’t get in the way of our duty!”

It was a warning from the maid, stating that she would see Shiori’s actions as a disturbance and deal with it accordingly the next time she did that.

“…I’m really sorry.”

Shiori deeply bowed and stepped back. Kanae’s face turned pale as she whispered to Shiori.

“Ane-san… Isn’t this…”

“It is as you might fear… Just what is going on here…”

Although these maids here were from the main branch, they must be of a lower position. They were posted to watch the area instead of being allowed to be present during the negotiation. However, even when Shiori was being careful with her words, that reply was rather harsh. This hinted that even the maids were on edge, which would only happen if the negotiator was someone of an extremely high position. Kanae and Shiori believe only representative Alice could cause the maids to react in such a manner. Thus, they believe Alice had come directly to meet and negotiate with Akira. This was extremely abnormal.

Soon, another maid appeared. Judging from the attitude of the two maids posted as watchmen, the new maid was of a higher position than them. She walked towards Shiori and Kanae before ordering.

“You two, come with me.”

Shiori and Kanae frowned and seemed troubled. However, they did not have a choice. They had to do as they were told. When they reached the premise, they did not expect Alice to be really there, especially with Reina and Chloe.

Chloe was surprised to see Akira there too. However, she quickly came to a conclusion when she saw Alice was in the midst of negotiating with him and smiled.

[I won…!]

She was delighted, believing that she had made the right decision and won her bet. Naturally, she hid her excitement from her expression.

Back in Mihazono ruin, Alice had given Olivia some information regarding the current Lion Steel company. However, for the old Lion Steel company, the new Lion Steel company was a completely separate entity and any information provided from Alice’s side had been deemed to be without credibility. Thus, Olivia decided there was a need for an investigation.

All these incidents that were started by the white card were part of Olivia's investigation. It was to show the old Lion Steel company that the current Lion Steel company was indeed a large conglomerate just like Alicia had stated. The bigger the incident got, the better it was to show how powerful and large the current Lion steel company was.

That was the reason why Alice gave such a vague order to those in the area – to deal with the matter regarding the white card on their own. If she had preferred not to cause any more incidents, she would have given precise instructions. She would have told Shiori, who had the white card at that time, to obey the head of the third branch, Beltram.

And as Alice had planned, Chloe went on a rampage, which triggered a chain reaction. It ultimately led to a huge battle next to the city's inner wall, where an officer from one of the five big companies, Sakashita Heavy Industry, was located. Alice believed that she had demonstrated enough power of the company to Olivia. Thus, the next thing she needed to do was show that she had the power to bring the chaotic situation under her control.

It was not like Chloe knew Alice's whole plan. However, she had guessed it to some extent. When she saw Alice negotiating with Akira, she believed it to be whether he would surrender or get killed. Chloe believed that eventually, Alice would deal with the source of the incident, Akira, to show Lion Steel's might to both those inside and outside the company.

[Now that we're going into the cooling-off phase, there's no need to cause any further incidents! This means, there is a good chance that negotiations between Olivia and the representative Alice went well! There's no doubt that it is all thanks to my contribution! Since I'm the one who helped smooth the deal with the old-world Lion Steel company, it won't be strange for me to be promoted to the main branch! I did it! I won my bet!!]

Although she had to cross many dangerous bridges, all those dangers she faced only added to how great her achievement was. Chloe was drunk, imagining what kind of bright future awaited her.

Alice then stood in front of Chloe and swung her hand. The shockwave from her hand hit Chloe head-on, turning her into minced meat in a blink of an eye.

After Alice killed her, she then looked at Akira, who was thunderstruck by the sudden change of events. She smiled at him, with the same smile she had since the start of the negotiation.

“Will this be good enough?”

Akira snapped back to reality. Although he was still as confused as before, there was a slight tint of reproach in his eyes.

“…Isn’t she supposed to be on the same side as you?”

“That’s exactly why we took care of it ourselves. To not cause any more trouble, and to show that we are sorry for what had happened. It is much better for us to take care of her ourselves.”

Akira thought that Alice made a good point. If he was the one to kill Chloe, it might become a seed for another conflict with the Lion Steel company. However, if Alice was the one who did it, this would simply end as the company taking care of its own internal problem. Thus, it was a very convincing way for Alice to show that she was apologetic to him.

Even so, Akira still felt that it was a bit of an overkill.

Seeing Akira’s troubled expression, Alice then continued.

“Was that not enough? In that case, should I also do the same to this side as well since they’re the ones responsible for getting you involved?”

Alice then directed her arm to Reina’s group.

Shiori and Kanae quickly stepped in front of Reina. Although they knew that it was futile, that they would get turned to dust along with Reina, they still could not sit still and stay silent.

“W-wait!”

Akira inadvertently tried to stop Alice. Although she turned toward him, her hand was still directed at Reina's group. Thus, Akira continued to try to calm her down.

"…They helped me quite a lot. So, you don't have to kill them as well. It's already good enough, so just stop here."

Alice lowered her hand and smiled at him.

"Will that be everything then? If yes, if you may, please."

Akira realized that by saying that, Alice had basically successfully steered the conversation. It was as if he had accepted the offer that she had made. But on the other hand, since he was the one who stopped Alice, he felt that it was not right for him to state that he had changed his mind at this point. Therefore, Akira simply gave it up and heaved a huge sigh.

"I relinquish all my rights regarding that card… Is that good enough?"

"Thank you very much! Now then, please let me excuse myself. I look forward to working with you in the future if the chance presents itself."

Alice tucked the white card back and activated her camouflaging device to immediately vanish. The other maids and butlers also did the same afterwards. Although Akira was still able to detect them retreating from the area through his information-gathering device, their signals vanished soon enough.

Akira immediately let gravity take control of his body and collapse to the ground with a thud.

"Just what in the world was that…?"

And as expected, no one there could answer his question, which came from the depths of his heart.

After Alice and her servants left, the isolation of the area was immediately lifted. Not too long after, Elena, Sara, and Carol appeared in front of Akira. They were so glad to find he was still fine. They did try to ask him what had happened, but Akira was just as confused as they were. Therefore, for now, they decided to return back to Sheryl's base together with Reina's group.

Once Akira returned, the area was under a strict watch from the city defence squad. Their excuse was to maintain the safety of the area. When news of Latis' attack reached the inner wall, as expected, City Management could not afford to ignore it any longer. Although they did not go as far as to arrest Akira and the others, the group was advised not to go outside of Sheryl's base. After all, their main goal was to maintain neutrality. It would be counter-effective to arrest Akira, Though, thanks to their presence, Akira's group need not worry about another attack for the time being.

Personally speaking, Akira wanted to bathe. However, Alpha warned him not to. After all, he was too exhausted and would most likely relax too much, enough to drown. Thus, he had no other choice but to take a mere shower. After he finished showering, Akira threw himself on top of the bed in a room that he borrowed from Sheryl. The moment he relaxed, fatigue assaulted him. He allowed it to take full control and lull himself to sleep.

__*__*__*__

Inside a certain meeting room within the inner wall of Kugamayama city, Inabe slammed his fist on top of the table.

"Goddammit!!"

It was amazing how he was able to hold himself back until all the officers from the Lion Steel company had left. However, because of how much he had bottled up, the moment he let it out, it was powerful enough to dent the table.

All the city officers of Kugamayama city, including Inabe, were informed by the Lion Steel company. They were all told that everything that had happened, the chains of incidents, the strange monsters that appeared near the city, and even the attack from the mutated Latis that hit buildings within the inner wall, were all not the will of the company.

This was a humongous incident. It was created from the combination of multiple factors. There were two main ones, namely, one of their servants went on an insane rampage after the death of her coworker and the unexpected effects of the medicine used during the battle. Overall, it was just one large accident, and the company did not mean for it to happen. That was the formal statement provided by Lion Steel.

As expected, Inabe and the others did not believe this to be the truth. It was impossible for such an incident to occur if some parts were not pre-planned or agreed upon. Thus, they already knew that part of it was completely intentional. However, they had no other choice but to accept it. If they declared this statement to be false, it would spark a war and the opponent would be the Lion Steel Company Eastern District Main Branch. Kugamayama city had virtually zero chance to win.

Lion Steel was willing to take responsibility for this incident and offer the city payment for the damages that they caused. However, that would make it no different than sweeping everything under the rug for money! The situation whereby the city could do nothing but accept was extremely humiliating, causing Inabe to be livid.

One of Inabe's men tried to calm him down.

"Chief! Please calm down. Most do chalk this incident up as rude treatment by the Lion Steel company to Kugamayama city. Also, the matter with Akira has come to an end with this. Although it was not publicly declared, it could be seen as him forcing Lion Steel to withdraw the 50 billion bounty placed on him. Recognising a connection with someone like that, your influence will greatly increase. And Akira's reason to attack the city has completely disappeared. This could be seen as a resolution that was achieved due to your contribution."

"…You're right."

Inabe took a deep breath, trying to regain his calm.

"…Send a request to the other departments. Get everyone to calculate the total damages incurred. Include the expense from dispatching the defence squad and the damage to the lower district as well. Just include everything, and I mean everything you can find."

"Right away!"

His men gave a light bow and quickly got to work. Seeing them leave, Inabe also tried to change his mood and got back to his own duties. However, due to a specific person, his expression was still tinted with irritation.

"…But still, to think that he didn't even attend the officer meeting just now. Just where is he now?"

Although he was a very important person who could manipulate Kugamayama city to his will, Yanagisawa was nowhere to be seen during the city officer meeting.

__*__*__*__

Inside one of a room under the area owned by Sakashita Heavy Industry, located in the upper district of Kugamayama city, Sugadome, who was a high-ranking officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry, was listening to the explanation regarding the recent incident from the branch manager of Lion Steel company third ward branch, Beltram.

"…Very well, I understand that this was an accident. Our company has no wish to say anything regarding the matter if both Kugamayama city and Lion Steel company are fine with this conclusion."

"Thank you very much!"

"But still, about the medicine that you mentioned before, would it be possible for us to get the data as well? If it's possible, I also want to know how you managed to lay your hands on such a medicine and why you have it stockpiled. I want to know everything."

Beltram, who was conversing with a polite smile, froze for a moment.

"…Is it something really necessary?"

“Yes. If such a medicine that could cause such a huge accident were to be found in our possession, it would be extremely dangerous, no? So, in order to prevent something similar from happening in the future, don’t you think it would be wise to share this piece of information?”

Beltram once again went silent. He then thought about what might happen if he refused. After considering the gains and losses for the Lion Steel company, he then said with a smile.

“…Very well. But the data is under the possession of the main branch. As such, I cannot send you the data right away. I will have to contact the main branch and the process would take some time, would that be alright?”

“Yeah, it’s fine.”

“Thank you very much, we shall send you the data at a later-”

“Also, if it’s difficult to send the data to us since it is highly confidential, I don’t mind receiving the data through another method.”

“What do you mean?”

“I’ve actually sent a request for anti-rebuild personnel, you see. You can deliver the information through that request. They are affiliated with the Corporate Government and we have some of our men among them as well. Naturally, the main aim is to prevent the rebuild. So, even if you conveyed a corporate secret on such a platform, there would be no need to worry that it might leak to Sakashita. After all, it is under the strict watchful eyes of the Corporate Government. Would that work for you?”

Beltram’s amiable smile vanished for a second since that suggestion completely came out of the left field. However, he quickly returned back to his usual smile.

“Personally speaking, I don’t think there’s any need to go that far, but the one to decide would be the main branch. I will at least convey that suggestion to the main branch.”

“I see.”

Beltram and Sugadome looked at each other with mutual respect as fellow high-ranking officers from their respective companies and ended their conversation there.

As soon as Beltram ended the meeting and left the room, Sugadome quickly made a call to Kuzusuhara ruin. He ordered with a solemn expression.

“It’s me. Investigate why representative Alice from Lion Steel came to this place right away.”

“Hasn’t it been confirmed that it was for the sake of negotiations with the old-world Lion Steel company…? We have also confirmed that is the reason why Kugamayama city was dragged into the recent incident. Considering that this even warranted representative Alice to come here as well, I believe there is no need for any suspicion.”

“Redo the investigation. There’s a good chance they are hiding something behind that seemingly perfect excuse.”

“Very well. If I may ask, what is the basis of this suspicion?”

“The head of the third ward branch reacted when I mentioned the anti-rebuild. Furthermore, the assault group that attacked the city came from their facility in Higaraka residence ruin, which was built right before the incident regarding the white card.”

“…Which means that they may have planned to attack the city even before the matter with the white card came up?”

“It’s just to be safe.”

“We will redo the investigation right away.”

Sugadome then ended the call with someone by the name of Matsubara. Judging from his tone, it seemed like Matsubara was able to understand the gravity of the situation.

Sugadome then sighed with a frown on his face.

“I hope that it’s nothing but unfounded fear.”

The ‘rebuild’ referred to in the ‘anti-rebuild’ was the reconstruction of civilization. And the first phase of the reconstruction process included wiping off existing civilization first. Basically, the rebuild meant completely destroying the current civilization and forcing it to join a part of the old-world. The anti-rebuild was formed to prevent this from happening. It was one of the rare occasions in which the 5 biggest corporations in the eastern district, who were hostile against each other, were willing to work together.

Although the current Lion Steel company under Alice was focused on trade across the eastern district, it still was deeply related to the old-world. After all, it was led by Alice, who originated from the old-world. If the need ever arose, Sugadome was concerned that she would initiate the rebuild without hesitation.

Furthermore, with Shirou’s escape, everything seemed to be connected in Sugadome’s mind.

__*__*__*__

After Beltram left the inner wall, he made a call to the main branch from inside the car. Inside his augmented vision, he could see Alice and Flip, the branch manager from the fourth ward branch.

“Beltram, Flip, report!”

After listening to both reports, Alice lightly nodded and declared.

“Very well. I will prepare the data to be sent to Sakashita. Regarding the fact that he mentioned the anti-rebuild, let’s ignore it for now. Whether it’s a bluff or not, does not matter. Continue with your usual duties.”

Inside the virtual space, Beltram and Flip bowed. After they exchanged a glance, Beltram then asked.

“Representative Alice. Personally speaking, we both agree that Reina and Chloe did very well for the sake of the company. Especially Chloe’s contribution toward the company. It is enormous. but you’ve killed her, was there some kind of mistake in how we evaluated Chloe’s achievement?”

As the branch manager of the third ward branch, he had to be careful with how he treated those from the same faction as Chloe. With Alice eliminating her, it would definitely affect that faction. Since Alice’s evaluation seemed to deviate from his, there was a need for him to fix his evaluations.

However, Alice did not deny Beltram’s opinion.

“No, they both did very well. Give their group and faction the reward that they deserve.”

Chloe was already dead. Thus, Alice was suggesting they take her death as her sacrificing her own life for the sake of the company. In which case, the faction to which she belonged would reap the reward for what she did.

“Understood… If I may, in that case, why did you kill her?”

“Because there was a need to.”

After Alice had demonstrated the power of the current Lion Steel company to Olivia, the only thing left was to deal with the aftermath. Alice thought that using more power to calm down the situation would only lower Olivia’s evaluation of her.

The reason why she had Akira give up all his rights regarding the card was because it was the source of all the conflicts. It was also Alice’s way to put out the fire of the conflict. Moreover, she wanted to have someone in her own company have ownership rights for the card.

Normally, once the original owner of the card had given up their rights, the card would be simply returned. However, Akira gave that card to Shiori, and although it was not through the correct procedure, Shiori did accept it.

With Akira relinquishing his rights, as per protocol, the ownership of the card had transferred onto Shiori.

Although the death of the owner would also free up ownership of the card, Alice did not kill him. The reason being her main goal was to calm down the situation. Otherwise, she would have killed him.

With that goal in mind, Alice decided to kill Chloe so that Akira would agree to relinquish his ownership of the card. If necessary, she would have killed Reina's group as well. As a matter of fact, Alice took Reina and Chloe under her custody in case they were needed as sacrifice.

Naturally, Alice did not care whether Chloe lived or not. If Chloe had somehow managed to survive or Akira somehow got killed, there was a good chance that Chloe would have got promoted to the main branch due to her achievements.

However, Akira survived, and he mentioned Chloe during their negotiation. Thus, Chloe's death was set in stone.

After Alice gave an explanation, Beltram nodded deeply. There was no need for him to fully understand Alice's reasons for why she did what she did. The most important thing for him was to be in line with her way of deciding reward and punishment.

Chloe was able to accurately predict Alice's will, but she made a mistake in the very end.

Even if Chloe won her bet, even if she was able to leave a great achievement inside Lion Steel, that did not guarantee that she would be spared. She would indeed be greatly rewarded had she been alive. However, that was all there was to it. For Alice, making the deal with the old-world Lion Steel company was worth more than preserving the life of the Lorentz family.

Alice made her decision based on her priorities. That was all there was to it.

Index

Rebuild World – Chapter 291, Strength and Weakness

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The next day, Akira slept through the morning and past the afternoon due to fatigue. After he woke up, he went to get something to eat and went to take a bath, inside the base's great bath.

He entrusted his body to the warm water, which sapped away his exhaustion. Normally, he would enjoy such a warm bath without any worries. However, this time, he still seemed rather tense. His sighs were not from the bath but from exasperation.

Seeing that, Alpha, who was also in the bath with him, could not help but ask.

"Akira, are you alright? Do you need more sleep?"

"No… Well… It's true that I'm still tired, but that's not it…"

He no longer had a bounty on his head, his monster designation got removed and Chloe was dead. Even so, Akira still was not content with this outcome. It continued to weigh down on his spirit.

Alpha smiled and tried to cheer him up.

“In that case, let’s take the whole day to recuperate. You worked hard yesterday. It can’t be helped if you still feel tired after going through all of that.”

“…Yeah.”

Akira gave a deep nod and tried to brush off that feeling. However, he was not able to do so and slowly returned to his previous state.

That was when a call from Shizuka suddenly reached him. Akira picked up the call via telepathy with Alpha.

“Akira, it’s me. It seems that you’ve gone through quite a lot recently, but I’m glad that you’re fine.”

“Thank you very much and sorry for making you worry, Shizuka-san.”

“You really did make me worry, good grief. Can you imagine how shocked I was when I found out that one of my shop regulars became a bounty target?”

Shizuka was speaking in a joking manner, which Akira then tried to lightly laugh off. At the very least, he was able to make a chuckle, albeit an awkward one.

“Uhh, about that, because of this, I will soon go purchase ammo and medicine from Shizuka-san’s shop, so please let this slide.”

“Good grief, it can’t be helped then.”

They then continued to chat about how they were doing lately in a buoyant mood. The flow of the conversation naturally cheered Akira up. Right around the point where he sounded a little springier, Shizuka’s tone changed to a scolding one.

“Akira, this might be nothing but my imagination, so just ignore it if you think that it’s just my misunderstanding.”

“Eh? Ah, okay.”

Akira was taken aback by this sudden change but gave a firm reply. Shizuka continued slowly and clearly.

“I’m sure you’ve gone through a lot lately and I’m sure you’ll have to face a lot of things in the future. If it’s something that you are going to do for your own sake, please do so without holding back. You’ve simply become someone with the capability to do that.”

Akira was expecting Shizuka to be scolding him because of what had happened. Thus, he was surprised by those unexpected words. Shizuka then continued by putting more emphasis on her words.

“But, if by any chance you do it for our sake, you should stop. Please don’t make us the reason for you to use force.”

Akira had gone through multiple rampages in the past. Most of the time, it was because of revenge or self-defence. He reacted extremely violently when triggered, he was like a landmine, completely docile in other circumstances.

However, he was slowly changing. Previously he only recognized those around him as either hostile or not hostile. Now, he started to recognize others as friends and allies. It was indeed a good thing, but at the same time, it also gave Akira more trigger points.

If it was for the sake of self-defense, Akira would stop once he was able to protect himself from the enemies. However, if it was for the sake of revenge, the aim was to kill, not to protect. To annihilate his enemies, in such a scenario, it was possible for Akira to never stop. His retribution could grow larger due to hatred, fear, or regret. He might even start to hunt anyone with the slightest relation to his target down to the very last person.

There was no doubt that Akira would meet his end eventually if he went down this path. However, how many people would he drag down to hell before that happened? The world was not naive enough to let him go on a rampage forever, such destruction would be massive, and it would be his own undoing.

With that worry in mind, Shizuka conveyed her warning clearly to him. She firmly wanted to prevent Akria from going down this path. The first and foremost way to prevent him from doing so was to draw the line of avenging those important to him.

“It’s just something I think we all share the same sentiments on. It’s not like I’m telling you to not care about us. We are happy that you think of us. But I want you to stay calm, think things through, and consult with others more… Akira, are you listening?”

When Shizuka called him, Akira snapped back to reality. He gave a bitter smile and replied with his usual tone.

“Yeah, I’m listening. I’m sorry for not consulting with you. But, Shizuka-san, as expected, it’s not an easy subject for me… Like, I don’t think I could have done what you suggested, Shizuka-san. I had become a bounty target, wouldn’t it be difficult to ask for advice at that point?”

“Hmm, you have a point. I don’t know what to say if you put it like that.”

“Right? As I thought… that’s why I did that…”

Akira then continued talking casually with Shizuka. As they conversed, he could feel the weight in his heart slowly being lifted.

The source of that feeling was his inability to process the feeling of helplessness. Although it all started when Chloe threatened him, the two main reasons why he did not back down were because Chloe looked down on him and that she threatened those he had identified as his friends.

Akira then tried to solve both issues with his own power. He decided to do so because he thought he had the power to accomplish it. He had to admit there was a level of pride and ignorance mixed in this decision of his.

However, in the end, Akira basically failed to accomplish both. Although it had come to an end, Alice could have easily killed him and left the other side alive. And Chloe was killed by Alice, which was more than likely out of Alice’s whim. In the end, his actions and wishes did not have anything to do with the outcome.

Akira had already thought that he was no longer his old self. That he had grown stronger. To prove that to himself and to others, he used violence fuelled by his strong emotions. However, his opponent did not even see him as someone worthy of being considered an enemy. Even the target of his violence got taken before he could swing his fist. This gave Akira the feeling of helplessness.

Even so, the fist that he had raised was still up. In the worst-case scenario, he might go and look for another reason to bring that hammer down.

Akira then realized something. After listening to Shizuka, he was about to distort his originally pure intentions. The fist that he had raised was originally done so to protect his friends. Now, he had almost ended up using his friends as an excuse to use his raised fist.

Now that he had realized it, stopping himself was easy. It also helped him accept the fact that he was indeed still weak. To put it in another way, it gave Akira the strength to admit that he was still weak.

“…So well, with that, I ended up using quite a lot of my ammunition. I have to resupply soon so, I’m sorry, but is it okay if I place my order now?”

“Sure, but as expected, I can’t get you any annihilator warheads. So please don’t expect me to have those.”

“I know… Now that I think about it, I wonder how did Katsuragi get those…?”

“There are these kinds of amazing merchants out there, huh? I have to work hard to make sure my regulars don’t run off to them.”

“Don’t worry about it. I will be visiting your shop sometime soon, so I’ll be in your care.”

“Alright, I’ll be looking forward to it. See you.”

Shizuka then closed the call. Akira stretched out his body and smiled. It was as if he had accomplished a huge task. He was finally able to put a lid on the previous incident.

“Alright then… I guess I should get out soon.”

But Alpha sighed and looked exasperatedly at him.

“…What?”

“You always listen to everything Shizuka has to say. In all honesty, after watching how you’re so obedient to her every word, I would prefer it if you did the same to me as well, you know?”

Akira looked away from Alpha’s gaze and laughed awkwardly.

__*__*__*__

Although no one knew the full details of what had happened, in the end, Akira won, and his bounty was taken down. He was also no longer recognized as a monster by the city. For Sheryl’s gang, that was a huge win. They were elated that they had won a battle where they were greatly outnumbered and were in a tight spot. At the same time, they were also greatly saddened by the death of their comrades, who had lost their lives in that battle. The whole gang was flooded with emotion, but after a single night, they calmed down to some extent.

However, for Sheryl, this was not the end. She was swamped with work as the boss of the gang. She was so busy that she could not head straight to the bath immediately after she heard that Akira went in after he woke up.

When she finally found an opening to wedge in some free time for herself, she immediately went to the bath. However, when she entered the changing room, Akira was already in the middle of wearing his clothes.

“Akira… you’re already done?”

“I did take my time though? I’m pretty sure I’ll pass out if I spend more time inside the bath.”

“I see…”

Akira was not lying, He did spend quite a long time inside as he took his time chatting with Shizuka. However, that did not change the fact that Sheryl had missed her chance to get in the bath together with him. That regret was obvious from her expression. Now that Akira was no longer recognized as a monster, he no longer had any reason to be staying in her base. The more she thought about it, the more awful she felt. That the next opportunity was so far away, making her regret missing this opportunity even more.

Once Akira finished putting on his clothes and had left the room, Sheryl simply silently followed behind him.

“Hm? Sheryl, aren’t you going to take a bath?”

“I wanted to get in with you, but since you’ve done, I’ll take one later.”

“I see.”

They had gone together multiple times before. It was definitely bold of her to do so, and she almost said something bold in response to his question. That ‘every chance to get into the bath together with you is a precious occasion’. However, she did not end up saying it. She just sighed as per usual at how nonchalant he was.

“Akira, do you like older girls?”

“It’s not like I have any particular preference, but… That was out of the blue, where did that come from?”

“Nothing, it’s just that I saw you with Elena-san, Sara-san, and Carol-san. I just thought that you have quite a lot of mature women as your close friends.”

“Isn’t that simply because there are a lot of adults among Hunters?”

“…Yeah… That must be it… Yeah…”

Even if she acted a bit jealous, as she had expected, Akira's reaction was as dry as ever. Sheryl could not help but sigh again.

"Akira, I just remembered. Shijima said he wants to meet you face to face. What do you plan to do?"

Akira tilted his head. It seemed like he had completely forgotten who Shijima was. Thus, Sheryl had to remind him that he was the boss of a gang. Thanks to that, it refreshed his memory.

"Ahhh, that guy, huh? If it's about the gang, tell him to discuss that with you."

"About that, he said that it has nothing to do with gang business. When I asked him what he wanted to talk about, he said that he can't tell anyone else other than you. So, I have him waiting in the guest room. Should I just send him off?"

At one point in the past, Sheryl was just the boss of a small gang in the slums. Meanwhile, Shijima was the boss of a medium-sized gang. At that time, Sheryl was in a lower position in terms of power. However, that power hierarchy had been completely overturned. Furthermore, with Akira emerging victorious from the recent battle, it only served to widen the power gap between the two gangs.

Even so, the two gangs have gotten along for a long time. Therefore, Sheryl was not willing to shoo Shijima away or used force to make him state his business with Akira. Furthermore, since he mentioned it had something to do with Akira, she had to act with more precaution. Sheryl told him to wait in the guest room, and that there was no guarantee that Akira would meet him.

"…Well, if he's already here, might as well meet him before I leave."

Akira was in a good mood after talking with Shizuka. Therefore, he just simply thought that it would not hurt to see Shijima for a bit.

When Alicia told Shijima, who was waiting in the guest room, that Akira would meet him soon, Shijima inadvertently frowned.

[And he's seriously going to meet me…!? You could just say that someone like me isn't worth your time, you know!? Why the heck are you earnestly coming to meet me?!]

Although he was the one who asked to see Akira, he was hoping to get rejected. The reason why he chose to come here today was because he thought there was a good chance Akira would refuse to meet him.

However, despite his wishes, not too long after, Akira came into the room together with Sheryl. To add salt to the wound, Akira was planning to head back home as soon as Shijima's business with him was done. In other words, Akira was carrying all his equipment. With a 50 billion bounty target standing fully armed and ready to fight anytime in front of him, as expected, Shijima tensed up. Thinking that it was counter-effective to be overly cautious and scared, he tried his best to give off the same aura as back when Akira was just a small, unknown Hunter and he was a boss of a medium-sized slum gang.

Akira sat face to face with Shijima.

"So, what is it?"

"If it's possible, I want to be covert about this…"

Shijima said so and glanced at Sheryl. However, Sheryl did not show any reaction to his glance.

"Tell me why you are here first. If it's about gang business, I will leave it to Sheryl and go back home."

"…It's about the third ward branch of the Lion Steel company, are you okay with her listening?"

As Shijima expected, Sheryl's face turned dire. This was why he had refused to explain why he was there to her beforehand. In the worst-case scenario, he might get killed the moment he tried to explain.

Akira thought for a bit before turning to Sheryl.

“It’s up to you, I don’t mind either way.”

“…Just to be safe, I will take my leave. If it’s something that is okay for me to hear, please tell me what it is later.”

“Alright.”

Sheryl gave a light bow and exited the room. Shijima saw Sheryl off with conflicted eyes. Being left alone with Akira meant that he might be able to slowly manipulate Akira with words. However, at the same time, it also meant that there would be no one to stop Akira if he went on a rampage. To help calm himself down, Shijima forced himself to see this from a positive point of view.

“So, what is it?”

Akira threw the same question as before, Shijima made his resolve before opening his mouth.

“The Lion Steel Company Eastern District Third Ward Branch wishes to make peace with you. So, I’m here today as a negotiator sent from their side.”

Akira raised his eyebrows and tilted his head; He did not expect that at all. However, Shijima could not help but see that as him being irritated. From Shijima’s point of view, it was only natural because he had mentioned Lion Steel third ward branch in front of Akira. He tried his best to put a lid on his welling anxiety.

The conflict between Akira and Lion Steel had met its end. However, to be more precise, it was forced to end in peace due to the intervention from the main branch. At the moment, although they were not fighting against each other, those from the third branch still saw Akira as hostile.

The manager of the third ward branch, Beltram, thought that there was no need to prolong this conflict any further. At the very least, as long as there was no order from the main branch to continue the fight, Beltram had no wish to continue the third branch's conflict with Akira.

However, it would be naive to assume that Akira also had the same opinion. From the point of view of common sense in the Eastern District, picking a fight against the Lorentz family was simply unthinkable. Although they were certain that Akira would not do something as pointless as attacking the main branch, they feared he would have no problem causing a battle of the same size as before if it was against a branch.

Furthermore, Akira was scheduled to get front-line equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry sometime soon. He might avoid engagements at the moment, but there was a good chance that he would try to attack the Lion Steel branch once he got his powerful equipment.

Naturally, if it ever came to that, unlike last time, Beltram would use the full might of the third branch to fight back. Compared to the incident with Chloe, it would be a force that was incomparable in size, which would have no problems eradicating Akira. However, considering the expenses needed to create, deploy, and manage such a force, Beltram wanted to avoid this even if it meant that he had to be the one who directly worked on it.

To do that, the third ward branch needed to negotiate a peace treaty with Akira. However, the third ward branch still needed to keep its prestige and still act as a large company. Thus, they could not simply declare that they had backed off because of a Hunter. If they did that, other companies would look down on them and it might become a trigger for more conflicts. Thus, considering both ends, the money and manpower needed to fight against Akira and to prevent other hostile companies from acting up, they needed to make it look as if Akira was the one who sued for peace.

Naturally, Beltram knew that this was an extremely difficult feat to pull off. If Akira was someone who would listen to others' demands without trying to fight back, he would not have fought against Chloe.

However, even so, they still could not afford to continue this fight. They had to negotiate for peace. Thus, Lion Steel used its resources to look for someone who could act in their stead. They came up with one person. Someone who started with a hostile relationship with Akira, and just like Chloe, went as far as to threaten Akira's friends, but somehow managed to find peace with Akira by paying a huge sum to him.

It was extremely easy for Lion Steel to scare Shijima into doing their bidding.

Shijima continued the difficult negotiation, which placed his own life in danger. If he was able to handle things peacefully, Lion Steel would owe him a favour. However, if he failed, only death awaited him. The only difference would be whether it would be Akira killing him now or Lion Steel killing him later. With that in mind, Shijima desperately continued to negotiate.

"…So, uhh, the third ward branch wants to make peace with you but… They want you to pay a small sum to them… Wait, calm down, listen to everything I have to say first, okay?"

Akira's expression only showed bewilderment and doubt. However, Shijima could not help but perceive his expressions as him being on the verge of exploding. Naturally, that would be horrendous considering Akira had the firepower to literally blow up the whole slums. Therefore, Shijima was desperately trying to convince Akira while preventing him from exploding.

"So then, about the money, they asked for three hundred Aurum."

On top of the unexpected subject, Shijima worded out an unexpected number. As expected, it only got Akira to feel even more confused and unsure of how to react.

"…Three hundred? Like, three hundred million Aurum? Or three hundred billion?"

"No, it is just three hundred Aurum."

After Shijima repeated, he put three 100 Aurum coins on top of the table as if to establish what he said further.

“This much.”

As Akira’s expression slowly turned into pure bewilderment, Shijima thought that he was close to succeeding and made the push to seal the deal.

“I know that you don’t like being looked down on, so this negotiation is basically the opposite of that.”

Shijima then said with a livelier expression as if to entice Akira.

“I know people say there is nothing more expensive than free stuff, but that is a huge lie. As expected, free stuff is cheaper than having to pay, you see, there is something cheaper than free. There are things that would lose their original value by putting a cheap price tag on them, you know?”

People’s actions do not always coincide with the rule of law. Some actions were not to be committed, not because it was written in a book. Rather, it was common sense not to do so. When a law gets enacted with a fine in place, it is declaring a price tag for said offences. People’s perception of such offences might shift from common sense not to commit, to monetary acceptance – they could do so as long as they could pay the fine. As such, more of such offences might take place, especially if the fine was cheap.

“Even after all you’ve done against the Lion Steel Company, you can get out scot-free only by paying 300 Aurum. Don’t you think it’s an excellent offer to mock them? You will also be able to have a peace treaty with them, you know? Isn’t it just perfect?”

Shijima believed that no one was insane enough to refuse such an offer. Even though he offered with a lively attitude, he was trying his best to hide his desperation. Shijima knew his words were nothing but cheap trickery. If Akira were to refuse, he had no other way he could think of to convince him.

“Hmmm, but still…”

Seeing Akira mumble, Shijma's voice started to tremble.

"I-Is there something that you don't like?"

"Not really. It's just… let's leave me aside for now. Do you think they will be okay with me mocking them like this? Don't they need to convince their men for this deal?"

"Ahh, I see, about that. Don't worry. In the end, this offer is just for the company to keep up appearances. If you accept, they can make a public statement, stating that you paid a sum of money to form a peace deal. They will definitely not state the exact amount of money that you paid. Those who don't know the details would naturally assume that you have paid a huge sum."

"…Is that so? Is that how things work?"

"Yeah, it is as simple as that… But well, as expected, they wouldn't want you to go around leaking the amount you've paid. I'm sure they'll bring that up later. To keep it a secret. But that would be a different negotiation at a different time. The only thing that they asked me to do is this… So, what do you think?"

Akira hummed for a bit before finally nodding.

"Alright, should I just transfer the money? Because of what had happened, it has become extremely difficult for me to carry around this small of an amount… I did live out in the wasteland for quite some time after all… Wait, in the first place, where should I transfer the money to?"

Shijima immediately pointed at the three hundred Aurum on top of the table and offered it to Akira. He wanted to strike before Akira could change his mind.

"I'll give this to you, so you can pay it right here, right now."

Akira's expression immediately turned serious as he shook his head.

"No, if I'm going to pay, I will do it properly."

Shijima sighed deep inside his heart after watching Akira's problematic side come up. However, to not sour his mood, Shijima decided to let Akira do as he pleased. He took out his information terminal and told Akira where to transfer the money.

"Transfer it to this address, you don't mind if it's my account, right? Since I'm the negotiator from their side this time."

"It's fine."

Akira took out his own information terminal and completed the transfer. Once he received notification that the transfer went through, a peace treaty between Akira and Lion Steel Third Ward branch was formed.

Shijima was tottering as he was leaving Sheryl's base. Fatigue immediately struck him in one go after he had concluded the deal with Akira. The whole time, he felt like he was walking through a minefield. The feeling of elation from being able to get out alive supported his shaking legs as he returned back home.

For a negotiator, who had successfully concluded his deal with a highly dangerous opponent, Shijima was extremely gloomy. He knew he had gotten lucky. That he was able to handle it just fine this time. However, if there was a second time, there would be a third, fourth, and so on. Thus, Shijima had no confidence that he would live if he was asked to do something like this again.

For now, he decided to not think about it as he heaved a huge sigh and waded through a portion of the slums which had been turned into a mountain of rubble.

After Shijima left, Akira gave Sheryl a brief explanation before he left the base to head back home. He informed Sheryl that he had made a peace deal with the third ward branch, but did not share that he had to pay 300 Aurum to do so. Hearing that, Sheryl sighed in relief.

Once Akira arrived back home, he put his equipment down and stretched his body.

“I’m finally back.”

The feeling of finally being home hit him. He was finally able to relieve the tension he felt, which latched onto him during the days when he was aiming to kill Chloe. The feeling of freedom was overwhelming.

Even Alpha was smiling happily as she said.

“It is indeed great. Since you have made peace with Lion Steel, there’s no need to worry about ambushes and you can take a good rest… But still, it was rare for you to be willing to make a compromise like that. It was quite unexpected of you.”

During his negotiation with Shijima, Akira was asked not to say anything about the amount to outsiders. He easily agreed to this, which took Alpha by surprise. Akira simply gave a soft smile and explained.

“Well, I don’t want any more trouble than this. It might be weird for me to say this after going through everything, but it would be really troublesome to have Lion Steel staring at my back all the time. So, I am least willing to make that much of a compromise.”

Everything he said were all his honest feelings. However, it was also true that such a conclusion was reached only because of his conversation with Shizuka beforehand. Had he not lowered his fist before he negotiated with Shijima, Akira might have used this as a reason to bring it down.

On top of that, the 300 Aurum price tag played a small role in changing his heart.

That 300 Aurum was a small amount for him right now. At the same time, it was the same amount he first received after he officially became a Hunter.

On one hand, it was a small amount of money, but on another, it was the first amount he had earned through risking his life. The mere fact he was able to form a peace treaty with a large company like Lion Steel filled him with mixed emotions. A conflicted feeling of accomplishment.

“I see. Either way, being able to avoid any unnecessary conflict is a good thing. We can now just wait patiently until your front-line equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry arrives.”

“You’re right.”

Right at that time, a notice from the Hunter Office reached his information terminal. When Akira read through the content, he could not help but knit his eyebrows.

“Bounty target notice, it says that it’s a notice for a new bounty target…?”

Akira told himself that it should not have anything to do with him as he slowly read through the notice.

The new bounty target was not Akira. However, he was slightly surprised to see the name written being someone he knew.

__*__*__*__

Yesterday, around the time when the city officers, including Inabe, were receiving an explanation from the Lion Steel company about what had happened, Yanagisawa was not in the city. He was staying inside a particular room in the Seranthal building back in Mihazono ruin.

“If you’re done with your investigation, it would be great if you can deliver my agreed-upon payment already.”

“Very well, as I have promised, here is your reward.”

Seeing Olivia declare with a nod, Yanagisawa was smiling, satisfied.

Yanagisawa was helping Olivia in her investigation. Everything from slowing down the Kugamayama City Management’s reaction to allowing Akira to stay near the city. Naturally, the huge battle that took place was also part of the investigation as well.

And as payment, Yanagisawa was to be given a certain piece of information.

Yanagisawa, who was smiling happily up until now, suddenly turned solemn.

“Now then, I want to get information about the people who are working together with those AIs.”

“That would be rejected.”

Yanagisawa tensed up; his face turned stern.

“…What do you mean? That’s not what you had promised.”

Yanagisawa’s voice was filled with intimidation, enough to freeze even veteran Hunters in the vicinity.

Even so, Olivia was not bothered by it at all.

“I agreed to share information with you, but I’ve never said that I will share everything we know. The quality and the amount of information that we’re willing to share depends on how well you did your part.”

“…I’m pretty sure I worked pretty hard back there.”

“That does not concern us. Our company is willing to adapt our decision depending on the current situation. Since we were forced to share national military-grade information with someone outside the company, that alone took away most of your achievements.”

Yanagisawa had no other choice but to withdraw after Olivia stated such a thing to him. He then carefully chose his words to ask her.

“Then, how about you tell me what I am allowed to ask considering my contribution to your investigation?”

“That will also be rejected. The method that we use to decide the value of information is also a form of information. Moreover, not giving you the information that you’re looking for can also be interpreted as giving more information than what you’re asking for. That would mean paying more than what you deserve.”

Yanagisawa scratched his head, he understood Olivia's argument. If he kept asking questions regarding what information he could get, Olivia might treat it as a part of his payment, which would inevitably cause him to spend his achievements. Yanagisawa understood that doing this might lead him to end this rare opportunity without being able to get any valuable information.

"Then just tell me if those AIs have people working with them around here… No, right now, in the deeper part of Kuzusuhara ruin… No, do those AIs have someone working under them who is strong enough to go to the deeper section of Kuzusuhara ruin? Not on the route made by Kugamayama city. No, scratch that, can you recognize those people? Wait, no, can you find any individual with over 90% chance?"

"Yes."

Yanagisawa's expression grew even sterner.

[So there are, huh…! And they must be pretty powerful! Did those AIs strike some kind of deal with high-ranking Hunters who are coming to Kugamayama city lately? But Hunters are not allowed to go too deep into Kuzusuhara ruin. We made use of it being an area under Tsubaki as an excuse… Did they break through all the restrictions we have set up?]

"Can you tell me their name?"

"No."

Yanagisawa could not hide his shock.

[So, she won't even tell me their name, huh!? Does that mean this person is very important to the old-world Lion Steel company? Is it their patron? Wait, it might be someone from the current Lion Steel company. Since Olivia's negotiation with representative Alice went well, they might have made information regarding that person a secret…? No, that can't be. If it is connected to the current Lion Steel company, the number of people working with those AIs would increase significantly. Telling me the names of their important employees would be extremely valuable information. Is that why she refused?]

Yanagisawa did not know how many more questions he could ask. With that in mind, he carefully chose his next question.

“In that case, give me the current picture of just one person that satisfies my conditions. You can zoom out as much as you want with that person in the middle. Well, do so till you can show that picture to me.”

If Olivia refused, then Yanagisawa must have made a fatal mistake in his estimation. However, even if he exhausted all his achievements with this one request, it would give him enough information to readjust his next moves. Yanagisawa concluded as he waited for Olivia’s reply.

“Certainly.”

Olivia then showed a 3D image in front of Yanagisawa, but the person in that image was not someone that Yanagisawa expected at all.

“This person… She’s from Katsuya’s…?”

It was the picture of someone who was in Katsuya’s faction, Airi, taking an aim at Akira.

__*__*__*__

There were few from Katsuya’s faction who agreed to join Chloe’s side. They acquired powerful equipment thanks to the funds provided by Chloe. However, they were rallied under Airi due to their local network and not the Lion Steel company’s third ward branch. Due to their strong desire to kill Akira, just like Airi, it was easy for her to take over the local network, and command them.

After Airi was done gathering allies, she quickly left Kugamayama city using the opening created when Akira and the others started fighting under the thick jamming smoke.

Inside Airi’s enhanced vision, Alias pouted her lips as she stated.

“I’m pretty sure that our original agreement was not only for you to gather manpower, but also to provide him with support.”

“Absolutely not. There’s no reason for me to help the person who killed Katsuya. At least I’m holding myself back from attacking him.”

According to her contract with Airi, Alias even had the permission to interfere with her self-identity. Even so, Airi could still refuse Alias’ request due to her deep-seated hatred.

Alias sighed.

“It can’t be helped then, but you should do the rest properly as per our contract.”

“I know.”

Airi had not been turned into Alias’ remote terminal even when the latter had the ability to alter Airi’s self-perceived identity. Alias knew this had something to do with Airi’s deep-seated hatred. Therefore, Alias had to be careful when dealing with matters related to it. For now, since she could not do much about it, she decided to just let it slide.

⎯⎯⎯*⎯

After Shirou returned to his hideout, he quickly proceeded to analyze the data that he gathered in the slums. Not only did the data confirm Tsubaki’s and Olivia’s presence, but it also held the key to defeat those giants back in the slums. He hurriedly checked the data to see if he could extract any other important information from it.

However, without the help from an old-world AI like Alpha, and without access to Sakashita Heavy Industry’s facilities, he needed more time to analyze it. Even so, he was able to process the data at a relatively good pace.

In the middle of processing, he received information about a new bounty target.

“Lion Steel has put up a bounty for someone again, huh? Oh? It’s for a group of Hunters with someone by the name of Airi leading that group, huh…”

The reason for this bounty was because the group had abandoned their contract with the Lion Steel company. Seeing that, Shirou frowned and mumbled.

“Contract? I bet it’s about attacking Akira, right? So, those who abandoned their accepted request will get a bounty on their head, huh? But I’m pretty sure the third ward branch has already made peace with Akira though…”

It was indeed as Shirou had thought. The third ward branch did not put up that bounty due to their own will. It was something that Yanagisawa had requested. There was a time lag between when the bounty was placed and when Yanagisawa discovered Airi from Olivia. Yanagisawa did not want to make any unnecessary waves that might cause those from anti-rebuild to notice him, that was why he waited for some time before putting up the bounty.

“Well, I bet the bounty was put up because of something different.”

In reality, Shirou’s guess was spot on. Nonetheless, he simply pushed matters related to this bounty aside and continued analyzing the data.

Not too long after that, once he was almost done decrypting the data, he suddenly froze in shock. He was able to clearly see an image of the girl next to Tsubaki and Olivia.

“Haruka…?”

Shirou knew Haruka.

“Haruka… Why… Are you there…? W-what’s going on?”

Shirou was greatly shaken and confused. The girl in that picture was a friend that he wanted to save. He wanted to save her so much that he was willing to betray Sakashita Heavy Industry. Never would he have imagined her to be somewhere so close.

__*__*__*__

The slums had turned into ruins after the battle. However, renovation and rebuilding were already starting. The heavy construction machines that Inabe sent were working hard to remove the rubble.

Among one of the mountains of rubble, no human nor machine was nearby. It looked completely ordinary, like those around it until it suddenly moved. An arm broke out of the rubble, followed by a human scream. It was Levin.

A moment later, Babalod also emerged. Both were buried under the rubble in the middle of the battle and just woke up after being knocked unconscious. Thanks to the rubble on top of them, they were spared from the energy wave released by the giants.

Babalod lightly scanned the surroundings and sighed.

“I don’t know what’s the situation, but… At least we are still alive.”

“…Yeah, we’re alive… We’re alive?? We’re alive!! We survived!!!”

Levin shouted in delight. His happy voice echoed through the slums. At the very least, until he realized that his debt had just multiplied after his equipment got completely ruined.

Silavin: RIP Levin.

I would actually like to see Akira take on the whole of Lion Steel. Well, we only have like 5 chapters left till we catch up to the raws. Also, this chapter is ~6.8K words!

This is > 1.5x a regular chapter!

Index Next Chapter>>

Rebuild World – Chapter 292, A Summon from Kibayashi

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

After Akira's conflict with the Lion Steel company had come to an end, he was no longer recognized as a monster by Kugamayama city. His bounty was also taken down. He finally returned back to the situation where he could wait in peace until his new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry arrived. That was when he received a message from Kibayashi, to meet him in a particular restaurant on the first floor of the Kugama building.

When Akira arrived, he could see Kibayashi wearing casual clothes sitting at a table. He was waving at him with a wide grin. It seemed like Kibayashi had already ordered food before he had arrived.

"Man, that was another hell of a fight. I was so disappointed when I noticed that you were not going to tear down the city's wall and bring havoc to those within the inner wall. Still, you did use annihilator warheads, and that swarm of giants that came out of nowhere was also interesting. What can I say? You really never cease to amuse me."

Akira looked apathetically at him.

"Yeah yeah, I'm glad to hear that you're happy."

Naturally, Kibayashi completely brushed past Akira's remark and continued.

"Of course! I always knew you would pull it off. But still, to think that you can do that much damage even before you got your new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry. Just what kind of crazy things do you have in mind after they arrive?"

"Nothing. I have no plans on getting caught up in any incident."

In contrast to Akira, who had a curt expression, Kibayashi was smiling like a Cheshire Cat. It was as if he was saying that it would be impossible for you and that he knew the exact reason why that was the case.

Akira sighed it was a rather deep one. He knew he was partially at fault for the previous incident.

"…Putting that aside, you have my thanks for getting me ammo and equipment through Katsuragi. Things would have gotten way out of hand had you not done that. So, I'm really thankful for it."

"Don't mention it. It's not like you're a stranger to me. As long as you do something to amuse me with the things I send you, it's all good."

Akira did not want to get into a situation that would amuse Kibayashi. His emotions were in full view on his face, which had turned sour. Unfortunately, that only served to amuse Kibayashi even more. Akira sighed once more and decided to put that aside for now. He changed the subject.

"But still, how did you get those annihilator warheads? It's not something that you can get your hands on easily, right? I was still recognized as a monster by the city back then. Normally, no one would think it was acceptable to give me that kind of ammo, no?"

"Ohh, about that. I was also surprised."

“You were…? But weren’t you the one who provided me with those annihilator warheads?”

“Well, that statement is partially true. To be more precise, it wasn’t exactly me. I’m sure you know about those annihilator warheads very well, since you shot a few yourself, those warheads packed a lot of firepower. If it’s only me, I would never be able to get those for you no matter how hard I try.”

“…Then, how did you get them for me?”

Akira looked at him in confusion while Kibayashi’s smile widened.

“Since it’s not something that I can get you, myself, it just means that someone else pulled some strings behind the scenes. Considering your situation back then, I bet that person wanted you to shoot those warheads at the city’s inner wall. I don’t know who they are and why they did that, but one thing is for certain, they knew that those warheads would end up in your possession. Well, I bet that’s their main goal.”

“So basically… Someone got those warheads for me hoping that I would use them to attack the city’s inner wall?”

Akira could not hide his surprise while Kibayashi continued to elaborate on his hypothesis of what might have happened.

“Well, this is nothing but just my guess. My original plan was to make you wait until equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry arrived. At least wait and hide long enough to get your equipment before you actually start fighting. The reason why I provided you with equipment and ammo is so that you don’t get desperate and do something reckless. I even told the city that it was for the sake of holding you back as an excuse. When you get your new equipment, I plan on announcing the precise time you’ll attack the city so that the city can prepare itself. I was even anticipating someone from the Nationalist offering to help you. That would no doubt result in a bigger fight. But before that came to fruition, someone managed to foist those annihilator warheads through the delivery I had set up and…”

If this unknown person's plan came to fruition, that battle would have been so big that it completely obliterated both sides. Nothing outside the inner wall will be left after such a fight. However, seeing how Kibayashi was excitedly talking about destruction and mayhem, Akira could not help but get weirded out. Akira knew he was the reason why Kibayashi could come up with such crazy ideas. After all, he was the one who started it, so he could not blame Kibayashi for it. Thus, Akira spoke up to change the subject.

"By the way, you're actually a part of City Management, right? Is it really okay for you to do something like that?"

"Hm? If you're talking about the method I used, nope. It was absolutely not okay. No matter what the reason, I gave access to annihilator warhead to someone who was officially recognized by the city as a monster. It won't be strange if City Management decided to put a bounty on my head."

Akira was exasperated after hearing this. He then tilted his head and asked Kibayashi a question.

"So, it's not okay, huh… Then why would you do that? Did you get fired or something?"

"Nope, as a matter of fact, I got promoted."

"…What? How? Why?"

"Regardless of what I did, the incident did come to a rather decent conclusion. Though I did provide you with annihilator warheads, you didn't fire it towards the city. Also, it had allowed you to defeat those giants, which has helped reduce the damage to the city."

"And it's fine just because of that?"

"Yup, exactly. Organization-wise, the process and method I have used would never be in their guidelines. Rather, everyone would be warned of how dangerous my actions were. So, my actions can't exactly be seen in a good light just because the results were great. However, it must be stressed that if I were to go by the book, and the results were deemed a failure, would my actions not be pointless? Doubly true when failure causes a huge loss.”

It was a very pragmatic way of thinking, in the end, Kibayashi was able to deal well with someone as dangerous as Akira and the damage to the city was kept at a minimum. Or at the very least, that was the evaluation of City Management toward Kibayashi. Officers who kept their hands off this matter up until now could say anything they wanted, but in the end, the results spoke for themselves. None of their sharp comments could change the final evaluation. Neither could they fault Kibayashi for the damages.

Meanwhile, City Management did not want to lose someone competent in dealing with dangerous individuals such as Akira. Thus, considering that something similar might happen again in the future, the evaluation of Kibayashi’s actions tilted in his favour. The fact that he was able to suppress and resolve the situation weighed more heavily than the fact that he supplied Akira with items that might cause considerable damage to the city. Not to mention his eagerness to push for such provisions were seen as decisiveness.

In the case of Hikaru, her ability also got praised by City Management. They considered her to be competent in dealing with Akira as well. Thus, City Management had also decided that in the case something similar happened again in the future, they would first go to Hikaru to handle it.

Food that Kibayashi had ordered beforehand started to be placed on the table. Before they started eating, Akira asked another question.

“Well, the food is here, so let’s get to the main subject right away. I’m sure you did not call me here just for some silly banter, right?”

“Sure. The house that you’re living in right now, it is still the same house that I introduced you to in the past, right?”

“Yes, why?”

“Sorry, but can you move to somewhere else?”

“…Sorry?”

Akira thought that Kibayashi had called him here to talk about some business connected to Kugamayama city. Therefore, this request completely caught him off-guard. Seeing how Akira’s facial expression twisted into something he anticipated, Kibayashi laughed merrily and continued.

“Today’s meeting is for my personal business, you see. Had I called you as a staff of City Management, I would have told you to come to one of the restaurants on the upper floors. It’s just too expensive for me to go there on my own dime. Ahh, but if you want to go there now, I don’t mind.”

“No, it is just that what you said came out of the blue. Why are you suddenly asking me to move out of my house?”

“The housing agency came crying at me, you know? Asking me to get you to move out to somewhere else.”

“Ahhh… I see.”

Even Akira, who was usually dense, was able to understand why that was. After all, he got into a fight with Lion Steel, which had completely flattened a portion of the slums. As expected, no housing agent would want the area under their management to be the next battleground for such a battle. It was not that hard for Akira to understand why they would be in tears.

“They’re willing to pay the expenses for your move. Well, I do have a good relationship with them, that’s why I brought it up. Though it’s not like I’m forcing you to move out. It would nonetheless be of great help if you were to move out to somewhere which would not cause any trouble.”

“It’s not like I’m refusing, but what will be the outcome if I refuse?”

“Well, it’s not like we can do anything about that, right? There are not that many people who have the courage to live next to you. So, I bet they would start cutting their contracts. The housing agency won’t dare try to evict you by force. So, I’m sure that the most that would happen is the housing agency crying to sleep every night while they await bankruptcy.”

“I-I see…”

Naturally, Akira would turn hostile if he was harshly ordered to get out. Similarly, he would feel guilty if they came at him, pleading while crying. Kibayashi noticed his feelings of guilt and made use of that opening.

“It’s not like you have any grudges against the housing agency, right? So just be nice to them and move to somewhere else. In the first place, that housing area is originally meant for Hunters with Rank 30 and below, you know? It’s no longer suitable for you to keep living there. If you’re willing to move out, I can at least help to find another place for you.”

Akira gave up and softly sighed.

“Alright.”

“That’s great then! In that case, you can sign here.”

Kibayashi then pulled out a document. Akira did ask Alpha to check the contents. Once he received confirmation that the document was okay, he signed it. Now that he had Akira’s signature, Kibayashi returned the document to his bag and smiled.

“We have a deal then. With this, others’ evaluation of me will go even higher.”

“What does me moving out have anything to do with their opinion of you?”

“It’s complicated. It has something to do with the inner workings of City Management. I can’t really say it to an outsider. But well, since it’s not like we’re strangers, I don’t mind telling you. But in exchange, make sure to not cause any trouble and just move out, alright?”

Akira was indeed curious about what lay under Kibayashi’s smile. Considering that he had already signed the papers, Akira gave a nod.

“Alright, so, why?”

“There is actually a plan to build up a second wall. Well, to be more precise, that plan had already been around for quite some time now. However, due to unforeseen circumstances and other priorities, it had been delayed indefinitely.

But after the previous incident, Kugamayama city suddenly received a huge sum of money from Lion Steel. It was to reimburse for the losses caused by that battle. Because of how dangerous it was, the number of people who wish to get into the inner wall suddenly shot up, so the plan immediately got pushed forward.

That battle caused considerable damage to the lower district, but the area inside the inner wall was unharmed. In other words, the populace started to understand the price of safety. Many had previously thought that living within the inner wall was nothing but a status symbol. They thought that reputation aside, living in the lower district was safe enough.

Now, these people are flusteredly trying to move inside the inner wall. Thanks to that, the land prices inside the inner wall skyrocketed. It’s quite extreme.

There were even people who were living within the inner wall who got kicked out to make space. Well, granted that they were barely qualified to be inside in the first place.

Anyways, even if we try to make more houses to accommodate the newcomers, in the end, it is surrounded by a wall, so the available land would not increase no matter what we do. Some demanded to build vertically, but there’s a limit on how tall the buildings can go. That’s why, by building a second wall, everything can be solved.”

“Ohhh, I see.”

“So basically, we will get the lower district surrounded by a wall as well, but naturally, once the wall is erected, land prices within that wall would jump up. Although it’s still in the planning stage, they’re already securing lands that are highly likely to be chosen.”

Kibayashi paused for a bit and smiled.

“So that’s where you come in. Except for you living there, the area where you’re living is actually a pretty good area.”

As expected, that was enough of a hint for Akira.

“Ahhh, I see now.”

The request for Akira to leave was because the housing agency wanted the land under their management to be chosen. Furthermore, City Management wanted to avoid having Akira inside the second wall. Therefore, Kibayashi, who managed to get Akira to peacefully leave, would be better appreciated both by City Management and the housing agency.

Kibayashi broke out his trademark amused smile as he said.

“So there, you have it. Well, since they’re willing to pay for the moving-out expense, you can build yourself a luxurious home with that amount.”

“Alright alright… Hm? Wait, build? Not rent?”

“Yeah, you can build your own house. Just to let you know, I bet there’s no housing agency around here willing to rent property to you. I’m sure you know the reason, right?”

Since Akira knew why, as expected, he could not think of any counter-arguments. He just bitterly smiled with a troubled expression. In contrast, Kibayashi was still smiling as usual as he continued.

“Don’t worry. Although their cases are not exactly the same as yours, many Hunters have gone through what you are going through. As I promised, I will help you find a new home, so I will at least tell you how to deal with your current situation.”

“Well, thanks, I guess.”

There was a tint of irritation in Akira’s voice, but even so, Kibayashi’s smile still stayed the same.

Kibayashi advised Akira to build his own home on the outskirt of the city. It was the common choice taken by Hunters who could no longer live inside the city due to certain reasons. Naturally, the condition for this was the Hunters' relationship with the city, which had to at least be amicable. Not strained enough for the city to issue a military hunt if the Hunters got close. At the same time, these Hunters must be strong.

The Hunters must be strong because the outskirts were not a safe place. There were monsters from the wasteland and robbers from the slums. Thus, the Hunters who were in this situation had to be strong enough such that those monsters and robbers posed no problem to them. As a matter of fact, they could even add security value to the area around where these Hunters lived.

Although they had to pay security to guard the house while they were off to hunt for relics or monsters, it was not that different from when they lived inside the city. In the city, they still had to pay for the security of their homes. This deposit would be paid to private security companies, which would be held responsible for keeping the area where their houses were safe.

When an individual hired a group of guards, there were cases where they got along and performed really well. Some formed a new private security company, which would contribute to the long-term safety of the area around their houses. As the safety level increased, others would naturally flock there. The price of land would naturally increase, and the economy of the area would develop.

After it reached a certain standard, eventually, that area would be recognized as a new portion of the lower district of the nearest city. When it reached that point, the original Hunters who first started establishing their homes there would be recognized to have contributed greatly to supporting a new economic area. This would be reflected in their track record, which in turn would allow them to rent a house in the city again – if they wish, of course.

Furthermore, Kibayashi recommended Akira to use those from Sheryl's gang as his guards. That way, there was no need to start a new private security company from scratch. It was already known to be an organization formed under Akira's support. Thus, it had enough power to keep an area safe even within the slums. Furthermore, it was connected to Inabe, a city officer. It was a perfect choice. Meanwhile, before his new house got completed, he could live in Sheryl's base.

After listening to Kibayashi's advice, Akira left and went to Sheryl's base. As expected, Sheryl was extremely happy when she heard about this plan. Her smile was dazzlingly bright as she said.

"Of course! Just leave it to us! We can take on the guard duty and we're more than happy to have you live inside the base. To be honest, I don't mind if you use this base as your new home, you know? You can pick any room that you want. We'll empty it for you. We can also change the layout of the base if you want…"

"Thank you for your offer but it's alright. As expected, I want to have my new house properly built somewhere else."

"I see, In that case, how about next to this base? It'll be convenient to have it nearby."

"…I will carefully ponder it over. I will also have to think carefully about the blueprint for the house as well…"

"Indeed. It's not like you can just change the layout once it's built and you find something unsatisfactory. I think it's best to take your time to plan it out before deciding."

The longer Akira had to plan, the longer he would have to stay in her base. That was why Sheryl carefully and fervently encouraged him with her charming smile.

"You're right. I will take my time to think about it. I need to think about how much money I have to set aside for this as well… Ah, by the way, Sheryl. If Viola is around, tell her to come and meet me. There's something I need to talk to her about."

“Of course!”

Sheryl was not really sure how his expenses would have anything to do with Viola. Nonetheless, she quickly called Viola over. Since Viola had something to do in the base at that time, she quickly came over to see Akira.

“Akira, long time no see. I heard you have something to talk to me about.”

Viola came and smiled amicably at him as she spoke. However, her expression was slightly tense.

Akira had almost killed her after she got him involved in an incident in the slums. It was after she negotiated with him, that he agreed to spare her life in exchange for helping Sheryl’s gang.

The previous time she met Akira was back in Mihazono ruin, when he threatened her to tell him about Chloe’s whereabouts. To repay her for the information, he stated that he would not regret sparing her life. Before he left, he reminded Viola, to hope that Chloe was really there.

Viola had no idea if Akira was able to find Chloe with the information she gave him. If he was not able to, that might be the end for her. Akira might kill her right now. Although it was now removed, Akira had a 50 billion Aurum bounty on his head and even tried to kill a member of the founding family of the Lion Steel company. Though no one knew for sure if he was the one who did it, Chloe’s death was already widely known. Akira was someone who would not hesitate to kill when he decided to. It was regardless of who that person was. Naturally, Viola could not maintain her usual calm in front of such a person.

However, Akira did not notice how she felt as he casually asked Viola.

“Say, Sheryl is basically indebted to me, right? If I’m not mistaken, it’s about me being a Hunter supporting her gang. Furthermore, you’re helping the gang to repay that debt. So, about that, how much of that debt is left? A rough approximation is enough.”

Hearing his question, Viola sighed in relief as her usual smile returned.

“Let’s see, probably somewhere about 50 billion Aurum?”

“50 billion, huh…”

That amount was the highest Viola could come out with which she would not get Akira to be suspicious. At the same time, it was also to push Akira to keep sparing her life so that she could help Sheryl’s gang repay the debt.

Although Sheryl did think that amount was a little exaggerated, she did not say that outright. She only sent an easy-to-notice questioning glance at him to let Akira know.

However, since Akira was rather inept in that kind of thing, and with it being the same amount as his now-removed bounty, he did not question it at all. He simply declared.

“I see. Well, Sheryl, considering all the things that I put your gang through during my conflict with Lion Steel, let’s take it that we’re even. You don’t need to pay me back anymore.”

Sheryl and Viola were equally surprised to see Akira casually let go of such a huge sum. He then continued.

“As for the debt that you have for me backing your gang, well, considering that your gang will guard my house soon and with other things like investment for the relic shop, what do you call that, again? Stock? We can call that even as well. I hate having to deal with debts and stuff like that.”

After hearing that, Sheryl’s surprised expression quickly turned into a big smile. In a sense, that debt was her only connection with Akira. If it was taken away, she would have felt more anxious than happy. However, with Akira mentioning about guarding his new home as well as investing in the relic shop, it meant that they were still connected. This helped relieve her anxiousness. It also allowed her to know that Akira believed that she had been a great help during his fight with the Lion Steel company. This made her on cloud nine.

“Of course. Akira, thank you very much. I will be in your care in the future as well.”

“Yeah, I’ll be relying on you. Uhh, now that matters with you are done, next would be Viola.”

“S-sure, what can I help?”

The reason why Akira let Viola live was so that she could help Sheryl repay that huge debt to Akira. Now that Sheryl’s debt was gone, as expected, Viola could not hide her unease.

“I brought up what you owe to me back then when I asked for information about Chloe’s whereabouts. I did that because I didn’t have money back then. But now that I have money, as I thought, it’s better for me to repay you that way, right?”

“…I’m pretty sure I did say that it would at least cost a few million Aurum. It might be with a few more zeros though, do you remember?”

“I do. If it’s only a few hundred million Aurum, I can pay you. Depending on how many zeros you add, I might still be able to pay for it.”

Akira really did have that much. Lion Steel did not raise any issues when it came to his compensation for what he had lost in that battle. Thus, it was processed quickly. The whole thing included all ammunition used, his new equipment and the bike that he had lost. It all totalled to 20 billion Aurum.

Representative Alice stated to Akira that the Lion Steel Eastern District Main Branch would compensate for all the losses from that incident. Naturally, Akira did not expect them to just simply pay 20 billion Aurum without saying anything. This just reminded him how powerful these so-called large companies were.

Akira did convey his thoughts on compensating Shirou back the amount. He asked Shirou if it was better for him to return the 16 billion Aurum back. However, instead of getting told that he could just return the money, Shirou got angry at him. Shirou warned Akira that he should prioritize his request, just like what their original deal was.

Thus, Akira was able to get the money to pay for Viola's information. Considering that he had to build his new home, he thought that it was better to pay for the information first. Although his housing options would be limited if he had to pay more than 10 billion Aurum to Viola, he believed that paying for that information took priority since it was accurate.

"So then, how much is it?"

Viola winced back. The fact that Akira brought that up meant that there was a high chance he would actually pay with money. Viola at least knew that much. However, if he paid with money, it would mean that the thing Akira had put up as collateral would be returned. Namely, the thought of not regretting sparing her life.

On the other hand, if she said some impossibly huge sum just to make sure Akira would not be able to pay it, he would see through her intentions. Otherwise, Sheryl would point it out. That would definitely worsen her situation.

Viola then smiled with her usual mysterious smile as she said.

"…But before that, I want to ask you a question first. How much value did my information provide compared to my debt to you? Back then, you told me to hope that you would find Chloe there, nothing more. As I said, Chloe was actually there, right? So, with that information being correct, we need to first admit the value of that information. So then, how much is it valued?"

"Hmmm, let's see…"

Akira pondered. Seeing that, Viola's smile widened. However, it was only from the outside, on the inside, she got even more tense. Akira eventually made his decision.

“If Sheryl asks me to dispose of you, I will at least ask for the reason first and think about it before actually disposing of you, I guess? After all, it is thanks to your information that I was able to find Chloe.”

Viola felt like she was freed from shackles when she heard those words. It meant that Sheryl would no longer be able to simply decide her life and death. Viola could not help but to leak out an honest smile.

“In that case, that is good enough for the information. That was our agreement back then, so I don’t need you to pay me anything.”

“Is that so? But you did ask me if I can pay it or not… So wouldn’t money be better…?”

Seeing Akira uncertain, Sheryl intervened with a smile.

“Akira is right, money is better. If you’re holding yourself back because of how expensive it is, the gang would help pay it too. You don’t have to worry about it. Moreover, we can also ask Inabe-san if need be…”

Sheryl was thinking of disposing Viola once she was done with her. Now that her debt to Akira was mostly gone, she did not see any issue with getting rid of Viola considering she no longer had a need for her.

With a Hunter as powerful as Akira, who would go as far as fight against a company like Lion Steel, there was no longer any need to have Viola handle relationships with other organizations.

If Akira resolved this matter with money, then he would really have no reason to keep Viola alive. That was why Sheryl suggested Akira to resolve the matter with money.

Seeing Sheryl pushing that option, Viola quickly interjected.

“No, that would be a horrible idea. No matter what the reason, it’s not good to turn back on the deal that you’ve made. Trust is extremely important for a strong Hunter. So, it would be horrendous if you did that, you know? Since we made a deal, we need to honour it. If people start questioning your integrity, you won't be able to make deals with anyone anymore, you know? Even if it's a deal that would benefit the other side, they won't believe your words. After all, there's an example of you not honouring a deal in the past. Such a mark would completely tarnish your track record."

Akira understood what Viola was saying. It reminded him of how Shirou refused his offer to repay the 16 billion Aurum. It was a large sum of money to him. Thus, he agreed that if the other party said that there was no need, he should not push it. Besides, keeping it was more beneficial to him as well.

"You have a point, alright, that will be all then."

"Is that so? Well, I'm busy right now, so please let me excuse myself."

Viola smiled, turned around, and left the room. She could hear Sheryl click her tongue behind her. In the end, Viola managed to get through this meeting safely, though, only barely. She was still alive. It was a fact which made her break out a gentle smile in celebration.

Sheryl looked at Akira with objection.

"Akira, was the information from Viola that valuable to you?"

"Hm? Well, yeah, pretty much."

"I see…"

Sheryl smiled and was determined to learn how to gather information to reduce Viola's usefulness to Akira.

__*__*__*__

Akira then returned back home. He enjoyed his last dip in the bath of that house.

With the vacate document already signed, he planned on bringing his stuff to Sheryl's base the next day.

The first time he took a bath after he moved in, it felt extremely luxurious. However, after multiple dips, it felt normal. After he had experienced the more luxurious bath in Sheryl's base, he was now not able to fully appreciate his own bath. Even so, since this would be the last time, he felt a bit saudade having to not be able to take a bath here ever again.

As Akira thought of all that had happened to him up until now ever since he rented this house, he spoke in a contemplative voice.

"But still, a lot has happened since I moved into this house."

Alpha, who was also in the bath together with him, was acting as usual. She smiled at him.

"You can say that again. A lot of things have happened up until now."

"It was one hell of a journey."

"Indeed, it was. But just a bit more. Once your new equipment from Sakashita Heavy Industry arrives, we can finally go to explore our target ruin."

To be honest, Akira was not thinking about that. However, once Alpha mentioned it, he could not help but think about it too.

"…I see, it's finally soon, huh?"

"Yup, it really took a long time. Though, it did not take as long as I had thought it would. What do you think?"

"Hmm, can't really say for sure. Either way, we can only go once I have my new equipment. We still have to deal with Shirou's request as well. Though what we have to do right now is just wait, I wonder when they will actually arrive…"

That was when Akira received a call from Kibayashi. The moment he took that call through Alpha, he could hear Kibayashi's voice being suspiciously uppity.

“Yo there, Akira! I have three pieces of news for you. One bad, one good, one a bit good.”

“…I bet what you mean is one bad news, one really bad news, and one not really good news, right?”

Considering that it was Kibayashi, Akira could not help but get cautious.

“Don’t worry, it’s not that bad. I will start with the good news as proof.”

“Is that so? What is it?”

“The vehicle carrying your new equipment is already somewhere close to Kugamayama city.”

Hearing that, Akira could not hide his surprise. However, that also completely changed.

“So… What is the bad news?”

“It is about the vehicle transporting your new equipment. For some reason, it got caught in an accident and had to stop in the middle of the wasteland. There are still no clear estimates as to when they can continue.”

“Knew that something wrong would happen, seriously…”

Akira sighed. But hearing that, Kibayashi’s voice seemed even happier.

“Don’t get too sad. I still have one more piece of good news, you know? I’m sure you’ll cheer up once you hear it.”

“I hope that is indeed the case, so, what is it?”

“Just because it’s originally for you, doesn’t mean they will hand over your cargo even if you go there yourself to pick it up. Well, those are frontline equipment we’re talking about. They are regulated under very strict rules. So, as I said, even if you go there to pick it up yourself, they won’t hand it over to you. Confirming your identity is not going to help. Even if they are directed to you, the cargo is still owned by Sakashita Heavy Industry. Saying that it is yours will not help."

"So? Where is the good part of this news?"

"Be patient. The good news comes right after this. If you want to get your new equipment immediately, I can arrange it such that you can pick them up yourself. Basically, you will be taking on the role of a transportation personnel. Isn't that great? Well, if it's too much trouble going there yourself, feel free to just wait until they arrive. Tell me, isn't this good news?"

"What will happen to my stuff if I say that I will just wait?"

"They will arrive late, that's all. Though, I can't really say for certain how late they will be. You keep asking me when they might arrive, so I assume you want them as fast as possible, no?"

"…That's true, I'll be counting on you then."

"Of course. Just leave it to me. I will get to work right away. You should also prepare yourself when you go pick them up, alright? Until then, later."

After Kibayashi ended the call, Akira frowned and seemed rather troubled. It was indeed great that he could pick his stuff up himself. However, the fact that an inter-city transport vehicle got stuck in the middle of the wasteland was rather suspicious.

Akira had once travelled in an inter-city transport convoy from Kugamayama city to Zegelt city. At that time, there was also an incident. However, the transport convoy did not stop at all. Therefore, something big must have happened for an inter-city transport vehicle to stop in the middle of the wasteland. Kibayashi's fervent encouragement for him to go there only served to prove his worries.

Alpha made her usual smile as she spoke.

“Let’s hope it’s nothing big. We can prepare as much as we can before going there to pick up your new equipment.”

“…Yeah, let’s do that.”

Akira smiled bitterly. He already knew that his wish would not be granted. It was clear Alpha also shared the same thoughts. Otherwise, she would not have added ‘prepare as much as we can before going’.

Index Next Chapter>>

Rebuild World – Chapter 293, That Akira

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Inside a certain room in the upper district of Kugamayama city, Sugadome, an officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry, was looking solemnly at the person in front of him

“Welcome… Or so I want to say, but is this everyone from the investigation team? Just you? Alone?”

Even in the face of a high-ranking officer from Sakashita Heavy Industry, that man, Maruo, was still completely calm.

“The anti-rebuild is working very hard every day to ensure the survival of the eastern district. As such, we’re always short on people. It’s not easy to adjust our posting, you see. It seems like they had to go through a lot of trouble just to send me here. I hope you can understand.”

“Thank you and I apologize. I know you must be very busy.”

After that short exchange, it had clearly shown their standing toward one another. Sugadome then stepped into the main subject.

“Well then, please start the investigation right away. If you need extra help, we will send some of our men as well.”

“Very well. Ah, by the way, just to make sure, this Shirou-kun, who is mentioned in the documents, do you have any objection if we deal with him ourselves?”

Sugadome squinted his eyes.

“Of course, but please only do so when there are no other alternatives. If you kill him unnecessarily, we will see that as a hostile act toward our company.”

It was a firm warning from one of the five biggest corporations. Everyone in the eastern district knew just how frightening crossing them was. It was not an exaggeration, nor an overstatement. It literally meant picking a fight against one-fifth of the whole eastern district’s economic zones.

Even so, Maruo was completely calm.

“No need to worry about that. Well then, we will start the investigation right away. Please let me excuse myself.”

Maruo slightly lowered his head and left the room. Sugadome saw him off and sighed.

The anti-rebuild had the duty of protecting the eastern district. Among them, there were those who were extremists. They saw everything as minute when compared to the sake of protecting the world.

“…I can only hope that things would get resolved peacefully.”

Acting based on caution did not always go along with being effective. As a high-ranking officer of Sakashita Heavy Industry, Sugadome always reminded himself of that fact. He understood that he had no other choice but to use such people with great caution. Nonetheless, Sugadome still had a migraine whenever he saw how these kinds of people around him continued to increase.

Maruo left Sugadome’s room and walked past Yanagisawa in the hallway.

[That must be Yanagisawa, huh… Well, my priority right now is to investigate Shirou-kun. Let’s put matters related to him for later.]

[An investigator from Anti-rebuild, huh… It seems that I must hasten the plan.]

Though both recognized each other, they did not say anything as they walked past each other.

__*__*__*__

Akira took the camping vehicle that he received from Carol to drive through the wasteland. His destination was where the inter-city vehicle got stuck.

After he spoke with Shizuka and spoke with Katsuragi, Akira prepared as much as he could. Though, as expected, he could not retain his previous bike, the one he bought from Zegelt city. Likewise, he could not get more annihilator warheads.

At the very least, he was able to refresh his supply and do some maintenance for his augmented suit and rifles. With all the supplies that he stuffed into the vehicle, the insides felt stuffy even when only two people were on board. Akira and Shirou.

“Shirou, there’s no need for you to come with me, you know?”

“It’s fine, isn’t it? As per our agreement, I will have you complete my request first after you obtain your new equipment. So, coming with you would mean there will be no need for you to return back to the city first.”

“Yeah. You’re right, but why are you in such a hurry?”

“I’m sorry, but I’m a little desperate right now. But it’s not like I’m doubting you or anything.”

Akira also had something else to do once he got his frontline equipment. Thus, he understood why Shirou would insist on coming along, to make sure Akira would prioritize his request first.

Moreover, it was true that Shirou was in a hurry. He only had 3 days out of the 1 month grace time that Sugadome had granted him. Thus, he could not afford to waste even a single second.

As Shirou re-evaluated his current situation, he heaved a sigh.

"…I didn't even have any spare time to create a negotiation route to Tsubaki like Sugadome had asked. If I return back without having done anything, they will really treat me as a renegade from Sakashita. Say, Akira, if it has come to that, can you please find a way to reserve a place for me in Tsukisada?"

"No."

"Whoah, you don't even need to think about it, huh? Just so you know, I'm pretty amazing. You should take more time to think about it."

"Absolutely not."

Shirou sighed once again since Akira showed no signs of willingness to negotiate. Though, it was just a huge misunderstanding on Shirou's part. Akira actually had no connection with Tsukisada construction; thus, he was incapable of fulfilling Shirou's request.

"In that case then, Akira. How about I focus on creating a negotiation route to Tsubaki and…?!"

Shirou was only saying so jokingly, but he stopped middle-way when he noticed Akira's face twitched.

"…You… Don't tell me you already have a route to contact Tsubaki!?"

"I don't…"

"That's a lie! Then what is with that reaction!?"

“I negotiated with Tsubaki before, that’s all. But that has already been concluded. So, it’s not a lie. I have no negotiation route to Tsubaki.”

“Concluded? Then how are you still alive? Sakashita tried to negotiate with Tsubaki before. After conveying the contents of our offer and its demands, she killed everyone there. This included the negotiator and his escorts. The negotiator even got his whole body sliced into minced meat you know? Well, except for their head.”

Hearing that, Akira was once again reminded of how precarious the situation was back then. His face turned slightly pale.

Meanwhile, on the other hand, Shirou could relent as this was an unexpected opportunity.

“Although the negotiation ended in failure, you were able to still negotiate. Heck, you’re still alive, which means, you do have a route to contact Tsubaki. Please! Help me make a negotiation route to Tsubaki!!”

“No.”

“What? Why?! Does it have something to do with Tsukisada?! If yes, I’m willing to talk with Tsukisada about this…”

“It’s not that simple, alright? Let’s just put this matter for later, the inter-city transport vehicle is coming into view.”

Since the gigantic inter-city transport vehicle was visible from afar, Shirou decided to acquiesce to Akira’s demand and give up for now.

“…I’ll definitely bring this up again later.”

Akira sighed.

“Alpha, Shirou is asking for that… So, what’s the actual situation? Can you find a way to make a communication route to Tsubaki?”

“That will depend on how they define this route. If it’s only a single opportunity to negotiate with Tsubaki without any guarantee for their safety, then yes. But to be honest, I don’t see why we have to do such a thing for him.”

“That’s true.”

As the inter-city transport vehicle was getting closer. Suddenly, a call through the general-purpose communication line reached Akira.

“I am a representative of the private military contractor, Brunkel. Under the agreement with Kugamayama City, Mirukakewa city, and Tarkein city, the area ahead is closed off due to various reasons. I’ll send you the exact area that is closed off. I apologize for the inconvenience, but please take another route.”

“This is Akira, a Hunter. I have some business with the Atlas D2771 inside that enclosed area. I already have permission from Kugamayama city. I will send you the documents, so please check them.”

Akira forwarded the documents. The guy on the other side checked them and exclaimed in surprise.

“I’ve confirmed the documents. So, you’re that Akira, huh? I have things that I need to explain first, so stop your vehicle at the designated location.”

“Sure.”

Akira closed the call and made a bitter smile.

“Welp, it seems like it has come to a point where they recognize me as ‘that Akira’, huh…”

“That just shows how great your track record is.”

“I guess you’re right.”

Alpha said with a smile, to which Akira was only able to agree.

Akira stopped the camping vehicle pretty close to one of the inter-transport vehicles. Its large size was barely able to fit into his view.

Around him, soldiers from Brunkel were patrolling around the closed-off area to secure the inter-city transport vehicle. Akira, for some reason, found them to be strange.

“Alpha, it might be just my imagination, but aren’t they posting more soldiers within the enclosed area instead of around its outskirts?”

“That seems to be indeed the case.”

“Just what is going on…?”

Akira frowned, considering that Kibayashi sent him there with such a huge smile, some kind of incident was bound to happen.

Seeing some men from Brunkel approaching the camping vehicle, Akira stepped out. Those men looked at Akira with interest.

“So, you must be Akira, right? I’ll give you the map information for Atlas D2771. Your stuff should be in there, so you can go to pick them up yourself. I’m sure there’s no need for me to warn you, don’t take others’ cargo, alright? We might suspect you of trying to steal something if you go outside the indicated areas. So, don’t go around entering places. Just only go through the doors that are open.”

“Alright.”

Up until that point, that warning was pretty reasonable. After Akira received the map information, the explanation took a strange turn.

“I don’t mind if you decide to fight against enemies, but as expected, it would be great if you can avoid using annihilator warheads. The damage to the vehicle will be too big and it might damage the other cargo as well.”

For Akira who was there only to pick up his cargo, he did not expect to find words like ‘enemies’ and ‘fight’.

“…What exactly is going on inside the vehicle? Or more like, why did an inter-city transport vehicle get stuck in the middle of the wasteland like this?”

“You didn’t hear anything from Kugamayama city?”

“Yeah, I only heard that the cargo I’ve been waiting for quite a long time got stuck in the middle of transport. I was advised that since it might take a long time to arrive, I should go pick it up myself.”

“I see. In that case, I’m sorry. I can’t tell you anything, I don’t have the permission to do it.”

“It’s fine… in that case, if the situation is really that awful, just tell me what you can tell me.”

The guy tilted his head and hummed before speaking.

“We are here basically to take over the job to close the area around Atlas D2771. Most of the team members present have Hunter Ranks around 60. Though we were offered the job to storm into the vehicle, we refused. It just doesn’t seem to be worth the trouble.”

Basically, there was something dangerous inside the inter-city transport vehicle. It was so risky that a group of Rank 60 Hunters refused to go in. Though Akira was very thankful for that information, it did not change the fact that he was heading there. He knitted his eyebrows at the thought.

“…Thank you for the valuable information.”

“You’re welcome.”

Akira returned back to the camping vehicle. The guy saw Akira off with an amused smile.

As they watched Akira drive his camping vehicle toward Atlas D2771, the men from Brunkel talked about their impressions of him after seeing ‘that Akira’ up close.

“So that was Akira, huh? The Hunter who had a 50 billion Aurum bounty on his head. He doesn’t look that strong so I wonder just how strong he really is?”

“Yeah, that was Akira. I heard that he obliterated a group of Hunters that tried to kill him all by himself. I bet the right amount for his bounty should be way above 50 billion Aurum.”

“I would bet on that as well. You have to consider the fact that he dared to pick a fight against a branch of the Lion Steel company and survived. So, there’s no doubt his bounty should be way more.”

“Also, he’s still young, you know? I bet Hunters who eventually manage to go to the frontlines are just like him.”

“Well, I don’t know all the details but we should just enjoy his fight from here.”

The Hunters from Brunkel were much stronger than any Hunters around the area, and they showed a deep interest in Akira.

The colossal inter-city transport vehicle was so huge that it might change the definition of a vehicle. The ramp that came out from inside it was 10 meters wide and it led up to a height taller than a 3-storey building. It was wide and long enough to give sufficient space for cargo to go in and out of the inter-city transport vehicle. It was guarded by many soldiers at its sides.

Akira stopped the camping vehicle near the upper part of the ramp.

“Shirou, by any chance, can you tell what is going on inside this transport vehicle?”

Shirou raised his eyebrows in surprise.

“You… Don’t tell me you came here without knowing anything? Wait, the information about the lockdown by Sakshita might not have reached Tsukisada yet, huh… I don’t mind telling you but be careful with what I’m going to say. It’s basically secret information. I’m sure you know what will happen if they discover their secret information got leaked outside of the big five corporations of the eastern district.”

“Alright, I’ll be careful. So then, what is going on?”

Shirou hesitated.

[Is this really going to be okay…? It doesn't seem like he is good at keeping secrets or lying. Just like back then when I noticed that he was an agent from Tsukisada, it was easy to judge what he was thinking from his expression. Someone with zero subtleties like him is not suitable as an investigation agent, so just why did Tsukisada send him out? Considering his ability to fight, did Tsukisada send him here because there is high probability combat will be involved in this mission? Is that why he came all the way here to pick up his frontline equipment?]

Shirou got even more confused than before. However, he quickly cut it off there and wrapped it up as Tsukisada construction having its own reasons. Considering how losing Akira here would not help with his goal, Shirou finally decided to tell Akira what he knew.

"…It's not confirmed yet, but it seems like Atlas D2771 is transporting the cube and it got attacked by people who are aiming for it. Although they were unable to repel the attack, they somehow managed to lock the attackers inside the vehicle. The cube itself is still safe while the attackers are still locked inside, even now."

The cube, some people might also call it the seed. It was a device with parts resembling cubes. It was found underground, and if activated, it would bloom like a flower and create something from the old world. These were the reasons why it was called the cube or the seed.

It was thought to be a nanomachine cluster with regenerative capabilities, originally an old-world production device. Rumours say it could create all kinds of things using its supplies from where it was activated. It could create humans, biological living beings, machines, houses, factories, or even old-world cities complete with its own denizens.

In the past, one cube fully rebuilt an old-world military base. That military base then sent out soldiers to clean up the illegal occupants around the area. In other words, clean up people from the current world, and eventually caused significant damage. Though, there were also records stating how those from the Corporate Government had dispatched men to control the situation. They somehow managed to extract the old-world technology used by that military base, which ended up creating more profits than losses.

Thus, it became widely known that if it bloomed uncontrollably, it would turn into a huge problem. Though, if the ones using it were able to accurately predict what it might produce and prepare accordingly, it might turn a problem into a blessing; netting them a huge amount. This was why it was still considered to be a highly valuable relic.

Akira was listening to Shirou's explanation while also listening to extra information from Alpha. This greatly helped him in understanding what he was facing. However, that did not change how dire the situation was as he knitted his eyebrows.

"Say, is it normal for an inter-city transport vehicle to get attacked like this?"

"Well, it would be a biased opinion since I used the opening left behind when the inter-city transport vehicle got attacked to escape. It is actually a very rare occurrence. Rather, it almost never happens. Even if the attackers are capable of damaging the inter-city transport vehicles, it would still be suicidal."

"Then why do the ones that I get involved with always get attacked?"

"There's no way I would know the answer to that. Isn't it simply just because the area under Kugamayama is not normal? I heard that recently, many huge incidents have occurred around Kugamayama city, you know? That is not normal at all."

Akira unconsciously looked away. He knew that he was involved in most of those huge incidents. No one would believe him if he said that he was roped in by pure coincidence. In some cases, he was even the main source of such incidents. That was why Akira inadvertently reacted to Shirou's words.

Shirou noticed that and found it strange.

“…Say Akira, by any chance, were you dispatched here to investigate those huge incidents?”

“…Maybe.”

Since him being an agent from Tsukisada construction was a misunderstanding he wanted to keep, Akira curtly replied.

Shirou did not pursue it any further. Even if all those incidents were related to Akira, he did not have the leeway to care about it at the moment.

“Well then, I’ll go pick up my stuff then.”

“Alright, be careful. If the attackers are really aiming for the cube, they must be strong. Though, it’s kind of redundant to state that since only those with sufficient might would attempt to attack an inter-city transport vehicle.”

“Yeah, it’s not like my aim is to fight them anyway. I will just quickly leave once I get my new equipment.”

Akira prepared himself to go inside the inter-city transport and left the camping vehicle.

Up the ramp, it led into the cargo compartment of Atlas D2771. The squad sent to secure the transport vehicle were securing the junctions that connected to multiple compartments. Akira walked through the cargo sector A7 and eventually stopped in front of a door. He gazed at it as if he was trying to peek through it.

Akira’s information-gathering device noticed what he was trying to do and prioritized its computational power to analyze the information coming from in front of him. Though it reduced the area under its watch, it greatly increased its accuracy. It was to the point that a normal wall would seem transparent to him.

However, Akira could not see through the door.

“It didn’t work, huh? Alpha, can you give me a hand?”

Though he was not able to do it using the power of his information-gathering device, it might be possible with Alpha's help. That was why he asked for her support. Though it would serve as excellent training if he relied solely on his own ability, it would be meaningless if he lost his equipment in the process. Thus, Akira was planning not to hold back. He was willing to rely on Alpha's support whenever necessary.

However, Alpha shook her head and explained.

"Akira, unfortunately, I can't see through it as well. This transport vehicle is divided into multiple sectors with each sector being protected by a powerful forcefield armour. Due to the abnormally high power being discharged to keep up these forcefield armours; information is blocked from leaking out."

"Ahhh, so it is one of those that prevent the propagation of information, huh?"

"Yeah, no matter how much my support increases the power of your information-gathering device, it is still limited. I can only improve the quality of the software and how it processes information. I can't increase the quality of its sensors, which is its hardware. If the sensors can't even pick up signals from the other side due to interference, I won't be able to do anything about it."

"I see, alright then. Please provide me with support for the other parts. No matter what is going on inside the transport vehicle, I really need to pick up my new equipment no matter what."

"Of course! Just leave it to me!"

Seeing Alpha's usual smile filled with confidence, Akira pulled himself together and smiled back at her.

The locked door between the sectors prevented him from going any further. However, Akira already received permission to unlock them. Once he informed the guards nearby that he was going to open the door, a vehicle-wide announcement was made. It warned everyone in the area that the door was about to be opened.

There was fear of the attackers waiting behind that door. Everyone in the area was tense as they readied their rifles, this included Akira. The door slowly opened, and information started to get leaked through the small opening. Akira quickly acted and analyzed whatever he could. Any result was shown in his enhanced vision. He could even see the route that laid in front of him, and fortunately, no enemies were detected.

"…It seems alright. I'm going in."

Akira went through the opened door and into the hallway. Immediately after he entered, the door automatically closed, once again isolating that sector.

As he proceeded deeper, he was ambushed by enemies in the form of a swarm of small multi-legged drones. They were able to freely run along the ceiling, walls, and floor. Some were even capable of flight as they shot Akira with their laser cannons.

However, with his current equipment, they were basically harmless. Akira accurately predicted where their shots were going to land. He easily avoided their barrage and shot them down with charge bullets using his RL2 multi-rifles. The bullets, charged with energy, formed a wall, which annihilated the swarm. The drones did not stand a chance against the might of his bullets and got blown to pieces in a blink of an eye. Nothing was left, except for their remains scattered on the floor.

However, more of them were coming from the front. Worse, they started coming from behind as well, forming a pincer with Akira in the middle.

Akira calmly dealt with them. With two RL2 multi rifles in his hand, he could shoot his front and back at the same time. Without anywhere to escape, the barrage crushed the swarm with no mercy. Even if they were protected by powerful armour, a single charge bullet easily pierces through them. It even blew them up to smaller pieces.

As Akira was shooting down the swarm, they were also shooting back at him. Some of the drones used their defeated counterpart as shields. They managed to survive barely long enough to shoot back at him. Their laser cannons released a concentrated beam of energy that even scorched the air. The beams melted through metal as they went straight for Akira.

However, Akira remained unfazed. He completely saw through where those rays were going and evaded them. Meanwhile, the heated air from the lasers was completely blocked off by his augmented suit's forcefield armour.

The battle only lasted for a few minutes. In that short time, countless lasers and bullets were exchanged in that narrow hallway. Akira, the winner, was completely unharmed. Even his breathing remained steady. Meanwhile, the swarm got completely obliterated.

Even Rank 60 Hunters were not willing to go inside this vehicle. That ambush Akira had just received clearly showed the reason why. However, he handled it flawlessly. As a matter of fact, he seemed to be a bit disappointed. They were weaker than he had expected. Especially when his enemies were aiming for the famous, invaluable cube.

"…Is that it?"

Seeing how he reacted, Alpha smiled and said.

"That's because of my support, so it only amounted to this much."

"Well, you have a point."

Akira did not retort and simply agreed to what she said. Alpha's smile turned softer and kinder.

"You've also gotten stronger."

As expected, after surviving the fight with Lion Steel, Akira had indeed become stronger than before. So much so that even Alpha had to truthfully admit he had done well.

"…I see."

Akira smiled, he seemed happy. He felt both a sense of accomplishment and happiness since before he realized it, he had become strong enough for Alpha to recognize his strength.

His personal strength and his frontline equipment, Akira had satisfied one of the two requirements to go and do Alpha's request. Furthermore, it would not be long before he satisfied the other requirement.

That was when Alpha lightly teased him.

"But Akira, no matter how weak your enemies are, you should not hope to fight strong enemies, right?"

"I know. I also prefer weak enemies. I've been fighting so many strong enemies up until now… It's great to have an easy battle like this from time to time. Alright. Let's go."

Akira smiled bitterly and went deeper.

After he left the hallway, a change suddenly occurred. Some of the scattered pieces leftover melted to form a liquid and started combining into a single object.

This green liquid spread along the floor, consuming any other pieces it made contact with. A large green puddle gathered in one place and started to solidify, as if it was using the metals that it had consumed as materials, eventually, forming a humanoid object.

Once no more liquid was left on the floor, all the wreckage around already got consumed by it. The only thing that remained was a girl formed out of that liquid. It was a young girl clad in an old-world augmented suit. She glanced in the direction where Akira went, and then a moment later, she started running in the opposite direction.

Index Next Chapter>>

Rebuild World – Chapter 294, Shirou's Surprise

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Two groups of Hunters just arrived in the cargo sector A7. This was the sector that had become the only way in and out of Atlas D2771. They came to secure the inter-city transport vehicle and eliminate the attackers. One of the teams was headed by Tatsukawa and Melshia, while the other team was led by Zelos.

Tatsukawa seemed fired up as he heartily laughed.

"Good grief, if only they had hired us to escort the inter-city transport vehicle itself. This would not have happened. Now, they're calling for us when it's already too late, am I right, Melshia?"

"The offer did reach us before, though. In the end, we could not agree on the reward they offered."

"…It did? But well, if we could not agree on the reward, then it was still their fault, right?"

"The offer came in a rush. We were going to do it when it came. I did say that I don't mind accepting it, but you got a little annoyed and demanded a huge amount, remember? Saying something like ‘they should have offered at least this much for interrupting our good time’.”

Tatsukawa finally remembered what had happened after Melshia pointed it out. He was only able to laugh awkwardly as he tried to move away from this topic. Noticing his obvious attempt, Melshia giggled and spoke.

“Well, thanks to that, they eventually agreed to hire us with a huge amount. So, it was not all that bad.”

Tatsukawa quickly decided to ride on the wave she gave and nodded along with her argument.

“R-right!? Alright then, let’s get started! With how much we were offered, let’s do this seriously.”

As Tatsukawa was about to enter the inter-city transport vehicle, Melshia suddenly grabbed and stopped him.

“We’re not done coordinating with Zelos-san’s team yet, so wait for a bit.”

Zelos, who had been listening to their conversation, sighed and changed the subject.

“Are you done now? Well then, about the sectors that our respective teams will secure…”

Zelos’ team and Tatsukawa’s team were hired separately. Therefore, their chain of command was not the same and they were moving separately. To make sure there would not be any conflicts between their teams, including gaps between firepower and contribution to this mission, it was important to discuss everything beforehand.

Of course, they had completed the majority of their discussion before they came here. The only thing that remained was a final confirmation for what was agreed upon prior, and actions taken under certain circumstances. As high-ranking Hunters, Zelos and Melshia were already used to it. Thus, they quickly went through everything and were about to conclude their discussion.

That was when Zelos suddenly added one extra condition.

“I don’t know all the details, but it seems like Akira is inside Atlas D2771 as well. In the scenario we somehow encountered him, I want you to handle the talking. I’m sure you already know that my team has a history with him.”

Back then when Akira still had a 50 billion Aurum bounty on his head, Zelos’ team broke into two factions. The vice-captain, Gelgus, wanted to join the bounty hunt while Zelos was against it. In the end, Zelos could not prevent the faction under Gelgus from splitting up and leaving the team.

Gelgus’ death and his team’s defeat simply showed how Zelos’ prediction about Akira was right. It was unfortunate that both sides could not peer into the future and knew about this outcome. Thus, it could even be said that both sides had their own valid reasons which caused the team to split into two factions. Since they did not split up because of a fight, Zelos still recognized Gelgus as well as those that left the team under Gelgus as his friends. Had Gelgus won against Akira, it was highly likely that the split teams would merge back again. Though, at that point, the leadership would shift to Gelgus.

It was only natural that Zelos would be hostile against the person who had killed Gelgus and destroyed his team. Although they had no wish to harm Akira, and they knew that as Hunters, taking revenge on him would be misplaced vengeance, that did not mean they could just forgive him. As such, Zelos wanted to keep his team away from Akira as much as possible.

Melshia understood that as well. However, she still threw a question to Zelos.

“I can understand what you are trying to say, but that means you’re going to throw this issue at us, right? So, what’s in it for us?”

“If we somehow ended up fighting against each other, you would get involved as well. And I don’t believe Akira is willing to take the trouble of differentiating between our teams. I believe you can prevent that from happening. Well, frankly, I don’t mind either way. I won’t force you to talk to him.”

Now that it was up to Melshia, she hummed for a bit and glanced at Tatsukawa. Meeting her eyes, Tatsukawa casually stated.

“There should be no problems accepting his condition, don’t you think? I’ve also always been wanting to talk to him if I ever get the chance since that day.”

“Well, if you say so, then I don’t mind.”

“Sorry and thank you. Now that’s out of the way, let’s get started.”

After both teams completed their preparations, they stormed the transport vehicle and started securing the insides.

The team under Tatsukawa and Zelos were slowly fighting through the force that attacked the inter-city transport vehicle. Putting aside the level of danger they faced, their job was a simple one. They had to go into each sector of Atlas D2771. Each sector was protected by powerful forcefield armour, and they had to check, kill any enemies that they discovered, and secure the sector before moving to the next sector. They had to do this until they’ve completely secured the whole inter-city transport vehicle. Of course, the attackers would all get eliminated through this process.

Unlike Akira, who was only there to pick up his cargo. The team under Tatsukawa and Zelos were hired to eliminate the enemies inside Atlas D2771. Thus, they had to diligently go through each sector and check every nook and cranny to make sure that no enemies were left.

The main firepower of the team, like Melshia and Tatsukawa, blitzed through the sectors and destroyed the drone swarm. They did this until it was safe enough for the rest of the team to come in. The rest would sweep through the entire sector, checking to see that they did not miss anything.

Afterwards, they would set up a portable barricade to the other hallway as well as do other finer details to secure the sector. Along the route that they had already secured, the rooms were turned into forward-bases, where large amounts of medicine were stocked. This was done so that they could quickly heal any injured member of the team.

Their systematic process was proceeding extremely smoothly. Tatsukawa was even able to smile casually after fighting a swarm of drones.

“That was easy, though they’re quite numerous, they aren’t that strong.”

Although Melshia also had the leeway to smile back at him, she still warned Tatsukawa.

“Danger comes soonest when it’s most despised, you know? You always get ahead of yourself too quickly.”

“No no no, I’m doing better lately though. Back then, I only did that because we wouldn’t be able to succeed unless I got a bit reckless, you know?”

“Well, I wonder about that. Anyway, it’s my job to kick you when you get too carried away, so feel free to do whatever you want.”

Melshia made a half-teasing smile. Tatsukawa only smiled bitterly in response to what she said and apologized

“Sorry, I know I keep causing you trouble. But as I said not too long ago, our team has grown this big and it’s mostly thanks to your leadership and management skill. I have no plan to throw that down the drain now. But don’t worry. If something goes wrong because of you, we can always start again and rebuild it.”

“…Yeah yeah.”

Melshia slightly blushed, Tatsukawa was basically saying that he did not mind losing the team that they had brought all the way here through their hard work if it was for her sake.

“If you really mean it, make sure to not drop your guard. I don’t mind starting from zero again in a new team, but that would be a lot of work, right?”

“Yeah, you’re right.”

As they proceeded to secure the sector, the rest of the team witnessed Melshia’s and Tatsukawa’s flirty exchange. Those two were the spearhead of the team so the rest just exasperatedly ignored them, thinking that it was just as usual.

Tatsukawa’s team, which had secured two sectors and was in the middle of securing the third sector, once again encountered a swarm of the multi-legged drones. Although it was another easy victory for him, Tatsukawa felt something was off. His expression turned solemn.

“…This is strange, Melshia, what do you think?”

“Strange? What’s strange?”

Even Melshia, who was good at reading between the lines, could not understand what Tatsukawa was talking about. Tatsukawa pondered over what he felt and spoke nonchalantly.

“The hallways and rooms are way too pristine. There’s no wreckage left by the drones. Isn’t that weird?”

There was an original escort team that was sent inside to secure Atlas D2771. Thus, there had to be some signs of battle against the attackers. This meant that there should be pieces of the multi-legged drones on the ground, if not, corpses of the deceased team. However, even after they had already gone this deep, they have not encountered anything like that. As expected, Tatsukawa found that to be worrying.

Melshia gave it a bit of thought before explaining a possibility.

“Including the dummies, there are 12 special sectors designed to house the cube inside Atlas D2771. Although that is all that they can share with us since we're basically outsiders, I bet the original escort team, the attackers, and the original suppression team affiliated with the transport knew of the correct location of the cube. So, it is possible there are no leftovers around because the battles only occurred near the sector housing the cube. We might still not be there yet. Or at least, that is just my guess. Do you have any other possibilities in mind?"

"Well, that's a good guess, but…"

Tatsukawa agreed with Melshia that it was a plausible explanation. However, something still felt off and he could not bring himself to accept it like this. His face was still as solemn as before. After a moment of hesitation, he decided to contact Zelos. Normally, the powerful forcefield armour protecting each sector would prevent them from contacting each other, but since they kept some of the doors open, and placed relay devices along the hallways, they were able to reach each other.

Tatsukawa gave a short explanation regarding his worry, and then Zelos replied.

"The situation is the same for us over here as well. The only ones on the floor are the ones that we have defeated. So far, we've only encountered those weak multi-legged drones. We have not found anything that might be from the original attackers."

"I see."

"By the way, have you encountered Akira yet?"

"Nope."

"…Then I'm afraid it is as you feared. Something is indeed not right. Even if Melshia-san's guess is correct, that the attackers were gathered somewhere near the sector where the cube is stored and that these multi-legged drones are only sent for reconnaissance, we've encountered so many of them. Akira and the other Hunters who went in before us must have encountered them as well. So, why don't we find any leftovers from them? Does it mean that Akira did not encounter them? That is highly unlikely."

If it was only them, then it might still make sense. However, considering Akira had gone in before them, things became extremely suspicious. Basically, there was something that they did not know happening inside the transport vehicle. Both Tatsukawa and Zelos proceeded with more caution.

__*__*__*__

Akira continued going deeper into the transport vehicle. He was following the route to the sector where his stuff was located. Although he encountered multiple swarms of multi-legged drones along his way, he was able to deal with them with no difficulty at all.

Akira checked the map, which showed the insides of the transport vehicle and sighed. He had just confirmed that it would take him some time before he could reach sector B28, where his cargo was housed.

“The route they gave us takes a rather long detour, don’t you think? It would be great if they can allow us to use a shorter route.”

After Akira leaked his complaint, Alpha casually stated.

“Well, it’s understandable considering the situation.”

The new equipment that Akira had ordered through Sakashita Heavy Industry was all frontline equipment. Naturally, they were expensive and extremely dangerous. Although there was no need to keep them in a secured sector, as secure as where the cube was kept, they were still located inside a sector that was more secure than the other normal sectors. Such a sector was protected by multiple layers of forcefield armour and was located deep inside the transport vehicle.

However, the attackers were also inside the transport vehicle. To prevent them from escaping outside Atlas D2771, they strengthened the already powerful forcefield armour. Excluding the A7 cargo sector where Akira entered the transport vehicle, there was no other way to get out of the vehicle. Thus, it effectively locked the attackers inside the transport vehicle.

As an outsider, Akira had received limited permission thus, his access was strictly limited. He was not allowed to go into most of the sectors. Furthermore, with strengthened forcefield armour, some of the sectors were even rendered completely inaccessible.

Because of all these factors, although sector B28 was easy to reach from another exit, Akira had to go through a rather long route to reach it.

After Alpha explained all these points, she then elaborated further.

“Most probably, the reason why this inter-city transport vehicle is not moving is because it’s diverting all its energy to fuel its forcefield armour. It no longer has the capacity to accelerate the transport vehicle. I bet they prioritized supplying the forcefield armour protecting the cube, meanwhile, making sure that the attackers are trapped inside as a secondary objective. This way, they could send in a strong team later to secure the transport vehicle and resolve the situation.”

Akira frowned and asked.

“…That strong team you’re talking about… That’s not me, right?”

“Even if someone hoped that you would do that for them, you didn’t receive such a request. So, let’s not worry about it. You just need to pick up your stuff, and get out of here as soon as possible.”

Alpha smiled as she spoke. Hearing that, Akira’s frown vanished and was replaced by curved lips.

“You’re right, let’s just get this over with.”

Akira pushed that thought aside for now and just focused on reaching the cargo sector B28. As he reached the door to the next sector, he readied his rifle and cautiously opened the door. The power forcefield armour turned into a layer that was impermeable to information. Thus, when Akira slightly opened the door, information from the inside of that sector started leaking out. It was quickly analyzed and displayed in Akira’s enhanced vision.

Immediately, he tensed up. There was a signal indicating someone else was nearby.

“Who’s there!?”

Akira raised his voice, prompting a reaction from this unknown person. He rested his fingers on the triggers, ready. With his rifles positioned, he waited for the moment this person jumped out from behind the door. If there was no answer, then Akria would consider that signal hostile. The time limit Akira gave before he began to take the initiative to attack, was immediate once the door was fully open.

But right before the time limit, before the door was fully opened, a voice responded to his question.

“Right back at you, who are you? If you’re not a part of the attackers! Show me your identification code! I will shoot you if you can’t do that!”

Akira glanced at Alpha, so she broadcast using a short-range communication frequency Akira’s identification code, which was provided with the map information he had received. A moment later, the other person also sent back their identification code.

“…It seems like you’re not one of the attackers. Okay. I will step out, so don’t shoot, alright?”

“Alright.”

Akira lowered his rifle. After a short pause, as if they were confirming the situation, the other person stepped out from behind the door. Akira was a bit surprised to see it to be a girl that looked around the same age as him.

The girl also seemed surprised when she saw Akira. She fearfully asked.

“…You… By any chance, are you that Akira?”

“…Just to be safe, which Akira is ‘that Akira’ you’re referring to?”

“The one that had a 50 billion Aurum bounty on him.”

“…Then yes, I am that Akira.”

“I-I see…”

The girl’s conflicted expression obviously indicated that she had regretted showing herself. She did not want to meet someone like Akira, who she did not want to get involved with. Meanwhile, Akira was uncertain as to how he should deal with her.

Eventually, he came to a decision. To just ignore her and walk past her.

That girl’s gaze went back and forth between Akira’s back and the direction where he came from. A moment later, she loped behind him. The moment she caught up with him, Akira asked.

“What?”

“Uhh, uhmm, can I come with you? I don’t feel safe going around alone inside the transport vehicle, so…”

The girl stated that she originally came here together with another team to secure the transport vehicle. However, they were ambushed by the attackers. She got seriously injured and got separated from the rest of her team. Currently, she was in the middle of escaping. Once she explained her situation, she asked Akira for a favour.

“Please don’t misunderstand my intentions. I’m not hoping for you to do my job for me. You can just continue to secure the transport vehicle as per your request and profit from it. I will help during the fight, and I won’t complain about whatever my share of the reward is, so yeah, it’s okay, right? Right?”

“Sorry, I don’t have the leeway to accept an escort request.”

“E-escort? It’s not something like that…”

The girl looked away and awkwardly smiled. She started blabbering, trying to make excuses. Explaining that it was not like she was hoping Akira would be her escort, but her awkward attitude did not convince anyone. Akira simply sighed.

“If you’re going to come along, feel free to do so, but just don’t get in my way.”

“Of course! I will never do something like that! Ah, by the way, my name is Rebecca, nice to meet you.”

“Right, I’m Akira.”

As Akira gave the expected reply to people who just met each other for the first time, Rebecca walked next to Akira and giggled.

“I know.”

“Yeah, right.”

Akira bitterly smiled and rushed ahead.

In the middle of going through the hallway, Alpha suddenly warned Akira.

“Akira, I don’t mind having that girl come along with you, but don’t drop your guard. Don’t forget that she’s still a stranger that you’ve just met in a dangerous area. If we get attacked, there’s a good chance that she’ll use you as a diversion and run away. She might shoot haphazardly when she panics as well. So, keep in mind that she adds an unpredictable factor to this situation. Leaving aside her skill, her equipment is not that bad. So, it would be troublesome to deal with her if it came to it.”

After Alpha gave her warning, Akira glanced at Rebecca and scanned her equipment. She was using an augmented suit that looked like a leotard with some holes on it. The holes seem to have some unknown function other than needlessly showing skin. Furthermore, she was using a dress with a large slit, which was her defensive coat. Both were of the old-world design. She was also carrying a rather large rifle with her.

“Rebecca, that equipment, are they old-world equipment?”

“Do they look so?”

“At least they look relatively strong.”

“Is that so? Thanks. But they are not. Though, they are still pretty powerful.”

Rebecca then smiled rather smugly. But Akira instead noticed something strange.

“You said that you fought the attackers and got defeated right? So, what kind of enemies did you fight?”

“Multi-legged drones equipped with laser cannons. I bet they were brought here by the attackers. Not only are they strong, but there were also billions of them…”

“…And your team was defeated although you have that equipment? You were in a team, right? Not alone, right?”

Judging from the drones that Akira had fought and considering Rebecca’s capability to fight based on her equipment, Akira found it to be weird. Especially when he considered her team members to be equipped with the same level of gear.

[How did such a team get defeated by such weak enemies?] Akira inadvertently shot a suspicious glance at Rebecca.

But unexpectedly, Rebecca exasperatedly said.

“Haah, well, you did survive even after having a 50 billion Aurum bounty on your head. Your evaluation of our fighting capability is completely off. I’m sure you said that based on your own experience fighting those drones. Was it really that easy of a win for you?”

“…At least, I wouldn’t say that it was hard.”

Rebecca sounded a bit offended as she replied.

“Well, that would explain everything. But don’t worry. Although I’m super weak compared to you, I will at least make sure not to get in your way if we get attacked.”

“O-okay.”

Akira thought that he made a mistake there since he ended up saying something that sounded like reproach with a hint of mockery. Thus, he only managed to awkwardly reply with that short ‘okay’. Moreover, he had become strong enough for Alpha to admit it. Furthermore, Rebecca did not have Alpha’s support. Thus, he reflected on his evaluation and believed that it was awful of him to use the strength of the enemy to evaluate someone else’s fighting capability.

The sour mood stayed for quite some time before Rebecca opened her mouth.

“Sorry, I said something rude. You are the one allowing me to come along with you. Though I almost got killed during the fight and I’m worried for the rest of my team as well. So, I guess I’m a little bit more stressed out than I thought. Yeah, sorry. But I was being honest when I said that I won’t get in your way and help you fight too if we got attacked.”

Akira lowered his shoulders.

“Okay, I’m sorry for suspecting you. I think I got a little bit paranoid since I’m only here to pick up my cargo. Instead, I got roped into this troublesome mess.”

But something in Akira’s apology piqued Rebecca’s interest.

“Pick up your cargo? What do you mean?”

“It’s exactly as you heard. Ah, right. I’m not here to secure the transport vehicle, I’m here just to get my stuff.”

“You do know that there are attackers inside this transport vehicle aiming for the cube, right? But you still decided to go to such a dangerous place just to pick up your stuff?”

“Yeah.”

Seeing exasperation on Rebecca’s face, Akira added an extra excuse.

“I have my reasons, alright?”

Rebecca found Akira’s attitude amusing and giggled.

“As I thought, your common sense is completely different from us.”

“Oh shut it. I’ll leave you behind if you keep saying something like that.”

Akira paced his steps faster; Rebecca was still giggling as she lightly jogged to follow next to him.

On their way to cargo sector B28, Akira and Rebecca once again encountered a swarm of multi-legged drones. Akira was able to handle it all by himself. Therefore, now that he had an extra helping hand from Rebecca, the swarm did not give them any trouble at all.

Rebecca smiled smugly after drilling holes through those multi-legged drones with her laser cannon.

“So? What do you think? I’m pretty good, right?”

“Yeah, not bad at all, you’re pretty strong.”

Although Akira agreed with her statement, he had a conflicted expression on his face. Naturally, Rebecca noticed it.

“You don’t seem that happy though? I know that I’m not as strong as you, but still…”

“That’s not it. I just thought that although you have other allies who are more or less as strong as you, you still couldn’t win against the attackers. You’ve just only barely managed to escape, right? Or are there other stronger enemies present?”

“W-well… That is… Yeah, there were other enemies, and they are super strong.”

Rebecca was visibly flustered. Akira did find that strange and Alpha immediately warned him.

“Akira, let’s forget about the attackers and just focus on getting your new equipment. As for the attackers, we will take them down if they try to attack you. So, there’s no need to think too much about them. In the first place, your main goal here has nothing to do with eliminating them.”

“You have a point.”

His equipment came first, Akira reminded himself.

“I see, anyway, let’s hurry up.”

“Ah, yeah, right.”

Akira went ahead, Rebecca, who followed him, made a sigh of relief a moment later.

After Akira left the hallway, the dead drones once again melted into a pool of green liquid, consuming the metallic wreckage around it. This time, they gathered in two different places and created two female humanoids. Those two glanced in the direction where Akira went and quickly left in another direction.

After that, Akira did not encounter any more enemies and safely reached cargo sector B28. He thought that he was finally there and was about to open the door but for some reason, the door would not open.

“Hm? That’s weird.”

Akira thought he must have made a mistake. Thus, instead of inputting the data through his enhanced vision, he pulled out his information terminal and sent the procedure to open the door through the terminal. But unfortunately, the door only returned an error message and would not open. Akira rubbed his head and mumbled.

“What the heck is going on…?”

“What’s wrong?”

“I actually have the permission to open the door, but…”

“So, the door won’t open, huh? Well, this is troublesome. The guy who gave you the code to open the door is outside, right? What do you plan to do now?”

It was not like he could just tear down the door. He would have to return back to those from Brunkel and ask them to assist him to open the door.

Akira turned around and knitted his eyebrows. It was not easy to get here. At the very least, he would have to go back and forth once. Now, no one could say how many round trips he would have to make until he could open the door. Naturally, he really did not want to go through all this hassle.

That was when Akira thought of something else.

“Shirou, are you free right now?”

“What is it? Did something happen?”

After Akira gave a brief explanation, Shirou then confidently said.

“Alright, I’ll use you as a proxy to do some investigation. You can pick two choices. Either to tell me a safe entry point to connect or to set up a temporary circumvention route for me to connect.”

Akira had no idea what Shirou was talking about, but since it would be weird for him to ask Shirou, he confirmed with Alpha first before replying.

“It’s fine. Just connect to me.”

“I’m in.”

Shirou dove into Akira’s old-world connection as an old-world connector and put himself in the system, making it as if he was there. It did not take long for Shirou to notice what was wrong.

“It says that it can’t confirm the code you gave.”

“I did get the permission, though? The code was able to open the door to the other sectors as well…”

“Sector B28 seems to house really valuable cargo, so its security level is much higher than the other sectors. Even if you have permission to open it, if you’re going in together with someone else without permission, the door will not open. Are you there with someone?”

“Yeah, I met this girl named Rebecca on my way here. So, if I leave Rebecca behind, I should be able to open this door, right?”

“No, once that code gives an error, it is rendered invalid. Judging from the identification method, you will either need to return back to have it unlocked or to get another unlock code.”

“Whaaat!?”

Akira sounded extremely frustrated. Since it was through telepathic communication, not only his words, but his emotions were also fully conveyed.

Shirou, who was on the receiving end of that call, laughed.

“But you do have the permission, right? Don’t worry, I’ll open it for you, I’m actually pretty good at this kind of thing, you see.”

“Oh! Thank you!!”

“Yeah, just leave it to me. Aren’t you glad you did not leave me behind and brought me along with you?”

“You can say that again, thanks.”

In contrast to Shirou’s voice, which was full of confidence, Akira’s voice sounded a bit wry. Though, it was his true feelings.

From inside the camping vehicle, Shirou immediately got to work.

“…With this system, it’s easier to fake an identification code instead of hacking the locking system. Akira, I’ll be borrowing your information-gathering device. I need the information used for the identification code to create a fake identification code for that girl, Rebecca.”

“Don’t break it, okay?”

After hearing Akira’s short warning, Shirou immediately accessed his information-gathering device and prioritized its scanning target at Rebecca.

Akira’s powerful information-gathering device would normally be able to see through under the target’s outer clothes and even pass the skin down to the blood vessels and organs. Of course, an expensive augmented suit would be equipped to prevent that. Thus, with a good enough augmented suit, it would be impossible to see all those details. That was why, although Akira’s information-gathering device could only gather information about Rebecca’s appearance, Shirou did not find that to be strange at all.

[I can’t really see the face though. It’s needed to make the identification code. Does the sonar sensor not work well because of the forcefield? I guess I will have to use the camera to get a clear-]

Once Shirou used the information-gathering device’s camera to see Rebecca’s face, he was in absolute shock.

Index Next Chapter>>

Rebuild World – Chapter 295, A Certain Girl

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

Akira, who asked Shirou to help him open the door, believed in Shirou's skills. Akira expected him to open the door with ease. But strangely enough, the door was still locked even after a few minutes and Shirou did not say anything.

"…? Shirou, what's wrong? Is it giving you trouble?"

"Eh? Ah, no, it's fine. I'm opening it now."

The door started to slide open. Akira was so happy that with this, he would finally be able to get his front-line equipment. Because of his jovial state, he was not able to notice Shirou's surprise when he called out to him.

There were several containers inside the cargo sector B28. The sector was well-made to defend against attacks. The containers were also strong and robust. To guarantee the security of whatever was inside those containers, different containers were only able to be opened by certain people with specific authorization. Moreover, the authorization to open one of these containers was completely separate from the authorization of the transport vehicle.

As expected, Akira's equipment was inside the container owned by Sakashita Heavy Industry. He already received the lock code from Kibayashi before coming here. So, if his lock code was rejected again for some reason, he would have to return back to Kugamyama city to report it. Just to be safe, he asked Rebecca to stay next to the door while he went in to pick up his new equipment alone.

As Akira was walking through the room, Shirou spoke to him through telepathy.

"Akira, just a question. How did you end up with that Rebecca girl?"

"She said something about getting separated from the rest of her team and…"

Akira then explained how he met Rebecca to Shirou. At the end of his explanation, Shirou just muttered.

"…I see."

That short answer was somehow strongly laced with conflicting emotions. So much so that even the usually emotionally inept Akira was able to notice.

"Shirou? Is there anything wrong?"

"…It's nothing."

"But you don't sound like it's nothing."

"Akira, just focus on getting your new equipment for now. Once you're done with that, I will have you do my request first, you did promise me that after all, right? So go and quickly get your stuff."

"…That's true, alright then."

Even Akira knew that Shirou was simply avoiding the subject. Nonetheless, he completely agreed with what Shirou just said. It was only a few more steps before he could finally get his frontline equipment. Therefore, Akira thought that he should hurry up and just do that before anything bad happens.

As Akira stood in front of the indicated container, he carefully opened the door. There were four large-sized cases inside the container. Those were his new equipment. His mouth curled up into a smile, his new equipment was finally within reach.

Akira tried to open the case.

But it did not open.

“Excuse me…?”

Akira was flustered. He thought the case should open normally. He never heard that the cases needed some kind of identification code to open.

Of course, Shirou, who was looking at him through Akira’s information-gathering device, noticed Akira’s reaction and found it to be weird.

“Akira, what’s wrong?”

“The case won’t open.”

“Well, that’s normal. Although they are your new equipment, to be more precise, they are still Sakashita Heavy Industry’s cargo, set to be delivered to you. Since your authorization is limited to just transporting the cargo in place of the transport company, you don’t have the permission to open it.”

“…So that’s why, huh?”

Akira thought back upon his conversation with Kibayashi and finally understood what Kibayashi meant back then as the latter wryly smiled.

“Don’t worry, if you bring them to me, I can open them for you.”

“Really? Can’t you open it from there? You were able to open the door remotely.”

“I can, but I don’t want to if it can be helped. It might cause trouble later, you see.”

Shirou refused and gave Akira his reasoning.

The inside of any inter-city transport vehicle was basically treated as a part of a city, and Atlast D2771 was no exception. The whole space inside the transport vehicle was treated like the lower district. Meanwhile, special locations, like where the cube was stored, were being treated like the upper district. Normally, someone like Akira would never be allowed to enter those areas.

The reason why Akira was able to get authorization this time was most likely because of Sakashita Heavy Industry’s influence. That frontline equipment was Sakashita Heavy Industry’s reward to Akira after repelling the Nationalists. Therefore, the longer those equipment could not be handed off to Akira, the greater the chance that it might damage Sakashita’s reputation. This was the main driving force that eventually allowed Akira to be granted special authorization to enter this area.

But as expected, his permission only went as far as to enter the transport vehicle, nothing more. Basically, he was not able to receive permission to open the cases that housed his frontline equipment. This also meant that he was not able to enter areas treated as a part of the inner wall. Giving such authorization meant being his guarantor as well, and there was no reason for Sakashita Heavy Industry to go that far for him.

If Akira opened the cases in this situation, there was a good chance that the transport vehicle’s security system would attack him. For someone who had even picked a fight against the Lion Steel company and just received frontline equipment, the transport vehicle’s security system could not afford to underestimate his power. In the worst-case scenario, he might be suspected of trying to get the cube as well.

That was why they did not want Akira to open the cases inside the transport vehicle. They wanted to avoid that possibility at all costs. After Shirou explained, Akira finally relented.

“I-I see, fine…”

After being told as much, Akira did not have any other choice but to step back. He finally understood why people recognized him as ‘that Akira’.

Shirou then added.

“To be honest, I was surprised that you even got the authorization to enter Atlas D2771. The guy who provided you with that authorisation, Kibayashi, was it again? He must be one hell of a guy. He also somehow managed to get you ammo and medicine during your fight with Lion Steel.”

“…You have a point.”

Akira inadvertently made a wry smile. He felt conflicted since he had to admit that he was indeed often helped by Kibayashi’s amazing skill. However, he was also often thrown into trouble thanks to that man.

And this time, Akira was here because of Kibayashi. Even now, he could not tell if it was a fortunate situation, or if he got thrown into another mess again. It could even be both. Nonetheless, he decided to stop worrying about it for now and just kept moving forward.

Akira used the case’s mobile function to set it to follow him. Four legs unfolded out from the case, which had wheels equipped on the end of each leg. The cases then formed a small group as they lined up behind Akira. He was a bit entertained when he saw them trailing behind him as he walked back to the door into the sector where Rebecca was waiting.

Rebecca squinted her eyes and stared at the four cases following Akira.

“Are those yours? What’s inside them? Don’t tell me it’s the cube.”

Rebecca said so in a light joking manner, so Akira replied with a light smile.

“Not even close, they’re just my new equipment.”

“Your equipment? That does sound super strong. Can I take a peek?”

“Sorry, due to certain reasons, I can’t open them here.”

“Aah, I see. Hmmm, that’s too bad. Well, let’s put that aside for now and just get out of here.”

During their casual exchange, Rebecca did not think Akira was lying and just let the matter slide.

Even so, Akira found Rebecca’s reaction a bit strange. However, since it was just a faint feeling and Alpha did not say anything, he thought that there was no need to worry about it. He tried to open the door, but just like last time, the door would not open, which really surprised him.

“…Again? What’s going on here?”

Akira sighed and called Shirou.

“Shirou, the door won’t open again, can you check it?”

“Sure, wait for a sec… You’re not receiving an error from the identification code. It’s an emergency lock. The danger level of the area around that place went up.”

“What’s going on?”

“Basically, there’s an ongoing battle behind that door.”

Akira inadvertently looked at the door.

__*__*__*__

Zelos was running through the hallway, trying to catch those who attacked the transport vehicle while exchanging shots. He was against 2 people. Both were girls with augmented suits that looked like a leotard, covered by a defensive coat that looked like a dress. Both were carrying laser cannons. They were not that strong, but they kept running away. Since they were neither that fast nor that powerful, Zelos decided to pursue them.

Bullets and laser beams flew from both sides, filling the narrow hallway. Normal Hunters and monsters would get blown to pieces by now.

But both sides managed to put up a good fight. They evaded each other's attacks. Deflecting the laser with forcefield armour or blocking the bullets by temporarily increasing the power output of the defensive coat's forcefield armour.

Naturally, the battle ended in Zelos' victory. He was mostly unharmed as well. He had managed to tear off the enemy's arm, which was far from fatal. When they approached a turn along the hallway, they managed to escape and hide from him.

Zelos knitted his eyebrows.

[…They got away again, huh? I pursued them quite far from my main group. This is bad, did I get baited to come here alone?]

Zelos' team encountered these enemies when they were trying to secure a new cargo sector. However, those that faced them were not the main force. They were the team left behind to secure and reinforce the conquered sectors. With a wide gap in firepower, the team was able to barely hold their position thanks to the walls and other structures they had set up. It was only when the main force arrived, did they manage to quickly seize the upper hand and repelled the attackers. Afterwards, the main force went to pursue the attackers as they tried to flee.

However, Zelos' team quickly lost the upper hand the moment they pursued the attackers to a different cargo sector. This sector was not secured yet, which meant that they did not know where the attackers might try to ambush them. Unlike the multi-legged drones, which seemed to have been sent for reconnaissance, the attackers were pretty strong. To prevent an ambush and to secure an escape route, it was of great importance that they secured the hallway first. However, that meant dividing up their force.

If the attackers were slightly stronger, Zelos would have decided to retreat. Unfortunately, the enemies were not that strong, which caused Zelos to insist on the pursuit. As the pursuit continued, Zelos got baited to go deeper inside the transport vehicle. Eventually, the rest of his men were assigned to secure the hallway while he was left alone to pursue the enemies.

Zelos looked down on the floor, the arm that he had shot off the attackers was oozing green liquid.

[This blood… Is it recovery medicine? Well, it's true that replacing blood with medicine would greatly increase fighting capability. But it's impossible to reconfigure the body to produce medicine instead of blood. It would cause a lot of trouble in everyday life. They really put everything they had into this attack, huh? Well, they are trying to get the cube by attacking an inter-city transport vehicle, so I guess it's not that surprising that they would go this far…]

That was when suddenly a call from his men reached him.

"Zelos, how's our situation over there?"

"Not good. They just got away from me again."

"…Should we send some people over?"

"No. Make sure that we have an escape route. We ended up over-extending, creating a rather long route through sectors that have not been secured yet due to my command. I'm sure that it's not easy, but it would be bad if we don't have a safe place to retreat to in case something bad happens. I'm seriously counting on you, alright?"

"Roger that. Don't get too reckless, yeah?"

Although they were speaking casually, it was clear that they deeply trusted each other. Zelos then continued the pursuit. According to his information-gathering device, the enemies were just waiting on the other side of the turn, which Zelos found weird.

[Again, they're not just simply running away. They're just keeping their distance from me as if to lure me. That location doesn't seem like an advantageous area to fight me. They don’t seem to be waiting for reinforcement either, so what exactly are they doing…?]

Zelos’ mind wandered to one vague term – high-functioning people. Zelos did find that term strange, but for some reason, it was compellingly convincing. He shook that off his mind and ran through the hallway to face the enemies not too far away from the corner.

Suddenly, a few dozen flat objects flew out from behind the corner. These boards were able to reflect images as if it was made of glass. Zelos quickly reacted by shooting at them as he quickly threw a smoke grenade at the corner.

A moment later, the attackers shot lasers from behind the corner. Normally, these lasers would not be able to make a turn and hit Zelos, but that was where these plates came in. Reflecting off the plates’ surface, they could make a turn and head towards Zelos.

Zelos, who had already expected this attack, destroyed some of the plates before the laser beam was shot. Using the gaps he created, he avoided the incoming beams. He then pushed forward, past the corner, and shot at the enemies.

They quickly reacted to aim their cannons at him. However, the smoke grenade that Zelos had thrown beforehand, already bounced off the corner, landed close to their feet and finally started releasing smoke.

The smoke was infused with particles to counter energy weapons. It was able to effectively disperse and damp the laser cannon, greatly reducing its firepower. It was to the point where even if Zelos got hit, it would not be able to deal that much damage.

Since the smoke only affected a limited area, normally, enemies could just step back out of the affected area while keeping their distance. Thus, it was meaningless to use such smoke grenades from afar. However, in an enclosed space like this where they were in close range, the smoke was highly effective. Although the effects would only linger for a few seconds, it was enough to decide the battle. Zelos was certain that he had already won.

[You had spent too much effort adjusting your shots with the reflecting plates that you've made the mistake of adjusting your distance from me! This will be your end!]

Zelos stood still and released a relentless assault. He stood with a stance that prevented him from evading as they exchanged an intense barrage. The result for both parties greatly differed. Zelos got a slight burn on his cheek, while the enemies did not even retain their original shape. Zelos knew that the medicine inside their blood could bring them back from death, that was why he executed such a risky move. It was to ensure that his enemies were completely obliterated.

Zelos lowered his rifle and sighed. Pieces of the enemies were scattered on the ground. It was impossible to reconstruct their original form from such a state.

"Alright, that should do it. You really gave me a hard time."

Zelos pinched off the scorched skin on his cheek and applied medicine paste to the area. Once he was done, he called his team. But, he suddenly noticed a sudden change in his radar.

It was at the end of the hallway. Normally, Zelos would have readied himself and not gotten flustered, but the location completely surprised him.

"No way…!"

The signals came from behind, to be more precise, it was from the hallway, behind the corner where Zelos had just come from a moment ago. This completely caught him off-guard. There should be no enemy there.

Still, Zelos managed to quickly react by taking a shooting stance. The enemies were behind the corner, so he did not have a clear sight of them. Worse, he had used most of his ammo to make sure that the previous two enemies were dead for good. Thus, he was also worried about his ammo reserve. With the signals quickly heading towards him, he had no time to reload. Thus, instead of relying on his rifle, he put them back and unsheathed his blade before running toward the corner.

Zelos knew that at this rate, they would end up engaging at the corner, in close combat. Therefore, he could just use his blade and that range and finish up his enemies. And as he had predicted, they did make contact at the corner.

"…Wha-!?"

As Zelos swung down his blade, his face was filled with shock. The enemy was a huge bundle of flesh, which completely blocked the hallway. Judging from the size of the signal, Zelos had expected it to be something close to humanoid. However, this huge fleshy mess of a monster in front of him caught him off guard.

Naturally, the monster did not let any opening get unexploited and lunged to bite Zelos.

The wide-open jaw clamped hard, only to take out a piece of air. Zelos narrowly jumped away. He managed to use the opening of its jaw being close to launch a strike, slicing the monster cleanly into two. The carcass simply rolled over on the floor, without any further response.

Zelos did not stop there and quickly proceeded through the hallway.

[That was too weak! So, its frightening appearance is just for show, huh? But what the heck with its size!? The signal was not that huge! Just what in the world…]

As questions regarding the current situation ran in his head, the calm Hunter part of him urged him to hurry up.

Putting that aside, he was flanked in a one-way hallway with no branches. His team was left behind to secure the hallway. They should have prevented this from happening. Even so, he got flanked. This meant that the monster had broken through the secured hallway.

He just contacted his men a moment ago. Thus, there was fear of the monster killing his men so fast that they could not even afford the time to plead for help. If the monster broke through the secured hallway without killing his men, there was a good chance that his men were still alive.

Zelos prayed for the safety of his men as he hurried back to his men, if they were still alive, he might still be able to save them.

Zelos' men were busy securing the hallway, they were surprised when they saw Zelos running at them. However, Zelos did not notice their bewilderment as he shouted.

"How is the situation!?"

"…? Nothing in particular over here."

"…What!?"

"Eh?"

Zelo and his men exchanged a confused look.

"Zelos, what just happened?"

"…Wait for a sec… So, what exactly was that?"

His men were fine. They did not even encounter that huge monster in the first place. Zelos, who finally understood that, immediately turned solemn. He realized how bad the situation was.

"Everyone, retreat back to sector A7!"

"What? We're pulling that far back? Are we going to just abandon the sector that we have secured? We will have to redo them again, you know?"

"That's fine. Just forget about the sectors that we have secured. Think of them as unsecured sectors. I will tell you the reason later. Just get moving! Now!"

With that one order, everyone’s expression immediately turned serious. Although they still did not understand why Zelos would give out such an order, they knew that something must have happened. In other words, he had no other choice but to give such an order. They placed their trust in Zelos and they immediately started retreating.

With that, Zelos took his men and pulled out of the area.

The monster that Zelos had sliced into two and left behind started shrinking. When it had stopped shrinking, it returned back to its original form. It was the arm that Zelos had shot off the humanoid enemies a moment ago.

__*__*__*__

Akira was rubbing his head in front of the locked door.

Due to the ongoing battle nearby, the warehouse was put on emergency lockdown. Akira thought that it might be the security team fighting against the attackers, which was understandable. He did not mind joining the fight, but in order to do so, he would have to open the door in front of him first. However, because of that battle, the door could not be opened.

“Shirou, can you do something about this?”

“Even if you ask, this lock is no longer a simple identification lock.”

Akira frowned after hearing what he had said. It seems like Shirou could not help him this time. In the worst-case scenario, he would be locked inside this sector for some time. Akira sighed and mumbled.

“Well, this sucks…”

That was when Rebecca suddenly asked.

“You can’t open the door?”

“Yeah, it seems like it’s locked because there’s an ongoing fight occurring somewhere nearby.”

“I see… Uhmmm, in that case, how about we go out through the wall instead of the hallway? There’s actually an exit right over there…”

“Is that even possible?”

“Is it not? Did the operator say so?”

Akira raised his eyebrows. He did not expect her to say something like that. Seeing how he reacted, Rebecca frowned and apologetically said.

“Ah, you just said that the door won’t open because there is a battle nearby, so I just concluded there must be someone who told you that. So, that means, you must be in contact with an operator or something to open the doors… Sorry, were you trying to hide it?”

Judging from what she said, Rebecca noticed that he was talking to someone. However, it seemed like she was still unaware of him being an old-world connector. After all, there were information-gathering devices that could access the old-world domain and Akira had heard Hunters near the frontline had these kinds of information-gathering devices. Thus, he believed Rebecca must have assumed that he had one and calmed down.

“Ahh, right, just keep it a secret.”

“Okay. So then, is it not possible to get outside the transport vehicle?”

“Shirou, how is it?”

Akira threw that question just to at least hear Shirou’s opinion, but there was no reply.

“Shirou?”

“…Alright, let’s try that.”

Shirou paused for a bit before finally answering.

Akira stood in front of the door that led outside the transport vehicle.

“Shirou, I’m already in front of the door”

“I’m on my way there, just wait for a sec… Alright, I’m here, opening the door now.”

The door to the outside slowly slid open. That door was for human use and not to transport cargo, thus, it was a relatively small door. Still, it was big enough for Akira and his cases to pass through. The door that opened up by falling forward, turned into a pathway to the outside.

Akira stood on that door and extended both of his arms forward. The multi-legged cases that were following behind him up until now leapt forward and stacked themselves on top of his arms. What Akira needed to do now was just to jump off with his cases. Although it was from a height that might even be taller than that of a building, it was not a problem at all for the current Akira. When he peeked down, Shirou already moved the camping vehicle there as he was looking up, waiting for him.

“Rebecca, just to be safe, you can jump on your own, right? If not, we can jump together.”

“I’m okay.”

“Alright, I’ll be going first then.”

Akira jumped off, but on his way down, he passed by Shirou, who was travelling up.

“Eh?”

As soon as Akira landed, he immediately looked up. Shirou jumped up to where Akira was a moment ago using the power of his augmented suit.

Rebecca could not hide her shock the moment she saw Shirou suddenly appear in front of him.

“…Shirou?”

“Haruka!”

Shirou smiled happily toward the girl who named herself ‘Rebecca’ in front of Akira.

No matter how much special treatment Sakashita Heavy Industry had given Shirou, opening an inter-city transport vehicle door to the outside was a huge crime. After all, it created a security vulnerability to the cube. In the worst-case scenario, Sakashita Heavy Industry might completely see him as an enemy. Even so, Shirou still did it. It was for the sake of rescuing his precious friend, even if it meant picking a fight against the five largest corporations of the eastern district.

The thought that he had finally made it was fully expressed on his face. Meanwhile, Haruka’s expression was one mixed with surprise and struggle.

“Shirou, why are you here? You should be in Sakashita’s research facility…”

“Yeah, I slipped out.”

Haruka, who understood what such an act meant, was aghast.

“What do you think you are do-!?”

“I’m here to rescue you.”

Hearing those words, Haruka was taken aback. She would never imagine that Shirou would go this far for her sake.

“And I can say the same thing to you too, why are you here? How did you get out of that place? Ah, no, that doesn’t matter now! Since you’re already here, I’ll take care of the rest! So, let’s go.”

Shirou extended his hand to Haruka. Her expression was filled with happiness as she extended her hand to reach out for his. But she suddenly stopped as her expression started to turn dark.

Shirou believed that Haruka was just getting worried, so he firmly declared.

“It’ll be alright. Although I look like this, I’m actually pretty amazing. I will handle the rest. Don’t worry. Trust me.”

However, Haruka could still not accept his hand. She managed to make a small and weak smile before she replied to Shirou.

“…Shirou, thank you, I’m really happy, I really am.”

Her expression then turned forlorn.

“…I’m sorry.”

Haruka then kicked Shirou off the platform.

Shirou had waged everything to come here to rescue her. The rejection hit him hard. His face turned sorrowful as he fell.

“Haruka… Why…?”

Haruka was watching Shirou fall with an equally mournful expression.

Seeing Shirou get kicked off the platform and show no signs of preparing to land, Akira flusteredly caught him.

“Shirou, what are you doing?”

Akira’s confused voice pulled Shirou out from the shock of his own powerlessness and emotion took over his body. He thought that he should still be able to make it. Thus, he immediately tried to chase her. He quickly got off Akira’s arms but, the moment his feet landed on the ground, he stopped. [In terms of strength, I am no match against her. It will be impossible for me to make her talk with force. I would only get kicked down again if I tried…]

Shirou gritted his teeth as he cursed his own powerlessness. However, he quickly realized that there was someone who could do that for him.

“Akira! Get back to her! Please!”

“Get back? I don’t know what’s going on here, but she’s going to jump down, no?”

Akira said so and looked at Haruka. She was standing on top of the door, gazing down at Shirou. She then turned around, went back into the transport vehicle, and closed the door. Akira tilted his head in confusion. That was when the ground suddenly started to tremble. It was from the transport vehicle revving up its engine.

“Whoah, what the heck…?”

Akira was still confused by the rapid sudden change of events; Shirou suddenly grabbed Akira’s shoulder and shook him.

“Akira! Just go and get back to her! Otherwise, Haruka will be gone!!”

“Haruka? Isn’t that girl, Rebecca-”

“That doesn’t matter! Just go!? I don’t have the time to explain everything right now!!”

Akira was about to be spurred to action as Shirou kept hurrying him up like that, but Alpha stopped him with a solemn expression.

“Akira, no. Your equipment is more important.”

Thanks to that, Akira was reminded of his equipment and was able to regain his calm.

“Shirou, open the cases first. I’m here to get them in the first place. And, make sure to tell me the rest later.”

“Like I said, I don’t have the time-”

Akira turned and glared at him.

“My equipment first.”

With that, Shirou finally calmed down. He then glared back at Akira and asked.

“You’ll do my request first once your business here is done, right? That’s the promise.”

“And I’m here to get my equipment. I have the cases, but not what is inside. If you won’t open them here, I will have to go back to Kugamayama city first to open them. I’ll only do your request after that.”

Shirou glared hard at him, but Akira was unfazed.

“And also, although I will prioritize your request, it’s not like I’m willing to do just about anything without any information. If you want me to properly fulfill your request, you should properly explain everything to me first.”

In the middle of them speaking, Atlast D2771 started to move slowly. Shirou buckled under the pressure and relented. The camping vehicle started to accelerate under Shirou’s remote control, to race after Atlast D2771. Meanwhile, Shirou did as he was told.

“I’ll open the cases and give you an explanation while we chase that transport vehicle! Get on, now!”

Akira and Shirou immediately jumped into the camping vehicle.

After Haruka returned back inside the transport vehicle, her expression was dark. It was deeply clouded by the feeling of guilt for rejecting Shirou. She reminded herself of her duty and gave an order to the rest of her men.

“…Change of plans. We’re not going to wait until the retrieval team is here. We’re going, now!”

With that order, the transport vehicle that was stopped up until now, started to move. It was the proof that Haruka had seized complete control of the Atlast D2771.

[Shirou, how did he know that I was here? Was he sent by Sakashita Heavy Industry? If he came here because he received information from Sakashita

Heavy Industry, Sakashita would send their army here too…]

Haruka then sighed and mumbled.

“Shirou, why are you here… At this timing…?”

Shirou was here to rescue her, and Haruka was equally happy and sad at the same time because of his sentiments.

Index Next Chapter>>

Rebuild World – Chapter 296, Shirou's Objective

Index Next Chapter>>

Translator: Athena13

Editor: Silavin

Proofreader: p4553r

The camping vehicle was moving as fast as the transport vehicle. Inside it, Akira and Shirou immediately started working on opening the cases.

"I'll tell you this beforehand, they won't open right away. They are cases used to secure frontline equipment after all. It's obvious that they're locked extremely securely to protect the dangerous objects inside them."

Akira nodded. He knew that Shirou wanted to chase after Hikaru as soon as possible. Therefore, he had no reason to suspect Shirou would spare any effort in opening these cases.

Shirou put his hand on one of the cases.

"You might think that I'm not doing anything here, but I'm properly working hard to open these cases. So don't complain, okay?"

Akira nodded again.

They both went silent for a few seconds. Shirou still had one of his hands on top of the case as he was staring at it. Although he seemed to be doing nothing from the outside, it was obvious from his expression that he was doing whatever he could to open the case as fast as he could.

“…I’ll give you a light explanation while I have the chance. Everything that I’m going to say from here on out is all just my guess. There’s no guarantee that they are correct. But my thoughts are based on my own investigation. So, I believe it is accurate… That girl is Haruka, ‘Rebecca’ is just a fake name. Well, ‘Haruka’ might also be a fake name, but, basically, my objective is to rescue her.”

Shirou then stopped. Akira waited for him to continue. Seeing that, Shirou slowly knitted his eyebrows.

“…Akira, is that not enough?”

Akira’s face turned stern.

“That doesn’t explain anything to me. So, you want to save Rebecca… Well, it’s Haruka, right? But it doesn’t seem like she wants to be saved though? Didn’t she kick you down back there?”

Shirou’s face also turned stern.

“I don’t understand why she did that. She might not believe me. But I am absolutely serious. I just want to rescue her, and I have prepared myself to be able to negotiate even against the big five. Even if that doesn’t work, I can at least take her with me and go on the run. Though, looks like she still does not trust me.”

“I see, so then, what should I do after I get back inside Atlas? Should I take her here by force?”

“No, I want to try to convince Haruka through your information terminal. That’s why I want you to get close enough to her.”

“Ahhh, I see.”

“Is that good enough?”

Akira thought for a bit before shaking his head.

“No, as I thought, you should explain to me more. What exactly do you mean by rescuing her? And you did say something about going on the run from the big five companies, so who exactly is she? And you want to save her from what exactly?”

“…I’ll be honest, it’s better if you don’t know. Once you know, you won’t be able to claim you were acting unaware of the situation.”

“Let me ask you this question instead, is it going to be a situation where people would accept it if I said, ‘I don’t know’?”

“At least, it’s easier for you to say ‘you don’t know’ when you really don’t. At the very least, you would be able to claim that you got tricked by me. I know that I’m roping you into my own issues when I hired you, but if you don’t know, you can at least make an excuse. You can even claim that you did it because I am an agent from Sakashita Heavy Industry. But once I tell you this, you won’t be able to use that excuse anymore. Are you sure you’re fine with that?”

As expected, Akira hesitated. But he immediately made his decision and said with a serious tone.

“Just tell me already.”

Akira did not feel like he owed Shirou that much, At least, not enough to warrant him to do anything Shirou asked without knowing anything. Likewise, to engage in a fight while ignoring the doubts festering in him which came from that lack of information. Alpha was the only one that Akira would go that far for. So, with that resolve, he told Shirou to just tell him.

With that, Shirou finally gave up.

“…Alright, but promise me two things. First, don’t tell Tsukisada about what I’m going to tell you, and second, you will still help me no matter what you’re going to hear from here on out.”

“I won’t tell Tsukisada, I can promise you that. But I can’t promise you that I will still help you no matter what. I don’t know what exactly you want me to do, and I don’t have the obligation to do whatever you ask me to. After all, I will not kill myself even if you ask me to.”

Shirou hesitated. There was no guarantee that Akira would still help him after he revealed everything to Akira.

However, Shirou knew that Akira would not help him unless he explained. Likewise, even if he told Akira, the worst that would happen was for Akira to not help him. He did not believe Akira would turn hostile against him.

Even though they had not worked together for long, from the time Shirou had spent with him, he knew him well enough to know Akira would not cross that line. Thus, he finally made his decision.

“Alright, that’s good enough. Akira, I won’t take responsibility even if you say that it’s better for you not to know afterwards, okay? I did warn you, after all.”

As the mood suddenly turned heavy, Akira thought that Shirou would say something very important and inadvertently nodded. And so, Shirou went to the main subject.

“This is just my guess, but there’s a good chance that Haruka is a part of the rebuild research laboratory. Although I don’t know for sure if she’s one of the test subjects or the researchers, my bet is that she is the former.”

Shirou first met her inside the virtual space within the old-world domain. He was in the middle of strict training at that time, to polish his skills as an old-world connector. When he was training there day in and day out, he found Haruka inside one of the old-world domain’s virtual spaces that he was connected to by pure coincidence.

At first, Haruka would not tell Shirou anything, not even her name. During their exchanges, they looked at each other with suspicion. Still, for Shirou who was in the middle of such gruelling training, being able to talk with someone from outside Sakashita Heavy Industry's facility was like an oasis in the middle of a desert.

Haruka's common sense was slightly abnormal as was Shirou's. He had spent all his life inside a strictly secured facility that was isolated from the outside world. Thus, it was normal for his common sense to be abnormal compared to someone from the eastern district. Both of them were old-world connectors, so Shirou thought that Haruka was also in a similar situation as he was. In the middle of their jam-packed schedule, they made sure that they would have the time to meet up in that virtual space. There, they discussed about their skills as old-world connectors, taught each other, and praised each other. As time flew by, their relationship deepened.

The closer they got, the more they wanted to know about each other. But it was not like they could simply confess their personal information to each other. Thus, what they did was use their skills as old-world connectors to investigate each other. It could also be interpreted as them wanting to know the other person's real identity before they considered whether to continue their relationship or not.

The desire to know Haruka more greatly fuelled Shirou's motivation. He put more effort into his training and became so skilled that it even surprised the staff of Sakashita Heavy Industry. This eventually led to the preferential treatment that he had been receiving.

Even so, Shirou was the first one to crack as he was the first to open up about his personal information to Haruka.

"…The first one who suggested trying to investigate each other was Haruka. Now that I think about it, I bet she thought that there was no way I would be able to gather any information about her. Well, it was indeed not easy. The reason why I was able to get her personal information was mostly because of luck… Haruka was connecting to that virtual space from a rebuild research laboratory. I bet it was from a renovated facility in the middle of some ruin."

Shirou then heaved a big sigh.

“I thought that she was inside a facility owned by one of the big five corporations, just like me. I never thought that it was from the rebuild research laboratory. It was a huge shock for me at that time. I immediately completely erased that information from Sakashita Heavy Industry’s log, if they found out about her, her life would be in danger.”

Shirou’s expression then turned serious as he turned to Akira.

“My original request was to ask you to help me sneak into the rebuild research laboratory and rescue Haruka from that place. I have the confidence if it is for hacking or something similar, but that alone won’t be enough. I need someone who can fight against those guarding that place. That is also why I stocked up on Chrome. I thought Hunters, who are strong enough and can be trusted with such information, cannot be paid only by Aurum.”

Shirou let out a small sigh.

“But well, in the end… I had no other choice but to use all my Chrome to get away from Hammerz. After that, when I was looking for someone that I might be able to hire to accomplish my goal with my emergency Aurum, I found you, Akira.”

After he finished his story, Shirou then stated to Akira in a serious tone.

“There, I’ve told you everything. Now that you know everything, I will have you help me.”

“Hm? Sure.”

Although Akira gave his affirmation, he said it too nonchalantly. Shirou, who did not expect such a response, was caught by surprise.

“…Wait, what?! What is with that reaction!? Were you even listening to my story!?”

Akira winced back from Shirou’s sudden outburst, but it was not from fear. He was simply weirded out by that outburst.

“I-It’s fine, I did properly listen to your story. Basically, you want to save your friend who is trapped inside a dangerous place, right?”

“Well, if you put it that way, that’s true. But your reaction is just wrong, you know!? Do you have a heart made of steel or something…!? No wonder you have no problem picking a fight with the Lion Steel company…”

Shirou exasperatedly sighed. Nonetheless, Akira’s bold response did help him to calm down. That was just as he managed to open the first case, inside it was an augmented suit. Shirou shot a serious gaze at Akira, who just saw what he did.

“I opened the first case. Akira, I’m sorry, but as expected it will take some time for me to open all the cases. Haruka will get away in that Atlas if you wait for me to finish opening all the cases. So please.”

Shirou lowered his head to Akira, who gave a light smile and casually said.

“Alright, make sure to open the rest before I’m back, okay?”

“Of course! Akira, thank you, I’m counting on you!”

Shirou firmly thanked Akira. He was completely shocked and was thrown into disarray when Haruka rejected him, but he was fine now.

Although Atlast D2771 could not quickly gain speed due to its size, its maximum speed was still above the camping vehicle. Due to their conversation, they were a bit late in starting their pursuit. Currently, the camping vehicle was already running parallel to the very last section of the transport vehicle.

Akira leapt from the camping vehicle’s rooftop and landed on the side of the transport vehicle. He then started walking up the wall to the rooftop of the transport vehicle.

“Alpha, I know that we’re in a hurry, but isn’t it better if I put on that augmented suit?”

Although he finally got his frontline equipment, he was still not using them.

“It’s better like this. After all, we don’t have the time for me to modify that augmented suit. Moreover, our objective is to get close enough to that girl so that Shirou can talk to her. Coming here with powerful equipment would only needlessly make her feel uneasy.”

“You have a point.”

Akira eventually reached the rooftop, he then looked around for a door to get inside the transport vehicle. But for some reason, he could not find it anywhere.

“Shirou, I’m fine with searching for Haruka inside the transport vehicle, but I don’t see any gates to get in. Can you find me a way in?”

“Sure, wait for a sec. That gate would be… No luck, the control pattern has been changed, I’ll look for another way in…”

“Wait, didn’t you open a similar door before?”

“It’s not that simple. I’m in a hurry right now, so I don’t have the time to explain it to you.”

“Ah, now that I think about it, Haruka is also an old-world connector, right? Can’t you contact her through telepathy too?”

“No, it’s not that simple. If I can do that, I would have done that by now.”

“I-I see.”

“…There’s a hatch about 300 metres away from you. Try that hatch first, if that doesn’t work, I will look for another door.”

“Roger that.”

Akira followed Shirou’s instructions as he walked on top of Atlas. Although he still had some questions, he thought that it would be bad to sour Shirou’s mood even more. Thus, he threw his questions to Alpha instead.

“Alpha, what do you think I should do to find Haruka?“

“I’m sure that without trying to find her, once she notices that you’re around, she’ll come to you. After all, from her point of view, a dangerous person that she had just expelled from the transport vehicle had returned.”

“Expelled? What do you mean? Was I expelled from the transport vehicle by Haruka?”

“Yes. My guess is that back then, she had done something to that door so that someone from the outside could easily open it.”

“Why would she do that…?”

“She doesn’t want you to get in her way of stealing the cube.”

Akira raised his eyebrows.

“Wait for a sec, so she is the one that attacked the transport vehicle?”

“Yep, although, it’s just my guess. She is not just one of the attackers, I am willing to bet she’s actually the leader of the attackers.”

“…Why didn’t you tell me?”

“You won’t be able to hide it. You couldn’t even pretend that you didn’t know something, right? If she noticed that you know about her real identity, she might stop pretending to be someone from the team trying to secure Atlas. To avoid unnecessary hostility from her, I was not able to tell you. It’s not like she’s your enemy, so there’s no need to fight her when there’s no real reason to.”

Although Akira completely understood Alpha’s point, he still could not help but to make a complicated expression.

“But still, she’s one of the attackers, right?”

“Yes. But she is not your enemy. You are only here to pick up your equipment. You never accepted any request that needed you to fight the attackers. So, there is no reason for you to pick a fight with her. Though it’s true that she is the one who sent those multi-legged drones to attack you, it would be strange if you don’t get attacked there instead, right? Furthermore, she did help you fight too, afterwards. I thought that it was better to let her know that you’re not worth the problem so she would let you finish your business there and get out of the transport vehicle as soon as possible. I believe you can at least understand that much, right?”

“…Yeah, I guess you’re right.”

Although Akira was still displeased with what had happened, at the moment, he was working for Shirou. Thus, he decided to focus on the task at hand for now.

__*__*__*__

Inside the transport vehicle which had suddenly started moving, Zelos’ team was faced with an intense battle as they were slowly pulling back. Zelos, who was standing right at the front, spearheading the team, shouted to his com.

“Don’t chase them too deep! Focus on pulling back! We’re retreating to sector A7!”

Their enemies were small girls with weapons. These girls had the same faces and they looked exactly the same as the ones Zelos had killed before he called for a retreat. Everything from their fighting capability, equipment, and green blood, were all the same. At that time, Zelos was fighting them while they were running away from him. However, this time, they were the ones pressing an assault on his team. All of them had flat emotionless eyes. Even when their friends got killed or blasted to pieces, they did not show any reaction.

Their emotionless faces were ominous and creepy. All of these girls had this exact look, and all of them looked like Haruka.

The hallway was filled with the laser beams released from the girls’ laser cannons. Zelos’ team used the portable walls that they had installed, to secure each sector. to block the lasers as they were slowly pulling back. Whenever Zelos’ team found even the smallest opening, with Zelos as the main firepower, they would quickly attack and decimate those that were open.

However, they were still feeling the heat from the assault. No matter how many they took out, the enemies kept coming without an end in sight. Their numbers were not reducing at all.

After Zelos took out a nearby enemy, he knitted his eyebrows and turned toward his men.

“How’s the situation?”

“We have three badly injured, but everyone is still alive. We also have secured a route to retreat back to cargo sector A7. The badly injured are prioritized to retreat first.”

Zelos’ stern expression relaxed after he heard that report.

“Alright then, just continue retreating. No need to worry about your ammo. Make sure to stay in the hallway until we can regroup at cargo sector A7. Never try to set up a barricade inside a room even if the fight gets tough. Make sure that everyone understands it.”

“Of course! After all, we’ve investigated where exactly these girls came from. It turns out that they were coming out from the rooms that we had secured beforehand. Just how exactly did they get in there…”

Suddenly, another man spoke with a stern look.

“I bet they were hiding.”

“But we made sure to sweep the sectors when we had secured, you know?”

“I bet we just checked if there’s someone inside, right? I witnessed it myself, you know? The moment when they formed from a locker. I’m not saying that they came out from inside the locker, but the whole locker itself turned into one of these things.”

Hearing that fantasy-like statement from his friend, the other guy knitted his eyebrows and exclaimed.

“The heck are you even talking about…?”

But Zelos looked convinced.

“I see, so that’s why. They were disguised as a part of the transport vehicle!”

“…You gotta be joking with me!?”

“It would be great if it is really just a joke though, let’s go!”

Zelos and his men were slowly pulling back from the front. But the number of enemies did not go down at all. They were shot down and sliced to pieces, drowning the floor in a puddle of green liquid. However, the enemies behind just ignored the puddle and kept charging forward.

In the middle of battle, Zelos noticed the connection between the girls.

[Wait… I see now, so that’s it!]

The reason why Zelos called for a retreat was because he was worried that there were secret routes inside the transport vehicle.

When Zelos was attacked by that large monster, he was worried whether his men had the route to retreat secured. After all, that monster attacked him from somewhere supposed to be secured.

But his men were safe. Which could only mean that the monster suddenly appeared in between the small opening between where his men were posted and him. Out of all the possibilities that he had thought of, he concluded that there must have been a secret route leading to where it had appeared.

If there were indeed secret routes inside the transport vehicle, then it was too naive to think that the sectors that they had secured were really safe. Fearful of getting ambushed through such secret routes, he decided to redo everything with the assumption that there were secret routes. Thus, he called all his men back to cargo sector A7.

However, if the enemies were disguising themselves as part of the transport vehicle, then even if there were no secret routes, it would not be strange for them to suddenly appear out of nowhere. Moreover, Zelos knew that no human could do this. This meant that the opponents he was fighting against were monsters taking human form.

His thoughts then reached the next conclusion. The opponents were biological monsters taking the form of a little girl. That they were pumped full of powerful medicine. The reason why they were so tenacious and powerful was because of the medicine. It was also the reason why they kept coming back up even after he had already killed several of them.

That was also the reason why they could not find corpses or any leftovers from the team that stormed the transport vehicle beforehand. It was because these monsters ate them. Although it was nothing but just a hunch, Zelos was convinced that he was right.

[Now that I take a good look at the hallway, I don't find any leftovers from the multi-legged drones that we had destroyed. Those drones were also equipped with laser cannons, just like these girls, is it just a coincidence? Or did these girls get their laser cannons from eating those drones? If it is the latter, it would mean that these girls are of a monster type that would devour and assimilate anything they can consume. In that case, they can increase their numbers by consuming materials. No wonder they just keep coming. They're eating their dead friends to produce copies!]

Fortunately, Zelos knew how to deal with these kinds of monsters. He simply had to completely obliterate them until they had no energy or material left to reconstruct themselves.

"…This is an order to everyone! Start the counterattack! The green liquid is probably an extremely powerful medicine! There's a good chance that they'll be able to heal themselves unless you completely destroy them!"

With that signal from Zelos, his team started to ramp up their counterattack. Faced with an intense assault that completely destroyed every single part of the monster's body, the girls' attacks started to weaken.

Zelos used that chance to quicken the retreat of his team back to cargo sector A7.

__*__*__*__

Haruka, who was commanding the biological weapons, seemed solemn as she saw the changes in Zelos' team.

"That was fast… Is it normal for them to be able to adapt this quickly? Well, it is basically the same thing that had happened in Kugamayama city, so I guess that's why they know how to deal with it."

Haruka shook off her worries for now and decided to focus on controlling the biological weapons. But something else caught her attention that made her knit her eyebrows.

"…Your business here is already done, right? So why are you coming back?"

In her enhanced vision, Haruka could see Akira walking on the rooftop of the transport vehicle.

Akira was in the middle of looking at a door on the rooftop when he suddenly stopped. Not too far ahead of him, a certain part of the rooftop was slowly opening.

"Shirou, is that it?"

"No, that's not me."

Suddenly Haruka jumped out of that opening. The moment she landed on the rooftop, she stood face to face with Akira. The smile that had adorned her face when he was with her while they were inside the transport vehicle was nowhere to be seen.

“What are you doing here? You have no business anymore here, right?”

“True, but it seems that’s not the case for Shirou.”

Shirou’s voice immediately came out from Akira’s information terminal.

“Haruka! Just listen to what I have to say! Why can’t you come with me? If you’re worried about what will happen after you run away, it’ll be fine! I have a hideout that even Sakashita Heavy Industry cannot find. I’ve also prepared negotiation materials so that the Corporate Government won’t arrest you even if you’re someone from the rebuild research laboratory. So please…”

But Haruka ignored Shirou’s plea. She bit her lips, eyes full of pain as she looked straight at Akira.

“…Leave. I have no wish to fight you, but if you get in my way, then I will have no other choice.”

“Well, I can say the same for me as well. So, can we at least talk?”

“No, Leave! I don’t want to hurt Shirou’s friend. But if you give me no choice, I will use force.”

Haruka’s presence started to show readiness to fight, she was no longer trying to pretend to be weak.

“Just to let you know, I’m pretty strong.”

Although it was nothing but a bluff, her words sounded as if she had enough power to force even Akira to get serious.

“…Shirou, what’s next? Should I just leave? Or fight? If it’s the latter, I have no guarantee that she will come out alive, you know?”

Shirou could not help to raise his voice after hearing that depending on the situation, Akira would go ahead and kill Haruka.

“Akira! You-!”

“Shirou. The opponent is someone who came here to steal the cube, just so you know, I’m not that strong to be worried about not killing her. I will try, but I give you no promises. I know that I’m working for you right now, but I have no obligation to go that far for you. So, which one is it?”

Shirou could not find any words to rebuke Akira. That was when Haruka intervened.

“Then just leave. I don’t know how much Shirou is paying you, but if it’s money, you can just give it back. I can guarantee you, fighting me is not worth the trouble.”

“Unfortunately, I can’t just do that. A job is a job. It won’t erase my responsibility just because I return the sum. Well, that might erase my obligation to Shirou tied to the reward but that doesn’t help resolve my other debts to him. Debts that are not tied to money. I’m planning to properly repay all my debts to Shirou.”

Haruka was taught that under the Corporate Government, everything that was done through money could be undone also through money. So, she was surprised to hear Akira respond in such a manner.

“You’re a rather righteous person…”

“I’m just doing my best. Shirou, what’s your answer? Just to warn you, if the transport vehicle gets too far away from the camping vehicle, I will head back, my stuff is over there after all.”

The transport vehicle was going too fast for the camping vehicle to keep up. It was already speeding away from where Shirou was. Even so, Shirou could not decide to tell Akira whether he should fight or leave.

The one who broke the stalemate was Haruka.

“Shirou, can you hear me?”

“Y-yeah!”

“Let me tell you one thing. You might think that I’ve escaped that place, but that is not correct. I still have not escaped that place.”

“…What do you mean?”

“I can’t tell you more. But, as long as you don’t know why, you won’t be able to rescue me. So please, just leave.”

Haruka seemed honestly happy and sad at the same time as she threw a smile at Shirou through Akira’s information terminal.

“I’m really happy that you have gone this far for me. It’s already good enough. So please, just leave.”

A sad silence pervaded. It was Shirou who finally broke that silence.

“…Akira, return back.”

“…Alright.”

Akira walked to one end of the rooftop. He then turned around and looked at Haruka. She was only standing there as if struck by helplessness.

Akira let out a sigh and jumped off the transport vehicle.

Haruka then headed back inside the transport vehicle. All the emotions she felt were left here. It was taken by the wind created by the speeding transport vehicle and carried away.

＿＿＿*＿

After Akira landed on the ground, he waited for Shirou to pick him up. Even before Shirou came, he could no longer see the transport vehicle. Akira jumped onboard the camping vehicle and went to check up on Shirou, but contrary to his expectation, Shirou was doing okay.

“Akira, I’ve opened all the cases.”

“O-okay, thanks. So then, what’s your plan after this?”

“Just as I planned, we will still go and rescue Haruka. Our target is the rebuild research laboratory. This is where things get serious, so let’s get ready.”

The camping vehicle accelerated even faster under Shirou’s remote control.

“…Say, Shirou. Didn’t Haruka say something along the lines of it being impossible for you?”

“She didn’t say anything like that. What she said is that she still has not escaped from the rebuild research laboratory. Well, I still have not fully understood the meaning of her words there. Akira, what do you think she meant by that?”

“Hmmm. Something like that body of hers being a remote terminal that she’s controlling from the laboratory?”

“No, that one is not a remote terminal. That is the real Haruka. There is no doubt about that. I can guarantee you that. It’s normal practice to prepare a body double when an important person goes on-site. So, I’m experienced in both faking myself and seeing through fake bodies. That’s why I can tell. That was the real Haruka.”

“Then what did she mean by that?”

“…I don’t know. But, if she’s still under the control of the laboratory for any reason, then I will go and rescue her. We might be able to find the reason if we go to the laboratory, it’s worth checking.”

“Hmm, it still sounds like we’re just going with the flow.”

Shirou heard that and made a rather smug smile before speaking.

“At least not as bad as you thought.”

“You have a point.”

Akira could not do anything but chuckle in reaction to that.

“So then, how long will it take before we reach that laboratory?”

“It’s about 5 hours from here.”

“Alpha, is that enough time for you to familiarize yourself with the new equipment?”

“Yep.”

“I see. Although this rebuild laboratory sounds like some super facility, I have my frontline equipment with me this time, so I guess it should be fine.”

“I’m really counting on you for this. It is a secret laboratory, so it might look like it’s undefended from outside, but it should at least be as secure as a Sakashita Heavy Industry facility.”

“A secret lab, huh?”

“Yeah. It wasn’t easy to find it, you know? I’ve been trying to find it even using the information that I got from Viola, but that turned out to be useless, so it was really not easy.”

The camping vehicle continued running through the wasteland and into the rebuild research laboratory that even Shirou had a hard time finding.

__*__*__*__

Back in Sheryl’s base, Sheryl was fearfully receiving a visitor.

“U-Uhmmm, I heard that you have some business with Viola… U-uh, m-may I ask what it might be?”

“It’s nothing serious, I just have a few questions for Viola-san regarding some of her past dealings. It would be great if you would cooperate.”

The guest was Maruo. Inabe, as an officer from Kugamayama city, already told Sheryl beforehand that Maruo was someone from the Corporate Government and warned her not to do anything rude to him. That was why she was so nervous.

“So then, where is Viola-san?”

“S-she’ll be here in a minute. S-so please wait for a bit.”

Although she had Akira’s support and her gang had become a rather untouchable organization in Kugamayama city, they were still nothing compared to the Corporate Government. Thus, it was not strange for everyone in the gang to be nervous with the current guest around.

A moment later, Sheryl’s men came in with Viola. Viola sat in front of Maruo as she was trying her best to keep her usual smile.

“I heard that you have some questions for me, so, what might it be?”

“I want to know in detail about your deal with someone by the name of Gorou in Mihazono ruin. We have investigated and it seems like you gave him a certain piece of information, what did you give him?”

“I see, so you want to buy that information? In that case…”

In order to get into her usual rhythm, Viola tried to start negotiations in her usual fashion. But Maruo stopped her.

“I will give you the gratitude amount, but let’s negotiate a later date. I want to know that answer first and foremost. I know you like to complicate the discussion. So, let me state this. I can actually just ask your brain directly, but that will require certain preparations first. So, to not have to go through such a troublesome thing, it would be of great help if you can just tell me honestly. Would that work for you?”

In front of Maruo, who said that with nonchalance and a peaceful smile, Viola got overwhelmed by the pressure and told Maruo everything.

Silavin: That is it for the web novel. Not sure when the author will continue to write. It was a great adventure. I seriously wish this to continue. I want to envision how the rebuild research laboratory is like. How Shirou will save Haruka. What those Old World AIs plan to do.

If there are more raws, we will pick it up. For now, we would like to thank you for your support. Till next time.

We also hope that you all will continue to support the author by buying his novel at Rebuild World (Light Novel) | J-Novel Club

---

Index Next Chapter>>